The holiday window display at Saks Fifth Avenue has long been a favorite of visitors from near and far. This year, the windows will still be adorned, but the traditional light show that ushers them into view has been shelved. GETTY

Saks keeps windows, nixes lights

BY JOSEPH WILKINSON
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Saks Fifth Avenue will not hold its annual dazzling holiday light show at its flagship store in Midtown Manhattan.

Despite celebrating the store's 100th anniversary this year, Saks decided to dump the tradition in favor of a more low-key setup.

"For many years, the holidays at Saks Fifth Avenue included a light show at our flagship store, and for some time we have contemplated changing our approach," a Saks spokesman told the Daily News on Tuesday. "We are celebrating the season by honoring the architectural significance of this iconic building, elegantly illuminating the facade and framing the holiday windows."

Saks' traditional holiday windows, which show festive, fashionable displays in the store between 49th and 50th Sts., will return as usual in late November, according to the company. But the light show that usually heralds the opening of the windows will not occur.

Even though the light show itself has been called off, the building will still be illuminated in festive lights, and holiday jingles will play throughout the season, Saks said in a statement.

"Throughout the holiday season, we look forward to captivating customers' imaginations and evoking feelings of joy, curiosity and delight through compelling content and memorable experiences across Saks Fifth Avenue," chief marketing officer Emily Essner said in a mid-October press release.

The holiday windows will display "pieces from the top names in luxury set against colorful snowflake fragments, dichroic vinyl and silver harlequin flooring," according to Saks.

The light show had been a tradition for New Yorkers and tourists alike, even drawing celebrities to open the event. Last year, Jennifer Lawrence laughed off a wardrobe malfunction to introduce the Dior-produced show. One year earlier, Elton John performed "Your Song" on Fifth Ave. to kick off that season's display.

Saks' flagship store is located near the center of Christmas celebrations in New York, just one block east of Rockefeller Center and its towering Christmas tree. This year's tree arrived at Rockefeller Center on Saturday, two days after it was cut down in West Stockbridge, Mass.

S.I. St. Pat's Day Parade panel lifts ban on LGBTQ marchers

BY LEONARD GREENE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

One borough, one parade.

After 60 years, one of Staten Island's largest and most influential civic organizations is allowing gay and lesbian groups to march in the borough's official St. Patrick's Day Parade.

"The Richmond County St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee wishes to announce that the Staten Island Pride Center has been invited to march, under their own banner, in the 2025 St. Patrick's Day Parade," the committee said in a statement.

"This invitation has been extended by new leadership of the parade committee, installed on Oct. 30, 2024."

The breakthrough was first reported by the Staten Island Advance.

"The parade committee is entrusted with ensuring the focus of the parade remains upon St. Patrick, the history, traditions, culture and faith of the Irish people," the statement said. "In this endeavor, the leadership of the Pride Center has assured the parade committee that they are ready to provide support to the parade in fulfilling this obligation."

The LGBTQ+ Pride Center immediately accepted the invitation.

"We are truly honored to be invited to march in the St. Patrick's Day Parade," said Carol Bullock, the Pride Center's executive director. "This event is a time-honored tradition that brings people together from all walks of life to celebrate Irish culture, and we are excited to be part of this vibrant community celebration."

The parade will be held on Sunday, March 2.

Over the last several years, participation in the popular procession has dwindled as many groups and individuals boycotted the annual event over the controversial LGBTQ ban.

The decadeslong exclusion of LGBTQ groups led to the formation earlier this year of a second and more inclusive island parade, which quickly won the support of local merchants and politicians, including Mayor Adams, who marched with the LGBTQ groups.

In 2014, Manhattan's St. Patrick's Day Parade ended its two-decade ban.

Parades in Boston and Dublin have since done the same.

The Staten Island event was one of the last holdouts to exclude LGBTQ groups from marching under their own banners.

Feds ponying up $72M for Penn Sta. renovation, says Schumer

BY EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The federal government will fund two-thirds of the design and engineering phase of Penn Station's renovation, Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer told the Daily News on Tuesday.

The $72 million in federal Transportation Department grant money secured by the Democratic leader will fund accessibility, new entrances and public spaces at the transit hub.

"Renovating the overcrowded, cramped and confusing Penn Station will help usher New York, the LIRR and the region into an even brighter transit future," Schumer said. "We need to ensure more accessibility, including making it easier to navigate – a redesign that delivers for commuters from Long Island, the five boroughs and beyond.

"This $72 million federal investment in Penn Station renovation will kick-start some major renovations that are long, long overdue," he added. "I applaud Gov. Hochul and the MTA and Amtrak and will work with all stakeholders to secure progress that will continue into the coming years."

The money is expected to pay for 18 new escalators and 11 elevators to train platforms at the station, and will increase the number of street entrances at the station to 20 from 12.

It will also fund a 30,000-square-foot public plaza, and include a new underground connection to the B, D, F, M, N, R, Q and W trains at 34th St.-Herald Square.

The remaining $24 million of the $96 million design phase will be split three ways between the states of New York and New Jersey and Amtrak.

The renovation project is separate from the Gateway Project, which seeks to add capacity to the Midtown transit hub by building additional tunnels and tracks from New Jersey.

Federal dollars are funding roughly 70% of the $16 billion tunnel project.

The Tuesday afternoon brushfire in the Bronx that disrupted Amtrak service comes amid an ongoing drought in the region.

Amtrak transformer blaze kayos service between city, New Haven

BY JOSEPHINE STRATMAN AND EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

An Amtrak transformer fire broke out in the Bronx near a Con Ed substation on the railroad's Hell Gate Line on Tuesday afternoon, suspending Amtrak travel in both directions along the Northeast Corridor between Penn Station and New Haven.

Limited service was available between Boston and New Haven, according to an Amtrak alert, and trains approaching the Bronx substation were being relocated out of the area at slower speeds.

Metro-North service was running and honoring Amtrak tickets due to the incident.

The fire, reported at the substation at Bronxdale and E. Tremont Aves., ignited about 2:30 p.m., causing a power loss for trains in the area, according to the FDNY.

The fire jumped from an overhead Amtrak transformer along the tracks to nearby brush, then to the parking lot of the adjacent substation, burning at least three cars.

Nearly 200 fire and EMS responders were deployed to the fire as of Tuesday evening, and the operations remained ongoing.

An Amtrak spokesman said Tuesday evening that the cause of the transformer fire was still under investigation.

Tuesday's blaze is at least the third brushfire in the past week in New York City amid an ongoing drought.

There were two brushfires in as many days in Brooklyn's Prospect Park this past weekend. On Saturday, a fire scorched a 2-acre wooded area as more than 100 firefighters, including special brushfire units, fought the fire for nearly three hours.

The Big Apple is under a drought warning, with city officials urging New Yorkers to help conserve water during a historically dry spell for the city.

Electrification of the Hell Gate Line was completed in the 1920s, though some portions of the traction power system between New Rochelle, Westchester County, and the East River tunnel were modernized in the 1980s.

The Hell Gate Line's power system is scheduled to be upgraded as part of the MTA's Penn Station Access project, which would send Metro-North trains to Penn Station via the line – but that work has not yet begun.

Penny helper: I told him it was safe 'to let go'

Man holding Neely's arm down says he told Marine he could release chokehold

BY MOLLY CRANE-NEWMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A man who aided Daniel Penny while he restrained Jordan Neely in a lethal chokehold aboard a subway car in May 2023 recalled telling the former U.S. Marine he could safely release his grip from Neely's neck in trial testimony on Tuesday.

"I said, 'I will grab his hands, so you can let go.' That, I remember," Eric Gonzalez, 39, a room manager at a casino, testified in Manhattan Supreme Court. "If I held [Neely's] arm down, [Penny] could let go of his neck."

Penny did not let go, Gonzalez said. Gonzalez later recalled telling Penny again, "You can let him go. I am holding onto him," to no avail.

The Bronx man, seen wearing a black cap in widely circulated footage of the incident, said he wasn't on the uptown F train on which the incident began after Neely boarded at Second Ave.

Gonzalez said he became involved after the subway pulled into the Broadway-Lafayette station, and he saw passengers acting panicked and Penny restraining Neely, whom Gonzalez described as "a vagrant."

"Everyone was saying call the cops on a specific individual, and I see Mr. Neely being the one being restrained by Mr. Penny," he said.

Footage of the encounter captured by journalist Juan Alberto Vasquez shows Gonzalez coming to Penny's aid while Penny struggled with Neely on the train car floor. The jury watched the video in slow motion Tuesday as it showed Penny tightening his grip around Neely's neck.

In the video, a silent Neely, eyes wide, appears to seek help at one point by tapping the leg of a passenger – a German tourist who has refused to cooperate as a witness – before Gonzalez pins down Neely's arms.

"He wanted to be released," Gonzalez said.

After a minuteslong struggle, a witness, Larry Goodson, who testified last week, shouts at the two men to let up, warning they could kill Neely.

"At some point, Jordan Neely's body goes limp, and then I let go – and shortly after, Daniel Penny [let] go," Gonzalez said. He later said he then tried to shake Neely for a response, turned him on his side, felt for a pulse, and walked away, scared "that a person could die."

Neely was later pronounced dead at Lenox Hill Hospital. Penny's defense has challenged the city medical examiner's determination that the cause was homicide by compression of the neck.

Penny, 26, has pleaded not guilty to second-degree manslaughter and criminally negligent homicide. His attorneys say he acted reasonably to protect terrified passengers when a man who appeared to be mentally unstable started screaming about being hungry and ready to go to jail.

Neely, 30, was unarmed and has not been accused of touching anyone before Penny took him down from behind. His loved ones say he struggled with acute poverty, drug addiction and mental illness and was derailed by his mother's brutal murder when he was 14 years old. He found joy as a street performer singing Michael Jackson songs in better days.

Prosecutors say Penny's initial intentions were appropriate, but that the potential threat only lasted for the 30 seconds it took the train to travel between stops. They argue that, once passengers fled to safety, Penny "recklessly" spent 5 minutes and 53 seconds choking Neely.

Gonzalez admitted that he lied to prosecutors when he initially spoke with them, claiming he'd been on the train for the entire incident, that Neely had struck him, and that Penny then "took him down."

"I was trying to justify my actions for me having my hands on [Neely]," he said.

Gonzalez, who received a nonprosecution agreement, said he also lied about Neely being alive when he left the scene because he was scared of "getting pinned for a murder charge."

"When you say 'alive' – conscious?" Assistant District Attorney Dafna Yoran asked.

"Breathing," Gonzalez said.

"And was that true?"

"No."

Police investigate at W. 145th St. and Bradhurst Ave. in Harlem, where a 7-year-old girl was wounded by a stray bullet while walking with her father on Monday afternoon.

CHARGES IN GIRL SHOOT

2 teens face attempted-slay counts in gunfire that wounded 7-yr.-old

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Two teen suspects have been charged in the Harlem stray-bullet shooting of an innocent 7-year-old girl walking down the street with her dad, police said Tuesday.

Daniel Idowu, 19, is charged with attempted murder and gun possession, police said. A 17-year-old boy, whose name was not released because he is a minor, is charged with attempted murder.

The suspects were taken into custody shortly after the 2:52 p.m. Monday shooting near a Starbucks at W. 145th St. and Bradhurst Ave. They made no statements and both asked for a lawyer, police sources said.

The young victim needed emergency surgery at Harlem Hospital to remove the bullet. She is expected to recover.

"She's OK now," a relative who declined to give her name told the Daily News Tuesday morning. "She's doing fine. She's still in the hospital."

The father told cops he was walking with his daughter when he heard the shots and he started to run with his child. He picked her up and realized she had been hit in the stomach. He lay her on the ground and shouted for someone to call 911.

Cops were flagged down by a witness who said a child had been shot. The two cops found the child lying on the ground, gave first aid and called an ambulance. They didn't wait, bundling the child into a police car and rushing her to Harlem Hospital themselves, police said.

"Clearly, our hearts go out to the family," Mayor Adams said at a Monday press conference. "We wish her a speedy recovery. It's never a good thing when a child or any innocent bystander is a victim. We're going to see this through to justice."

Witnesses described a chaotic scene. Eight shots were fired at two boys, ages 16 and 18, according to cops. The teens were not struck.

"There were about six to eight shots in quick succession," said Angel Casanova, 30. "The police were holding the [girl], rushing her to a patrol car. The dad and a woman were running behind them. He was crying. He said, 'I'm her dad.'

"When the people knew it was a 7-year-old girl, you could hear a pin drop," Casanova added. "She was in shock. I guess the pain didn't hit her yet. Her dad was crying and praying to God."

Another witness told the Daily News that she saw two men chasing a third man out of a nearby park when one of the pursuers opened fire.

"There were three guys who ran out of the park. One of them was shooting as he ran," the witness said. "They didn't hit anybody but the little girl. It was horrible," she said.

A 9-mm. handgun was recovered shortly after the shooting, with police still searching for a second gun.

"There were two intended people they were firing at," NYPD Deputy Chief Brian Gill said at the press conference. "We believe it's gang-related."

About five hours after the child was wounded, a 39-year-old woman was shot in the leg on E. 127th St. near Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Blvd., about a mile from the earlier incident.

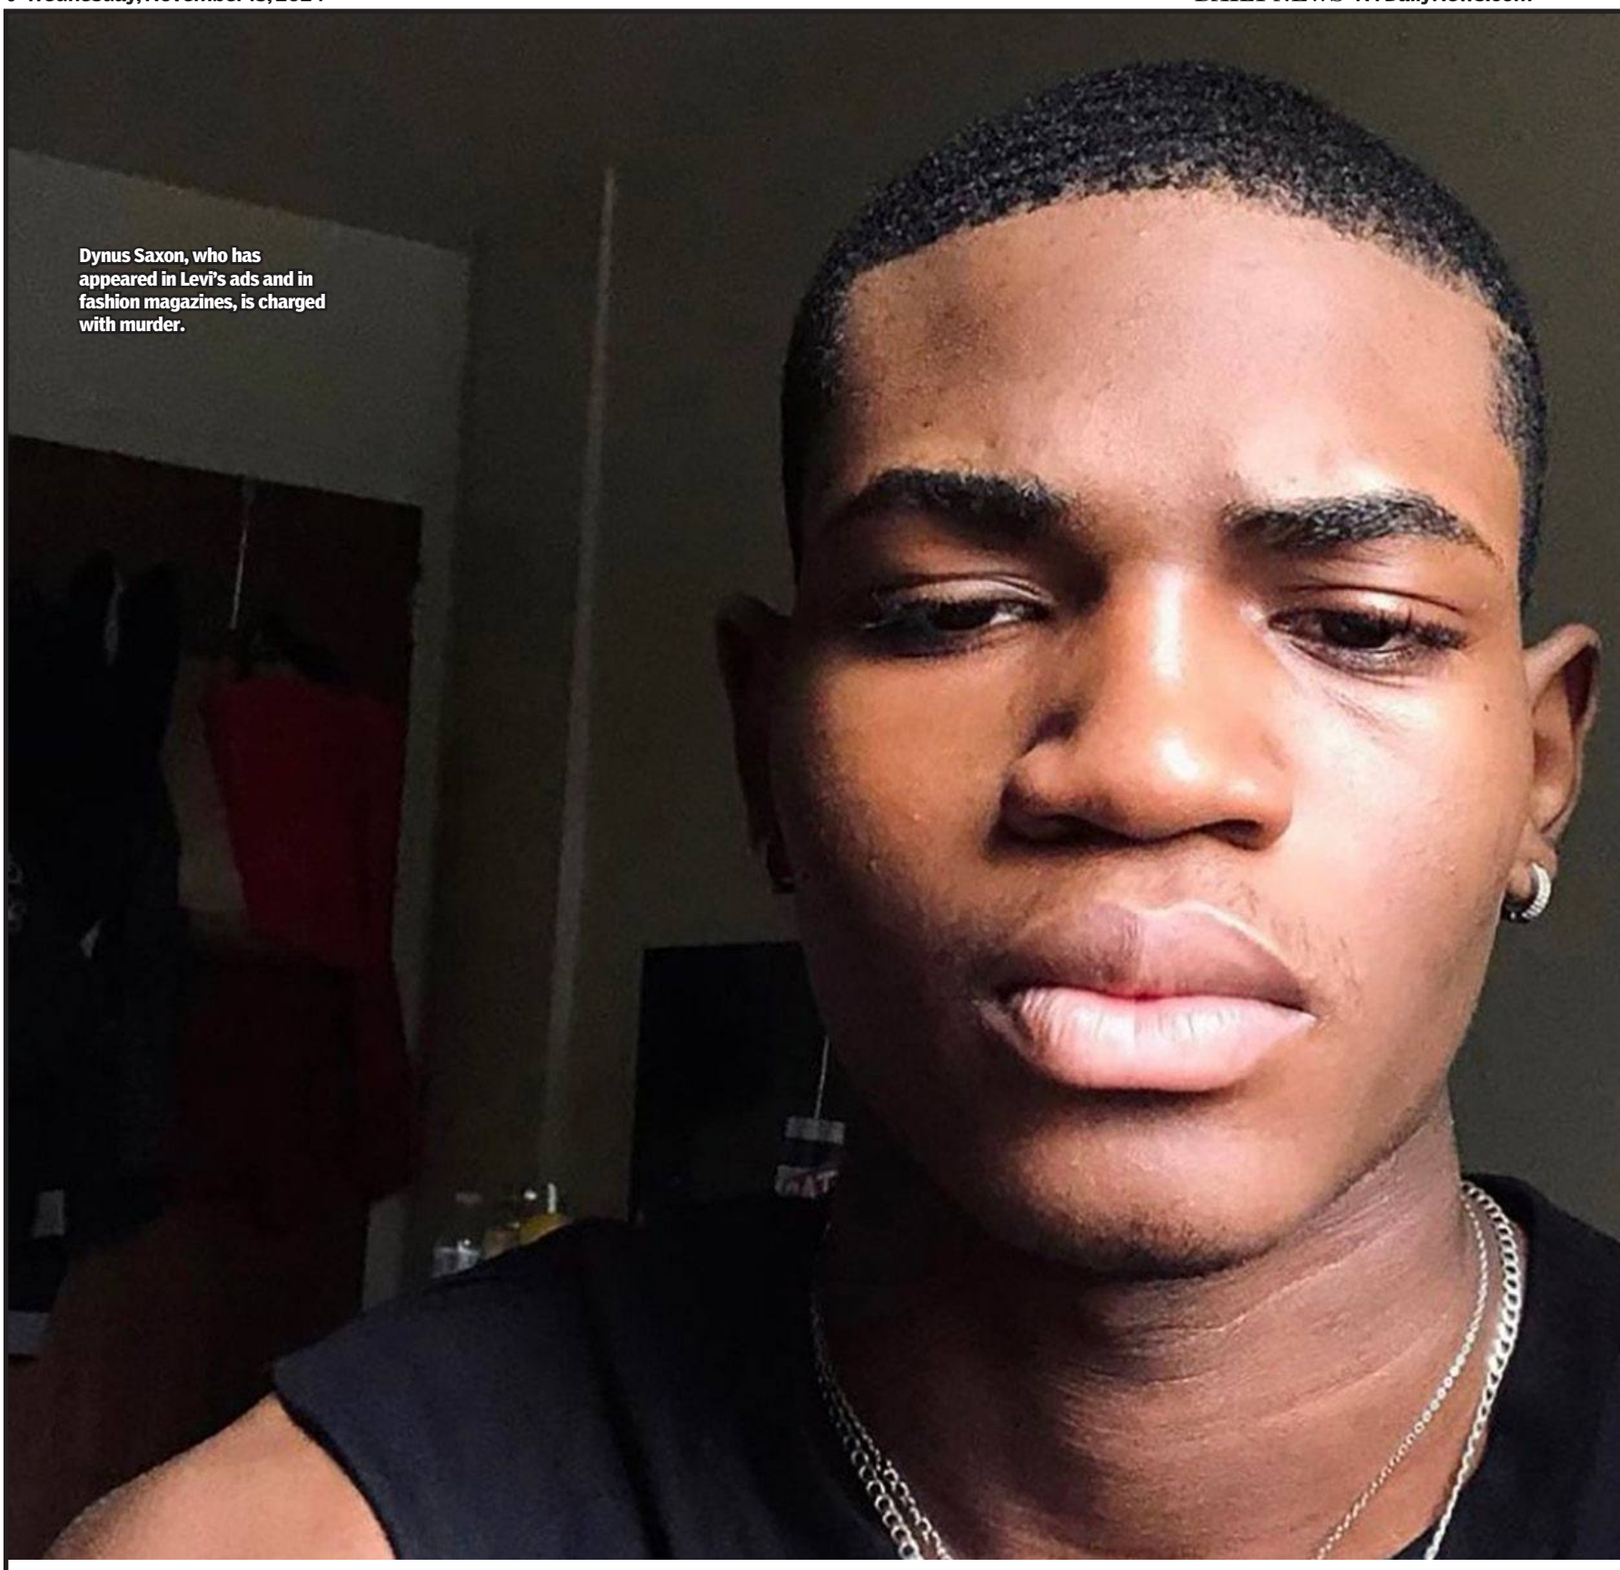

Medics took the woman to Harlem Hospital following the 8:20 p.m. shooting. She is expected to recover.

The NYPD ShotSpotter system recorded two shots being fired in the area.

The victim refused to tell police what happened or give them any description of the shooter, authorities said.

No arrests have been made in her shooting.

The two incidents are not believed to be connected, an NYPD spokeswoman said.

Dynus Saxon, who has appeared in Levi's ads and in fashion magazines, is charged with murder.

BY EMMA SEIWELL, ROCCO PARASCANDOLA AND ELLEN MOYNIHAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A 20-year-old successful male model has been arrested for murdering a father who still had a knife lodged in his chest when cops arrived at the bloody Bronx murder scene.

Dynus Saxon was charged Monday with murder, manslaughter and weapon possession in the death of 35-year-old Kadeem Grant.

Saxon has appeared in Vogue Italia, ad campaigns for Levi's and fashion magazine L'Officiel Baltic, posing on the beach and Boardwalk of Coney Island wearing everything from a suit to underwear. In July, Saxon appeared on the red carpet for the premiere of "Deadpool & Wolverine."

"Yesterday I spoke to Dynus and Dynus does not remember what happened," the mother of the suspect told the Daily News Tuesday. "He doesn't know what happened. There's something there and I got to figure out what. Dynus will protect himself, he's a human being, you know what I'm saying. He's young. I don't know what kind of situation he had got himself into."

"He'll dance, he'll have fun under some circumstances," she added. "But, you know, he's really not an aggressor."

"He was hanging out with people," Saxon's mother said of her son. "That's what he does. He's young, you know. He was just hanging out. He has friends every f-----g where. This is a model."

The victim's heartbroken father, who was traveling to New York from his home in Florida on Tuesday to deal with the tragedy, told The News his family-oriented son lived in Brooklyn and had a 3-year-old daughter.

"He was just a loving kid who was there for his family and his daughter," said Christopher Grant. "It's just sad that she has to grow up without a father."

"He cared for people, looking after his grandma because most of us are not there (in New York)," he added. "Kadeem was a kid, you need him and he was there for you."

Police responded to the Mott Haven building after a 911 call around 2:20 p.m. Sunday, where they found Kadeem Grant stabbed lying on a couch in the apartment. The victim had also been cut on his hands and feet, police said.

Christopher Grant said his son lived in Brooklyn and was visiting a friend when he was killed.

"Kadeem has always been loving and kind to me, as long as I've known him," said the victim's aunt, who declined to give her name. "He's always been there for his grandmother especially. She relied and depended on him pretty much for everything."

A neighbor in the building where the murder took place said she overheard a struggle in the hallway.

MODEL HELD IN SLAY OF 'LOVING & KIND' MAN

"I heard them fighting. No words, just [banging]. In the hallway," said the woman, who gave her name as Sade. "It was fast. It wasn't like they was fighting for a long time."

"I just called 911 to make sure they got here really fast," she added. "But it wasn't enough to save him."

Grant was rushed to Lincoln Hospital and died about 3:00 p.m.

Saxon was hospitalized after his Monday arrest and is awaiting arraignment in Bronx Criminal Court.

"He is hurt," Saxon's mother said of her son. "The cop called me, I was his person that [Saxon] wanted to call from the hospital. …There's a lot that it possibly could be and I just kind of got to wait to see what is said."

Saxon's mother said she doesn't recognize the victim's name or know anything about him.

"I don't know what happened but I can tell y'all based on what I do know that it's not going to be as simple as you want to make it," she said. "Dynus didn't just decide to murder somebody."

"I've run a hundred scenarios through my head," she added. "If you back him into a corner, he'll defend himself. … Where did the knife come from? It had to come from inside an apartment because [Saxon] didn't walk with a knife."

"Whatever happened it was not murder," she insisted. "He hasn't even done work in like three, six months … He walks around the street. He walks everywhere. He puts his headphones on and skateboards."

The victim's father, reeling from the news, still hadn't fully grasped his son is gone.

"I'm still trying to process it," he said. "Until I see him I won't believe it."

3 surviving siblings of boy who starved to death put in foster care in Westchester

BY GRAHAM RAYMAN AND SHEETAL BANCHARIYA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A Manhattan Family Court judge ordered Tuesday that the three surviving siblings of 4-year-old Jah'Meik Modlin, the Harlem boy who died of starvation and neglect, be placed temporarily in a Westchester County foster home while permanent custody is hashed out.

The three children, ages 5, 6 and 7, had been receiving medical treatment at Harlem and Bellevue hospitals after they were rescued Oct. 13 from the apartment where Jah'Meik died.

Their parents, Nytavia Ragsdale, 25, and Laron Modlin, 26, are at Rikers Island awaiting trial, charged with manslaughter, assault and endangering the welfare of children for their alleged abuse and neglect of Jah'Meik and the other kids.

Judge Janet McFarland refused Tuesday to immediately place the surviving children with Jah'Meik's aunt Nyisha Ragsdale, or allow her to visit them, after a lawyer with the city's child welfare agency opposed those requests.

"The aunt saw the three kids on FaceTime a week before Jah'Meik passed away and indicated that the kids were fine," said Morgan Malinoff of the city Administration for Children's Services.

Nyisha Ragsdale had hired lawyers less than 10 days after Jah'Meik died and filed a $40 million notice of intent to sue, blaming the city for failing to remove Jah'Meik and his siblings from the home.

Malinoff noted the aunt had not seen the children in-person for the past four years and spoke with them only through the internet. No assessment of her home has yet been made, Malinoff said.

Laron Modlin's family is also seeking custody of the survivors. Their lawyer Alexandra Rosin said an aunt on his side resides in New York State and should be explored as an option.

Brad Martin, the lawyer appointed by the court to represent the children's interests, said their health needed continued assessment.

McFarland ordered a medical report on the three siblings prepared by next Tuesday. She also asked the Administration for Children's Services to evaluate all the relatives on both sides of the family and look at other placement alternatives.

Meanwhile, the survivors will live in a Westchester County foster home arranged by Children's Aid, a large nonprofit based in Harlem.

Cops were called before 8 a.m. on Oct. 13 after Jah'Meik became unresponsive in the apartment on Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Blvd. near W. 145th St. He died the next morning.

The ensuing investigation revealed that Nytavia Ragsdale and Modlin had been starving Jah'Meik and his siblings for two years, prosecutors said.

One of the bedrooms was covered in feces. None of the children were in school, nor had they seen a doctor in two years.

At death, Jah'Meik weighed just 19 pounds and suffered from malnutrition, dehydration and starvation, prosecutors said.

Democrats, heal thyselves, Adams says after Trump gains in the city

BY CHRIS SOMMERFELDT
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mayor Adams said Tuesday that Democrats have themselves to blame for the waning support in New York City that allowed President-elect Donald Trump to gain ground across the boroughs, contending the party's embrace of a "far-left agenda" is backfiring on them.

Adams, a conservative Democrat who often clashes with members of his own party, offered the analysis after being asked in his weekly briefing whether he was concerned over how much support Dems lost in the traditionally deep-blue city in the Nov. 5 election

"It doesn't surprise me. This far-left agenda that I've been talking about for a long time, where we're not focusing on working-class people … some of the things that you talk about, it's not what working-class people are talking about," Adams replied, referring to reporters. "'How do I get the MetroCard? How do I make sure that I can put food on the table?' These are real issues, and so when you're not talking about those real issues, then it doesn't surprise me that people are saying, 'Listen, you're not speaking on my behalf anymore.'"

Adams, who used to be a registered Republican, didn't elaborate on what specific issues he deems part of a far-left blueprint. His spokesmen didn't immediately return requests for comment after his briefing, but the mayor has previously voiced opposition to progressive policies on public safety.

Adams has said he supported Vice President Kamala Harris in the election Trump handily won. She centered her campaign around a number of economic issues, including providing first-time homebuyers with $25,000 down payment assistance.

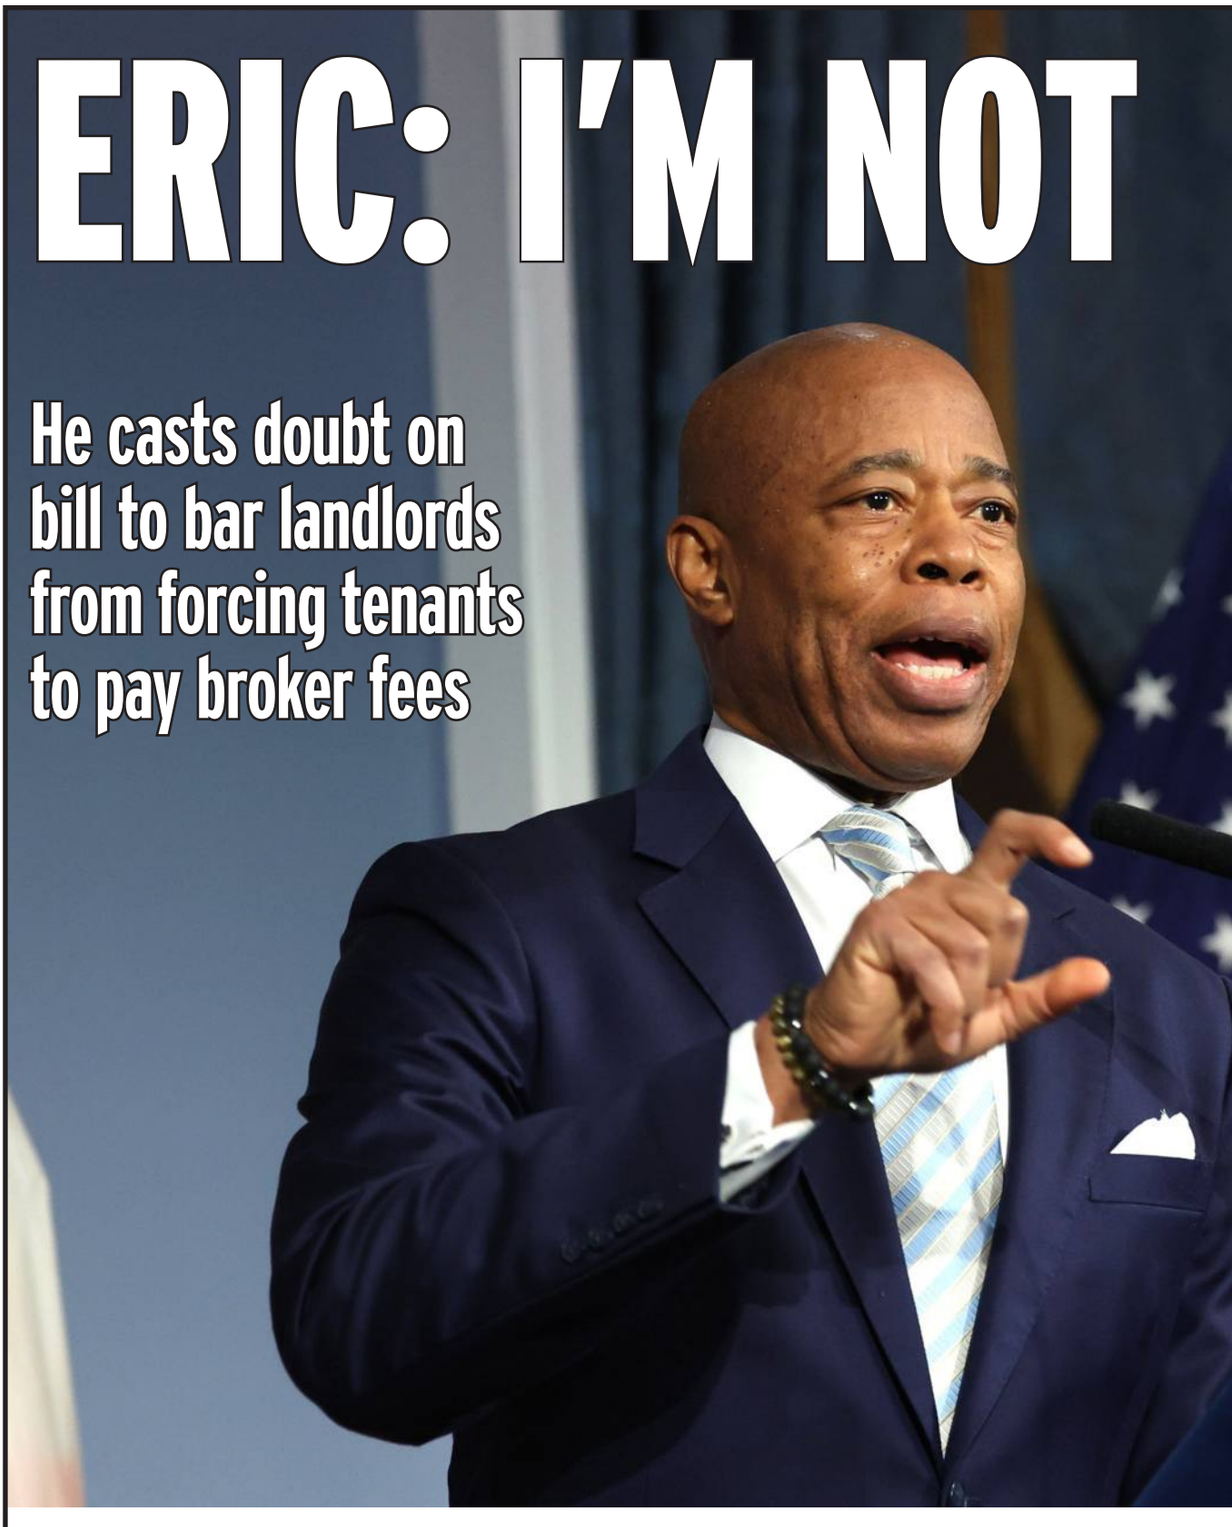

Harris won New York City in this month's election by a 68%-to-30% margin over Trump. That's a much thinner margin than when President Biden beat Trump by 53 percentage points in the 2020 election, and Trump's boost this year can be attributed to growing support for him in the Bronx and Queens.

City Public Advocate Jumaane Williams, a progressive Democrat, argued Adams' recent rhetoric on various issues helped Trump locally. "[Adams] correctly identifies problems that are top issues for our constituents, but rather than elevate the solutions available, he joined his fellow conservatives in fearmongering and scapegoating," Williams said. "Whether in hopes of special treatment or in genuine belief of the ultra-conservative Trump talking points he parrots, this mayor seems willing to either stand alongside Trump, or to look the other way in the face of an agenda that harms the same people that the mayor claims to represent."

Adams is under federal indictment on corruption charges. Williams and other local Democrats have recently questioned whether Adams is avoiding criticizing Trump in hopes the incoming Republican president could help quash the criminal case against him. Adams has declined to say whether he has spoken with Trump about his case.

ERIC: I'M NOT

He casts doubt on bill to bar landlords from forcing tenants to pay broker fees

BY CHRIS SOMMERFELDT AND TÉA KVETENADZE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mayor Adams voiced concern Tuesday about a City Council bill that would prohibit landlords from forcing tenants to pay broker fees, arguing the measure could result in "long-term" affordability concerns for everyone involved.

"I think the bill has the right intention, but sometimes good intentions do not get the results you're looking for," Adams told reporters about the bill, known as the FARE Act. The City Council is expected to pass the measure in a vote Wednesday.

The bill, which has locked in support from a majority of Council members, proposes to ensure that whoever hires a real estate broker to facilitate an apartment rental would be responsible for paying the broker's fees. Under current laws, landlords can – and often do – hire brokers and then make their tenants pay their fees, a practice that adds thousands of dollars on to New Yorkers' move-in tabs that would become illegal under the bill.

In his weekly news conference Tuesday, Adams offered a different perspective.

Adams, who often mentions that he previously worked as a real estate broker, lamented that there's no mechanism in the bill that would prevent landlords from rolling the cost of the broker fee into a tenant's monthly base rent.

"We need to find ways of ensuring that we get that affordability, but we can't do it with just a knee-jerk reaction. ... Think for a moment: If you pass the cost on to the small property owners, nothing in that law stops them from building it into their rent, so it goes from a one-time fee to a permanent fee," Adams said.

Adams didn't say one way or the other whether he might veto the bill.

His arguments echo those of the Real Estate Board of New York, a powerful industry group that has aggressively lobbied against the bill.

Brooklyn City Councilman Chi Ossé, a progressive Democrat who introduced the legislation, dismissed Adams' argument as "REBNY talking points."

He noted that pass-along rent costs won't be an issue for the roughly 2 million New Yorkers who live in stabilized units, as increases for their apartments are limited by law.

For those who live in nonstabilized

SO SURE

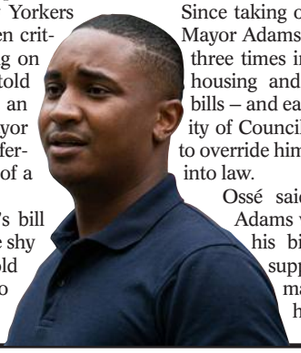

Brooklyn City Councilman Chi Ossé (below), who introduced legislation, dismissed "affordability" argument of Mayor Adams (main) as Real Estate Board of New York "talking points." LUIZ C. RIBEIRO, SHAWN INGLIMA FOR NYDN units, Ossé said, he's not concerned about pass-along costs because he believes broader "market forces," not a ban on some broker fees, dictate rent levels.

"It's really hypocritical for the mayor to talk about how he's skeptical about a bill that would save New Yorkers thousands of dollars and then criticize the left for not focusing on pocketbook issues," Ossé told the Daily News, referring to an unrelated comment the mayor made at Tuesday's news conference. "This is the definition of a pocketbook issue."

As of late Tuesday, Ossé's bill had 33 co-sponsors, one vote shy of the supermajority threshold required to override a veto should the mayor issue one.

City Council Speaker Adrienne Adams (D-Queens) is also expected to vote for Ossé's bill Wednesday, though, as are several other members who aren't signed up as co-sponsors, he said.

Since taking office in January 2022, Mayor Adams has used his veto pen three times in an attempt to block housing and public safety-related bills – and each time, a supermajority of Council members have voted to override him to force the measures into law.

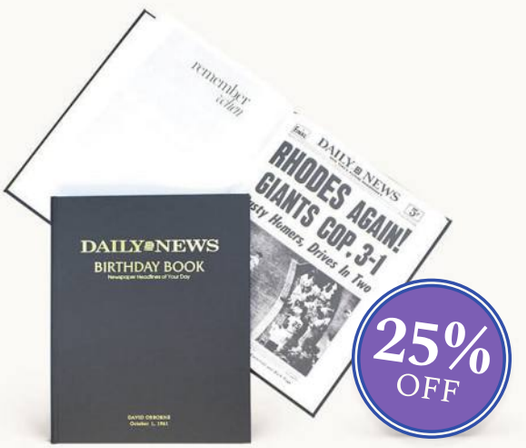

Ossé said he doesn't believe Adams would attempt to veto his bill given the level of support. "But I'm not the mayor, so we'll see what happens," he added.

Stormy sentence delay

Judge to weigh jury's guilty verdict against Trump's victory

BY MOLLY CRANE-NEWMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A Manhattan judge has delayed a highly anticipated decision and sentencing in Donald Trump's hush money case following his election victory at the request of the president-elect's lawyers and the Manhattan district attorney, according to court documents filed Tuesday.

Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Juan Merchan granted a joint motion to postpone his decision on Trump's request to throw out the guilty verdicts against him and other deadlines – putting the whole case on ice – until next Tuesday, according to email correspondence between his clerk and the parties uploaded to the case's docket.

The clerk said that was the deadline for the DA's office to advise Merchan of the appropriate next steps amid a Friday request from Trump's team to prosecutors that asked them to agree to delay proceedings and consider moving to drop the case now that Trump has been reelected.

"The People agree that these are unprecedented circumstances," Assistant District Attorney Matthew Colangelo wrote to the court in an email Sunday morning.

The prosecutor said the next steps required "careful consideration" to appropriately balance the competing interests of a jury's verdicts finding Trump guilty of felonies and "the office of the president."

In an email to Merchan following Colangelo's on Sunday, Trump lawyer Emil Bove said, "There are strong reasons for the requested [pause], and eventual dismissal of the case in the interests of justice," citing the Supreme Court's immunity decision and the Presidential Transition Act of 1963.

Bove said federal prosecutors from the Department of Justice had recently sought and obtained the same relief in Trump's federal election subversion and classified documents cases, "and they are reportedly considering dismissing both of their prosecutions."

"The [pause], and dismissal, are necessary to avoid unconstitutional impediments to President Trump's ability to govern," Bove wrote, adding that was the broader argument the defense made to the DA Friday that prosecutors are considering, which has not been made public.

With the case now on pause, Trump's sentencing, set for Nov. 26, is in limbo. Merchan previously said he would sentence him on that date after ruling on the immunity motion "if necessary."

Trump's outstanding immunity motion asks Merchan to set aside the verdicts and dismiss the underlying indictment by arguing that the July immunity decision by the Supreme Court's conservative majority – which granted presidents sweeping protections from criminal prosecution – barred the Manhattan DA's office from showing evidence at trial relating to his "official acts."

The decision also barred prosecutors from presenting evidence related to a president's "official acts" to prove personal acts were illegal.

Among the "official acts" Trump argues were out-of-bounds were tweets from his presidential Twitter account about his former fixer Michael Cohen and testimony concerning private conversations with former White House staffers, including his communications director,

Hope Hicks.

Prosecutors have opposed the effort, underscoring that the crimes Trump was found guilty of committing were related to his personal life and not his presidency. They have argued that even if the Supreme Court decision – which came down after Trump was found guilty – meant they improperly showed some evidence to the jury, the evidence of his guilt was, regardless, "overwhelming."

An anonymous Manhattan jury delivered the guilty verdicts on May 30, finding Trump guilty of 34 felony counts of falsifying business records tied to his secret payback to Cohen for silencing Stormy Daniels in the leadup to the 2016 election. Prosecutors argued at trial that the hundreds of thousands of dollars Trump issued to Cohen in 2017 in Sharpie-signed checks were falsely logged as payment for "legal services" to cover up an illicit scheme to hide information from voters.

The historic case was the first of four brought against Trump after his first term in office and likely the only one to see a jury's conclusion on the front end of his second term.

Outside of the winding-down federal cases, the racketeering case against Trump in Georgia, in which he's accused of election subversion efforts alongside Rudy Giuliani and more than a dozen others, has stalled significantly, and legal experts say it's unlikely he will go on trial in Fulton County in the next four years.

The Manhattan DA's office and Trump's lawyers declined to comment.

After mass deport threat, N.Y. says immigs are still safe while in court

BY JOSEPHINE STRATMAN, GRAHAM RAYMAN AND CHRIS SOMMERFELDT
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Faced with a threat of stepped-up enforcement in New York by Donald Trump's new border czar, top New York court officials are laying down the law and saying they will continue to shut their doors to federal immigration authorities looking to round up undocumented immigrants as they seek to launch mass deportation proceedings in the Empire State.

The state court system will stick by two policies put in place in 2020 in response to an increase in arrests by ICE in New York state courthouses during Trump's first administration, a spokesman for the Office of Court Administration indicated Tuesday.

"Under New York State law and federal court order, U.S. Immigrations and Customs Enforcement (ICE) cannot make a civil arrest in or on the property where a New York state courthouse is located," Al Baker, spokesman for OCA and Chief Judge Rowan Wilson, said in a statement.

The federal agency "also cannot make a civil arrest while a person is going to, remaining at, or returning from court unless ICE has a warrant signed by a judge," Baker continued.

A federal court judge ruled in June 2020 that the practice of making civil immigration arrests at state courthouses interferes with case proceedings, and a state law was put on the books in Dec. 2020, blocking ICE from making arrests in and near state courthouses.

It's still uncertain exactly how Trump's administration will handle the issue of immigration – or the justice system – but he campaigned on an ambitious anti-immigration platform. His newly tapped "border czar," Tom Homan, has vowed to carry out a deportation program in New York, whether local officials like it or not.

"If we can't get assistance from New York City, we may have to double the number of agents we send to New York," Homan said on "Fox & Friends" on Monday. "Because we're going to do the job with you or without you."

Homan previously served as acting director of ICE under Trump in 2017 and 2018, leading the administration's controversial family separation policy.

Mayor Adams said at his weekly briefing at City Hall on Tuesday that he's not a proponent of Trump's deportation proposal, which could involve removing undocumented immigrants from the U.S., regardless of whether they have committed any crimes.

"I'm not a supporter of mass deportations. I'm a supporter of making sure our borders are secure [and that] whomever is paroled into this country has a pathway to employment so they can provide for themselves," the mayor said, reiterating that he wants an expedited process for migrants to get work permits as well as a decompression strategy at the border to spread recent migrants out across the country.

The mayor did say he's not a fan of the current state of the city's sanctuary laws, which bar local authorities from cooperating with federal immigration authorities in many scenarios.

"The city rules are clear: no city resources can be used to cooperate or collaborate with ICE. We have to abide by those rules. I think that should be modified and I think that should be changed," Adams said, without elaborating on how exactly he would look to modify the laws.

Tina Luongo, chief attorney of the criminal defense practice at the Legal Aid Society, said that an ICE presence in courts hinders justice.

"ICE does not belong in or near our courts. Period." Luongo said. "In order for our judicial system – a pillar of our democracy – to operate effectively, it is fundamental that immigrant communities have equal access to justice. We laud OCA for standing firm against this unlawful and brazen practice."

Hard-liner & dog shooter Noem to run Homeland

BY DAVE GOLDINER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

South Dakota Gov. Kristi Noem is reportedly poised to get President-elect Donald Trump's nomination to lead the Department of Homeland Security.

Noem, 51, a two-term conservative Republican, will become the third key immigration hard-liner to be named to Trump's new administration cabinet after Stephen Miller was tapped to be deputy White House chief of staff and Tom Homan as so-called border czar, CNN first reported.

She would control the sprawling agency that oversees U.S. Customs and Border Protection, Immigration and Customs Enforcement and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Miller has said that mass deportation of millions of undocumented immigrants will start as soon as Trump is inaugurated on Jan. 20.

Homan had been a tough-talking fixture on the Trump campaign trail for months, vowing that he has the know-how to seal the border and deport millions of undocumented immigrants. Rep. Michael Waltz (R-Fla.) will be named national security administrator, another key post.

Noem was once considered a possible candidate to be Trump's running mate but did not make the three-person veepstakes short list.

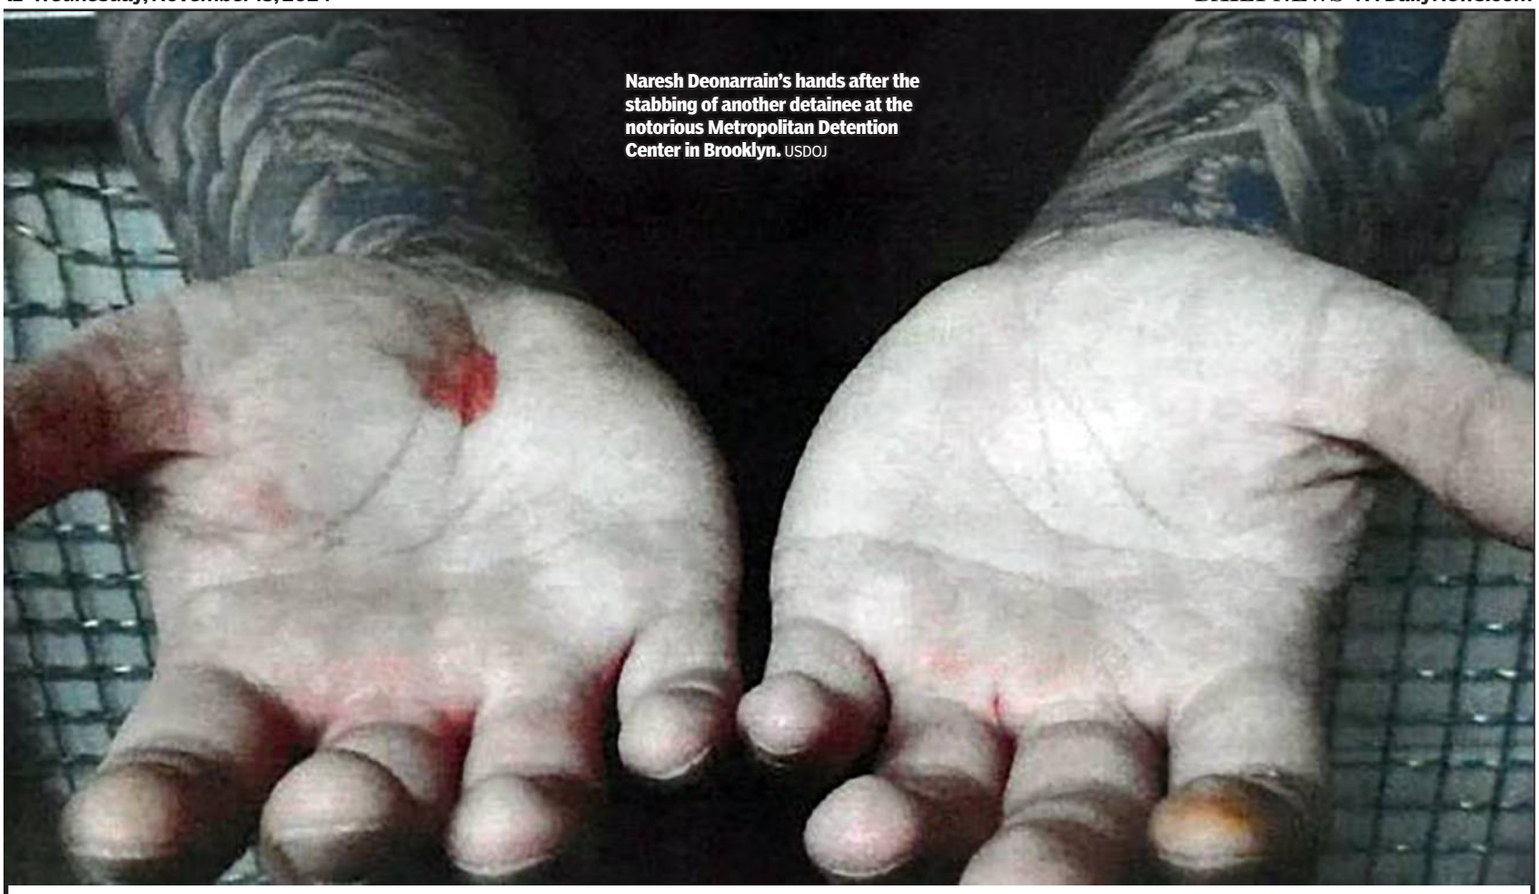

Trump wound up picking JD Vance to be his vice president and is poised to also nominate other finalists Marco Rubio as secretary of state and Doug Burgum as so-called energy czar.

Noem, a married mom of three, earned widespread ridicule with the publication of her memoir in which she recounted killing a dog named Cricket because she believed he was not a good hunting dog.

Noem said she shot the dog and even spotlighted her actions to show that she is capable of making tough choices.

She appeared at Trump's side during some campaign events, notably including an odd incident when then-candidate Trump stood and swayed to his campaign playlist for nearly 40 minutes at an event billed as a town hall question and answer session.

Trump named campaign co-chairwoman Susie Wiles as White House chief of staff last week.

Made pen more 'barbaric'

Feds: Don't give MDC break to gang guy, he added to violence

BY JOHN ANNESE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A gang member was so violent at MDC Brooklyn – the notorious federal lockup that houses Sean "Diddy" Combs – that he should get a penalty, not a discount on his sentence for the atrocious conditions there, the feds argue.

Federal prosecutors made their case against Naresh Deonarrain in a letter Sunday to Long Island Federal Court Judge Gary Brown – the same judge who ruled in August that he would vacate an elderly inmate's sentence if he wound up serving it in the "barbaric" Metropolitan Detention Center.

Deonarrain deserves no such consideration, the feds say, because of the violence he waged during his pretrial incarceration, which included a bloody stabbing this past May and an assault on correction officers in March 2023.

Deonarrain took a plea deal last year, and prosecutors agreed to ask for a 13-year prison sentence. But they're now saying he should serve between 17½ and 20 years behind bars.

"The defendant is a significant contributor to the current conditions at the MDC. The government expects that the defendant, like many other MDC inmates, will use those conditions as a reason for this court to impose a lesser sentence," Assistant U.S. Attorney Samantha Alessi wrote to the judge.

"But he cannot simultaneously contribute to the lawless, violent conditions at the MDC and claim them as a reason he should be granted leniency."

That sentencing is scheduled for Friday, but Deonarrain's lawyer, who did not return messages seeking comment, has asked Brown to postpone it so he can respond to the government's request.

Deonarrain is a member of the "Route Boys," a drug-trafficking gang that waged a burglary spree in 2020 targeting bodegas, check-cashing businesses and laundromats, stealing cash, tobacco products and ATMs.

They graduated to stealing oxycodone and other drugs from mom-and-pop pharmacies across the tristate area.

Deonarrain personally took part in a dozen of those burglaries, including a Dec. 9, 2020, attempted break-in in Brooklyn that ended with a high-speed escape from the NYPD, according to the feds.

The gang member has been locked up in MDC Brooklyn since June 2022, and his behavior there added to the lawlessness and chaos at the jail, the feds say.

This past May, he and two accomplices fought with another detainee, Devante Carpenter, then followed him into a cell, according to Alessi's letter. Carpenter came out with his face slick with blood and covered in a towel, and it turned out he'd been repeatedly stabbed in the face and back.

Deonarrain had injuries on his hands consistent with holding a stabbing weapon, the feds allege.

He also fought with correction officers in March 2023 after they tried to pat him down in a contraband search, according to the feds. He had a package with 100 cigarettes, a sharpened piece of plexiglass and 18 oxycodone pills on him at the time, the feds allege.

Prosecutors also laid out three more instances where Deonarrain was caught with a cell phone, a charger, pot and two 7-inch metal shivs.

Deonarrian's lawyer did not return messages seeking comment.

Brown, the sentencing judge, stated in August he would vacate a 75-year-old tax scammer's nine-month sentence and give him house arrest instead if the man was sent to MDC Brooklyn.

The judge railed against violence at MDC Brooklyn in his written opinion, citing a litany of recent incidents – including a caught-on-video April 27 attack where three MS-13 members stabbed a man 44 times before a lone correction officer intervened, and two stabbing murders six weeks apart at the jail in June and July.

"Each of the five months preceding this opinion was marred by instances of catastrophic violence at MDC, including two apparent homicides, two gruesome stabbings and an assault so severe that it resulted in a fractured eye socket for the victim," Brown wrote.

His opinion also singled out the "Route Boys" case, pointing out that the gang's members were taking photos of themselves in their cells and posting them on the same Instagram account they used to sell drugs.

Over the past year, the Daily News has chronicled a string of violent incidents and instances of medical mistreatment at MDC Brooklyn, where inmates often complain about near-constant lockdowns, rotten and infested food and filthy conditions.

On Oct. 28, multiple federal agencies staged what sources described as a sweeping contraband raid, as part of a Bureau of Prisons effort to clean up the jail. The initiative also included a significant spike in correction officer pay meant to reverse a severe staffing shortage.

PACKING IN PRISONERS

10 more will be jammed into Rikers dorms as population grows

BY GRAHAM RAYMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The Correction Department will jam another 10 beds into dormitory-style housing areas at one jail on Rikers Island as part of a broader plan to address the growth in the population of the jail system.

Dorms in the Otis Bantum Correctional Center and other city jails are typically capped at 50 beds, but DOC officials wanted to increase the limit to 60 beds. On Tuesday, the Board of Correction approved the so-called "variance" request by a 5-to-2 vote.

Correction Commissioner Lynelle Maginley-Liddie attributed the move to an increase in the total jail population since Mayor Adams took office in January 2022. She also cited a continuing challenge in recruiting new officers to staff the jails.

There were 5,400 people held in the jails in January 2022, compared with 6,530 as of Oct. 1, a 21% increase, statistics show.

Associate Commissioner Ned McCormick told the board there are three more phases to the expansion plan, including reopening closed facilities, but declined to further detail those steps in the board meeting. The agency's press office did not respond to a request to expand on his remarks.

Dorm units at the Otis Bantum center on Rikers Island will be allowed to hold 60 rather than 50 inmates as the jail population swells. LUIZ C. RIBEIRO FOR NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

McCormick said department models have "consistently predicted an upward trend in population."

"Despite diligent efforts in recruitment and retention, the staffing crisis continues," he said.

Dr. Robert Cohen, a board member, questioned the decision to expand beds when there are other options – such as using a city law known as "6A" that allows the commissioner to release detainees at her discretion and speeding up transfer of convicted people to state prison.

"You can release hundreds of people if you wanted to, and you have a significant number of people who do not have to be on Rikers Island," Cohen said.

Cohen noted former Mayor Bill de Blasio and now Mayor Adams have been citing emergency provisions to suspend rules governing detainee conditions since September 2021.

"If the department's population is too large for your ability to recruit staff, I think the department should seriously consider decreasing the number of people under your custody because it doesn't sound like it's a safe situation," Cohen said.

Board member Felipe Franco urged the agency to look at the period people are detained on Rikers, which on average is close to 100 days. That's triple the national average of 32.5 days.

"When I look at some of your data, the biggest factor I see in the last few years is this enormous length of stay," Franco said.

Maginley-Liddie countered that the increase in dorm beds is one step to deal with the rising population, including working with the courts to reduce the length of stay.

"We are making strides to ensuring their cases are being reviewed," she said. "We're looking at everything possible."

Maginley-Liddie said since she became commissioner, in December 2023 she has released 45 people through 6A. She also said she wants to open more housing areas, but needs state approval and construction.

'Disturbing' teen choke

B'klyn student tells of teacher's attack; kin plan $5.5M suit

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The 15-year-old Brooklyn high school sophomore allegedly choked by a teacher told the Daily News he was attacked without warning and thought he was going to pass out.

"I couldn't breathe, so it felt like a long time," Hamou Aitmohamedamer Jr. said. "I felt like I was going to faint. People were screaming for him to stop. Then I finally pushed him off me and people rushed me out of the classroom."

The teen's father, Hamou Aitmohamedamer Sr., 60, said the teacher, Gary Zeng, clearly is not fit to be in a classroom.

"It's very disturbing that a teacher did this," the father said. "I never expected I would send my son to school and he would be attacked by a teacher."

The family's lawyer, Scott Rynecki, on Tuesday filed a $5.5 million notice of claim on behalf of the teen and his father, accusing Zeng, 27, of malicious assault and the city and Department of Education of negligence and failure to supervise.

"We don't have any discovery material yet but we need to see his personnel file, what his experience is, what sort of training he has," Rynecki said. "Why would someone left in charge of children attack children?"

The incident happened Oct. 29 at the High School of Sports Management on Benson Ave. in Bath Beach.

The student said he and four other boys went to Zeng's classroom, inside which other students were hanging out on their lunch break while Zeng served as monitor.

Police at the time said Zeng didn't want Hamou there because they were late. But Hamou said, for reasons not clear to him, Zeng came only at him, grabbing him around his neck with both hands and pressing hard enough to leave marks.

"I have no clue why," Hamou said. "He just went off."

The father, an Uber driver, rushed to the school when his son later called him and insisted medics take Hamou to the hospital to be treated for bruises.

Hamou said he and Zeng had no prior issues. Zeng, police said, admitted to officers that he "lost his cool and shouldn't have done it."

He later pleaded not guilty, though, after being charged with strangulation, criminal obstruction of breathing, endangering the welfare of a child, misdemeanor assault and harassment.

Zeng, according to the Education Department, has been transferred to an assignment in which he does not interact with students. The agency would not comment on the notice of claim but called the alleged behavior "completely unacceptable" and said it would move to fire Zeng if he is convicted.

A spokesman for the city's Law Department said the claim will be reviewed. Zeng could not be reached for comment and his lawyer didn't respond to a request for comment.

Hamou, at the insistence of his parents, was transferred to another school.

"I'm still a little traumatized," Hamou said. "I sometimes can't sleep at night."

Man is 2nd slain in playground near shelter where 2 others killed

Police investigate at Steuben Playground on Flushing Ave. in Clinton Hill, Brooklyn, where a 21-year-old homeless man was stabbed to death Tuesday morning.

GARDINER ANDERSON, NICHOLAS WILLIAMS FOR NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

BY NICHOLAS WILLIAMS AND ROCCO PARASCANDOLA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A homeless 21-year-old man was stabbed to death in a Brooklyn playground Tuesday morning, police said.

The scene of the slaying, Clinton Hill's Steuben Playground, is where a Venezuelan migrant was shot to death in July.

In the latest violence, the victim was stabbed in the stomach during a confrontation with a man near Flushing Ave. and Steuben St. at about 8:45 a.m.

Medics rushed him to New York-Presbyterian Hospital Brooklyn Methodist, where he was pronounced dead at 9:20 a.m., police said. His name was not immediately released.

"They need to do something because it's a bunch of people from the shelter that set up in the park," said a truck driver who gave his name as Ralph. "This isn't surprising. There was a incident a few months ago of a shooting."

"It used to be a lot of kids playing in this park, now you don't see that no more," he added. "Everything is just upside down. … They have camps set up here at times. People are scared to come to that park, and it just gets worse and worse."

The victim lived in a migrant shelter on nearby Ryerson St., though his immigration status was not immediately clear.

In July, two men were shot outside the shelter by a moped passenger who jumped off the vehicle and opened fire, striking the intended target, Enny DeJesus Urbina Mendez, 21, and another man, Francisco Fuentes Rangel, 59. The younger victim died that night, the other victim two days later.

The shooter got back on the moped and fled with the driver. They crashed about two minutes later, and police arrested Jorge Said Benitez Villa, 26, who broke his hip in the smashup. His accomplice is still being sought.

Police at first thought the double murder was connected to the playground shooting, which occurred seven minutes earlier, and that they were each sparked by ongoing tensions between the notorious Venezuelan gang Tren de Aragua and an offshoot, Anti-Tren.

But cops later determined the playground shooting, unlike the shelter slayings, was not related to those tensions, with police charging a city Parks Department cleaner, Elijah Michell, with shooting Venezuelan Arturo Jose Rodriguez Marcano, 30. Michell is charged with murder as a hate crime.

According to prosecutors, Mitchell and Rodriguez Marcano got into a heated argument about a migrant tent in the park on July 18, when Mitchell ranted about the encampment and started tearing down the tarps.

Mitchell then retreated to his car, only to return to confront Rodriguez Marcano by lifting his shirt and revealing a gun – but was held back by other park workers, according to the Brooklyn district attorney.

Three days later, while off duty, Mitchell went back to the park and shot Rodriguez Marcano in the chest while the victim was sleeping, prosecutors said.

Disciplinary trial of officer who killed man in Bx. traffic stop starts

BY THOMAS TRACY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Attorneys for an NYPD lieutenant facing possible termination over fatally shooting a motorist during a Bronx car stop five years ago raised the dead man's criminal past during an internal disciplinary trial Tuesday, sparking anger from departmental critics who are pressing for the officer's dismissal.

The fatal encounter unfolded on Oct. 17, 2019, when Lt. Jonathan Rivera pulled over Allan Feliz for not wearing a seat belt. Feliz, 31, gave the officers his brother's identification before trying to drive off and escape. Rivera then leaped through the passenger-side window and tased, beat and finally shot Feliz in the chest at E. 211th St. and Bainbridge Ave.

As the long-delayed trial got underway, attorneys James Moschella and Philip Karasyk brought up Feliz's criminal past, saying the man was on methamphetamines, had drugs on his person and was on federal parole for selling drugs. The lawyers said they wanted to help establish the dead man's "state of mind" when he tried to escape Rivera, who was a sergeant at the time, and Police Officers Edward Barrett and Michelle Almanzar.

The move drew an immediate objection from Civilian Complaint Review Board prosecutor Amanda Rodriguez.

"[Feliz's] state of mind is not relevant here," Rodriguez told NYPD Deputy Commissioner of Trials Rosemarie Maldonado on Tuesday. "It's also more prejudicial than probative. The actions we are concerned with are those of the lieutenant."

But Maldonado allowed the info to come in, noting its "limited weight" on the case before them. The three officers had pulled Feliz over believing that he was driving without a seat belt.

When they finally stopped him, they realized he did have his seat belt on, but ran the name he gave them, Samy Feliz, through their computer. When cops found several open warrants in Samy Feliz's name, they tried to take Feliz into custody, sparking the deadly confrontation.

"Yo! If I have to end up f––g shooting you, Bro!" Lt. Rivera is heard screaming as Feliz wails in pain from repeated Taser shocks. "Yo, Bro! I'm going to f––g shoot you."

A minute later, Rivera did so.

Feliz's stunned passenger is seen screaming, "Don't shoot me!" as Rivera and Barrett repeatedly strike the driver on the head trying to get him to surrender.

Dr. Marc Edward Brown, a police tactics expert from South Carolina testifying for the CCRB, said Tuesday that Rivera's use of deadly force "was not justified."

Rivera, he said, put himself in danger by vaulting through the window and getting into a close-quarters fight with Feliz.

"I don't believe deadly force should have been used at that point," he said. "[Rivera] put himself in jeopardy, and you shouldn't escalate the force over the jeopardy you created."

Moschella and Karasyk said Rivera shot Feliz because the lieutenant believed Barrett, who was on the other side of the car, had fallen to the ground and was about to be run over by Feliz's SUV. Rivera has previously been cleared of any wrongdoing by both the NYPD and state Attorney General Letitia James' office.

At the end of the trial, Maldonado will not be determining if Rivera had followed NYPD patrol guidelines and tactics. Rather, much like in the departmental trial of the cops who fatally shot Kawaski Trawick in 2019, the CCRB has a higher evidence threshold and must prove Rivera violated state penal law for assault and menacing, officials said.

The CCRB was left in this bind because the NYPD took more than 2½ years to provide the police watchdog agency with body-worn camera footage and Force Investigation Division findings, forcing the 18-month statute of limitations to run out, said Loyda Colón, the executive director of the Justice Committee, an advocacy group, which has been demanding that Mayor Adams and Interim Police Commissioner Thomas Donlon fire Rivera.

After constantly rewatching footage of Feliz's death – taking quick breaks so his 5-year-old son, Eli, could leave the courtroom before the violent videos were shown – the one thing that truly upset the dead man's family at Tuesday's departmental trial was what Rivera wore when he walked into the trial room.

"The biggest slap in the face to the family was having to see Lt. Rivera walking in with his gun," said Feliz's sister Ashley Verdeja at a news conference and demonstration outside the courtroom. "To see him carrying a weapon after what he did to my brother."

Colón criticized Rivera's lawyers bringing up Feliz's criminal past.

"Today in true NYPD fashion in the very first 15 minutes of the discipline proceedings, they immediately began to blame Allan Feliz for his own death," they said, "This is beyond ridiculous."

Body camera footage repeatedly shown during the first day of trial shows Rivera jumping through the passenger-side window and laying across the passenger as he tried to subdue Feliz with a Taser in one hand and a gun in the other "like a cowboy," Colón said.

Kin mark 23rd ann'y of Flight 587 tragedy that killed 265 in Queens

At ceremony Tuesday in Memorial Park at Beach 116th St. in Rockaway Park, mourners (far left) hold photos of loved ones who died in the crash of American Airlines Flight 587, which went down in Belle Harbor on Nov. 12, 2001. Above, Mayor Adams arrives to speak.

Family members of the dozens of people killed in the American Airlines Flight 587 tragedy gathered at the crash site in Queens on Tuesday to mark the 23rd anniversary of the disaster.

Belkis Lora, whose brother Jose Lora was among the 265 people who perished in the 2001 tragedy, said during an anniversary ceremony near the crash site in Belle Harbor that "many aspects of our life have changed" since the accident.

"The children who lost their parents on the flight have since become adults. Sadly, we have also lost a loved one who has stood by us for many years," said Lora, the president of the Committee in Memory of Flight 587. "Yet, one thing remains constant: Our commitment to remembering this day and honoring the memories. Even in our sadness and pain … we take this time to honor the memory of our loved ones on this day."

American Airlines Flight 587 was bound for the Dominican Republic on Nov. 12, 2001, from Kennedy Airport. But shortly after takeoff, the aircraft crashed into Belle Harbor, killing all 260 people onboard and five people on the ground.

The incident set off panic in an already anxious city, reeling at the time from the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attack.

Mayor Adams, who joined family members of the victims for Tuesday's ceremony, referenced the traumatic timing of the crash in remarks.

"Weeks after [the] Sept. 11 attack, we were still mourning the death and loss of so many people, and to find out right here in this community of Belle Harbor, a simple trip en route to the Dominican Republic, had to experience such a devastating loss to the Dominican community here in the city, but also to every New Yorker," he said.

Guilty of attempted murder in shoot of rookie cop

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

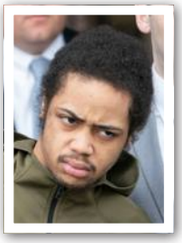

A jury in Queens on Tuesday found a man guilty of attempted murder for shooting a rookie cop who tried to intervene in a petty fight over a bus seat.

Devin Spraggins turned on Brett Boller – who at 22 was just three months into his dream job as an NYPD officer – when he tried to break up an argument over a bus seat near Parsons Blvd. in April 2023.

"This case could not have been any clearer. This individual was carrying a loaded gun on our streets. He attacked an innocent bus passenger for no reason. He was determined to get away with those crimes at any cost, even if it meant murdering a New York City police officer," Police Benevolent Association President Patrick Hendry said in a statement.

"He didn't succeed thanks to the courage and skill of our brother Brett Boller and his fellow police officers. We're grateful that he is being held accountable with this verdict. Now he must receive the longest sentence the law allows," the statement said.

Spraggins boarded the bus at 160th St. and Parsons Blvd and immediately approached a random rider as they traveled along a Queens street, former NYPD Chief of Detectives James Essig said at a news conference at the time.

"Why are you looking at me? You're in my seat!" Spraggins reportedly said to the other passenger, according to Essig.

The bus driver then flagged down Boller (below right), but when the rookie cop confronted Spraggins, he angrily pushed Boller aside and ran off the bus, Essig said.

Boller then chased Spraggins down, but when he caught up to him, Spraggins pulled a gun from his waistband and shot Boller in the leg, prosecutors said.

The bullet shattered Boller's hip and pierced his femoral artery, according to court papers.

Afterward, Spraggins ran from the scene and changed his clothes before taking a Lyft taxi to the Bronx, according to police. At some point, he cut his hair to disguise himself, police said.

Boller's father, NYPD Inspector Don Boller, was there when the U.S. Marshals Regional Fugitive Task Force arrested Spraggins in an apartment building on Bronx Blvd., a source told the Daily News.

The elder Boller was among the cops who crowded the courtroom throughout the trial.

Boller, now 23, is still recovering from the injury that nearly took his life a year and a half ago, Hendry said in October.

"Three surgeries, constant physical therapy. He said to me, the things that were once routine are no longer routine. He relied on others to do the basic things in life – get out of bed, change his clothes," Hendry recounted.

Boller, who is still on restricted duty, has been promoted to detective.

'BOT' SERIOUSLY FOLKS

'Maybe Happy Ending,' a charmingly human piece of theater

Darren Criss and Helen J. Shen in "Maybe Happy Ending." PHOTO BY MATTHEY MURPHY AND EVAN ZIMMERMAN

Oliver, played by Darren Criss, is a lonely, nerdy apartment dweller with a love of Chet Baker, a named plant as his sole companion and a persistent air of melancholy. Claire, portrayed by newcomer Helen J. Shen, is the smart, cute neighbor across the hall who takes pride in her appearance but has abandonment issues and worries constantly about her future. One day, she knocks on his door looking for a charge.

Add some falling snow and spontaneous street musicians and you'd have a saccharine Hallmark holiday movie, or perhaps a sweet Off-Broadway date-night comedy, but, as written by Will Aronson and Hue Park, the new Broadway musical "Maybe Happy Ending" comes with a very arresting twist.

Both these characters are highly sophisticated South Korean robots. They act like sentient beings as they navigate life, so to speak, in Seoul, but they've already been discarded by owners moving on to a new model. Their mutual "retirement" means they have been shoved in the metaphorical drawer like some sad-sack iPhone 8, nothing left to do except wait until their internal batteries degrade to zero.

Can their love save them from their fate? Can they even feel at all, even to save their own rechargeable lives? Can a human audience care about robotic characters? Those are the salient questions of the night.

As adroitly directed by Michael Arden, "Maybe Happy Ending" turns out to be a very charming, romantic and slightly unnerving little musical that keys into our current collective AI- (and election-) induced worry that the easily manipulated but chilly Siri might soon evolve into a pliant, all-knowing, emotionally treasonous companion whom we come to prefer to actual people and who might one day start making its own demands.

Several manifestations of that fear have shown up on Broadway this season. We're all current witnesses to that growing neurosis.

But the appeal of this particular piece, which really is most pleasurable to watch, revolves not just around its sweet, quirky score (it kept putting me in mind of Benj Pasek and Justin Paul and, specifically "La La Land") but it's also due to how skillfully the show sets and keeps its own rules about what these bots can and cannot do and how well it allegorizes their robotic angst with human mortality.

We might have hearts rather than batteries, the show implies, but they eventually disintegrate in very much the same way. Better yet, "Maybe Happy Ending" is smart enough not to stick around so long that you start to question its internal assumptions: conceptual musicals are typically better when confined to 90 minutes, and this one knows that score.

Thanks to Dane Laffrey, the show also benefits from the freshest and most cinematic set design of the season (Sunset Blvd. notwithstanding) that keeps the audience constantly guessing what will happen. Various screens and platforms, both digital and analog, keep sliding around, constantly restricting views to just one section of the stage and then suddenly opening up as the retired robots start to grasp more of the emotional opportunities that arise as they interact with a small ensemble cast of humans. This kind of show needs that sort of confining focus.

I was never entirely clear why Criss' robot has jerky movements while Shen's model operates almost entirely like a person. I assume it's because she's a more advanced model, but it's still a bit jarring for the whole show and the overall effect was perhaps not worth that focus-pulling detail. Still, both actors are most engaging with Shen making a very sophisticated Broadway debut. Her performance has the right combination of guilelessness and vulnerability with just enough of an ironic twist to allow the audience in on the joke.

That's how she sings, too. And Criss is most certainly all-in when it comes to his guy. He's pretty wacky here, but I enjoyed his work, too.

The whole shebang is quite the slow-burning charmer and deserves to be a bit of a sleeper hit.

Both robots have been given the equivalent of a gold watch from their former owners (she got a wardrobe of designer clothes, while he got a love of jazz music). But as you watch their love of their stuff deteriorate within their hearts (if they had them), you become surprisingly invested in their fates.

Here, two robot characters, for goodness sake, are carrying on that age-old Broadway declaration that love, and only love, is the existential necessity we cannot live without. Only here it's manifested in ways that even Stephen Sondheim could not have dreamed.

Waltz's foreign policy dance card

The week after he won the White House, Donald Trump announced his national security advisor. It was 2016 and the pick was Mike Flynn, a man with an oddly pro-Russian worldview who only would last three weeks in the role, having lied to the vice president about talking to the Russians. Flynn was also under investigation for being an unregistered foreign agent. Later convicted of crimes, Flynn was ultimately pardoned by Trump.

This time, a week after he won the White House, Donald Trump announced his national security advisor. It's another Mike, Mike Waltz, a Florida congressman. Unlike Flynn, Waltz is no pal of the Kremlin, or the Chinese or the Iranians, all our rivals on the global stage. A serious man, Waltz also has a more sound understanding of America's place in the world and why we must stay engaged and not withdraw.

Waltz knows the value of standing up to bullies and standing in solidarity with friends, even if Trump sometimes doesn't. We mean Russia and Ukraine.

Trump talks about America First, but his adopting the name of a dangerous and discredited isolationist organization of the 1930s and 1940s shows his lack of understanding of the history.

During a March 2016 interview, New York Times reporter David Sanger in asking candidate Trump about his foreign policy, compared it to the America First ideas espoused by Charles Lindbergh that held that both the British and the Germans should be viewed with suspicion in 1940 and 1941, as England fought alone against the Nazis.

From the interview transcript it doesn't seem that Trump knew anything of the historical movement, but liked the catchy name and adopted the phrase.

The isolationism and avoiding foreign commitment of Lindbergh and America First was also the editorial policy of the Daily News in the 1930s and 1940s, having been traumatized by the mass death of the First World War.

These editorial columns argued to stay out of other people's fights; we opposed FDR's Lend-Lease plan to aid Britain. It was not our business, went the thinking. It was a terrible mistake. The "pro-peace" position allowed tyrants in Germany and Italy and Japan to swallow up their neighbors in Europe and Asia as long as we stayed out of the fray. But the tyrants always want more. It wasn't until Pearl Harbor that The News changed course.

That fatal mistake after WWI, when America withdrew from the world, was not repeated after WWII, when NATO was created. Collective security works.

France and Germany fought three major wars in the 75 years between 1870 and 1945, each more destructive than its predecessor (Franco-Prussian, WWI and WWII). In the 75 years since NATO was founded in 1949, under Washington's sponsorship, France and Germany have been strong allies and no NATO member has been attacked.

Trump and Waltz both want our NATO partners to increase their military funding, as do we. The U.S. cannot carry the entire burden. Ukraine is not in NATO, but it borders on NATO territory and Putin's aggression cannot be rewarded.

Maybe Trump is correct that he can end the war "in 24 hours," but the only just "deal" is a full Russian withdrawal to the lines before the invasion, not a negotiation on how much of Ukraine Russia gets to keep.

End New York's deadly addiction

Another November brings another report by the state Opioid Settlement Fund Advisory Board, a group of experts brought together to recommend how New York State should allocate the hundreds of millions of dollars awarded from opioid manufacturers, marketers and sellers. They reiterated, as we often do, a plea for a harm reduction approach, including the appropriate funding of overdose prevention centers.

The board also made the case that Gov. Hochul should issue a public health emergency for overdose deaths, allowing the state to move more decisively to combat the crisis. A public health emergency is no small matter, but we can't deny that this has been an escalating challenge that threatens to keep spiraling without focused intervention, and as always the costs of failures can be measured in lives indelibly impacted and lost.

While the board did note that overdose deaths had ticked down ever so slightly in the last year, this comes after a sharp rise in the three years prior. Also, while deaths from opioids and heroin were down, deaths from cocaine and other stimulants were up, at least in part due to the frequent contamination of the clandestine drug supply, which has created new challenges in the fight against overdoses.

The data also further spotlights a trend we'd already been seeing: Black New Yorkers are dying at far higher rates than any other racial and ethnic demographic proportional to their share of the population. From January to June of last year, 27% of the 6,000-plus overdose deaths in the state affected Black people, despite their being 14% of the population. Almost half of these were folks over 55, raising some questions not just about how we can deal with the aftermath but what is leading to these situations in the first place.

Beyond the very big recommendations like the public health emergency, the board raised a number of operational concerns, among them that it was difficult for them to fully evaluate the success, performance and contours of the overall state opioid mitigation efforts and the opioid crisis without cohesive data monitoring and reporting.

The best way of ensuring this pot of money – which is not recurring, like tax dollars, so once it's gone, it's gone – is having the maximum positive impact, state agencies and the board have to have up-to-date data and information, and have concerted long-term game plans that are responsive to what's happening on the ground.

Segmentation and siloing of government entities is anathema to all sorts of crucial functions, and the heavy task of preventing deaths and setting our fellow New Yorkers on a path towards recovery is no exception.

It should also be said that, while the federal government has been slow but trending in the right direction with regards to things like harm reduction, we can probably expect that progress to disappear overnight when the Trump administration gets into place. If Biden-appointed Manhattan U.S. Attorney Damian Williams already threatened to take official action against NYC's sanctioned overdose prevention centers, then you can bet that a Trump-appointed one will watch like a hawk.

We are probably on our own, and while we can thank state Attorney General Tish James for the money continuing to roll in regardless, we'll now have to think about fighting back against interference.

New Yorkers lose Hochul's bad gamble

BE OUR GUEST

BY SAM SCHWARTZ

Gov. Hochul played poker with the future of New York, expecting to draw the Harris card and instead getting stuck with the Trump card! All this to garner favor with suburban voters by stopping congestion pricing in its tracks, so that they'd vote the local Democratic nominees into the House and presidency. It was a colossal failure, and we are the ones footing the bill.

Last year, I complained in these pages that I was concerned that the governor wasn't fully behind the congestion pricing plan. I immediately got a call from her office saying I was way off-base, nothing could be further from the truth.

That was reinforced in December when Hochul, at a congestion pricing rally I attended (and spoke at) came out forcefully and in cadence asking "Anybody sick and tired of gridlock in New York City? Anybody think we deserve better transit, especially those who live and work here? Anyone think that people with disabilities deserve to have more accessibility when they travel through this city? Anybody want cleaner air for our kids and for future generations? Well then you love congestion pricing, right?" The crowd ate it up.

After Jan. 20, the likelihood of federal support is about the same as the Giants meeting the Jets in the 2025 Super Bowl.

When it came my turn to speak, I didn't want to rain on the parade, even though I'm a veteran of more than a half-century of various congestion pricing plans that were blocked by lawsuits, congressional actions and politics. But I did warn that I wasn't breaking out the champagne just yet. I knew there would be obstacles, mainly lawsuits that could derail the plan. But, after hearing Hochul speak I wasn't worried about her commitment. Boy was I wrong!

I was in Cleveland on June 4 of this year, speaking before the American Public Transit Association (APTA) meeting. I had been invited to explain how New York got congestion pricing done. The APTA group made clear that if we can do it in New York then other cities would follow suit. I went to bed that night proud of my hometown. The following morning, I woke to numerous phone calls from media and colleagues telling me the plan had been "paused," government speak for dead.

Despite all this I am not giving up on the governor. We already lost, forever, nearly a half-billion dollars in revenue had the system turned on June 30 as scheduled, not to mention another half-billion spent to design and build the infrastructure. The system has been collecting tons of data from license plate readers (LPRs) and E-ZPass tags. Collections can begin almost immediately. Remember we were just 25 days from implementation when Hochul canceled it in June. Hochul could direct the MTA to turn the system on ASAP.

Time is running short. Had Hochul gotten the Harris card, she would have had time to craft a plan with a friendly administration. But Trump has made clear his disdain for the program saying in a post on Truth Social that he'd "TERMINATE Congestion Pricing in my FIRST WEEK back in Office!!"

After Jan. 20, the likelihood of federal support is about the same as the Giants meeting the Jets in the 2025 Super Bowl. The urgency is even greater for the MTA knowing that while the Biden administration added $4 billion to the MTA's capital plan in addition to federal formula assistance, the earlier Trump administration awarded just 2% of that amount, $80 million.

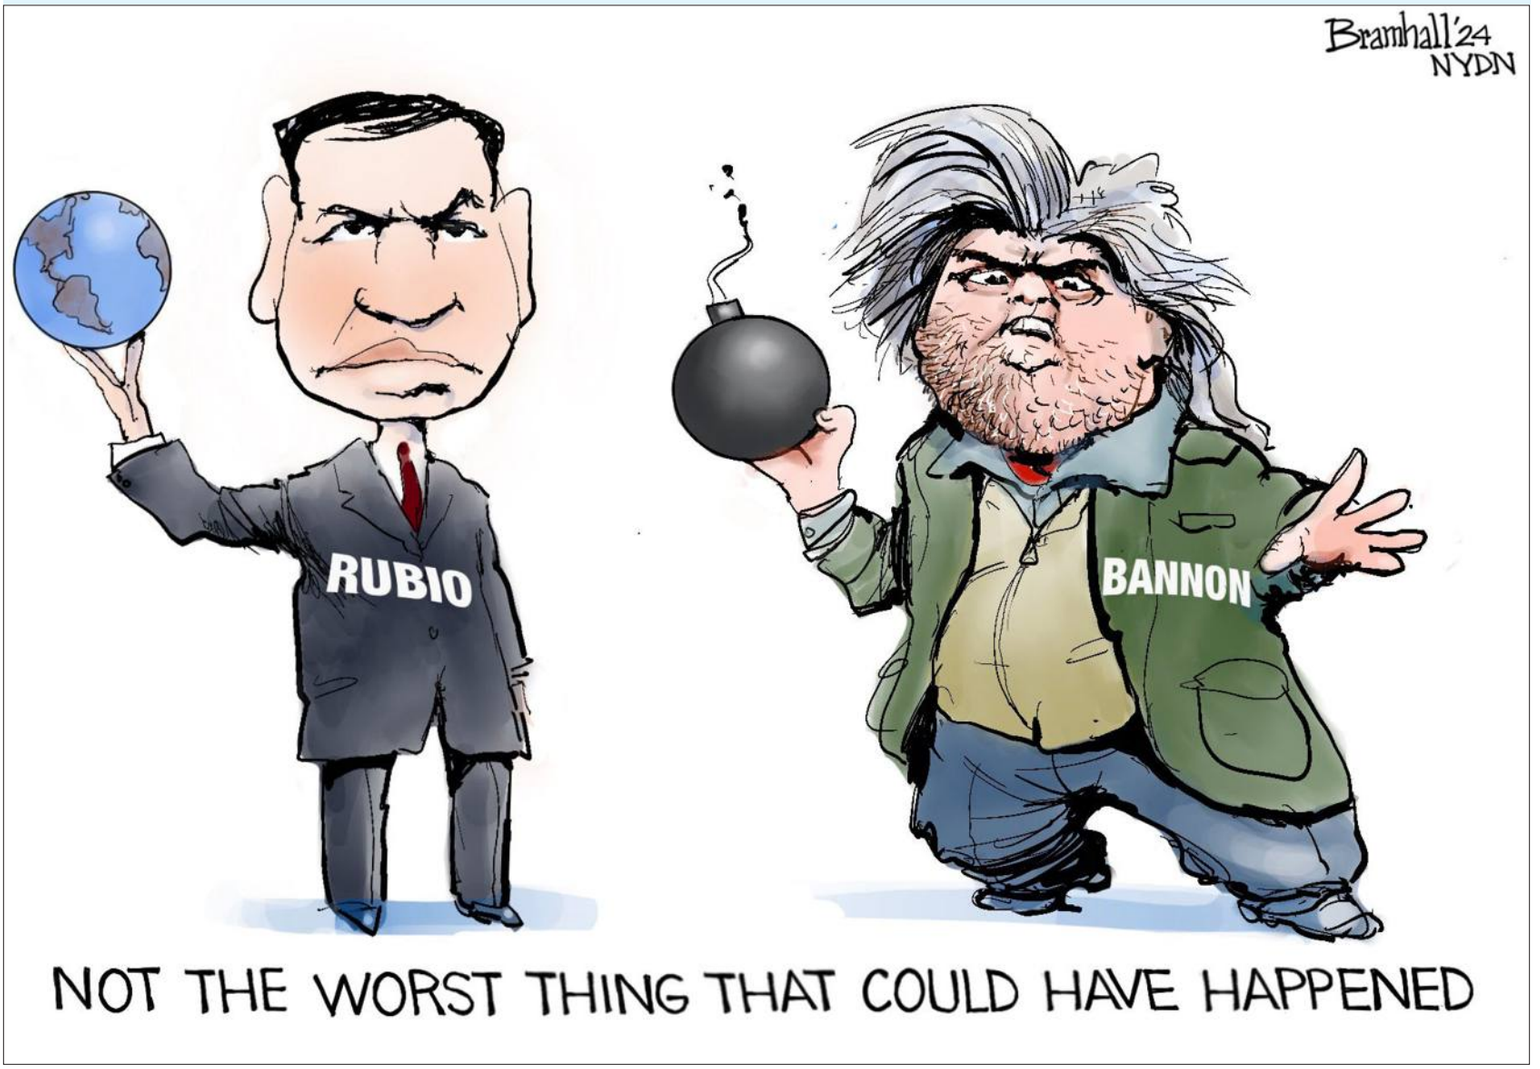

The clock is winding down for Hochul and us. She has the following choices: turn the system on immediately at the federally approved toll rates $15 peak and $3.75 off-peak or tweak the plan a bit to stay within parameters that were studied in the Environmental Assessment – meaning perhaps a $9 peak charge.

The latter would require immediate sign off from US DOT, which has not been known to be swift. It also will provide fuel for plaintiffs in multiple lawsuits claiming this "new plan" needs more study. So, the safest option is to turn on the system now at the approved rates.

Governor, you asked us a year ago if we were tired of gridlock, dirty air, and inaccessible transit. We gave you a resounding YES! Since then, things have only worsened. NYC has been named the most gridlocked city on the planet by traffic data firm INRIX, emergency response "traveling in traffic" times have increased in every reported category and the incoming federal administration will undoubtedly short change transit. As Spike Lee would say, "Governor, do the right thing!"

Schwartz is a former NYC traffic commissioner.

BRAMHALL'S WORLD

Trump must still get jail time for his felonies

BE OUR GUEST

BY NICK AKERMAN

Yesterday, Acting Manhattan state Supreme Court Justice Juan Merchan postponed deadlines for the sentencing of former and future President Donald J. Trump for his convictions on 34 felony counts for fraudulently falsifying business records.

Both the district attorney and Trump's defense lawyer, in response to Trump's election victory, requested the delay to file their respective positions on the "appropriate steps going forward."

Winning the presidential election, however, is not a proper mitigating factor for sentencing purposes and does not translate into a get-out-of-jail-free card.

In my more than 50 years of experience as a federal prosecutor and a criminal defense lawyer, I have taken part in hundreds of sentencing hearings. In my estimation, Trump deserves a term of imprisonment.

The two goals of sentencing are punishment and deterrence. The severity of Trump's fraud cries out for punishment. Equally important is the clear message that a prison sentence would send — no one is above the law.

A prison sentence satisfies justice in this case based upon the trial evidence underlying the convictions. While Trump has no prior criminal convictions, the seriousness of the fraud calls for some measure of prison time. In its simplest terms, criminal fraud amounts to lying designed to steal something of value from the victim(s).

Here, the jury convicted Trump of lying to the entire American electorate with the intent to steal the election in 2016. While there was no monetary loss, there was a loss to American democracy resulting from the concealment from the voters of full and correct information highly material to their voting decisions particularly after the release of the "Access Hollywood" tape recording his bragging about grabbing women by the p––y.

Public knowledge of Trump's sex scandal and later hush money payment to Stormy Daniels may well have resulted in Trump losing his presidential bid in 2016 and in turn his viability to run for president in 2020 and 2024. This was not a petty victimless crime.

Moreover, the felony convictions signify that the jury had to conclude that Trump also intended to violate other criminal laws outlawing certain federal and state campaign contributions and New York State criminal tax laws.

An added factor for the court to consider are Trump's extensive efforts to cover up his fraud. The evidence at trial showed that he attempted to prevent his attorney Michael Cohen from cooperating with the authorities. The evidence also revealed that Trump tried to cover up his fraud by creating false documentation to reimburse Cohen for the hush money payment to Daniels.

Significantly, there is also a serious issue of equal treatment under the law. The court cannot ignore Cohen having served time in prison for his involvement in this same fraud. Further, Merchan had imprisoned another major player in this fraud, Allen Weisselberg, the Trump Organization's chief financial officer, to more than nine months in prison for crimes unrelated to this fraud.

Trump's lawyers assert there should be no sentencing because Trump, as president cannot perform his duties from prison. But that does not mean Trump should not receive a jail sentence. Any prison sentence imposed on Trump can be suspended during his term as president.

After the sentencing, Trump's lawyers can file a motion for a stay of the prison sentence in federal court arguing the constitutional framework mandates that Trump complete his presidential term prior to serving his sentence. The ability of Trump to perform as president is simply not a proper sentencing consideration for the state court.

Ironically, the stated reason Merchan granted Trump's request to delay sentencing until after the election was because "[t]he public's confidence in the integrity of our judicial system demands a sentencing hearing that is entirely focused on the verdict of the jury and the weighing of aggravating and mitigating factors free from distraction or distortion," while respecting the jury's verdict "in a manner that is not diluted by the enormity of the upcoming presidential election."

If the concern is nullifying Trump's criminal convictions as a gesture of goodwill for the country to start anew, that is a political decision outside the purview of the state court. That decision rests only with Gov. Hochul, who has the power to pardon Trump post-sentencing.

Our rule of law is on full display for the entire world to see. Anything less than a proper sentence of imprisonment will be an absolute travesty of justice and contrary to what would happen to any other individual convicted of 34 felony counts for perpetrating a similarly serious fraud.

Akerman was formerly an assistant special Watergate prosecutor and an assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York.

Trump trades on our entrenched racial hierarchy

Laurelton: Lyndon B. Johnson (photo) once said, "If you can convince the lowest white man he's better than the best colored man, he won't notice you're picking his pocket. Hell, give him somebody to look down on, and he'll empty his pockets for you."

Sadly, this is still true. The world watched Donald Trump lose to Kamala Harris during their debate. He refused to be interviewed by "60 Minutes" because he did not want to be fact-checked, was found guilty on 34 felony charges and jeopardized our national security by stealing top-secret documents and leaving them scattered all over his Mar-a-Lago home for anyone to pick up and read. On top of that, he separated children from their families and lost those children in bureaucratic red tape, was impeached twice and lied more than 40,000 times while increasing our national debt to more than $8 trillion.

To America, it did not matter because his opponent was an upstanding, well-educated and highly qualified Black woman who had plans and policies that would have richly benefited us all. But many voting women whose reproductive rights Trump stripped away, Gold Star families he disrespected and whose funds he taxed, and Puerto Ricans he abandoned and allowed to be insulted all voted for him because, in spite of his heavy orange glow of inferiority and treachery, he gave them the false pride of being better than those whose pigmentation is darker than theirs.

As Johnson stated, they did not see Trump picking their pockets, and in fact, many of them even emptied their own pockets by purchasing his tacky sneakers, autographed Bibles and virtual playing cards.

The old guard

Hicksville, L.I.: Regarding all the Monday morning quarterbacking in an effort to understand how Trump won, I submit that the answer is obvious: There was no way the cretins in this country were going to allow a Black woman into "their" White House. And why do so many Americans feel this way? Obvious answer again: Three decades of Fox News. Steven Malinofsky

Imperfect idol

Union, N.J.: In 2017, Trump referred to Andrew Jackson, the father of the "white republic" and a genocidal tyrant who spoke of recapturing or killing all those who he felt didn't belong here, as "a reflection of myself"! Let's look in the mirror and see that reflection! Lou Alt

Stop the steal

Manhattan: Full disclosure, I did not vote for Trump. I have mixed feelings about his win. I do see the silver lining in that Trump promises to deport all migrants who are criminals. Maybe our corrupt and criminally indicted Mayor Adams will take note. He created the migrant debacle with all the taxpayer giveaways: luxury hotels, free apartments and debit cards costing billions of dollars more than needed. If Adams was a migrant, he would be deported, too. Patricia Clark

Attack on institutions

Ashburn, Va.: It's getting difficult to keep up with Trump, and he's not even president yet! On Sunday, he demanded that the Senate surrender its constitutional privilege of confirming presidential appointments. Hey, didn't Time magazine report that pre-World War II Germany started out with something like that? "[T]he Nazi leader disabled, then dismantled, the Weimar Republic. [He] exploited his [power] to gridlock legislative processes, to cudgel or crush the political opposition, and ultimately to undermine the country's democratic structures" (Time, April 26, 2024). Maybe we should remember that George Santayana warned us that those who forget history are doomed to repeat it. Mike Barrett

Swing-state sweepstakes

Walden, N.Y.: So, Elon Musk ran a lottery where voters in battleground states could win one of many $1 million prizes. I guess we've become a country where buying votes is legal. Jake Milite

Unhealthy choice

Manhattan: Voicer Gary Stein made cogent points regarding Trump's decisive election victory, including the specter of him once again surrounding himself with crazy, incompetent individuals. The very thought of Robert F. Kennedy Jr. making consequential medical decisions regarding the health care of our country is downright scary! Kennedy is a known anti-vaccine conspiracy theory nut! If Trump follows through on giving Kennedy a consequential position in his administration having anything to do with the nation's health care system, the Senate must do its job and reject that nomination in short order! Hopefully, there are senators who have enough common sense to do so. Millions of Americans have been put in jeopardy by the mere suggestion that vaccines are dangerous! Trump's potential appointment of RFK Jr. as some kind of "health czar" would be a catastrophic error! Gerard Rosenthal

No big deal?

Monroe, N.J.: I guess I missed the president-elect's message to veterans and their families on Veterans Day. So much for his pride in being the future commander in chief of the military. Maybe he didn't think there was enough of a photo-op to do so. Katherine A. Moloney

Take on the trash

Manhattan: "Containerization of NYC garbage begins" (op-ed, Nov. 11) is a good step toward solving NYC's waste problems. Reducing garbage is even better. New York can solve many of its waste issues with two bills waiting for passage in Albany. The Packaging Reduction and Recycling Infrastructure Act will encourage manufacturers to limit the amount of packaging they use and get rid of toxins presently in packaging. Think of all those Amazon boxes in your mail room. The Bottle Bill will incentivize citizens to return their empties by increasing redemption to 10 cents and expanding the types of bottles that can be redeemed. More bottles out of the gutters and parks. My elected officials, state Sen. Robert Jackson and Assemblyman Al Taylor, have signed on as co-sponsors of both bills. Let's get them passed in 2025 and make New York a leader in waste management. Lord knows we need good leadership right now. Eileen Leonard

Tax reversal

Whitestone: No wonder no one trusts the Democrats anymore. Gov. Hochul talks out of both sides of her mouth. First, she "pauses" congestion pricing, stating that she is not going to burden New Yorkers with an extra tax. Now she's stating that she may bring it back with a 40% reduction. So, instead of $15 it'll be $9. Who is she kidding? This is another Democratic scam and another Democratic lie. That's why most people don't trust the Democrats and showed that on Election Day. Hochul needs to stop bleeding New York taxpayers. Gene O'Brien

Get schooled

Glen Cove, L.I.: To Voicer Al D'Angelo: Just wondering if you were a teacher during the Vietnam era, because I was. I taught in a very large school in Queens, and there were five male teachers who were there to avoid the draft. Not one of us in any way tried to indoctrinate our students. We followed the curriculum like everybody else. Furthermore, except for me and one other person, the others left after the draft lottery became law. Certainly, these numbers would make it almost impossible to "indoctrinate" an entire generation of children and their children and grandchildren. That would have been quite an accomplishment. It would be helpful if people like D'Angelo would write about something they actually know about, but I guess that would severely limit their ability to write to the Daily News. Alan Rosengarten

Subway surfacing

Hillsdale, N.Y.: One thing that might reduce or prevent subway surfing is to design the top of subway cars with an inverted U or V roof so that no one can stand on it. Perhaps installing small, pointed spikes on the roofs of cars might discourage subway surfing as well. It's worth a try if it prevents someone from losing a limb or their life. Phil Antico

The long game

Valley Stream, L.I.: It looks like the Aaron Rodgers era is over, but there may be a silver lining for the Jets. In just 13 short years, Jordan Love will turn 39 and I'm sure the Packers will be more than happy to do another trade. I'm positive the third time will be the charm. Allan Canino

Urgent matters

Omaha: From a die-hard Yankees fan all the way back to 1959: Pass on signing Juan Soto and properly address the more pressing needs on this roster. Tom Dahulick

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA, KERRY BURKE AND RONI JACOBSON
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

An arrest has been made in the choking death of a woman seen on video being dragged by her attacker outside a Times Square area hotel, police said Tuesday.

The incident happened early on the morning of Oct. 29. Officers responded to a 1:16 a.m. call from Mount Sinai Hospital, where they were told that an unidentified, unconscious woman had been rushed there in critical condition by medics and that, based on her injuries, she appeared to have been choked.

Police then went to where the woman had been picked up by medics – the Hotel Riu Plaza New York Times Square – and found surveillance video that showed a man dragging the woman in front of the hotel.

"It was a couple," a hotel worker told the Daily News at the time. "They were together – they were fighting earlier."

Police, though, said the victim and the suspect might not have known each other for long.

The victim, Leslie Torres, 23, died a week later on Nov. 4. She had lived in a homeless shelter on W. 45th St., between Eighth and Ninth Aves., that provides temporary shelter and stabilization services to single adults with the goal of moving them to transitional and permanent housing. The shelter is just more than a block away from where the woman was found unconscious by medics on Oct. 29.

"It's shocking to me," said a shelter resident who knew the victim but declined to give her name. "She never socialized. She would eat her food and go back up to her room. She used to be on psychiatric meds that made her somewhat like a zombie," the resident said.

"She was a nice, quiet girl and liked to keep to herself," said an employee of the shelter who spoke on condition of anonymity. "She liked to take long walks late at night and that's when it happened."

On Tuesday, police arrested Jaheem Warren, 33, and charged him with murder.

Warren and Torres did not know each other before the fatal encounter, said a police source with knowledge of the case. Warren noticed Torres for the first time the night of the attack, when he began stalking her, according to the source.

Police arrested Warren in New Jersey on an unrelated charge. Facial recognition technology helped alert authorities that he was the man in the video seen dragging Torres in front of the Midtown hotel, the source said.

Cops then transported Warren back to New York so he could be charged in Torres' murder.

Warren has several prior convictions in Jersey for drug offenses, for which he previously served jail time.

Surveillance image shows shirtless man police say beat a 75-year-old man and his girlfriend in Hell's Kitchen on Saturday night in an attempted mugging. NYPD

Senior couple beaten bloody by mugger who rips shirt off in rage

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A mugger beat bloody an elderly couple strolling in Hell's Kitchen then ran off empty-handed after tearing off his shirt in a fit of rage, police said Tuesday.

The NYPD released surveillance footage of the shirtless attacker and is asking the public's help identifying him and tracking him down.

The victims, a 75-year-old man and 70-year-old woman, were strolling on W. 44th St. when they were confronted near Ninth Ave. at about 10:35 p.m. on Saturday, cops said.

The bearded crook tried to yank the woman's bag off her arm, throwing her to the ground. He also tried to rob her boyfriend, yelling, "Give me your wallet."

But the boyfriend fought back and after a few moments the attacker took off his shirt, angry that he was unsuccessful in robbing either victim, and dashed off, running toward 10th Ave., cops said.

The boyfriend, who was repeatedly punched during the clash, suffered serious wounds to his face including his eye. His girlfriend's nose was bloodied by the robber, and she suffered injuries to her elbow and neck.

Both victims were treated at Mount Sinai West and are recovering.

Anyone with information on the suspect is asked to call Crime Stoppers at (800) 577-TIPS. All calls will be kept confidential.

Jury trial waived in Ga. student Laken Riley's killing

BY DAVID MATTHEWS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The undocumented migrant accused of murdering Georgia nursing student Laken Riley waived his right to a jury trial Tuesday, leaving a decision on the case in the hands of a judge.

Jury selection had initially been scheduled to begin on Wednesday. Instead a bench trial will begin Friday and continue into next week as the prosecution and defense present their evidence. Bench trials are typically faster and less expensive than jury trials.

Riley (photo), a 22-year-old student at Augusta University in Athens, was found dead on Feb. 22 in a wooded area on the nearby University of Georgia campus. A concerned friend reportedly called police around noon after Riley had not returned as usual from her morning jog.

Riley's body was discovered soon after behind a lake in a forested area near UGA's intramural fields. She was found unconscious, not breathing and with multiple "visible injuries." Her cause of death was later determined to be asphyxiation and blunt-force trauma after being hit several times with a rock.

Jose Antonio Ibarra, 26, was arrested on Feb. 23 and later charged with multiple counts, including malice murder, felony murder, aggravated battery, kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated assault with intent to rape, obstructing or hindering a person making an emergency telephone call and tampering with evidence.

Investigators at the time described the murder as a random "crime of opportunity," saying there was no evidence Ibarra knew Riley prior to the attack.

Ibarra was also charged with a peeping tom offense against another person at a UGA apartment on the same day as Riley's murder. Ibarra's defense had unsuccessfully tried to get that charge separated from the murder case.

Prosecutors said in a court filing they intend to seek a sentence of life in prison without the possibility of parole.

Ibarra, who pleaded not guilty, has been in custody at Clarke County Jail since his arrest.

During Tuesday's hearing, he told the judge through a translator he understood he could not reverse his decision to waive a jury trial. The request for a waiver came after defense motions for a change of venue and for some evidence to be dismissed were both rejected.

Riley's brutal slaying became a flashpoint in the immigration policy debate during the recent presidential election by both Republicans and Democrats, much to the dismay of the victim's family.

"I feel like she's being used, somewhat, politically," her father, Jason Riley, told NBC's "Today" show in March. "It makes me angry. She was much better than that. She should be raised up for the person that she is."

Ibarra – a migrant from Venezuela – reportedly entered the country illegally in 2022. He was arrested at least twice after crossing the border and before Riley's murder.

Your HOROSCOPE
BY TAROT.COM

For Wednesday, November 13

Connections could come with a dose of awkwardness today. During the impulsive Aries Moon's sextile with buoyant Jupiter, we can muster up the courage to begin conversations with interesting people. When Luna conjoins painful Chiron, though, we may realize we've wandered into emotional minefields. As the Moon goes on to tangle with the focused Sun, we're not likely to find quick answers to any turmoil we stir up. We might need to accept ambiguity for the time being.

ARIES
MARCH 21-APRIL 19
A personal matter may currently be weighing on you. Feeling pressured to reveal what's going on might only compound your distress. It's true that you're not required to tell everyone your business, even if they want to know it. However, opening up to the right person can relieve some tension.

TAURUS
APRIL 20-MAY 20
A disappointing surprise is presently possible. You might not realize how much a particular topic bothers you until someone you're interacting with mentions it. Consider whether their distance from the situation is more likely to give them an objective perspective or an inability to understand.

GEMINI
MAY 21-JUNE 20
The tension you feel in a current group dynamic may not fully be about whatever is going on today. You're likely eager to show leadership in solving the problem at hand — just remember that clearing your head before you get to work will be key. Each dispute needs its own unique solution.

CANCER
JUNE 21-JULY 22
Becoming powerful could be a scary prospect for you now. You may fear that you'll end up like some authority figure who hurt you. Is it possible for you to hold a position similar to theirs without repeating their mistakes? Remember who you are at your core.

LEO
JULY 23-AUG. 22
You could become aware that your beliefs are holding you back at the moment. It's hard to take a big leap without knowing what will come next. Even so, if you see your peers achieving objectively better results from following a different path, take that into consideration.

VIRGO
AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
A casual chat could poke a sore spot of yours with little warning. New perspectives may give you the opportunity to connect with others on a deep level. However, it won't necessarily be an easy process. You'll potentially need to confront long-standing inhibitions and prejudices of yours.

LIBRA
SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
A loved one might put emotional pressure on you regarding a money issue today. Looking to external rules or standards could give you needed breathing room. Once it's no longer merely your will against theirs, any rejection you have to deliver should feel less personal.

SCORPIO
OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your emotions about a current health issue could be making the problem seem much bigger. Perhaps your inflated view of yourself is at odds with the reality that you physically can't do it all. People are likely to sympathize with your challenges. Don't be afraid to reach out to them for support!

SAGITTARIUS
NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You may feel inhibited about expressing yourself at this moment. This isn't necessarily being fueled by the people in your life. It's more likely an internal struggle on your end. Leaning on a confident companion might pull you out of a rut so you can remember how much you want success for yourself!

CAPRICORN
DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Interacting with your peers could trigger your insecurities at this time. You may need to remind yourself that someone who appears to be achieving more than you probably isn't doing so in order to deliberately antagonize you — they're just living their life! Let it goad you to work harder.

AQUARIUS
JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Watching what you say could be crucial right now. You're well within your rights to be open about the ups and downs of your experiences. Just be careful to avoid assuming that others will automatically obtain the same results by replicating whatever you did.

PISCES
FEB. 19-MARCH 20
Your financial status could be cause for concern at present. You may come to conclude that the conventional wisdom isn't providing answers that work for you. Doing some experimenting with your own two hands might therefore make sense. Focus on whatever already feels like a reliable source of security in your life, then try to build from that foundation.

76ers get taste of new-look rivals, who roll with big 4th

BY KRISTIAN WINFIELD
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

PHILADELPHIA – The Knicks and 76ers met on Tuesday night with much-changed rosters but an all-too-familiar goal – establishing a new level of dominance in the Eastern Conference, especially with both teams retooling to challenge the Boston Celtics.

Tuesday's NBA Cup clash underscored just how different these two teams look from their playoff bout last season, as the Knicks secured a 111-99 win at Wells Fargo Center in a game marked by renewed intensity and fresh, high-stakes matchups. The win puts the Knicks 1-0 in Group A standings.

KNICKS	111
SIXERS	99

For the 76ers, an offseason makeover brought in All-Star forward Paul George, sharpshooter Eric Gordon, promising rookie Jared McCain, and former Miami Heat forward Caleb Martin. They also fortified their bench with France's Guerschon Yabusele and re-signed Andre Drummond, all with the idea of giving MVP Joel Embiid a stronger supporting cast.

The Knicks were just as bold. They traded five first-round picks for Mikal Bridges, shipped Julius Randle and Donte DiVincenzo to Minnesota for Karl-Anthony Towns, and re-signed OG Anunoby and Precious Achiuwa. With veteran guard Cameron Payne joining, New York built a roster around Jalen Brunson designed to spread the floor and operate at high efficiency.

As a result, Tuesday's game was a preview of the new-look teams and a testament to their upgraded firepower.

"I think obviously both teams have changed quite a bit since that playoffs, and they've added two guys who can really play," Sixers head coach Nick Nurse said before the game. "Those guys [Towns and Bridges] are both really good players, both got a really good perimeter game that we've gotta be mindful of. I guess we're gonna have to wait and see."

"Obviously, they added Paul George, but they've added a lot of good players, and Embiid gives them a different type of threat: inside, outside, off-the-dribble, the size," Knicks head coach Tom Thibodeau said, adding, "Paul George is a long wing that can break you down off the dribble, a great catch-and-shoot player. [Kelly] Oubre is a terrific talent, and [Kyle] Lowry is a wily veteran and just does a lot of things that help the team stay organized. So they have a lot of good weapons."

For the Knicks, balance was key on Tuesday night. Last season, they leaned heavily on Brunson's scoring to navigate rough patches, but the new roster allows him to be a playmaker while the team spread the scoring load. Brunson went scoreless in the first quarter and had just eight points entering the final period, eventually finishing with 18 points on 5-of-15 shooting. The night belonged to a balanced offense, with six Knicks scoring in double figures, including Miles McBride, who posted 15 points off the bench and continued his early Sixth Man of the Year campaign.

"They were going through Brunson pretty much exclusively at that point [in the second half of] last year," Nurse said of the Knicks' evolution. "You're certainly gonna get your dose of Brunson for sure, but obviously you're gonna get KAT some shots. They're doing a pretty good job of spreading it around. They get all those guys involved – even OG, who was with them last year, gets his moments. Much more balance."

OG Anunoby led the way for the Knicks with 24 points on 11-of-16 shooting, taking advantage of lanes to the rim for easy buckets. Towns was also a force, contributing 21 points, 13 rebounds, and 6 assists. Meanwhile, Josh Hart notched a triple-double with 14 points, 12 rebounds, and 10 assists, showcasing the Knicks' collective approach to playmaking.

Embiid's season debut was less about fireworks and more about shaking off the rust. After missing games due to a knee injury and a three-game suspension, the reigning MVP only played 26 minutes, finishing with 13 points on 2-of-11 shooting and relying primarily on free throws to do his scoring. Nurse had planned to keep Embiid's minutes limited, noting before the game that the big man would play "20-25 minutes," given his recovery.

George, meanwhile, did his part, scoring 29 points and grabbing 10 rebounds on 10-of-19 shooting. But as the game wore on, the Knicks' defense tightened, and George was held to just six points in the fourth quarter. McCain contributed a notable 23 points off the bench, helping Philadelphia stay competitive. But the Knicks controlled the game, leading for nearly the entire contest save for a few brief Sixers runs at the beginning of the game and early in the third quarter.

Tuesday's game reflected the Knicks' ability to adapt and share the load on offense, with multiple scoring threats in Towns, Bridges, and Anunoby giving them flexibility Brunson couldn't provide alone last season.

The new approach allowed Brunson to be both scorer and facilitator, something that caught Nurse's attention.

"They're trying to be a little more perimeter oriented," Nurse observed. "And they're doing a pretty good job of spreading it around."

The Knicks hope to continue their momentum, having won a key division game in a challenging week. They'll face the Chicago Bulls in the second leg of a back-to-back on Wednesday at Madison Square Garden, giving them a chance to further solidify their standing in the East's crowded playoff race.

NO EASY WAY OUT

If Giant owners decide to make changes after another lost season, there's no way GM Schoen should be allowed to stay

NFL general managers typically have longer shelf lives than head coaches. That certainly has been the case with the Giants.

But it is only reasonable to separate those evaluations when there is a clear demarcation between the GM's and coach's responsibilities – and when the on-field product is underperforming relative to a front office's personnel promise.

Here in New Jersey, though, the Giants are Joe Schoen's show.

He watches film with coach Brian Daboll and the rest of the staff and team. He enters the locker room and talks to players. He runs the draft. He re-signed the quarterback. He helps make gameday lineup decisions. He is often in the middle of the field during practice.

There is no part of their operation he does not touch.

PAT LEONARD
GIANTS

So it would be impossible for John Mara and Steve Tisch to blame Daboll but not Schoen for the Giants' 2-8 record, consistently regressing roster, league-worst offense and all of the embarrassing results and truths that have ensued from this mismanagement.

Schoen seemed to understand that during Tuesday's press conference in East Rutherford, N.J. The normally overconfident and combative third-year GM sounded nervous and contrite, like someone who knows he screwed up, just lost to the Carolina Panthers and is near the end.

He mustered some hollow arguments in his own defense: like insisting his team is young and "not far off," claiming "we're not getting blown out" despite a 45-10 combined score in losses to the Eagles and Bengals; and citing a 1-5 record in "close" games as a badge of honor.

But Schoen generated no true evidence of progress or promise three years into running the franchise, outside of his selection of fifth-round running back Tyrone Tracy – and that sliver of promise pales in comparison to the MVP campaign Saquon Barkley is building in Philadelphia.

When a salesman starts running out of ideas to attract customers, that's typically when it's time to close the store. And if Mara and Tisch really buy the version of the truth that Schoen meekly tried to sell on Tuesday, then they're more lost than anyone realized.

Schoen still knows judgment day is coming, so on Tuesday he appeared to be subtly laying the groundwork to survive a Daboll firing if this catastrophic season doesn't turn around.

The GM said he expects to be back even if the team doesn't win down the stretch.

"Yes," he said.

He said ownership has "confidence in the plan."But he rejected the suggestion that he did not give the coaching staff a good enough roster.

"No, I don't think so," he said. "I don't think so."

So if it's not the players, it must be the coaching, right?

"No, it's not players and it's not one individual," Schoen said. "That'd be an easy fix if we could say, 'Hey, it's this.' Everybody's got their hand in this, myself included. It starts with me."

Yes, it does. And even Schoen could no longer defend his roster-building mistakes that dug the Giants into a deeper hole after their minimal and fleeting success of 2022.

"You come off a winning season, some of the issues were maybe masked or you're blinded a little bit by it because of the success," Schoen said of a 9-7-1 season with a Wild Card win that ended with a 38-7 butt-whooping in Philadelphia. "Then once we extended Daniel [Jones], you try to accelerate it because of the way that contract was structured.

"There were some parts of the process, when I evaluated it, that maybe were overlooked or I could have done a better job in the evaluation process or player procurement process," the GM added. "That's part of growth. I did make some mistakes or some decisions I wish I could have back … I like my team. … I truly believe we're heading in the right direction."

Those mistakes are the reasons the Giants are worse off now than when Schoen took over, though. They are the underpinnings of the franchise's perennial irrelevance.

This is a GM who has spent a third-round pick, two fourth-round picks and a restructured contract on three tight ends in three years and still hasn't gotten the position right between Daniel Bellinger, Darren Waller and Theo Johnson.

This is a GM who needed to patchwork an offensive line together this offseason because his five primary additions in 2022 were draft picks Evan Neal (No. 7 overall), Josh Ezeudu and Marcus McKethan, and free agent signings Jon Feliciano and Mark Glowinski: Three of them are gone. Ezeudu can't play. And Neal probably has seven games remaining with the team.

The Giants allowed 85 sacks last season, the second-most ever in NFL history. Then Schoen left his roster without a functional backup left tackle again in 2024, completely compromising the quarterback, offense and team, with no adequate explanation.

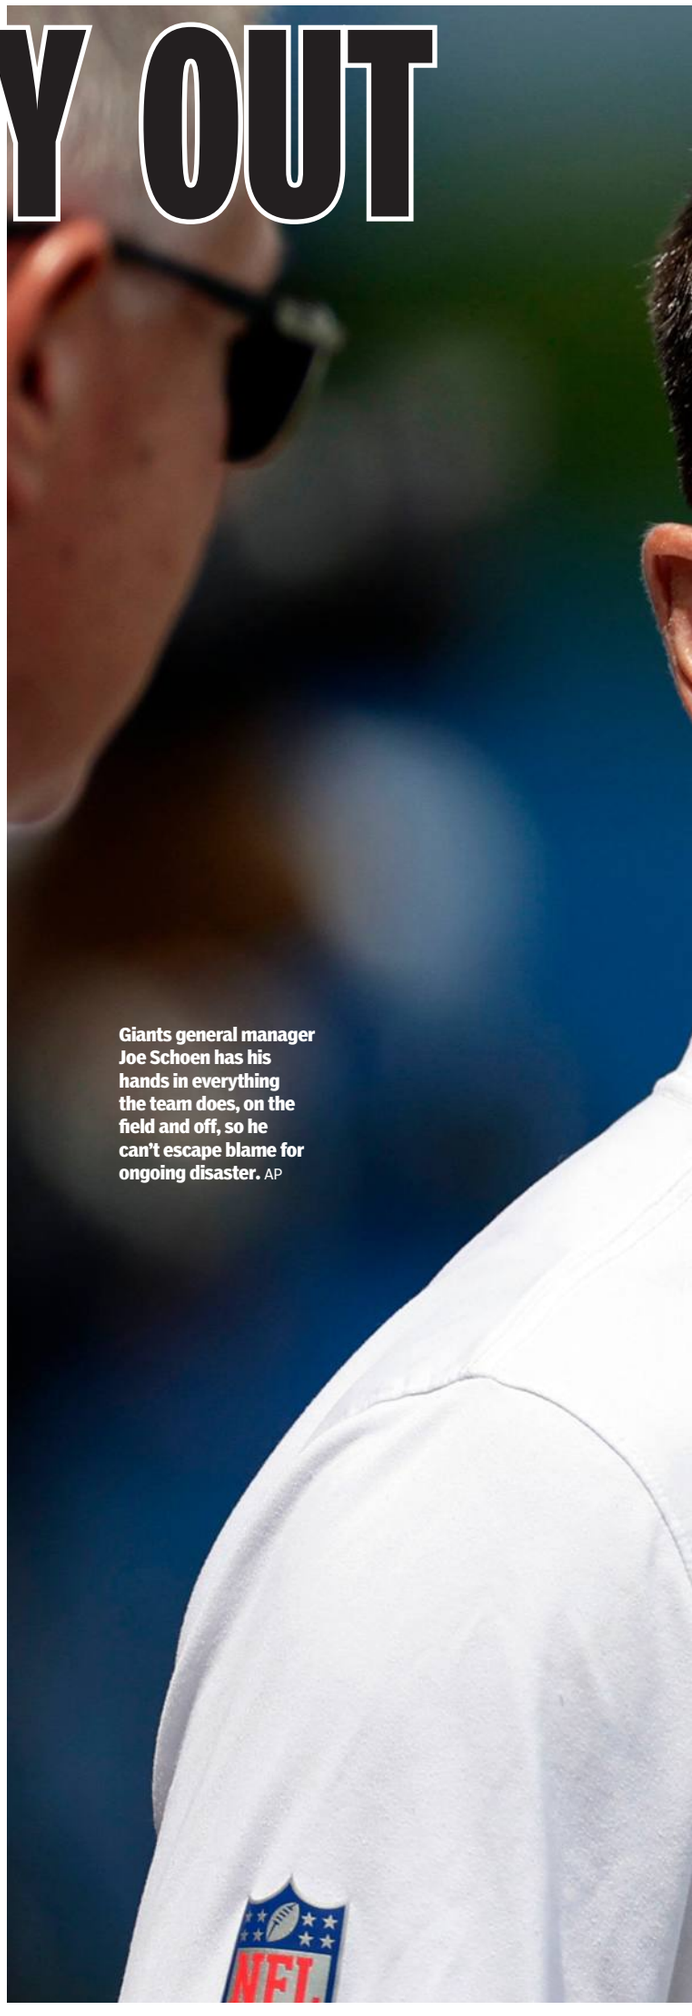

They have the NFL's worst offense, averaging a league-low 15.6 points per game. They have the league's worst run defense, allowing 5.3 yards per carry.

They are likely on the verge of shutting down Daniel Jones, although Schoen admitted when pressed that the Giants will make "the best football decision for us to win games" at quarterback after this bye week.

And Schoen's cutthroat recent release of corner Nick McCloud was yet another decision that had players scratching and shaking their heads about the motivations behind the GM's moves – capped by the ugly Barkley saga that played out on HBO's 'Hard Knocks.'

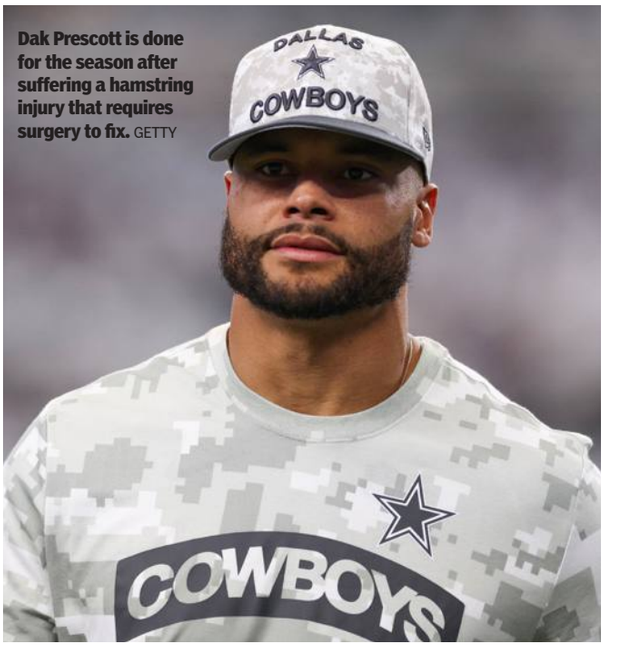

Schoen's most depressing comment on Tuesday, however, was a throwaway line. He said "we're going to look under every rock and try to figure out solutions" to the Giants' mess.

Under a rock? That's where the Giants already are, in the NFL's basement – where Schoen's mistakes have put them.

Giants general manager Joe Schoen has his hands in everything the team does, on the field and off, so he can't escape blame for ongoing disaster. AP

Dak Prescott is done for the season after suffering a hamstring injury that requires surgery to fix. GETTY

Cowboys' Dak to have season-ending surgery, Jones says

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Dak Prescott's season is officially over.

The Dallas Cowboys quarterback is set to undergo surgery Wednesday for the partial hamstring avulsion he suffered on Nov. 3, owner Jerry Jones said Tuesday on Dallas' 105.3 The Fan.

"He'll have it there in New York," Jones said. "He had a good visit last night, and he wants to do that there. He's got great medical doctors up there. It's a more common injury in hockey, and he's got doctors that are very familiar with how to repair that, and his prognosis is wonderful. It just means that we're not going to have him the rest of the year."

Prescott, 31, suffered the injury – in which his hamstring partially detached from the bone – on a five-yard run late in the third quarter of the Cowboys' 27-21 loss to the Falcons in Week 9.

The Cowboys lost their first game without him, a 34-6 drubbing at home by the Philadelphia Eagles on Sunday, with Cooper Rush starting at quarterback.

Prescott visited a specialist in New York on Monday.

The injury dealt another blow to a disappointing season for the Cowboys, who fell to 3-6 with Sunday's loss and are now four games behind the NFC East-leading Eagles.

It's also the latest significant injury for Prescott, who missed the final 11 games of the 2020 season with a dislocation and compound fracture of his right ankle and missed five games in 2022 with a broken right thumb.

After last week's injury, Prescott described feeling something in his hamstring that he had "never felt" before.

"I felt it when I was getting up from the run," Prescott said. "I can't even say that I felt it running. Maybe something on the tackle. Yeah, I don't know, but when I was standing up, I felt something actually. Didn't think it was much. You get tackled. It's a physical game. A lot of times you feel different things and they kind of go away."

Prescott signed a four-year, $240 million contract – the biggest in NFL history – before the season, then threw for 1,978 yards, 11 touchdowns and eight interceptions in eight games.

A nine-year NFL veteran, Prescott led the league with 36 touchdown passes last season and finished as the MVP runner-up.

Despite Sunday's blowout, the Cowboys plan to start Rush again Monday night against the Texans. Rush is 5-2 in his career as a starter.

"Cooper has shown that he has the capability to compete and win in games, and he does give us our best chance," Jones said Tuesday. "Frankly, that was really an out-of-character game for him."

The Cowboys also have fourth-year quarterback Trey Lance, whom the San Francisco 49ers drafted third overall in 2021 before trading him to Dallas last year for a fourth-round pick.

Dallas is set to host the Giants on Thanksgiving.

Boone says Dodger's rips after Series did bother him 'a little'

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Count Aaron Boone among those who heard Joe Kelly's post-World Series criticisms of the Yankees.

Kelly, a Dodgers reliever who did not appear in the postseason, dissed the Yankees' fundamentals after Los Angeles won the World Series in five games and suggested the Bronx Bombers were not among the top seven or eight teams that made the playoffs this year.

Aaron Boone had his bubble burst by Dodgers reliever Joe Kelly. GETTY

Asked Monday if Kelly's comments bothered him at all, Boone said, "I mean, a little bit, but the bottom line is we didn't play as well as we could've."

"Obviously [we] especially had a tough inning in Game 5, so that's the ultimate disappointment," the Yankees manager said during a Zoom press conference. "I try never to get too caught up into what other people are saying or doing, especially when it comes from certain places. Everyone's going to have their opinions and be entitled to things."

Boone was referring to the fifth inning of Game 5, when the Dodgers scored five unearned runs after the Yankees committed two errors and Mookie Betts reached on an infield grounder to Anthony Rizzo after Gerrit Cole did not cover first base.

The Yankees also lost Game 1 after multiple miscues. Those included Gleyber Torres not corralling a throw from right field after an eighth-inning Shohei Ohtani double, which allowed Ohtani to advance to third base and ultimately score the tying run on a sacrifice fly.

"We were saying it every single game: 'Just let them throw the ball to the infield,'" Kelly said on the Nov. 4 episode of the "Baseball Isn't Boring" podcast. "They can't make a play."

Yankees general manager Brian Cashman responded last week to the comments by Kelly, a former Red Sox reliever who pitched to a 4.78 ERA this season, was left off of the Dodgers' NLDS roster due to a shoulder injury and never returned during the playoffs.

"I also know people with the Dodgers, so I've got some internal conversations that I've got, certainly, feedback on. I think it's more representative of some specific players rather than the overall group," Cashman said at the GM Meetings in San Antonio.

"In Joe's case, it feels like [for] some reason it's a little personal, the way he's out talking like he has."

Dodgers shortstop Miguel Rojas shared a similar sentiment as Kelly during his appearance on Chris Rose's podcast.

"Their weakness was the way that they made outs on the bases," said Rojas, who appeared in one game in the World Series and went 0-for-3.

"The way that they didn't take care of the baseball and kind of play a little bit of lazy defense. We said, 'OK, we know we're good, but we're gonna put pressure on them so they can make these little mistakes."

On Monday, Boone backed his team's fundamentals while saying the Yankees are "constantly leaning into" finding ways to get better.

"If you go back and look at storylines throughout the season, I felt like there were a lot of times that we were winning games because of, whether it was a big defensive play, whether it was small ball on a given day, whether it was a Game 4 where we get a double steal and a contact read at home," Boone said.

"Those things happened throughout the year on a regular basis. We won a lot of games because of little things that we did well over the course of the year."

Free agent Juan Soto is set to start meeting with teams soon, including the Yankees and the Mets. GETTY

HE'S JUAN POPULAR GUY

Soto's free agency really heating up; Yanks, Mets have lots of competition

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Juan Soto's free agency is in full swing.

The superstar slugger's robust market is beginning to gain clarity as teams put together pitches for one of the most coveted free agents in MLB history.

Yankees manager Aaron Boone confirmed Monday that he will be part of the group that meets with Soto and agent Scott Boras in Southern California, hoping to help compel the right fielder to re-sign after he hit a career-high 41 home runs in his first – and possibly only – season in pinstripes.

The Mets, too, will meet with Soto, with Steve Cohen – MLB's richest owner with a net worth of $21.3 billion, according to Forbes – wielding an unparalleled financial advantage, should he decide to flex it.

Also helping the Mets recruit Soto is their star shortstop, Francisco Lindor, according to ESPN's Jeff Passan. Lindor, like Soto, is an MVP finalist in his respective league and would reportedly love to see the Mets add another star.

And while the Yankees and Mets are considered the favorites for Soto, the Toronto Blue Jays and Boston Red Sox also scheduled meetings with him, according to ESPN. The Los Angeles Dodgers, meanwhile, reportedly won't be at the forefront of the frenzy but will remain in the mix should Soto's anticipated price drop.

Those items represent only some of the buzz swirling around Soto, who is expected to command a contract exceeding $600 million over potentially more than 14 years, per Passan.

Such a financial commitment would be unprecedented, but practically everything about Soto is unprecedented. He hit free agency mere days after turning 26. Through seven MLB seasons, Soto boasts five top-10 MVP finishes, four All-Star selections, a batting title, 201 home runs and a career .421 on-base percentage.

"Juan Soto wants ownership that he knows is going to support an opportunity to win annually," Boras said last week at the GM Meetings in San Antonio.

"His focus always was, 'I want to know who my owner is. I want to know that we're going to be able to win. And I want to know that, besides me, there's going to be a great number of support on the part of the owner, that he has the same desire to win that I do.'"

Soto finally reaching free agency followed years of speculation, fueled in part by the star turning down a reported 14-year, $440 million extension offer from his original team, the Washington Nationals, in 2022.

The Nationals traded Soto, who helped lead them to a World Series title as a 21-year-old in 2019, to the San Diego Padres, and he spent a season-and-a-half in Southern California.

But when Soto became a year away from free agency, the cash-strapped Padres traded him to the Yankees for a haul last December rather than risk losing him for nothing.

Soto then delivered a season for the ages.

Batting in front of American League MVP favorite Aaron Judge, the lefty-swinging Soto scored an AL-best 128 runs and recorded 109 RBI. His .419 on-base percentage ranked second in the majors, behind only Judge, while his .988 OPS ranked third.

The charismatic Soto connected with Yankees fans, regularly hyping them on his way to right field. Chants of "Re-sign Soto!" became a staple of Yankee Stadium.

Soto remained excellent in the playoffs, most notably hitting a go-ahead three-run home run in ALCS Game 5 in Cleveland that sent the Yankees to their first World Series since 2009.

"The Yankees have open arms to come in and talk to me," Soto said after the Yankees' World Series-ending Game 5 loss to the Dodgers. "I don't have any doors closed. I'm going to keep all of my doors open, and whoever wants to come in and talk, we can have a conversation."

The free-agent market is expected to revolve around Soto. First baseman Pete Alonso, also a Boras client, could become a middle-of-the-order option for the Yankees should Soto sign elsewhere. The Mets, of course, remain in contention to re-sign Alonso.

Left fielder Teoscar Hernández, who had four RBI for the Dodgers in the World Series, would also be of interest to the Yankees as a possible replacement, according to ESPN, though he reportedly may not wait for Soto to sign.

Soto's free agency is not expected to linger beyond December, according to Passan.

"I certainly would love to have him back," Boone said Monday during a Zoom press conference. "I want him in pinstripes moving forward, but you also know there's going to be a lot of people competing for that, and who knows where it ends up? All I know is that we'll try and put our best foot forward with it and hope that Juan's back."

HUGS FOR BATY

Young Met didn't do much during playoffs other than congratulate teammates, and he could have tough time finding role in '25

BY ABBEY MASTRACCO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Brett Baty spent October with the big league team enjoying the postseason experience as a member of the taxi squad. The Mets third baseman donned goggles for champagne celebrations, took ground balls on the field and batting practice as well, knowing that his name probably wouldn't be called but staying prepared in the event the Mets needed him.

According to second baseman Jeff McNeil, Baty also gave good hugs to teammates throughout the Mets' postseason run to the NLCS. Somehow, that one didn't make it onto the scouting report.

"I think the biggest thing was just the atmosphere and the crowds and stuff and slowing the game down," Baty recently told the Daily News. "Just witnessing just playoff atmospheres and stuff like that was pretty cool."

Over the last two seasons, it was Baty who could have used the hugs. He went back and forth from the majors to the minors, unable to stick in the big leagues. Sometimes it was his bat, sometimes it was his defense, sometimes it was both that led the Mets to send him to Triple-A Syracuse. Baty has shown flashes of the player the Mets thought he would be when they drafted him in the first round of the 2019 draft, but now they have to figure out what to do with him.

The picture is somewhat unclear given that Baty might be blocked at third base by Mark Vientos, one of his best friends. Vientos had a breakout season, hitting 27 home runs, posting an OPS of 837 and an OPS+ of 135 (100 is league average). In the playoffs, his OPS was .998, so it's safe to say Vientos has solidified himself as a cornerstone of the lineup.

If the Mets don't re-sign first baseman Pete Alonso, they could easily shift Vientos across the diamond. That could open up third base, but then that makes Ronny Mauricio the odd man out.

The Mets sent Baty to Triple-A to get reps at second base this season. Baty, who will be 25 on Wednesday, played 27 games at second with Syracuse this season, working on footwork, fundamentals and the catching and receiving aspects of turning double plays.

"I don't really care where I play on the field, I just want to be out there in a major league stadium," Baty said. "So I mean, if they want me to. I'm definitely going to have some conversations in the offseason just to see what they want me to do, what they want me to work on and stuff like that. But, yeah, I'm just gonna work hard and come back next year."

The problem with second base is that the Mets have McNeil locked up for two more seasons and Luisangel Acuña waiting to see where he'll play as well. The shortstop/second base prospect only got into 14 games with the big league team this season, getting a call-up when Francisco Lindor injured his back. However, Acuña looked good in those 14 games, going 12-for-39 (.308). This came after a lackluster Triple-A season, but the Mets admitted the 22-year-old brother of Atlanta Braves outfielder Ronald Acuña Jr. might have been bored in the minor leagues. Acuña himself said he had trouble adjusting to playing in cold weather for the first time in his career.

That could push Baty to the outfield. The club has had conversations in the past about moving him to the outfield, but it has yet to happen. President of baseball operations David Stearns was asked about the possibility at the general manager meetings last week.

"I don't think I would close the door," Stearns said last week in San Antonio. "We learned a lot about Brett this year. One, we learned that he's able to take a punch and go down and keep working. And I think we also learned that he's able to play multiple positions. He picked up second base pretty quickly, to the point where we were considering adding him to a postseason roster with the possibility of him playing second base. That's pretty significant…

"So his ability to do that leads me to believe that if we ask him to, he's going to be able to play additional positions."

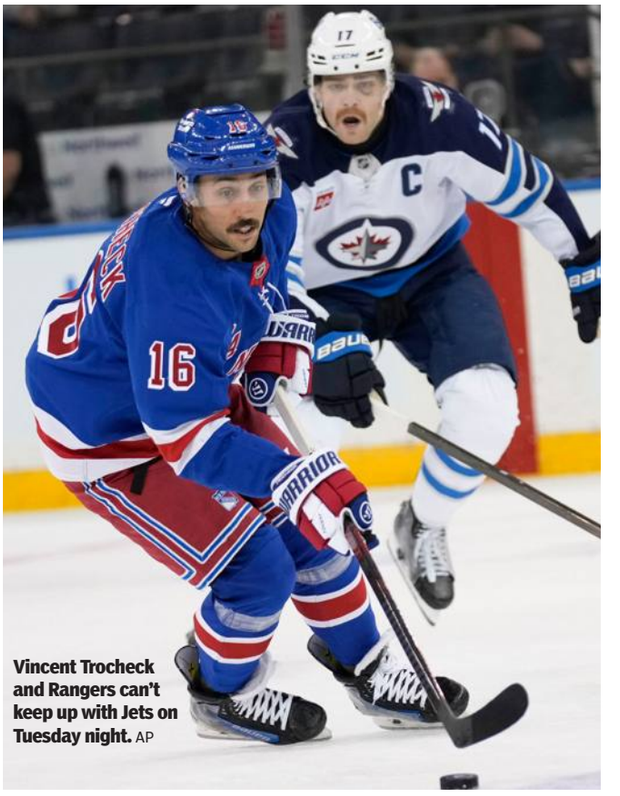

Baty hit .252 with 16 home runs, 45 RBI and an .854 OPS in 62 Triple-A games this season. At the major league level, he hit just .229 with a .633 OPS. He'll need to get the ball in the air more than he has previously and he'll need to find a way to translate the minor league power to the majors.

However, he also showed improved defense at third and tackled a new challenge at second base. The Mets have a difficult decision to make if all of their infielders are healthy this spring.

"It's a great conundrum to have," Stearns said. "Having multiple young players who have the talent they have, who can all play multiple positions, if that's where we are come spring training, that's a very enviable position."

Brett Baty was on the Mets' taxi squad during the postseason, and he may have a tough time breaking the big-league lineup next season, too. GETTY

Rangers don't have enough to keep up with red-hot Jets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mark Scheifele and Kyle Connor each scored twice, Connor Hellebuyck made 33 saves, and the Winnipeg Jets won their seventh straight, 6-3 over the Rangers on Tuesday night.

Gabriel Vilardi and Vladislav Namestnikov also scored for the Jets, who have now won 15 of their first 16 games.

Will Cuylle, Alexis Lafreniere and Kaapo Kakko scored for the Rangers, who dropped their second straight home game following last Thursday's 6-1 loss to the Buffalo Sabres.

Hellebuyck improved to 12-1-0 this season.

Scheifele scored 57 seconds into the contest before Cuylle tied it at 13:07 of the first.

Vilardi put the visitors ahead on the power play at 8:58 before Lafreniere tied the game again at 12:51 of the second.

Connor put the Jets ahead for good at 16:03 of the second. Scheifele scored again 1:08 into the third – his ninth of the season – before Kakko narrowed the deficit to 4-3 just 32 seconds later. Namestnikov scored his fifth at 13:08 and Connor completed the scoring into an empty net with 20 seconds to play.

Igor Shesterkin, who gave up five goals and was pulled at home in the loss to Buffalo, made 27 saves for the Rangers.

TAKEAWAYS

KEY MOMENT

Hellebuyck made a lunging save on Reilly Smith at 4:50 of the second and denied Chris Krieder point-blank on a power play later in the period.

KEY STATS

Connor leads the Jets with 22 points. He is one of 11 Winnipeg players with 10 or more points.

Rangers forward Artemi Panarin assisted on Lafreniere's goal. Panarin leads the Rangers with 22 points – including 10 goals – and has points in 13 of New York's 14 games this season.
