Section One: Reading Passage I

Breaking the Rules

1 College and high school students often look for shortcuts to make their work easier. To achieve a good grade, students are sometimes tempted to cheat. One of the most frequent ways of cheating is to buy essays from the Internet. This may result in a good grade. However, plagiarism (copying someone else's work and pretending it is yours) is irresponsible from a social and an academic standpoint.

2 First, plagiarism is socially unacceptable. Students are expected by teachers and their classmates to do their own work. If a student plagiarizes, he or she violates that trust. This may damage the relationship between the student and the teacher, as well as the relationship with classmates.

3 Plagiarism is also wrong because it is against academic policy. Even though buying essays and presenting them as your own may save time initially, this is against university rules. In fact, universities have ways to prove if students have plagiarized. Instructors can use software that compares a student essay and material on the Internet. This way, instructors can detect if a particular essay was copied. The consequences are very serious.

4 It is true that many students at colleges have busy schedules and may have trouble completing their assignments on time. Some students may argue that because of their situation, they sometimes have no choice but to buy essays from the Internet. However, this should never be the solution. Instead, students might try to negotiate with their instructor on the deadline. Furthermore, while writing may be a struggle for some students who feel that their writing is not good enough to receive an A, it is crucial that they do their own work. They may go to a writing center for help. Otherwise, if they plagiarize, they will not develop their own writing and critical thinking skills. As a result, they may not be prepared to pass their final exams. In the end, plagiarizing is harmful to a student's own academic success.

5 I believe that university authorities should discourage plagiarism by making students more aware of the problems it causes. It damages classroom relationships, violates school policies, and prevents students from realizing their own potential. If we don't stop it, many students will lose out on their education.

Section Two: Reading Passage II

Factors that Lead to Success in College

1 The road to success in college is full of obstacles that might interfere w students reaching their goals. Despite these obstacles, students can achie their dream of earning their degree. They need support from family a friends, strong motivation, and the ability to focus.

2 To begin with, college students need the support of their families to succe If they are lucky, they have families that protect and nurture them. Th family members act as helping hands, and friends who they can depend emotionally. Students need this support system to help them realize th own capacity even when they doubt themselves. For example, because work load is too great or the exams are too hard, students may discouraged. Families can encourage them to persevere. In addition, tuiti and books are very expensive; consequently, some students are forced work. If they receive financial assistance from their families, they dedicate all their time to their studies.

3 Students need to keep up the motivation they need to study. Students ha many obligations to fulfill, such as completing homework assignments a research projects, studying for exams, and writing term papers. Ma students work after school and arrive home late at night. Only dedicated a responsible students will push themselves to finish their work before goi to bed. When the options are to go to a party with friends or stay home a work, only determined students will choose to study.

4 Students also need to focus on realistic academic goals. Many students are not aware of the importance of selecting the right college and major. In fact, a wrong decision may result in a waste of time and money. For example, students may have very high expectations and select a major that presents demands they cannot meet. In some cases, they find themselves on a career path they don't even enjoy. As a result, they may have to change their major or drop out of college when they realize that they cannot keep up their grades. If they are more focused on what they want, the better their chances will be to achieve their goals.

5 If students are enthusiastic about what they are studying, realistic about their academic goals, and receive support from their families, their college journey will be easier.
