Waymo 'driverless' taxis to be tested soon in city

BY EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Driverless taxi company Waymo will soon be testing its tech on New York City streets, the firm announced Wednesday – part of an effort to lobby for a law change that would allow the robotaxis to roam the roads of Gotham.

"We want to serve New Yorkers in the future, and we're working towards that goal," Waymo said in a social media post on X Wednesday.

Starting next month, New Yorkers may start to see vehicles with remote sensor systems know as LiDAR – Light Detection and Ranging – on city streets. But the cars won't be driving themselves, Waymo and city officials said – they'll be at the command of a human pilot.

In the meantime, Waymo said it has applied for a permit from the Transportation Department under the Adams administration's autonomous vehicle permit program, a necessary step to allowing semiautonomous operation.

Mayoral spokeswoman Sophia Askari confirmed that the city Department of Transportation is reviewing an application by the Silicon Valley firm that would allow it to enable so-called "self-driving" features – albeit under the watchful eye of a human co-pilot.

"The New York City Department of Transportation is reviewing Waymo's application – the first autonomous vehicle testing application that we have received under the Adams administration's new Autonomous Vehicle Demonstration or Testing Permit Program," Askari said. "Public safety is our first priority, which is why we have strong guardrails and requirements in place on any sort of autonomous vehicles to ensure that we get AV technology right," Askari said.

New York State law prohibits fully autonomous operation without a human driver in the car, thus forbidding the kind of driverless service Waymo provides in San Francisco and elsewhere.

Waymo said Wednesday it is lobbying in favor of changing that law. An effort to do so is currently before the state Senate Transportation Committee, but has stalled out in the Assembly.

DOT and Taxi & Limousine Commission spokesmen referred all questions to City Hall.

Bhairavi Desai, head of the New York Taxi Workers Alliance – which represents drivers of yellow cabs, Ubers and Lyfts in the city – decried the move as political gamesmanship at the end of Adams' mayoral term.

"The technology is not ready, certainly the streets are not ready, and they are trying to throw a Hail Mary pass before this administration is out the door," Desai said.

"The service is not going to be able to stand up to the service drivers provide. Our streets should not be used as an experiment."

Daily News, other outlets: Don't let OpenAI delete lawsuit data

BY MOLLY CRANE-NEWMAN AND LEONARD GREENE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

SHUTTERSTOCK

Lawyers for the Daily News, The New York Times and other news outlets suing ChatGPT's parent company, OpenAI, have asked a Manhattan judge to reject an effort by the technology giant to continue deleting data that could prove it stole journalists' work.

Manhattan Federal Magistrate Judge Ona Wang last month ordered OpenAI to preserve its output logs and any related information slated for deletion after the news outlets accused the tech company of permanently dumping enormous swaths of data, hindering their ability to prove AI products could circumvent paywalls to "plagiarize and regurgitate copyrighted content."

OpenAI has asked Wang to vacate the order, arguing that continuing to store the data would be a "massive burden" and infringe on the privacy of users.

The news outlets say that the argument runs contrary to what OpenAI tells its users about being subject to retaining data if the law requires it. They have noted that the AI companies don't deny the data deleted were pertinent to the lawsuit.

"What it does not dispute is that the output log data is relevant to the News Cases, which as OpenAI has long recognized, include infringement claims based on outputs generated by [OpenAI's] models and products," lawyers wrote Tuesday.

"Nor can it dispute that, as a highly sophisticated technology company that is currently valued at more than $300 billion, it has both the means and ability to preserve this concededly relevant data."

The news outlets say that OpenAI has used every trick in the book to skirt accountability. In addition to the mass deletions, they have accused the tech company of installing filters "designed to make it harder" to elicit answers containing journalists' copyrighted works.

"OpenAI's preferred course of action to 'protect its users' data and privacy' – immediately resuming mass deletions – will also, coincidentally, allow it to continue to destroy data that would show its liability for copyright infringement," lawyers for the news outlets wrote.

Addressing privacy concerns, Wang's May 13 order outlined that it was solely meant to preserve and segregate information that would not be provided "wholesale" to anyone – or stored "forever" – but used to address concerns raised in the suit.

If Wang is inclined to entertain the AI companies' objection, the newspapers said she should give them a chance to analyze different populations of data and present findings to the court.

The suit alleges OpenAI has illegally harvested millions of news stories to train its large language models and build generative AI products that can vomit them out – or versions of them – to users. That has sometimes resulted in journalists' pirated reporting being misstated or misrepresented, misinforming ChatGPT users, the newspapers have argued.

While the newspapers' publishers have spent billions of dollars to send "real people to real places to report on real events in the real world," the two tech firms are "purloining" the papers' reporting without compensation "to create products that provide news and information plagiarized and stolen," according to the lawsuit.

OpenAI has argued that the vast amount of data used to train its artificial intelligence bots is protected by "fair use" rules. The doctrine applies to rules that allow some to use copyrighted work for purposes like criticism, commentary, news reporting, teaching and research.

However, lawyers for the newspapers have argued that the fair use test involves transforming a copyrighted work into something new, and the new work cannot compete with the original in the same marketplace.

The judge has rejected OpenAI's position that the newspapers haven't produced "a shred of evidence" that people are using ChatGPT or OpenAI's API products to get news instead of paying for it.

The newspapers noted Tuesday that engineers for the tech companies had all but admitted it themselves by acknowledging the chatbots weren't designed to slip past paywalls – not that they couldn't. They also cited another suit involving Google, in which an OpenAI engineer acknowledged local news was a "pretty common quer[y]" among ChatGPT users.

The Times originally brought the Manhattan Federal Court suit in December 2023. The News, along with other newspapers in affiliated companies MediaNews Group and Tribune Publishing, filed in April 2024.

The other outlets included The Mercury News, The Denver Post, The Orange County Register and the St. Paul Pioneer Press, and Tribune Publishing's Chicago Tribune, Orlando Sentinel and South Florida Sun Sentinel.

Lawyers for OpenAI did not respond to The News' requests for comment.

L.I. therapist is guilty of sharing baby rape porn

BY JOHN ANNESE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A Long Island child therapist admitted Wednesday she collected and shared baby rape videos online, and even pretended to be the one doing the raping in online chats.

Renee Hoberman, 37, who also goes by the name Rina, pleaded guilty to receipt and distribution of child pornography in Long Island Federal Court, after she posted several videos on the social media network Kik.

Based on federal sentencing guidelines, she could face roughly 10 to 12½ years in prison, with a mandatory five years behind bars when she's sentenced Nov. 18.

Hoberman has been a licensed clinical social worker since December 2020, state records show, and a now-deleted online profile described her as a therapist in Melville, L.I., serving kids from birth to 17 years old.

In her off-time, though, she was posting videos to Kik between June and October 2024 that showed violent sexual acts against several children between 6 months and 2 years old, according to a criminal complaint. The videos spurred several tips to the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children, the complaint says.

The videos came from accounts tied to Hoberman, with names like "badgurl854," "Daddywhospanks Naked," and "troublegirl2434," the feds allege.

Hoberman also pretended to be a man in a chat on Oct. 16, claiming she raped and punished children while others watched, and invited the person she was messaging to visit "his" family in New York to spank the children, according to the complaint.

When Homeland Security Investigations agents raided her Plainview, L.I. home last year, they found more child porn, and evidence she sent child porn via the Telegram app, according to the complaint. She told the agents she is sexually aroused by violent depictions of children from infancy to age 3, the complaint says.

"The defendant, a licensed social worker, admitted to distributing extremely vile and unthinkable videos depicting the horrific sexual abuse of babies," Brooklyn U.S. Attorney Joseph Nocella said Wednesday. "The videos the defendant distributed and sought for her own perverse pleasure showed the most innocent members of our society being restrained and violently raped."

State records show she surrendered her social worker license in April because she "could not successfully defend against allegations of distribution of child pornography."

She's being held without bail in Brooklyn's Metropolitan Detention Center.

Her lawyer didn't immediately return a message seeking comment.

COP CAR FIRE SUSPECT ID'D

Police say he's a 21-yr.-old pro-Palestinian protester

NYPD says Jakhi Lodgson-McCray (l.) was caught on video near fire scene (main).

BY THOMAS TRACY, ROCCO PARASCANDOLA AND NICHOLAS WILLIAMS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The NYPD named and released footage Wednesday of a suspect, who frequently demonstrated at pro-Palestinian and Columbia University protests, in the recent torching of 11 police vehicles in a Brooklyn parking lot just down the street from a precinct stationhouse.

Cops identified Jakhi Lodgson-McCray, 21, of New Jersey, who was caught on video in a bodega near the scene of last Thursday's Bushwick arson incident, according to police. He acted alone in the vehicles' torching, according to NYPD officials, carrying the equipment he allegedly used in the arson in a reusable shopping bag, surveillance video shows.

"He's by himself the entire time. Several times during his escape he changes his clothing. He's wearing a hoodie cinched up so you can't see his face, and he's wearing a mask," NYPD Chief of Detectives Joseph Kenny said.

The suspect has ongoing cases for disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and assault in both Manhattan last month and Queens last year, according to law enforcement. In both cases, he was released without bail.

Cops were also investigating a Wednesday morning arson incident that prompted a 911 call around 8:11 a.m. involving an unoccupied marked NYPD van that sustained fire damage to a tire on its right passenger side near Kellogg's Diner, at Metropolitan and Union Aves., in Williamsburg, Brooklyn.

Kenny stated that a similar but different brand of fire-starter kindling as was used in the Bushwick arson was used in Wednesday's incident.

"There is zero tolerance for anyone who attacks the NYPD," the NYPD said on X as it posted a previous mug shot of Lodgson-McCray and asked the public's help in tracking him down.

During a protest on May 15, 2024, near 31st Ave. and 34th St. in Astoria, Queens, Lodgson-McCray threw eggs at multiple police officers, according to court documents. Officers tracked him down, but he pulled his arms away from them as they tried to arrest him.

Lodgson-McCray then reportedly taunted one of the arresting officers, "You are a p--y. Take these handcuffs off and we can go one-on-one."

Last year, he was arrested for joining with two accomplices in setting fire to American and Israeli flags outside the Israeli Consulate in Midtown. The case was adjudicated, but the outcome was not immediately known Wednesday.

Lodgson-McCray was also wanted for a September 2024 criminal mischief incident at Columbia University, in which he disguised himself as a student and caused more than $1,000 in damage to a campus statue, Kenny said.

He's now accused of torching nearly a dozen police cruisers at the lot near the 83rd Precinct stationhouse at Knickerbocker Ave. and Bleecker St. in Bushwick around 1:30 a.m. last Thursday.

The burned cruisers in the incident suffered more than $500,000 in damage, Kenny said, with the cost to replace the vehicles being around $800,000.

"This incident here … it's not just an attack on the NYPD," the chief said. "It was an attack on the neighborhood of Bushwick itself, because if you look at this lot, there are several residences right next to it that sustained damage due to this fire."

Later on the day of the Bushwick arson incident, Mayor Adams and NYPD Commissioner Jessica Tisch decried the brazen act of vandalism, which the mayor tied to anti-ICE protests in Los Angeles.

"This is unacceptable," Adams said. "We have stated over and over again, everyone has a right to peaceful protest. You do not have a right to destroy property of the City of New York. We have reasons to believe the person who participated in this act is connected to some of the protests that's taking place in Los Angeles and throughout the entire country."

The FDNY managed to put out the blaze within a few minutes, but the vehicles were all heavily damaged or destroyed.

Tisch said last week that surveillance footage showed a masked arsonist entering the lot after hopping a fence around 12:40 a.m.

Around 40 minutes later, an officer from the 83rd Precinct caught the perpetrator in the act.

The officer "interrupted the perpetrator as he was setting fire to a number of vehicles, at which point [he] threw a piece of plywood and fled through an alleyway," Tisch said.

Investigators believe the vandal poured gasoline on the police cars before setting them on fire.

"On scene we found three vehicles that did not sustain fire damage with unignited fire-starter rolls and haystack bundles scattered across the rear passenger tires, the front tires and the windshield," Tisch said. "In total, we found 12 unignited fire-starter balls and 10 unignited haystack bundles as well as a torch-style lighter – all are legal to possess and can be purchased at stores like Home Depot."

The vandal also busted the windshields of some of the vehicles that weren't torched, a police source said.

Lodgson-McCray was wearing a gray hoodie, green pants and a blue face mask on the day of the crime, according to cops.

Anyone with information on his whereabouts is asked to call Crime Stoppers at (800) 577-TIPS. All calls will be kept confidential.

Nab in hit-run drag horror

Kin of pregnant woman killed after fender-bender glad 'monster' caught

Police hold Chaquasia Pigford (left), who is accused of mowing down and dragging Tiffany Cifuni (right) with a stolen car on a Brooklyn street (main photo) on May 24.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Relatives of a pregnant woman killed during a hit-and-run clash with another motorist after a Brooklyn fender-bender said they were relieved that the "monster" behind the wheel was finally being put behind bars.

Cops said accused hit-and-run driver Chaquasia Pigford had been on the lam for more than three weeks after rear-ending Tiffany Cifuni's car on May 24, then running her over after Cifuni confronted her about the collision.

During Pigford's arraignment in Brooklyn Criminal Court on murder and manslaughter charges Wednesday, a relative muttered the word "monster" while a prosecutor described the grisly details of Pigford's alleged crimes.

Later, Cifuni's distraught father-in-law, Nick Cifuni, expressed relief over Pigford's arrest.

"We just want to say that we're happy today happened," said Nick Cifuni, whose son James Cifuni was married to the victim. "We've been reeling from the day she was killed, and we're going to not rest until this is over and we get justice."

Prosecutors said Pigford, 28, was driving a stolen 2016 Chevy Trax on Lewis Ave. in Bedford-Stuyvesant just before midnight when she rear-ended Cifuni's 2021 Toyota 4Runner.

When Cifuni, who was 32 years old and 12 weeks pregnant, pulled over to exchange insurance information, Pigford sped away, said Tara Kelly, a Manhattan assistant district attorney.

Kelly said Cifuni followed the stolen Chevy for about two blocks before the other driver stopped along Van Buren St.

Witnesses told cops that Cifuni got out of her Toyota to confront the Chevy driver, but Pigford refused to roll down her window or speak with Cifuni.

"Where are you going?" Cifuni shouts in video obtained by ABC7 New York. "Get out!"

"You trying to drive away? Get out!" she repeatedly yells, as banging sounds can be heard offscreen. "Get out right now! Park your car and get out! … You don't f–ing drive away! … Park your car! You just hit me!"

Instead, according to Kelly, Pigford tapped the gas, inched forward and lightly bumped into Cifuni.

Cifuni jumped back, placed her hands on the hood of the car and yelled at a passerby to take a photo of the stolen Chevy's license plate.

That's when Pigford "floored the gas," Kelly said.

The caught-on-camera impact lodged Cifuni's body beneath the car, which dragged Cifuni about 160 feet along the street, officials said.

The driver then made an illegal right turn onto Marcus Garvey Blvd. into oncoming traffic, where she drove over a manhole that caused Cifuni's body to become dislodged from the car.

She made another left turn onto Lafayette Ave. where she crashed into a parked SUV and a Jeep Grand Cherokee driven by a 38-year-old woman, Kelly said.

"The only reason this defendant stopped driving was because both of her front tires blew out," Kelly said.

Pigford ditched the car and fled the scene on foot, Kelly said. Pigford lives just a few blocks away from the crash.

Medics took Cifuni to Kings County Hospital with severe head and torso injuries and she died there about 30 minutes later.

Officials said Pigford has family in South Carolina, where phone records traced her within days of Cifuni's death.

Cops nabbed Pigford on Tuesday night when she returned to her Brooklyn home. Detectives told prosecutors Pigford tried to flee by climbing out of the fire escape of her apartment prior to her arrest.

Judge Dena Douglas ordered Pigford held without bail.

A grand jury went on to indict Pigford on murder charges. She was also charged with manslaughter, leaving the scene of a fatal crash, unauthorized use of a vehicle, reckless driving and driving the wrong way on a one-way street. With Thomas Tracy

10 YRS. IN HATE DEATH

Queens man attacked Sikh, 66, in fatal road rage beating

BY SHEETAL BANCHARIYA AND LEONARD GREENE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A Queens motorist was sentenced to 10 years behind bars on Wednesday nearly two years after a road rage bias attack on another driver that quickly escalated into hateful language and deadly violence.

Prosecutors initially charged Gilbert Augustin with manslaughter and assault as hate crimes in the October 2023 beating death of Jasmer Singh, 66, a Sikh man whom Augustin repeatedly derided as "turban man" during the vicious Van Wyck Expressway attack.

But Augustin pleaded guilty to second-degree assault as a hate crime, avoiding even more prison time if he had been convicted by a Queens jury on the manslaughter charge.

Cops were reluctant at first to charge Augustin with a hate crime. But a grand jury investigation revealed more details about the attack that previously were not available to detectives, officials said.

Outrage from the Sikh community, as well as a social media push calling for hate crime charges, encouraged prosecutors to take another look at the case, officials said.

"We hope that today's sentence provides a measure of solace to Mr. Singh's countless family members and friends and sends a clear message that we will not tolerate hate in Queens, the most diverse place in the world," Queens DA Melinda Katz said in a statement.

Augustin flew into a rage Oct. 19 after his Mustang collided with the 66-year-old father of three's Toyota on the Van Wyck Expressway near Hillside Ave. in Kew Gardens, prosecutors said.

The two pulled over and Augustin stormed up to Singh, who was still seated in his car with his wife, according to prosecutors.

A witness observed Augustin saying, "No police, no police," and repeatedly referring to Singh as "turban man," then telling the victim he was not going to let him go home and didn't want him to call the cops, prosecutors said.

Augustin reached into Singh's car and took his cell phone, so Singh got out of the Toyota to retrieve it and eventually got his phone back, according to prosecutors.

As Singh walked back to his car, Augustin punched him three times in the head and face, knocking his turban off his head and sending him sprawling backward to the ground, prosecutors said. The back of Singh's head slammed into the pavement, causing a brain injury.

Singh died at the hospital the next day – the same day an NYPD officer spotted Augustin sitting in his dented Mustang on 111th Ave. in Jamaica, prosecutors said. Augustin, who had a suspended license and couldn't show valid insurance, was taken into custody.

Augustin denied that bigotry was a motive for the attack.

"I appreciate my family's support," he said in court. "I am not a hateful person."

Augustin was also sentenced to five years of postrelease supervision.

'HE DIDN'T LOOK AT ME, BUT I LOOKED AT HIM'

Daughter of woman viciously beaten sees accused for first time in court after attack on Randalls Island

COURTESY OF STEPHANIE RODAS; BARRY WILLIAMS/NYDN

BY EMMA SEIWELL AND LEONARD GREENE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The daughter of Diana Agudelo, the woman viciously beaten while riding her bike on Randall's Island stared down the accused attacker in court on Wednesday just days after the victim began breathing on her own.

But Miguel Jiraud, the man charged with beating the 44-year-old museum worker last month as she pedaled home from work late at night, wouldn't even look the victim's distraught daughter in the eye, she said.

"He didn't look at me, but I looked at him. I don't think he even looked back once," Stephanie Rodas, 21, told reporters after Jiraud's arraignment in Manhattan Criminal Court on attempted murder and robbery charges.

"The first thing I thought was he seemed like just a normal person. Like, I would've walked past him and I wouldn't have thought twice. And I wouldn't even have known. How can someone that I wouldn't even suspect cause this much harm to my life? And cause my world to stop spinning? I just kept asking why? I couldn't understand. And I still don't understand. She was just trying to get home from work."

Agudelo has been hospitalized in critical condition since the unprovoked attack on May 16, when she was brutally beaten while biking home from her museum job.

Rodas said her mother took the same route from work every day.

A week later, cops arrested Jiraud, a Randalls Island shelter resident, who had been on parole for a 2011 rape conviction after a 12-year prison sentence.

Cops said ankle monitor data tied him to the scene. Jiraud initially told police he found the victim near the water and called 911, but his story quickly fell apart, officials said.

An NYPD police chief, Joseph Kenny. called the beating Agudelo suffered "one of the worst" he'd ever seen.

Agudelo was transferred to Elmhurst Hospital where she was treated for numerous skull fractures, a puncture wound to her temple and multiple abrasions, according to Manhattan DA Alvin Bragg.

She experienced massive brain hemorrhaging that required multiple surgeries to remove a portion of her skull and brain to control intracranial swelling, he said.

"To this day, she remains severely cognitively impaired," Bragg said in a statement. "This conduct is abhorrent. I hope she continues to recover from this terrifying assault, and I want to assure New Yorkers that we will ensure accountability for those who commit such acts of violence."

Rodas said her mom started breathing on her own last week, but still has a long road to recovery.

"She's breathing through a hole around her neck," Rodas said. "The only thing that doctors are saying is that she is getting an excess amount of fluid to her brain right now so they had to a mini-surgery where they put a tube through her spine, up to her brain to be able to take away that fluid. She's been having fevers on and off, so there is an infection but they don't know what was causing it."

She said her mother is unable to speak.

"She's been crying," Rodas said. "She opens her eyes but she's not fully conscious. She's not fully able to look at me. And if she does look at me it's no longer than just a minute before her eyes start drifting again."

Rodas said she got emotional when she saw Jiraud in the courtroom. She said it was important for her to represent her mother so that people know her mother is loved.

"She's not alone, and that she's not someone who people didn't care about," Rodas said. "I care about her. I just want justice."

Stephanie Rodas reacts in court on Wednesday, where Miguel Jiraud (far left) is accused of attempted murder in the Randalls Island beating of Rodas' mother Diana Agudelo (left).

Adams can't move bike lane just yet

BY EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A New York State judge has issued a temporary restraining order blocking the Adams administration's plans to remove a protected bike lane from Bedford Ave. in Brooklyn.

Judge Carolyn Walker-Diallo issued the order in Brooklyn Supreme Court Wednesday, declaring the city be "enjoined and restrained" from ripping up the bike lane ahead of a hearing planned for Aug. 6.

A Williamsburg man, Baruch Herzfeld, and his minor son joined cycling advocacy group Transportation Alternatives earlier this week in filing suit against the city after Mayor Adams took to X last Friday to announce his plan to scrap the protected bike lane, which separates bicycle traffic from the rest of the street with a line of parked cars.

Citing opposition from some Williamsburg community leaders who say fast moving bikes and e-bikes in the protected lane pose a danger to people crossing mid-block, Adams said his administration would "restore the original configuration of the Bedford bike lane" from Willoughby St. to Flushing Ave.

Prior to the protected lane opening in October 2024, bicycle traffic on Bedford Ave. – a major North-South thoroughfare through central and northern Brooklyn – traveled in a painted lane alongside car and truck traffic. Frequent deliveries along the avenue meant trucks and other vehicles were regularly obstructing the bike lane, forcing riders into traffic.

"(D)espite data showing both that the old (bike lane) design was not safe or effective and safety of all road users has improved since the upgraded design was installed, the city improperly, irrationally, without proper legal notice and in an abuse of discretion announced on Friday June 13, 2025 that it would remove the upgraded bicycle lane immediately," the suit reads.

Peter Beadle, an attorney representing Herzfeld and his son, said in a statement he was pleased Judge Walker-Diallo "appears to understand the seriousness of this matter."

Transportation Alternatives leadership likewise welcomed the news Wednesday.

"We're ecstatic that a judge is currently blocking the city from ripping up street safety improvements," TA head Ben Furnas said in a statement.

"We won't let anyone make our streets more dangerous," he added. "Mayor Adams, we'll see you in court."

A city Department of Transportation spokesman referred all questions to City Hall Wednesday.

An Adams spokeswoman said the redesign was necessary for the safety of the street, adding that the administration was confident it would prevail in court.

"After several dangerous incidents – many of which involved children getting seriously hurt – the Adams administration listened to the community's concerns and decided to reconfigure the bike lane to its original model while still maintaining safety measures," Sophia Askari said in a statement. "It's unfortunate that elected leaders are intentionally disregarding the needs and safety of the very community who elected them to be their representative. We will address this matter in court where we are confident we will prevail."

Friendly fist bump, then gun slay: vid

BY THOMAS TRACY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A dishwasher shot to death outside a Bronx bodega gave his killer a fist bump – and then sucker-punched him moments before being shot as they got into a sudden quarrel, harrowing surveillance video shows.

Victor Bautista was shot in the chest by a gunman wearing a reflective green construction vest outside of D'mi Muñeca Grocery on Trinity Avenue near E. 149th St. in Mott Haven at about 7:45 a.m. Tuesday, cops said. The killer remains on the loose.

In the minutes leading up to the slaying, Bautista, 38, is seen casually chatting with a man on the sidewalk by a row of parked cars, surveillance video obtained by the United Bodegas of America advocacy group shows.

When the man Bautista is speaking with walks away, Bautista steps up to the shooter in the vest and they greet each other with a fist bump before they begin talking.

The conversation appears to turn tense and Bautista, wearing a dark-colored baseball cap and a blue hoodie, steps back and starts gesturing wildly up and down the street. Less than 40 seconds later, Bautista reels back and punches his rival in the head with a haymaker.

As the two men struggle, the killer, who is carrying a bag, breaks free, pulls out something from the bag, aims at Bautista and runs across the street. It's believed Bautista was shot when the suspect broke free from his grasp.

His cap flying off his head, Bautista runs down the street, grabbing his upper chest.

A second video shows Bautista down the block, cowering behind a parked SUV, as the shooter, still across the street, runs away. After a few more seconds, Bautista's knees begin to buckle and he falls between two parked vehicles.

Medics rushed Bautista to St. Barnabas Hospital, but he could not be saved.

"They were outside and a customer ran back inside, saying they are about to shoot – and then there was one shot, a single shot," a worker at a nearby deli said. "He got shot right through here, in the chest. He was down on his back. He was fully, completely out."

The shooting took place near the Moore Houses, a New York City Housing Authority development across the street from troubled St. Marys Park.

Heartbroken relatives said a visit to D'mi Muñeca Grocery was part of Bautista's daily routine.

"He always stopped by every morning to see his son and then to visit his friends over at the store," said JesusIta Nunez, 64, the victim's mother-in-law. "We can't believe it. We don't know who would do this."

Bautista worked as a dishwasher at a restaurant, his family said. "He was a good person, a very good man," Nunez said. "He was a hard-working dishwasher."

"We told his son, and he is not handling it well. He is only 8," Shirley Hernandez, the victim's stepdaughter, 17, said. "We want the police to get whoever did this. We want justice."

Fernando Mateo, a spokesman for the United Bodegas of America, said that workers at D'mi Muñeca Grocery are shaken.

"The entire incident was captured by the store's surveillance cameras," he said. "You can see the argument. You can see the shooting. It's all there."

The group planned to install a panic button inside the bodega Wednesday so workers can immediately alert police if further violence breaks out again.

Last month, Mayor Adams announced that the city will be spending $1.6 million through an emergency grant to equip some bodegas with "Silent Shield" buttons that would link cameras in the food stores to the NYPD in real time.

The money, however, won't be enough to equip all of the city's 25,000 bodegas with panic buttons, and the United Bodegas Association is pressing for more city and state funding for the initiative.

"The owners of this bodega have been part of the community for 10 years. Today they are shaken. They are scared. They are not sure what tomorrow looks like," Mateo said. "The NYPD should not be watching these videos after someone has already died. They should be seeing them live so they can respond before the next shot is fired."

Former Queens Defenders Executive Director Lori Zeno is charged with using the nonprofit's money to fund a luxury lifestyle.

Legal group's honcho charged with $60K fraud

BY JOHN ANNESE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Lori Zeno, the disgraced founder of the Queens Defenders who's accused of raiding the public defender nonprofit's coffers to maintain a luxe lifestyle in a penthouse apartment, pleaded not guilty to wire fraud charges at her first appearance in federal court Wednesday.

Zeno, 64, and her ex-con boyfriend, Rashad Ruhani, 55, were indicted last week on charges they stole some $60,000 for personal expenses, using their organization's accounts to pay the rent for their $6,000-a-month Astoria penthouse apartment, which they claimed was being used for "client defense" and "foster parent care."

Queens Defenders provides legal representation to criminal defendants who can't afford to hire lawyers.

The couple used the nonprofit's credit cards and the rewards points they accrued to pay for their honeymoon to Bali, and spent big at Louis Vuitton, Bloomingdale's, Ralph Lauren and Neiman Marcus stores, the feds allege.

They bought an 85-inch television for $3,300, paid for a $2,600 steak dinner, and got their teeth whitened for $600, the feds allege. Zeno used a Queens Defenders credit card to pay for a December vacation at a resort in Santa Monica, Calif., according to court documents.

On Wednesday, she appeared in Brooklyn Federal Court, where Magistrate Judge Joseph Maritolo set her bond at $500,000 secured by her sister, brother-in-law and son.

"Some things are not quite what they appear to be," her lawyer Anthony Ricco said Wednesday, adding that he's still learning about the case against Zeno.

"The question is, how does an attorney with so many decades of public service end up in the United States District Court?" he said. "You know there's a story behind this, and there's a narrative behind this."

When asked if Zeno is sticking with Ruhani, Ricco said he wouldn't answer the question. She's barred from contacting him as part of her bail conditions.

Zeno served as the executive director of Queens Defenders from 2018 until she was forced out of the job in January and Ruhani was fired. She hired Ruhani, who was paroled after 26 years in state prison in 2022 for a robbery conviction, as a client advocate in October 2023, and started a romance soon after, according to court documents.

In August 2024, Zeno and Ruhani were married in a religious ceremony, but prosecutors don't believe the marriage is legally recognized, since "both Zeno and Ruhani were married to other individuals," they wrote in a June 11 filing seeking Ruhani's detention.

Zeno promoted Ruhani in June 2024 to a position overseeing Queens Defenders' youth programs, the feds allege, and Zeno hired Ruhani's relatives and associates to positions where they "did little or no substantive work," according to the court filing.

In August 2024, Zeno hired two executive assistants, one of them listed as Ruhani's daughter, for $80,000 and $65,000 salaries, supposedly to help her file expense reports – which were for personal expenses falsely claimed as business expenses, the feds allege. Both of them clocked into work only a single time during their entire employment period, according to the feds.

In November, Zeno hired a woman Ruhani had married about a decade earlier as a $60,000-a-year director of a nonexistent "health and wellness" program, the feds said. The woman, who lives in Saudi Arabia, never showed up for work, according to prosecutors.

Ruhani was arrested last week at Kennedy Airport after he arrived on a flight from California.

He was arraigned and ordered detained by Magistrate Judge Vera Scanlon. Prosecutors asked he be locked up because of his record and his ties to Saudi Arabia.

Queens Defenders received roughly $368,000 in federal funds via the city Department of Housing Preservation and Development. The couple is charged with theft of federal funds and wire fraud.

The city has reassigned the group's contracts to Brooklyn Defenders, a nonprofit that also represents poor defendants.

N.Y. court holds yeshivas to state ed. standards

BY CAYLA BAMBERGER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

New York's highest court on Wednesday upheld statewide educational standards governing nonpublic schools, particularly drawing the ire of some yeshivas.

The ruling by the Court of Appeals was unanimous and delivered a win to yeshiva reformers who believe the ultra-Orthodox Jewish schools are failing to teach the basics in reading and math. Last month, Gov. Hochul and state lawmakers agreed to weaken the rules and delay the timeline for implementation.

At issue was whether part of the regulations that established an enforcement mechanism for meeting the standards exceeded the authority of the state Education Department. The yeshivas argued that the regulations force parents to unenroll their children from noncompliant programs, effectively forcing the schools to shutter – but that the state does not have the power to close nonpublic schools.

In an opinion by Judge Jenny Rivera, the court rejected their argument. "Far from exceeding the commissioner's statutory authority, the regulations simply establish a mechanism by which the statutory mandate is enforced," the court wrote. "In this regard, instead of being contrary to the statute's purpose, the challenged regulations are a natural consequence flowing from the statutory language itself."

Statewide standards require that all nonpublic schools – including religious programs – provide students with an education at least "substantially equivalent" to that offered by public schools.

"The court's core holding – that a nonpublic school that does not offer substantially equivalent instruction 'is not a school that fulfills the statutory requirement for compulsory education' – is an uncontroversial proposition that was unreasonably challenged," said JP O'Hare, an Education Department spokesman.

"This ruling reinforces our ongoing commitment to ensuring that all students in New York, regardless of the type of school they attend, receive a sound, quality education."

The regulations – intended to clarify a century-old law – initially drew the ire of many independent schools. But as the Education Department worked with various programs and their associations on different ways to demonstrate compliance that would not be too burdensome, seemingly all but some yeshivas dropped their opposition to the new rules.

The regulations' unanimous passage in 2022 followed a New York Times investigation detailing widespread educational failures – including young boys who graduated unable to speak English fluently or do basic arithmetic – and allegations of corporal punishment in some of the schools.

Parents for Educational and Religious Liberty in Schools (PEARLS), the yeshiva advocacy group that brought the suit, said while they believe the court should have gone further, they were grateful for the reprieve it may have given to a handful of schools. The vast majority of nonpublic schools follow the law. However, six yeshivas received notifications from the Education Department this year instructing families to find other ways of educating their children and cutting off the schools' public funding.

"The practical effect is that parents can supplement any missing instruction through homeschooling or at an after-school program. That is what we have been advocating since the outset of this litigation," PEARLS said..

Young Advocates for Fair Education (YAFFED), another advocacy groups with ties to the ultra-Orthodox community but who instead advocates for yeshiva reform, submitted a brief in the case in support of the lawsuit.

"This decision reinforces what we have long said: The state not only has the right but the obligation to intervene when schools are not meeting their legal and moral responsibilities to their students," said Adina Mermelstein Konikoff, YAFFED executive director.

Adults, kids and even the Empire State Building join the Juneteenth festivities. This is the fourth year it has been a national holiday.

CITY CELEBRATIONS MARK JUNETEENTH

BY KARU F. DANIELS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Four years after being officially recognized as a national holiday, Juneteenth will be celebrated throughout New York City with an expansive lineup of events to commemorate June 19, 1865 – the date when U.S. Army soldiers brought the news of freedom to enslaved Black people in Galveston, Texas, more than two years after the Emancipation Proclamation was signed into law.

Here are some of the Juneteenth events happening throughout the city in 2025:

THURSDAY, JUNE 19

Juneteenth Food Festival

Foodies will converge for the fourth annual festival featuring local businesses in a family-friendly cultural marketplace with performances, food demos, dance workshops and sounds from DJ Spinna. Nearly 30 local Black food businesses, including The Crabby Shack, Black Rican Vegan and Biscuits N Thangs, are offering diverse culinary concepts. Plenty of vegan options will be available, too.

A collaboration between Black-Owned Brooklyn and Weeksville Heritage Center, it will include an array of cuisine from the American South alongside flavors from the Caribbean, Africa and Latin America. It's no coincidence that the event is happening on sacred ground – historic Weeksville, the site of one of the largest free Black communities in the U.S. before the Civil War.

"There aren't enough food festivals showcasing Black culture, and we're happy to help fill the void," Black-Owned Brooklyn co-founder Cynthia Gordy Giwa told the Daily News. "Juneteenth is the perfect occasion, and Brooklyn is the perfect place to celebrate our rich food traditions."

Free. 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Thursday at Weeksville Heritage Center, 158 Buffalo Ave in Crown Heights, Brooklyn.

Broadway Celebrates Juneteenth

Kara Young and Jon Michael Hill, stars of this year's Tony-winning play "Purpose," will host a free outdoor concert – rain or shine – featuring performances by cast members from current productions such as "Boop! The Musical," "Buena Vista Social Club," "Gypsy" and "Hell's Kitchen." There will also be the return of the kids of "Young Gifted and Broadway."

The 90-minute program will honor Tony winner André De Shields with its Juneteenth Legacy Award.

Free, 11 a.m. at Father Duffy Square in Times Square.

Brooklyn Children's Museum's Juneteenth Celebration

Brooklyn Children's Museum is partnering with several community organizations for a family-friendly event themed "Still We Rise" in tribute to Maya Angelou's powerful poem of resilience and determination. There will be live performances from the Brooklyn Interdenominational Choir and musical duo Red Sahara, a line dance workshop led by STooPS, and a special bookmaking and quilting project inspired by the historic African American quilting community of Gee's Bend.

"Our annual Juneteenth celebration in Brower Park is exactly what community looks like – people learning together, sharing experiences, and creating the kind of connections that make our neighborhood stronger," Brooklyn Children's Museum CEO Atiba T. Edwards said.

Free. 11:00 am to 3:00 pm. at the Shirley Chisholm Circle in Brower Park in Crown Heights, Brooklyn.

3rd Annual Juneteenth in the Park

With a nod to Juneteenth's Texas origins, this year's BRIC Celebrate Brooklyn! event in Prospect Park will feature talent from the Lone Star State.

BROOKLYN CHILDREN'S MUSEUM; GETTY; CURT SAUNDERS FOR BLACK-OWNED BROOKLYN

Dallas-based funk, hip hop and jazz fusion group Ghost-Note (headed by Snarky Puppy's Grammy–winning duo Robert "Sput" Searight and Nate Werthwill) is set to light up the stage after DJ Flash Gordon Parks – an ethnomusicologist hailing from Houston – kick it off with a set inspired by Houston's deep musical legacy of Black music.

There will also be dramatized readings from the likes of James Baldwin, Maya Angelou, and Langston Hughes recited by Alexis Floyd, Harron Atkins, and Russell G. Jones.

Free. 6 p.m. on Thursday at Lena Horne Bandshell, 141 Prospect Park West in Prospect Heights, Brooklyn.

A Juneteenth Celebration with Black Theatre United

As part of Lincoln Center's just launched Summer for the City series, Broadway and theater royalty will show up and show out for the campus's fifth annual campus-wide Juneteenth celebration. Conceived by Black Theatre United founders Michael McElroy and Lisa Dawn Cave, the Schele Williams-directed concert will "highlight African American music weaving its evolution through the progression of Juneteenth status as a national holiday today."

Hosted by "Beyond The Gates" star Tamara Tunie, with appearances by 2024 Tony award-winner LaChanze and "Elsbeth" star Wendell Pierce, the show will include movement pieces created by Ayodele Casel, Darrell Grand Moultrie, spoken word performed by Mel Chanté, and music from Broadway Inspirational Voices, Matthew Whitaker, Norm Lewis, Capathia Jenkins, Darius de Haas, Brian Stokes Mitchell, J. Harrison Ghee and vocal powerhouse Lillias White.

Free. 7:30 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Thursday at Damrosch Park, Amsterdam Ave. and W. 62nd St. in Manhattan.

Celebrate Juneteenth 2025

The Museum will honor Juneteenth with activities including a gallery scavenger hunt, dance performances by Edge School of the Arts and music by The Entrfied Band. There will also be a workshop organized by the Louis Armstrong House Museum and themed activities in the Museum's Media Game Lab.

Some events are free, some are included with museum admission. 12 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Thursday at Museum of the Moving Image, 36-01 35 Ave. in Astoria, Queens.

"Paris Blues"

Classic movie fans and jazz music aficionados will get a special treat when the 1961 drama "Paris Blues" shows on the big screen. Directed by Martin Ritt and set in the jazz club scene of 1960s Paris, the film stars Paul Newman, Sidney Poitier, Diahann Carroll, Joanne Woodward and jazz great Louis Armstrong.

Following the screening there will be a conversation with historian Hyland Harris about Armstrong's film performances, featuring a presentation of archival materials. (The film will also be shown for free on Saturday at 1 p.m.)

Free with museum admission. 4 p.m. on Thursday at Museum of the Moving Image, 36-01 35 Avenue in Astoria, Queens.

The Tune Up, a Juneteenth Celebration

Tribeca's Flea Theater is offering public performances this week throughout the city for its fifth annual celebration. On Juneteenth, award-winning artistic director Niegel Smith tapped Pulitzer Prize-winning dramatist Suzan-Lori Parks to perform alongside her band, The Joyful Noise, to showcase original songwriting and new storytelling.

"This is a sip-your-drink, make-new-friends, dance-in-the-aisles kind of evening that traffics in big sounds and bold ideas, booty-shaking, and statement-making," the description reads.

Free. 7:30 p.m. on Thursday at David Rubenstein Atrium at Lincoln Center, 1887 Broadway in Manhattan.

Juneteenth at the Guggenheim with Rad(ical) Poets

As part of the circular-shaped landmark's June Late Shift evening programming, the Guggenheim partnered with the Bronx-based DreamYard Project to host an event of poetry readings and live performances spotlighting the organization's Rad(ical) Poetry Consortium Fellows. Poets and writers to be featured on the lineup include Alondra Uribe, Carlina Duan, Dena Igusti, Diego Báez, Ellen Hagan, Charlotte Abotsi, e.jin and Andy Powell.

The collaboration coincides with the recently launched Rashid Johnson solo exhibition, "A Poem for Deep Thinkers."

$30, with discounts available. 5:30 p.m. to 8 p.m. on Thursday at Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum, 1071 Fifth Ave. in Manhattan

Comedy and Candidates

"Jonesy in the Morning" star Miss Jones is hosting a night of heightened hilarity for the holiday at Comedy In Harlem Manhattan's only Black-owned comedy club.

The trailblazing broadcaster, singer and author is not only bringing the funny – with comedians such as Shawn Harvey, Stephani K, Onika and Rob Stapleton –she also has politicos like New York City Public Advocate Jumaane Williams and Brooklyn borough president candidate Khari Edwards on deck.

FRIDAY, JUNE 20

Unapologetic: Our Celebration of Queer Black Love

As part of the Cathedral's Pride Month programming, the event will honor the intersection of Black and queer identities with members of the New York City Gay Men's Chorus sharing personal stories, singing solos, and performing songs about the meaning of Juneteenth. Themes of freedom, resilience, and the experiences of the Black LGBTQ community will be highlighted throughout.

Free, with reservations. 8 p.m. at the Cathedral of St. John The Divine, 1047 Amsterdam Ave. in Manhattan

SAT. JUNE 21

The Soapbox Presents "We Outside: A Brooklyn Juneteenth, Vol. III"

Brooklyn's 651 ARTS will join forces with The Soapbox Presents outdoor concert series for the fifth year of programming featuring marching bands, majorette squads, a step show, spoken word workshops and signature "stoop sessions."

Organizers say this year's theme, "We Outside…" will center around the concept of "building coalitions to build community – which becomes critically important in the midst of the current climate in the country."

Free. 2 p.m. – 8 p.m. on Saturday at The Plaza at 300 Ashland/85 Flatbush Ave. in Fort Greene, Brooklyn.

2025 Juneteenth Jubilee

For this year's festivities, the Brooklyn Museum offers up an afternoon of activities and music celebrating self-expression, community, and Black liberation and creativity.

Music from the Bruce Edwards Trio with Alisa Ohri will be performed, and a stage will be set for a poetry open mic. SoulSummit is tapped to mix sets and there will also be a special tour of the new exhibit, "Nancy Elizabeth Prophet: I Will Not Bend an Inch" – the first museum examination of the under-recognized and groundbreaking sculptor known for her work in Paris during the 1920s and 1930s.

Free with museum admission. 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday at Brooklyn Museum, 200 Eastern Parkway in Crown Heights.

Hamptons wedding of year

Abedin-Soros nups; also on the East End, Ja Rule & Julianne appearances

BY NANCY KANE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Another rainy weekend didn't quell the spirits at the star-packed wedding of the year as former Hilary Clinton aide Huma Abedin wed Alex Soros.

The reception was held Saturday at the grand Hamptons estate of the groom's father, George Soros, near Old Town at the edge of Water Mill. The guest list was power-packed, including the Obamas, Anna Wintour, Kamala Harris and husband Doug Emhoff, Sen. Chuck Schumer and Nicky Hilton Rothschild, all escorted by valets.

Boyz II Men performed at the reception.

The celebration was undisturbed and caused traffic only in the hamlets, most noticeably a larger than usual number of stretch limousines with security on 27 East.

What did cause some alarm was the "Shut Down Billionaires Lane" march that started at Coopers Beach and headed down Meadow Lane and Gin Lane in Southampton. Rain dampened the turnout, however and only 80 or so turned out.

Ja Rule, Julianne Moore sightings

On Friday, hip-hop icon Ja Rule took over hotspot Greek restaurant Calissa to celebrate the launch of his new whisky, Amber & Opal.

Saturday, the Southampton Playhouse played host to Julianne Moore, as the Oscar-winning actress read from and signed copies of "Freckleface Strawberry," her acclaimed children's book, for a crowded audience of parents and children.

Later that night, actor Jesse Eisenberg hosted a special screening of "Zombieland," his 2009 postapocalyptic zombie comedy, followed by a Q&A with artistic director Eric Kohn.

The sun shone on Friday as a chic crowd of fashion trendsetters took over Duryea's in Montauk for a seaside lunch celebrating the new Riviera collection from fashion label Baobab. Hosted by USA Baobab President Charlotte Croonenberghs, the luncheon was inspired by the Côte d'Azur, evoking the spirit of the South of France with guests such as curators Akari Endo-Gaut and Kate Berry, writer Candace Bushnell and influencer Jenne Lombardo, among others,

Fashion of another breed was on display at the ARF (Animal Rescue Foundation Hamptons) Young Professional Committee's Rescues and Rosé event on Saturday afternoon. There, billionaire Kathy Rayner was dressed all in pink with an animal print top.

"I think she was going for a 'big cat,'" said our source.

Southampton Village Mayor Bill Manger spoke about the importance of volunteerism as fire men and women and their families enjoyed a down-home BBQ of ribs, hot dogs and corn on the cob, while kids did arts and crafts at the Southampton firehouse. Southampton residents Jonathan, Nicole and daughter Surrell Kloos hosted a thank-you party for the volunteer firefighters, in particular their efforts in the recent Westhampton Pines fires.

RETIREES LOSE ON CARE

Top N.Y. court rules ex-city workers can be moved to Medicare Advantage

BY CHRIS SOMMERFELDT
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

After years of legal battles, Mayor Adams' administration got a green light from New York's highest court Wednesday to shift hundreds of thousands of retired municipal workers into a controversial, cost-cutting Medicare Advantage plan.

The ruling marks the conclusion of a legal battle that started shortly after Adams (photo) became mayor in January 2022, when a group of retired city workers sued his administration over its effort to eliminate their traditional Medicare coverage and shift them into an Advantage plan.

The retirees, concerned the Advantage plan would diminish the quality of their coverage, alleged in their suit the switch violates local administrative law they say requires the city to provide them with traditional Medicare, consisting of the federal program paired with a city-subsidized supplement.

Lower courts have repeatedly sided with the retirees, barring Adams' administration from moving forward with the plan.

But Adams' administration, adamant the Advantage plan would continue adequate coverage for retirees and save the city hundreds of millions in health care costs annually, has appealed the lower rulings, culminating in Wednesday's decision from the State Court of Appeals, the top jurisdiction in New York.

In a unanimous 12-page ruling, the top court's seven judges wrote the retirees were actually mistaken in alleging city administrative law prohibits Adams' administration from moving them into an Advantage plan.

It was not immediately clear how quickly the city would be able to move on the change or if the plan could fall to the wayside should a new administration be elected in November. Some members of the City Council are also fighting the Advantage push.

Adams' term is up Jan. 1, and he's facing a difficult path to reelection running as an independent in November's general election amid continued fallout from his federal corruption indictment.

Ex-Gov. Andrew Cuomo, who's polling as the favorite to replace Adams, recently committed to killing the Advantage plan and letting retirees stay on traditional Medicare should he be elected mayor.

After the Court of Appeals ruling, Cuomo spokesman Rich Azzopardi said the ex-gov will "review the decision," but added that his position "hasn't changed."

Spokesmen for Adams didn't immediately return requests for comment.

As they pursued their case, the retirees argued the shift would violate the law because health insurance documents provided to them by the city formed a "promise" of lifelong traditional Medicare coverage in retirement.

But the judges found the paperwork didn't actually make such a promise.

"It does not rise to the level of a clear and unambiguous promise that the city would pay for Medigap coverage, as opposed to some other form of health insurance coverage, for the rest of every retiree's life," they wrote, referring to traditional Medicare.

To that end, the top court reasoned Adams' administration can move forward with moving the retirees into the Advantage plan, which will be fully subsidized by the city, but administered by a private insurance provider, Aetna.

The retirees opposed to Advantage have raised concern the private administration of the plan subjects them to serious risk. They have pointed to federal studies finding Advantage plans can result in beneficiaries being denied "medically necessary" care due to the convoluted preauthorization protocols used by private insurers.

"While we are disappointed in the ruling by the Court of Appeals decision, the solution to protecting seniors' health care has always been with the City Council and the mayor," said Marianne Pizzitola, a retired FDNY EMT who runs the retiree group that first brought the suit against Adams' administration.

"The next Council and mayor need to do the right thing and codify protections for seniors in city law."

Pizzitola was referring to a bill introduced in the Council that would enshrine in local law that retired municipal workers like cops, firefighters and teachers are entitled to traditional Medicare coverage fully subsidized by the city.

The bill currently has 16 co-sponsors. To pass, the bill would need support from at least half of the Council's 51 members, and for movement to happen, it would likely also need sign-off from Council Speaker Adrienne Adams.

"The mayor needs to do right by the retirees," Speaker Adams said walking out of City Hall on Wednesday, adding the incumbent should reconsider and allow retirees to continue their current health insurance. "All of this is the mayor's job, and he needs to be responsible for what's going on with our retirees."

Like Cuomo, the speaker is running in Tuesday's Democratic mayoral primary.

Brooklyn Councilman Justin Brannan, one of the anti-Advantage bill's co-sponsors who's running for city comptroller in next week's Democratic primaries, said the state Court of Appeals ruling means the need to pass the legislation "is more urgent than ever."

"Let's be clear: this isn't just about health care. It's about whether the city keeps its word to the people who built this city," Brannan said. "I'm not going to shrug and treat this ruling as the end of the story just because a court said it's legal. Legal doesn't mean right. I didn't get into this work to break promises and I sure as hell won't stop fighting."

'Nobody knows what I'll do'

Don says maybe yes, maybe no, on U.S. joining Israeli attack on Iran

BY DAVE GOLDINER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

President Trump (inset), inspecting new flagpoles on the South Lawn of the White House on Wednesday, refused to say if he has decided to order an attack on war-ravaged Iran (main photo) to help Israel destroy the Islamic Republic's nuclear program. AP

President Trump refused to say Wednesday if he has decided to order an attack on Iran to help Israel destroy the Islamic Republic's nuclear program.

Talking to reporters at an unrelated White House event, Trump was tight-lipped about if or when he might direct U.S. forces to join Israel's devastating attacks on Iran.

"I may do it, I may not do it," Trump said. "Nobody knows what I will do."

He added: "I can tell you this: Iran's got a lot of trouble."

Trump stood by his demand for "unconditional surrender" by Iran, and brushed off Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei's warning that U.S. strikes on Iran would "result in irreparable damage for them."

"I say good luck," Trump said when asked about the supreme leader's refusal to surrender.

Despite the tough talk and the days of unrelenting Israeli attacks, Trump did not entirely rule out new diplomatic talks with Iran.

"Nothing's too late, [but] it's very late to be talking," Trump said. "There's a big difference between now and a week ago."

Trump's comments came as he inspected the construction of new flagpoles on the White House South Lawn, one of his pet projects.

Despite Trump's caginess, Israeli officials are increasingly confident Trump will agree to use U.S. bunker-buster bombs to attack Iran's underground nuclear facilities buried deep in the mountains near Tehran.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu believes it's a matter of "not if but when" Trump will join the fray, Axios reported, citing unnamed top Israeli officials.

Trump's openness to joining Israel's war amounts to a remarkable turnaround from his previous stance that the U.S. wanted to avoid war and was committed to a diplomatic solution to Iran's nuclear program.

He had dispatched special envoy Steve Witkoff to negotiate with Iran, and more talks were scheduled for this past weekend when Netanyahu literally blew up the diplomatic talks by unleashing a massive attack on Iran.

Now that the Israeli attacks have proven more successful than expected, and the Iranian response less effective, Trump is having second thoughts about staying on the sidelines.

The president rushed back early from the G-7 summit in Canada to meet with his security team and has started using the term "we" to describe Israeli military actions against Iran.

The shift has opened deep divisions within the president's MAGA movement, with several prominent far right-wing figures calling for him to avoid getting the U.S. involved in a new Middle East war.

Pro-Cuomo PAC launching $300K field operation

BY CHRIS SOMMERFELDT AND JOSEPHINE STRATMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The main super PAC boosting Andrew Cuomo's mayoral campaign is launching a field operation in the final days of the mayor's race to the tune of nearly $300,000 — including more than $14,000 spent just on T-shirts for volunteers, new filings show.

The expenditure from Fix the City, which has raised nearly $20 million to support Cuomo, comes after the ex-governor's main rival in the Democratic mayoral primary, Zohran Mamdani, has mounted a significant field game, deploying tens of thousands of mostly unpaid canvassers to knock on doors for him and hand out campaign literature.

Cuomo's campaign hasn't launched its own paid field operation, so Fix the City's effort fills a void just as the June 24 primary campaign enters the final few days.

The PAC, which is largely being funded by billionaire business titans like ex-Mayor Michael Bloomberg and cosmetics tycoon William Lauder, first plunked down $173,875 on June 12 to hire Bartholomew Communications and Strategies, a Manhattan consulting firm, to manage the field operation, disclosures show. The PAC then paid the firm another $109,044 on June 16 for the field operation work.

In addition, Fix the City paid Mainland Media, a Bronx-based design company, $104,105 to manufacture hundreds of T-shirts emblazoned with Fix the City's logo and the phrase: "Vote for Cuomo: The mayor for this moment."

Liz Benjamin, a spokeswoman for Fix the City, confirmed Wednesday the T-shirts are for the field workers hitting the streets for get-out-the-vote efforts. She also confirmed the field operation is underway, but declined to divulge how many volunteers the super PAC is dispatching or which neighborhoods they are targeting.

Reached over the phone, Barry Caro, president of Bartholomew, declined to comment.

Besides Fix the City, some of the labor unions backing Cuomo, like the Hotel and Gaming Trades Council and the District Council of Carpenters, have launched field efforts for him, too. Unlike Fix the City, those labor unions are also focusing on driving turnout for various other candidates they are backing in down-ballot races.

Cuomo, a moderate Democrat who resigned as governor in 2021 amid sexual misconduct and pandemic mismanagement accusations he denies, continues to poll as the favorite to win Tuesday's primary. Mamdani, a democratic socialist running on a platform that includes a promise to freeze rent for stabilized tenants, has recently closed in on Cuomo in some polls, though.

Field operation is perhaps the one campaigning area in which Cuomo has lagged behind Mamdani.

Mamdani's army of some 42,000 volunteers are managed by 14 full-time campaign staffers who have for months been getting paid tens of thousands of dollars for that work. Mamdani's campaign also employs 54 paid canvassers and expects to spend about $185,000 in total on them, according to a rep.

When Fix the City is factored in, tens of millions of dollars have been spent on television ads and campaign mailers advertising Cuomo's bid to become the next mayor.

Early voting in the mayoral race started last weekend. New Yorkers can continue voting early through Sunday and will then have a final chance to cast their ballots on Primary Day.

Supremes OK Tenn. ban on trans care for minors

BY JOSEPH WILKINSON
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The Supreme Court upheld a Tennessee law banning gender-affirming care for minors on Wednesday, a devastating blow to LGBTQ rights nationwide.

At least 26 states have passed laws similar to Tennessee's, which prevents transgender minors from taking puberty blockers or hormone therapy.

The court's six conservative justices voted to approve the law, while the three liberal justices dissented. Chief Justice John Roberts penned the official opinion.

"This case carries with it the weight of fierce scientific and policy debates about the safety, efficacy and propriety of medical treatments in an evolving field," Roberts wrote. "The Equal Protection Clause does not resolve these disagreements. Nor does it afford us license to decide them as we see best."

Tennessee passed the law, known as SB1, in 2023, and it was quickly challenged by LGBTQ rights groups. Then-President Joe Biden's administration later joined the challenges, and the case was known as U.S. v. Skrmetti, for the Tennessee attorney general charged with enforcing the law.

Following Biden's election in 2021, numerous Republican-led states began targeting transgender people with new laws. President Trump has continued that push, attempting to stop transgender children from playing sports that align with their gender identity. He also kicked all transgender troops out of the military.

"This is a heartbreaking ruling, making it more difficult for transgender youth to escape the danger and trauma of being denied their ability to live and thrive," said Sasha Buchert of LGBTQ rights group Lambda Legal. "Make no mistake, gender-affirming care is often lifesaving care, and all major medical associations have determined it to be safe, appropriate and effective."

Rather than wading into the debate over the rights of transgender people, the Supreme Court justices instead decided Tennessee's law simply didn't require strict judicial review.

Opponents had challenged the law citing the 14th Amendment, claiming it discriminated on the basis of sex and therefore violated the Equal Protection Clause. However, the court's conservative justices decided the 14th Amendment was not in play.

Reps. Dan Goldman (at lectern) and Jerrold Nadler (left of Goldman) spoke outside Jacob K. Javits Federal Building on Wednesday.

ICE BARS POLS AT PEN

Nadler, Goldman blocked from seeing migrants held downtown

BY EMMA SEIWELL
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Two Manhattan congressmen concerned about the conditions detained migrants are facing inside a lower Manhattan courthouse were denied access by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials, a day after agents arrested city Comptroller Brad Lander inside the same building.

"The question is, why can't we go in? What are they hiding?" Rep. Dan Goldman told reporters outside of 26 Federal Plaza, where asylum cases are heard. "How are they treating immigrants behind closed doors who have to sleep on floors for multiple nights? This is unacceptable."

The showdown comes amid the Trump administration's efforts to ramp up deportations.

In the courthouse lobby Wednesday, Goldman and Rep. Jerrold Nadler got into a verbal sparring match with ICE Deputy Field Director Bill Joyce, who said arrested migrants are sleeping on the floors and on benches on the building's 10th floor.

"As Congress people we have an absolute right to inspect any federal facility, including a detention center. You have no right to say no to us. It's a matter of law," Nadler told Joyce, with several media members surrounding them.

"Well that's not our understanding. I appreciate you guys coming, but our understanding is that your oversight responsibility of Section 527 does not include processing areas," Joyce replied.

Joyce confirmed that arrestees sometimes spend two or more nights on the 10th floor, but insisted it is merely a "holding and processing facility," deeming it off-limits to the lawmakers. He said the detainees are fed and have access to bathrooms.

Joyce also added that they are "rotating people in and out", sometimes taking detainees to other holding facilities such as the Nassau County jail, and then bringing them back to 26 Federal Plaza if they are ultimately flown someplace else.

U.S. Reps. Adriano Espaillat and Nydia Velasquez were barred from the same facility on June 8.

Goldman told reporters he planned to go to Republican lawmakers on the Homeland Security Committee, asking them to make a joint request that DHS allow them on the 10th floor.

Goldman said they'd "start by escalating it up through the top," adding that Joyce was "given orders from above him, not to allow us in."

"We will continue to go up the chain," he said.

Nadler said he'd consider a lawsuit if feds continued to bar them from the floor.

The Department of Homeland security did not immediately respond to a request for comment Wednesday.

Nadler said he and Goldman sat in on two asylum hearings Wednesday morning, where they saw the government move to dismiss the migrants' cases.

"Had the government dismissed the case and they walked out, they would have immediately been seized by ICE officers and deported from the country under expedited removal. But these two people had apparently been advised, and they objected to dismissing the case, and so court dates were set for sometime in the future," Nadler explained.

The tactic, which Goldman called "deceptive," has been utilized in city immigration courts in recent weeks, amid the Trump administration's nationwide mass deportation crackdown.

ICE agents have often been seen lingering outside courtrooms, apparently listening for cases to be dismissed. When the migrants step foot outside the courtroom, federal agents, often wearing masks, surround and arrest them.

On Tuesday ICE agents arrested city Comptroller Brad Lander, claiming that he had assaulted one of them as they moved in to arrest an immigrant leaving their court hearing.

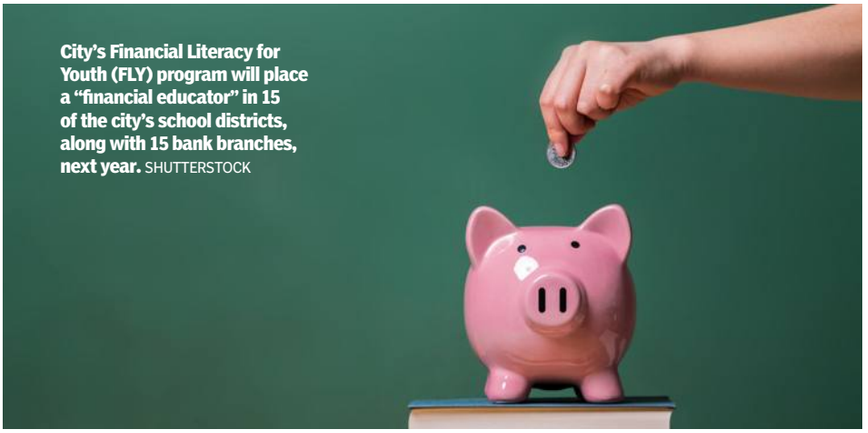

Lander, a leading candidate in next week's Democratic mayoral primary, said he "certainly did not assault an officer" and explained he was accompanying an immigrant named Edgardo when the agents arrested him.

"All I tried to do was hold Edgardo's arm and asked the ICE agents, 'Do you have a warrant?' And they would not show me the warrant, and I said I'd let go of his arm as soon as they showed it to me, and they did not show it to me, and you saw what happened," said Lander.

Financial literacy push includes bank branches in city schools

BY CAYLA BAMBERGER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

City's Financial Literacy for Youth (FLY) program will place a "financial educator" in 15 of the city's school districts, along with 15 bank branches, next year. SHUTTERSTOCK

The city is rolling out a new financial literacy initiative in its public schools next academic year, Mayor Adams announced Wednesday.

As part of the push, the Department of Consumer and Worker Protection will place one "financial educator" from city-contracted organizations in each of 15 school districts in hopes of expanding the initiative citywide by 2030. The program, which officials are calling "FLY" (Financial Literacy for Youth), is estimated to cost more than $25 million over five years.

Officials also plan to open 15 bank branches in public schools, giving students opportunities to learn more about saving and budgeting money.

"Too many students leave high school knowing about chemical bonds but not Treasury bonds," Adams said in a statement. "That ends with our administration."

The financial counselor will provide free services and workshops to students and their parents, and develop classroom resources on "responsible financial habits." Topics include understanding sources of income and paychecks, money management, banking products, credit and detecting consumer financial scams.

Financial literacy won't be a required class districtwide, but the tools will be available for schools to implement at their discretion.

The first cohort includes three school districts in Manhattan, six in the Bronx, four in Brooklyn, and one each in Queens and on Staten Island. Zachary Nosanchuk, a mayoral spokesman, said Adams is ensuring the next administration – whether he's re-elected or succeeded by another candidate – follows through on the expansion by baselining the program in the municipal budget.

The initiative was first previewed in Adams' State of the City address in January and launched Wednesday at the Brooklyn Collegiate Preparatory High School in Brooklyn's Ocean Hill.

While modest to start, an emphasis on financial literacy has been gaining momentum in New York schools. The New York State Education Department is weighing making financial literacy a credit requirement for high school graduation. Aspiring and current comptrollers have both made the case for the push in schools.

The lobster roll at Paul's Daughter in Coney Island and other delights that await you.

TIME TO GO ON A ROLL

A lobster roll that is, & here's 3 best city spots for the summer treat

BY KAITLYN ROSATI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Sun's out, buns out, Baby. If you have had those winter blues for too long, it's time to store them away because summer has finally arrived. For me, summer can only be properly kicked off with a lobster roll in hand. Luckily, you don't need to head to Connecticut or Maine to debate which New England destination makes them better – instead, try one from these three spots in New York for the best in the city.

PAUL'S DAUGHTER

If you want a lobster roll by the water, which is naturally the best way to enjoy seafood, take the Q or the F down to Coney Island and head to Paul's Daughter. For years, I've joked that my summer doesn't officially start until two things happen: I get a lobster roll from Paul's Daughter and I attend the annual Coney Island Mermaid Parade. One year, I even dressed up as a lobster for the mermaid parade and ate two lobster rolls from Paul's Daughter. (I take my lobster obsession very seriously, and yes, I did have lobster slides as shoes that year, thank you for asking.)

The lobster roll from Paul's Daughter is my personal favorite in New York. At only $26 and completely stuffed to the brim with lobster meat, it's a friendly reminder that we ain't in Manhattan no more. The lobster is lightly tossed in mayo, held together on a buttery roll and, with a squeeze of lemon, eating that bad boy on the Boardwalk makes for a fantastic summer kickoff. To take it over the top, pair it with a frozen marg.

Lobster costume not required, but encouraged.

- Address: 1001 Riegelmann Boardwalk, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11224

GRAND ARMY BAR

Grand Army Bar is a neighborhood haunt for those seeking refreshing cocktails, which are ideally enjoyed best at their outdoor seating. And while libations are the name of the game here, don't overlook their impeccable seafood options. They offer a lowbrow and highbrow seafood tower, some of the best towers in New York.

But for a simpler, summery bite, order their lobster roll. Mixed lightly with Japanese mayo, celery and onion, with just a kiss of citrus, the lobster roll here is the perfect accompaniment to some of their boozy and well-crafted cocktails. It's a light enough dish to not leave you completely full, so you'll have enough space to try some of their other seafood-forward options. Their miso crab corn dip is umami in a bowl (I would drink it if I could), and if you want to kick your summer off with a hot dog instead, theirs is made with a beef frank topped with bacon, onion, truffle aioli and mustard, served alongside chips.

- Price of a lobster roll: $30
- Address: 336 State St., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11217

AUNTS ET UNCLES

If you prefer your lobster rolls sans lobster, Aunts et Uncles in the Little Caribbean section of Flatbush, Brooklyn, has you covered. This plant-based Caribbean eatery makes dishes that prove meat is not what necessarily makes a dish taste "good." Their lobster roll is a great example. Made with chopped hearts of palm mixed with fresh dill and red onion, it's tossed in a vegan mayo and rosemary butter, topped with microgreens and served on a soft pillowy pretzel bun.

My jaw dropped upon my first bite at just how much flavor plants can pack. While you obviously won't find those decadent pieces of claw meat like you would in a lobster roll from Paul's Daughter or Grand Army, I'd place my bets that you won't miss the flavor of real lobster. Just when I thought it couldn't get better, I squeezed lemon over the top and got the true seafood-like experience.

- Price of a lobster roll: $18
- Address: 1407 Nostrand Ave, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11226

ICEing out any dissent

Donald Trump's needlessly rough and cruel attitude for ICE in his mission to round up as many people as possible for the mass deportation of millions, including non-criminals, has extended to elected officials, with city Comptroller Brad Lander being detained at immigration court Downtown as he attempted to escort a man following a hearing. ICE is brooking no dissent.

The arrest of Lander, who was released after a few hours, followed the aggressive detention of California Sen. Alex Padilla as he tried to ask Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem a question last week, the arrest of Newark Mayor Ras Baraka and indictment of New Jersey Rep. LaMonica McIver stemming from the same May incident at a detention facility.

In each of these cases, federal personnel had some ostensible reason for their actions; Lander can be seen holding onto the man he was escorting, Padilla approached Noem at a public press conference, while Baraka and McIver were attempting to enter a heavily secure facility.

The administration wants you to believe these circumstances mean they were justified in these actions, but each case really is just a pretext to interfere with elected officials asking questions on behalf of constituents, exercising oversight roles or making decisions about their jurisdictions with the objective of dissuading this in the future.

In each case, officials knew who they were detaining. Baraka and McIver had arrived as part of a congressional delegation – who, it's worth noting, the federal government is by law obligated to allow in to conduct facilities inspections – while Padilla is captured on video loudly and clearly announcing that he is a United States senator.

A reporter for The City heard a federal agent asking another "do you want to arrest the comptroller?" before Lander was handcuffed. The charges are so ridiculous that Lander's and Baraka's were immediately dropped, with a judge raking prosecutors over the coals in the latter case. Still, the Justice Department is bewilderingly insisting on attempting to prosecute McIver, a sitting member of Congress engaging in the type of oversight that she was expressly permitted to do by law.

What Trump and his lackeys ultimately want is not the safety of their officers – whom they are openly putting at risk by having them engage in aggressive operations while unidentified, raising concerns that they could be targeted by people who are unaware if they're federal agents or not – but the silencing of criticism.

They have roughed up these officials for the same reason that they have gone after universities and law firms: these are the actors best equipped to push back on the administration's authoritarian efforts.

Smaller organizations or less prominent individuals are going to find themselves even less likely to speak out politically seeing what happens to more powerful critics. If you are an ordinary citizen, you are probably much less likely to use your First Amendment rights once you've seen elected representatives tossed to the ground and arrested for speaking out.

Yet that's why it's important for elected officials to keep sticking their necks out; it signals that the administration won't succeed at shutting down dissent. Judges should make it clear this tactic is unacceptable.

Why Juneteenth matters

Two-and-a-half years after Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, the enslaved people of Texas learned – via the victorious Union Army – that they were liberated. It was June 19, 1865, when U.S. Maj. General Gordon Granger issued an order, reading:

"The people of Texas are informed that, in accordance with a proclamation from the Executive of the United States, all slaves are free. This involves an absolute equality of personal rights and rights of property between former masters and slaves, and the connection heretofore existing between them becomes that between employer and hired labor. The freedmen are advised to remain quietly at their present homes and work for wages."

That "absolute equality of personal rights and rights of property," of course, while easy to assert on paper, has been devilishly difficult in the 160 intervening years to make real.

In Reconstruction, Southern whites brutally kept freed Black people down. During Jim Crow, segregation and voting suppression and racism made the promise of fairness little more than a taunt. Even since the civil rights movement, which culminated in sweeping federal legislation prohibiting discrimination, the pernicious virus of bias infects too many institutions. Even if every last American were enlightened – which is most certainly not the case – the accumulated weight of generations of bigotry, much of it written into our laws, still weighs on the nation.

Wealth and power are tightly intertwined, and the median white household has a net worth 10 times the median Black household, a disparity that adds up to more than $10 trillion. There are many reasons for this, some of which flow from individuals' decisions – we don't for a moment suggest that to be Black in America is to be invariably destined to a life of poverty and oppression – but the lasting burden of decade after decade after decade of injustice still makes shoulders ache. On Juneteenth, we celebrate those who carry that weight and dedicate ourselves to building a fairer future.

A purposeless redistricting panel

In New York the redrawing of congressional districts, as well as those for state Senate and the Assembly, is supposed to occur only once every 10 years, following the decennial federal census and we have a bipartisan Independent Redistricting Commission to do the job.

The 10-member panel's first time out, in 2022, was a total botch, as the process was unconstitutionally hijacked by Democrats in the Legislature until it was stopped by the state's highest court. The courts hired an unbiased expert from Carnegie Mellon to make the maps.

More court cases followed and the IRC had to come back and redo the Assembly maps in 2023 and the congressional constituencies in 2024 (under a court ruling that also made the current Senate lines unconstitutionally invalid, which we point out, but no one is willing to bring a court challenge).

So with no mapmaking until 2032, why is IRC having its annual meeting at noon tomorrow in Albany? Better to close it down and bring it back in seven years.

NYC voters should use their power

BE OUR GUEST

BY PAUL S. RYAN

Election season is in full swing in New York City. Candidates are running ads, campaign posters are outside of every bodega, and once again, your phone is buzzing with texts asking you to donate, making you wonder: how did they get my number?

Early voting for the primary is already here, and the future of New York is on the ballot in 2025, from City Hall down to your local City Council member. Voters have the chance to make your voice heard on issues that matter most to you, your family, and your community.

At NYC Votes, the government-powered initiative powered by the Campaign Finance Board, we want to make sure every New Yorker understands the power they hold to participate in this election and have a real impact on the outcome. Voting in local New York City elections is different from voting in national elections for two main reasons: matching funds and ranked-choice voting.

Ten minutes out of your day could make a real difference in your community.

You may not know that New York City has the nation's strongest regulations on money in politics and a nationally renowned public matching funds program, which makes it easier for everyday New Yorkers to run for office by matching local contributions with public funds.

Our matching funds program takes your small-dollar donations and multiplies them. For every contribution up to $250, the program matches it at an $8 to $1 rate. So, if you donate $10 to a candidate, the campaign gets $90, which helps pay for costs including staff or campaign materials. (Also through the program, every dollar raised and spent in the election gets audited, ensuring candidates are using your money the right way).

Our research shows that the CFB's matching funds program is working and encouraging more non-traditional candidates to run for office. Thanks to New Yorkers like you, in 2021, we elected the most diverse City Council in the city's history, including the first-ever majority-female Council body.

Running for office shouldn't be about who has the most money, but about who wants to help the most people. Matchable small-dollar contributions from New Yorkers mean that candidates rely on you instead of special interests. The CFB gives everyday New Yorkers like us a bigger say in who represents us, making our local government one that works for the people.

While matching funds give us more choices at the ballot box, ranked-choice voting makes it so we can support multiple candidates instead of just one. 2021's primary elections introduced voters to Ranked Choice Voting (RCV), which gives us the option to rank up to five candidates on their ballot. Ranked choice voting means every individual vote has more power. By ranking their top five candidates, voters are more likely to have their choice reflected in the final outcome.

Here's how it works: On each ballot, voters can select their first-choice candidate, second choice, third, fourth, and fifth, in order of preference. They can select as many, up to five, or as few candidates as they wish, but the more candidates they decide to rank, the more likely it is that their vote will impact the final outcome.

If a candidate gets 50% of the votes in the first round, that contender wins the primary. If no candidate meets that threshold, the candidate with the least amount of votes gets eliminated, and the voters who ranked that candidate first will have their second choice votes dispersed amongst the remaining candidates. This process continues until the first-place candidate gets more than 50% of the votes. While it can take some time for ballots to be counted, especially for citywide races like the mayor, most races are decided in the first round.

With last year's presidential election in the rearview mirror, now is your chance to vote for decision makers who will shape the future of our city. By amplifying small-dollar donations and using ranked-choice voting, New York City voters have more power than ever to participate in our local democracy.

You can find a complete list of what and who will be on your ballot by checking out the Voter Guide at nycvotes.org/voterguide. New Yorkers can vote early in-person, by mail, or on Primary Day. Early voting runs until Sunday, June 22, and Primary Day is June 24. It's worth thinking ahead and making a plan to vote. Ten minutes out of your day could make a real difference in your community.

Ryan is the executive director of the New York City Campaign Finance Board.

Make a bright future for Iran, Israel & America

BE OUR GUEST

BY SHERVIN PISHEVAR AND MICHAEL EISENBERG

We are venture capitalists, an Iranian and an Israeli, who became good friends 15 years ago through mutual technology investments. Today, if the right policies are enacted following the Israel-Iran War, we believe Persian and Israeli business leaders stand on the precipice of historic economic cooperation between two great countries: Israel and the once and future Republic of Iran.

Hamas' atrocities on Oct. 7, and their Iranian patrons' dash toward nuclear weapons, have only strengthened our determination to build a better future for Iran, Israel and the region.

Indeed, today, there are emerging opportunities previously unimaginable. Ten years ago, Shervin called Michael and said: "Let's figure out a way to have coffee in Tehran someday." An exiled Persian living in America, Shervin thought that was audacious, perhaps just out of reach. Michael, born and raised in America, thought it a fantasy.

In late December 2023, Michael called Shervin to bring our people closer together and plan a better future. Out of these talks, we founded the Israeli Iranian Alliance. Weeks later, IIA hosted a dinner in New York with the Crown Prince Reza Pahlavi, Persian-American, Jewish and Israeli businesspeople, and public figures to jointly plan a cooperative economic future between Iran, Israel and the United States. Iran's current position represents untapped potential to benefit the three countries.

Iran is a dynamic country of 90 million people with enormous in-built advantages. Its citizens' entrepreneurship and innovative spirit is very similar to Israel, despite nearly 50 years of repression. Its people thrive in Western markets: The CEO of Uber is originally from Iran, as is Google's former chief business officer, the founder of eBay and many others.

Iran is also geographically critical for two competing supply chains: China's Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) and the India Middle East Corridor (IMEC), supported by the United States, Israel, India, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates.

Following current hostilities, either the emergence of a new regime, or in Iran's terms of surrender, it is crucial for the United States, Israel and other members of the Abraham Accords to bring the future Iran into the Western economic sphere, especially including integration into IMEC.

Iran could also become a major global oil exporter. Currently, Iran exports roughly 1 million barrels a day. Its largest export markets today are China, Venezuela, and Syria. Sanctions have broadly reduced exports, though there has been moderate cyclical growth since 2022. Increased oil production from a democratic Iran would reduce global oil prices, a benefit worldwide.

Similarly, Iran is awash in rare earth minerals. According to the current Iranian Ministry of Industry and Trade, just two mines in Iran are home to 125 million tons of rare earth elements (REEs). Light REEs, used in electric motors for turbines and electric vehicles, and heavy REEs, used in high-temperature military applications, exist in large quantities in Iran, alongside other byproducts used in semiconductor manufacturing. Gallium, a critical byproduct of REEs available in Iran, has been restricted by China, impeding America's strategic efforts to reshore production of semiconductors.

These resources would provide enormous benefits to all parties. President Trump and Israeli Prime Minister Bibi Netanyahu should make economic integration of the future Republic of Iran central to the end of this war. While Israel's crippling of the ayatollah's nuclear and military capabilities is an impressive surprise victory of David over Goliath, the true triumph will come from the prosperity, integration, and mutually beneficial peace that ensues.

Iran should enter into free trade agreements with the United States, Israel, and all Abraham Accords countries. It should commit to integrating its rare earth mines and minerals into the Abrahamic allied supply chains, creating an even more robust future for AI innovation.

As its 90 million people integrate into the global economy, new markets will open for American and Israeli companies, and a new security and prosperity framework for the region will guarantee these benefits for generations to come.

When we conceived of them 18 months ago, we called these economic agreements the "Cyrus Accords," in recognition of Cyrus the Great emancipating the Jewish people and setting them on the road to sovereignty 2,500 years ago. But should this economic integration unfold, it would be just as well to fold it into the Abraham Accords.

As the verse in Genesis tells us, "Abraham was very heavily laden with livestock, with silver, and with gold." There is no reason his spiritual descendants should not experience the same blessings.

Why I take my kids to punk shows in Trump's era

Chapel Hill, N.C.: As a parent, I care deeply about what kind of world my kids will inherit – and who they'll grow up to be in it. That's why, amid rising political authoritarianism, white nationalism and book bans, I take them to punk shows. Not just for the music, but because punk – especially the anti-fascist, anti-racist strain that has long thrived in underground spaces – is one of the few places where resistance isn't just theoretical, it's loud, embodied and lived. Punk shows offer my kids a crash course in moral clarity and historical memory when those values are under open attack.

This might seem like an odd educational strategy. Punk has never been about decorum or safety, but that's the point. When public schools are being stripped of honest history, LGBTQ books are pulled off shelves and President Trump openly echoes fascist rhetoric – calling immigrants "animals," urging the military to police American streets and promising "retribution" – I want my kids to see what it looks like to say no.

Historically, punk has always been a thorn in the side of fascism. In 1970s Britain, bands like The Clash and Crass took on the National Front and Thatcherism with biting lyrics and community organizing. In the U.S., Dead Kennedys (photo, from 1983) mocked Reagan-era warmongering, while Black Flag's raw fury gave voice to alienation under neoliberal capitalism. Later, bands like Anti-Flag and Propagandhi explicitly championed anti-fascist and anti-racist politics. These bands created spaces where kids could see that being against oppression wasn't fringe, it was necessary. Punk, in all its imperfect, chaotic glory, is a reminder that another world is possible – and worth fighting for.

Trumpy tantrum

Manhattan: Re "Eric tells a News City Hall reporter: Don't come back to press briefings" (June 18): I read the story headline. In disbelief, I read it again. Mayor Adams did it! I think it's past time for him to move to Palm Beach, i.e. Mar-a-Lago country!

Frankie Turchiano

Preventive strike

Brooklyn: President Trump met with the National Security Council to discuss a serious matter concerning Iran's uranium enrichment program, which would be used to create nuclear weapons that could be used against Israel and U.S. military bases in the Middle East. Iran has been given enough time to respond and do away with its nuclear program. Israel was in danger because of this problem. Iran would have come very close in a short period of time to creating several nuclear weapons, such as bombs or ballistic missiles. Trump could help by using a military strike using a bunker-busting bomb to destroy a uranium enrichment facility. No one wants to be at war, but no one wants an unstable regime that may detonate a nuclear weapon against Israel or the U.S.

Joseph V. Comperchio

Emergency evac

Greenburgh, N.Y.: The United States military should come to the assistance of American citizens who are currently in Israel trying to avoid the constant missiles and bombs from Iran. There are many N.Y. residents who want to get out, but the airports are closed. Military ships should be sent to assist in an orderly evacuation of American citizens who are frightened when they hear the Iranian missiles flying and landing near them.

Paul Feiner

Ready for war

Bronx: So Trump didn't want to get involved in the Ukraine war against the uncalled-for invasion from Russia. However, he's very willing and eager to get our country involved in the Israel/Iran war. He finally got the military parade he yearned for. Now he wants to be the war president! It's time for the GOP to put a stop to this egomaniac's wishes.

Jose R. Roldan

Spiraling violence

Brooklyn: I hate that America is returning to the 1960s with the increased attacks on our elected leaders. In the '60s and '70s, we lost John and Bobby Kennedy and Martin Luther King Jr. There was an attempted assassination of Alabama Gov. George Wallace and the killing of peaceful protesters at Kent State University by the National Guard. We have now had numerous acts of violence against elected officials: the attack on Nancy Pelosi's husband, the attempt to kill the governor of Michigan and attempts against Trump. Judges have been targeted as well as Minnesota state legislators. Yet, there are several elected officials who fan the flames. Whether it is the president pardoning the Jan. 6 rioters or a senator blaming violence on the Democrats – or Democrats putting Trump in a noose or calling him a vulgarity in a commercial – they must be denounced by both parties and denied financial support.

Alan Podhaizer

Pull your support

Flushing: The U.S.A. is becoming a banana republic complete with military parades, political murders and troops occupying large cities. Trump and his gang are setting up a dictatorship we never voted for. I hope those of you who elected this bunch can see where this is going and join the growing opposition or face the consequences.

Lester Simon

Defend the Constitution

Utica, N.Y.: Trump has gone too far for too long. Attacking and arresting U.S. senators and representatives? Snatching non-white people off the streets and imprisoning them with no due process? Ignoring court decisions? Laughing at the Constitution's Emoluments Clause? Clearly, Trump is saying, "I'm the king and I'll do what I want. Just try and stop me." Meanwhile, masked and anonymous, ICE is serving as his personal Gestapo. Well, nearly all bullies back down after a punch in the mouth, and Trump is no different. In our opinion, however, waiting for the midterms will be too late. If the media won't offer solutions, if the courts refuse to enforce their rulings and if the Democrats are too feckless to call for immediate impeachment hearings, maybe it's time for our military to take a seriously hard look at its options. These are radical times. Maybe they call for radical solutions.

Jeff and Joan Ganeles

What's new?

Flushing: Isn't ICE already in the big "blue" cities? What's changed?

Bernard Caine

Change of plans

Madisonville, Pa.: To Voicer Tawsif Anam: The Army had been planning for a parade and celebration of the Army's 250th birthday very much prior to Trump being reelected or Pete Hegseth being appointed secretary of defense. The only thing Trump did was to insist on changes to attempt to make the parade a grand tribute for his birthday. He also managed to escalate the cost of the parade. The Army already had things planned and ready to go, then along came Trump the disrupter. So you are thanking the wrong person for there being a parade, but the right one for messing things up.

Tom Mielczarek

Talks with his hands

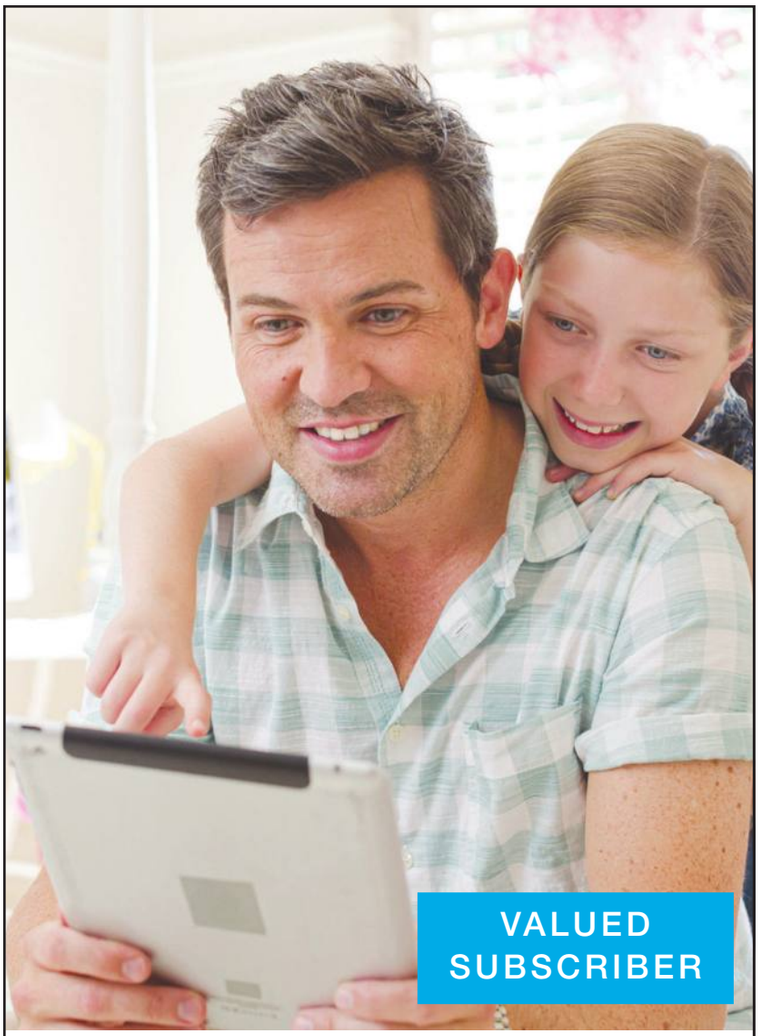

Richmond Hill: What is California Gov. Gavin Newsom doing with those wacky hand movements when he is speaking? Is it a new method of signing for the hearing impaired? Or for his impaired brain? Maybe he's just a huge fan of fellow Californian and 1950s recording star Johnny Otis and his big hit, "Willie and the Hand Jive." I'm sure Johnny would be proud of the great job you're doing in his home state and of Los Angeles! Keep on jiving, Gavin!

J. Napoleone

Ask for it

Ridgewood: To Voicers Rick Tilson and Laya Goldman: Hopefully, I will be able to educate you regarding deliveries. I retired after a long sales career and now do food delivery on a very part-time basis to keep busy. First, I never ring a bell unless the customer specifically asks for it in the special instructions space, which you have when you place an order. More than 90% of customers just want the food left on the doorstep. If you do want your bell rung, say so in special instructions. Second, when the delivery is left at your door, as soon as the picture is taken, the app immediately sends that pic to your phone. All you have to do is look at it. A little less laziness on your part will make everyone happier.

Karen Read watches jurors enter courtroom in Dedham, Mass., court on Wednesday.

Read found not guilty

Acquitted in 2nd trial for murder of Boston cop beau

BY JESSICA SCHLADEBECK AND JOSEPH WILKINSON
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The jury for Karen Read's second murder trial found her not guilty on Wednesday in the death of her Boston cop boyfriend, who was found unresponsive outside a Massachusetts home amid a treacherous snowstorm back in 2022.

Read's fate was intensely debated by the jury, which got the case back on June 13 but took several days to reach a verdict. At one moment on Wednesday, they even briefly claimed to have a verdict before backtracking, according to MassLive.

Read was cleared on the most serious charges, second-degree murder, manslaughter and leaving the scene of a deadly accident. She was convicted on one count of operating a vehicle while intoxicated and was sentenced to one year of probation.

Leaving Norfolk County Superior Court on Wednesday, Read raised an arm in celebration and waved to people who'd gathered outside the building.

Read's boyfriend, John O'Keefe, spent the night of Jan. 28, 2022, drinking with her and friends at the Waterfall Bar and Grille before he asked her to drive him to the Canton home of retired Police Officer Brian Albert, who'd been hosting a party at the time.

Prosecutors claimed Read dropped O'Keefe off at the residence, then drunkenly and intentionally ran him down with her SUV after he tried to end their relationship. She then drove off, abandoning him to die in the near-blizzard like conditions, they alleged.

Read said she only realized something was amiss the next morning, after she noticed her vehicle had been damaged and that her boyfriend was nowhere to be found. She enlisted a few friends to help her search, one of whom told the Boston Globe that Read still appeared intoxicated and did not seem to remember what occurred the night before.

Eventually, they found O'Keefe, a cop in Boston for 16 years, unconscious and covered in blood-soaked snow beside a shattered cocktail glass just outside Albert's home.

Read was later charged with second-degree murder, manslaughter while operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol and leaving the scene of an accident resulting in death. The defense, however, argued that Read was actually the victim of a law enforcement coverup, and not the perpetrator of deadly domestic violence.

During her weekslong retrial in Massachusetts, Read's lawyers accused authorities of trying to frame her in a sweeping conspiracy, which included planting evidence against her. They also suggested that O'Keefe was violently beaten inside the house party and that he was bitten by a family dog before he was dumped outside in the snow.

Defense attorney David Yannetti renewed Read's request for a finding of not guilty, arguing prosecutors failed to produce a witness who could say O'Keefe's injuries were consistent with being hit by an SUV.

Dr. Elizabeth Laposata, a former medical examiner called by the defense, said O'Keefe's injuries were consistent with blunt-force trauma to the back of the head, but that his eye wounds were not consistent with being struck by the rear of Read's vehicle. A crash expert similarly cast doubt from the stand, telling jurors the evidence is not consistent with the cop being hit by Read at the speed prosecutors suggested she was going.

Read, an equity analyst and adjunct professor of finance at Bentley University, did not take the stand during her first or second trial. Her first trial ended in a mistrial last year due to a hung jury.

L.I. man shot ex dead in debt dispute, DA sez

BY MURI ASSUNÇÃO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A Long Island man is accused of shooting his ex-girlfriend to death after a dispute over a financial debt, officials said Wednesday.

James Quininchetta, 40, of Ridge, was indicted for murder and related charges for allegedly shooting and killing Rebecca Roth, 33, outside her apartment complex in Moriches earlier this month, Suffolk County District Attorney Ray Tierney said in a news release.

The shocking incident stemmed from an argument over a "minor financial dispute" that quickly escalated to a "senseless act of violence," Tierney said.

According to investigators, Quininchetta arrived at Roth's residence via rideshare service shortly after midnight on June 6 in an attempt to collect money he said the victim owed him.

When he approached the victim, she allegedly refused to pay him back. He then fired a .45-caliber semiautomatic handgun at her seven times while she was in her parked vehicle, prosecutors alleged.

Quininchetta discarded the weapon and ammunition and returned home via rideshare service, according to the district attorney's office.

Suffolk County police officers responded to the scene and recovered the alleged murder weapon near a pickup truck in a nearby parking lot.

A K-9 unit later found a fanny pack filled with ammunition in a wooded area close to the complex, officials said. Investigators also recovered spent shell casings from the scene.

A forensic examination revealed that Roth sustained multiple gunshot wounds to her torso.

Quininchetta surrendered to authorities about 24 hours later.

On Wednesday, he was arraigned on murder and weapon charges. He pleaded not guilty and was ordered held without bail.

Man and peacemaker stabbed in Grand Central after subway clash

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A 28-year-old man was stabbed and wounded – along with a bystander who intervened – after getting into a clash on a rush-hour subway train pulling into Grand Central Station during Wednesday morning rush hour, police said.

The victim was on a No. 5 train approaching the transit hub when he got into a heated argument with the stabber at about 7:20 a.m.

The two got off the train and continued their argument on the station's mezzanine level. As the pair came to blows and a knife was pulled, a 32-year-old good Samaritan tried to break up the fight, police said.

The victim involved in the fight was stabbed in the abdomen while the bystander was knifed in the upper body and buttocks, cops said. Medics took both victims to Bellevue Hospital in stable condition.

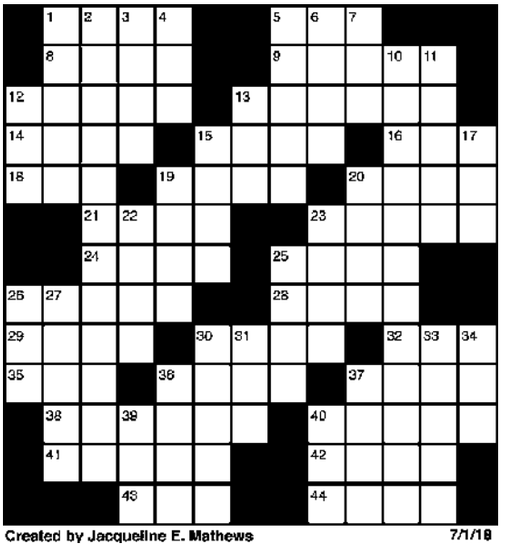

The attacker ran off and has not been caught. Cops were scouring for surveillance footage that could help them identify the suspect.

Your HOROSCOPE

BY TAROT.COM

Aries (March 21-April 19): It isn't currently easy to know what to do with all your emotions. Your headstrong sign could make it difficult to figure out how to express them. What feels like a big deal will blow over shortly, and you won't know why you got worked up in the first place. Avoid overreacting.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Everything is a bit out of proportion at the moment. Your usual routine might lead you down rabbit holes when you least expect them. The resulting adventure should be quite thrilling, if a little lacking in productive or disciplined energy, but that hardly matters. Have fun.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): Generosity is in the air. You're inspired to give your time or resources to a worthy cause. This is all good in theory, but be sure to do your research before you take action; the last thing you want is to find out that the organization in question is less than noble after donating.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): You have endless energy, but knowing how to channel it wisely is another matter entirely. The day could cast a veil over a clear path forward. You may have a dozen different ideas and aspirations, but you'll do better if you just focus on a few of them, rather than trapping yourself with too many choices.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): Your dreams can take you all the way over the rainbow. The day is practically begging you to soar off to parts unknown. This can indeed bring pleasure into your life. Still, be careful about flying so far away that you have no idea where you've wound up or how to get back home again.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Shadows may seem to creep into even the brightest of moments today. You are ready to come together and enjoy life with others, but there could be a layer of fog to everything. Watch out for the temptation to read between the lines; you will soon realize they aren't founded in reality.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): People may mean well, but that doesn't mean they are entirely reliable. You want to accomplish a lot and make a name for yourself, yet it will be difficult to know who you can count on for a boost. Someone may promise you the stars, but it is recommended you be more self-reliant.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The temptation to leave your usual responsibilities on the back burner will be strong at the moment. You'll be more inspired to search for something new and exciting. Go ahead and explore what is calling to you. The stars might make it easy to miss something important today, so keep your senses alert.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22- Dec. 21): You may feel pulled all over the place in your search for satisfaction. One moment you want to keep your circle small and your actions private, the next, you want to let everyone know what you're about. Look inward to find why you can't keep some things subtle.

Capricorn (Dec. 22- Jan. 19): Positive people who have ideas and opportunities to offer will be coming your way. You'll probably be happy to let them in. Make sure you aren't letting someone take up more space than necessary or giving away more of yourself than is wise for your life in the long run.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Today may fly by like a whirlwind. The cosmos is leaving you feeling like you're in the midst of a tennis match, with the ball bouncing back and forth at the speed of light. Instead of trying to keep your eye on the ball, give yourself permission to sit back and enjoy the show.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): Be wary of throwing your money around. You have every right to enjoy yourself, but it may feel like you need to spend more than usual to make it happen. It will be easy to get caught up in the general excitement, but stick to a budget, or you could regret your actions when the fun parade finally moves on.

Yanks realize only bats have to do the talking

Asked if the Yankees had any sort of postgame meeting after their lineup's scoreless streak reached 29 innings in Tuesday's 4-0 loss to the Angels, J.C. Escarra worried he had missed an important gathering.

If a meeting had taken place, no one invited the backup catcher, he told the Daily News. But Escarra had nothing to fear, as multiple Yankees said nothing resembling a meeting occurred after Tuesday's contest.

"It wasn't like that," Cody Bellinger told The News before Wednesday's game. "It was just postgame chatter. It was like, 'What do you got? Blah, blah, blah.' We were just chatting. No, it wasn't closed-door."

Added Jasson Domínguez: "We were just here in the clubhouse. We were just talking, just chatting. Nothing out of the normal. Just reminding the guys to stay positive."

YES insider BY GARY PHILLIPS

Following Tuesday's game, a report suggested that the Yankees discussed their offensive woes in a players-only meeting.

"Our guys talk all the time and get together in different formats," Aaron Boone said. But asked if a closed-door meeting took place, the manager simply replied, "No."

That said, the Yankees certainly know their offense needs to turn a corner.

Tuesday marked the lineup's third consecutive shutout and the sixth straight game in which the team didn't offer its starting pitcher any run support. Boone and Bellinger acknowledged that guys were pressing in Tuesday's game.

Bellinger mentioned some "good talks" between players following the game, but the only meeting he referenced was the Yankees' daily pregame hitters' meeting.

"It's been a fight," Bellinger said. "Obviously, we're not getting the job done with runners in scoring position. We're not getting a lot of baserunners. We're not causing traffic. So we gotta keep going and wake up tomorrow.

"We gotta get going."

Meanwhile, James Rowson said he wasn't concerned. While the Yankees have been in a slump, the hitting coach likes the way the Bombers have been "staying the course" that has made them one of the top-producing offenses in baseball.

Rowson expects that to remain the case, though he understands why fans have been angsty.

"I don't really feel like there's any major red flags in my mind in terms of what they're doing," Rowson said, adding there's been some bad luck and hard-hit balls but not enough hits strung together. "There's no worry from my side. I don't feel any panic or worry from our guys."

Boone, meanwhile, tried to keep the sample size in perspective while recognizing the Yankees' sorry stretch.

"This is a handful of days and a week of a long, long season," Boone said. "It doesn't mean you don't dig into what's going on. A lot of the underlying things are there that suggest we're the same group we've been all year, which is an outstanding offense."

RICE PLATE

Boone said Ben Rice was going to get his first big-league start behind the plate soon. That night came Wednesday with Ryan Yarbrough starting against the Angels.

"Just felt like it was time," Boone said, adding matchups played a part.

The skipper also said he "probably" won't have Rice catch back-to-back games, not that the Yankees need him to with Escarra and Austin Wells around.

BRUBAKER BACK IN BIGS

As was somewhat expected, the Yankees added JT Brubaker to their bullpen on Wednesday after optioning Scott Effross the night before. Brubaker, acquired from the Pirates last March, was on a rehab assignment, as he suffered three broken ribs in spring training trying to avoid a comebacker. He hasn't pitched in the majors since 2022 due to Tommy John surgery and an oblique injury.

Earlier this week, Brubaker said he feels like he did pre-surgery. With the 31-year-old nearing his Yankees debut, he also said he never lost hope that he'd make it back to the majors.

"Just the love for the game, the competitive edge," Brubaker said of what's kept him going. "I guess it's like an addiction. The adrenaline rush is a drug."

LUIS LIVE

Boone said Luis Gil is scheduled to throw live batting practice on Saturday at Yankee Stadium. The 2024 American League Rookie of the Year suffered a lat injury in spring training.

AT LEAST THEY SCORED!

After 30 innings, Yanks get a run, still fall to Angels

Jazz Chisholm ends Yankees' scoreless streak with second-inning home run, but they still drop sixth straight game Wednesday at Stadium. GETTY

BY GARY PHILLIPS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

With the Yankee offense taking a 29-inning scoreless streak into Wednesday's game against the Angels, James Rowson understood the questioning. He understood the concern. And he understood the frustration.

But the hitting coach projected confidence that the Bombers' drought would end.

"I expect this to pass over," Rowson said before a 3-2 Yankees loss. He was technically correct, but the club's sixth defeat in a row hardly came off as triumphant for the offense.

While the Yankees continued to fall short in the scoring department, an Anthony Volpe error in the eighth inning gave the Angels their decisive run.

Tim Hill had just inherited a one-out, bases-loaded jam from Fernando Cruz, but the side-winding lefty induced a groundball from Jo Adell. Unfortunately for the Yankees, Volpe booted the ball before throwing it away in an attempt to get an out at second base.

The bottom of the inning then saw Trent Grisham fail to get a bunt down with two on and nobody out before swinging and popping up near home plate on a 2-1 count. Aaron Judge then flew out before Cody Bellinger ended the threat with a popup before the Yankees failed to capitalize on an inning-opening Angels error in the ninth.

Earlier, the Yankees did prove Rowson right as Jazz Chisholm Jr. broke their scoreless streak at 30.1 innings in the second frame with a sky-high, second-deck, solo homer off Jack Kochanowicz.

Chisholm's shot just barely stayed fair, ending a stretch that had led to the Yankees being shut out in three consecutive games prior to Wednesday. Their nightmare over, the Yankees mobbed Chisholm in the dugout after he became the team's first player to cross home plate since Saturday.

Chisholm's 10th home run of the season tied the game, 1-1, after Nolan Schanuel hit his own second-deck dinger in the first inning. Cody Bellinger, who said the Yankees needed to "wake up" after Tuesday's 4-0 loss, hit a solo home run in the fourth inning. That gave the pinstripers their first lead since their 1-0 win over the Royals last Thursday.

ANGELS	3
YANKEES	2

The edge was short-lived, as Adell added to the barrage of bases-empty blasts when he crushed Ryan Yarbrough's first pitch of the fifth into the visiting bullpen at the Stadium.

Yarbrough totaled 5.1 innings, five hits, two earned runs, one walk, three strikeouts and 69 pitches. While the Yankees didn't score much on his watch, they had gone six straight games without offering their starters run support.

Kochanowicz, meanwhile, only allowed two hits – the homers – walked three and struck out eight over 5.1 innings. He entered the game with a 5.53 ERA, the highest of any qualified starter.

With the middling Angels having already won the series, the Yankees will try to avoid a sweep in their own building today.

Carlos Rodón will start the matinée for the Yanks. He'll be opposed by fellow left-hander Tyler Anderson.

Lose fifth straight as Braves' Sale comes within one out of tossing complete game

BY ABBEY MASTRACCO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

ATLANTA – The best pitching staff in baseball is suddenly in trouble.

After losing two starters to injuries within less than a week, the Mets turned to right-hander Paul Blackburn on Wednesday night against the Atlanta Braves. The results weren't great in a 5-0 loss at Truist Park, but the blame can't be solely on Blackburn.

BRAVES	5
METS	0

The loss extended their losing streak to a season-high five games and cost them a series win over a key divisional opponent. They weren't exactly sloppy, but they also weren't sharp.

Left-hander Chris Sale, the 2024 NL Cy Young Award winner came one out shy of tossing a complete game shutout. The Braves crowd booed as manager Brian Snitker came out to get his pitcher after a single by Brandon Nimmo with two outs in the ninth, bringing in closer Raisel Iglesias. Sale (5-4) scattered five hits, all singles, and walked one, limiting hard contact and striking out seven.

He pitched like a Cy Young Award winner, but some of the Mets' at-bats weren't especially competitive.

Starling Marte managed two hits, Tyrone Taylor and Jeff McNeil each managed one. Sale was extremely efficient with his pitches, something the Mets couldn't say themselves.

Ronald Acuña Jr. teed off on the first pitch he saw from Blackburn in the bottom of the first. Blackburn then put the next two on base, with a groundball out advancing them to second and third.

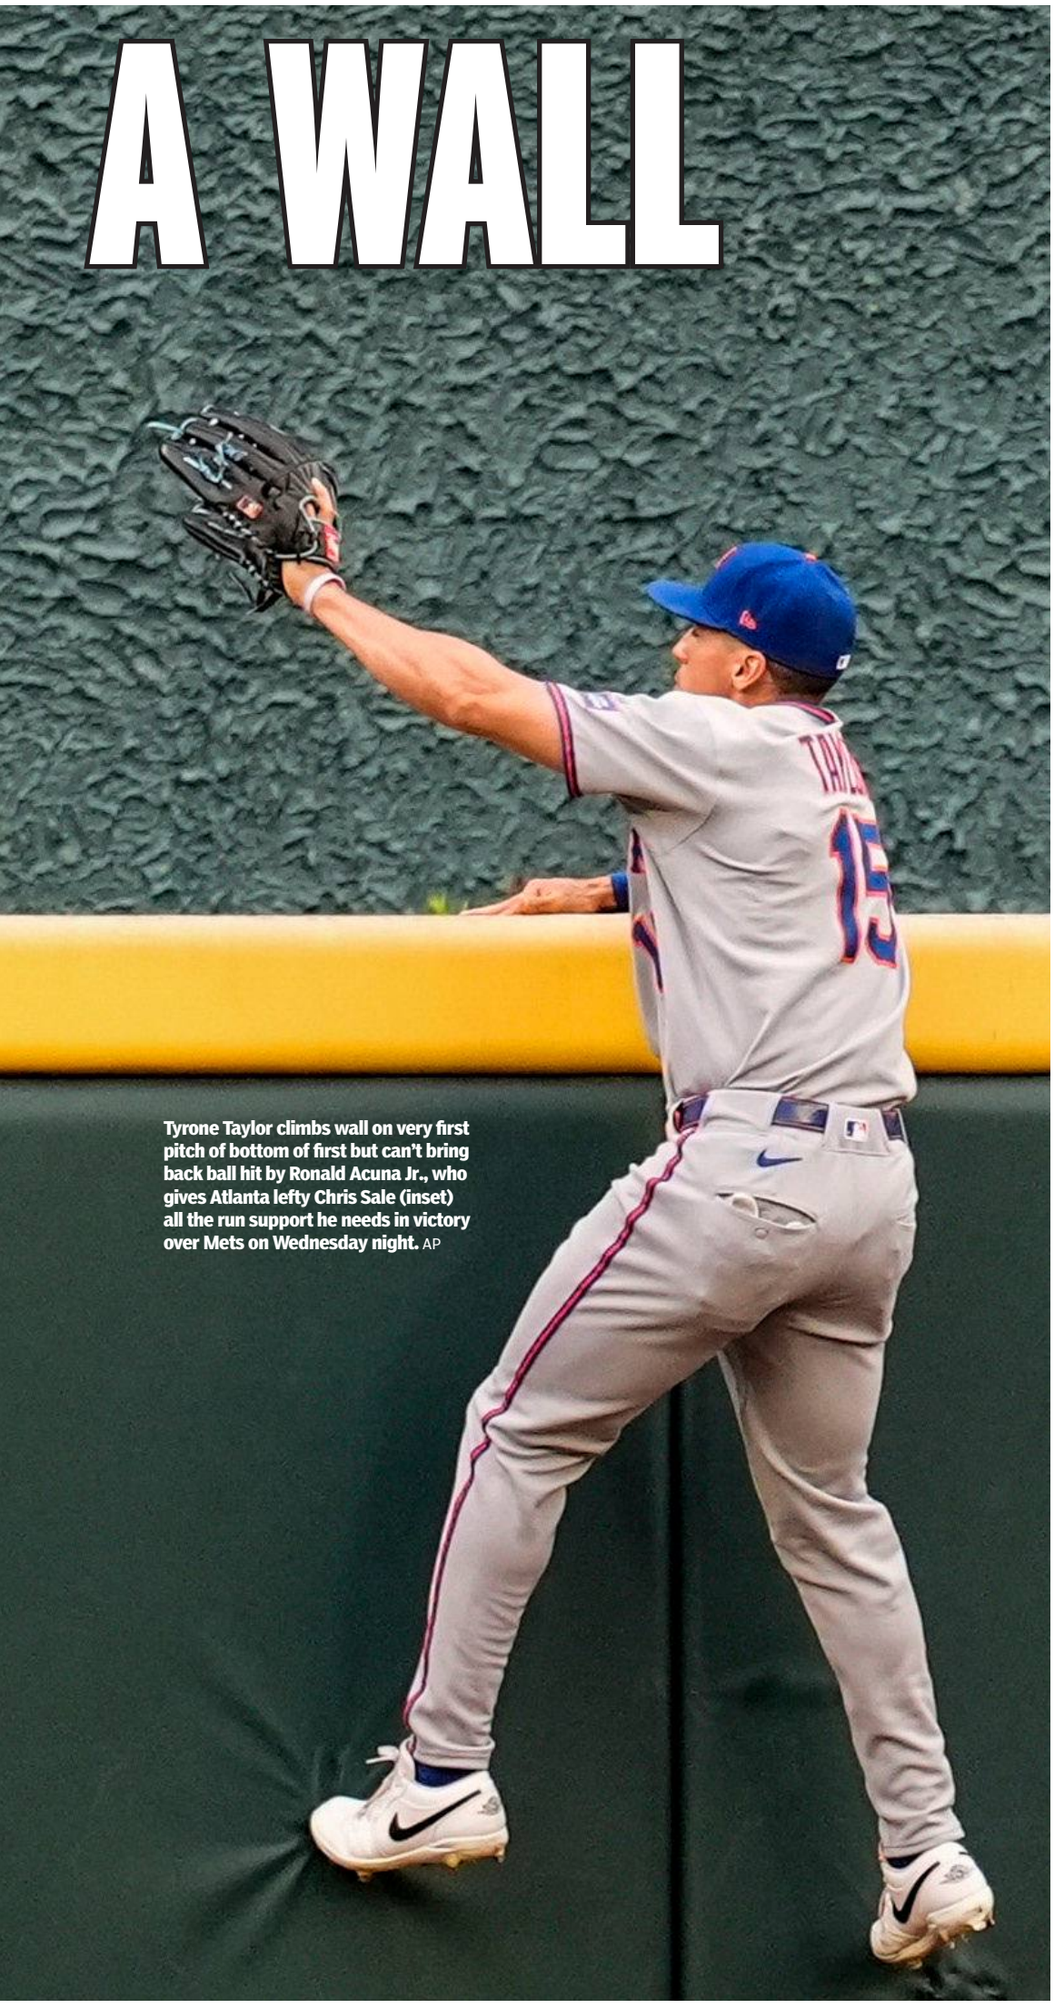

Alex Verdugo, the runner on third, scored when catcher Luis Torrens failed to block a ball in the dirt and tried to field it using his mask. Home plate umpire Edwin Jimenez immediately ruled it an error, sending Verdugo home and Austin Riley to third, where he was able to score on Marcell Ozuna's fly ball to center field.

The Mets were down 3-0 early, and the Braves (33-39) tacked on another run in the fourth after Blackburn exited. Jose Butto couldn't hold the inherited runner on with two outs, scoring one on a wild pitch.

After making a start earlier this month against the Los Angeles Dodgers, Blackburn then pitched out of the bullpen, which is where the struggles began. He was charged with four runs (three earned) on four hits, walked two and struck out two over only 3 ⅔ innings in the loss (0-1).

Since shutting out the Dodgers over five innings, Blackburn has allowed 10 earned runs over his last three games (8.0 innings). The Mets (45-29) raced to the top of the NL East largely because of pitching, but pitching has largely doomed them over the last five games.

Tyrone Taylor climbs wall on very first pitch of bottom of first but can't bring back ball hit by Ronald Acuna Jr., who gives Atlanta lefty Chris Sale (inset) all the run support he needs in victory over Mets on Wednesday night. AP

Mendoza yet to make decision on Friday arm

ATLANTA – The Mets have yet to make a decision about Friday night's pitcher, but they have decided that it will not be a bullpen game.

Manager Carlos Mendoza confirmed this Wednesday at Truist Park, ahead of the second game of a three-game set against the Atlanta Braves. Considering the Mets are in a stretch of 13 straight games without an off-day, it's the logical decision. This gives Mendoza the ability to use his bullpen the way he sees fit against the Braves. He can manage without having to worry about protecting certain arms to guarantee their availability for one or more innings Friday in Philadelphia.

"We're not going to go (with a) bullpen day," Mendoza said. "We want someone that is going to come in and can provide some lengths from pitches, and then we'll go from there."

This doesn't rule out using an opener, but this isn't something the Mets typically like to employ for a full nine-inning game. The team has used them to play games resumed in the middle innings, or even in the postseason when they're subjected to roster limitations, but in the regular season, it's not how the Mets like to operate.

insider

By ABBEY MASTRACCO

Mendoza said they have not talked about an opener. The skipper expects to have a decision made Thursday.

The Mets need a starter to take right-hander Tylor Megill's next turn through the rotation after placing Megill on the 15-day injured list at the start of their two-city NL East trip. Megill is expected to be out for more than a month with a right elbow strain, and with Frankie Montas making his final rehab start Wednesday, the right-hander will be unavailable.

Mendoza said the Mets will have a "decision" to make on Montas, but didn't get into specifics about what that decision is. There had been some debate as to whether or not they should use Montas out of the bullpen, but that was before Megill was injured and the Mets still had five starters.

Now, down to only four, they'll need a spot start for Friday and they'll need Montas back in the rotation the next turn.

"He's got to be 100 percent healthy, which – knock on wood – keeps saying he's fine, so we've just got to wait and get through today," Mendoza said. "He comes back tomorrow, and the next day we have a decision."

MISSED CONNECTIONS

Right-hander Justin Garza encountered a familiar face when he was traded to the Mets from the San Francisco Giants earlier this month, center fielder Tyrone Taylor. The two met years ago on a recruiting visit to Cal State Fullerton in high school. Garza and Taylor were set to play with one another for the once-historic powerhouse college program in Orange County. They had recruiting visits and informational visits at the same time as part of the same freshman class, but only the pitcher would end up playing for the Titans.

Taylor, a second-round draft pick by the Milwaukee Brewers in 2012, opted against going to Fullerton and went straight to the minor leagues. Garza, meanwhile, reached the College World Series with the Titans in 2015 for the 17th time in program history.

TRAINER'S ROOM

Brett Baty was out of the lineup once again Wednesday with groin soreness. While he told Mendoza he felt "better," the manager was unsure if he would be available off the bench before the game. The second/third baseman was not available Tuesday night to pinch-hit.

Third baseman Mark Vientos (hamstring strain) went 0-for-4 as the DH in his first rehab game Tuesday night with Triple-A Syracuse. He's scheduled to play third base Wednesday. The Mets want to see him play back-to-back games at third base before activating him off the injured list.

Daboll encouraged by Giants, but says team must 'hit the ground running' as camp nears

ny insider

BY PAT LEONARD

Brian Daboll told the Giants' players before their final minicamp practice that their spring progress was encouraging given what is coming around the bend.

"Training camp will be here in 34 days," Daboll said. "So we have to hit the ground running."

Right tackle Jermaine Eluemunor, who fought Kayvon Thibodeaux a couple weeks ago, said this spring's intensity in the offensive and defensive line battles was high because players are determined to change the team's fate.

"I think just people are just sick and tired of not being good," he said. "And it all starts in the trenches. O-line and D-line is where games are really won."

So the tone has been set: July and August will be filled with urgent, physical and consequential work focused on coming out of the gate firing against Washington in Week 1.

"It'll be fun," Eluemunor said. "It'll be very fun. I'm excited for it."

It will be interesting to see how the team comes together under that mandate given the new variables in Daboll's operation and this spring's developments.

Offensive coordinator Mike Kafka, for example, looks like he will take over play calling on offense. He wore the headset all spring. Daboll, meanwhile, has been involved heavily with the defense.

Daboll was conversing at length with defensive coordinator Shane Bowen during Wednesday's practice, overseeing an individual defensive backs drill and reviewing their plan for the upcoming 7-on-7 periods.

Malik Nabers did not practice all spring due to a toe injury that Daboll still has not adequately explained. So while Russell Wilson has taken control of the Giants' offense, he has yet to incorporate the team's best skill player.

On Wednesday, Wilson's 7-on-7 red zone reps going toward the end zone went like this: a pass breakup by Micah McFadden, an overthrow incompletion toward Wan'Dale Robinson, a Tyrone Tracy Jr. drop and a touchdown pass to Dalen Cambre after holding the ball for a long while.

Dexter Lawrence did not participate in team drills this spring. Rookie D-lineman Darius Alexander didn't practice at all. And Bobby Okereke wasn't on the field at all at mandatory minicamp.

So while rookie No. 3 overall pick Abdul Carter looks like a versatile and explosive pass rush weapon, this new Giants defense still has to demonstrate how it plans to stop the run.

In the secondary, at least, Dane Belton and Raheem Layne both intercepted rookie quarterback Jaxson Dart to close a strong spring for the reserve safeties.

For all the talk about urgency, too, the Giants' offensive and defensive lines did not face each other at all during Wednesday's light final practice of minicamp.

Wilson did articulate a vision for what the Giants want to be.

"I think our identity wants to be a tough-nosed football team," he said Tuesday, "a team that is explosive obviously in the passing game and the running game, the ability to diversify the football, the ability to score a lot of points obviously, but also know how to win the game when it's clutch time."

But the Giants have a ton of work ahead of them. Wednesday was a good reminder that they should not be fooled by this month-long break – they have less time than one might realize to put this together before the games begin to count.

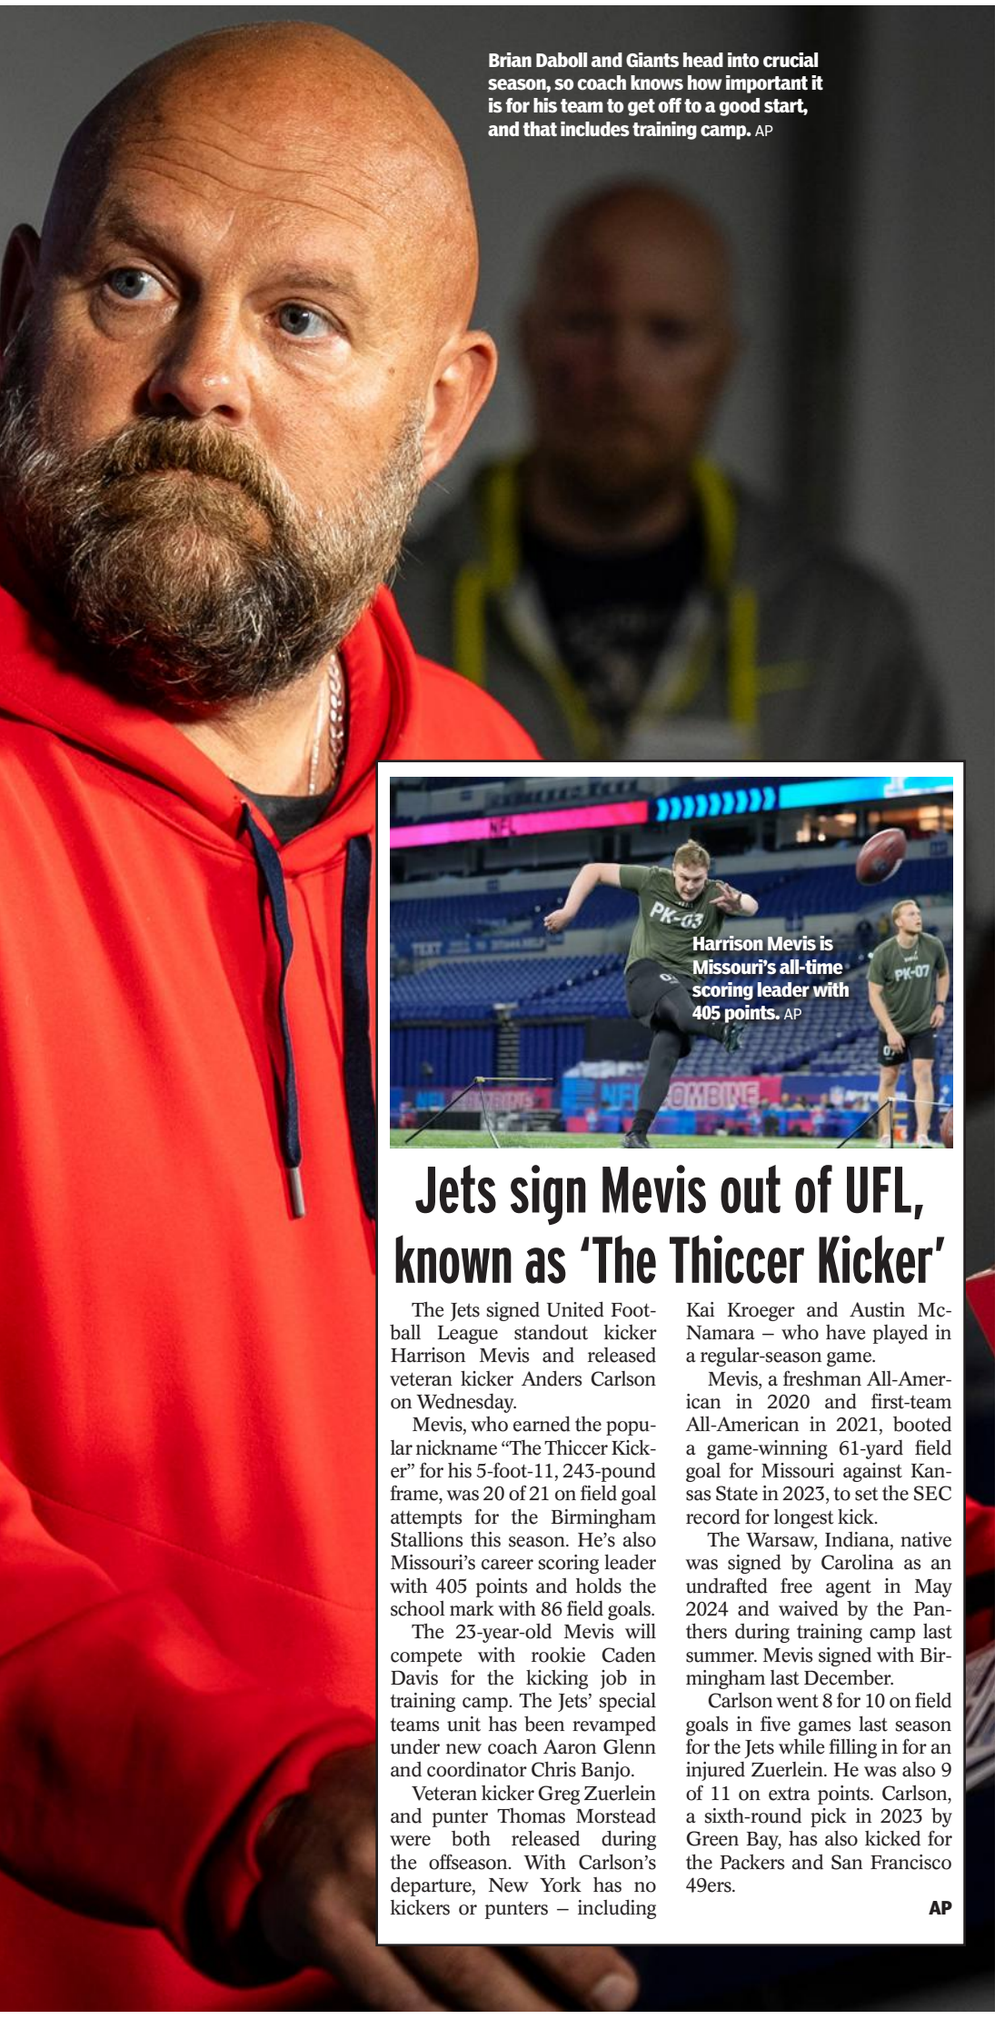

UNDER WRAPS

Malik Nabers, Andrew Thomas and Dexter Lawrence did not conduct an interview with the New York media all spring. Lawrence has not done a local interview since his Nov. 28 injury at Dallas.

All three players were either on the field or in the building during open spring practices while rehabbing injuries or participating in walk-throughs, drills or workouts. But none of them were made available to the local media.

ABSENTEES

The following players did not practice Wednesday: Nabers, Thomas, Alexander, Okereke, WRs Jalin Hyatt and Zach Pascal, RBs Cam Skattebo and Eric Gray, LB Demetrius Flannigan-Fowles, S Anthony Johnson Jr., edge Victor Dimukeje (torn pec)… Skattebo reportedly agreed to terms on his rookie contract after barely practicing all spring… Kicker Jude McAtamney looked like he was being monitored by training staff while kicking field goals outside the indoor practice bubble … Daboll estimated the Giants will kick off training camp on July 22 in East Rutherford, N.J. They'll have a home-and-home joint practice week with the Jets and three preseason games before entering the regular season.

Brian Daboll and Giants head into crucial season, so coach knows how important it is for his team to get off to a good start, and that includes training camp. AP

Jets sign Mevis out of UFL, known as 'The Thiccer Kicker'

The Jets signed United Football League standout kicker Harrison Mevis and released veteran kicker Anders Carlson on Wednesday.

Mevis, who earned the popular nickname "The Thiccer Kicker" for his 5-foot-11, 243-pound frame, was 20 of 21 on field goal attempts for the Birmingham Stallions this season. He's also Missouri's career scoring leader with 405 points and holds the school mark with 86 field goals.

The 23-year-old Mevis will compete with rookie Caden Davis for the kicking job in training camp. The Jets' special teams unit has been revamped under new coach Aaron Glenn and coordinator Chris Banjo.

Veteran kicker Greg Zuerlein and punter Thomas Morstead were both released during the offseason. With Carlson's departure, New York has no kickers or punters – including Kai Kroeger and Austin McNamara – who have played in a regular-season game.

Mevis, a freshman All-American in 2020 and first-team All-American in 2021, booted a game-winning 61-yard field goal for Missouri against Kansas State in 2023, to set the SEC record for longest kick.

The Warsaw, Indiana, native was signed by Carolina as an undrafted free agent in May 2024 and waived by the Panthers during training camp last summer. Mevis signed with Birmingham last December.

Carlson went 8 for 10 on field goals in five games last season for the Jets while filling in for an injured Zuerlein. He was also 9 of 11 on extra points. Carlson, a sixth-round pick in 2023 by Green Bay, has also kicked for the Packers and San Francisco 49ers.

Kelce says decision to return was easy, could be back in '26

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Travis Kelce said the decision to return for his 13th season with the Kansas City Chiefs wasn't much of a decision at all.

In fact, the four-time All-Pro tight end indicated Wednesday that No. 14 isn't out of the question.

"I got one year on this contract, I know that. And we'll try to figure out something for next year," Kelce said after the second day of the Chiefs' mandatory three-day minicamp, which was moved partially indoors because of lightning in the area.

"The Chiefs organization knows how much I love them. I can't see myself playing anywhere else," Kelce continued. "We'll deal with (2026) down the road, when the time is right. But right now, I'm focused on winning a championship this year."

The question of whether the 35-year-old would hang up his cleats was among the biggest to follow the Chiefs' lopsided loss to the Eagles in the Super Bowl. While he still played at a high level last season, Kelce's production dipped noticeably – 97 catches for 823 yards and just three touchdowns for a team that won 15 regular-season games.

Throw in Kelce's myriad business interests, including a successful media career thanks in part to his popular podcast, and a long-term relationship with pop superstar Taylor Swift, and it made sense to wonder how much longer he would play.

Yet it only took a matter of weeks for Kelce to decide to chase another championship.

Part of it was the way last season's run had ended. Kelce had a throwback game in the divisional round against Houston with seven catches for 117 yards, but he only had four for 39 in the 40-22 loss to the Eagles in the Super Bowl.

"Really didn't feel like it was my last game. Just felt like I had a lot more to prove," he said. "Yeah, you want to let the emotions die down; you don't want to make a decision off initial emotions. Once they died down, I felt like I still had that fire in my chest to come in and keep building and chase another Super Bowl, man."

The Chiefs made it to the Super Bowl despite playing most of the season without their top two wide receivers, Rashee Rice and Marquise Brown, both of whom are fully healthy now after their injuries. They also made it despite massive issues at left tackle, which the Chiefs hope to have solved by drafting Ohio State standout Josh Simmons in the first round.

Now, they have a motivated – and noticeably slimmer – Kelce back at tight end. There were reports that he had dropped about 25 pounds since the end of last season, though Kelce insisted that may have been an exaggeration.

"Don't believe all you read on the internet, guys. I'm down some weight from the end of last season – last year – but each year is different, man. You have to rebuild it," he said. "This year, I had some time to really focus on some form running and some things early in the offseason that I didn't have time for last year. Certainly feeling good and I think it'll pay off."

Patrick Mahomes certainly hopes so. After leading one of the NFL's most productive offenses early in his career, Mahomes has struggled to get the Chiefs on track the past couple of seasons, largely because of injuries and offensive line trouble.

Still, the Chiefs' star quarterback said he never put any pressure on Kelce to return for another season.

"I think you have in the back of your mind, for anybody that's played a lot of seasons, there's always the chance if they're going to come back and put in the work," Mahomes said. "For him, I think it was just recalibrating, seeing where he was at, and from what I've seen, he's ready to go. He's put in the work this offseason and he's excited to make another run at it."

The Chiefs wrap up their three-day minicamp on Thursday, then break for about a month, before reuniting at Missouri Western State University for training camp. And while the thought of spending a few weeks living in college dorm rooms probably doesn't sound very enticing to Kelce, the prospect of starting another championship run there clearly drives him.

"I love this game. It's still my childhood dream," Kelce said. "When I really thought about it this offseason, I got back to wanting to focus on this game and getting the most out of this game as I can, while I'm still putting on the cleats and pads. This will always be No. 1 in terms of my business world and career path."

Pacers, OKC showing Knicks how to build championship roster

If the Knicks front office is watching the NBA Finals – and they are – they're seeing more than just two teams chasing a title. They're seeing the new blueprint.

The Pacers and Thunder aren't just deep, young, and fearless – they're built for the long haul, structured to survive the wear and tear of 82 games plus 16 playoff wins. And as the Knicks wade through their most consequential offseason of the 21st century, those two franchises offer a clear model for sustained contention.

Leon Rose and his team face dual pressure points. They need to find a coach who can elevate a group fresh off its second straight 50-win season and a trip to the Eastern Conference Finals. And they need to retool the roster around that coach – not just for the grind ahead, but for the kind of longevity it takes to hoist the Larry O'Brien trophy.

KRISTIAN WINFIELD

Both areas fell short last year.

Tom Thibodeau didn't trust his bench until it was too late. The front office, in turn, didn't give him enough second-unit scoring, size, or a true backup point guard behind Jalen Brunson. The result? A worn-down team that ran out of gas in a track meet against the Pacers.

Yes, winning 50 games in back-to-back seasons is an achievement. The Knicks could make it three in a row next year – something they haven't done since 1995. But 50 wins don't raise banners – they raise celebratory street signs. And No. 1 seeds don't make history. Champions do.

If the Knicks want to keep pace with the league's rising contenders, they need to replicate the foresight and flexibility fueling Indiana and OKC

Andrew Nembhard put it plainly.

A year after the Pacers wore the Knicks down in the second round, they did it again – this time in the conference finals – to punch their ticket to the championship round. The Knicks had the bigger names: All-Star starters, elite 3-and-D wings, rim protection, and defensive playmaking. But Indiana won in two areas: bench and coaching.

The Pacers built smart. They drafted well, swung on Tyrese Haliburton and Pascal Siakam, and hired a coach who stretched his rotation in the regular season so his reserves could survive – even thrive – under playoff pressure.

"Depth is key at this point," Nembhard said on June 18 at NBA Finals media day. "A fresh guy is better than a guy that's maybe a better guy that's a little bit tired."

Case in point: Nembhard was the 31st pick in 2022. Ben Sheppard went 26th in 2023. Johnny Furphy, this year's No. 35 pick, is already on standby for Haliburton (hamstring). T.J. McConnell? Undrafted in 2015. All have played real minutes in real moments.

And it's not just Indiana. Look at OKC.

Isaiah Joe was cut by the Sixers. Now he's a core bench piece for the Thunder – re-signed to a four-year deal after OKC built him into what Philly couldn't. Aaron Wiggins was the 55th pick in 2021. He averaged a career-high 12 points on 49/39 splits and has five double-digit playoff games. He dropped 19 off the bench in a January win over the Knicks.

Then there's Lu Dort. Undrafted. Now a DPOY candidate who shoots nearly 40% from three and guards 1-through-5 like it's his birthright.

This is the value of coaches like Rick Carlisle and Mark Daigneault, who develop role players – and don't just ride stars.

And that's what the next Knicks coach must bring. Because after trading for Karl-Anthony Towns and Mikal Bridges, the Knicks no longer have draft capital to spare. Nor do they have cap flexibility to chase upgrades in free agency.

The financial reality is sobering: Towns ($53M), Anunoby ($39.6M), Brunson ($34.9M), Bridges ($24.9M), Josh Hart ($19.5M), Mitchell Robinson ($13M). That's $185M tied up in six players, before factoring in Miles McBride, Pacome Dadiet, Tyler Kolek, and the player options on P.J. Tucker and Ariel Hukporti. Altogether, the projected payroll hovers near $200M – just $8.3M below the second apron.

So how can the Knicks improve the roster? They don't own their own first (traded for Bridges) or second-round (rescinded for tampering: Brunson) picks in the 2025 draft, but they do control pick No. 50 via Memphis by way of OKC. They don't have cap space to sign free agents, but they can exceed the cap using the mid-level exception ($5.65M) or a veteran's minimum contract. They can also re-sign their own free agents: Delon Wright, Landry Shamet, Kevin McCullar Jr., MarJon Beauchamp, and Anton Watson all fall into that category.

Wright and Shamet could be low-cost, high-upside returns for a coach willing to trust his bench. McCullar and Beauchamp could be intriguing adds – if the Knicks are serious about developing and empowering the young players at the end of the bench.

Even bringing just those four players back would push the Knicks over the second apron, which is why any external improvement will require creative maneuvering. A Hart salary dump could clear space, but at what cost to the locker room? Packaging Anunoby's max deal for multiple rotation players is another option – but his defensive impact is undeniable. Moving Towns or Brunson alters the team's identity. And if Towns stays, the Knicks need Robinson. Without him, the defense collapses.

Which is why all eyes are on Indiana and OKC – two teams that built contenders by trusting coaches who trust their benches.

Because one day, it might be Dadiet, Kolek, Hukporti, McCullar, or even unnamed pick No. 50 who swings a playoff game. Or a series. Or a championship.

And whoever the Knicks hire to fill Thibodeau's shoes needs to be ready to bring that player to life.

IT MIGHT GET LOUD

Thunder looking to storm through Indy tonight on way to NBA championship

Alex Caruso and Thunder look to eliminate Pacers tonight and give Oklahoma City its first championship. AP

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The odds are overwhelmingly in the Thunder's favor.

In the previous 31 NBA Finals in which the series was tied, 2-2, the team that won Game 5 went on to win the championship in 74% of them.

And in the previous 49 Finals to go at least six games, the team that went up 3-2 won the title 82% of the time.

Both apply to OKC, whose 120-109 victory over the Pacers in Game 5 has it on the precipice of its first championship since the team moved to Oklahoma City some 17 years ago.

But the Thunder won't celebrate just yet.

"We have one more game to win," said Thunder point guard Shai Gilgeous-Alexander, the NBA's MVP.

Oklahoma City looks to clinch the crown in tonight's Game 6 at Gainbridge Fieldhouse in Indianapolis.

It will be the first elimination game of the postseason for the Pacers, who are 7-3 at home in the playoffs and 1-1 there in the Finals.

Working against the Pacers is a right calf injury for star point guard Tyrese Haliburton, who managed only four points on 0-of-6 shooting in Game 5 at Oklahoma City's Paycom Center.

Haliburton said he plans to play in Game 6.

"Our backs are against the wall," Haliburton said, adding, "There shouldn't even be a conversation about Game 7 or anything like that," Haliburton said. "This is the game, so everybody's got to be prepared. It starts with me, and we've all got to be better."

After falling behind 2-1 in the series, the top-seeded Thunder won back-to-back games, dealing the fourth-seeded Pacers their first consecutive losses since March.

In Game 5, the Thunder's NBA-best defense delivered perhaps its most dominant showing of these Finals, forcing 23 turnovers that led to 32 points.

Indiana committed eight turnovers in the fourth quarter – and at one point turned the ball over on four consecutive possessions – as Oklahoma City iced the victory.

"We've got to try to stay there for as long as we can," Gilgeous-Alexander said of the Thunder's emphatic finish. "It's a lot easier said than done, playing against a really good basketball team, but we've got to try to stay in that space and that momentum on both ends of the floor for longer periods of time if we want to hoist this thing."

The Thunder led by as many as 16 points in the second half of Game 5, only for Indiana to close the gap to two points with under nine minutes left in the fourth quarter.

It was a scene reminiscent of Game 1, when the never-say-die Pacers rallied back from a 15-point fourth-quarter deficit to win, 111-110, behind a Haliburton jumper with 0.3 seconds remaining.

But the Thunder weathered the Pacers' furious comeback bid on Monday, with Jalen Williams scoring 11 of his game-high 40 points in the fourth.

"That was honestly the same exact game as Game 1," Williams said. "Learning through these Finals, that's what makes a team good."

The Pacers have demonstrated their resiliency throughout this postseason, too, as they also rattled off historic comebacks against the Bucks, Cavaliers and Knicks in the prior rounds.

They'll need to punch back again tonight to force a winner-take-all Game 7 in Oklahoma City.

"We've had our backs against the wall many different times over the last two years, had to figure out different ways to win," Haliburton said. "The way that this year has gone, nobody said this was going to be sweet."

BUSS FAMILY TO SELL LAKERS

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Buss family has agreed to sell the controlling stake of the Lakers to TWG Global CEO Mark Walter, doing so with a franchise valuation of $10 billion – the highest ever for a professional sports franchise, a person with knowledge of the agreement said Wednesday.

As part of the deal, Jeanie Buss – whose family has held control of the Lakers since her father bought the team in 1979 – intends to remain as team governor, said the person, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because neither side immediately announced details.

It is not clear how much more of the Lakers Walter is acquiring. He was part of a group that bought 27% of the Lakers in 2021. Jeanie Buss will still own at least 15% of the Lakers once this transaction is completed; by NBA rule, a governor must have at least that much of an ownership stake.

Walter and TWG Global already held controlling interest in the Dodgers, Premier League club Chelsea, the Professional Women's Hockey League, and – through TWG Motorsports – owns several auto racing teams including Cadillac Formula 1.

Dodgers manager Dave Roberts said news of the sale to Walter marks "a very exciting day for the Lakers, for the city of Los Angeles."

"He's very competitive and he's going to do everything he can to produce a championship-caliber team every single year and make sure the city feels proud about the Lakers and the legacy that they've already built with the Buss family," Roberts said.

"Mark Walter is the best choice and will be the best caretaker of the Laker brand," Magic Johnson, a business partner of Walter's and someone extremely close to Jeanie Buss, posted on social media. "The proof is in the pudding on what he's been able to accomplish with the LA Dodgers. Mark has been nothing short of a winner notching 2 World Series and 11 NL West divisional titles in the last 12 years!"

Jeanie Buss and family are selling controlling stake in Lakers, but she will remain team governor. GETTY

Johnson said he is certain Jeanie Buss made the deal only after being convinced that Walter will do right by the Lakers.

"Laker fans should be (ecstatic)," Johnson said. "A few things I can tell you about Mark – he is driven by winning, excellence, and doing everything the right way. AND he will put in the resources needed to win! I can understand why Jeanie sold the team to Mark Walter because they are just alike – they are competitive people, have big hearts, love to give back, and both prefer to be behind the scenes. This makes all the sense in the world."

Walter is intensely private in shunning the spotlight. He is CEO of the financial services firm Guggenheim Partners, which is estimated to have more than $325 billion in assets. Johnson is among Guggenheim's investors.

The agreement for the sale of the Lakers comes three months after Bill Chisholm agreed to buy the Celtics with an initial valuation of $6.1 billion – which was going to be a record, topping the previous mark of $6.05 billion sale for the NFL's Commanders. The Celtics' sale is not yet finalized, pending final approval by the NBA's board of governors. That board is scheduled to meet in Las Vegas next month.

And now, the Lakers are sold with a valuation of $10 billion – not just a record, but a total smashing of the previous mark.

The Lakers have been in the control of the Buss family for 46 years, the longest of any current NBA franchise. Herb Simon bought the Pacers – currently in the NBA Finals – in 1983, the second-longest current ownership of an NBA club.

Jerry Buss bought the Lakers for $67.5 million and made it to the NBA Finals 16 times out of his 34 seasons leading the club, winning 10 championships in that span. When he died in 2013, ownership of the Lakers went into a trust controlled by Buss' six children.

Stanley Cup taking a beating already

The Stanley Cup is a little banged up, thanks to the Panthers' celebration of back-to-back titles.

The bowl of the famous trophy is cracked and the bottom is dented. Not for the first time and likely not the last.

The Panthers won their second consecutive championship on home ice Tuesday night, beating Edmonton in six games. The team, following decades of tradition, partied with the Cup into the wee hours and kept the revelry going in Fort Lauderdale well into Wednesday afternoon.

A spokesperson for the Hockey Hall of Fame said the keepers of the Cup are taking the appropriate steps and plan to have it repaired by the celebration parade on Sunday. Made of silver and a nickel alloy, the 37-pound Cup is relatively malleable.

Damage is nothing new for the 131-year-old silver chalice that has been submerged in pools and the Atlantic Ocean and mishandled by players, coaches and staff for more than a century. Just this decade alone, the Lightning dropped the Cup during a boat parade in 2021 and the Avalanche dented it on the ice.

TWO-YEAR REMPE DEAL

Matt Rempe re-signed with the Rangers on a two-year contract that a person with knowledge of the deal said is worth $1.95 million.

Rempe will count $975,000 against the salary cap for the next two NHL seasons.

Rempe, 22, has played 70 regular-season and playoff games for the Rangers over the past two years, becoming a fan favorite and a popular teammate for his willingness to drop the gloves and fight as well as hitting any opponent he can.

Getting him under contract is the latest move for general manager Chris Drury after trading Chris Kreider to Anaheim earlier this month. The Rangers are hoping to return to the playoffs after missing last season following a trip to the Eastern Conference finals in 2024.

Rempe gives new coach Mike Sullivan a depth forward who the organization believes is working hard to develop and has the potential to improve. A sixth-round pick in 2020, Rempe has five goals and six assists at the NHL level.

familiar with the situation said Wednesday.

Any flagrant foul comes with an automatic fine. The league has fined the Fever's Sophie Cunningham for her role in the on-court melee that occurred after she fouled Jacy Sheldon with 46.1 seconds left. Cunningham received a Flagrant-2 Tuesday night.

There will be no further penalties for on-court actions during the game, the person said. The WNBA doesn't disclose the amount of money players are fined.

The play at the end of the game was the culmination of tensions that had been building throughout.

Mabrey's technical followed a skirmish in the third quarter. Sheldon poked Clark in the eye while defending her. Clark pushed Sheldon away and Mabrey forcefully pushed Clark from behind, knocking the star guard to the ground. Clark and Tina Charles were also assessed technical fouls.

In a pool report, official Ashley Gloss said the contact made by Mabrey didn't rise to the level of an ejection or meet the criteria for a Flagrant-2.

After the contest, both teams said missed calls and poor game management by the officials led to the melee at the end.

Fever coach Stephanie White said "bad officiating" is a league-wide issue and that "everybody (in the WNBA) is getting better, except the officials."

"I started talking to the officials in the first quarter, and we knew this was going to happen," White said. "You could tell it was going to happen. So, they've got to get control of it. They've got to be better."

RAYS TALKING SALE

The Tampa Bay Rays say they are in "exclusive discussions" with a Florida investment group for a potential sale of the team.

The Rays are valued at $1.25 billion, according to Forbes magazine. Stuart Sternberg bought the club for $200 million in 2004.

"The Tampa Bay Rays announced that the team has recently commenced exclusive discussions with a group led by Patrick Zalupski, Bill Cosgrove, Ken Babby and prominent Tampa Bay investors concerning a possible sale of the team," the club said Wednesday, while declining further comment.

The potential sale comes at a precarious time for the Rays and their home ballpark. They are playing this season at the spring training home of the Yankees in Tampa after the roof of Tropicana Field in St. Petersburg was heavily damaged during Hurricane Milton last October.
