A testy Mayor Adams told his press staff Tuesday that Chris Sommerfeldt, the Daily News' senior City Hall reporter, is "not to come into our conferences." BARRY WILLIAMS/NYDN

Eric tells a News City Hall reporter: Don't come back to press briefings

BY EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mayor Adams said Tuesday that one of the Daily News' two City Hall reporters is no longer welcome at press briefings.

The apparent ban came as Chris Sommerfeldt, The News' senior City Hall reporter, sought to ask a clarifying question about the mayor's ballot line in the upcoming election despite his not having been called on by Adams' team during the mayor's weekly press conference.

Sommerfeldt has not been called on by the mayor's staff in more than three months.

Adams, in response to another reporter's question, had just finished saying he was running on both the "affordable and safe" and "antisemitism" ballot lines.

Sommerfeldt began to ask, "If you can only pick one …," before Adams began talking over him.

"You're calling out a lot, Chris, stop calling out!" the mayor said in a singsong tone. "You must have done that in school."

Adams then turned to his staff.

"Listen, if he does that again, he's not to come into our conferences," Adams said to his press staff. "You do that again," he turned back to Sommerfeldt, "you're going to stop at the gate," he said – an apparent reference to the security barrier between the public and official portions of City Hall.

"You want to take a question from me, then?" Sommerfeldt asked.

"He did it again," Adams said. "Make sure security knows he's not allowed back into this room."

Sommerfeldt was not escorted out of the room and stayed for the remainder of the press conference, but he was not able to ask any questions.

A mayoral spokesman did not immediately respond to an emailed request for comment as to whether they intend to keep Sommerfeldt from attending future pressers.

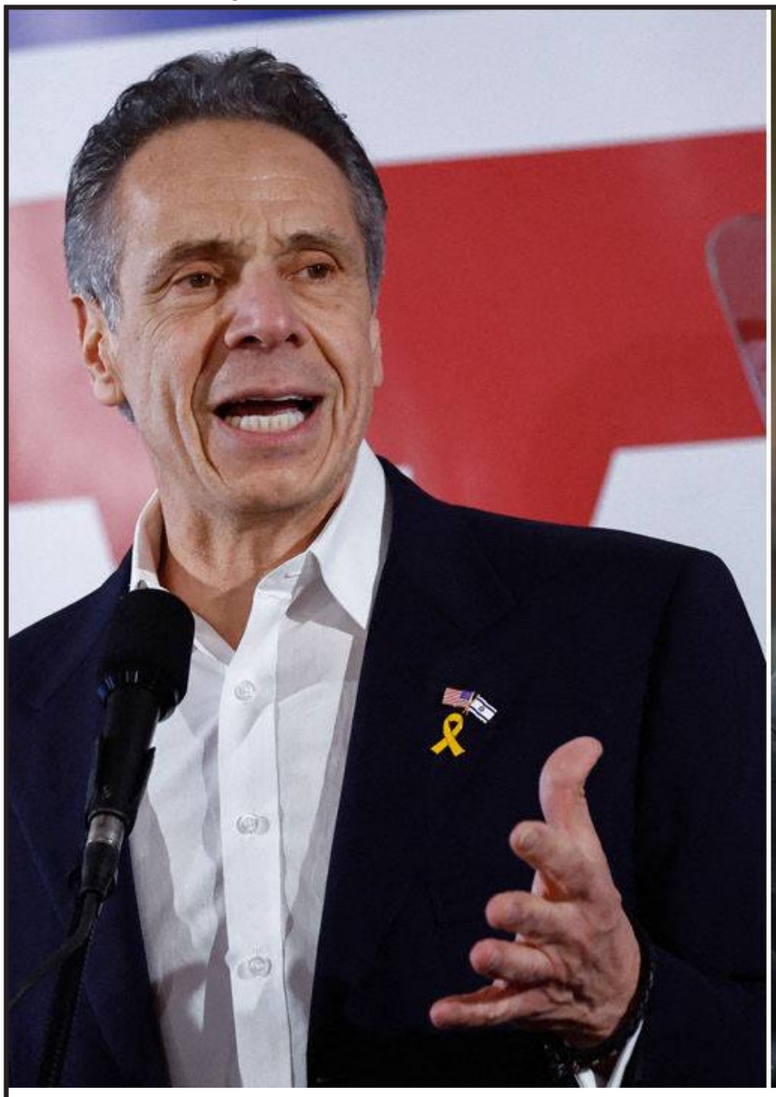

"Our reporters have the right to ask questions, and taxpayers aren't funding the police to keep reporters out of City Hall press conferences," said Andrew Julien, the executive editor of the Daily News.

In a series of posts to social media and an open letter to the mayor, the Daily News Union – which represents the paper's reporters and editors – called on Adams to revoke the ban.

"To ban a reporter from future press conferences for doing the very thing a press conference is designed to facilitate – asking a question – shows a flagrant disregard for the role of the press and for our colleague's professionalism," the union said.

Adams has drawn criticism from the press corps for his practice of banning off-topic questions – those unrelated to any event at which he appears – at all but one press conference a week.

The weekly off-topic press conferences are also tightly controlled, with mayoral press staff often choosing not to call on an outlet at all during the hourlong event.

Former Gov. Andrew Cuomo and Queens Assemblyman Zohran Mamdani have been the top favorites in the Democratic mayoral primary, and race is tightening, new poll shows. GETTY

ANDY'S LEAD SLIPPING

Mamdani cuts margin nearly in half to 11 pts. in final stretch

BY CHRIS SOMMERFELDT
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Andrew Cuomo's lead in the mayoral race is shrinking, with runnerup candidate Zohran Mamdani cutting the ex-governor's edge over him nearly in half over the past month, according to a new poll that also found a significant chunk of voters remain undecided.

The poll, conducted by the Marist Institute for Public Opinion, quizzed 1,350 likely Democratic primary election voters between June 9 and June 12. The poll's margin of error is plus-minus 4.3%.

Cuomo, who has consistently polled as the front-runner in next Tuesday's Democratic mayoral primary, was ranked as the first choice by 38% of New Yorkers surveyed, the Marist poll found.

Mamdani, a democratic socialist Assembly member representing western Queens, nabbed 27% of the poll's first-choice picks, putting him 11% behind Cuomo.

That's a marked improvement for Mamdani compared with the last poll Marist released May 14, which found Cuomo holding a 19% lead over the lawmaker.

Additionally, the new poll found 11% of voters are still undecided. The poll from May had 17% of respondents listed as undecided.

Lee Miringoff, the director of the Marist poll, explained the relatively large margin of undecided voters could be a worrisome sign for Cuomo.

"Cuomo's numbers haven't moved that much, his support is staying about the same," he told the Daily News. "But it's that the undecideds are getting involved and they're going a lot to Mamdani. [Mamdani] has a shot."

Of the Cuomo team, Miringoff continued: "I would be watchful and wouldn't think that this is in the bank at this point. It's still a contest, it's still competitive, but he is the favorite and it is always better to be ahead than behind."

The other candidates in the mayoral race only clinched single digits of support in the poll, with city Comptroller Brad Lander and City Council Speaker Adrienne Adams sharing third place with 7% support each.

Early voting started last weekend in the June 24. The primary is ranked-choice, meaning voters can put five candidates in order of preference on their ballots.

In a ranked-choice simulation conducted by Marist, Cuomo would win in the seventh round by a 55%-45% margin over Mamdani. Lander was the only other candidate left in the sixth round of that simulation, earning 13% support.

Ranked-choice math can get tricky, Miringoff acknowledged, and it's hard to predict in a poll how those tabulations will shake out.

In a bid to beef up their own chances, Mamdani and Lander have cross-endorsed each other, urging their respective supporters to rank the other candidate second on their ballots.

"That leaves some question mark on Cuomo as the front-runner," Miringoff said.

Another significant finding in the poll is that Mamdani has expanded his support among Latino voters by broad margins, earning 41% support from that constituency, a 21% increase from his levels in the May survey. Cuomo's support among Latinos, meanwhile, decreased to 36% from 41%.

The boost in Latino support for Mamdani comes after Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-Queens, Bronx), one of the Democratic Party's most popular figures, endorsed him as her No. 1 pick on June 5.

Mamdani, who's running on a left-wing platform that includes promises to expand free child care and freeze rent for stabilized tenants, has also aired Spanish-language ads in recent weeks.

WE MAY TARGET IRAN'S SUPREME LEADER: DON

'Our patience is wearing thin,' he says, later adding a demand for 'unconditional' Tehran surrender

BY DAVE GOLDINER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

President Trump teased possible deeper U.S. involvement in the conflict between Israel and Iran on Tuesday as he cut short his visit to the G-7 summit with Western allies in Canada.

After jetting back to the White House overnight, Trump suggested the U.S. is working with Israel and could soon target Iran's Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei for assassination if the conflict continues or spreads.

"We don't want missiles shot at civilians, or American soldiers. Our patience is wearing thin," Trump wrote on his social media site.

"We now have complete and total control of the skies over Iran," he added.

He later demanded Iran's "unconditional surrender."

Trump said he was planning to convene meetings in the Situation Room with aides about the escalating crisis in the Middle East.

But Trump bristled at reports he might reach out to Iran for talks to end the fighting, presumably by cutting a deal to limit or end its nuclear program.

He chided French President Emmanuel Macron for saying Trump might seek to broker a "ceasefire" between warring Israel and Iran.

"It certainly has nothing to do with a ceasefire. Much bigger than that," he added.

Trump's unpredictable actions and statements come at a key moment in the Middle East conflict.

After five days of missile strikes, Israel has inflicted considerable damage on Iran and believes it can now deal a permanent blow to Tehran's nuclear program, especially if it gets U.S. help.

But Trump would face significant political risks if he chooses to deepen American involvement, perhaps by providing the Israelis with bunker-busting bombs to penetrate underground Iranian nuclear sites.

Carlson, like other far right-wing figures, has criticized the Israeli attacks and called on the U.S. to stay out of the war.

Trump said he wasn't ruling out a diplomatic option, and he could send special envoy Steve Witkoff to meet with the Iranians.

He also dismissed congressional testimony from National Intelligence Director Tulsi Gabbard, who told lawmakers in March that U.S. spy agencies did not believe Iran was building a nuclear weapon.

"I don't care what she said," Trump said. "I think they were very close to having it."

Drug addict, me? Ha ha, "lol," richest man in the world Elon Musk says on social media Tuesday as he seeks to rebut remarks by President Trump and a report in The New York Times on his alleged drug use. GETTY

Ex-pal Musk shares negative urine test after Trump calls him a 'bigtime drug addict'

BY JESSICA SCHLADEBECK
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Elon Musk took to social media Tuesday to show off what appeared to be a negative urine test for multiple substances including ketamine, cocaine and amphetamines.

The billionaire captioned the image only with "lol," an apparent acknowledgment of the ongoing discourse regarding his alleged drug use. According to the document, he provided a sample to Fastest Labs in Austin, Texas, last Wednesday, and he received the results Monday. Musk did not test positive for any of the 22 substances included in the test.

The post marked Musk's latest effort to push back against a bombshell New York Times report published last month alleging he spent much of his time by President Trump's side in a drug-induced frenzy.

Citing unnamed sources, the newspaper reported that Musk stashed his trove of narcotics in a daily medication pillbox that held about 20 pills at any given time. It also described his ketamine use as "chronic" and intense enough to result in bladder issues.

"I am NOT taking drugs! The New York Times was lying their ass off," Musk wrote in response.

"I tried 'prescription' ketamine a few years ago and said so on X, so this is not even news," he continued. "It helps for getting out of dark mental holes, but haven't taken it since then."

The Tesla CEO has previously been open about using ketamine to treat his depression.

The world's richest man backed Trump and Vice President JD Vance in the 2024 election, shelling out nearly $300 million in a bid to land them in the White House.

In the months after their victory, Musk was often at Trump's side, joining him at news conferences, parties and public events, all while professing his "love" for the president.

But their relationship soured as Musk departed his position with the Department of Government Efficiency, leading to a public online feud over Trump's "Big Beautiful Bill."

Trump at one point during the social media showdown called Musk a "bigtime drug addict," with White House officials blaming Musk's substance abuse for the end of his relationship with the president.

BRAD HELD 5 HOURS IN IMMIG COURT BUST

Pols slam ICE action vs. city comptroller and mayor hopeful

BY JOSEPHINE STRATMAN, CHRIS SOMMERFELDT AND MOLLY CRANE-NEWMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

New York City Comptroller Brad Lander was released from custody late Tuesday after being arrested in a Manhattan courthouse by ICE agents who claimed he assaulted one of them while trying to observe immigration proceedings amid the Trump administration's "mass deportation" crackdown.

It wasn't immediately clear if Lander – whose arrest drew immediate and widespread condemnation – would actually face assault charges.

About five hours after his arrest at 26 Federal Plaza, Lander, joined by his wife and Gov. Hochul, walked out to cheers and applause from supporters gathered outside the courthouse.

Hochul told reporters "there are no charges" against Lander. "He walks out of there a free man," she said.

But a spokesman for the Manhattan U.S. attorney's office, which is headed by Trump appointee Jay Clayton, left the door open to potentially prosecuting Lander.

"The SDNY is continuing to investigate the actions involving New York City Comptroller Brad Lander at 26 Federal Plaza today," the spokesman, Nicholas Biase, said before noting it's against federal law to assault law enforcement officers, destroy property and obstruct official proceedings.

Earlier Tuesday, Tricia McLaughlin, a spokeswoman for President Trump's Department of Homeland Security, said Lander "was arrested for assaulting law enforcement and impeding a federal officer" at 26 Federal Plaza, where asylum cases are heard.

"It is wrong that politicians seeking higher office undermine law enforcement safety to get a viral moment," McLaughlin said in a statement. "No one is above the law, and if you lay a hand on a law enforcement officer, you will face consequences."

Speaking alongside Hochul, Lander, a leading candidate in next week's Democratic mayoral primary, said he "certainly did not assault an officer" and explained he was accompanying an immigrant named Edgardo when the agents moved in to arrest him.

"All I tried to do was hold Edgardo's arm and asked the ICE agents, 'Do you have a warrant?' And they would not show me the warrant, and I said I'd let go of his arm as soon as they showed it to me, and they did not show it to me, and you saw what happened," said Lander.

The comptroller said he was treated fine otherwise, although he lost a button on his jacket.

"I will be fine, but Edgardo is not going to be fine, and the rule of law is not fine, and our constitutional democracy is not fine," he said. "I really think I failed today, because my goal was to get Edgardo out of the building so he can get back to his family. We are not going to allow Donald Trump to wreck the rule of law, to deny people due process and to turn our country into something that doesn't meet its obligations under international law."

Lander's arrest comes as Trump's administration has stoked intense outrage by rounding up immigrants in deportation raids at courthouses across the country. Many have been detained as they show up for routine check-ins on their asylum claims, facing no criminal charges or other reason to believe they could be deported.

Lander is among a group of local officials who have shown up at 26 Federal Plaza in recent weeks to observe proceedings and provide assistance to immigrants.

team, Lander could be seen linking arms with the man identified as Edgardo before getting surrounded by a group of masked ICE agents who pressed him up against a wall and handcuffed him on the 12th floor of 26 Federal Plaza.

"I'm not obstructing, I'm standing right here in the hallway, I asked to see the judicial warrant," Lander can be heard saying in the video as the agents cuff him. "You don't have authority to arrest a U.S. citizen asking for a judicial warrant."

"Where are you taking the comptroller?" one of Lander's aides can be heard shouting at the agents as they take him into an elevator and disappear.

Within minutes of his arrest, the comptroller's wife, supporters and local elected officials gathered outside 26 Federal Plaza, chanting, "Free Brad Lander," and excoriating his detainment.

"I am extraordinarily proud of my husband for so many reasons, never more so than today," his wife Meg Barnette said. She added she's confident he will be fine while voicing concern that "all of the other folks in that building are risking having their families torn apart. … It's an abomination, and it is not what we stand for in this country."

Several of Lander's opponents in next Tuesday's Democratic mayoral primary also came to his defense, including Scott Stringer, Michael Blake, Adrienne Adams and runner-up candidate Zohran Mamdani, who all showed up outside 26 Federal Plaza. Mamdani said the comptroller's arrest shows ICE "only has an interest in terrorizing people."

Before showing up to the courthouse, Hochul, New York's highest-ranking Democrat, posted on X about Lander's arrest: "This is bulls–t."

Andrew Cuomo, the front-runner in the Democratic mayoral race who has been a harsh critic of Lander, said the comptroller did "absolutely nothing wrong" and laid some blame on Mayor Adams.

"Make no mistake: this kind of conduct is the direct result of Mayor Eric Adams handing the keys of our great city over to Donald Trump," Cuomo said in a statement, a reference to the Trump administration's highly controversial dismissal of the incumbent's corruption indictment.

Adams, also a frequent Lander critic, declined to comment on his arrest when asked about it at City Hall on Tuesday afternoon.

Later, the mayor's spokeswoman Kayla Mamelak said, "Today should not be about Brad Lander. It's about making sure all New Yorkers – regardless of their documentation status – feel safe enough to use public resources, like dialing 911, sending their kids to school, going to the hospital, or attending court appearances, and do not instead hide in the shadows."

The courthouse at 26 Federal Plaza has been an especially hot target for ICE in recent weeks, with roundups of immigrants happening in the building on an almost daily basis.

ICE agents conducting the arrests have been wearing masks during the raids because Trump's White House says they fear for their safety.

The agents have been able to detain immigrants showing up at the courthouse for routine check-ins because Trump administration officials have asked judges to dismiss their asylum claims, making them subject to deportation.

Some immigration judges have recently expressed concern about the unusual tactic.

That includes just earlier this week when Judge Olivia Cassin reinstated an asylum petition filed by a 20-year-old Bronx public school student from Venezuela who was detained by ICE after getting his case dismissed last month when he showed up at 26 Federal Plaza for a check-in.

DON DOES 180 AGAIN ON MASS DEPORTATIONS

President Trump ordered shift in deportation priorities last week after complaints from employers but was persuaded by hard-liners over the weekend to stay the course. AP

Feds say 'no safe spaces,' end pause on ICE raids at farms, meatpacking plants & hotels

BY DAVE GOLDINER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

President Trump has flip-flopped again on mass deportation by ordering the resumption of raids targeting work sites in the agriculture and hospitality industries, just days after officials halted them under pressure from big business.

Trump's Department of Homeland Security reversed the brief pause in raids on farms, meatpacking plants and hotels that was implemented last week after the president vowed to make "big changes" in his mass deportation push to spare those industries that employ millions of undocumented immigrants.

"There will be no safe spaces for industries who harbor violent criminals or purposely try to undermine ICE's efforts," said Tricia McLaughlin, a DHS spokeswoman, referring to Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

The head-spinning changes reflect the big divisions within Trump's political coalition and his administration over his stated goal to deport millions of undocumented immigrants, including the army of low-wage workers who are mainstays of American farms, food-processing plants, hotels and restaurants, among other essential industries.

Warring interest groups and advisers, like big business and right-wing populists, are battling for Trump's ear on immigration. He has lurched between contradictory positions like at times saying he wants to deport anyone who came to the U.S. without proper documentation while at other times suggesting that he is only interested in snaring violent criminals or gang members.

Trump first blinked last week by conceding that his "very aggressive" raids were hurting farmers and hotels, a statement that came after pleas for a reprieve from Agriculture Secretary Brooke Rollins.

He vowed "big changes," and a top ICE official told staff in an internal email Friday to end arrests in the agricultural, hotel and restaurant industries.

But immigration hard-liners, led by the powerful White House deputy chief of staff Stephen Miller, pushed back over the weekend, and won the latest policy swing back toward a no-holds-barred approach.

Miller has set a target of 3,000 ICE arrests a day, a number officials say is almost impossible to achieve without widespread roundups of workers on farms, and at meat processing plants and hotels.

The workplace raids are opposed by employers, many of whom are Republicans, because they result in worker shortages, raise costs and hinder production. Despite Trump's fierce rhetoric, business groups say it's impossible to hire enough Americans or legal immigrants to fill those jobs.

The raids triggered last week's protests on the streets of Los Angeles, which later spread to other cities nationwide.

Trump ordered in both the National Guard and Marines, but California Gov. Gavin Newsom has said the troops aren't wanted or needed. Their dispute is pending in federal court.

The tumult has since quieted and Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass has reduced the hours of an overnight curfew after police made no arrests related to the protests Monday.

Third migrant recaptured after escape from detention center in Newark

BY JESSICA SCHLADEBECK
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A third detainee who busted out of an immigration detention facility in New Jersey has been recaptured, leaving one more escapee still at large.

FBI Newark confirmed the arrest of Franklin Norberto Bautista-Reyes on Tuesday but did not offer further details. He was originally arrested in May for aggravated assault, attempt to cause bodily injury, terroristic threats and possession of a weapon for unlawful purposes, according to police.

Bautista-Reyes, a Honduran national, was among four men who busted out of Delaney Hall in Newark, a privately owned 1,000-bed facility that has courted controversy in recent months. The men escaped by "kicking through an interior wall" in the dormitory area, said Newark Mayor Ras Baraka, who was recently arrested for trespassing on the grounds of the same ICE facility.

From there, the group – which also included Joel Enrique Sandoval-Lopez, Joan Sebastian Castaneda-Lozada and Andres Pineda-Mogollon – fashioned makeshift ropes from bedsheets and climbed out of a third-story window.

Sen. Andy Kim (D-N.J.) said the escape came during an "uprising" at the facility, a comment the Department of Homeland Security has denied. In a followup statement issued in response, the department said "contrary to current reporting, there has been no widespread unrest at the Delaney Hall Detention Facility."

Bautista-Reyes' recapture comes after Homeland Security announced Sunday that both Sandoval-Lopez from Honduras and Castaneda-Lozada from Colombia were once again in custody.

ICE and FBI officers found Sandoval-Lopez in Passaic, N.J., on Friday. According to USA Today, he resisted arrest and threatened to kill the arresting officers.

Castaneda-Lozada, meanwhile, attempted to turn himself in at the New Jersey State Police Bridgeton Station, but officials refused to take him into custody as the sanctuary policies in place bar them from working with ICE.

The Homeland Security Department said he later surrendered himself to FBI and ICE agents in Millville, N.J., also on Friday.

Pineda-Mogollon remained at large as of Tuesday afternoon, with authorities offering a reward of up to $25,000 for information leading to his recapture. He was arrested in April for petty larceny and arrested last month for residential burglary, conspiracy residential burglary and possession of burglary tools.

All four also face federal charges of escape from the custody of an institution or officer, according to the FBI in Newark.

Police are looking for this guy for allegedly spewing hate at a Brooklyn woman and hitting her with his cane at a Midwood subway station. NYPD

Woman hit by cane, slurs

Cops hunt man in antisemitic attack on subway platform

BY THOMAS TRACY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A 29-year-old Jewish woman was whacked with a cane by a stranger who spewed antisemitic slurs, followed her on to a Brooklyn subway platform and screamed at her to go back "to your country," police said Tuesday.

Cops are investigating the attack as a hate crime and have released cell phone footage the woman took of the suspect in the hopes someone recognizes him.

The victim had just entered the Kings Highway Q train station in Midwood when the stranger, who was walking with a cane, stormed up and started cursing at her about 12:45 p.m. last Thursday.

"Go back to your country," the man screamed as he followed the woman from the mezzanine to the southbound platform.

When the woman pulled her phone out to record him, he lashed out further, striking her in the hand with his cane before walking off.

The woman called the police, but she didn't require medical attention.

The suspect is described as white and between 55 and 65 with a medium build. He was wearing a multicolored collared shirt, blue jeans and black sneakers and was carrying a black book bag.

The NYPD has seen an uptick in antisemitic crimes since the beginning of the Israel-Hamas war on Oct. 7, 2023.

Mayor Adams last month said that displays of antisemitism in New York City since the war started have been "constant."

While the NYPD reported a 54% drop in anti-Jewish hate crimes in May compared with the corresponding month last year, from 52 to 24, the number of antisemitic incidents amounted to nearly 60% of all hate crimes investigated that month, officials said.

Anyone with information on the Brooklyn attack is asked to call Crime Stoppers at (800) 577-TIPS. All calls will be kept confidential.

Subway surfer, 14, suffers critical injuries in fall from Bronx train

BY THOMAS TRACY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A 14-year-old subway surfer was critically injured when he fell from the top of a Bronx train, cops said Tuesday.

The boy was riding on top of a northbound No. 5 train with two other teens when he fell and landed on the track bed near the Baychester Ave. stop about 3:15 p.m. Monday, cops said.

Medics rushed the teen to Jacobi Medical Center, where he was initially listed in critical condition from injuries to his face and body. His condition improved overnight to critical but stable, police said.

Cops arrested a 17-year-old subway surfer at the station, charging him with reckless endangerment and trespass. The third teen ran off and is still being sought.

Six people, most of them teens, died subway surfing in the city last year, cops said. The youngest was just 11. So far this year, two people have died in subway surfing incidents.

NYPD cops have arrested 79 people, mostly teens, for subway surfing, nine fewer than by this time last year.

In March, two 13-year-old boys were seriously injured in subway surfing incidents, one in Brooklyn, one in Queens, just days apart from each other.

Over the past few months, cops and the MTA have taken a multi-prong approach to discourage thrill seekers.

Last week, the MTA ramped up its "Ride Inside and Stay Alive" campaign featuring Queens-born BMX Athlete Nigel Sylvester.

The NYPD has started flying drones above elevated subway lines to keep an eye out for subway surfers.

SUSPECT TRIED TO FLEE: DA

Navy vet's killer busted as he attempted to go to D.R., prosecutors say

BY SHEETAL BANCHARIYA AND THOMAS TRACY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The accused gunman in the fatal Bronx road rage shooting of a young Navy veteran was arrested trying to board an international flight to escape justice, prosecutors said Tuesday.

Michael Aracena had abandoned the car he drove during the clash and was about to hop on a flight to the Dominican Republic when NYPD cops arrested him for allegedly shooting 27-year-old Keino Campbell to death, prosecutors said during the suspect's arraignment in Bronx Criminal Court.

Wearing a brown hoodie and sporting braided hair tied in the back, Aracena, 20, said nothing as Judge Scott Krompinger ordered him held without bail.

Aracena is charged with murder, manslaughter and weapons possession and could face 25 years to life in prison if convicted of shooting Campbell after they got into a fender-bender near Co-op City at about 2 a.m. Saturday.

An accomplice handed Aracena the gun used to shoot Campbell in the chest as the victim sat behind the wheel of a 2012 gray Infiniti, prosecutors said.

Mortally wounded, Campbell sped off to the nearby corner of Givan and Palmer Aves. in Baychester, where he fell unconscious, police said. Medics rushed Campbell to Jacobi Medical Center, where he died a short time later.

The accomplice who passed Aracena the gun is still being sought, officials said. The NYPD released surveillance images of that suspect Tuesday and asked the public's help identifying him.

The suspected accomplice is described as about 5 feet tall with a light to medium complexion, slim build and black hair in a ponytail. He was last seen wearing a white T-shirt and baseball cap.

Following the shooting, Aracena, who lives on the Upper West Side, drove to Pennsylvania, where he abandoned his car, according to prosecutors. He then bought a ticket to the Dominican Republic, officials said.

"The defendant was apprehended attempting to board an international flight," Bronx Assistant District Attorney Janene Carter said in court. "Before going to the airport, defendant fled to Pennsylvania, where his car was recovered."

When he was apprehended, Aracena had multiple passports on him, Carter said.

Defense attorney Laura Stasior declined to comment on the charges during the hearing. Aracena is due back in court Friday.

"I knew that God would bring this to justice," Campbell's aunt Vermaline, 49, told the Daily News on Monday after learning of Aracena's arrest. "Keino was a spirit that was godly, and I knew that God would make whoever did this to him get justice."

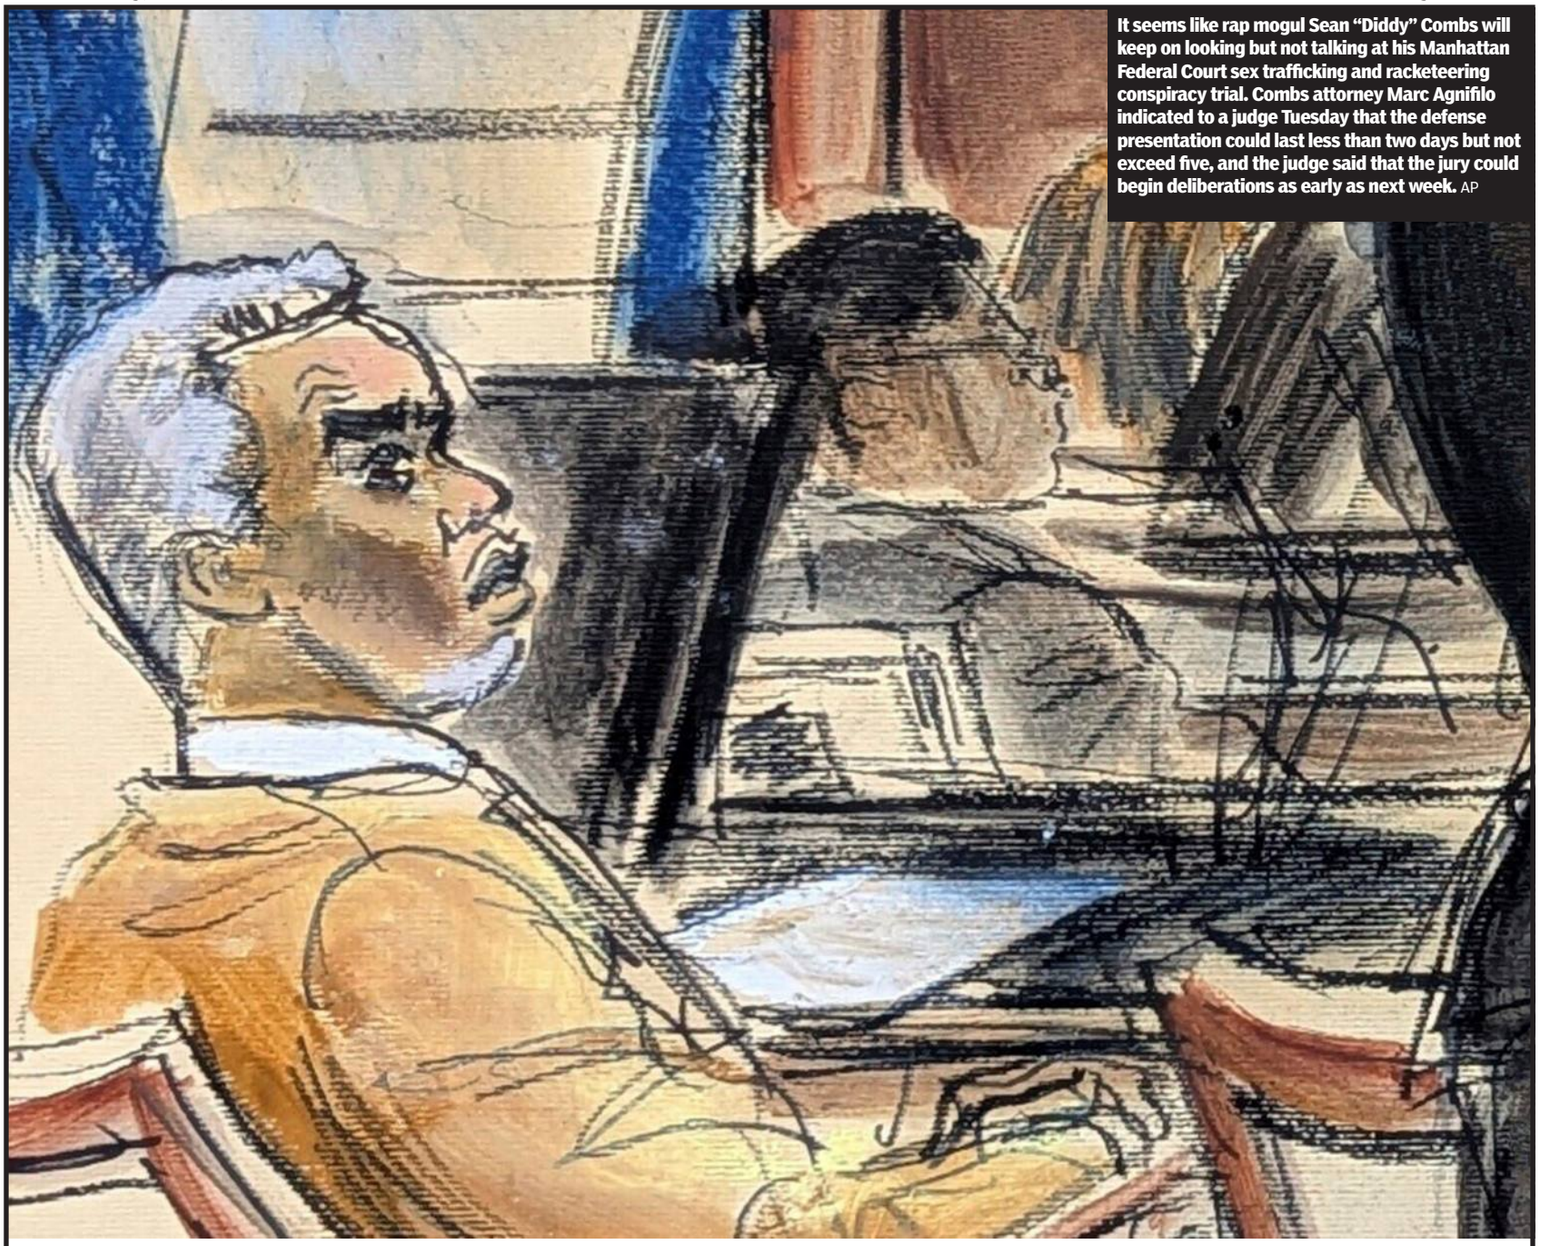

"You took a person's life for a car? Are you crazy?" the aunt, who asked that her last name not be used, added. "He chased him down. That's crazy to me. Who even hears of road rage anymore? I didn't even think that these things still happen."

Relatives said Campbell served at a military base in San Diego from 2019 to 2022. His plans of becoming a pilot were dashed because of eyesight issues. He went on to dream of doing security work at the White House or becoming an electrical engineer, for which he planned to go back to school, according to his family.

"He said it would take a while to get there, but he was telling me all these steps," his mother, Suzette Thomas, told The News on Sunday. "This boy always thought ahead because he wanted to make sure his family wasn't in poverty. He dreamed big."

"I know he would do such great things in this world if he had a chance," she added. "I'm so heartbroken."

Anyone with information on the suspect still being sought is asked to call Crime Stoppers at (800) 577-TIPS. All calls will be kept confidential.

It seems like rap mogul Sean "Diddy" Combs will keep on looking but not talking at his Manhattan Federal Court sex trafficking and racketeering conspiracy trial. Combs attorney Marc Agnifilo indicated to a judge Tuesday that the defense presentation could last less than two days but not exceed five, and the judge said that the jury could begin deliberations as early as next week. 'Diddy' silence is likely

Sign he won't testify after lawyer says defense case could end in 2 days

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The possibility that music mogul Sean "Diddy" Combs might testify at his federal sex trafficking trial all but vanished Tuesday after his lawyer predicted a defense presentation lasting as little as two days and a Manhattan judge said jurors could begin deliberations as early as next week.

Attorney Marc Agnifilo offered the hint when Judge Arun Subramanian asked him for an estimate on the length of the defense case, and the attorney said their presentation could last less than two days – but not more than five.

If Combs testified, it was likely his testimony would take longer than a week. Testimony by two of his former girlfriends consumed two of the trial's six weeks.

Combs, 55, has pleaded not guilty to sex trafficking and racketeering conspiracy charges. He has been jailed at a federal lockup in Brooklyn since his September arrest at a Manhattan hotel.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Maurene Comey said prosecutors would rest as early as Wednesday and no later than Friday morning.

The estimates were provided Tuesday after the irate judge scolded prosecutors and defense lawyers, saying information about a closed court proceeding involving a juror last Friday had leaked to a media outlet.

The judge said he believed someone who was at the sealed court hearing violated his secrecy order.

In the future, Subramanian said, he would hold Comey and Agnifilo responsible for any slipups, and any violations of his orders could result in criminal contempt penalties "at the most extreme level."

"This is the only warning I will give," he said.

Meanwhile, prosecutors resumed showing jurors evidence Tuesday of text messages, phone calls and hotel records to support charges that Combs oversaw a racketeering conspiracy that utilized his employees and associates and his stature in the hip-hop industry to help him control and abuse women, including two former girlfriends.

Ex-girlfriends Casandra "Cassie" Ventura and a woman who testified under the pseudonym "Jane" told jurors that Combs used threats and monetary incentives to coerce them into frequent multiday sex marathons where Combs watched, directed and sometimes filmed them engaging with male sex workers.

Defense lawyers say prosecutors were trying to criminalize consenting sex between adults by targeting Combs.

Ventura's relationship with Combs lasted from 2007 to 2018 while Jane dated him from 2021 until his arrest last fall.

R. Kelly adds he was forcibly discharged from hosp against doc advice

BY MURI ASSUNÇÃO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Disgraced R&B artist R. Kelly was rushed to a hospital last week after overdosing on medications allegedly given to him by prison staff, his legal team claimed in a new court filing.

The "I Believe I Can Fly" singer, currently serving a 30-year sentence for racketeering and sex trafficking, claims he overdosed after taking medication he received while being held in isolation.

According to a Tuesday court filing reviewed by USA Today, the 58-year-old was placed in solitary confinement "against his will" on June 10 after his lawyers filed an emergency motion requesting that he be moved from federal prison to house arrest claiming three Bureau of Prisons officials were allegedly plotting to have him killed.

Later that day, prison staff instructed him to take additional medication alongside the anti-anxiety drugs he regularly uses, according to the filing. Three days later, he woke up feeling "faint" and "dizzy."

"He started to see black spots in his vision. Mr. Kelly tried to get up, but fell to the ground," the lawyers wrote. "He crawled to the door of the cell and lost consciousness."

The three-time Grammy winner, real name Robert Sylvester Kelly, was taken to Duke University Hospital in Durham, N.C. He was forcibly discharged two days later against medical advice, since he was scheduled to undergo surgery to treat an ongoing blood clot issue, according to the filing.

Even though he was expected to stay at the hospital for two weeks for the procedure, "officers with guns came into his hospital room" to take Kelly back to solitary confinement, the complaint alleges.

His lawyers said they weren't able to speak with their client until late Monday, after a scheduled call was canceled "without explanation."

Kelly was sentenced to 30 years in prison in 2022 after being convicted in New York of orchestrating the sexual abuse of young female fans over decades. Earlier this year, a federal appeals court in New York rejected his bid to overturn the conviction.

He was also convicted on child pornography charges in his hometown of Chicago and sentenced to 20 years, most of which will be served concurrently.

Last week, Kelly's defense team said they were "in open discussions with people close to President Trump" regarding a potential presidential pardon.

"We believe that President Trump is the only person with the courage to help us," attorney Beau Brindley told People.

Kelly, who maintains his innocence, is serving his sentence at a medium-security prison in Butner, N.C. He'll be eligible for release in 2045, at age 78.

Michael Pitt appears in Brooklyn Supreme Court on Tuesday on charges of assaulting his former girlfriend. BARRY WILLIAMS/NYDN

ATT'Y: SEX RAP VS. 'BOARDWALK' ACTOR ALL LIES

Pitt charged in B'klyn assault

BY JOHN ANNESE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The sexual assault case against "Boardwalk Empire" star Michael Pitt is "built on a bed of lies," the actor's lawyer told the Daily News after a brief court appearance in Brooklyn.

Pitt, 44, was busted May 2 on charges he sexually assaulted his ex-girlfriend and attacked her with a four-by-four and a cinder block at the Brooklyn home they previously shared.

"This case is an utter, absolute disgrace," Pitt's lawyer Robert Gottlieb said outside the Brooklyn Supreme Court building, as the actor stood silently by his side. Pitt didn't offer any comment.

"It is built on lie after lie after lie. We have obtained some of the discovery, not all of it," Gottlieb said, referring to the materials prosecutors must release to defense attorneys, "and already we can say, it is built on a bed of lies, which is unbelievable that it even came to this point."

"It is clear that the district attorney did not investigate this case, because if they investigated it, there is no way that this man, who is innocent, would find his way in this court," Gottlieb said.

He didn't elaborate further.

A spokesman for Brooklyn District Attorney Eric Gonzalez said Tuesday that his office can't comment on pending cases.

Pitt is charged with criminal sex act, criminal sexual abuse, assault, attempted assault and strangulation. The top charge carries a maximum 25-year prison sentence, if convicted at trial. He's pleaded not guilty to the charges, and remains free on $100,000 bail.

The indictment against the "Funny Games" and "Ghost in the Shell" actor describes four disturbing allegations by the woman, who is not named in court papers.

He's accused of forcibly touching her anus and vagina with his finger in April 2020, forcing her into oral sex and assaulting her with a four-by-four in August 2020, attacking her with a cinder block in June 2021 and strangling her in August 2021.

On Tuesday, Gottlieb sparred with Assistant District Attorney Amanda Fisher over the release of documents and evidence during an appearance in Brooklyn Supreme Court.

Gottlieb accused the district attorney's office of slow-walking key documents in the case.

"We do know that, as of this late date, that we haven't received a single police report … no detective notes, no complaint reports, no DIR [domestic incident] reports," Gottlieb told Brooklyn Supreme Court Justice Abena Darkeh, adding that Pitt was under investigation as far back as February 2024.

"It's all due now," the defense attorney said, "and it's all glaring, what's missing. It goes to the heart of the investigation that goes on for so long."

Fisher countered that the case was investigated entirely by the Brooklyn DA's office. "There is no NYPD involvement in this case other than the arrest," she said.

Pitt returns to court July 1, when the judge is expected to hear an application to modify the actor's bail so he can get his passport back.

'PROBLEMATIC' PAST

Suspect in knife attack on court cops has history of trouble, held on slay-try rap

OBTAINED BY DAILY NEWS; CURTIS MEANS/POOL

BY SHEETAL BANCHARIYA, NICHOLAS WILLIAMS AND THOMAS TRACY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

An emotionally disturbed man who assaulted multiple court officers was known to be a "problematic presence" for two years at the Manhattan Criminal Courthouse, with investigators believing the incident to be a "targeted attack," according to prosecutors.

Jonathan Wohl, 37 entered the courthouse Monday with a handwritten notebook and scraps of paper stating, "Give me liberty or give me death" in large print, as well as other remarks referencing the court system of police, plus the phrase "Protect Rodney Hinton." Hinton, an Ohio man, is currently charged with fatally mowing down a police officer with a car in May after police killed his son. Those writings are being investigated as a motive of animosity Wohl had toward judges, police and prosecutors, according to Manhattan Assistant District Attorney Taylor Holland.

"Based on the defendant's actions, his writings and his lack of any other business in the courthouse, there is every reason to believe this is a planned and calculated attack on the court officers who are securing this building," Holland said.

Wohl was charged with attempted murder, attempted aggravated assault on a police officer and assault. He was held without bail at his arraignment Tuesday afternoon inside the same courthouse where the attack occurred.

"While those charges are both from (Monday's) attempts, defendant has been a repeated presence in the courthouse over the last two years, and is responsible for multiple other disruptive incidents, including one as recently as January of this year," Holland said.

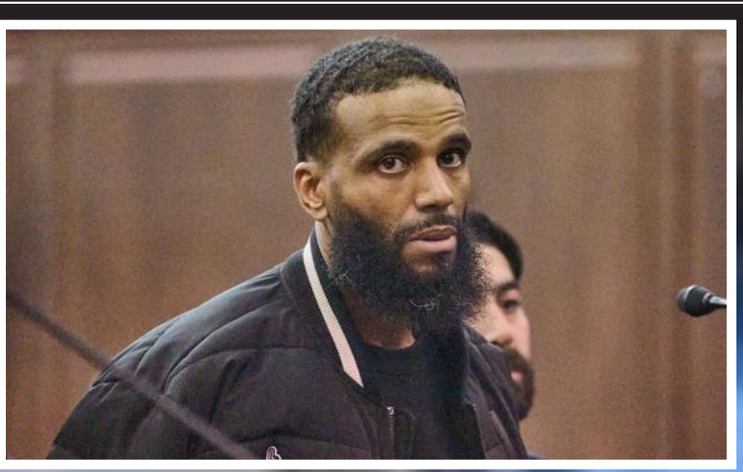

Wohl, who had no pending case or business at the courthouse, had a history of interacting with the court officers at Manhattan Criminal Court where the assault occurred, prosecutors said.

"This illustrates and highlights what court officers deal with on a daily basis, the dangers of keeping the judges, the employees, the public safe in our courthouses," Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg said following Wohl's arraignment. "We continue to pray for full recovery of our brother officers."

Wohl entered the courthouse around 9:45 a.m. Monday, with a black lunchbox in hand. He wiped rain from his shoes, walked over to the security-check metal detectors, placing his bag on the conveyor at the courthouse lobby at 100 Centre St. When one of the court officers briefly turned his head away from him, Wohl charged at him with a 4-inch, curved-blade, folding knife attached to metal knuckles. He slashed and stabbed the officer with the knuckle knife, causing him to fall backward, cutting him on both the left and right side of his face, prosecutors and sources said.

Surveillance video shows how another officer who also tried to shield himself from the attack was struck once in the chin and neck before Wohl stabbed him five times in the back and neck, prosecutors said.

A third court officer suffered broken ribs when he was slammed into a barrier while trying to stop Wohl's onslaught. Two other court officers reportedly suffered minor injuries when Wohl tried to slash them with the knife, as well as punching and kicking them.

One court officer – who was wearing a ballistic vest – avoided injuries as he tackled Wohl to the ground. Wohl allegedly tried to stab the officer, who had knife marks on his vest, sources said.

Wohl was finally subdued and arrested after about a dozen court officers converged on him, video of the incident shows.

"The force of defendant's attack was so great that the first officer sustained a chipped jaw where the tip of the blade impacted his bone… The second officer required stitches to his neck," Holland said. "Fortunately, all five injured officers have now been released from the hospital."

At some point during the surprise attack, Wohl allegedly asked cops, "Why didn't you shoot me?" according to a law enforcement source.

A sixth officer came forward Tuesday, citing a knee injury from the incident, but didn't go to the hospital for treatment.

Wohl, who worked as a construction worker, was arrested in September 2022 when he staged a one-man protest in the lobby of the Midtown offices of Laborers Local 79, according to Gothamist. Wohl's arrest led to a recording of controversial statements by NYPD officers at the Midtown South Precinct.

Wohl was undergoing psychological evaluation at Bellevue Hospital on Monday after the assault, sources said. He has 18 prior arrests but has not served any time in state prison.

"That's what we deal with every day," said Stephen Mikos, president of the New York State Court Officers Association. "That's where our training comes into play. And, as you can see, the response from the other officers, how they reacted and basically saved lives that day."

Threats to pols on rise

Senators briefed by security pros in wake of Minn. killings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Threats to members of Congress are on the rise, security officials told senators on Tuesday at an emergency briefing in the wake of the killing of a Minnesota state lawmaker in her home over the weekend.

U.S. Capitol Police leaders and Senate security officials said threats against elected officials, including federal lawmakers, has "dramatically increased," Senate Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer said after the briefing, adding, "and that means we need more protection."

The suspect in the Minnesota attack had dozens of Democratic members of Congress listed in his writings, in addition to the state lawmakers and others he's accused of targeting. The man is accused of shooting and killing former Democratic House Speaker Melissa Hortman and her husband, Mark, in their home early Saturday in the northern Minneapolis suburbs and wounding another lawmaker and his wife at their home.

The shooting renewed fears – and stoked existing partisan tensions – over the security of federal lawmakers when they are in Washington and especially when they are at home. Credible threats to members of Congress have more than doubled in the last decade.

Still, it is unclear what more can be done amid yearslong disagreements over how much money should be spent to protect lawmakers. GOP Texas Sen. John Cornyn said after the briefing that they were told that threats against public officials are going up, but "it's always a resource issue, and it's trying to make sure that it's proportional to the threat and not an overreaction."

The Capitol Police's threat assessment section investigated 9,474 "concerning statements and direct threats" against members of Congress last year, the most since 2021, the year that the Capitol was attacked by Trump's supporters after he tried to overturn his 2020 presidential election defeat. In 2017, there were 3,939 investigated threats, the Capitol Police said.

The numbers are a troubling tally of an era marked by violent attacks against lawmakers and their families.

In 2011, Democratic Rep. Gabby Giffords was shot and wounded at an event in her Arizona district.

In 2017, Republican Rep. Steve Scalise was shot and wounded as he practiced for a congressional baseball game with other GOP lawmakers near Washington.

In 2022, Democratic House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's husband, Paul, was attacked by a man who broke into their San Francisco home.

All four survived, some with serious injuries. But those attacks, among others and many close calls for members of both major political parties, have rattled lawmakers and raised recurring questions about whether they have enough security – and whether they can ever be truly safe.

Connecticut Democratic Sen. Chris Murphy said Monday that lawmakers are "clearly at the point where we have to adjust the options available to us."

As threats have increased, members of Congress have had access to new funding to add security at their personal homes. But it is unclear how many have used it and whether there is enough money to keep lawmakers truly safe.

"Resources should not be the reason that a U.S. senator or congressman gets killed," Murphy said.

Instead of bringing lawmakers together, the Minnesota shootings created new internal tensions. Sen. Tina Smith (D-Minn.) on Monday confronted one of her fellow senators, Utah Republican Mike Lee, for a series of posts on X over the weekend. One mocked Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz, a Democrat who ran for vice president last year. Another post said of the killings, "This is what happens when Marxists don't get their way."

And Trump said he had no plans to call Walz, describing the Democratic leader as "so whacked out."

"Why would I call him? I could call him and say, 'Hi, how are you doing?' " the Republican president told reporters aboard Air Force One during a flight back to Washington from Canada. "The guy doesn't have a clue. He's a mess. So, you know, I could be nice and call him, but why waste time?"

Friends and former colleagues interviewed by The Associated Press described Vance Luther Boelter, the man accused of killing Hortman and her husband, as a devout Christian who attended an evangelical church and went to campaign rallies for Trump. Records show Boelter registered to vote as a Republican while living in Oklahoma in 2004 before moving to Minnesota, where voters don't list party affiliation. His attorney has declined to comment.

Smith talked to Lee outside a GOP conference meeting as soon as she arrived in Washington on Monday. "I would say he seemed surprised to be confronted," she told reporters afterward. Lee's office did not respond to a request for comment.

After Tuesday's briefing, some senators said they are more concerned about the threat of violence against them.

Sen. Tim Kaine (D-Va.) said lawmakers heard the "degree to which colleagues are being targeted in a whole lot of different ways."

Sen. Richard Blumenthal (D-Conn.) said senators needed to be protected more thoroughly.

"There needs to be more resources and investigations of these threats in real time."

Woman killed by train after jumping to downtown tracks

A 24-year-old woman was crushed to death by a Manhattan L train after she jumped onto the subway tracks to use the bathroom – and then couldn't get back up onto the platform, police sources said Tuesday.

The woman was on the platform at the 14th St.-Union Square stop when witnesses saw her jump on the tracks at about 10:20 p.m. on Monday, cops said. Investigators believe she jumped on the tracks to relieve herself, source said.

When a train entered the station, the woman scrambled in vain to get back on the platform but was struck by the train and died at the scene. Her name was not immediately released.

L train service was suspended for nearly three hours as police investigated.

Man dead for several days found in Bronx apt.

The decomposing body of a 58-year-old man was found in his Bronx apartment, where investigators suspect he was fatally stabbed, police said Tuesday.

Cops responding to a 911 call about a foul odor around 10:30 a.m. on Monday found the door unlocked to the man's apartment in a building with affordable units for senior citizens on Elsmere Place near Southern Blvd. in West Farms.

Police said the victim had been dead for several days.

The man's body was found lying face-down, covered in a blanket and showing signs of trauma, including what appeared to be a stab wound to his back, a police source told the Daily News.

The man's identity was not immediately released.

The case has not yet been determined to be a homicide; the city medical examiner will conduct an autopsy to decide the cause of death.

Back on the farms

It was promising when President Trump listened to the pleading of his agriculture secretary, Brooke Rollins, and flipped on raiding farms, hotels and restaurants to arrest immigrants who don't have legal status. But then Trump flopped and resumed the raids. Our hope is that he flips again.

This seems like yet one more manifestation of the truism that Trump is of the opinion of whomever he spoke to last. Rollins reportedly personally lobbied Trump to make the change after hearing from farmers and agriculture groups who were staring down economic ruin, blindsiding the immigration hawks.

No doubt that White House aide Stephen Miller, incensed by the possibility that some hard-working immigrants might be left alone, cornered the president and badgered him into rescinding brief and limited restrictions in service to his goal of having immigration agents make 3,000 arrests per day.

This quota is not possible to meet without extremely heavy-handed tactics that have already proven very unpopular with the public and corrosive to the fabric of American society, like raids by masked agents on businesses like restaurants. The administration and its defenders will keep claiming that this is an effort to pursue violent criminals, but the lie has been put to that assertion already over months of wide-ranging and haphazard arrests, often of people not accused of criminal conduct.

There is no magical third way where immigration enforcement agents can arrest thousands of people per day in ways that are fully compliant with our standards of due process and also only target the kinds of criminals that the public generally supports removing. This is a fantasy that some Trump voters who might consider themselves more moderate or compassionate have been sold and have wanted to believe, but we are sorry to say it's just not possible.

There quite simply aren't that many criminals living illegally in the country; if you are for mass deportation, you're for detaining and deporting longtime residents with no criminal records who are forming the backbone of multiple crucial industries as well as keeping Social Security solvent. It's that simple.

We'll say again what we've said since the beginning of this fiasco: the type enforcement that people like Miller desperately want is not only a moral abomination but an economic catastrophe and a direct risk to this country's basic system of government. There is no way to have a national police force empowered to conduct arrests without explanation that doesn't infringe on everyone's rights and our basic legal protections.

This effort has nothing to do with following the law, as cleanly demonstrated by the administration stripping half a million people of legal status overnight and detaining those who were following explicit instructions to attend immigration court hearings, as was their legal prerogative and obligation.

We imagine it wasn't hard to convince the wishy-washy Trump to reverse course, as he's never been too interested in policy. Yet, one thing he does seem to at least broadly care about is how he's publicly perceived, and the support and adoration of the wealthy business community to which he always felt he belonged.

His polling numbers are now completely underwater on immigration and likely to only sink further as crops rot in the fields and swaths of the business community realize his administration was serious about rounding up their workers.

Greater freedom of information

We often rag on the state Legislature, the most highly paid lawmakers among the 50 states, who can also pocket unlimited outside income and face no term limits. But sometimes they get it right, as what happened with two bills improving the state Freedom of Information Law.

Thank you to state Senate Majority Leader Stewart-Cousins and the 62 other senators and to Assembly Speaker Carl Heastie and his 149 colleagues. Gov. Hochul should sign both measures into law as soon as possible.

One of the reforms is to correct a really, really bad case ruling by the Court of Appeals, the highest court in New York State, that we ran up against a few years ago.

In 2022, we were seeking the resignation letters of the two Manhattan prosecutors who quit when the criminal case against Donald Trump for cheating on the value of his properties was dropped. The case was continued as a civil matter by state Attorney General Tish James, resulting in a judgment of hundreds of million dollars that Trump had to pay.

The Manhattan district attorney's office denied our request for the letters even, as we wrote in an editorial at the time: "suggesting redacting 'protected personal information' or 'anything specifically subject to grand jury secrecy.'"

As we explained in the editorial: "The DA denied our appeal, but did explain that the letters 'cannot be redacted pursuant to FOIL, which permits redactions of records only under the personal privacy exemption,' citing a number of court decisions.

"As confirmed by lawyers we trust, the Court of Appeals says, quite foolishly, that redacting to shield confidential information is only for personal data, like home addresses or bank account numbers or names of young kids. What that means is that grand jury mentions or other confidential material in an otherwise non-confidential record (like a resignation letter) can't be redacted, deeming the entire document confidential and therefore exempt from Freedom of Information sunlight. That's bad, bad policy that shields countless documents from scrutiny."

Say there is a 300-page document that John Smith is seeking from a state or local government agency in New York. If there is a mention of something like grand jury material on page 200 and only page 200, the logical way to proceed would be to redact the grand jury info on page 200 and release the rest. But no, said the high court foolishly, the whole 300 pages must be withheld from disclosure.

That ridiculous ruling has now been overruled by the Legislature on a unanimous vote of the Assembly and only two negative votes in the Senate. So Mr. Smith would get the 300 pages, with just those secret portions of page 200 redacted. After Hochul signs this into law, we haven't decided if we are going to seek the 2022 resignation letters or not from the Manhattan DA.

The other FOIL reform that passed (unanimously in both chambers) reduces the time that the public and the press have to wait to appeal FOIL delays and denials.

We have long thought that government has the wrong approach to FOIL, that unless something is barred by law from disclosure, it should automatically be published by the government. Until a mayor or governor sets that policy, we'll still need the FOIL process.

How NYC can build out of this crisis

BE OUR GUEST

BY JAMIE RUBIN

For all the talk of public disorder and random crime, New York City's real crisis lies in its infrastructure. We have too little housing, insufficient energy, 19th century sewers, creaking subways and crumbling roads. Despite billions of dollars invested, much of the city is still vulnerable to one unpredictable superstorm.

Many of the mayoral candidates say they'll fix these existential vulnerabilities: build a million new homes, remake the Brooklyn-Queens Expressway, complete the restoration of NYCHA so every resident has a safe and affordable place to live, and so on.

The public is appropriately skeptical. New York has earned its reputation as the hardest and most expensive place in the world to build anything. If it takes months to repair a sewer main, how can the government solve the housing crisis before the turn of the millennium?

This is defeatism. I'm convinced that the next mayor can absolutely build out of this crisis and take his or her place in the pantheon alongside Fiorello LaGuardia and Mike Bloomberg.

Unfortunately, this work doesn't lend itself to one-shot prescriptions like "freeze the rent." Here are a few ideas for the next mayor that are too wonky for the debate stage:

- Throw your weight behind the Charter Review Commission's proposed zoning reforms in the general election and make implementing them a priority once you're elected. Enough said.
- Produce a housing plan that starts on Day One and measures development every step of the way. Every mayor ends the year by declaring a record number of new "units" built or preserved, conflating all kinds of statistics and taking credit for the work of predecessors. Start from zero on Day One and show the public you're willing to stand by your commitment to solve the housing crisis.
- Expand the city's capital plan to assess the real cost of capital requirements over the next decade and prioritize. Fixing things as they break costs more in the short and long-term.
- Find ways to work more with the private sector. Public-private partnerships rebuilt LaGuardia Airport, developed every bit of the city's regulated affordable housing, are making subway stations accessible and functional, and are the key to fixing NYCHA. There are hundreds of examples across the continent and throughout the world of private capital successfully developing infrastructure for the public and New York City needs to step up.
- Make the city a better buyer. Government procurement is a disaster. By one account it is responsible more than any other factor for the fact that projects in New York cost more than twice as much as comparable projects elsewhere in the world. Fast-tracking critical projects may be appropriate in some cases, but it makes more sense to make permanent changes that will push savings (and better vendors) down through the whole system. Beyond that, New York City's tech sector has surpassed Austin at this point and can offer ways through some of the most intractable problems.

Sounds boring? Governing is about vision, energy, and relentless focus on detail. Not all the candidates are up to the task.

But the reward would be huge. Housing costs would go down dramatically, which means working families – including the police, firefighters and teachers we now lose to the suburbs – could stay in the five boroughs. Infrastructure activity would bring thousands of good jobs to union and non-union workers. Tax revenues would go up as the city's economy expands. Capital investment in critical infrastructure would bring down the city's long-term operating costs, taking pressure off the city budget.

LaGuardia Community College maintains NYCHA's digital archive of photographs from the last 95 years. It's a fascinating record of a changing New York, not least because it shows massive construction sites in every corner of the city, public infrastructure as a priority and a symbol of a thriving global capital. The next mayor can take us back in time to move forward.

Rubin is a private equity investor and chairman of the board of the New York City Housing Authority (NYCHA). He worked for Gov. Andrew Cuomo from 2013 through 2017 as executive director of the Office of Storm Recovery, CEO of the Department of Homes and Community Renewal, and director of state operations. He is not affiliated with any campaign for any office and is writing in his capacity as a private citizen.

BRAMHALL'S WORLD

Donald Trump's violence lit the Minnesota fuse

BE OUR GUEST

BY MARK GREEN

In 2009, Janet Napolitano, President Obama's homeland security secretary, announced a study of right-wing violence like the Oklahoma City terror bombing. But after Rush Limbaugh furiously condemned what he called a "Big Sis terror list," she apologized and suspended the probe.

Get ready for two polar responses to the political murders in Minnesota. Of course, accused killer Vance Boelter will receive his due process rights in a court of law. But in the separate court of public opinion, this time Democrats and the mainstream media should not be cowed by Limbaugh's progeny as they indignantly deny the truth about Donald Trump's vocabulary of violence.

Trump has long deployed militant language to look like a strongman. He has effectively created a permission structure for political violence from his ads that urged the execution of the Central Park Five (who later had their convictions vacated) ... support for China's massacre at Tiananmen Square ... embrace of dictators ... sending Marines into an American city ... ICE arrests a judge, a mayor, a congresswoman, and a NYC comptroller.

There is the incendiary language at rallies ("I'd like to punch him in the nose") ... pardons of convicted Jan. 6 insurrectionists ... and his ongoing barrage of insults of political opponents ("Marxists, scum, thugs, animals") that were followed by mass murders in El Paso, Pittsburgh and Buffalo by gunmen quoting him.

"Rhetoric like this has consequences,'"said Timothy J. Heaphy, the top staffer at the House Jan. 6 Committee. "Politicians think it's just rhetoric but people take it seriously." Based on his years running the FBI's counterintelligence program, Frank Figliuzzi agrees. Trump's language "may lead to violence because his rants at rallies embolden white hate groups and racist blogs." While not grounds for a criminal referral, they add up to what scholars call "stochastic terrorism," when a demagogue knowingly creates an atmosphere of menace likely to trigger armed allies.

The result of this political strategy of, as Trump admitted to Bob Woodward, "fear"? It chills free speech, contributes to the tragedy that gun violence is the leading cause of death for children 1-17 and triggers hundreds of death threats that fill the in-boxes of prosecutors, judges and politicians who challenge him.

Indeed, ex-Sen. Mitt Romney and Rep. Don Bacon report that GOP colleagues have privately admitted to changing their votes out of fear of harm to themselves and their families. Sen. Lisa Murkowski admits, "We are all afraid."

Has this happened since the 1856 caning of abolitionist Sen. Charles Sumner? Yet commentary to date laments growing political violence generally but flinches at holding accountable a president who winks at the Proud Boys and brags that he's "supported by the police, military and Bikers for Trump – the tough people."

Defensive Trumpers reply that violence has occurred on both sides of the aisle. That's technically true. But blaming Democrats as a party was accurate of the Confederate South before and after the Civil War but surely not since the realignment of the region from D to R after the 1960s civil rights laws.

And the whataboutism of finding a current example is little more than trying to compare elephants and fleas since both are in the animal kingdom. Yes, a Bernie Sanders voter shot Rep. Steve Scalise, but Sanders always condemns political violence and is not a gun nut coaxing it in his public life. The plural of examples is data. Ex-FBI director Christopher Wray testified under oath to a House Committee that white supremacists and Far Right vigilantism were responsible for nearly 80% of all political violence.

Already, MAGAs en masse are simply claiming the shooter's a Democrat and a once-respected conservative like Sen. Mike Lee has called him a "Marxist." ... a marxist who voted for Trump and targeted 45 Democrats, shooting four and killing two? Other Republicans, like Gov. Glenn Youngkin, feign outrage since "they" tried to assassinate President Trump when the young man who did so was a registered Republican. Who exactly is the "they" – Nancy Pelosi? Chuck Schumer? Joe Biden? – other than a modern version of McCarthyism?

Historically, presidents have more often been the victims than perpetrators of violence. Until now. It's past time for the loyal opposition and honest journalists to condemn Trump's proven itch for chaos and remember the axiom of Aldous Huxley that "Facts don't cease to exist because they are ignored."

Green was the first New York City public advocate and has published a couple dozen books on policy and politics, including most recently "The Inflection Election: Progress or Extremism in 2024?"

Your beliefs should not decide another's fate

Manhattan: To Voicer Enrico Mango: Thank you for your dedicated career as a health care providing physician. I, like you, am closely connected to the health care industry, my wife being a dedicated hospice care registered nurse for the past 25 years. I provide the support she needs at the end of the day, listening to her sad stories of hospice patients from preschool-age children to centenarians.

While you are certainly entitled to your opinion on the subject of assisted suicide, people with opposing views are also entitled to theirs. Your religious beliefs should not set the standard on whether or not assisted suicide is acceptable or not acceptable in our society. That decision should be made by the people who are suffering unimaginable pain and agony during the last days of their life, not you. I could detail numerous cases where the patients, many over the age of 100, exist in conditions where endless injections of morphine mitigate the pain and trauma somewhat, where the hope of recovery is nonexistent and the pain they suffer is nothing more than pure torture – for them as well as their families, who bear witness to their suffering.

Our corporate health care industry loves to keep these hospice care patients alive as long as possible, as each hospital bed that's filled is a profit-making unit. An unfilled bed does not add profit to the corporate health care industry's bottom line.

So, Dr. Mango, follow your beliefs and let the rest of us follow ours.

Unclear options

Manhattan: I had to read Harry Siegel's column twice before I figured out what his position is on ranked-choice voting ("NYC's lousy election rules create lousy choices," June 15). He seems to be in favor, yet all he does is expose its weaknesses. He never explains how the voting system has anything to do with who the candidates are. If the choices are lousy, they would be just as lousy under ranked-choice or not. He acknowledges the difficulties the average person has with this system. It seems to take much explaining to a person who is unengaged with voting in general, and then some get it wrong, defeating its purpose. Siegel's solution is to tell them to be more careful. Finally, he repeats the lie that electing a Democratic mayor is a foregone conclusion, failing to cite recent history from 1993-2009, when Democrats lost five mayoral races in a row. So, what supports his position?

Steven Fromewick

No way out

Kew Gardens: Both political parties should be concerned about the assassination of a state lawmaker in Minnesota. Congress should agree in bipartisan solidarity to amend the Constitution to limit the presidential power of issuing pardons. What would be devastating to the American people is if the president, at the end of his term, issues a pardon for the murderer responsible for killing our public servants, declaring the horrendous event an act of patriotism. He did pardon more than 1,000 so-called patriots who attacked and vandalized our Capitol Building while causing injuries to and deaths of police officers. Congress must protect our freedoms, democracy and public servants by eliminating heinous pardons that can incentivize assassins and can swing both ways depending on who has that executive privilege.

Glenn Hayes

Constitutional objective

Bronx: To Voicer Eileen Zanelli: You can accuse me of having a selective memory, but that does not change facts. Also, Eileen, Joe Biden was in mental decline from the onset of his presidency, as even members of his party are now admitting. TDS has affected your own memory. The constitutional crisis is the illegal entry of millions of migrants through our wide-open southern border. Fear not, President Trump will proudly leave office at the end of his term as another Republican president is sworn in. The jig is up.

Out of step

Hampton Bays, L.I.: The first thing I learned in the Army back in the 1970s after getting my head shaved and being given a bunk was: "Your left, your right, your left, right, left." The soldiers marching in that parade either forgot that or were never instructed. Watch the video and you can see the heads bouncing out of cadence. I wonder if Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth noticed that. Gene Kelly

Branch timeline

Manhattan: Knowing that President Donny craves association with the biggest, best and first – passing through Whitehall, N.Y., on my way from Vermont and reading a historical marker – I realized he had missed an opportunity to shine. About a month before the U.S. Army came into being on June 14, 1775, the colonists engaged in naval action after seizing a schooner, renamed the USS Liberty, and taking control of Lake Champlain (under Benedict Arnold). An unlucky name, perhaps: Another Liberty was sunk in World War I, and the most notorious was viciously attacked by Israel during the Six-Day War. Oldest branch of service? Applying the standards of the tourism signage (clearly Lexington and Concord, land battles a month before the capture of the Liberty) would confirm the Army's precedence. But the president is resourceful. He could probably convince the MAGA crowd that the Air Force was first. Michele P. Brown

Lingua not-so-frank-a

Lackawaxen, Pa.: In Trump's neo-P.C. lexicon, will it be regarded as antisemitic to refer to the Friday, June 13 Israeli sneak attack on Iran as "Pearl Harbor Redux"? John A. MacKinnon

Peace through strength

Medford, L.I.: Kudos to Trump for giving Israel the green light to take out Iran's nuclear program the day after his 60-day deadline to conform to a disarmament deal expired. The bitter lesson learned from the 9/11 terrorist attack is to neutralize threats before they metastasize on our shores. As the saying goes, if people show you who they are, believe them! The last thing we need is to allow the world's most prolific sponsor of terrorism to have the world's deadliest weapons, and whose parliament routinely chants "death to America." Trump bent over backwards to give peace a chance and to remedy this dangerous standoff diplomatically. But he drew a red line at the 60-day mark, and Israel took care of business. Whether the liberals of the world want to acknowledge it, the world is a lot safer with Iran defanged through the Trump Doctrine's "peace through strength" tenet.

Luana Dunn

Don't let up

Lake Ariel, Pa.: I hope that Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu does not listen to all this talk about Iran requesting an immediate ceasefire agreement. They had their chance and blew it. And believe me, if you had not attacked them and they would have gotten the bomb, they would have used it on Israel, and I think you know that. All you want to hear from them is unconditional surrender and that they have nothing left to fight with. Just look at all the ceasefire agreements in the last 70 years. All it did was give the losing side a chance to rebuild and start all over again. And besides, they are lying hypocrites. Joseph Beyhl

Attack dog

Providence, R.I.: According to "Bibi: Regime change in Iran eyed" (June 16), "Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has brushed off urgent calls by world leaders to deescalate." Bibi makes the future grim / Why are we supporting him? / How long would he hold full sway / If our assistance went away? Felicia Nimue Ackerman

3rd extension likely in TikTok sale

President Trump suggested Tuesday that he would likely extend a deadline for TikTok's Chinese owner, ByteDance, to divest from the popular video sharing app.

Trump had signed an order in early April to keep TikTok running for an additional 75 days after a potential deal to sell the app to American owners was put on ice.

"Probably yeah, yeah," he said when asked by reporters on Air Force One whether the deadline would be extended again.

Trump also said he thinks Chinese leader Xi Jinping would "ultimately approve" a deal to divest TikTok's business in the United States.

If announced, it would be the third time Trump has extended the deadline. The first one was through an executive order Jan. 20.

Kraft Heinz (Pittsburgh headquarters, above) plans to stop using artificial dyes in its products in 2027. AP

With FDA push, Kraft Heinz to zap artificial dyes by '27

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kraft Heinz will be pulling artificial dyes from its U.S. products starting in 2027 and will no longer roll out new products with the dyes.

The move comes nearly two months after U.S. health officials said that they would urge foodmakers to phase out petroleum-based artificial colors in the nation's food supply.

Kraft Heinz said Tuesday that almost 90% of its U.S. products already don't contain food, drug and cosmetic colors, but that the products that do still use the dyes will have them removed by the end of 2027. FD&C colors are synthetic additives that are approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for use in those products.

Kraft Heinz said many of its U.S. products that still use the FD&C colors are in its beverage and desserts categories, including products sold under brands like Crystal Light, Kool Aid, Jell-O and Jet Puffed.

The company said it will instead use natural colors in the products.

Kraft Heinz stripped artificial colors, flavors and preservatives from its macaroni and cheese in 2016 and said it has never used artificial dyes in its ketchup.

The company plans to work with licensees of its brands to encourage them to remove the dyes.

In April, Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Marty Makary said at a news conference that the agency would take steps to eliminate the synthetic dyes by the end of 2026, largely by relying on voluntary efforts from the food industry.

The FDA has maintained that the approved dyes are safe and that "the totality of scientific evidence shows that most children have no adverse effects when consuming foods containing color additives."

Americans grow cautious about spending as retail sales slide 0.9% in May

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Retail sales fell sharply in May as consumers pulled back from a spending surge early this year to get ahead of President Trump's sweeping tariffs on nearly all imports.

Sales at retail stores and restaurants dropped 0.9% in May, the Commerce Department said Tuesday, after a decline of 0.1% in April. The figure was pulled down by a steep drop in auto sales, after Americans ramped up their car-buying in March to get ahead of Trump's 25% duty on imported cars and car parts. Excluding autos, sales fell 0.3%.

The sales drop follows sharp declines in consumer confidence this year. Still, inflation has cooled steadily and unemployment remains low, which could fuel steady spending in the coming months.

The Federal Reserve is holding its two-day meeting this week but is not expected to lower its key interest rate Wednesday while it continues to monitor inflation and the effects of Trump's tariffs.

A category of sales that excludes volatile sectors such as gas, cars and restaurants rose last month by 0.4%, a sign consumers are still spending on discretionary items.

Overall, the report suggests consumers have pulled back a bit but not dramatically so. The retail sales report covers about one-third of consumer spending, with the rest consisting of services. Economists expect overall consumer spending to grow in the April-June quarter.

"Today's data suggests consumers are downshifting, but they haven't yet slammed the brakes," Ellen Zentner, chief economic strategist for Morgan Stanley wealth management, said in an email. "Like the economy as a whole, consumer spending has been resilient in the face of tariff uncertainty."

Yet many categories saw sharp declines. Car sales plunged 3.5%, while sales at home and garden centers dropped 2.7%. They fell 0.6% at electronics and appliance stores and 0.7% at grocery stores. There were some bright spots: Sales rose 0.9% at online retailers, 0.8% at clothing stores and 1.2% at furniture stores.

Sales at restaurants and bars, a closely watched indicator of discretionary spending, fell 0.9% in May.

Bx. man killed block from home by gunman in construction vest

BY THOMAS TRACY, KERRY BURKE AND NICHOLAS WILLIAMS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Victor Bautista was slain in clash Tuesday morning. COURTESY OF FAMILY

A 38-year-old Bronx man was fatally shot during a Tuesday morning clash with a man in a construction vest just a block from the victim's home, police said.

Victor Bautista had just finished seeing his 8-year-old son and had then gone over to D' Mi Muneca deli to hang out with some friends, family members of the victim said. He then got into an argument with his killer near the Moore Houses, a New York City Housing Authority development across the street from troubled St. Marys Park in Mott Haven, around 7:45 a.m.

As the quarrel escalated, the gunman shot Bautista in the chest near Trinity Ave. and E. 149th St., cops said.

"He always stopped by every morning to see his son and then to visit his friends over at the store," said JesusIta Nunez, 64, the victim's mother-in-law. "We can't believe it. We don't know who would do this."

Medics rushed Bautista to St. Barnabas Hospital, but he could not be saved.

"They were outside and a customer ran back inside, saying they are about to shoot – and then there was one shot, a single shot," a worker at a nearby deli said. "He got shot right through here, in the chest. He was down on his back. He was fully, completely out."

The victim was a dishwasher at a restaurant, his family said.

"He was a good person, a very good man," Nunez said. "He was a hardworking dishwasher."

The killer, who sported a lime-green construction vest, ran off and has not been caught.

"We told his son, and he is not handling it well. He is only 8," Shirley Hernandez, the victim's stepdaughter, 17, said. "We want the police to get whoever did this. We want justice."

Police were scouring the area looking for surveillance footage that could help them identify the shooter.

Your HOROSCOPE
BY TAROT.COM

Aries (March 21-April 19): Don't try to hide your feelings. It's important to release emotion. Be willing to give a voice to the things that have been bothering you or dragging you down – you should be able to process them more easily than usual. This will let you move forward with less weighing you down.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Currently, growth is most manageable with mutual support. Someone from far away could appear on the scene to open your eyes to unforeseen possibilities, but you might also help another person see life differently. Everyone involved can use their unique talents as needed.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Something may seem off, but that doesn't mean it actually is off. A big part of this is feeling like you don't have enough control over a certain matter. Once you step back and accept that control is not something you can easily dictate, you may realize you were worrying over nothing.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Even the biggest problems can be broken down into manageable steps. You that you can handle just about anything as long as you take it one step at a time. There may be some daunting tasks ahead of you, but don't let the big picture overwhelm you. Think carefully, and you can win the day.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): You may need to play peacemaker today. A hiccup or two will show up in your friend group or another club you're part of. You are likely good at being impartial, so people may need you to step in and assess the situation. Listen to all sides fairly, and you can quickly find a solution.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Doubling up means double the fun today. You are in the perfect frame of mind to team up with others. It will be easy to share the fun on offer, whether you're hanging out at an event or spending time at home. Satisfaction will be easier when you aren't flying solo.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): There doesn't need to be a reason for every good thing that happens to you. Today, you might experience an a-ha moment or some kind of advancement. This could happen with very little effort on your part. Someone may act on your behalf or in your favor, and that could send plenty of rewards your way in turn.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your responsibilities could use a little attention. Look around your life for any mess or turmoil and start cleaning it up, once and for all. This can refer to literal clutter, or perhaps you've let a few threads of your life get a bit too loose, and you need to weave them back together.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): You can get by with a little help from your friends. The people you normally surround yourself with can do wonders to open up your eyes to brand new ideas. You might also meet people who feel like a breath of fresh air; your bonds with them can blossom into something lovely.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Creativity can be healing, now more than ever. Let yourself play and see what you can create when you aren't completely focused on the results. It will be in the very act of experimenting that you will find the most satisfaction. Don't weigh yourself down with unnecessary expectations.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your ambitions can only take you so far if they don't have personal importance. You need to be spiritually or emotionally involved in what you are doing, or else it will not fulfill you. If they already do, congratulations. If not, then take this opportunity to plan some course corrections.

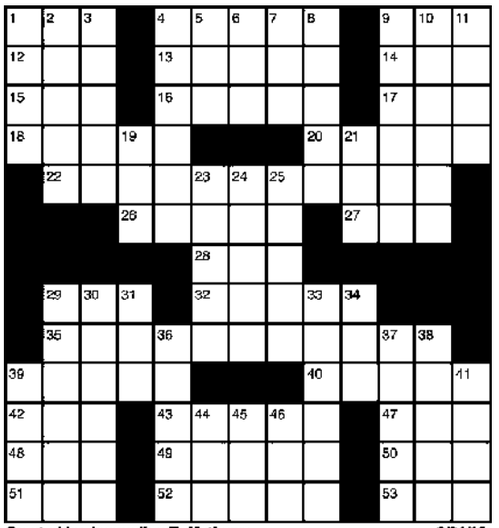

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): Bring more beauty to your space. When was the last time you added a new piece to your abode? This doesn't need to require a big outlay of money if you are working within a budget. Simply focus on making your home a place where you are happy and at peace with your surroundings.

Weaver could skip rehab assignment, make early return

BY GARY PHILLIPS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Shortly after Luke Weaver threw live batting practice at Yankee Stadium on Tuesday, Aaron Boone hinted at the Yankees' plans for the reliever.

"I thought it was excellent," the manager said during his pregame press conference before the Yankees hosted the Angels. "So we'll see how he comes out of this, and hopefully, the next two days, be in a position to make a decision."

Asked for clarity on what kind of decision the Yankees may make in two days, Boone told the Daily News that Weaver could skip a rehab assignment and rejoin the big league club. That would mark a speedy return for the righty, who was expected to miss 4-6 weeks after landing on the injured list with a left hamstring strain on June 3.

Weaver hurt himself while stretching mid-game at Dodger Stadium on June 1. He hasn't pitched in a game since May 31.

Tuesday was Weaver's first live batting practice session since getting hurt. The 31-year-old, who had already thrown three bullpen sessions, simulated a four-out appearance over two innings while throwing upwards of 20 pitches.

Weaver said he "felt great" while "knocking a little bit of the cobwebs off," and he was happy with his velocity and the movement on all his pitches.

"Today was a big day in progression," he said. "We'll see how tomorrow feels, but every day that I've done anything has yielded great results. Recovery has been very minimal as far as any soreness or anything negative."

Weaver added that he hasn't felt any issues in his hamstring since a day or two after that stretch in Los Angeles. He wasn't sure about his next steps, but jokingly said he'd like to be back "today" when asked for a best-case timeline.

"I don't make the realistic goals," Weaver continued. "I just show up every day. So it would be today, tomorrow, the next day. It would be as soon as possible.

"We want to be smart and make sure the recovery is going well, and today was the biggest step thus far, and I feel really good, so I'll definitely advocate to tell them how I'm feeling."

Weaver's return would be a big boost for the Yankees' bullpen, as he recorded a 1.05 ERA and eight saves while holding opponents to a .128/.191/.221 slash line over 24 games and 25.2 innings.

Weaver took over the closer's role at the end of April after Devin Williams recorded an 11.25 ERA, two losses and one blown save over his first 10 games with the Yankees. However, Williams, who returned to the job after Weaver got hurt, has been far more effective since the initial demotion, recording a 2.95 ERA and five saves over 20 total games. He's allowed just one run and hasn't blown a save since Weaver went on the IL.

Williams has a 5.47 ERA and nine saves overall.

Weaver and Williams are both free agents at the end of the year; closers typically earn more money than other relievers. However, Weaver, a former starter, has been flexible about his role since becoming a Yankee in 2023. Williams, meanwhile, said that reclaiming the closer's role didn't matter to him in mid-May.

The two pitchers could always share the gig, but Boone said he hasn't thought about the situation that much with Weaver nearing his return.

"I haven't gone into that full bore yet," Boone said. "I'm filing that under a good problem to have. I love the way Devin's throwing the ball right now and just looking forward to getting another hammer back in Weav.

"We'll figure out what makes the most sense."

Yankees shut out in 3rd straight game, fall to Angels for 5th consecutive loss; near franchise futility mark

BY GARY PHILLIPS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The Yankees remained comatose at the plate on Tuesday, as their lineup's scoreless streak reached 29 innings in a 4-0 loss to the Angels in the Bronx.

The franchise record for scoreless innings is 37, set by the Highlanders in 1908. The team has now been shut out in three consecutive games for the first time since September 2016.

With their sorry stretch dating back to the ninth inning of Saturday's loss to the Red Sox, the Bombers mustered four hits against a Halos pitching staff led by starter Kyle Hendricks. The 12-year veteran entered the game with a 5.67 ERA since the start of 2024 and the worst Stuff+ in baseball this year, but the pitiful pinstripers had the curse-breaking ex-Cub looking like his vintage self.

ANGELS	4
YANKEES	0

Hendricks, topping out at just 89.2 mph, logged six scoreless innings while setting a season-high with nine strikeouts. He also totaled four hits, one walk and 98 pitches.

Giancarlo Stanton, in his second game off the injured list, led the Yankees with two hits on the night. That was hardly enough to save a sputtering offense, which featured an 0-for-4, three-strikeout performance and some light boos for Aaron Judge, though.

The Yankees' ongoing spiral spoiled a stellar outing from Will Warren, who set a career-high with 11 strikeouts over six innings. He pitched better than the three earned runs on his line would suggest, as those came on playable singles that DJ LeMahieu and Jazz Chisholm Jr. couldn't handle at second and third, respectively.

The Angels' first run off Warren came on a Luis Rengifo single in the second, while their next two came on a Taylor Ward knock in the third.

Warren also tallied six hits, zero walks for the first time this season, and 93 pitches.

Los Angeles scored again in the seventh on a Nolan Schanuel groundout, which followed a catcher interference call against Austin Wells. The insurance run proved unnecessary.

With the Yankees' lineup sleepwalking its way through a fifth straight loss, the team will look to snap its funk on Wednesday. Scoring, of course, would go a long way in achieving that goal.

Another golden opportunity awaits, as Jack Kochanowicz is scheduled to pitch for the Angels. His 5.53 ERA is the worst among qualified starters this season.

Ryan Yarbrough will take the ball for the Yankees, who haven't given their starters any run support in six straight games.

Lindor seems set to end ASG drought

Pete Alonso heads back to dugout after he's tagged out in third inning Tuesday night in Atlanta. AP

ATLANTA — Francisco Lindor's long national nightmare might finally be over soon. The Mets leader is the leading National League vote-getter at shortstop in All-Star voting.

Monday night, MLB released the first voting update for the 2025 All-Star Game, which will be held at Truist Park in Atlanta on July 15. The Mets were well-represented, with Lindor, Pete Alonso and Juan Soto all receiving enough votes to put them in the top five at their respective positions. There were a few surprises as well, with catcher Francisco Alvarez opening up in third place, infielder/outfielder Jeff McNeil garnering the fourth-most votes at second base, and Starling Marte holding the fifth-most at DH.

Lindor earning more votes than the Dodgers' Mookie Betts shouldn't be surprising, but somehow the shortstop has been snubbed for the All-Star game every year since he's been with the Mets. Slow starts to his season doomed him from 2021-2024, but in each of those years, he had more than turned it around by mid-June, plenty of time for fans to vote him into the Midsummer Classic, and plenty of time for the league to take notice, as well.

"It's crazy that after everything that he's done as a player here in this league that he hasn't made an All-Star as a Met," manager Carlos Mendoza said Tuesday at Truist Park. "Watching how the voting is going and seeing that he's leading, I'm proud of him…

"But he's got to keep going."

Last year, he finished second behind Shohei Ohtani in NL MVP voting, and while yes, that came well after the All-Star break, Lindor was still an elite player throughout much of the first half of the 2024 season.

The last time Lindor made an All-Star team, it was in 2019 with Cleveland. His omission has confounded the Mets and many others around baseball. Typically, when elite players go from a smaller market to a big one, they get more attention, not less.

But if 2025 is the year Lindor finally gets back to the All-Star Game, so be it.

"It's an honor," Mendoza said. "We are all proud of him, but again, he's got to finish the job."

TRAINER'S ROOM

Brett Baty was out of the lineup Tuesday with groin soreness. The second/third baseman left Sunday's game, but the Mets don't believe the injury to be serious. Baty traveled to Atlanta with the Mets and participated in baseball activities Tuesday, trying to see how much he could handle.

Third baseman Mark Vientos (hamstring strain) started a minor-league rehab assignment Tuesday night with Triple-A Syracuse, getting into the lineup as a DH. He'll be off today, then play in the field Friday, working up to playing back-to-back games at third base. Position players have 20 days to complete minor-league rehab assignments, but the Mets are hopeful Vientos will return before his clock runs out.

ON THE FARM

Two Mets prospects won player of the week awards in their respective leagues. Infielder/outfielder Jett Williams, the club's top overall prospect, was named the Double-A Eastern League Player of the Week after hitting .385 with a 1.428 OPS with two home runs, eight RBI, three triples, three doubles, four walks and a stolen base in six games against Richmond.

Right-hander Brendan Girton, of High-A Brooklyn, was named the South Atlantic League's Pitcher of the Week with five perfect innings and three strikeouts.

Low-A St. Lucie secured a playoff spot by clinching the Florida State League East Division on Sunday night.

ATLANTA GHOSTS HAUNT METS AGAIN

Amazin's blow lead in 8th, fall to Braves in 10

BY ABBEY MASTRACCO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

ATLANTA – The last time the Mets were in Atlanta, they played Games 161 and 162 of the 2024 season one day after every other team in baseball played 162. Francisco Lindor hit one of the most important home runs in franchise history, a two-run blast into the chop house in right field to send the Mets to the postseason. A fitting open to what was ultimately, a magical postseason.

But there's never been anything magical about Atlanta when it comes to the Mets. Tuesday night at Truist Park was no different.

The Braves tied the game in the bottom of the eighth with a two-out, three-run double by Marcell Ozuna. In the bottom of the 10th, they walked off on a sacrifice fly, handing the Mets a 5-4 loss, their fourth straight. Huascar Brazobán loaded the bases with one out, and Austin Riley hit a deep fly to the center-field wall. Tyrone Taylor made the catch, but Luke Williams scored from third easily.

The Mets (45-28) are in the midst of their longest losing streak of the season. It says something about the quality of the team that it took until June 17 to get to this point, but it's tough to stomach blowing a three-run lead to a division rival with the game nearly in hand in the eighth inning.

There were other chances against the Braves (32-39), but the Mets ran into outs on the basepaths, which is never exactly ideal. Juan Soto was caught stealing in the third inning. Pete Alonso was then thrown out at second trying to stretch a single into a double, and he was doubled off first base in sixth. Soto was doubled off first in the ninth when Alonso hit a fly ball to the right-field wall that Acuña managed to catch.

BRAVES	5
METS	4

Left-hander David Peterson pitched into the eighth inning, putting two on before handing the ball over to right-hander Reed Garrett, who loaded the bases with none out by giving up a pinch-hit single to Alex Verdugo in the eighth. He retired the next two, but Ozuna turned on a 2-2 splitter inside and sent it over the head of third baseman Ronny Mauricio into left field. The DH waved the runners around himself as he rounded first and took second.

Peterson was charged with three earned runs on five hits over 7 innings, walking three and striking out three.

Right-hander Spencer Schwellenbach came into the game victorious in his two of his three appearances against the Mets, having only allowed two earned runs in 21 innings (0.86 ERA). Coming off his first complete game of his career his last time out, he pitched effectively using a hard fastball and a lethal curveball.

Soto homered off of him in the first inning, his 13th of the season. In the second inning, Scwhellenbach gave up a leadoff single to Jeff McNeil, then walked Francisco Alvarez with one out. After Ronny Mauricio struck out for the second out, No. 9 hitter Tyrone Taylor dropped a double into shallow left field, out of the reach of a diving Ronald Acuña Jr, to score both runs and put the Mets up, 3-1.

Peterson gave up a run in the bottom of the third, but stranded two runners to end the inning.

Schwellenbach gave up four earned runs on six hits, walked two and struck out eight over seven innings. He got the bats swinging with his fastball. He got 22 swings and misses.

For at least one more night, the ghosts of Atlanta continued to haunt the Mets.

Elbow sprain to keep Megill out a month

BY ABBEY MASTRACCO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

ATLANTA – Suddenly, the Mets pitching depth has been thinned.

Tylor Megill joined Kodai Senga on the injured list Tuesday afternoon, ahead of the Mets' series in Atlanta. The right-hander was placed on the 15-day IL with a right elbow sprain, with right-hander Justin Garza being recalled from Triple-A Syracuse to take his spot on the roster.

Best-case scenario: The inflammation in Megill's elbow subsides in 7-10 days, which would then allow him to work toward a return around the one-month mark. But the Mets are hesitant to specify a timeline until the inflammation in his elbow is gone.

But for now, the Mets will need a spot-starter to take his place Friday night for the series-opener in Philadelphia. They expect to make a decision for Friday later in the week.

"There are a lot of names that we're considering," manager Carlos Mendoza said Tuesday at Truist Park. "So yeah, we'll get there in the next day or two."

You can cross two names off of your list: right-hander Frankie Montas and left-hander Sean Manaea. The two are nearing the end of their rehab assignments, but aren't quite where the Mets want them to be yet. Montas is the closest to a return, making one more rehab start tonight with Triple-A Syracuse, which would rule him out of action for Friday.

The Mets are hoping to put him in the rotation, but acknowledge that the results they've seen during his minor-league rehab assignment haven't been great. Montas is 0-2 with a 13.17 ERA over five starts (20 earned runs in 13 ⅔ innings, nine walks, 10 strikeouts).

"We've still got to wait. I don't want to get ahead of myself," Mendoza said. "Let's see how he does tomorrow. Hopefully he throws the ball well, and not only that, he feels well, and then we have a decision. And hopefully he gets through tomorrow, we see some good results, he bounces back, and then he's part of the rotation. That would be the ideal scenario."

Over the weekend, Mets president of baseball operations David Stearns cited mechanical issues when asked about Montas. The veteran right-hander strained his lat the first week of spring training, so the Mets understood that he would need significant time to build up to being able to pitch a regular-season workload, and they think the mechanical issues could just be part of the process.

"I think physically, we're probably trending in the right direction and now it's just getting him back into the rhythm," Stearns said Friday. "This is very similar to a spring training ramp-up, where you try not to focus on results too much early in the ramp. Then, as you get a little bit later in the ramp, you'd like to start seeing outs. And I think that's where Frankie is right now."

Mendoza watched the last bullpen session Montas threw at Citi Field. While Montas felt fine physically, there were some signs of mechanical issues.

Megill felt "pulling" in his elbow during his Saturday start against the Rays. It was a particularly brutal start for Megill, who went 3 ⅔ innings and gave up three earned runs.

THE WILD, WILD NL WEST!

Giants' Devers deal sets up baseball's best division race

The Giants traded for Rafael Devers in a bold win-now move. GETTY

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Few people on Earth can relate to the Rafael Devers trade as well as Mookie Betts, but even he struggled to wrap his mind around it.

Betts, whom the Boston Red Sox traded to the Los Angeles Dodgers five years ago, described feeling "shocked and stunned" Sunday when Boston shipped Devers to the San Francisco Giants.

"It definitely does help their ballclub," Betts told ESPN's "SportsCenter" hours after the trade. "It'd help any team. Everyone knows what he does, so it'll make this NL West more interesting."

Indeed, the loaded NL West is shaping up to be MLB's hottest attraction this summer.

Entering Tuesday, the division-leading Dodgers held a 2.5-game lead over the Giants and a four-game advantage over the San Diego Padres.

All three teams were at least seven games over .500, while the Arizona Diamondbacks, at 36-35 and seven games out of first place, were hanging around, too.

In Devers, the Giants finally landed the lineup-altering power hitter that's eluded them for years.

"I think the bat is so special," said Buster Posey, the Giants' president of baseball operations.

"It's really hard to acquire this type of talent at this point in his career. We're obviously taking on a lot of money. We're giving up some pitching. We're giving up our first-round pick from last year, so it didn't come without a cost. But we felt like this was a chance to take a shot."

The Giants built a 41-31 record behind a pitching staff whose 3.27 ERA was the third best in baseball. But their middling lineup limited their upside in a division where the Dodgers and Padres boast similarly strong pitching but superior offensive firepower.

In recent offseasons, San Francisco made spirited attempts to sign sluggers including Aaron Judge and Carlos Correa to no avail, with Correa agreeing to a mega-deal before failing a physical.

The left-handed Devers now becomes the focal point of a lineup that, when fully healthy, also features solid right-handed hitters in Matt Chapman and Willy Adames, both of whom signed nine-figure contracts within the last year.

"They're going for it," Dodgers manager Dave Roberts said after the Devers trade. "They put themselves in a position to make a run, and they got better."

The defending champion Dodgers remain the favorites in the NL West, with Betts, Shohei Ohtani and Freddie Freeman fueling MLB's highest-scoring offense. However, an onslaught of injured pitchers – including Blake Snell, Tyler Glasnow and Roki Sasaki – has made Los Angeles a bit more vulnerable.

The Padres were a playoff team last year, but their lineup has underperformed, even with Manny Machado and Fernando Tatis Jr. having productive seasons. Xander Boegarts – a former teammate of Betts and Devers in Boston – has been particularly disappointing, carrying a .232 average and three home runs into Tuesday.

That opened the window for the Giants.

"They're a good team," Dodgers infielder Tommy Edman said. "To add a good hitter like that makes them a little bit more dangerous than they already are. Fortunately, we didn't have to face him in (last weekend's) series, and I'm sure it'll change some preparation down the road."

Devers, 28, signed a 10-year, $313.5 million contract extension before the 2023 season, but his relationship with the Boston front office fractured this year.

After the Red Sox signed Alex Bregman in February, Devers balked at moving off of third base to accommodate his new teammate. Devers ultimately settled in at designated hitter, then refused to learn first base after Triston Casas suffered a season-ending knee injury.

"We worked at it," Red Sox president/CEO Sam Kennedy said. "We had a different vision for (Devers) going forward than he had and we couldn't get there. We couldn't find alignment, and we reached that inflection point and made the decision to make a big move."

With Boston this season, Devers batted .272 with 15 home runs and 58 RBI, all of which led the team. Devers homered in his final game with the Red Sox, helping them finish a weekend sweep of the Yankees and move a game above .500.

But general manager Craig Breslow insisted that trading away Boston's best player was "in no way signifying a waving of the white flag on 2025."

"As we think about the identity and the culture and the environment that is created by great teams, there was something amiss here," Breslow said. "And it was something that we needed to act decisively to course correct."

The Giants agreed to take on the remainder of Devers' contract, too.

That's the cost to contend in the wild, wild NL West.

"This is something we really needed," Giants manager Bob Melvin said. "There's a lot we had to give up to get him, but this fits us perfectly. … Kudos to the front office to swing this."

Ohtani hits 100 but 'not quite happy' with return to mound

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

It wasn't a perfect performance by Shohei Ohtani.

Pitching for the first time in nearly two years, the Los Angeles Dodgers superstar surrendered a run on two hits in one inning against the San Diego Padres.

His command was a bit off after the long layoff, and he threw a wild pitch to the second batter he faced.

But Monday night's long-awaited return to the mound marked a resounding success for Ohtani and the Dodgers nonetheless.

"Not quite happy with the results overall," Ohtani said through an interpreter after the Dodgers' 6-3 win in Los Angeles. "But I think the biggest takeaway for me is that I feel good enough to be able to make the next outing."

Ohtani demonstrated elite velocity during the 28-pitch outing, maxing out at 100.2 mph.

The right-hander hit at least 98 mph on 13 of his offerings.

"I was aiming to sit 95, 96, but the game intensity really allowed me to throw a little harder," Ohtani said. "I was able to adjust back to be able to throw 95, 96 against (Xander) Boegarts in the last at-bat."

The start was Ohtani's first since Aug. 23, 2023, when he was still a member of the Los Angeles Angels. The two-way sensation underwent right elbow surgery that September, then spent the entire 2024 season – his first with the Dodgers – as a full-time designated hitter.

Pitchers coming back from surgery typically appear in about five minor-league games, but because Ohtani remains Los Angeles' designated hitter, the Dodgers had to get creative with his rehab.

They deployed Ohtani as an opener on Monday and plan for him to continue to build his pitch count up at the MLB level.

"I did hit 100 today, so I want to see first where my body feels and how it reacts," Ohtani said. "But the expectation is to (start) once a week, hopefully to be able to go a little longer every time I'm out there."

Ohtani's return made for a "really positive day for us," said manager Dave Roberts, who said he would cap the Japanese superstar's first outing at 30 pitches.

"I thought the stuff was really good," Roberts said. "Much better, as far as the fastball velocity, than I think anyone anticipated. He hit 100. I was thinking 95 to 97, but I think the competitor and adrenaline came out in him."

In addition to his four-seam fastball, Ohtani used his sinker, splitter and sweeper.

"I thought he did a great job," said Dodgers catcher Will Smith. "I'm sure the next time, whenever that is, he'll be maybe a little better. It's Shohei, so we expect a whole lot from him."

Ohtani, the reigning National League MVP, also served as the Dodgers' DH and leadoff hitter on Monday and went 2-for-4 with two RBI and a walk.

The 2023 surgery was Ohtani's second major elbow operation since 2018.

He also underwent surgery last offseason on his left, non-throwing shoulder for an injury he suffered during the World Series against the Yankees.

"I'm just really grateful," Ohtani said, "reflecting back on all of the support I've received, from the doctor who operated on me to the support staff on the team and everyone who's supported me along the way."

The Giants are doing what they can to ensure Andrew Thomas can stay healthy for all 17 games this season. AP

TAKING THE SLOW ROAD

Giant tackle Thomas being cautious so he's on the field when it counts

BY PAT LEONARD
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Russell Wilson threw a touchdown pass to tight Theo Johnson on a back left corner fade on the first 11-on-11 drive of Giants mandatory minicamp Tuesday.

Then Wilson threw an interception to corner Art Green on his second possession, and even after the turnover was negated by a defensive holding penalty, the starting offensive unit still stalled out with no points.

Rookie QB Jaxson Dart's first drive was a challenge while under constant duress from No. 3 overall pick Abdul Carter, who toyed with fifth-round tackle Marcus Mbow on the offense's right side.

Then Dart finished his second drive with a deep TD pass down the right sideline to rookie receiver Dalen Cambre.

These are all typical highs and lows of a spring football practice. They provide Joe Schoen and Brian Daboll with helpful glimpses at what the players are doing well and what they need to improve once training camp arrives in late July.

It's difficult to ignore, however, that starting left tackle Andrew Thomas (Lisfranc) did not practice all spring – and that little about these practices will matter if Thomas does not return 100% healthy to anchor this offensive line for 17 games.

Thomas is irreplaceable on this roster, is he not?

"I can't necessarily say that. Somebody's gotta play left tackle," offensive line coach Carmen Bricillo said Tuesday. "But I would say that you would feel – with his talent and what he brings to the room, you certainly would feel his absence."

The Giants have felt Thomas' absence plenty the past two years.

He has played in only 16 of a possible 34 games the past two seasons since signing a five-year, $117.5 million contract extension with the team in July 2023. The Giants have a 6-10 (.375) record with him during that span and a 3-15 (.166) mark without him.

"It's frustrating," Thomas said in December while recovering from October surgery for a Lisfranc injury to his right foot. "Obviously I want to be out there and help my team. I'm a big part of this team and when I'm not out there, it hurts. But all I can do is prepare every day and do everything I can to get back and hopefully turn this thing around."

Thomas' absence from the field for the entire spring has been disconcerting. The initial expectation was that he'd be physically ready for OTAs.

The good news is that sources say Thomas has not had a setback in the rehabilitation of his foot. Thomas, the Giants and his doctors are just being careful.

Players as big as the 6-5, 315-pound Thomas are typically advised to show some extra patience with foot injuries to fully heal them and minimize the possibility of the injury recurring.

So sources say Thomas is healing well. The plan was always for him to push himself in the gym this spring, not on the field in OTAs. And his workload will ramp up as the summer heat rises.

At the same time, Daboll would not commit on Tuesday to Thomas being ready for the start of training camp in late July, either.

"He's rehabbing," Daboll said. "He is doing everything he can do to get better. So we'll see when that time comes."

If it takes Thomas until early August instead of late July to hit the field for a full workload of first-team reps, then that's what it will be.

The Giants have rushed Thomas to the field before and learned their lesson the hard way. He played in only 10 games in 2023 due to an early season hamstring injury that he aggravated by returning to practice too early.

That was on top of left ankle issues that required two surgeries early in his career before doctors completely cleaned up his issues on that foot.

The bigger issue at play here, however, is the Giants' inability to function when just one key player like Thomas goes down.

All teams suffer in some way when one of their best players get hurt, but Schoen has now been the GM of this team since 2022. And Thomas – who was drafted by the previous regime – is still the only blue-chip O-lineman on the roster.

Thomas' Lisfranc injury last October kicked off a stretch of four different Giants left tackles in five games. Not coincidentally, those also were the final five starts of Daniel Jones' Giants career.

Josh Ezeudu, street pickup Chris Hubbard and right tackle Jermaine Eluemunor all took turns getting cycled in and out of Jones' blindside. Then starting guard Jon Runyan Jr. went down, too, and Runyan is only now stepping into team drills coming off what is believed to be surgery for a separated shoulder.

Schoen – who frequently blamed the Giants' entire 2023 season on Thomas' Week 1 hamstring injury – finally acknowledged in March that his failure to sufficiently supplement his tackle position was connected to his offense's failure.

He signed swing tackle James Hudson III from the Cleveland Browns to a two-year, $12 million contract to try to mitigate the risk. Hudson has been practicing as the first-string left tackle all spring in Thomas' absence.

"Where the offense is and playing seven quarterbacks and more than 10 different O-line combinations the last two years plays into some of that," Schoen said of his new priorities.

Bricillo said the Giants like Hudson because "he has a lot of toughness, a high character as far as a standard for himself. And he works."

Hudson has seemed overwhelmed at times this spring, but at least he fights back. He and Eluemunor fought edge rushers Brian Burns and Kayvon Thibodeaux a couple weeks ago in a culmination of their spring practice battles.

No one wanted it to escalate as badly as it did, but it was at least encouraging to see the Giants' offensive line showing enough fire to retaliate.

"As a coach you would rather say 'woah' than 'sick 'em,'" Bricillo said. "So the fact you have to say 'woah,' that's not a bad thing. There's competition and we take pride and that's a good thing – as long as it doesn't boil over."

Thibodeaux, watching from the opposite side of the line of scrimmage, noted that "there's a lot of confidence, there's a lot of swagger, there's a lot of good energy coming from that room" with the O-line.

"So I'm excited to see how they put it together," he added.

There is only one way the Giants can really put their line together to create a winning formula, though, and that's to put a healthy Thomas back on it.

OKEREKE A CURIOUS ABSENCE

Middle linebacker Bobby Okereke again was absent from practice, a curious development despite his 2024 back injury, considering Okereke made his name in New York by playing 100% of the snaps in 2023. Daboll said Okereke's issue was "not long term" and half-answered why Okereke was out at all. The coach said every player was in the building, at least … Wide receiver Malik Nabers (foot) continued to sit out practice. Receiver Jalin Hyatt (unknown) was on the field but didn't participate in team drills … Tight end Chris Manhertz did not practice and worked on the side with trainers … Rookie third-round defensive lineman Darius Alexander still hasn't practiced since OTAs started, and rookie fourth-round running back Cam Skattebo didn't participate in team drills … Running back Eric Gray was not on the field at all … Dexter Lawrence continued to sit out team drills after participating in select individual drills.

IF I CAN WALK, THEN I WANT TO PLAY!

Hobbled Haliburton not about to give up now

Tyrese Haliburton vows to play through calf strain as Pacers look to extend NBA Finals to Game 7. AP

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The status of Tyrese Haliburton's calf now hangs over the NBA Finals.

The Pacers' star point guard is believed to have played through a right calf strain in Game 5 and was set to undergo an MRI on Tuesday, according to ESPN.

Haliburton managed only four points on 0-of-6 shooting in Monday night's 120-109 loss to the Thunder, which put the Pacers in a 3-2 hole in the best-of-seven series.

"I was not great (in Game 5) by any means, but it's not really a thought of mine to not play here," Haliburton said. "If I can walk, then I want to play."

Haliburton briefly disappeared into the Pacers' locker room during Monday's first half, then returned to the bench with a wrap around his calf before re-entering the game.

He later said the calf issue was in the "same area" as a right ankle injury that was reported after Game 2.

"He's not 100%. It's pretty clear, but I don't think he's going to miss the next game," coach Rick Carlisle said.

"We were concerned at halftime, and he insisted on playing. I thought he made a lot of really good things happen in the second half. But he's not 100%, and there's a lot of guys in this series that aren't."

Haliburton played 34 minutes in Game 5, but posted a plus-minus of -13, the second-worst mark on the team.

He finished with seven rebounds, six assists and three turnovers.

"He's been our rock all year," forward Pascal Siakam said of Haliburton. "He's a big reason why we're here. I don't know exactly what's wrong, but I know he's fighting and he's going to give us everything he's got."

Backup point guard T.J. McConnell scored 13 points in the third quarter – including eight with Haliburton on the bench – but played only 4:33 in the fourth.

Haliburton played a team-high 8:59 in the final quarter.

"It's the Finals, man," Haliburton said. "I've worked my whole life to be here, and I want to be out there to compete, help my teammates any way I can."

Monday's quiet showing continued an uneven Finals for Haliburton, who drilled the game-winner in Game 1 but is averaging 15.0 points on 45.3% shooting, 7.2 assists and 4.0 turnovers per game in the series.

Game 6 is scheduled for Thursday night at Gainbridge Fieldhouse in Indianapolis, where the Pacers will attempt to stave off elimination.

"We've had our backs against the wall many different times over the last two years, had to figure out different ways to win," Haliburton said.

"The way that this year has gone, nobody said this was going to be sweet."

Caitlin shoved to floor as Fever wins wild one

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Caitlin Clark got off the floor to record 20 points, six assists and four 3-pointers and the Indiana Fever beat the Connecticut Sun, 88-71, on Tuesday night in a physical game that included three late ejections.

FEVER	88
SUN	71

With 46.1 seconds left in the fourth quarter, Connecticut guard Jacy Sheldon stole the ball and raced the other way before being wrapped up by Sophie Cunningham under the basket for a hard foul. Sheldon got up quicky and got into a shoving match with Cunningham, leading to Cunningham, Sheldon and Lindsay Allen all getting ejected.

Sheldon was also the center of another official review in the third quarter after she poked Clark in the eye and then Marina Mabrey came in late to shove Clark to the floor. Three technical fouls were called, leading to Clark's three free throws for a 58-45 lead.

The Indiana win, combined with an Atlanta loss to the Liberty, secured the Fever's spot in the Commissioner's Cup with a 4-1 record. The Fever held the tiebreaker with the Liberty after a 102-88 win on Saturday.

Kelsey Mitchell added 17 points and Natasha Howard notched 16 points and 12 rebounds for Indiana (6-5), which went above .500 for the first time since the third game of the season. Damiris Dantas scored a season-high 13 and Howard secured her 50th career double-double.

Tina Charles led Connecticut (2-9) with 20 points. Olivia Nelson-Ododa added 14 points and Jaelyn Brown scored 13.

Clark, who returned from an injury on Saturday to make seven 3-pointers against the Liberty, made her first three 3-pointers against the Sun and scored 12 points in the first half to help Indiana build a 47-39 lead.

Connecticut was within 50-43 with 8:15 remaining in the third quarter, but did not make another field goal until the 2:49 mark to trail by 12 points.

Clark's fourth 3-pointer made it 84-64.

Libs come back from 17 down to beat Dream

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sabrina Ionescu recorded her second consecutive 34-point game, and the Liberty rallied from a 17-point deficit in the second half to edge the Atlanta Dream, 86-81, on Tuesday night.

LIBERTY	86
DREAM	81

The Liberty trailed, 62-47, midway through the third quarter before taking over behind Ionescu's 15 points and Breanna Stewart's 11.

Stewart finished with 23 points.

The game marked the end of the Commissioner's Cup games. Both teams entered with 3-1 records, tied with Indiana. Atlanta would have advanced to the final with a win but Indiana, which beat Connecticut, 88-71, had the tiebreaker over the Liberty thanks to the Fever handing the Libs their first loss of the season on Saturday.

Jonquel Jones scored 10 points to go along with 10 rebounds for the Liberty (10-1).

Rookie Te-Hina Paopao led the Dream (8-4) with 16 points, all in the first half. Allisha Gray added 14 points and Brionna Jones and Rhyne Howard both scored 13.

Paopao hit six of seven shots, with four 3s, to help the Dream take a 43-40 lead at the break.

The Dream was hot to start the second half, hitting its first seven shots and racing to a 64-47 lead, the largest deficit of the season for the Liberty. Then the Liberty closed on a 13-4 run to get within eight after three quarters.

The Liberty's previous largest deficit was 16 on Saturday when they lost to Indiana.

Natasha Cloud's three-point play with 3:56 to play tied the game, 76-76. The teams traded 3's before Stewart made the go-ahead layup and added another on the next possession to make it 83-79.

THIS DATE IN BASEBALL

JUNE 18

1967: Houston Astro Don Wilson tossed the first of his two career no-hitters by blanking the Atlanta Braves 2-0, facing 30 batters and striking out 15.

1975: Fred Lynn batted in 10 runs with three homers, a triple and a single in a 15-1 Boston Red Sox victory over the Tigers. Lynn's 16 total bases tied an AL record.

1976: Commissioner Bowie Kuhn voided the sale of Oakland Athletics stars Vida Blue, Rollie Fingers and Joe Rudi. Athletics owner Charlie Finley sold Blue to the New York Yankees for $1.5 million and Rudi and Fingers to the Boston Red Sox for $1 million each. Kuhn ordered the players to return to Oakland on grounds that they would upset the sport's competitive balance.

1977: Yankees outfielder Reggie Jackson and manager Billy Martin get into a dugout confrontation at Fenway Park that's seen on national television. Martin removed his right fielder for loafing on a ball hit to the outfield. Jackson questioned Martin in the dugout and the two are eventually separated by coach Elston Howard.

1986: California's Don Sutton pitched a three-hitter for his 300th career victory as the Angels beat the Rangers 5-1. The 41-year-old right-hander became the 19th pitcher in baseball history to win 300 games.

2007: Chone Figgins went 6-for-6 and drove in the game-winning run in the ninth inning to lift the Los Angeles Angels over Houston 10-9.
