Report found that persistent wage disparities are largely the result of "occupational segregation," in which women and people of color are concentrated in job titles that pay less. There has been some narrowing of the gap, however, since previous study.

City staff pay gap persists

Gov't workers of color paid less than white colleagues: study

BY CHRIS SOMMERFELDT
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Black, Asian and Hispanic city government workers continue to be paid less than their white colleagues, a disparity driven by a persistent pattern of low wages for women of color in the municipal ranks, according to a study released by the City Council on Tuesday.

The study reflects salary levels across all municipal positions as of 2021, the latest period for which data are available.

As of 2021, city government employees of color earned $0.84 for every $1 paid in salary to white workers, the study found. Two-thirds of the $0.16 wage gap is due to disparate salaries for female employees of color, while lagging wages for male employees of color account for the remaining one-third, according to the study, which the Council must conduct annually under a law adopted in 2019.

The latest study found that persistent wage gaps are largely the result of "occupational segregation," in which women and people of color are concentrated in job titles that pay less.

The report doesn't show whether disparities have improved since Mayor Adams took office on Jan. 1, 2022.

Still, the latest Council report appears to show some progress on the city government pay equity front as compared with previous years.

As of 2019, Black city employees had made $0.71 on every dollar a white worker received, while Hispanic employees made $0.75 and Asian employees made $0.85 on every dollar earned by a white employee, the Council's 2022 pay equity report found.

Some agencies that have historically lacked racial and gender diversity continue to see a homogeneous workforce, the latest Council report says.

The FDNY proves an especially stark example, with its employees being 62% white and 12% female, the Council reported. The Sanitation Department is just 9% female and 51% white, the study also shows.

Four bills have been introduced in the Council this session seeking to promote diversity in the upper echelons of municipal government. One of those bills, which will be discussed in a Council hearing this week, would establish a municipal counselor position in the Citywide Administrative Services Department that would be responsible for offering career advice to city employees.

"Every member of our diverse workforce should be compensated fairly for their hard work, regardless of race or gender," Council Speaker Adrienne Adams (D-Queens) said in a statement accompanying Tuesday's study.

"Pay equity is not only a matter of racial, gender and economic justice, but also fosters a culture of inclusivity and respect that improves the city's ability to retain its talented workforce."

ALEC BLOWS UP AT HECKLER

For a while, notoriously testy thespian Alec Baldwin ignored woman filming him at a Manhattan coffee shop and repeatedly trying to get him to say, "Free Palestine." Then he snapped and slapped her phone away, vid shows. AFP/GETTY

In vid, Baldwin smacks phone from anti-Israel protester harassing him

BY THOMAS TRACY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Actor Alec Baldwin smacked away a phone belonging to an anti-Israeli protester who cornered him at a Manhattan coffee shop demanding he say "Free Palestine," a recently surfaced video of the exchange shows.

Unshaven and talking on his cell phone, Baldwin, 66, is minding his own business at the coffee shop when the protester starts recording him.

"Alec, can you please say 'Free Palestine' one time?" a woman behind the camera asks him, according to the video.

The "30 Rock" actor ignores the woman, who then begins to heckle him about the fatal shooting on the set of his Western movie "Rust" in 2021.

"Why did you kill that lady?" the woman asked, recalling the death of Halyna Hutchins on the movie set. "You kill that lady and got no jail time?"

Baldwin glares at the woman as he heads to the door. A worker at the coffee shop tries to run interference, but the woman is undeterred.

"I'll leave you alone, I swear!" she says, according to the video. "Just say 'Free Palestine' one time!"

Baldwin opens the door and tries to usher the protester out of the coffee shop first, but she refuses.

The actor asks the worker to call the police as he refuses to parrot her words.

"Say 'Free Palestine'," the woman continues. "F–k Israel. F–k Zionism! Please say it!"

Apparently reaching his limit, Baldwin steps back into the coffee shop, asks a worker for "one quick favor" then shoots out his hand, striking the phone recording him.

The video was posted Monday by "Crackhead Barney & Friends," an "anti-fascist interview show" that supports protests against Israel's actions in Gaza.

"White devil Alec Baldwin attacked me While I was trying to get coffee," the poster wrote.

It was not disclosed when the clash took place.

The NYPD said no criminal complaints were filed about the exchange.

The quick-tempered Baldwin was arrested in 2018 for sucker-punching a man in a fight over a Greenwich Village parking spot.

In 2012, Baldwin was accused of assaulting Daily News photographer Marcus Santos, who said "The Shadow" star punched him in the face outside the city Marriage License Bureau.

Baldwin went ballistic when Santos snapped him outside the Worth St. office after Baldwin and now wife Hilaria Thomas picked up their license in lower Manhattan.

A year later, Baldwin got into a street scuffle with another photographer, pinning him to the hood of a parked car, just days after the actor's daughter was born.

In 2014, Baldwin was charged with disorderly conduct after jawing at cops who stopped him for riding his bike the wrong way down a one-way street.

The case was later dismissed.

Baldwin has pleaded not guilty to involuntary manslaughter in Hutchins' death after he was indicted by a grand jury in Santa Fe, N.M.

Prosecutors say Baldwin has consistently recounted "a different version of events ... and his later statements contradicted his previous statements."

AWFUL DAY IN COURT

Media big shot tells jurors how he manipulated coverage to aid

BY MOLLY CRANE-NEWMAN AND JOSEPHINE STRATMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

During a devastating day for Donald Trump at his Manhattan hush money trial, a jury heard damning testimony from his decadeslong ally David Pecker about a wide-ranging plan to hoist him out of obscurity and into the White House – and the presiding judge said his lead lawyer was "losing all credibility with the court."

Before the trial resumed, Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Juan Merchan heard arguments from prosecutors requesting that the former president be held in criminal contempt for violating an order prohibiting him from publicly attacking trial participants.

Rattling off a laundry list of offending Truth Social posts disparaging jurors and key witnesses Michael Cohen and Stormy Daniels, Assistant District Attorney Chris Conroy asked Merchan to impose thousands of dollars in sanctions and issue a stern warning to Trump, who he said had violated his order "repeatedly," posing "a very real threat."

"He did it right here in the hallway outside" on Tuesday and on camera, the prosecutor said. "He says whatever he needs to say to get the results that he wants."

Trump's team has argued that he has been defending himself as a political candidate in his online rants, not as a defendant. But Conroy said that was nonsense and that "Throwing 'MAGA' into a post doesn't make it political; it may make it more ominous."

Trump lawyer Todd Blanche – who said Trump sharing things others said didn't violate the gag order – balked when asked outright if he could reference specific "attacks" that Trump was defending himself against.

"You've presented nothing," Merchan said, later excoriating the lawyer. "Mr. Blanche, you're losing all credibility. I have to tell you that right now. You are losing all credibility with the court.

The judge reserved issuing a decision.

Here are highlights of Tuesday's testimony:

Ex-National Enquirer head tells of longtime alliance with Trump

During his second day on the stand, Pecker, the former publisher of the National Enquirer, told jurors he and Trump went back as far as the late 1980s when they first met at Mar-a-Lago and then worked to fatten each other's wallets.

Around 2003, 2004, when Trump starred on TV's "The Apprentice," the reality show was "tremendous help also for my magazines," Pecker said, and the show propelled his friend to be nationally known "as the boss."

Assistant District Attorney Joshua Steinglass asked Pecker to describe Trump.

"I would describe Mr. Trump as very knowledgeable. I would describe him as very detail oriented. I would describe him almost as a micromanager," he said.

"I thought that his approach to money – he was very cautious and very frugal."

Pecker lays out "catch and kill" scheme

Pecker told a crowded courtroom how he worked to shape the public's perception of his friend as far back as 2007, when he said

Donald Trump walks outside lower Manhattan courtroom Tuesday, where he listened to scathing testimony against him in hush money trial.

FOR DON, & HIS ATT'Y

Trump; judge berates lawyer after client's attack on witnesses

Trump first told him that "if there [were] any rumors in the marketplace," he should "call Michael Cohen directly."

Prosecutors zeroed in on the August 2015 meeting where they allege the hush money scheme to hide damaging information about Trump from the voters was born at Trump Tower. Pecker said he, Trump, and Cohen were present, with former White House aide Hope Hicks popping in and out of the meeting.

"Donald Trump and Michael, they asked me what can I do and what my magazines could do to help the campaign," Pecker testified.

Pecker told them he would publish positive stories about Trump and negative stories about his opponents.

Prosecutors displayed several examples to the jury of stories in Pecker's publications boosting Trump and slamming GOP rivals like Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio early in the race.

Among the outlandish headlines were "Donald Trump Blasts Ted Cruz's Dad for Photos With JFK Assassin," and "Senator Marco Rubio's Cocaine Connection."

Pecker said the stories originated with ideas Cohen would phone in and Pecker and former editor in chief of the National Enquirer Dylan Howard would then "embellish" them. Pecker assumed Cohen's directives were the boss' wishes.

Hush money payoffs

In the year to come, Pecker said the scheme netted the $30,000 buyout of a story a Trump Tower doorman was looking to sell, claiming Trump fathered an illegitimate girl with a maid at Trump Tower.

"The boss would be very pleased," Pecker recalled Cohen telling him.

He later said they determined it was "absolutely, 1,000% untrue," but they still bought it in case it was sold to another publication.

"So this was a way to lock it up?" Assistant DA Steinglass asked.

"That's correct," Pecker said.

In the months before the 2016 election, Pecker got wind of a Playboy model in California, Karen McDougal, who alleged she'd had a yearlong "romantic" affair with Trump early into his marriage to Melania. Pecker said he urged Trump and Cohen to take it seriously.

What to know

Pecker is testifying under a subpoena and received immunity years ago when American Media admitted to paying off McDougal and the doorman in a nonprosecution agreement in Cohen's federal case.

In that case, Cohen admitted to violating campaign finance laws by paying porn star Daniels $130,000 to stay silent about a decade-old one-night stand and an assortment of other crimes. He was sentenced to three years.

Trump has pleaded not guilty to 34 felonies alleging he repeatedly and fraudulently falsified New York business records in 2017 in paying back Cohen for the hush money payoff to Daniels as part of a wide-ranging scheme to defraud voters.

At the end of the day's proceedings, Trump launched into a hallway diatribe before reporters, lambasting the judge and the gag order.

"They can say whatever they want. They can lie. But I'm not allowed to say anything," Trump said.

"I'd love to talk to you people. I'd love to say everything that's on my mind."

Feds to resolve young athletes' claims of FBI negligence

BY THERESA BRAINE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Victims of sexual predator and former USA Gymnastics team doctor Larry Nassar will receive a collective $138.7 million from the Justice Department to resolve 139 claims of alleged FBI negligence, the agency announced Tuesday.

Nassar spent decades abusing young athletes, including Olympic gymnasts Simone Biles, McKayla Maroney and Aly Raisman, before their complaints got any traction. Early filings with the FBI brought no action, and the complaints languished for months, during which even more girls and young women were abused.

The disgraced physician worked at Michigan State University and was the team doctor for USA Gymnastics until being fired once the allegations came to light. Investigators also found child sex abuse images, adding to the charges for which Nassar is now serving a life sentence.

The Justice Department's Office of the Inspector General released a damning report in 2021 that found FBI officials in the Indianapolis Field Office had "failed to respond to the Nassar allegations with the utmost seriousness and urgency that they deserved and required."

Overall, a total of $1 billion has been awarded to victims by the numerous organizations that failed to stop Nassar. Michigan State University has already agreed to pay $500 million to more than 300 women and girls he abused, and $380 million is coming from USA Gymnastics and the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee.

"For decades, Lawrence Nassar abused his position, betraying the trust of those under his care and medical supervision while skirting accountability," U.S. Acting Associate Attorney General Benjamin Mizer said in a statement Tuesday. "These allegations should have been taken seriously from the outset. While these settlements won't undo the harm Nassar inflicted, our hope is that they will help give the victims of his crimes some of the critical support they need to continue healing."

The Justice Department has approved the claims, which were hinted at last week in a report published by The Wall Street Journal.

The first victim to step up, Rachael Denhollander, was not part of the settlement but nonetheless welcomed the news.

"I'm deeply grateful. Accountability with the Justice Department has been a long time in coming," Denhollander told The Associated Press. "The unfortunate reality is that what we are seeing today is something that most survivors never see. Most survivors never see accountability. Most survivors never see justice. Most survivors never get restitution."

Parolee is arrested in SoHo apt. building rape

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA AND ELIZABETH KEOGH
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A man on parole for a robbery charge was arrested for following a woman into her SoHo apartment building and raping her, police said Tuesday.

Ellow Williams, 30, hid behind a parked car as the 23-year-old victim got out of a cab in front of her building near the corner of Thompson and Prince Sts. at about 4:10 a.m. on Sunday, cops said.

The woman opened the front door of her building with a key fob and walked into the lobby. Before the door could close, Williams crept in behind her, police said.

The man confronted the woman on the second floor, telling her, "If you scream, I'll shoot you," according to cops.

Williams didn't flash or simulate a gun, but put the victim in a chokehold and sexually assaulted her. He stole $40 from the woman before he took off on foot, leaving her on the second floor of her building.

The victim was treated at a local hospital and released.

Williams was arrested Tuesday and immediately requested a lawyer while being questioned by police. He was charged with rape.

The accused rapist (photo) has five prior arrests in New York City. He spent nearly two years in prison for robbery and was released on parole in March 2023, records show.

His arraignment in Manhattan Criminal Court was pending Tuesday evening.

So far this year, the NYPD has investigated 454 incidents of rape. Last year at the same time, there were 451 incidents, according to NYPD Chief of Detectives Joseph Kenny.

2 cops charged with sex abuse of drunk woman

BY ELIZABETH KEOGH
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Two NYPD officers have been arrested and charged with taking home an extremely intoxicated woman from a Bronx bar and sexually assaulting her, officials said Tuesday.

Officers Julio Alcantara-Santiago, 40, and Christian Garcia, 32, were drinking at Cuban restaurant Zona De Cuba on Grand Concourse near E. 150th St. on July 9, 2023 when they allegedly spotted a woman so drunk that she was unable to stand up on her own, according to a criminal complaint.

Video shows the officers holding the woman up by her arms as she repeatedly fell into the men as they led her out of the bar, prosecutors said.

The officers drove the woman to a female acquaintance's nearby apartment building and carried her inside with her eyes shut and mouth open as she was unable to stand on her own, video viewed by police allegedly shows.

When the victim came to, she was in an unfamiliar bedroom as Alcantara-Santiago and Garcia sexually assaulted her, the complaint stated.

Alcantara-Santiago egged on Garcia, encouraging him to rape her while she lay motionless on the bed, according to prosecutors.

"Nah, bro, she's too out of it," Garcia allegedly said.

The complaint describes the duo sexually abusing the woman as she was unable to respond or move her body.

"Let's go, bro, she's waking up," Garcia then said, according to the complaint.

The woman's next memory was waking up around 7:30 a.m., just before she sought help at a local hospital, where she had a sexual assault kit done.

In February, the officers agreed to a cheek swab, which matched DNA found on the victim's body collected at the hospital after the attack.

After an investigation by the NYPD's Internal Affairs Bureau, Alcantara-Santiago and Garcia were arrested and charged with criminal sexual act, sexual abuse, sexual misconduct, forcible touching and sex abuse, officials said.

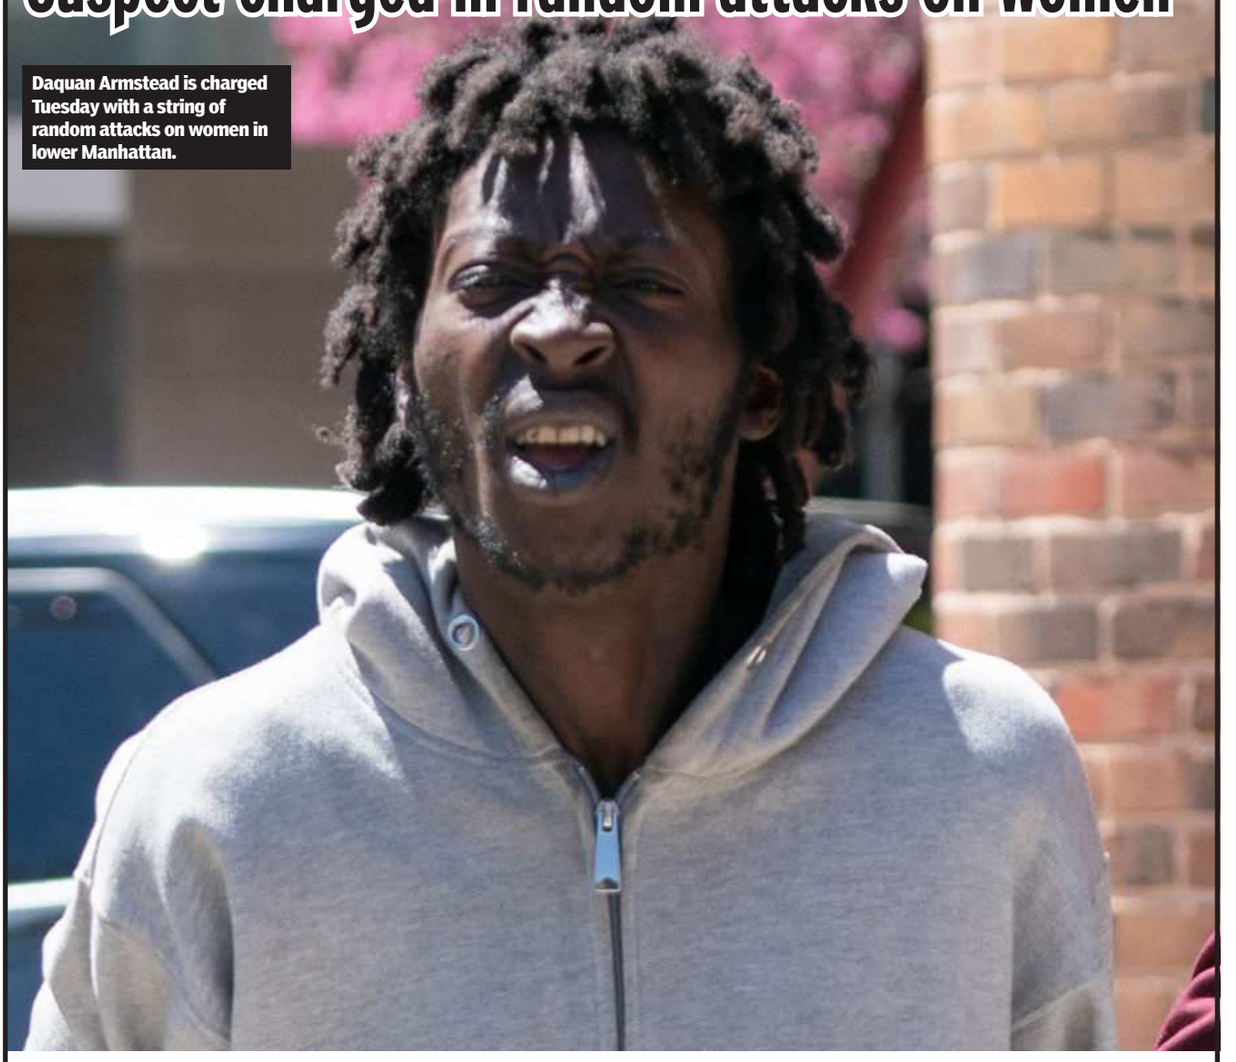

Following an arraignment in Bronx Criminal Court Tuesday, Alcantara-Santiago was held on a $50,000 cash bail or $75,000 bond. Garcia was held on a $30,000 cash bail or $70,000 bond.

Alcantara-Santiago was appointed to the NYPD in 2013 and Garcia in 2016, records show. Both men were reassigned on April 2, with Alcantara-Santiago being moved to the Manhattan Court Section and Garcia to the Brooklyn Court Section.

Both officers were suspended without pay following their arrests, according to an NYPD spokesperson.

BUSTED IN PUNCH SPREE

Suspect charged in random attacks on women

Daquan Armstead is charged Tuesday with a string of random attacks on women in lower Manhattan.

BARRY WILLIAMS FOR NYDN

BY ELLEN MOYNIHAN AND THOMAS TRACY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A Bronx man has been linked to eight random punching attacks against women in lower Manhattan, including one that was the subject of a TikTok video, police said Tuesday.

Daquan Armstead, 31, was arrested for the violent spree of unprovoked attacks, which began on Feb. 12 and continued until last week, police said.

He's facing multiple counts of assault as a hate crime and aggravated harassment for targeting women during his tirade of terror in Greenwich Village, Tribeca, the Lower East Side and the Bowery.

Armstead is responsible for nearly 15% of similar attacks that have occurred in Manhattan below 42nd St. over the last month, cops said.

He is suspected of attacking comedian Sarah Suzuki Harvard on Delancey St. near Essex St. March 19, punching her in the back of the head as she walked home before hosting a show.

"I was thinking about the show, in my own headspace – bam, all of a sudden I was hit in the back of my head," Harvard, 30, told the Daily News last month.

The women he attacked range in age from 24 to 44, cops said. Another one of his victims was a 27-year-old NYU administrator who he allegedly punched in the head as she walked along Washington Square North near Fifth Ave. in Greenwich Village at around 10:30 a.m. on April 17.

An NYU memo about the incident said the attack on the administrator was being investigated as a hate crime and "might be tied to reports of a series of similar unprovoked attacks on women."

Fifty people, mostly women, have been victims of random assaults below 42nd St. from mid-March to mid-April, NYPD Chief of Detectives Joseph Kenny said last week.

For the week ending April 14, 10 women were victimized in the area, where most of the attacks reported by TikTok users have occurred, police said.

Armstead lives in the Williamsbridge section of the Bronx – about 20 miles from where he attacked his victims, cops said.

He never said anything to his victims, save one. On April 2 at the corner of Seventh Ave. and Charles St., he asked a 38-year-old woman walking by for a dollar. When the woman said she didn't have any cash on her, he punched her in the back of the head and ran off, police said.

His victim was able to get a photo of the suspect before he ran off. That photo helped cops identify Armstead and link him to other cases, police said.

Investigators also tied him to other assaults along Delancey St., as well as Chrystie and Rivington Sts., and Elizabeth St., cops said.

None of the victims were seriously harmed, cops said.

Two men were charged last month in separate attacks that were the subject of TikTok videos in which the victims described being punched by strangers.

On March 27, cops arrested political gadfly Skiboky Stora, who they say assaulted TikTok influencer Halley Kate Mcgookin near W. 16th St. and Seventh Ave. in Chelsea at 10:20 a.m. two days earlier.

On March 28, cops arrested Mallik Miah, charging him with assaulting TikToker Mikayla Toninato in Greenwich Village three days earlier, the same day Mcgookin was attacked.

Toninato was near Fifth Ave. and E. 12th St. when Miah allegedly struck her at about 2 p.m. on March 25, police said. According to a criminal complaint, Miah, 30, identified himself in a still image taken from surveillance footage of the attack. Toninato posted a video to TikTok right after being punched recounting her ordeal.

Armstead's arraignment in Manhattan Criminal Court was pending Tuesday.

Livery car org. boosts reward after nine recent rob attacks

BY EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A New York City livery cab advocate is raising his reward for information on a spate of robberies targeting for-hire drivers this month.

Fernando Mateo, founder of the New York State Federation of Taxi Drivers, announced Tuesday that he is now offering $7,500 to anyone with information that leads to the arrest of suspects in one of nine robberies this month.

"We need to put a stop to this," Mateo told the Daily News. "We need to make sure that drivers are safe."

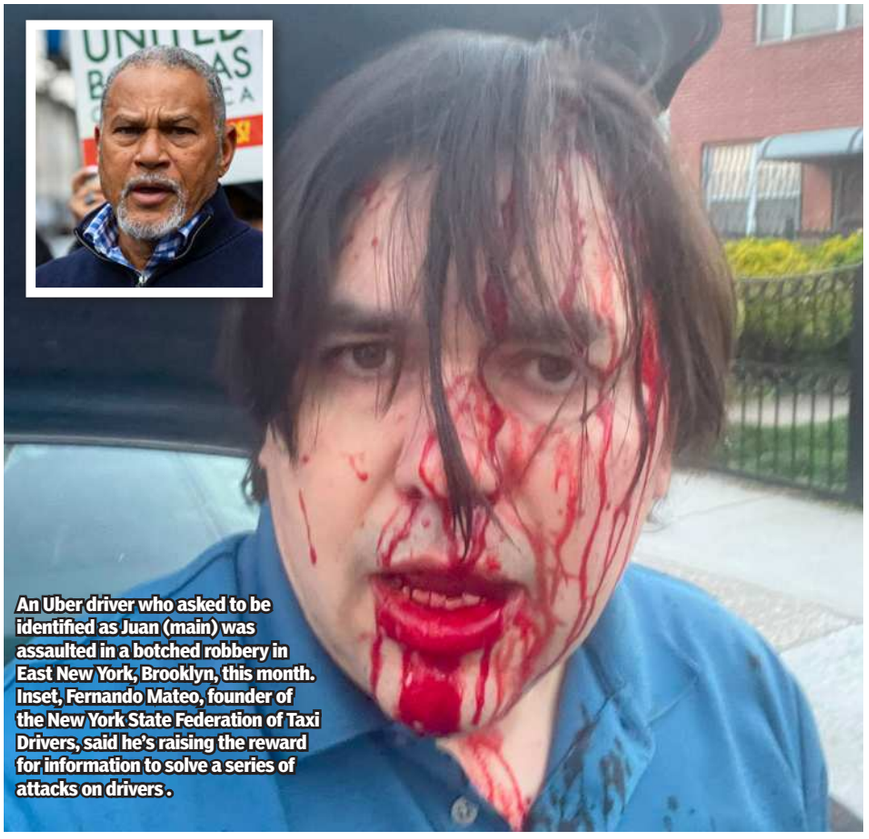

The increased reward – up from $5,000 last week – comes after livery driver Bamory Sanogo was robbed and carjacked early Monday.

The 56-year-old driver was picking up a man and a woman around midnight Monday in Melrose, the Bronx, and drove them north into University Heights, according to cops.

When they arrived at their destination, the man held Sanogo in his seat from behind while the woman went through his pockets.

The couple then tossed him from the car and tried to flee in Sanogo's Toyota Camry but crashed it.

"She jumped in the front seat, put her hand in my pockets, stole my money while he choked me," Sanogo said in a statement Tuesday.

An Uber driver who asked to be identified as Juan (main) was assaulted in a botched robbery in East New York, Brooklyn, this month. Inset, Fernando Mateo, founder of the New York State Federation of Taxi Drivers, said he's raising the reward for information to solve a series of attacks on drivers.

OBTAINED BY DAILY NEWS; SHAWN INGLIMA FOR NYDN

"I was taken out of my car when they stole the car and crashed it into two vehicles that were parked. I chased them but couldn't catch them," he added.

Cops said the pair fled on foot down W. Fordham Road. An investigation is ongoing.

Mateo said the incident marked the ninth such robbery of the month, with all but one happening in the Bronx.

He also said most of the drivers being attacked drove for traditional livery services rather than app-based rideshare companies like Uber or Lyft.

"Drivers that work car services, and are dispatched by phone, are more prone to be targeted," said Matteo, who unsuccessfully ran for the Republican mayoral nomination in 2021.

Unlike Ubers and Lyfts, liveries are dispatched by bases that often serve a particular neighborhood.

Passengers call the livery base by phone, meaning there is no app username or digital paper trail as with Uber or Lyft.

The fact that some liveries still accept cash payment also makes them targets, Mateo said.

Bhairavi Desai, head of the New York Taxi Workers Alliance, said livery drivers were also vulnerable in a way yellow taxi cab drivers – who also deal in cash – are not.

"[Liveries] are more likely [than Ubers or Lyfts] to have cash and less likely to have partitions," Desai said.

Last year, the Taxi & Limousine Commission did away with a rule requiring cameras or bullet-resistant partitions in liveries, which base owners said was obsolete.

The partition dated back to April 2000, the height of a bloody era for livery cabbies. Nine livery drivers were murdered in 1999 during apparent robbery attempts, and five were murdered in April 2000 alone.

Mateo, who rose to prominence as a vocal advocate for the camera-or-partition rule, was among those who favored its repeal.

He told The News on Tuesday that he still agrees partitions are unnecessary.

"What I wish there were is more cameras," he said. "I would like to see cameras become mandatory."

Police release photos in fatal Bronx shooting

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The NYPD on Tuesday released a picture and video of the gunman who opened fire on an SUV parked outside a Bronx McDonald's, killing one man and wounding another.

Adrian Mendoza, 24, and Jhombeyker Bisbal, 31, were ambushed just past 4 a.m. April 15 as they sat in a 2015 Nissan Rogue outside a McDonald's on E. 149th St. near Morris Ave. in Mott Haven.

A gray Honda Civic pulled up, with a passenger getting out and walking past the victims, then doubling back, Chief of Detectives Joseph Kenny said a day after the incident.

He approached the driver's side of the car and shot Mendoza, who had been driving, in the head and body, Kenny said. The gunman then went to the front of the SUV and fired numerous shots through the windshield, hitting Bisbal twice in the chest, twice in the arm and twice in the shoulder, Kenny said.

Medics took Mendoza and Bisbal to nearby Lincoln Hospital, where the younger man died. Bisbal, listed in critical condition at the time, is recovering.

Kenny at the time said both victims were Venezuelan nationals and had previously been arrested in Texas by U.S. Customs and Border Protection agents.

The motive for the shooting wasn't clear at the time, though Kenny noted that both shooting victims had in their pockets wire transfer receipts and that detectives were checking to see if that was a factor.

Anyone with information about the gunman is asked to call Crime Stoppers at (800)-577-TIPS.

Cops are looking for this person, saying they shot at an SUV in the Bronx on April 15, killing one man and wounding another. NYPD

Columbia prez to protesters: Clear out by midnight or else

BY CAYLA BAMBERGER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Days after NYPD cops arrested more than 100 students at a pro-Palestinian encampment at Columbia University, the institution's president gave a midnight Tuesday deadline for demonstrators to shut down their self-described "liberation zone."

Campus stakeholders have been discussing the removal of the tents for several days, Columbia President Minouche Shafik wrote students late Tuesday, adding, "Those talks are facing a deadline of midnight tonight to reach agreement.

"I very much hope these discussions are successful. If they are not, we will have to consider alternative options for clearing the West Lawn and restoring calm to campus so that students can complete the term and graduate," she stated, saying students deserve a chance to end the semester and "celebrate their well-deserved graduation."

Meanwhile, Barnard College is looking to cut a deal with students suspended over the recent Gaza protests that would allow them to have their records cleared – if they agree to follow all college rules going forward.

That would likely require them to avoid the new encampment protesting the Israel-Hamas war now taking root on the Columbia campus, which college officials have described as a violation of school rules.

The women's college, an affiliate of Columbia University, offered this week to lift the suspensions of students with no previous misconduct on their record, which college officials said is the "vast majority" of those who protested.

At least 53 Columbia students who were suspended last week attend Barnard, the student newspaper Columbia Spectator reported.

"Last night, the college sent written notices to these students offering to lift the interim suspensions," college President Laura Rosenbury wrote, "and immediately restore their access to college buildings, if they agree to follow all Barnard rules during a probationary period.

"If these students choose this path, neither the interim suspension nor the probationary period will appear on the students' academic transcripts," Rosenbury said in the memo, her first communication to students since Thursday's mass arrests.

Students on interim suspension lost access to most Barnard buildings, including their housing, but can still use services including health care, mental health counseling and academic support.

They are not permitted to be physically on campus, though Barnard professors can make accommodations for them to attend class via Zoom and otherwise complete work remotely.

"I strongly believe that exposure to uncomfortable ideas is a vital component of education, and I applaud the boldness of all of our students who speak out," read the email, "but no student should fear for their safety while at Barnard, and no one should feel that they do not belong."

Spokesmen for Barnard College did not return a request for comment.

The latest chapter in the ongoing tension over Gaza at Columbia began last week as Shafik readied for a congressional hearing on the university's response to antisemitism. Meanwhile, students began occupying a lawn with dozens of tents, which they called the "Gaza Solidarity Encampment," to demand the university divest from Israel and reverse all disciplinary measures over pro-Palestinian activity by students and faculty.

University administrators warned students to leave and began notifying them Thursday of suspensions. By the afternoon, Shafik called in the NYPD, which wore riot gear, to clear the lawn and arrest more than 100 students.

"I did lose my housing," said Sarah Borus, a Jewish student at Barnard who was suspended and arrested with the pro-Palestinian protesters. "I was outside of my dorm, in fact, when I got the notice – so I was not able to return or get my things. I had to immediately find a place to stay.

"I am not allowed in any dining halls as well because, according to the email, I'm considered 'disruptive to the safety and community of campus,'" she added.

Many similarly affected Barnard students were still weighing their options Tuesday. The memo said the offer would not be extended to those with previous notices of misconduct, and students vowed to respond together.

"We are carefully considering the offer and debating what our next steps will be," said Soph Askanase, a Barnard junior who is also Jewish and – along with the daughter of Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.) – was among the initial group of three students to receive suspension notices last week.

"All of the suspended students are in communication together, and we firmly believe that we must act as a unified group."

A broader coalition of student groups called Columbia University Apartheid Divest has been in negotiations since Friday night, students said – but so far there is no offer on the table.

The sweep appeared only to embolden the demonstrators who continued to camp out on the lawn while they chanted, hosted lectures, danced and held screenings over the last week.

On Monday night, students held a Passover Seder at the encampment, where they shared a meal and read from a special Haggadah, rewritten to advocate for Palestinians in Gaza.

COPS SAY IT'S

Police blame faculty, fail to block

BY COLIN MIXSON, THOMAS TRACY AND CAYLA BAMBERGER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

NYPD brass on Tuesday blamed faculty and "professional agitators" at New York University for heated standoffs with police after university officials sent cops to clear a pro-Palestinian encampment and arrest 120 protesters – including students and staff – for trespassing.

The unrest at NYU over the war between Israel and Hamas was the latest in a string of mass arrests at colleges in the tristate area that started last week at Columbia University and spread to Yale University in New Haven.

"The faculty were – from what I personally observed, and spoke to lieutenants and captains out there – the most aggressive toward the police," NYPD Deputy Commissioner of Operations Kaz Daughtry said on Fox 5's "Good Day New York." "They would not move, they would not let go."

About 50 students protesting the war set up a tent demonstration early Monday morning on NYU's Gould Plaza on W. Fourth St., outside the business school. An NYU spokesman said the school asked the NYPD to step in later in the day after the crowd became disorderly amid intimidating chants and antisemitic incidents.

As cops took down tents, some demonstrators were seen throwing objects at the officers. Police used pepper spray as some protesters attempted to block buses taking away those arrested.

The NYU campus chapter of Students for Justice in Palestine said in a Tuesday statement they were "met with violent arrests." At least two reporters say they were pepper-sprayed, including from the NYU student newspaper and local outlet HellGate.

As cops moved in to clear the encampment, up to 15 faculty members tied their hands together to form a chain around the demonstrators, NYPD officials said Tuesday.

Daughtry said the faculty were "physical with our officers as well" and it took "quite some time" to remove the profs before police could address the student protesters.

"I think parents have an expectation that when they send their kids to college, the faculty and their professors will be teaching and not protesting," said Tarik Sheppard, NYPD deputy commissioner of public information. "It was shocking to see the faculty out there."

The two NYPD officials said that there were "professional agitators" in the crowd and speculated that someone was financing the protests, noting tents at the various campus protests have looked the same, though they did not elaborate. Many of the demonstrations have been organized by Students for Justice in Palestine, which has chapters throughout the country.

"Somebody is behind this, and we are going to find out who it is," Daughtry said.

Zach Samalin, 41, an English professor at NYU who was arrested Monday night for trespassing, protested at the encampment with his wife, who also teaches at the university, and their nearly 5-year-old daughter. He denied that faculty were trespassing or posed a threat to police.

"University security let faculty in up until minutes before they called police on us," Samalin said during a Tuesday walkout in Washington Square Park. "So how the hell were we trespassing?

"I was linked arms with a 77-year-old man, who zip ties were put on so tight he couldn't feel his hands by the time we got to Central Booking," added the prof, who managed to hand off his child to his wife shortly before his arrest. "It seems to me like maybe the police were aggressive."

Hundreds of pro-Palestinian protesters, including students and faculty, participated in the Tuesday demonstration, chanting "free Palestine" and shouting that university President "Linda Mills is a liar." Several said they observed tense confrontations with police, including the use of pepper spray and dragging a protester to the ground by the hair.

"The only acts of violence and brutality I witnessed were those of police," said Dylan, an NYU student who declined to give his last name, who was inside Gould Plaza when police raided the student encampment Monday but managed to avoid arrest.

"If holding arms together and standing together in order to protect students against full-geared riot cops constitutes violence for the NYPD, I don't know what definition of violence they're using."

NYPD said officers cleared out the encampment at the request of university officials.

"At this point we consider all protesters occupying Gould Plaza to be trespassers," read a Monday memo from the university to the NYPD, "and we would like the NYPD to clear the area and to take action to remove the protesters. In the event they refuse to leave, we request the NYPD take enforcement action accordingly up to and including arrest."

Of the 120 protesters taken into custody, 116 were given summonses for criminal trespass and four were given desk appearance tickets for resisting arrest, police said.

Like the Columbia demonstration, NYU students called on the university to divest from Israel and reverse all student and faculty disciplinary measures related to pro-Palestinian activism. Their demands include an end the institution's partnership with Tel Aviv University and the shutdown of its Tel Aviv campus.

NYU closed access to the plaza and put barriers in place to contain the protest. But their efforts were unsuccessful. Spokesman John Beckman said more demonstrators later broke through the barricade, including many that NYU believes are not affiliated with the university.

"This development dramatically changed the situation," he said in a statement. "We witnessed disorderly, disruptive, and antagonizing behavior that has interfered with the safety and security of our community, and that demonstrated how quickly a demonstration can get out of control or people can get hurt.

"We also learned that there were intimidating chants and several antisemitic incidents reported," he added.

The NYU campus chapter of the American Association of University Professors rebuked that characterization.

"At no point were non-NYU people knowingly allowed to join the Plaza encampment, and at no time was anyone on the Plaza either violent or antisemitic in speech or behavior. There was NO incitement at all," they said in an open letter.

The university informed protesters that if they left by the late afternoon, no arrests would be made. Around 8:35 p.m., dozens of police officers in riot gear went on campus and started detaining students and faculty.

Workers on Tuesday bordered Gould Plaza with wooden planks. After clearing out the area, the NYPD kept cops there to prevent the protesters from returning, after hundreds of students at Columbia were able to taken over the lawns again following last week's sweep.

Civil liberties groups condemned the university's response and cops' handling of protesters.

"Universities have been too quick to call in the NYPD to break up peaceful demonstrations," said Donna Lieberman, executive director of New York Civil Liberties Union. "New Yorkers should be able to voice their support for Palestine without fearing becoming a target of the NYPD or a victim of police abuse."

Yale University on Monday called on the cops to clear a tent demonstration there, arresting 47 students in the process.

'Someone wanted something to happen' at rally: mayor

BY MICHAEL GARTLAND
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mayor Adams blamed "outside agitators" for sparking much of the venom seen recently at campus protests and said Tuesday that his administration is working with schools to limit such activity.

During his weekly City Hall press briefing, Adams promised that the NYPD will seek out and identify those he believes are trying to use the protests "to cause violence in our city."

"We can't have outside agitators come in and be destructive to our city," he said. "Someone wanted something to happen at that protest at NYU that police officers didn't respond to."

The mayor didn't elaborate on how authorities determined the makeup of the crowd.

A day before, pro-Palestinian demonstrators converged on New York University to protest Israel's siege of Gaza after Hamas slaughtered scores of Israeli civilians on Oct. 7. As police arrested dozens of protesters and cleared out their encampments, some demonstrators began throwing objects at the cops.

The protest at NYU came after similar demonstrations at Columbia University, where a protester could be heard telling Jews to "go back to Poland." That situation led a Jewish leader to tell Jewish students not to attend classes out of safety concerns and Columbia's President Minouche Shafik to announce that classes would be held remotely on Monday.

Adams said Tuesday that the NYPD has identified people at protests who don't actually attend the schools where the demonstrations are taking place and added that his administration was planning to meet with college officials who would "like to participate" and learn "best practices."

"We should address this while it is just a spark," he said. "Let's not wait until it's a blazing fire."

Adams once again asserted people's right to assemble and protest – as long as they do so peacefully.

"You can't break the law – like throwing bottles and chairs," he said. "It's not illegal, but it's immoral to call for the destruction of anyone. I would be furious if someone was marching, calling for death to Black people. I would be furious."

Foul-mouthed woman lashes Adams on flight to Florida

BY CHRIS SOMMERFELDT AND GRAHAM RAYMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

In a video circulating on social media, a young woman accosted Mayor Adams on a flight to Miami on Sunday, accusing him of "supporting the genocide in Palestine" and "partying all the time."

Adams flew to Miami for the 2024 Concordia Americas Summit, a gathering of public officials and businesspeople from North America and Latin America, the conference website said.

"Are you Eric Adams?" the unnamed woman asked Adams, who half-smiled while sitting in shirtsleeves with a member of his security detail in the seat next to him.

"Yeah, f–k you!" the woman shouted. "You support the genocide in Palestine. There are homeless people all over New York."

Adams said nothing, but his expression visibly soured as the woman's rhetoric escalated, according to the 35-second video.

The detective with the mayor then stood up, the shaky iPhone video shows, apparently to block the woman's access to the mayor.

"But you're always partying," she continued. "You don't actually care about the citizens of New York. Why are you going to Miami? You know there are people being arrested. There are homeless.

"People cannot afford food. You keep cutting the education budget so you can fund the police. That's all you care about – funding the police. Everything is underfunded because of you."

Amid the chatter in the aftermath of the screed, one passenger says, "Over the line."

"You can never be woke enough!' joked singer Sean Feucht on X.

"OMG Yess!!!!" wrote a fan of the tirade on X.

The outcome of the encounter was unclear Tuesday. The source of the video was not immediately known.

Adams returned to the city by Tuesday.

"Like the mayor always says, 8 million people, but 35 million opinions," spokesman Fabien Levy said in a statement. "It's unfortunate, however, that this individual's opinion was riddled with vulgarities on a public flight"

Rubout over real estate biz has convict facing life in prison

BY JOHN ANNESE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A convicted drug trafficker has been found guilty of moonlighting as a paid assassin for a Manhattan real estate developer who ordered his protege-turned-rival killed.

A federal jury in Brooklyn found Antony Abreu, 36, guilty of murder-for-hire charges in the 2019 killing of Xin "Chris" Gu, who was gunned down outside a Queens karaoke bar at the order of his former boss, Qing Ming "Allen" Yu.

Gu, 31, worked for Yu's multimillion-dollar apartment renovation firm, Amaco, but he quit on Aug. 18, 2018, taking several clients to his new company, including one worth more than $1 million.

Enraged, Yu tasked his nephew to assemble a kill team and get revenge. Abreu was recruited by accomplice Zhe Zhang to pull the trigger.

About 2:35 a.m. on Feb. 12, 2019, Abreu donned a pair of purplish-blue surgical gloves and executed Gu as he waited for an Uber at the Grand Slam KTV karaoke bar in Flushing. Abreu's payment for the hit was a Richard Mille wristwatch worth more than $100,000, prosecutors said.

Yu and Zhang were found guilty in a separate trial in October.

Abreu, who's already serving a 24-year prison sentence for a federal cocaine distribution conviction in Mississippi, betrayed no emotion before the jury as it announced the verdict.

His mother, who sat in the courtroom flanked by three other family members, sighed and slumped back, then broke into quiet sobs.

Abreu faces mandatory life in prison when he's sentenced Sept. 12.

"With today's conviction of Abreu, a cold-blooded triggerman who executed a young man in exchange for an expensive wristwatch, this office has held all the conspirators responsible for this murder plot driven by greed and revenge," Brooklyn U.S. Attorney Breon Peace said Tuesday. "The victim was marked for death simply because he was pursuing the American Dream by starting his own company."

The verdict came after Abreu testified in his own defense in his week-and-a-half-long trial in Brooklyn Federal Court.

Abreu told jurors he drove to Long Island to pick up a friend and then made a few stops after that to pick up large sums of cash from his marijuana dealing business.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Devon Lash tore into that defense on cross-examination, pointing out that his friend didn't take the stand to back up his alibi.

"Ya'll was scaring him with threats. That's the reason why he didn't want to testify," Abreu insisted.

Susan Kellman, one of Abreu's lawyers, immediately announced she'd file a motion to set aside the verdict.

"We'll keep fighting," she said outside the courtroom, contending that the government didn't establish that Abreu ever entered into an agreement to be paid for the crime.

The trial proceeded with a few hiccups, including when one of the jurors, Vanity Fair writer Delia Cai, was booted early on because she tweeted about the "hot FBI agent" on the case.

On Monday, the jurors sent a note stating they weren't close to reaching a verdict, leading Judge Carol Bagley Amon to send them back to keep deliberating.

Two more jurors were later dismissed from the case. On Tuesday, a fourth juror was let go because of travel obligations, leading to the last of the four alternates to be seated less than two hours before the verdict was reached.

COURT EVIDENCE

Eric raps pushback on Mastro for top city att'y

Mayor Adams brushed off mounting opposition to his presumptive nomination of Randy Mastro as the city's top lawyer Tuesday, saying recent criticisms of Mastro represents a "slippery slope" and that "the process" to appoint him will continue.

Since news broke last week about the administration seeking to use Mastro to replace its current corporation counsel, Sylvia Hinds-Radix, city lawmakers have lined up to denounce the change as a bad move.

That effort intensified Tuesday when the City Council's Black, Latino and Asian Caucus issued a statement describing Mastro as "unfit to serve as the city's chief lawyer."

"He has actively fought against a number of Council priorities, ranging from access to homeless shelters to protections for fast food workers," the caucus said in a written statement. "In one egregious case, Mastro was hired by former New Jersey Governor Chris Christie to conduct an internal investigation that ultimately absolved Christie of any wrongdoing related to the 'Bridgegate' political scandal."

The expected nomination of Mastro to the corporation counsel post comes as Adams is facing legal headwinds on a number of fronts.

Federal investigators in Manhattan are probing his campaign's ties to Turkey. The Manhattan district attorney indicted his former Buildings Department commissioner last year as part of an ongoing probe. And the mayor was accused earlier this year of sexually assaulting a former cop during his time with the NYPD in the 1990s. Adams has not been accused of any wrongdoing in the campaign probe and has denied the assault allegations.

Mastro, a veteran of the Giuliani administration known for this bare-knuckle legal style, got love from the Adams administration just hours after the release of the caucus' statement.

During a press briefing Tuesday, Adams Chief Counsel Lisa Zornberg described Mastro as the "conscience" of the Giuliani administration and compared his representation of clients to the second president of the United States, John Adams, representing British soldiers prior to the Revolutionary War.

"It can never be the case in the United States of America that lawyers are criticized and condemned for taking on hard cases for their clients," she said, referring to Mastro's representation of the oil giant Chevron. "John Adams, one of the forefathers of this country, in 1770 defended British officers accused of murder in the Boston Massacre."

Adams seconded that sentiment, telling reporters that it's a "slippery slope" to criticize an attorney based on the clients they represent. "We're going to let the process move forward," he said. "I'm hoping that anyone we put up for any nomination, they have the opportunity to sell their story."

Last week, Adams' chief adviser Ingrid Lewis-Martin confirmed on PIX11 that Hinds-Radix would be leaving the administration and that Mastro is the top choice to replace her.

Their defense notwithstanding, Mastro's nomination will face a tough road to approval in the Council if it ultimately comes to pass.

The Black, Latino and Asian Caucus is composed of 34 members – which represents more than a simple majority in the 51-member lawmaking body. Last week, a number of members of the Council's left-leaning Progressive Caucus also vowed to block any Mastro nomination.

Councilwoman Diana Ayala, a Manhattan Democrat who's part of the BLAC Caucus and the chamber's second highest-ranking member as deputy speaker, said the anti-Mastro statement was circulated among caucus members over the weekend.

"I didn't object to it, and I don't remember hearing of any objections," Ayala told the Daily News after the mayor's briefing. "The administration is aware that there is a lot of opposition if they should move forward."

At least one other BLAC member distanced herself from the caucus statement, though.

Staten Island Councilwoman Kamillah Hanks, a centrist Democrat BLAC member, said she "was not part of that statement" and suggested her approval or rejection of Mastro is far from a foregone conclusion.

"I plan on reviewing the candidate and making a decision," she said.

Convict says he was railroaded in 1991 case;

BY GRAHAM RAYMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Queens prosecutors recently visited a key witness in a wrongful conviction claim filed by a man who has been in prison for 30 years and threatened her with arrest if she changed her original testimony and testified in his favor, court papers filed Tuesday allege.

The witness, Vanessa Thomas, is central to Allen Porter's claim he was wrongly convicted in the 1991 double killing of a rival drug dealer and his girlfriend. Court papers allege an undisclosed deal prosecutors gave her in 1993 following her own arrest in the crime paved the way for her to falsely implicate Porter.

That allegedly improper arrangement is detailed in Porter's pending 51-page motion to overturn the conviction, which – supported by the recantations of two other key witnesses and over 2,000 internal case documents – accuses Queens prosecutors and cops of withholding evidence and coercing witnesses in the case.

Thomas, now 70, told her ex-boyfriend, Nathaniel Wright, the two prosecutors came to her home in Georgia on April 4 and said she would be charged with perjury if she changed her original testimony, according to Wright's April 15 affidavit, filed Tuesday in the case.

Thomas' trial testimony put Porter at the scene of the murders and claimed he plotted to kill the rival dealer.

Porter's legal team filed the affidavit along with a 30-page request for a hearing on the matter in Queens Supreme Court.

"They are entitled to visit her. The fact that threats were made, that's where it crossed the line and became inappropriate," said Daniel Barli, Porter's lawyer. "We believe he's been wrongfully incarcerated for a crime he didn't commit, and we are taking steps to make sure he gets a fair opportunity to be heard."

Wright's affidavit is based on a 390-word text message from Thomas to him sent at 9:17 a.m. one day after the visit from prosecutors.

"Them prosecutors said they are going to do everything in their power to keep [Porter] in prison," Thomas wrote in the text message.

"Anyone who changes their after 20 years and lie and try and help him, that person is also going to be prosecuted. This ain't no game."

"When I spoke to Vanessa about her text, she confirmed to me that she both authored it and sent it to me," Wright wrote in the affidavit.

Bennett Gershman, an expert on prosecutorial ethics retained by Barli, wrote the hearing is critical to determine if the prosecutors "improperly interfered."

"Porter's motion has been tainted by prosecutors threatening Vanessa Thomas to stick to her original and false testimony," Gershman, a Pace University law professor, wrote.

Richard Brown was the district attorney when the Porter case was tried. A spokeswoman for the current DA, Melinda Katz, said: "The baseless allegations of threats, as well as any substantive arguments in the motion, will, as always, be addressed in court."

Porter, 51, is serving a 47 years-to-life sentence in Green Haven Correctional Facility in Stormville. He counsels teens there and is in his second year in the Bard College Prison Initiative.

In 1991, he was 19 and a small-time drug dealer working one side of the Woodside Houses in Astoria for Earnest "Budd" Jarvis. Rival dealers Charles Bland and Mark Rogers sold their product on the other side of the housing project.

Late on Dec. 30, 1991, Bland, 25, and his girlfriend Cherrie Walker, 20, were shot dead in a parking lot in the development on the southwest corner of 51st St. and Broadway. Walker's 4-year-old son was in the back seat.

The murders rated only a one-paragraph story in The New York Times. What followed is detailed in Porter's motion filed in November and hundreds of case documents reviewed by The News:

Witnesses described two or three gunmen fleeing in dark clothing, but there was no physical evidence that led to a suspect. Cops focused on Jarvis immediately, but he was murdered four weeks later.

Porter was questioned but refused to cooperate out of fear for his family. He was arrested about 90 days later and spent three years in jail awaiting trial.

Thomas' testimony was central to the case. At trial, she testified she cooperated voluntarily with police and claimed she saw armed men with Porter the night of the murders, and he later told her he had been planning to kill Bland for months.

In his closing argument, prosecutor Richard Schaeffer declared Thomas testified "to relieve herself of the guilt she carries."

But in 2018, Porter's legal team unearthed that, in fact, Thomas was arrested in Georgia in November 1993 and charged with the murders on a warrant from New York. Case records filed with Porter's motion show the charges were dropped against Thomas only after she agreed to point the finger at Porter.

Prosecutors never told Porter's defense about this sequence as required under the law, his trial lawyer Edwin Schulman confirmed in an affidavit.

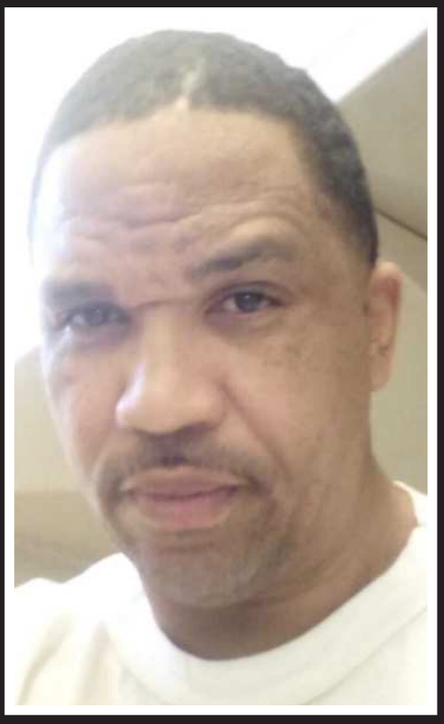

The prosecution also didn't tell the defense that detectives arrested Wright with Thomas the same day. He was held without seeing a judge for several days before he agreed to implicate Porter to save Thomas from prison.

In July 2021, Wright detailed those events in a handwritten affidavit from a Georgia prison where he was serving a sentence for an unrelated assault case.

"I was terrified because … Vanessa stood to go to prison," he wrote.

Wright also wrote that when he told detectives the nickname of one of the shooters, a detective corrected him with a full name. He was brought from jail four times to Schaeffer's office without his lawyer present. And in their first meeting, Schaeffer allegedly told Wright he knew Porter was not the shooter, but Porter had refused to cooperate. Schaeffer could not be reached for comment.

"My only reason for giving this affidavit is because Allen did not commit this crime," Wright wrote.

A third witness, Jacqueline Aviles, then 17 and pregnant, testified she saw Porter shoot the couple. Schaeffer declared in closing she too had no ulterior motive for coming forward, a transcript shows.

But in October 2021, Aviles gave a lengthy interview to Porter's legal team recanting her testimony and alleging she had been coerced by two detectives, the motion states. She admitted she couldn't identify the shooters because they were masked. She said she testified falsely out of fear of losing her children.

Aviles said she had told the detectives several times she saw nothing, but they said they would keep coming at her. One detective slammed his hand on a table and demanded she write a statement.

"The detectives then told her bits and pieces of what to say, and said, 'You're not stupid, you can fill in the blanks,' the motion alleges.

The detective showed her a book of potential suspects, then slammed his hand on the table again and pointed at Porter's photo, saying, "That's him right there, right?"

None of these events were disclosed either, the motion states.

"Don't you think I think about that man [Porter] every day? … 30 years he did," Aviles said in the 2021 interview, the motion states.

The motion also alleges Mark Rogers, Bland's drug partner, identified two men he believed were the two shooters and later indicated Porter was not involved. But that also was not turned over to the defense.

The trove of records underlying the motion was obtained through the work of investigator Jabbar Collins, himself an exoneree, during a bruising nine-year Freedom of Information battle with the Queens DA's office.

In 2021, Porter formally asked the DA's Conviction Integrity Unit to review the case. When nothing came of it after two years, he opted to withdraw the application and go to court.

"It was taking an extended period of time, and they indicated they had other issues ahead of it so we made the decision to move forward with the litigation," Barli said.

Feds OK a ban on noncompete job agreements

BY JOSEPH WILKINSON
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Federal authorities voted Tuesday to ban noncompete agreements, which are often used by employers to prevent workers from jumping to competitors.

Leaders at the Federal Trade Commission voted, 3 to 2, in favor of the new rule, which is set to officially take effect in 120 days. However, the ban is expected to face intense legal challenges that will likely stall implementation.

The FTC first proposed the new rule in January 2023. The agency received 26,000 public comments in the ensuing 16 months, and around 25,000 were in favor of the rule, according to FTC Chairwoman Lina Khan.

"Noncompete clauses keep wages low, suppress new ideas, and rob the American economy of dynamism," Khan said in a statement. "The FTC's final rule to ban noncompetes will ensure Americans have the freedom to pursue a new job, start a new business or bring a new idea to market."

Business groups have promised to challenge the rule in court. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce – a lobbying group, not a government body – slammed Tuesday's vote.

"Today, three unelected commissioners have unilaterally decided they have the authority to declare what's a legitimate business decision and what's not by moving to ban noncompete agreements in all sectors of the economy," the group's president, Suzanne Clark, said. The FTC estimates about 18% of all U.S. employees – about 30 million people – are under noncompete agreements. Such paperwork was initially common for top executives in technology and financial companies, but in recent years noncompetes have filtered down to lower-paid workers.

As of 2021, 12% of workers making $20 an hour or less were covered by noncompete agreements, according to a study conducted by the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis.

The FTC said it targeted noncompetes because they depress wages, preventing people from switching companies for more money, while also stifling innovation by stopping employees from leaving to start their own companies.

Business leaders have argued that noncompetes are necessary to stop people from stealing trade secrets and leveraging proprietary information.

The New York State Legislature passed a statewide ban on noncompetes in 2023, but Gov. Hochul vetoed it in December. Hochul was reportedly trying to negotiate a compromise, but the deal fell apart.

Negotiations over the New York bill reportedly centered on a $250,000 ceiling.

Senate OKs aid to Ukraine, Israel and Taiwan, deals blow to TikTok

BY BRIAN NIEMIETZ
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The U.S. Senate voted Tuesday, 80 to 19, to advance a bipartisan funding package, setting aside $60 billion for Ukraine in its war against Russia, $8 billion to defend Taiwan and $26 billion to aid Israel and fund relief efforts in Gaza.

That $95 billion plan, approved by the House of Representatives on Saturday, will also put pressure on Chinese company ByteDance to sell the social media platform TikTok to a U.S.-based company or else face a nationwide ban.

President Biden is expected to sign that long-awaited legislation no later than Wednesday.

Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) praised Democrats and Republicans for working together through the past six months to finally advance the package sent to the Senate over the weekend. The Brooklyn native said the bipartisan agreement gives notice to the nation's allies and adversaries that America supports fellow democracies.

"If [Russian President Vladimir] Putin is allowed to seize the territory of a neighboring sovereign nation, if the [Chinese Communist Party] is allowed to expand unchecked in the Indo-Pacific, if Iran is allowed to dominate in the Middle East, the U.S. will suffer the consequences," Schumer wrote in a statement Tuesday posted to social media. "Today, we send a message – America will defend democracy."

But not everyone was pleased with the foreign aid provisions in the supplement passed by the Senate.

"It is a dark day for democracy when the Senate will not even allow a vote on whether U.S. taxpayer dollars should fund [Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin] Netanyahu's war against the Palestinian people," Sen. Bernie Sanders, a Vermont independent, said after proposing an amendment to block "unfettered military aid" for Israel. The liberal lawmaker hoped to "cut billions in offensive military funding to Israel" from the supplemental package approved Tuesday.

Seventy senators voted in favor of a similar aid proposal in February, which did not include the TikTok stipulation that helped the legislation clear the House.

Democrats and Republicans expressed concern that TikTok could be used by the Chinese government to gather information about the social media app's 170 million U.S. users.

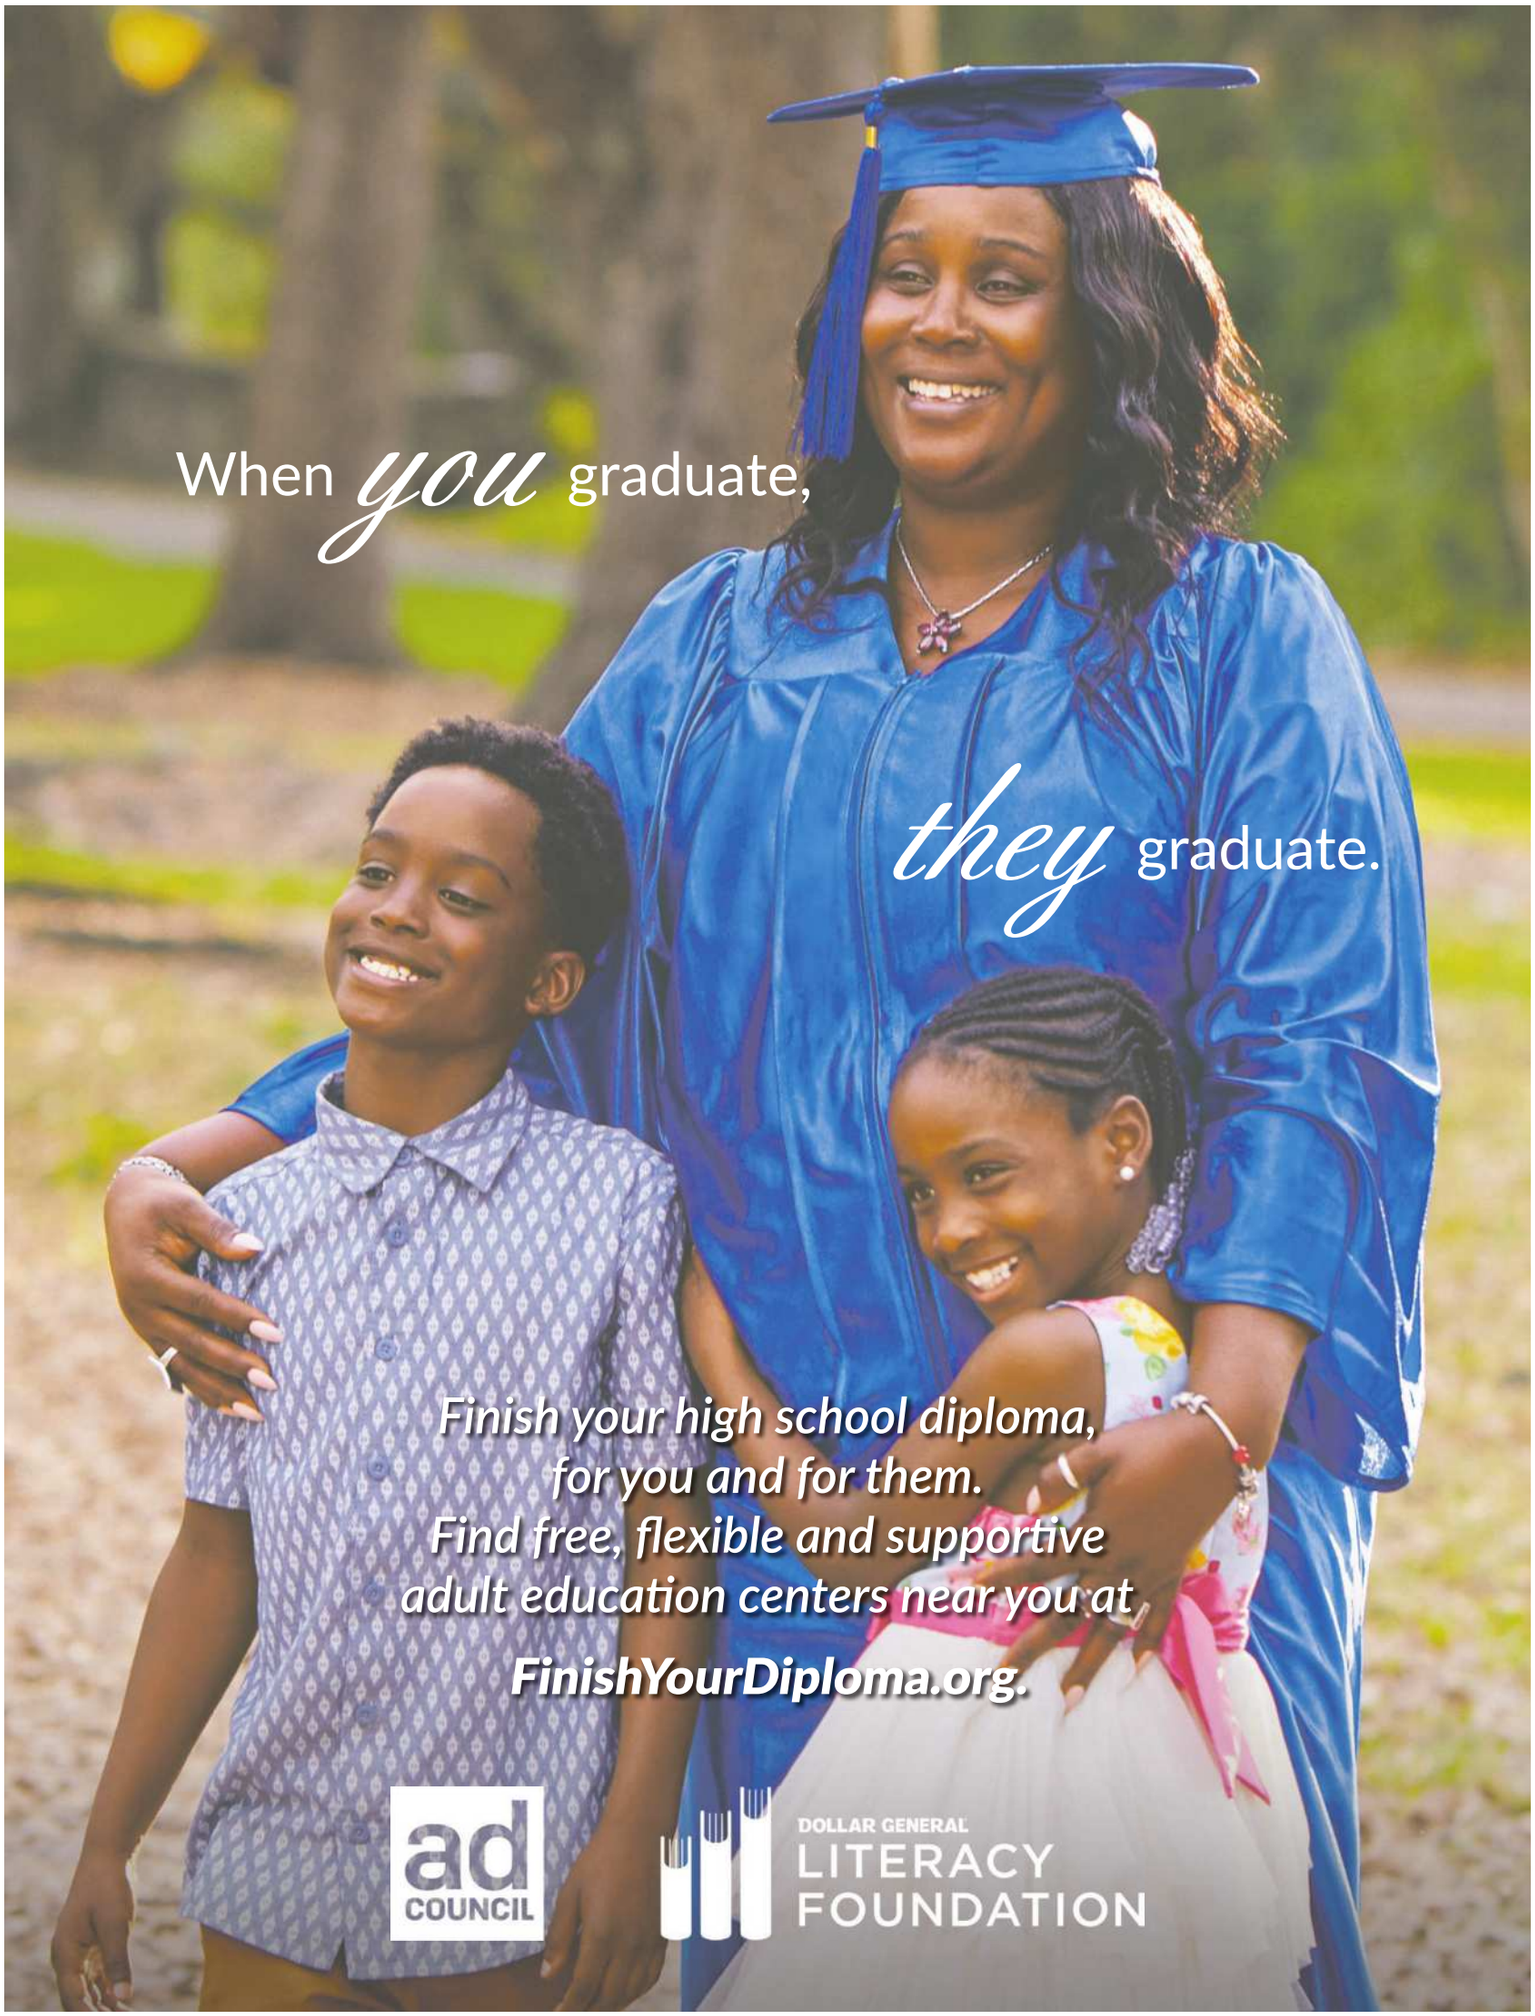

TikTok CEO Shou Zi Chew, who's from Singapore, used the platform last month to tell U.S. consumers his company would fight to maintain the status quo.

The platform has spent $5 million since last month on ads hoping to detour Congress from taking action against TikTok, according to The Associated Press. A company spokesman accused lawmakers of "using the cover of important foreign and humanitarian assistance" to push through legislation that TikTok said violates Americans' "free speech rights."

TikTok said it contributes $24 billion to the U.S. economy and is instrumental to many domestic businesses. An earlier version of the bill passed Tuesday aimed to give ByteDance a six-month deadline to sell the app to a U.S. company, though Biden could extend TikTok's window to one year before otherwise facing a ban.

MOVING & PAINFUL TALE

McAdams excels as harried mom caring for sick child in 'Mary Jane'

Amy Herzog's beautiful play "Mary Jane" is, at its core, a study of the extraordinary lengths to which a mother will go to care for her child. But the takeaway from time spent at the Samuel J. Friedman Theatre goes beyond even that realization. You leave after 90 minutes with a near-crushing awareness of the unfairness of life.

You wonder anew why some moms get to stand in playgrounds on gorgeous fall afternoons while their kids run around and laugh even as others with the same well of love inside are forced to deal with hospital beds and code blues, the ups and downs of shifting diagnoses, live-in nurses, drug regimens and hospital music therapists who cannot be tracked down in time.

"Mary Jane," which now stars the excellent Rachel McAdams in the title role and was first seen at the New York Theatre Workshop in 2017, is a closely observed play, reflective of the same attention to detail that its title character showers on her child, who suffers from cerebral palsy. The play, to be clear, is not about the kid (whom we never fully see), but about his mom and her experience caring first for her child at home and then in the hospital. The writer draws from her own experience with a sick kid and as you watch this journey you constantly think to yourself that Herzog must have had that very conversation. They're all too visceral to have been made up from whole cloth.

There is an agonizing scene with a music therapist (Lily Santiago), a reminder of how one woman's ordinary busy day can be another's definitional tragedy. But the most powerful of these scenes involves a conversation with a doctor, played with clinical acuity by April Matthis. The subtext of the scene is that the doctor, leaving room for hope, is gently trying to get the mother to realize the bleakness of her child's prospects and thus to better weigh the risks and benefits. Herzog's skill as a writer means that you feel the conversation alongside McAdams' character, you are alongside her on a journey no-one wants to take.

Medical dramas are very difficult to stage in a live theater for all kinds of reasons. But Anne Kauffman (with the help of a simple but emotionally rich design from Lael Jellinek) calibrates this one with an authenticity unfamiliar from hospital procedurals. There is an exquisite grasp here of the feeling that Karen Carpenter was expressing when she sang "Don't they know it's the end of the world?," the bizarre disconnect those under familial stress feel when the world refuses to stop or even slow down. "Why do the birds go on singing?" indeed. But they always do.

Mary Jane is a personal assistant who is struggling to care for her child and keep her job, and McAdams has a cheery, round face, a chirpy voice and an infectious smile. The power of the performance lies in McAdams' ability to deglamorize herself without letting that undermine the formidable optimism of this character: How could all of this happen to her? you keep thinking, letting the play send your mind spinning as to what life for Mary Jane would have been like without this challenge.

Herzog is writing about a mom who talks to relieve stress and prevent her own breakdown and she shares some of that compassion with a couple of other characters, including another hospital mom, Chaya, played by Susan Pourfar. This carefully calibrated and furiously unsentimental scene, intimate but uneasy between two women of diverse experience, will be familiar to anyone who has built an unlikely relationship in a hospital or care home.

Only the last scene, between Mary Jane and a chaplain (Brenda Wehle) does not ring entirely true. It's not clear that the writer knows what she wants to say about nonearthly matters, and thus the scene gets stuck in a bit of a rabbit hole.

But life as a parent in this world, loving a struggling kid? Hard to think of another Broadway show that understands so well.

"Early detection gave us more time to find information and support together."

If you're noticing changes, it could be Alzheimer's. Talk about visiting a doctor together.

MEET THE MET GALA!

Costume exhibit & benefit dinner to be a grand night for celeb fans

BY VIVIAN KWARM
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

With its extravagant dress code and star-studded guest list, the 2024 Met Gala is almost upon us.

Every year on the first Monday in May, a veritable pop culture who's who assembles at the Metropolitan Museum of Art to attend the Costume Institute's exhibition and benefit dinner.

Following last year's event, which was in honor of the late Karl Lagerfeld, this year's exhibition is called "Sleeping Beauties: Reawakening Fashion," and the official dress code theme for the party is "The Garden of Time."

And as for who's expected to attend this year's black-tie benefit, the 2024 hosts will definitely be there, so fans can be assured that Zendaya, Bad Bunny, Liam Hemsworth and Jennifer Lopez will be in attendance.

This group follows last year's co-chairs, which included Penelope Cruz, Michaela Coel, Roger Federer, Dua Lipa, and, of course, Vogue's editor in chief, Anna Wintour.

The big question is, what celebrities are on the guest list? While the complete roster of invitees is a heavily guarded secret, previous galas can give us a glimpse into who might grace fashion's most anticipated night.

Based on years past, we can safely bet on showstoppers like Rihanna, Blake Lively, the Kardashians and Beyoncé.

Although Taylor Swift hasn't announced whether she'll be in attendance, over the course of her career she has attended six Met Galas. In 2016, she wore a wore a metallic Louis Vuitton dress to the event, but that was the last time she attended.

In the eight years since her last appearance, the Kardashians have consistently been in attendance, so if Swift were to attend this year, it's likely she'd run into her nemesis, Kim Kardashian.

That encounter is unlikely, though. The Gala is just three days before Swift restarts the Eras Tour in Paris with four shows. She'll follow that with dates throughout Europe and the U.K. until the end of August.

Zendaya, however, is making a grand return after a five-year hiatus from the Met steps. The 27-year-old actress says, while it's "exciting," it's also "terrifying."

"Going up the steps is very daunting, and I haven't been back for maybe four or five years," she said in an April 23 interview on "Live With Kelly and Mark." "So this is, like, my first time back at the Met in quite a while."

The "Challengers" star also confirmed that retired longtime stylist Law Roach would be the person to ask what she's wearing.

"It's fun in the sense that I like to look at fashion as creativity," she said. "Even in press tours, it's a way to continue the creativity from the film. … I like to just create characters, because ultimately sometimes, doing this for a living feels a little weird and awkward and I'm more of a shy, introverted person, so I get to create these characters."

Fashion's biggest night takes place May 6 at the Metropolitan Museum of Art on the Upper East Side at 6 p.m. Eastern time. The red carpet can be streamed on Vogue's website and will be broadcast on E!

Building blocks

Albany legislators and Gov. Hochul are calling victory on the housing provisions painstakingly negotiated in the budget, which include much of what the governor sought. Kudos, though the battle is far from done.

If you've walked a mile in the wrong direction and then turn around and start jogging back, it might seem like you're making heady progress, but you're not only far from where you need to be, you're much further than when you started.

We've let our housing stock stagnant for decades, with the emergency becoming just a little bit more acute with every passing administration since the city's population started growing again, sharply in the early 2000s. A more recent population dip might have bought a bit more time, but certainly hasn't reversed any market trends for housing.

Allowing 421a to expire two years ago was a monumental mistake that a replacement will only begin to fix now. That exact replacement is an untested modification of 421a, which might work better or might work worse. Getting rid of the bad floor area ratio cap and other concrete regulatory victories will move us further along, while additional eviction protections under the good cause umbrella are a bit of a wild card, watered down as they are from initial demands. What we need now is for lawmakers to keep going, to make housing a year-round priority, not the subject of one huge push per budget season.

There are plenty of public policies that require some caution and equivocation, but housing construction, especially in transit-rich areas, is not one of them. We need housing, we need it in all income bands, we need it to be economically feasible to both build and maintain and actually live in, we need it in perpetuity and we need a lot of it.

The bursting of the commercial real estate bubble was out of left field, a slow-moving trend that was made suddenly into a lightning-speed one overnight by the pandemic, but one fact of life is that human beings will always need somewhere to live. In fact, the budget recognizes that the decline of the former can benefit the latter via office conversions, one plank in an overarching strategy.

Even if proximity to jobs becomes less and less of a factor, they'll want this place to be near entertainment, commercial opportunity and the ability to get around. There is no real debate about this, which means that the only conceivable path forward is to keep pushing for this demand to be satisfied.

A moonshot plan like the governor's efforts last year, which would have much more explicitly forced the issue via the exercise of state power, is ideal. We don't put much blame on her for its collapse, which was driven by the legislative leaders beholden to handfuls of protesting suburban legislators who won't personally face the consequences of ever-climbing rents. Now, lawmakers have delivered something that checks many of the right boxes, but they shouldn't forget they're starting from behind.

The New York middle class has been heading for the exits and a surprisingly resilient economy is battling against escalating costs driven by child care and, yes, rent. At least the message has set in that we cannot keep moving in the wrong direction, but lawmakers have a long road ahead.

When protest turns to hatred

Monday, with all classes being held remote, the environs of Columbia University were anything but quiet. On the South Lawn in front of Butler Library was the tent city of students with the misguided idea to boycott Israel. These students were visited by leftwing councilmembers, who hold the same wrongheaded stand.

But far worse, outside the gates on Broadway, exercising their First Amendment right to spread hate under the watchful eyes of a great many NYPD cops, were a hardcore bunch of anti-Israel zealots (be they students or not), with their loud, nasty chants and their banging drums. Their message was that Israel is committing genocide in Gaza, a horrendous lie, and the world's only Jewish state must be destroyed. It was a lot less pro-Palestinian than viciously anti-Israel and antisemitic.

And so once again, the free Palestine movement is infected with antisemitism, the socialism of fools, an embarrassing and disgusting reality that they will not admit.

Columbia President Minouche Shafik was correct to tell Congress last week that there is Jew-hatred on campus and some Jewish students are fearful, with a campus rabbi suggesting they stay away.

Yes, we know that there are Jewish students in the tent city and are there probably Jews in the noxious gang on Broadway, but the presence of an anti-Zionist Jewish minority – which has always existed – does not whitewash the antisemitism coursing through the anti-Israel protests at Columbia and elsewhere, on and off campus.

There are a lot of people who despise Israeli Prime Minister Bibi Netanyahu and want him out of office and maybe even locked up in jail. That might constitute a majority of the Israeli electorate, but those Israelis do not want their country wiped off the map. There is a great difference in wanting Israel to change its policy, in its war with Hamas, in its treatment of Palestinians on the West Bank, in its relations with its Arab neighbors, and wanting there not to be an Israel.

As for Shafik, she followed up her congressional testimony by suspending the original group in tents in front of Butler for violating university policies (which they were doing) and called the cops to remove the trespassers. That move blew up in her face, causing the hateful gang on Broadway to appear and demands for her head.

Monday, Republican congressmen had gathered on the other side of Broadway from the noisy protesters to call for Shafik to resign. Later in the day some Democratic congressmen went to campus to show solidarity with Jewish students being targeted. What an awful way to spend Passover.

Everyone is upset as anti-Israel students feel that their right to legitimate protest (a college tradition) is being impinged, while some Jews on campus are feeling afraid (a tremendous breach of the idea of university) and the professional Israel-haters out in the street raise their voices and the temperature under the protection of the police and the Constitution.

Free speech, even hateful speech, should be respected on and off campus. But intimidation and threats should not be permitted. As for violating campus rules about tents and such, that is a matter between the students and the administration.

Feds help Puerto Rico's congregations

BE OUR GUEST

BY LUIS DÁVILA-PERNAS AND DAVID GUILLOTY

For the past several decades, the people of Puerto Rico have come to expect that every few years we have to prepare to brace ourselves for what Mother Nature has in store. The hurricanes we have come to expect take innocent lives, knock out our power grid, and wreak havoc on our infrastructure and tourism business.

Being an island, getting resources to those who need it most expeditiously has always been challenging and we look to partners on the ground who have broad reach and established trust within our communities. And while those are sometimes in short supply, the faith-based community has always been a source of reliability in times of need.

However, for years, federal rules have prevented these partners from receiving disaster funding, hampering our response efforts – thankfully that has finally changed.

Earlier this month, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) issued Federal Register Notice Vol. 89, No. 64 (April 2, 2024), 89 FR 22736, granting a new waiver determination that extends emergency relief funding through the Community Development Block Grant for Disaster Recovery (CDBG-DR) Program to houses of worship in Puerto Rico.

This policy exception, tailored specifically for Puerto Rico, will enable faith-based organizations that are already recipients of the Federal Emergency Management Agency's (FEMA) Public Assistance (PA) Program to access additional disaster relief funding.

The waiver will streamline the process for accessing CDBG-DR funding through the Puerto Rico Department of Housing's (PRDOH) Non-Federal Match Program to cover the non-federal cost share for FEMA's PA Program, specifically for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of houses of worship damaged or destroyed by Hurricanes Irma and María.

Following HUD's groundbreaking policy change, faith-based organizations in Puerto Rico are poised to receive much-needed support in their ongoing recovery efforts. This adjustment could impact more than 90 eligible entities and unlock the potential of infusing more than $800 million of CDBG-DR funding into local construction projects.

This significant milestone comes after years of steadfast advocacy and determination by affected faith-based organizations, striving for fairness and equitable access in the allocation of disaster relief aid. It also underscores the lengthy and challenging struggle that led to this policy change.

In the wake of a violent hurricane season in 2017, these organizations collaborated at the forefront of the disaster recovery efforts and were crucial in providing aid to the most affected, remote, and vulnerable communities in Puerto Rico.

Many of these organizations also suffered their own surmountable losses, and despite acquiring approval to receive assistance under FEMA's PA Program for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of their houses of worship, they remained in desperate need of additional funding to cover significant costs. Therefore, this waiver signifies a crucial step forward in addressing the persistent challenges that faith-based organizations face in the aftermath of natural disasters.

Moreover, this move aligns with principles of fairness and inclusivity, enhancing disaster relief efforts by empowering these organizations to conduct infrastructure repairs and reconstruction and implement hazard mitigation measures.

It also fosters collaboration among stakeholders, paving the way for a more coordinated approach to disaster recovery and creating more resilient communities equipped to withstand and recover from future disasters.

It is important to recognize that many of these organizations played a pivotal role in the disaster recovery process after Hurricanes Irma and María. Oftentimes their churches, sanctuaries, and principal places of worship served as centers for support, shelter, and supply distribution, as well as gathering places for citizens to obtain information after the disasters. Their inclusion in this funding program reaffirms their commitment to aiding the communities they serve.

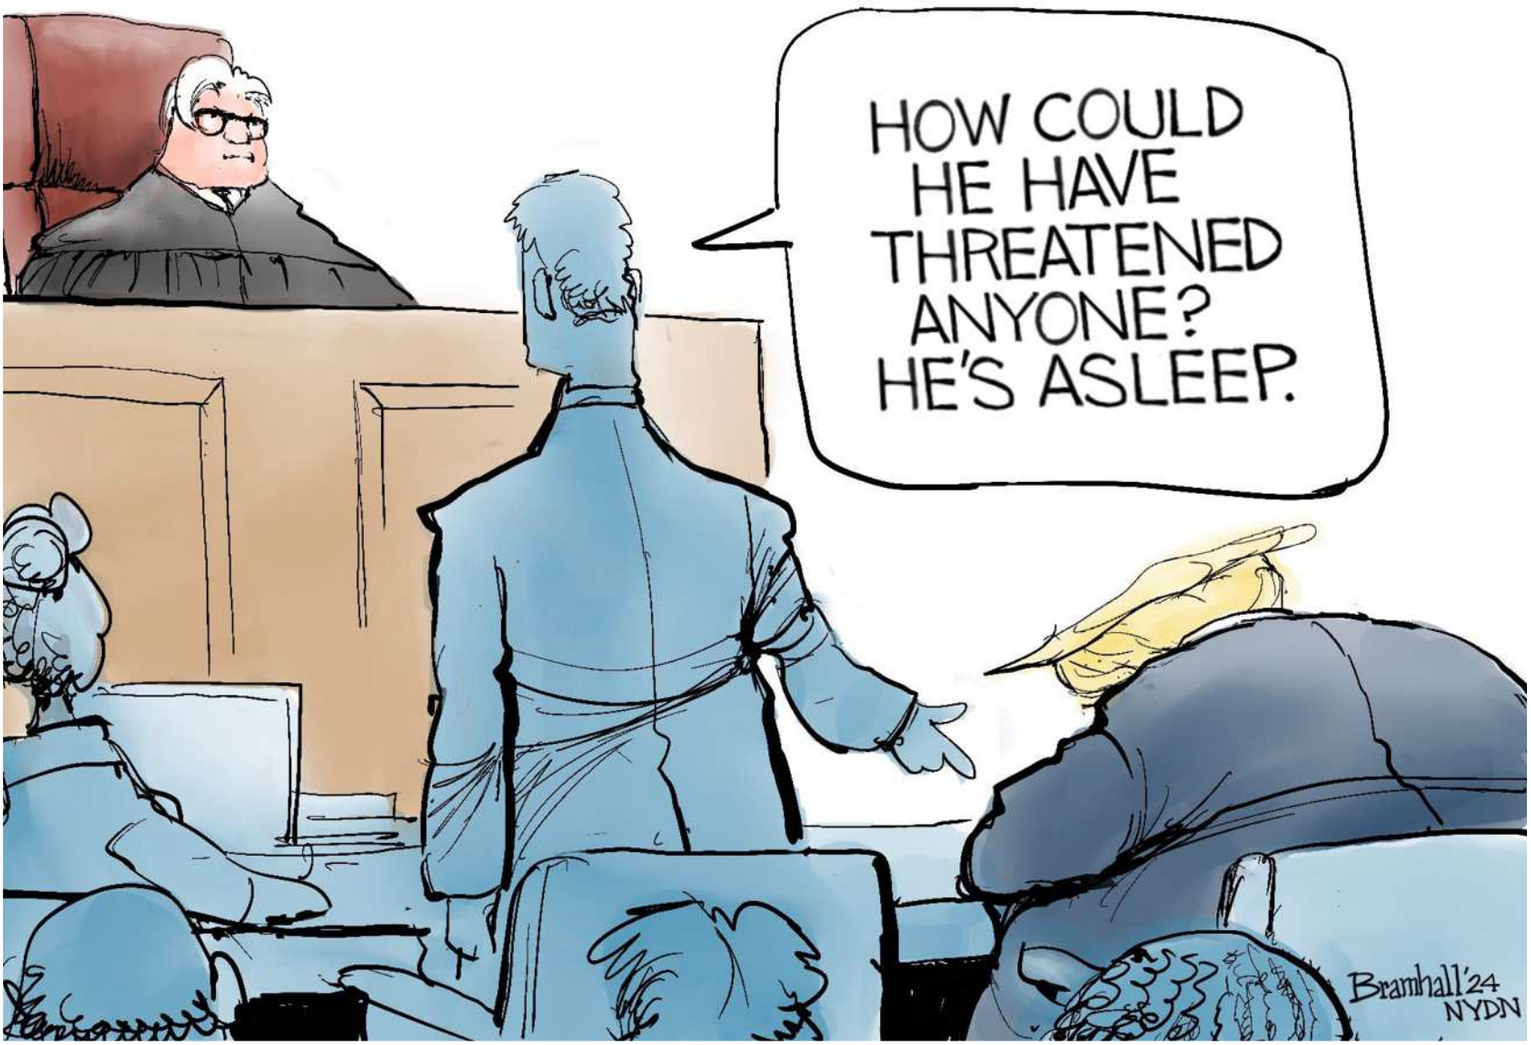

HUD's announcement is a welcomed development. It demonstrates the unwavering dedication of government agencies, communities, activists, and lawmakers who have persistently advocated for equality and justice in disaster recovery efforts.

This adjustment goes beyond mere bureaucratic reshuffling; it represents a profound demonstration of solidarity with faith-based organizations on the island, acknowledging their irreplaceable role in nurturing resilience and aiding in the reconstruction of shattered lives and communities.

We owe immense gratitude to the Biden-Harris administration and the congressional leadership for spearheading this reform, which shows that bipartisan cooperation can lead to meaningful change. Looking ahead, let us ensure that every community, irrespective of creed or affiliation, receives the necessary support to weather adversity and emerge on the other side as a stronger and more resilient people.

Dávila-Pernas serves as executive director and Guilloty is policy advisor for the Puerto Rico Office of Federal Affairs.

BRAMHALL'S WORLD

Congestion pricing is good for NYC's rideshare

BE OUR GUEST

BY FRANK REIG

New York is becoming a less welcoming city for cars. That's a good thing. The final plan for congestion pricing, the new tolling structure for vehicles entering Manhattan south of 60th St. was recently approved by the MTA's board. This was once unthinkable. But such ideas to make Manhattan better for people, not cars, are usually right. We should embrace more of them.

You may be asking why I, the founder of a company that relies on cars moving around the city to make money, would support congestion pricing and "anti-car" policies. First off, I've lived in New York all my life so I know cars are not always the best way to get around – I bike wherever I can.

And secondly, while it's true Revels and other rideshare vehicles will have an added fee every time they go into the tolling zone, the new operating environment congestion pricing creates will be much better for our riders and drivers, and ultimately our bottom line too.

In a November study on the effects of congestion pricing, the MTA estimated the program will decrease the total number of vehicles entering the CBD by 17%. The benefits will be immediate: fewer polluting tailpipes worsening our air quality, less horn blaring from frustrated drivers in gridlock, and hopefully safer streets too.

It will also allow the cars still entering the CBD to get where they're going faster (current average speed in the CBD is just 5-7 mph, about twice as fast as walking). For ridesharing, that means a more efficient service.

Based on an analysis we did of Revel ride patterns, the MTA's projections and NYC Open Data, congestion pricing will shorten the amount of time passengers wait for a car to arrive and how long their trip is by up to 10%. It'll also increase the number of rides we provide per hour because drivers will get to their next passenger sooner, cutting down on idle time and making the most of each vehicle in operation.

Importantly for drivers, those trends will up the total time they spend with passengers which, assuming that tracks industry-wide, will help the vast majority of rideshare drivers whose pay is based on that metric.

But the real benefits of congestion pricing are for pedestrians. The more we reduce air and noise pollution while improving livability, the better our city will be for residents, tourists and local businesses.

The furthest measure I support is banning cars outright from the densest commercial and residential areas. Places like SoHo, parts of the Financial District or Lower East Side, where whole streets could be permanently pedestrianized. Indeed, the DOT did this just last weekend for Earth Day, shutting down streets in all five boroughs, even 30 blocks of Broadway from Times Square to Union Square.

A walkable lifestyle is one of the main appeals of being in New York. The best restaurants, shops, parks, museums, etc. are all accessible without having to get behind a wheel. It's the only place in America built like this, and we should double down on it.

Given how politically difficult congestion pricing has been, this wouldn't be easy. Yet, thanks to the city's Open Streets program and other pandemic-era solutions, we know what new experiences our streets can give us – from enjoying drinks and sunshine with friends outside, to farmer's markets and pop-ups, to safely teaching your kid how to ride a bike for the first time.

The rise in foot traffic is good for business too. Even a temporary weekend-only car ban during the holiday season boosted consumer spending by $3 million on Fifth Ave. It gives more personality to communities and simply makes us happier when we take space back in our city.

An intermediate step would be electric-only zones. We view EVs as a climate solution, which they are at a macro level, but more immediate for cities is the impact they can have on public health. Upwards of 1,400 New Yorkers die every year as a direct result of vehicle exhaust and countless others suffer long-term respiratory damage.

Restricting certain neighborhoods to EVs will eliminate more exhaust, further reduce congestion, encourage local EV adoption, and could create an additional revenue stream to invest in pedestrian-focused infrastructure.

Congestion pricing is not a finish line, it's a starting gun. Let's continue this momentum and transform our streets into destinations, not just a means to get from A to B. I can't wait for a future when there are a lot fewer cars in Manhattan, and the only ones that remain are electric and shared.

Reig is CEO & co-founder of Revel, the Brooklyn-based EV rideshare and infrastructure company.

A career of love for the Yankees and their fans

Whiting, N.J.: To my knowledge, there are no books written yet about the great Yankees announcer John Sterling. We can only hope he'll have the time, health and inclination to write his autobiography now, but here's an outline of a book someone else might write about him if he doesn't.

The first section might be called "Sterling's Legacy of Longevity." We all know the incredible stats: 36 years of calling Yankees games; 5,060 consecutive games called; announcing all regular season and postseason games that Derek Jeter and Mariano Rivera appeared in, and so on. But the second section would show what drove him to these achievements, what made him tick, and what made him so consistently cheerful calling Yankees games in good years and bad since 1989.

John's love for the team can best be interpreted by his actions. He never missed a game despite becoming a father of triplets in 2000, displaced by a fire in 2015, and being hospitalized for a blood infection at 81 in 2020. He could have drowned in his car during Hurricane Ida when fellow Yankees announcer Rickie Ricardo saved his stranded colleague after a broadcast (2021), but, unshaken, John (photo) got behind the mic the very next day!

Last year, a foul ball smashed him on the forehead in the broadcast booth a few weeks before his 85th birthday. He enthusiastically finished calling the game, never missing a beat. Only a passionate love for his job and the team he worked for (and loved since childhood) could keep him going through all of these events at that age! John definitely belongs in Monument Park and Cooperstown. Chet Jelinski

AP

Historic role

Kearny, N.J.: Best wishes to Yankees announcer John Sterling on his retirement! He comes from a long lineage of relatives who have done similar work. In fact, after the Civil War, John's great-great-great-grandfather rode on horseback throughout New York City yelling, "The Yankees win! The Yankees win!" Kevin Dale

Restive youth

Whitestone: All of these anti-Israel protesters who have not even contributed anything to this great country of America should be picked up, brought to the airport, placed on a plane and flown out of this country. They should be prohibited from returning. How dare they go and protest against Israel every day? These are not protests, these are assaults. They are committing crimes. Where are our elected officials ensuring the safety of all citizens? We need to stop this immediately. Gene O'Brien

Institutional challenge

Cincinnati: Informed by her presidential colleagues' disastrous congressional testimony a few months ago, Columbia University President Minouche Shafik said all the right things about antisemitism on campus the other day. But the timeline of her actions since the Hamas butchery against Israel in October discloses a slack performance against student and faculty bullies who intimidate Jewish students. The Jew-hatred across these fruited plains on many campuses and public squares puts the lie to the idea that anti-Israel arguments are legitimate and not the focus of generalized antisemitism. How will Shafik deal with contracted faculty who express hatred for Jews, especially those with tenure? Paul Bloustein

Peace path not traveled

Kings Park, L.I.: If the protesters at Columbia and elsewhere are really protesting for peace, why aren't they also demanding that Hamas release the hostages, the easy solution to end this war? Andrew Ross

Sanctity of life

Manhattan: Continuing coverage of the Columbia affair ("Rabbi to Jewish students: Stay home & be safe," April 22) seems to have omitted the good Rav's concern for the safety of Palestinian civilians. If the Zionist state would cease the killings, the Gazanistas might pack up their campus tents and return to their nomadic ways. Since collateral casualties are part of the IDF engagement rationale, Jewish students should be glad to sacrifice for Israel. Michele P. Brown

Ominous advice

Brooklyn: Advising the Jewish students of Columbia University to stay home is horrifying and disgusting. This advice only encourages those who are participating in acts of antisemitism to become even bolder. The city police and campus security should have a larger presence to prevent further acts of hate. Remember Germany in the 1930s? Melissa Lieberman

Blood libel

Calgary, Alberta: To Voicer Eugene Elander: Permit me to quote from My Jewish Learning's Passover 2024: "Jews in the medieval European ghettos loved Passover, finding inspiration in the events of the past and eternal hope for the future. Unfortunately, the joyous anticipation generated by the approach of the holiday gave way to abject terror, beginning in the latter part of the Middle Ages with the spread of malicious blood libels at Passover time, around the date of Easter. In 1144, the first accusation, in Norwich, England, maintained that the Jews had killed a Christian child, repeating the crucifixion of Jesus." Today, 880 years after the Norwich blood libel, Jews are condemned for deliberately starving Gazans, indiscriminately murdering children, attacking hospitals and murdering journalists and doctors. The only thing missing are accusations that Israelis are using the blood of Gaza's children for their Passover baking, although accusations that Israelis are stealing organs from Palestinians are about the same. Larry Shapiro

Naming names

East Meadow, L.I.: Voicer Wallington Simpson said that if Voicer Lester Simon knows of Republicans who are neo-Nazi sewer rats, he should call them out by name. Well, Wallington, I'll do the honors. Nick Fuentes, an avowed admirer of Adolf Hitler who has called for a "holy war" against Jews; former New York gubernatorial candidate Carl Paladino, who said America needs a leader like Hitler; Nate Hochman, a Republican speechwriter who created and shared a video that featured Ron DeSantis at the center of a Sonnenrad, an ancient symbol appropriated by the Nazis; Joseph A. Gibson III, North Carolina House candidate who posts white supremacist material online and simulcasts his podcast on the neo-Nazi National Socialist Movement Network; and Sebastian Gorka, who has ties to Vitezi Rend, a Hungarian nationalist organization with deep ties to Hitler and the Nazi party. And Reps. Paul Gosar and Marjorie Taylor "Jewish space lasers" Greene proudly attended a white nationalist neo-Nazi gathering in Florida in February 2022. Richard Skibins

Red scare

Mahwah, N.J.: Where is Joe McCarthy when we need him? The U.S. House of Representatives has been infiltrated by Communists led by Marjorie Taylor Greene. Richard Gilbert

Singular divider

Staten Island: One thing is indisputable that all of us can agree upon. Never before in my 72 years have I ever thought that family, friends and colleagues would be torn apart because of their differing beliefs about one person — in this case, Donald Trump. He has caused more division, angst and disrespect between these people that anyone could have ever imagined. Damn him for this. And for that alone, if there was ever anyone who deserves to go to hell and enjoy the trip in the process, it's Donald Trump. Dennis Pascale

Wisdom of the press

Plainview, L.I.: Re "Real crimes and misdemeanors" (editorial, April 21): I dare say that even though the Daily News editorial writers' modesty compels you to say, "We don't understand [the obtuseness of numerous New York State laws regarding misdemeanors and felonies], but we never got a law degree," you still seem wiser to me than the 213 current (and past) state legislators (many of them lawyers!) who have written all of our loophole-laden, ineffective or unfair laws, as well as the current bail reform rules. I would much rather live under well-thought-out, intelligently enforced laws crafted by you guys (and gals) than by our elected government lawmakers. As Thomas Jefferson once wrote: "Were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter." Richard Siegelman

Two killers who stabbed Bronx dad-to-be held sick celebration at bar, cops say

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA AND ELIZABETH KEOGH
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

After stabbing a father-to-be to death on a Bronx street, two men being sought by police took to a local bar to "celebrate" their killing, an NYPD official said Tuesday.

Keven Ramirez, 27, died Sunday after showing up at Bronx-Care Health System just before 12:55 a.m., police said.

Detectives retraced the slain man's steps and determined he was attacked on Wythe Place in Mount Eden not far from where he lived.

Ramirez was stabbed once in the chest after what appeared to be an argument between several men on the block, according to NYPD Chief of Detectives Joseph Kenny.

The stabbing punctured an artery and left Ramirez (inset) with massive internal bleeding. Hospital staff gave him 30 units of blood, but he could not be saved.

Detectives reviewing video surveillance after the stabbing spotted two men run off and duck into a bar about two blocks from the murder scene.

"They go into a local tavern, order a bucket of Coronas and celebrate their kill," Kenny said at a news briefing Tuesday.

Ramirez and his girlfriend Yomaira Gomez were expecting their second child in just two weeks, the devastated woman told the Daily News on Monday.

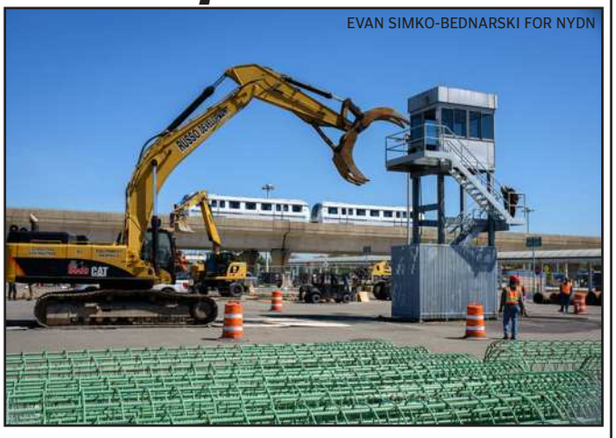

"So I didn't get time to say 'bye, you know? Maybe if you called me at the time it happened, maybe I would have time to see my baby daddy and he would talk to me," she said. "But he already passed."

Police are still working to track down the men caught on camera sickly celebrating Ramirez's death.

"They didn't seem too concerned that they just killed somebody," said Kenny, who viewed the video.

JFK's parking lot to become the biggest solar array in the state

BY EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI FOR NYDN

The future is looking sunny for Kennedy Airport's long-term parking lot No. 9.

Construction (r.) began Tuesday on a solar array meant to cover some 21 acres of the lot while maintaining the car park beneath.

"If that sounds big, it is," said Rick Cotton, executive director of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey.

"It will be the largest solar carport and energy storage system anywhere in New York State."

The array is expected to generate 12 megawatts of power when it's completed in 2026. Cotton said that is expected to eliminate more than 6,000 tons of greenhouse gas emissions.

The project also includes roughly 7.5 megawatts of battery storage to keep power constant during periods of peak usage.

About half of the electricity generated by the system will go into powering JFK's AirTrain, officials said, while the other half will go back into the grid.

That power will offset electricity costs for low-income households in the neighborhoods surrounding JFK for the next 25 years, officials said.

"The electricity generated … will be sold into Con Ed's local grid, improving the system's resiliency and providing clean energy to the surrounding community," said Justin Driscoll, CEO of the New York Power Authority.

"Additionally, bill credits generated will be offered to low-income housing providers, such as NYCHA, to reduce the cost of electric bills," he added.

The array is being designed by energy firm TotalEnergies, which has also been contracted to operate the solar power operation for 25 years.

Port officials said the first phase of the project, which will deliver power to the airport, is expected to be completed by next March.

Phase 2, which involves connecting the solar array to the local grid in order to provide power to the surrounding community, is expected to be finished by April 2026.

Construction will be done on a rolling basis, Cotton said, and is not expected to disrupt long-term parking at the airport.

26-year-old shot and killed in B'klyn

BY JULIAN ROBERTS-GRMELA AND ELIZABETH KEOGH
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A man was shot and killed in Brooklyn on Tuesday, police said.

Police were called to Rogers Ave. near Park Place in Crown Heights for reports of a man shot just before 4:10 p.m., cops said.

When they arrived, they discovered a 26-year-old man with gunshot wounds to the neck and stomach.

Medics rushed him to Kings County Hospital, where he died just before 4:40 p.m., police said.

A gunman wearing a gray shirt and black pants was spotted taking off on foot eastbound on Park Place, they added. Cops (crime scene above) were working to track him down later Tuesday.

The victim's name was not immediately released.

About a block away from the gunfire, a neighbor was walking with her 3-year-old nephew.

"We were gonna come here, to Rogers Ave., but something in my mind said, 'No, don't come here,'" recalled Nikitta Al-Amin, 33. "So we just turned the corner and went the other way. I thank God that I listened to my mind."

Al-Amin's mother told the Daily News the shooting was the second incident on the block in less than a year.

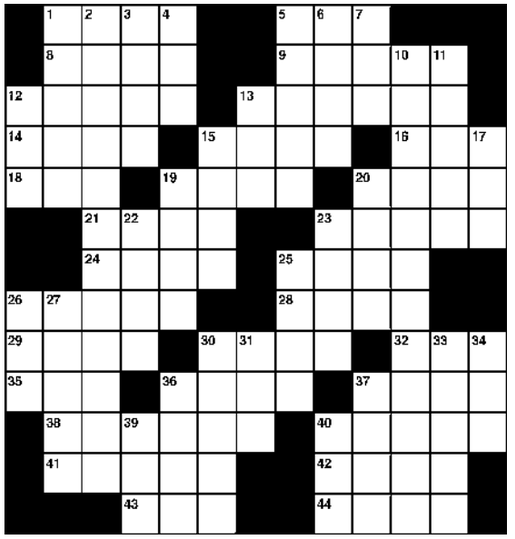

"But the other person survived," said Shariz Al-Amin. "I just wish that the government would do more against guns because these guns are not walking in here by themselves. It's like with the crack epidemic."

Your HOROSCOPE

BY TAROT.COM

For Wednesday, April 24

When the emotional Moon experiences discomfort with intellectual Mercury, expressing ourselves will be more complicated than normal. We're in danger of reading too much or too little into what other people are saying. Later on, the Moon harmonizes with dedicated Saturn, enabling us to be more self-reliant and self-disciplined. This creates a stable state of mind where we can emotionally develop, even if we can't express what we're going through. We can do it!

ARIES

MARCH 21-APRIL 19

How you see yourself can get jumbled up with fear. It may be difficult to figure out the way forward at this time. Study any sense of confusion that arises in the clash of harsh words or long-standing grudges from others against your knowledge of your true self. Don't let naysayers tell you who you are.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

You might not know how you feel today. Someone could be asking you to make a decision quickly. Unfortunately for them, you just may not have a full response prepped yet. You don't exist on their timeline — you exist on your own. Rushing for the sake of others will not serve your highest good at the moment.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

You may notice that other people are reading too much into what you're saying. They might be doing this out of sincere ignorance, but they could also be purposefully misreading you in a form of weaponized incompetence. People who aren't in your corner shouldn't dictate your future.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

What you mean and how you're seen might currently be two different things. You're meant to speak with intention, so be wary of saying too much or too little. Small gestures can make a huge difference in how others see you. Be genuine by saying only what's true.

LEO

JULY 23-AUG. 22

Peers may appreciate a window into your current feelings. You're likely someone who is truly sensitive beneath it all. At any moment, someone could catch a glimpse of your emotional core before you're able to cover it back up. Just make sure you don't wallow in them for too long.

VIRGO

AUG. 23-SEPT. 22

Relying on someone else too much could come back to bite you without warning. It's wonderful to have a business partner, dependable pal or love interest, but watch out. It could be that you're the one who's giving too much while the other takes incessantly. The more even any relationship is, the better the outcome.

LIBRA

SEPT. 23-OCT. 22

Relationships can be hard for you to navigate at the moment. Opposingly, it's possible that you're the one who isn't quite acting like your usual self. It's important to make sure you're talking about your feelings, because keeping everything inside can lead to stress. Silence isn't the answer.

SCORPIO

OCT. 23-NOV. 21

You may wonder if getting your feelings off of your chest would actually be worth it. Someone could be encouraging you to open up, but you're unsure if they simply crave gossip or if you can genuinely trust them with your deepest emotions. Make an effort to explain yourself in a positive way.

SAGITTARIUS

NOV. 22-DEC. 21

You might be reading too much into what other people are saying. There's a strong chance your mind is exaggerating things. It's important to have a sense of self-reliance and avoid depending on someone else for everything, but if you need help, then you're allowed to ask for it.

CAPRICORN

DEC. 22-JAN. 19

Family might not understand your dreams. You could be trying to show them your vision for your life, but instead of hyping you up, you have to fend off tons of pointed questions. You could also gently remind them that you can only handle so much advice at once.

AQUARIUS

JAN. 20-FEB. 18

You can express yourself in a very public way today. It's possible that you've been keeping something inside for a long time. It can be difficult to tell hard truths about yourself or your life and your journey, but others should be more respectful and helpful to you.

PISCES

FEB. 19-MARCH 20

Security may not come as easily as it used to. You may have once had strong job security or friendly connections, or maybe you overcame something smaller. Either way, when faced with a lack of belonging in the places where you want to spend time, giving up may sound like the least painful option. You can build a place for yourself anywhere.

Joel Embiid gives the Knicks some more bulletin board material after their Game 2 victory. GETTY

Confident Embiid thinks Sixers will 'win this series'

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Joel Embiid gave the Knicks a little more bulletin-board material after his 76ers' lost Game 2.

The superstar center confidently declared that Philadelphia – down 0-2 after Monday's instant classic at Madison Square Garden – would come back to win the first-round playoff series.

"We should be 2-0, so we're good," Embiid said at his locker. "We're gonna win this series. We're gonna win this. We know what we've got to fix. We did a better job today, so we're gonna fix it. But we're the better team, and we're gonna keep fighting."

Embiid's bold claim came moments after Donte DiVincenzo's go-ahead 3-pointer with 13 seconds remaining completed a chaotic comeback by the Knicks in their 104-101 win.

Playing in his eighth game since returning from an early-February knee surgery, Embiid finished with 34 points, 10 rebounds and six assists in 39 minutes on Monday.

Embiid, the reigning NBA MVP, is the latest member of the Sixers to offer fighting words. Before the series, backup center Paul Reed suggested the 76ers preferred playing the second-seeded Knicks to the top-seeded Boston Celtics in the first round.

"We wanted the Knicks matchup, of course," Reed said on the "Run It Back" podcast. "That's the easier team, I guess, but you know it's going to be fun. We match up pretty well."

Embiid also had 29 points, eight rebounds and six assists in Philadelphia's Game 1 loss but is shooting just 39.2% from the field in the series – down significantly from the 52.9% he shot in the regular season. In Game 1, Embiid appeared to tweak the left knee that was operated on less than three months ago, but he has continued to play, aside from a brief exit on Saturday.

All-Star point guard Tyrese Maxey led Philly with 33 points in Game 1 and 35 points in Game 2, despite playing through an illness in the latter.

Philadelphia will host the next two games, with Game 3 set to take place Thursday night and Game 4 scheduled for Sunday afternoon at the Wells Fargo Center.

Mid-range game may be key

More mid-range pull-up jumpers might help remedy Jalen Brunson's off-shooting nights in the Knicks' first-round playoff series against the Philadelphia 76ers.

Brunson shot 8-of-29 against the Sixers in Game 2 and 8-of-26 from the field in Game 1.

He is meeting a swarm of bodies when he drives to the paint plus an elongated extended arm closing out on three-point attempts courtesy of the 6-foot-8 bodies the 76ers use (Kelly Oubre Jr., Nic Batum, Tobias Harris) to chase the star Knicks guard around the court.

Yet Brunson is finding success in the stop-and-pop game, specifically around the foul line extended and when driving on the right side of the floor toward the baseline. The Knicks were also successful in Game 2 when they screened high, close to half-court, for Brunson, who then used his speed to create distance from his defender before generating a quality offensive possession.

He also found ways to manipulate the Sixers' defense in the second half, forcing defenders to collapse before finding Isaiah Hartenstein frequently for easy dump-off passes at the rim.

Hartenstein went scoreless in the first half but finished Game 2 with 14 points on 7-of-8 shooting from the field to go with eight rebounds, four assists and three blocks on the night.

KNICKS insider

By KRISTIAN WINFIELD

"I just love the way he's wired. And so just keep going. You never know when something changes," head coach Tom Thibodeau said of Brunson despite the off-shooting night. The star Knicks guard also added eight rebounds and six assists, while turning the ball over just once. "He's rebounding the ball. He's playmaking. He's not hesitating. And look, they're paying a lot of attention to him, which is opening up other things for us. So just keep going, and that's what I love. I want all our guys like that."

Brunson said he's going to allow his scoring to take a back seat to the main goal: winning.

"The one thing about this team: no one really cares who's doing what, who gets the credit for what. We just want to go out there and win. I said it last time: I could play bad again and we win, that's fine for me," he said. "Obviously I want to play better, but to the point where we're all sticking together no matter

HELP, WORK TO DO

BY KRISTIAN WINFIELD
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Reigning NBA Most Valuable Player of the Year and superstar Philadelphia 76ers center Joel Embiid sat at his locker, his face burrowed into his two ginormous hands after Monday night's heartbreaker.

His Sixers led the Knicks, 101-96, with 47.1 seconds left in regulation in Game 2 before the Knicks came roaring back – a Jalen Brunson prayer of a three here, a stolen inbounds pass there, a fateful offensive rebound and a dagger trey dialed up from Donte DiVincenzo – to take a 2-0 series lead with a miraculous 104-101 victory at Madison Square Garden.

Amid all those big plays by the Knicks, the home team also got two big breaks – and big ones.

The Last Two Minute report – conducted by the NBA – indicated that Tyrese Maxey was indeed fouled by Josh Hart when the Knicks stole the inbound pass on the bizarre play that resulted in them taking a 102-101 lead with 13 seconds remaining.

Officials also indicated that Sixers head coach Nick Nurse should have been granted a timeout prior to the ball being stolen.

The report will likely not make Philadelphia fans feel any better, however, the Knicks will surely take the 2-0 lead as they prepare to enter a hostile environment on Thursday.

"It is what it is. It happened. We've got to let it go," Maxey said. "We can't dwell on it now. If we dwell on it, then in a couple days we'll be down 0-3. We don't want to be down 0-3."

Embiid and co-star Maxey combined for 69 points, 19 rebounds and 16 assists (Maxey was one board shy of a triple double in Game 2) and combined to shoot 24-of-51 from the field and 14-of-18 from the foul line.

You can't ask for much more from Philly's All-Star duo.

There's much more to be asked of the role players, however, who haven't shown up in two games at The Garden this series.

Tobias Harris shot 4-of-11 from the field for 10 points, Kelly Oubre Jr. finished with four points on 2-of-7 shooting, sixth man Buddy Hield only scored two points in 15 minutes, and Nic Batum – a 6-foot-8 irritant on the defensive end – hit a pair of threes but finished with just six points in 33 points off the bench.

Players not named Embiid or Maxey scored just 32 points in Game 2 and 42 points in Game 1.

Head coach Tom Thibodeau and his Knicks expect this trend to change with the series shifting to Philadelphia's Wells Fargo Center for the next two games.

Hield, for example, shot better from both the field and three-point range and averaged 2.2 more points at home than he did on the road this season.

The numbers are skewed differently for Harris and Oubre, who each averaged more points per game on the road than they did at home this season – but role players performing better at home is one of the NBA's worst-kept secrets.

"You got the MVP, or last year's MVP. Maxey is one of the bright, young players in the league. Great speed. Great shooting ability. So any time you put two players like that in pick-and-roll, that puts a lot of pressure on your defense and it requires everyone to be tied together," Thibodeau said after Game 2's victory. "And we know that's the challenge. The thing is that overall, I think we're doing OK. We gotta do a lot better.

"We know going down to Philly it's gonna be different. We gotta clean things up. We gotta be better. 104 the first game, 101 the second game; and we gotta play better defense."

The Sixers believe they improved from Game 1 to 2. They believe they can take what they learned in Game 2, where they led the entire first half, couple their adjustments with an infusion of energy from their rowdy home fans, and tie the series with two wins on their own home floor.

"We played really well, did a lot of great things, played better in a bunch of areas tonight. It's obviously difficult when it's so close and you kind of give it away at the end. It's obviously difficult in these circumstances. This makes the series a little longer," Sixers coach Nick Nurse said with a smile after the loss. "If we get the win, it's a big – we've won one and we had a major accomplishment here. They've won their two home games. We've got to get back to our place, right? But just gotta – again: we played better than we didd the other night. I think we can continue to play even better than that, and that's what we've gotta focus on."

History, however, is on the Knicks' side.

Since 1970, only 13 teams have successfully come back from down 0-2 to win a first-round NBA playoff series. The other 183 teams went on to early playoff exits.

"It doesn't mean much. Job's not finished," Isaiah Hartenstein said of taking a 2-0 series lead and protecting home court. "It's only two games, so you have to win four to get it done. So we're just gonna keep going day by day and just approaching it like that because when you feel like you get too loose, that's when teams come back."

It was the Sixers who loosened the grip enough for the Knicks to steal Game 2 away on Monday.

Philadelphia now awaits a Knicks team that must secure a win in hostile territory to prevent a seven-game first-round series.

to Jalen jump-start

what, whatever the situation is, we're gonna have each other's back. So whatever's working at the time, we're just gonna keep going to it."

The Sixers were effective in running Brunson out of rhythm, specifically contesting his shots from behind when recovering off pick-and-roll actions. The Sixers' defensive pressure and length clearly rushed the Knicks guard at different times in the game.

"[I need to] slow down, be myself," he said. "Plain and simple."

Philadelphia will continue to throw each body at its disposal at Brunson in an attempt to throw him out of rhythm.

"[Nicolas Batum] is a great defender. Just gotta give them credit, they've been doing a great job," he said. "Him, Kelly, whoever. I gotta be better and will be at some point."

THE SHOT HEARD 'ROUND NYC

The Madison Square Garden crowd erupted when Donte DiVincenzo's go-ahead three ripped through the net with to put the Knicks up three with just seconds left on the game clock.

"It was huge. It was loud as hell in there," said DiVincenzo, who missed his first attempt at a dagger three before Hartenstein recovered the offensive rebound and got the ball back to the franchise's single-season leader in threes made. "Honestly, after I missed the first one I was really, really, really hoping that Isaiah got it because I knew the rotation of everything I was going to get a second look. Thank God he got the offensive rebound."

"I was hoping Isaiah got the offensive rebound, just because I knew I was gonna get a second opportunity. We practice that every day: dagger threes and second chance threes. So once OG got it, I just got my feet set, trusted the work I put in and thankfully it went down."

Jump to No. 8 wouldn't be shocking for Jets

BY ANTWAN STALEY
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The Jets addressed several needs this offseason.

However, Gang Green could still use offensive help in Thursday's draft.

According to general manager Joe Douglas, Mike Williams, whom the Jets signed to a one-year contract last month, probably won't be ready for the start of training camp. Because of that, the Jets need to examine if trading up to select either LSU wide receiver Malik Nabers or Washington wide receiver Rome Odunze would be beneficial.

"One thing I would say on the Jets, the one thing about them moving – If (Odunze) gets to eight, I could make a strong argument that the Jets could make an easy, painless flip with Atlanta," NFL Network draft analyst Daniel Jeremiah said last week. "They can leapfrog Chicago and take Odunze, which wouldn't cost them much.

"You give them a three, you give them a four, you could have other picks involved there."

Rome Odunze AP

According to the trade chart value by Drafttek, the Jets' No. 10 selection is worth 1,300 points. The Falcons' No. 8 spot is worth 1,200 points.

During this mock draft, the Jets trade up from 10th to eighth overall to select Odunze. In exchange, the Falcons receive the 10th pick, a 2024 fourth-round pick (111th overall) and a 2025 second-round pick.

● ROUND 1, 8th overall (projected trade with Falcons): Rome Odunze, WR, Washington

There's a reason the Jets should trade up and draft Odunze. He has everything a team wants in a receiver. Odunze has a great combination of size, speed, athleticism, and playmaking ability.

In 2023, he finished with 92 catches for 1,640 yards and 13 touchdowns. He was a First-Team Associated Press All-American and a First-Team All-Pac-12 selection.

If the Jets want to build the best offense around Aaron Rodgers, finding a way to draft Odunze is a must. With his route running and ability to bring down contested catches, Odunze would improve the offense immensely.

● ROUND 3, 72nd overall: Kiran Amegadjie, OT, Yale

If the Jets draft Odunze, they still need to add depth to their offensive line on Day 2. He might be a raw player from an Ivy League school, but Amegadjie is the best Football Championship Subdivision prospect in this year's draft.

At 6-5, 323 pounds, Amegadjie has an excellent blend of athleticism, length and size. What he lacks in experience, Amegadjie makes up for it with his footwork and explosiveness off the ball.

Amegadjie would be a great developmental prospect for the Jets. Tyron Smith and Morgan Moses will both become free agents following the 2024 season. The plan would be for Amegadjie to sit and learn from the two veterans and then become a starter in 2025.

● ROUND 4, 134th overall (via Ravens): DeWayne Carter, DT, Duke

Gang Green still could use reinforcements in the middle of its defensive line. Carter would be a tremendous value pick late in the fourth round.

A three-time captain at Duke, Carter played over 2,600 snaps in five seasons. During the 2023 campaign, her finished with 41 tackles, 3.5 tackles for loss and one sack.

Carter is a three-technique player, which means he is responsible for playing the gap between the guard and tackle. He is not a prospect likely to turn into a star, but he can stop running backs right in their tracks and have a positive effect on stopping the run. Last season, the Jets defense allowed 124 rushing yards per game, which was 25th in the NFL.

● ROUND 6, 185th overall: Jordan Travis, QB, Florida State

Travis is a fantastic athlete who showed grit during his five seasons at Florida State. His senior year was his best. Travis passed for 2,756 yards, 20 touchdowns, and two interceptions in 2023.

It's unclear if Travis can be Rodgers' successor. But in the sixth round, why not take a flyer on a player who has continued to improve throughout the last three seasons?

● ROUND 6, 206th overall (via Broncos): Erick All, TE, Iowa

Many Jets fans have gotten aboard on the Brock Bowers train, hoping the team will select him 10th overall. But if the Jets decide against that, drafting All late in Day 3 could pay dividends.

He isn't the fastest tight end, but at 6-4, 252 pounds, All has terrific versatility. He can line up almost anywhere and play the traditional tight end spot or the H-back role.

All probably would have been selected higher if not for a torn ACL tear last October.

● ROUND 7, 257th overall (compensatory pick): Tatum Bethune, LB, Florida State

The Jets could use some linebacker depth, and Bethune is an inside linebacker with good instincts to be at least a solid backup. In 13 games for the Seminoles, Bethune registered 70 tackles and 5.5 tackles for loss. Bethune is also decent in pass coverage, with the ability to consistently cover most running backs and tight ends.

DRAKE CLIMBS CHARTS

From Pats, to Giants, and all the way to Vikings, UNC QB will be in demand at draft

BY PAT LEONARD
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The Giants could trade up for North Carolina quarterback Drake Maye in the first round of Thursday night's draft – if the Patriots don't just sit at pick No. 3 and take him.

Either way, Maye's favorite part about his predraft film work with Brian Daboll – a Bill Belichick and Patriots disciple – could apply at Maye's next stop.

"It was just really cool watching the old Patriots tape and seeing him coach Tom and say, 'Hey, this what Tom was thinking, he's taking Gronk across the middle,' " Maye, 21, told the Daily News Tuesday afternoon from a Raising Canes event in Detroit at the draft. "Some of that stuff was pretty cool, and it makes me want to play in that type of offense."

The Tar Heel standout, also said that "what Coach Daboll did with Josh Allen" in Buffalo "speaks for itself." That is noteworthy to Maye because he believes he and Allen "have kind of a similar play style."

The Giants hold the No. 6 overall pick. One league source told the Daily News recently that "Maye is the guy." The problem is that the Giants seemingly have competition from both the Patriots at No. 3 and the Vikings at No. 11 trying aggressively to trade up.

He has a close relationship with Eli Manning and Josh McCown, Minnesota's quarterbacks coach. So there are strong ties to both organizations that appear to have their eyes on him from a distance.

Maye said of the Giants' and Vikings' apparent aggressive pursuit for his services: "It means a lot. It's a testament to their willingness to get a quarterback. And they're both offensive head coaches. You like to play for offensive coaches as a quarterback."

Giants would like a shot at North Carolina quarterback Drake Maye, but Patriots could grab him first. AP

It was also very interesting to hear the enthusiastic Maye clam up, respectfully, when asked pointed questions about how close he has gotten to the Giants.

He was asked to discuss his most recent contact with the Giants.

"I went up there for a 30 visit and since then (we've been) just keeping in touch, not trying to say too much," he said with a laugh.

Then he was asked if he met Giants co-owner John Mara, and how that went.

"Um, I'm not gonna speak on anything," Maye said, nervously. "Sorry about that. Yes sir."

The unfortunate reality for the Giants is that, as of Tuesday, multiple league sources believed the Patriots would just stay at No. 3 and select Maye.

If New England picks a different QB, like Michigan's J.J. McCarthy, the Cardinals at pick No. 4 would need at least two open phone lines to take the rabid calls from Vikings GM Kwesi Adofo-Mensah and Giants GM Joe Schoen.

The Giants also like McCarthy as a prospect. It seems likely he is more palatable to them as the pick at No. 6 or even a bit later, though, compared to where Maye stands at the top. Regardless, they are heavy in the QB market and must be considered leading contenders for a top passer unless and until they are ruled out.

Everyone's information at the moment is couched by qualifiers, of course, because sources say the NFL seems to be working hard to conceal teams' intentions for this draft in the age of legalized and rampant sports gambling.

Maye's spirits were high on Tuesday after meeting his family in Detroit for the big weekend, and he said if the Patriots select him, he won't put pressure on himself to be the next Brady.

"(As far as) kinda replacing Tom and sort of the dynasty he created, (I would be) just trying to help the team do whatever I can to get it back on track," Maye said. "And hopefully they're making the playoffs and (you) start from there. But you're not trying to be Tom Brady. I'm not gonna be Tom Brady. I'm just trying to be my own self."

Maye is confident in his abilities, however. He was asked why it would be worth it for a team to pay an expensive price, including a future first-round pick, to charge up the board to get him.

"I think the biggest thing for me is how young I am and how much potential I have," Maye said. "I'm 21 years old, and I plan on playing, with the promise of my skill set, well into my 30s and maybe into my 40s. So I plan on playing for 15 years. That's the goal and that's what I'm working toward to keep my body in shape.

"I'm ready to go compete," Maye added. "All I've known my whole life is going out there to compete and win. And that's what I'm trying to do."

Giants' Waller, WNBA's Plum file for divorce

BY PAT LEONARD
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Giants tight end Darren Waller and Las Vegas Aces guard Kelsey Plum are getting divorced after only a year of marriage.

Plum, the WNBA standout, said she was processing the "pain" of how the couple arrived at this result, seemingly implicating Waller.

"I'm devastated," Plum posted on "X." "I walked through fire for that man, but now I see it's time to go. God has given me an incredible life, and I'm truly so grateful for the profound love from my family and friends.

"One day I'll share my story, today is not that day," she continued. "Thank you for the grace to process my pain, to forgive and move forward. Today and everyday I will continue to choose joy. Much love KP Philippians 1:6"

The petition for divorce was filed Tuesday in Clark County, Nev., for Kelsey Christine Plum and Darren Charles Waller, according to the Las Vegas Review-Journal.

Waller and Plum got married on the first weekend of March, 2023, when Waller was playing for the Las Vegas Raiders. But the Raiders traded him across the country to the Giants 10 days later.

Waller, 31, had a disappointing first season with the Giants, including an extended injury absence when he was consistently visible around the team's New Jersey facility.

He has been considering retirement this offseason, and the Giants have said they are patiently giving him space to make a decision. But many in the league believe he already has decided to step away, although he has not made anything final.

MLB expected to review Boone-umpire incident that led to skip's ejection

BY GARY PHILLIPS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Major League Baseball is expected to look at the Monday incident involving Aaron Boone, home plate umpire Hunter Wendelstedt and a fan sitting behind the Yankees dugout, a source told the Daily News.

The source, granted anonymity so that they could speak freely, said that it is standard for the league to review "all ejections and unusual on-field circumstances." They added that Boone's ejection and "other circumstances would merit reviewing."

Aaron Boone was ejected for no apparent reason on Monday. AP

Wendelstedt tossed Boone after just five pitches in the Yankees' Monday loss to the Athletics.

It all started when A's leadoff man Esteury Ruiz got hit by a pitch on his back foot to start the game. As the slider grazed the center fielder's foot, Ruiz also checked his swing. Wendelstedt then motioned toward the first base umpire, John Tumpane, who signaled that Ruiz did not swing.

Boone thought that Ruiz went around, and he wanted Wendelstedt to check on the hit-by-pitch as well. The YES Network's broadcast overheard a fiery Wendelstedt telling Boone that he did indeed check, and that the manager would be ejected if he said anything else.

"I really didn't even go after Hunter," Boone said after the game. "I was more upset on the appeal. I said, 'Hunter you can call it, too,' and he came back at me pretty hard, to which I didn't respond. I just said, 'OK,' went down."

After that, multiple camera angles showed Boone staying quiet on the top step of the dugout. However, a fan in a blue pullover sitting directly behind Boone heckled Wendelstedt, which seemed to spark the ejection.

"Aaron, you're done," Wendelstedt screamed. "I don't care who said it. You're gone."

Boone, stunned and livid, tried to tell Wendelstedt that a fan had said something. He even pointed toward the man in blue.

"What do you mean you don't care? I did not say a word! It was over by the dugout," Boone replied before letting out some profanity. "I didn't say anything. I did not say anything, Hunter!"

After the game, Boone repeatedly called the situation "embarrassing."

"I couldn't believe it," he said.

Boone nor players knew what the fan in question said.

Meanwhile, Wendelstedt told a pool reporter that the fan had no impact on the ejection and that he had not seen a replay by the time he spoke. Rather, he claimed a "cheap shot" came from the "far end" of the Yankees' bench.

Rather than taking the time to search for the culprit, Wendelstedt decided to make Boone responsible for the alleged actions of his team.

"This isn't my first ejection," Wendelstedt said. "In the entirety of my career, I have never ejected a player or a manager for something a fan has said. I understand that's going to be part of a story or something like that because that's what Aaron was portraying."

Wendelstedt added that Boone was "probably" not the one who made the comment that set him off. But "Aaron Boone runs the Yankees," the official reasoned. "He got ejected."

While speaking with the pool reporter, Wendelstedt twice repeated the "I don't care who said it" line that he uttered to Boone during the game, which originally angered the manager.

With MLB expected to review this ejection, the source said that umpires have one day to file a report. That report would be reviewed by the league's baseball operations department. The source added that the league would speak with the Yankees as well.

On Monday, Boone said that he planned on contacting MLB himself. On Tuesday, he said that he had several chats with Michael Hill, MLB's senior vice president of on-field operations.

Boone wouldn't discuss how those "good conversations" went or Wendelstedt's postgame comments. The manager added that he had not spoken to Wendelstedt and that he did not expect to be fined.

"I think everyone has seen the video of what happened," Boone said. "You saw my comments. You saw his comments. I'm beyond it now. Let's move on."

If discipline were to result from anything that happened, MLB would make an announcement.

There has been some demand in recent years for umpires to face more accountability from the league.

"They're scrutinized, frankly, as much as ever," said Boone, who leads all managers with 34 ejections since becoming the Yankees' skipper in 2018.

TIME TO GET RIZZ-Y

Struggling Rizzo turns on power as Yankees rebound to beat A's

BY GARY PHILLIPS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Fresh off a shutout loss and an 0-for-3 performance, Anthony Rizzo answered for his and his team's struggles a day earlier.

The first baseman had a .227 average and just one home run after 23 games when he spoke following the Yankees' series-opening loss to the Athletics. The typically slick fielder has also made a few mishaps in the field this season.

YANKEES	4
A'S	3

Because Rizzo played and scuffled through post-concussion symptoms last year, some have wondered if he is okay. Rizzo has also had recurring back issues in the past.

"Yeah," Rizzo succinctly said Monday when asked if he's healthy. As for his poor numbers, he said, "It's a grind. Take it one day at a time. I'm seeing the ball well. I just have to take better swings."

Lo and behold, Rizzo did exactly that on Tuesday, crushing a two-run homer in a 4-3 win over Oakland. The A's Paul Blackburn had not allowed a longball this season prior to the first-inning blast, which traveled a few rows beyond Yankee Stadium's right field fence.

After the game, Rizzo wasn't as concise when talking about his concussion issues. He had a healthy and productive spring, but he knew concerns would be raised if he didn't produce right away this season.

"I think spring training was big for me, a little bigger than most, just to get back into my groove and kind of put that behind me," Rizzo said. "I think my baseline my entire career was a minimum of two home runs a month, so I guess hitting that quota is another big, big thing. But I mean, it's nothing to write home about, obviously. But they do come in bunches.

"I'm beyond that, but I understand that those questions would be asked if I didn't have a good April. There's a few days left to string together good at-bats."

While Rizzo's blast capped the Yankees' four-run opening frame, Giancarlo Stanton put the team on the board with a two-run double.

Blackburn settled down nicely after Rizzo left the yard, though, as the righty totaled six innings and didn't allow any runs after the first. Blackburn also struck out five without issuing a walk.

Meanwhile, Marcus Stroman also had an interesting night on the mound. His nine strikeouts were his most since 2021, but the righty also surrendered seven hits, three earned runs and two homers while walking one over 5.1 innings and 97 pitches.

Seth Brown picked up an RBI double off Stroman in the first when Juan Soto awkwardly dove for a line drive at his ankles. A pair of solo homers followed, as Shane Langeliers and Lawrence Butler went deep in the second and third innings, respectively.

But Yankees relievers Ron Marinaccio, Caleb Ferguson, Dennis Santana and Clay Holmes kept Oakland in check after Stroman departed, and the Yankees squeaked by with a series-tying win.

With the Yankees' offense still searching for its stride, the team will face Joe Boyle on Wednesday. The A's starter owns a 7.23 ERA this season.

Clarke Schmidt will start for the Yankees. The righty has been solid so far this year, recording a 3.15 ERA over four starts.

Cole could get on mound next week; DJ exits

Gerrit Cole isn't ready to throw off a mound just yet. However, the Yankees' ace continues to move in the right direction.

Cole is now throwing from 120 feet after making 50 tosses on Tuesday at Yankee Stadium. He said he isn't sure when he will toe the slab for the first time since being sidelined with elbow inflammation in spring training, but Aaron Boone said the righty might get on a mound soon.

"I don't necessarily think it means he's getting on the mound immediately," the manager said before the Yankees played the A's on Tuesday. "It may be sometime next week. But I know, at least so far, the process and how he's done and how it's going is encouraging."

Cole, who will take Wednesday off, added that he doesn't know how many more catch sessions he needs to complete before throwing off a mound. He also wasn't sure if he would travel for the Yankees' upcoming trips to Milwaukee and Baltimore.

However, the reigning Cy Young winner said that he's happy with his progress thus far. Cole's elbow hasn't been an issue since his throwing program began on April 8.

"It's kind of a similar ramp-up to what an offseason would be like," Cole said. "That's kind of what we're working off of. I'm just trying to nail it. Not go too fast, not go too slow, either.

"I'm out to 120, so it's moving. It's moving along."

DJ EXITS EARLY

DJ LeMahieu, working his way back from a nondisplaced fracture in his right foot, began a rehab assignment at Double-A Somerset on Tuesday. It did not go as planned.

The third baseman ended up exiting the game after just one inning in the field and one plate appearance. LeMahieu was supposed to play three to five innings, but he felt soreness in his foot. He will return to New York on Wednesday, where he will be examined by a team physician.

Prior to the early departure, Boone said that the plan was for LeMahieu to play in four minor league games on Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. Boone said there was a "chance" LeMahieu would join the Yankees for their trip to Baltimore next week, but that's now unlikely.

THE VRIEL DEAL

Back on April 1, it was announced that Yankees pitching prospect Trystan Vrieling would make his affiliated pro debut at Double-A Somerset. The 2022 third-round pick spent his draft year at the Yankees' complex in Tampa, and he missed the 2023 campaign with a stress fracture in his elbow.

Vrieling has responded well to the nudge, recording a 0.48 ERA, 18 strikeouts and six walks over three starts and 18.2 innings. The righty, ranked the Yankees' 23rd-best prospect by MLB.com, most recently held the Hartford Yard Goats hitless over 7.2 innings on April 19.

On Tuesday, Vrieling was named the Eastern League Pitcher of the Week.

THOU SHALT NOT STEAL!

Mets on mission to cut down on basepath thefts

BY ABBEY MASTRACCO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

SAN FRANCISCO – It took the Mets until late April to throw out a runner trying to steal a base, which wasn't what they expected as they broke camp in Port St. Lucie. After prioritizing defense behind the plate during spring training, catchers Omar Narvaez and Francisco Alvarez looked like they had improved in just about every aspect.

Alvarez, in particular, made excellent progress, showcasing a strong arm and quick times to the plate, getting into a stance with one knee down until seeing a runner take off. The 22-year-old looked primed for a successful second big-league season when he went 8-for-8 behind the plate.

But once the regular season began, it was a different story. The running game once again became problematic for the Mets.

Alvarez is now out 6-8 weeks with a thumb injury. Narvaez has yet to throw out a runner this season. Nido threw out the first runner for the Mets over the weekend in Los Angeles. Team president David Stearns, who spoke last week before the Mets left for the West Coast, said he's surprised by how tough it's been for Alvarez and Narvaez to control the running game.

The Mets have allowed a league-high 29 stolen bases this season.

However, some of the blame belongs elsewhere.

"Controlling the running game is kind of a team thing," catching coordinator Glenn Sherlock recently told the Daily News. "It's not just the catcher. It has a lot to do with the pitchers, it has a lot to do with the infielders, it has a lot to do with the catchers. So, we're trying to work together to try to improve that."

Narvaez and Alvarez have been slow to second base at times. Other times they've been quick enough, but their throws haven't been accurate. Some pitchers, like reliever Adam Ottavino, have worked to improve their times to the bases and the Mets are working with others to do the same.

It may be too early to worry, but with the way teams have been running on the Mets, they want to stop this trend before it gets any worse.

"We're kind of working on infield positioning, pitchers are working on controlling their times and varying their moves," Sherlock said. "Catchers are working on being quick and making an accurate throw."

With Alvarez out, Narvaez's struggles could become magnified. Over the weekend, the veteran backstop said he's mostly happy with how his season has started, but he would like to improve his framing and, yes, his times from the plate.

"I still have to clean up a few things with my defense," Narvaez said Saturday at Dodger Stadium. "But I think we're going to get to the same level that everybody knows."

Narvaez is in the second year of a two-year contract with the Mets. Stearns is familiar with him from their days with the Brewers, where he was an All-Star in 2021. His defense was good earlier in his career, but in recent seasons, he's become known as more of a bat-first backstop. He has always been more than capable behind the plate, though.

The Mets have not lost confidence in the 32-year-old Venezuelan. Narvaez works well with the pitching staff and the track record is there. The Mets believe he'll be able to turn things around this season, and that they'll get the help they need from everyone else on the field.

"I think they're doing a great job," Sherlock said.

"Their main objective is to control our pitchers, and our pitchers have been pitching well. It's just kind of conveying the game plan, bringing what they talked about before the game. They're doing all of that."

Alvarez out eight weeks after UCL thumb surgery

SAN FRANCISCO – Expect the Mets to be without catcher Francisco Alvarez for the next two months. Alvarez underwent successful surgery to repair the ulnar collateral ligament on his left thumb on Tuesday. The Mets had initially estimated a timeline of 6-8 weeks, but now that the procedure has been performed, the team was able to get a better idea of what it's up against with his recovery.

Given that it's his receiving hand, doctors have given Alvarez an eight-week timeline for a return.

"We're looking at eight weeks because of the position he plays," manager Carlos Mendoza said Tuesday at Oracle Park. "We've got to be mindful and I know he's going to try to push it, but we've got to make sure we get him back healthy."

Alvarez will be down for a few days while he still has stitches. Rehab will then begin and baseball activities will follow. The surgery was performed in Los Angeles and Alvarez is expected to meet the team in New York later this week to begin the process of strengthening his thumb and hand.

"Until he's like 80% with his strength and his grip and things, that's when he'll start doing more baseball activities," Mendoza said.

An eager, energetic player, Alvarez was hoping for a shorter recovery period, but the Mets want to take their time to ensure there are no complications and further injuries that could land him on the injured list again. Keeping him at an eight-week pace might be a challenge, but it's necessary.

Mets insider
BY ABBEY MASTRACCO

The team plans to keep him in meetings and pregame planning sessions with pitchers knowing that he'll want to stay engaged and so he's prepared when he does return. They may not bring him on the road right away, but Mendoza said they will consider it when he's further along in the rehab process.

Alvarez, 22, was hitting .236 with a .652 OPS, four doubles, one home run, eight RBI and four walks at the time of his injury, which occurred Friday night in Los Angeles. He was hustling around first base after the pitcher overthrew the ball. He slipped in the dirt, landing on his thumb. He reached second safely and was looked at by trainers, who let him stay in the game. After returning to the dugout, he found his thumb had swelled so much that he could no longer close his hand in his glove and was removed from the game.

KRANICK ACTIVATED

Right-hander Max Kranick (hamstring strain) was activated from the 15-day injured list Tuesday and optioned to Triple-A Syracuse. He'll continue to work as a starter, replenishing some of the depth the Mets have lost over the last few months.

However, Kranick may not have to wait long for his first big-league appearance of the season. Friday marks the start of 13 straight games for the Mets without an off-day. The team is considering using a six-man rotation during that portion of the schedule.

MARTINEZ ON THE MOVE

J.D. Martinez was expected to DH on Tuesday and today for Triple-A Syracuse, marking what the Mets hope is the end of his spring progression. The Mets are off Thursday, giving Martinez a day to rest before he's activated Friday for the series opener against the Cardinals at Citi Field.

Rangers grab 2-0 edge on Capitals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Vincent Trocheck and Mika Zibanejad each notched a goal and an assist and the Presidents' Trophy-winning Rangers held on to beat the Capitals, 4-3, Tuesday night for a 2-0 lead in their first-round playoff series.

Jack Roslovic and K'Andre Miller also scored for the Rangers, and Erik Gustafsson and Alexis Lafreniere each registered two assists. Igor Shesterkin stopped 22 shots.

The Rangers, seeking their first Stanley Cup in 30 years, have won four straight and 12 of their last 15 games. The Rangers, third on the power play during the season, were 2 for 6 with the advantage and scored a shorthanded goal.

RANGERS	4
CAPITALS	3

Tom Wilson picked up a goal and an assist, and Connor McMichael and Dylan Strome also scored for the Capitals, who had won four of five to close the season and take the second wild card in the Eastern Conference. Charlie Lindgren finished with 23 saves.

Game 3 of the best-of-seven series is Friday at Washington.

Alex Ovechkin recorded two shots on goal after he was held without one in Game 1.

With the Rangers leading, 4-2, there was some pushing and shoving 6 ½ minutes into the third period after Artemi Panarin knocked T.J. Oshie off the puck with a hard hit. The play was reviewed for a major penalty, but none was called. McMichael was instead given a minor for roughing while WiIson skated near the Rangers' bench and had words with rookie sensation Matt Rempe.

Oshie left the ice for the dressing room, but returned with just over five minutes remaining in the game.

Wilson pulled the Capitals within one with their second power-play goal of the night as he deflected a shot in the air by Hendrix Lapierre past Shesterkin with 8:15 remaining.

The Capitals pulled Lindgren for an extra skater with with 2:48 to go and had several chances, but couldn't get the equalizer.

The Capitals trailed, 2-1, after 20 minutes and tied the score with a power-play goal 30 seconds after Rempe was sent off for roughing. Strome took a pass in front from Wilson and deflected it past Shesterkin at 4:14 of the second for his first career postseason goal. It was the Capitals' first goal with the man advantage in 17 chances against the Rangers this year.

With a Rangers power play winding down, Roslovic fired a shot from the right circle over Lindgren's blocker and left shoulder for a 3-2 lead with 7:34 remaining in the second period.

The Rangers pushed the lead to 4-2 with a shorthanded goal with 3:08 left in the second. After a turnover by the Capitals, Zibanejad – working a give-and-go with Kreider on a rush – saw Miller trailing down the middle and sent a pass back to the defenseman, who fired it past Lindgren.

The Capitals came into the game focused on getting more shots on goal. They did that at the start, taking five in the first 2 ½ minutes. However, they managed just two more the rest of the first period.

McMichael got the Capitals on the scoreboard first at 5:09. Rangers defenseman Ryan Lindgren knocked the puck away from T.J. Oshie, but it went right to McMichael who quickly put it past Shesterkin from the left side. It was McMichael's first career playoff goal.

Devils expect Meier back for training camp after surgery

Devils leading scorer Timo Meier has undergone elective arthroscopic surgery on his shoulder.

The Devils said Meier underwent the surgery on Tuesday, eight days after their highly anticipated season ended without a playoff berth. The procedure was performed by Dr. Jonathan L. Glashow and Dr. Guillem Gonzalez-Lomas, the team said without noting which shoulder was worked on.

Meier is expected to be ready for training camp in September.

The Swiss forward recorded 28 goals and 24 assists in his first full season with the Devils. He was acquired before the trade deadline last year in a deal with San Jose.

The Devils made the playoffs last season and won a first-round playoff series against the Rangers before they were knocked out in the second round by Carolina.

The Devils will open the 2024-25 season in Czechia on Oct. 4, playing two games against the Sabres, who recently hired Lindy Ruff to be their coach. The 64-year-old Ruff was fired by the Devils on March 4.

Devils general manager Tom Fitzgerald is conducting a search for a new coach, with interim coach Travis Green among those he plans to interview.

EPIPHANNY RETIRES

Two-time All-Star Epiphanny Prince announced her retirement Tuesday after 14 WNBA seasons. The Brooklyn native and local prep star's basketball career ends after showcasing her scoring talents on multiple teams – both overseas and in the states. She won a WNBA championship in 2020 with the Seattle Storm

"Officially retired," Prince said in a social media post. "I am sitting here trying to find the words to say, and the one word that keeps coming to mind is thankful."

"I have been fortunate to have a long career filled with unforgettable memories, a lot of winning, ups and downs, traveling the world, and meeting so many amazing people," she added in her farewell post.

The Chicago Sky selected Prince with the fourth overall pick in 2010. She played three seasons at Rutgers and spent time playing overseas before getting selected in the WNBA draft. Prince and the Scarlet Knights – led by Hall of Fame head coach C. Vivian Stringer – came one win short of the NCAA title, losing to Hall of Fame coach Pat Summitt, Candace Parker and the Tennessee Lady Vols in 2007.

Both of the 5-9 guard's All-Star appearances came during her tenure in Chicago (2011, 2013). Prince averaged 14.1 points and 3.1 assists in her first five seasons with they Sky. She later made her homecoming with the Liberty in 2015 and spent four seasons with the team before making stops in Las Vegas and Seattle. Her 18.1 points per game in 2012 was her highest scoring output in a WNBA season.

Prince won her lone title during the condensed 2020 season that took place in an isolated "Wubble" at IMG Academy due to the coronavirus pandemic. There, she played alongside Breanna Stewart, who she later shared the court with again in New York in 2023.

RORY COULD RETURN TO BOARD

A plan is in place for Rory McIlroy to rejoin the PGA Tour board, a move that would require the board's approval and could be viewed as a chance to help to improve stalled negotiations with the Saudi financial backers of LIV Golf.

McIlroy resigned from the board in November, saying he felt he could no longer commit the time and energy required with the PGA Tour trying to finalize an agreement with the Public Investment Fund of Saudi Arabia.

The deal with PIF was not finalized, and the PGA Tour instead took on Strategic Sports Group as a minority investor in a deal that could be worth as much as $3 billion.

Webb Simpson, one of the six player directors on the PGA Tour board and PGA Tour Enterprises board, has submitted a letter saying he wants to resign as a player director but only if McIlroy replaces him, according to a person who has seen the letter.

PGA Tour Enterprises is the new commercial entity, though six players serve on both boards.
