

Every individual holds a different perspective about life due to our distinct way of thinking and attitude towards life. With every passing day counting as a valuable certificate of experience, I am becoming a believer of George Bernard Shaw's quote that "life is not all about finding yourself, it's about creating yourself". We want our society to accept us, so we change, we compromise and we start losing our true essence. Thus, it is important that we create our identity. For me there are three simple steps that tell you why life is not about finding yourself, it is about creating yourself:

- 1) Follow your passion: Most people are incapable of deciding what they want from their life so they just start following the footsteps of others, the ones who have achieved something in life
- 2) Create your Own Role not just play it: You will not be able to live a life as an engineer if your heart wants to live like a doctor or pilot. So it is all about creating yourself.
- 3) Resist The Challenges And Fight Back: You have to face many challenges in your life. Life is going to knock you down, but you need to stand up and fight again.
