From early age, he was aware that black people were not treated as the whites in America. Most blacks lived in poverty in the richest country on earth. They get only half of the white people's wages, and many could not vote. In many places blacks were separated from whites, there were shops and restaurants that only whites could use. Even on buses blacks had to stay in the back of the bus.

Martin Luther believed that these things were not right. He believed that the only way to make society more equal was by peaceful protest. For example, he organized a 'bus boycott' which meant that black people refused to use the buses until they were allowed to sit in any part of the bus. Many similar protests were organized by Martin Luther King. He never used violence but looked for a peaceful way for protesting. However, some people who didn't like what he was doing, used violence against him: his home was bombed, he was stabbed and his family was threatened. He still believed, though, that violence and hatred could only be overcome by love and forgiveness. In 1965 all black people were allowed to vote.

In 1968 a white man called James Earl Ray shot Martin Luther King dead. Today Americans remember his peaceful fight for freedom and justice by having a public holiday every year called 'Martin Luther King Day'
