R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter I Introduction/Chapter I Introduction

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 6th October 1860

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter I Introduction/Chapter I

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter I

Introduction

Preamble--WHEREAS it is expedient to provide a general Penal Code for [1][India]; It is enacted as follows:

COMMENT

The offences under the 1944 Central Excise Act cannot be equated with offences under the Indian Penal Code .[2]

1 The words 'British India' have successively been subs by the AO 1948, the AO 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule, to read as above.

2 Om Prakash v Union of India AIR 2012 SC 545, 2012 Cr LJ 779 (SC) .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter I Introduction/S. 1.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter I

Introduction

S. 1.

Title and extent of operation of the Code.--

This Act shall be called the Indian Penal Code, and shall [3][extend to the whole of India [4][except the State of Jammu and Kashmir].]1

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

Section 1 as originally enacted stood as follows:

> This Act shall be called the Indian Penal Code and shall take effect on and from the first day of May 1861, throughout the whole of the territories which are, or may become, vested in Her Majesty by the Statutes 21 and 22 Victoria, Chapter 106, entitled 'An Act for the better Government of India,' except the Settlement of Prince of Wales' Island, Singapore and Malacca.

This section has undergone several amendments by Act 6 of 1861, the Repealing and Amending Act 12 of 1891, the Adaptation Orders of 1937, 1948 and 1950, and Act 3 of 1951, as shown below, successively so as to read as above in its present form. The words 'British India' were replaced by the words 'The Provinces of India' by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1948. The same Order had the effect of replacing the words 'take effect throughout British India' by the words 'extend to all the Provinces of India'. The Adaptation of Laws Orders 1950, replaced the words 'the Provinces of India' by the words 'the whole of India except Part B States' and substituted the words 'the whole of India except Part B States' for the words 'all the Provinces of India.' Finally, under Part B States (Laws) Act 3 of 1951, the word 'India' was substituted in the Preamble as well as in this section for the words 'the whole of India except Part B States.' The same Act also substituted the words 'except the State of Jammu and Kashmir' for the words 'except Part B States'.2

2. Commencement of Code

Under s 1 as originally enacted, the Indian Penal Code (IPC or the Code) was to take effect on and from the first day of May 1861. This date was, however, changed to the 'first day of January 1862' by Act 6 of 1861, and it was on this latter date that the Code came into effect. The reason for changing the date of the commencement of the Code was that it was thought that it would not be right to allow the Code, which altered the whole criminal law of the country, to take effect before it was translated and published for the information of the people and before the Indian courts had ample time to study it thoroughly. The date was subsequently omitted by the Repealing and Amending Act 1891 (12 of 1891), as no longer necessary.

3. Territorial Extent of the Original Code

Under s 1 as it originally stood, the Code took effect 'throughout the whole of the territories which are or may become vested in Her Majesty by the Statute, 21 and 22 Victoria, Chapter 106,'[5] and 'India' was declared to mean 'the territories vested in Her Majesty as aforesaid, and all territories which may become vested in Her Majesty by virtue of any such rights as aforesaid.' By s 15 of the Code[6] these territories constituted 'British India' for the purpose of the Code.

The Code was also declared to be in force in the Santhal Parganas,[7] Arakan Hill District,[8] Upper Burma generally except the Shari States,[9] British Baluchistan,[10] Angul district and the district of Khondmals,[11] Kachin Hill Tracts, as regards Hill tribes (with modification),[12] the Chine Hills (with certain minor modifications as to punishments)[13] and Perim.[14]

It was also declared by notification under s 3(a) of the Scheduled Districts Act, 14 of 1874, to be in force in (a) the North Western Provinces Tarai Districts,[15] (b) the districts of Hazaribagh, Lohardaga and Manbhum,[16] and (c) Pargana Dhalbhum and the Kolhan in the district of Singbhum.[17]

The Code has been extended to the State of Sikkim (with certain modifications).[18]

4. Straits Settlements

The Indian Penal Code was in force in the Straits settlements, having been extended by Act 5 of 1867. Before the Indian Independence Act came into force on 13 August 1947, India was divided into: (a) British India, consisting of nine governor's provinces and five chief commissioner's provinces; and (b) native states, numbering3 about 562. These native states were ruled by sovereign princes who were directly under the paramountcy of His Majesty, the King of England. The central legislature of British India had no legislative power in respect of these native states and the British Indian laws had no direct application to them. The Indian Penal Code had, therefore, no direct application to the native states.

The Indian Independence Act ushered into existence two separate dominions: (a) Pakistan, comprising the former British Indian Provinces of Sind, Baluchistan, West Punjab, the North-West Frontier Province and East Bengal, (b) India, comprising the rest of British India. On the passing of that Act the paramountcy of the British King over India was left undetermined. But by a rapid process of accession and merger, the native states lying in the Dominion of India became integrated with the Indian Union.

5. India

Before the Indian Independence Act 1947 came into force on 15 August 1947, India was divided into British India (consisting of nine governor's provinces and five chief commissioner's provinces) and native states (numbering about 562). The Indian Independence Act 1947, ushered into existence, two separate dominions:

(i) Pakistan (consisting of the former British Indian Provinces of Sind, Baluchistan, West Punjab, the North West Frontier Provinces and the East Bengal (now Bangladesh); and
(ii) India (comprising the rest of the British India).

By a rapid process of accession and merger, the Indian states, lying in the Dominion of India, became integral units of the Indian Union. 'India' shall, therefore, mean:

(i) as regards the period before the establishment of the Dominion of India, British India, together with all territories of the Indian rulers, then under the suzerainty of His Majesty, all territories under the suzerainty of such an Indian Ruler, and the tribal areas;
(ii) as regards any period after the establishment of the Dominion of India and before the commencement of the Constitution, all territories, for the time being, included in that Dominion; and
(iii) as regards any period after the commencement of the Constitution, all territories, for the time being comprised in the territory of India.[19]

Under art 1(3) of the Constitution of India, the territory of India shall comprise:

(a) the territories of the states;
(b) the union territories specified in the First Schedule; and
(c) such other territories as may be acquired.

The territories of the states and the union territories are specified in the First Schedule of the Constitution.

6. Extent of the Code at Present

The IPC now extends to the whole of India, except the State of Jammu and Kashmir. It does not mean that the State of Jammu and Kashmir has to be regarded as some4 place outside India.[20] The power of the Parliament to extend the Code to all states except the State of Jammu and Kashmir is beyond question.[21] In the State of Jammu and Kashmir, the Jammu and Kashmir Ranbir Penal Code is in force. It is a replica of the Indian Penal Code with the addition of half a dozen sections,[22] relating to dissemination of contents of prescribed documents, wrongful obstruction to use of public tanks and wells and slaughter of cattle, and three sections[23] relating to whipping. Under art 1 of the Constitution, India shall be a union of states. The states and the territories thereof are specified in the Sch I to the Constitution. At present, there are 29 states, viz.: (i) Andhra Pradesh, (ii) Assam, (iii) Bihar, (iv) Gujarat, (v) Kerala, (vi) Madhya Pradesh, (vii) Tamil Nadu, (viii) Maharashtra, (ix) Karnataka, (x) Odisha, (xi) Punjab, (xii) Rajasthan, (xiii) Uttar Pradesh, (xiv) West Bengal, (xv) Jammu and Kashmir, (xvi) Nagaland, (xvii) Haryana, (xviii) Himachal Pradesh, (xix) Manipur, (xx) Tripura, (xxi) Meghalaya, (xxii) Sikkim, (xxiii) Mizoram, (xxiv) Arunachal Pradesh, (xxv) Goa, (xxvi) Chhattisgarh, (xxvii) Uttarakhand, (xxviii) Jharkhand, (xxix) Telangana[24] and seven union territories viz. (i) Delhi, (ii) The Andaman and Nicobar Islands, (iii) Lakshadweep, (iv) Dadra and Nagar Haveli, (v) Daman and Diu, (vi) Puduchery, and (vii) Chandigarh.

7. Extension of Code to Extra-territorial Offences

By virtue of s 4 of this Code, the provisions of the Code apply also to any offence committed by:

(i) any citizen of India in any place without and beyond India,
(ii) any person on any ship or aircraft registered in India wherever it may be.

Thus the provisions of this Code will apply to all places in the world whenever an offence under this Code is committed by a citizen of India even outside the country. Likewise all offences defined by this Code, even if committed at any place outside India by any person--whether he is a citizen of India or not--on any ship or aircraft registered in India, are to be dealt with according to the provisions of this Code. In such cases the provisions of s 1 will not restrict the application of the Code.

Section 3 of the Code also makes a provision for a person liable by any Indian law to be tried for an offence committed beyond India for dealing with in accordance with other provisions of this Code for committing such acts beyond India, in the same manner as if such act had been committed within India. Section 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1973 (CrPC) expressly provides that offences committed outside India (a) by a citizen of India or (b) by a person not being such citizen on any ship or aircraft registered in India, may be dealt with as if such offences had been committed at any place within India, with the previous sanction of the Central Government. The Kerala High Court has, however, held that for the pre-inquiry stage, no such sanction is needed. Investigation has been held to be the pre-inquiry stage.[25]

For exhaustive comments see Sohoni's, Code of Criminial Procedure, vol 2, twenty-first edn, s 188, Lexisnexis.5

8. Maritime Territory

(a) International Law

It has been held that besides the land territories of a state, it has jurisdiction over the sea, within the marine league or three miles and this is so by the assent of the nation.[26] The international law assigns to a state, territorial jurisdiction in respect of acts done within a marine league or three geographical miles from the low watermark of the shore.[27] In other words, the territories, strictly speaking, of a state, include not only the compass of land in the ordinary acceptance of the term, belonging to such state, but also that portion of the sea lying along and washing its coast which is commonly called its maritime territory.[28]

The territory of a state consists, in the first place, of the land within its boundaries. To this must be added, in the case of a state with a sea coast, certain waters which are within or adjacent to its land boundaries, and these waters are of two kinds--national and territorial.

(b) 'National Waters'

These consist of the waters in its lakes, canals, rivers together with their mouths, ports and harbours, and in some of its gulfs and bays.

(c) 'Territorial Waters'

These consist of the waters contained in a certain zone or belt, called the maritime or marginal belt, which surrounds a state, and that includes a part of the waters in some of its bays, gulfs and straits.[29]

(d) Marginal Belt (Maritime belt)

Whatever theory might ultimately find acceptance with the family of nations as to the true basis of the right which a state possesses over territorial waters, there cannot be any doubt that with reference to the rights of fishery, the marginal belt must be regarded as part of the territory of the littoral state. There has been some divergence of juristic opinion on the extent of the marginal waters. Various tests have from time to time been propounded for defining them such as the range of cannon-shot, the limit of visual horizon and so forth. This was one of the three subjects discussed in the Hague Codification Conference 1930, which ended without any agreement being reached. It cannot, therefore, be said that the law on the subject is finally settled.[30] Hyde remarks:[31] 'There has long been a disposition on the part of some publicists of distinction to advocate an extension of three marine miles as the limit of territorial waters'.

6Oppenheim, in International Law, after stating that the three-mile limit has the support of a large majority of states, observes: 'Although the three mile limit of territorial waters must still be regarded as the rule of International law on the subject, it is a rule which is in need of modification in relation to the various interests involved'.

Thus, according to international law, the real boundary of a state is not the low-water line on its shores, but a line out at sea, usually stated as being an imaginary line drawn at three miles from the low-water mark.

(e) State can Legislate for the Seas Surrounding its Coasts

In ER Corft v Sylvester Dunphy ,[32] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed:

> It may be accepted as a general principle that states can legislate effectively only for their own territories. To what distance seaward the territory of a state is to be taken as extending is a question of international law upon which their Lordships do not deem it necessary or proper to pronounce. But, whatever be the limits of territorial waters in the international sense, it has long been recognized that for certain purposes, notably those of police, revenue, public health and fisheries, a state may enact laws affecting the seas surrounding its coasts to a distance seaward which exceeds the ordinary limits of its territory.

Upon the question of the ownership of minerals in the bed of the sea and below the low-water mark, in Lord Advocate v Wemys ,[33] the statement of Lord Watson was expressed as follows:

> I see no reason to doubt that by the law of Scotland the solum underneath the waters of the ocean, whether within the narrow seas or from the coast outward to the three mile limit, and also the minerals beneath it, are vested in the Crown.

In the opinion of the Board of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, this is also the law of India. The crown is the owner, and the owner in property of an island arising in the sea within the territorial limits of the Indian Empire.[34]

9. Title

Prior to 1854, the title of a statute was not a part of the Statute in England, but now it is.[35]The title is part of the Act itself, and it is legitimate to use it for interpreting the Act as a whole and ascertaining its scope.[36] In National Telephone Co Ltd v Post-Master General ,[37] Lord Moulton has observed:

> While it is admissible to use the full title of an Act to throw light upon its progress and scope, it is not legitimate to give any weight in this respect to the short title which is chosen merely for convenience, its object being identification and not description.

The policy and purpose of a given measure may be deduced from the long title and preamble thereof.[38]

7The title and preamble, whatever their value might be as aids to the construction of a statute, undoubtedly throw light on the intent and design of the legislature and indicate the scope and purpose of the legislation itself.[39] The title is not, however, conclusive of the intent of the legislature, and constitutes only one of the numerous sources from which assistance might be obtained.[40] When the meaning of the legislature is clear in the enacting part of the statute, there is no necessity to refer to the title, long or short, or to the preamble. It is only in cases where the meaning of the legislature is not clear beyond doubt that recourse may be had to the title or to the preamble.[41]

10. Title of Chapter

The title of a chapter cannot be legitimately used to restrict the plain terms of an enactment.[42]

11. Preamble

The preamble of a statute is a prefatory statement at its beginning, following the title and preceding the enacting clause, explaining or declaring the reasons and motives for, and the objects sought to be accomplished by the enactment of the statute.[43] The preamble precedes the words of an enactment, and is in the nature of a recital of the facts operative in the mind of the law-giver in proceeding to enact such law.[44]

(a) English Law

In England different opinions have been held at different times on the subject of the true place of the preamble in a statute. Eminent lawyers have considered the preamble as undoubtedly a part of the Act.[45]According to Chief Justice Dyer, it is 'a key to open the minds of the makers of the Act, and the mischief which they intended to redress'.[46] But in Mills v Wilkins ,[47] Lord Holt has observed that a preamble of a statute is no part of it. The same view has been taken in the State of Jammu and Kashmir.[48] A different view was taken in J Nageswara Rao v State of Madras .[49] According to Halsbury's Laws of England:[50]

> The preamble may now be regarded, like the title, as part of the statute for the purpose of explaining, restraining, or even extending enacting words, but not for the purpose of qualifying or limiting express provisions couched in clear and unambiguous terms.8

(b) Indian Law

The view taken in India has been that a preamble is not an operative part of the statute,[51] and cannot be read as a part of any particular section of the statute.[52] But the preamble may possibly be called in aid for the purpose of removing any difficulty in interpreting the language of a particular section in the Act, though it cannot control or delimit the plain and natural meaning of any part of the enactment. It is not open to a court to refuse to give effect to a plain statutory provision on the ground that it is beyond the scope and object of the Act as declared in the preamble thereto.[53] The preamble to the Act cannot be brought in aid while interpreting a rule whose language itself is clear. The rule cannot be so interpreted as to give effect to the preamble of the Act.[54] The preamble of a statute is the key to its interpretation, but the intention of the legislature is not necessarily to be gathered from the preamble taken by itself. In fact, the intention of the legislature can only be gathered from the Act as a whole.[55] The preamble has been said to be a good means of finding out the meaning of the enactment and, as it were, a key to the understanding of it.[56]It may always be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining generally the scope of the Act where the enacting words are ambiguous.[57] The enacting words of the Act are not always to be limited by the words of the preamble and must, in many instances, go beyond it, and where they do, they cannot be cut down by reference to it.[58] On the9 other hand, the preamble does not extend the provisions of the Act beyond what the enacting part of the Act contains.[59]

Where a word or words or a sentence in an Act is capable of two meanings, a meaning consonant with the preamble is to be preferred. On the other hand, the preamble of an Act cannot be used to cut down the scope and plain meaning of a provision in an Act. Two propositions are quite clear, one that preamble affords useful light as to what a statute intends to reach and another that if an enactment is itself clear and unambiguous, no preamble can qualify or cut down the enactment.[60] The preamble may show the motive for enacting a piece of legislation. But it does not by any means follow that in doing so the legislature did not go further than giving merely effect to the motive.[61]

Elucidiate Intention of Legislation

It may be assumed that the *via media*is to regard the preamble as conclusive in so far as it elucidates the intention of the legislature. The preamble alone however, cannot be held to be conclusive of the intent and purpose of the legislature. The object, purpose and intent of the legislature have to be gathered from the various provisions of the statute itself, and not merely an isolated examination of the preamble which may indicate the primary object in view, but may not refer in detail to certain other objects which are incidental and essential to the working out of the primary object of the legislature. It is, therefore, open to the court to judge the purpose and intention of the legislature from the various provisions contained in the Act, and this makes it easier to decide on the question of its legislative competence.[62] The underlying purpose and policy of the Act are disclosed by its title, preamble and provisions.[63] The correctness of the recitals in the preamble to a statute cannot be disputed.[64]10

12. Consolidation and Codification--Meaning

Essence of the Code

The Code is a codifying statute, which may be defined as a statute intended to be complete in itself with regard to the subject-matter with which it deals. No doubt a codifying statute does not exclude reference to earlier case-law on the subject covered by the statute, for the purpose of throwing light on the true interpretation of the words of the statute where they are, or can be, contended to be open to rival constructions, but it cannot be argued that the matter outside the statute can be invoked, not by way of construing its provisions, but of adding something to it which is admittedly not to be found within it.[65] The essence of a code is to be exhaustive on matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction.[66] The terms 'codification' and 'consolidation' are sometimes used as synonyms, but they may be distinguished. Consolidation means the combination into a single statute of several statutes or parts of a statute dealing with the same subject. Codification means the reduction into a systematic form of the whole of the law, statute or common law, relating to a given subject. Consolidation deals with statute alone as interpreted and explained by judicial divisions. Codification deals both with common law and with statute law.[67]

13. Criminal Law before the Commencement of the Code

The Common Law of England was never made applicable to this country by any Act of Parliament or by any enactment of the Indian legislature. It was only the Charters granted to the East India Company that enjoined upon the Company and its servants due obedience to the common and statute law of England. It was only towards the close of the 18th century that the Supreme Courts in Madras, Calcutta and Bombay were established, where the King's Judge administered the common law of England. Outside the jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts, the law of the land with regard to civil matters and the Mahommadan law as regards offences, were administered by the Company's courts. From 1802 onwards, various regulations[68] were passed with regard to the trial of offenders and the trial of civil suits.[69] It was the law declared in these regulations that governed the trial and punishment for offences before the commencement of this Code.[70]

The principles of construction applicable to a codifying statute like the IPC do not exclude reference to earlier case law on the subject covered by the statute for the purpose of throwing light on the interpretations of the words of the statute were they are, or can be contended to be, open to rival constructions.[71]11

AIDS TO INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES

14. Reports of Commissioners and Committees

While legislative debates, partaking of necessity very largely of impromptu statements and opinions, cannot be resorted to, with any confidence, as showing the true intent of Congress in the enactment of statutes, a somewhat different standard obtains with reference to the pronouncement of a committee having charge of the preparation of such proposed laws. These committee announcements do not of course carry the weight of a judicial opinion, but are rightfully regarded as possessing very considerable value of an explanatory nature regarding the legislative intent where the meaning of a statute is obscure.[72] It is permissible to refer to them as they form a history of the legislation.[73] If the basic purpose underlying construction of a legislation is to ascertain the real intention of the Parliament, why should the aids, which Parliament availed of, such as the request of special committee impeding the enactment of law, the environment necessitating enactment of legislation and the object sought to be achieved be denied to the court whose function is primarily to give effect to the real intention of Parliament in enacting the legislation. Such denial would deprive the court of substantial and illuminating aid to construction. Therefore, reports of the committee which preceded the enactment of legislation, reports of the Joint Parliament Committee, report of a commission set up for collecting information leading to the enactment, are permissible external aids to construction.

Quotation from Report not a Legitimate Guide

The court can look into the history of evolution of the enactment concerned, the reports of committees and such other external aids to construction.[74] The report of a drafting committee may not be read to control the meaning of a section, but it can be seen in case of an ambiguity.[75] Such reports have been referred to in some cases.[76] With reference to the report of the Indian law commissioners, who drafted the IPC, in a case their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed:

> A quotation from the report may be valuable as a matter of history, it cannot be a legitimate guide for the construction of the section. That construction must be based on the meaning of the words used, to be gathered according to the ordinary rules of interpretation and in consonance with the generally accepted principles of exercise of criminal jurisdiction. It is not necessary and indeed not permissible to construe the Indian Penal Code at the present day in accordance with the notions of criminal jurisdiction prevailing at the time when the code was enacted. The notions relating to this matter have very considerably changed between then and now during nearly a century that has elapsed. It is legitimate to construe the Code with reference to the12 modern needs wherever this is permissible, unless there is anything in the Code or in any particular section to indicate the contrary.[77]

15. Proceedings in Parliament

Relevancy of

The object of interpretation is to discover the intention of Parliament and the intention of Parliament must be deduced from the language used, for it is well accepted that the beliefs and assumptions of those who framed the Act of Parliament cannot make the law.[78] In Kadir Bakhsh v Bhawani Prasad ,[79] Edge, CJ observed:

> In my humble judgment, if Judges were to allow their minds to be influenced in the construing of a statute, by debates in Parliament or reports of Select Committees or other bodies on the bill, statute law would be reduced to confusion and, instead of there being one principle of construction of statutes well understood by lawyers, the construction of statutes would be reduced to no principle at all.

In AK Gopalan v State of Madras ,[80] Kaniya, CJ observed:

> While it is not proper to take into consideration the individual opinions of members of Parliament or convention to construe the meaning of the particular clause, when a question is raised whether a certain phrase or expression was up for consideration at all or not, a reference to the debates may be permitted.

Justices Fazal Ali and Mukerjee considered it to be a doubtful proposition. Justice Sastri attached no importance to the speeches made by some of the members of the Constituent Assembly in the course of the debate on art 15 (now art 21 of the Constitution). In Charanjit Lal Chaudhary v Union of India [81]Fazal Ali J held that although legislative proceedings cannot be referred to for the purpose of construing an Act or any of its provisions, they are relevant for the proper understanding of the circumstances under which it was passed and the reasons which necessitated it.[82]

16. Statement of Objects and Reasons

The facts stated in the preamble and the statement of objects and reasons appended to any legislation are evidence of legislative judgment. They indicate the thought process of the elected representatives of the people and their cognizance of the prevalent state of affairs, impelling them to enact the law. These, therefore, constitute important factors which amongst others will be taken into consideration by the court in judging the reasonableness of any restriction imposed on the fundamental rights of13 the individuals. The court would begin with a presumption of reasonability of the restriction, more so when the facts stated in the statement of objects and reasons and the preamble are taken to be correct and they justify the enactment of law for the purpose sought to be achieved.[83] The statement of object and reasons is not otherwise admissible as an aid to the construction of a statute but the same simply assists as to the necessity of introduction of such a law. While construing the clear terms of an Act the court is not required to ascertain the object of the enactment. Though in case of an urgent need of the situation by reason where for the intent of the legislature is to be assessed, the statements and objects can be looked into for the limited purpose of ascertaining the conditions prevailing at the time which prompted or actuated the proposer of the Bill to introduce the same and the extent of remedying the existing evil of the society.[84]

The object of an Act is not to be lost sight of while interpreting its provisions. The interpretation, which promotes the purpose and brings about an effective result, is to be preferred.[85] Unlike the preamble, the headings and the marginal notes, the statement of object and reasons which accompanies the draft bill when it is first introduced in the legislative body, is no part of the Act as passed by the legislature.[86]The statement of objects and reasons for introducing a bill in the legislature is not admissible as an aid to the construction of the statute as enacted as it can control the meaning of the actual words used in the Act. It can only be referred to for the limited purpose of ascertaining the circumstances which actuated the sponsor of the Bill to be introduced and the purpose for doing so. While construing a statute one has also to bear in mind the presumption that the legislature does not intend to make any substantial alteration in the existing law beyond what it expressly declares or beyond the immediate scope and object of the statute.[87] Although the statement of objects and reasons appended to a bill is not admisible as an aid to the construction of the Act as passed[88] it may be referred to only for the limited purpose of ascertaining the conditions prevailing at the time which necessitated the making of the law.[89] It is also permissible to refer to the objects and reasons for the correct appreciation of:

(a) what was the law before the Act was passed;
(b) what was the mischief or defect for which the law had not provided;
(c) what remedy the legislature had provided; and (d) the reason for the remedy.[90]14

17. Headings

The headings in a statute can be referred to for the purpose of finding out the meaning of a doubtful expression in a section.[1] The headings prefixed to sections or sets of sections in some modern statutes are regarded as preambles to those sections,[2] and may legitimately be consulted to solve any ambiguity, or to fix the meaning of words, which may have more than one, to keep the effect of the Act within its real scope whenever the enacting part in any of these respects is open to doubt.[3]While the court is entitled to work at the headings in an Act of Parliament to resolve any doubt, the law is quite clear that you cannot use such headings to give a different effect to clear words in the section, where there cannot be any doubt as to their ordinary meaning.[4] Even the inference that the enacting words of a section are clear or ambiguous may only be drawn after the Act as a whole including the heading of the section is read. But if the conclusion after reading the Act as a whole is that the enacting words in the section are clear and cannot bear the construction suggested with the aid of the heading the construction so suggested cannot be accepted for the heading in such situation has no controlling effect.[5] If the language of a section is clear, headings are not to be taken into consideration.[6] They are like preambles which supply a key to the mind of the legislature but do not control the substantive sections of an enactment.[7] The headings prefixed to sections or sets of sections in some modern statutes are regarded as preambles to those sections. They cannot control the plain words of the statute but they may explain ambiguous words. If there is any doubt in the interpretation of the words in the section, the heading certainly helps the court to resolve that doubt.[8]

'Heading' or 'title' prefixed to sections or group of sections have a limited role to play in the construction of statutes. They may be taken as very broad and general indicators or the nature of the subject matter dealt with thereunder but they do not control the meaning of the sections if the meaning is otherwise ascertainable by reading the section in proper perspective along with other provisions.[9]

18. Marginal Notes

A marginal note to a section cannot ordinarily be used in connection with interpretation of the terms of a section, but it may be referred to in case of ambiguity15 or doubt.[10] A marginal note is not an operative part of the section, and if the words used in a section are clear and unambiguous, the marginal notes cannot control the section.[11] There can be no justification for restricting the contents of the section by them.[12]

(a) Marginal Notes are Helpful in Determining Drift of the Section

Marginal notes in an Indian statute, as in an Act of Parliament, cannot be referred to for the purpose of construing the statute.[13]But if they are inserted by or under the authority of the legislature, they form part of the Act and as such, like the headings of chapters or the headings of groups of sections, can properly be regarded as giving contemporanea expositio of the meaning of a section where the language of a section is obscure or ambiguous.[14] A marginal note can be looked at for the purpose of constructing a statute.[15] The marginal note to a section though not part of the Act, may assist interpretation of the section.[16] In modern legislation marginal notes are assented to expressly or tacitly by the legislature.[17] It is true that a marginal note is not strictly a part of a section, but it is now well established that the court may look, and indeed should look, at them in order to determine what is the drift of the section or what is being aimed at by the legislature in enacting a particular section.[18]

(b) Section Overrides Marginal Note

In Russell's Legislative Drafting and Forms,[19] it is observed:

> Marginal notes should be framed with great care. Their object is to give a concise indication, not a summary, of the contents of the sections and to enable a reader to glance quickly through them relying upon their accuracy. They form the basis of any index dealing with the Act. Although there are decisions of the Courts purporting to disregard them, they should not be considered trivial or unimportant, since most people are likely to accept the guidance of a marginal note. And the marginal note, though it forms no part of the section, is of some assistance, inasmuch as it shows the drift of the section.[20]

If there is a discrepancy between the marginal note and the enacting part of the section, the section overrides the marginal note.[21]16

19. Illustrations

Illustrations merely illustrate a principle, and what the court should try and do is to deduce the principle which underlies the illustrations.[22] An illustration is a simple statement of facts to which the section itself has got to be applied.[23] It only exemplifies the law as enacted in a statute.[24]

Afford Guidance to Construction

Being part of the statute,[25] and not standing on the same footing as marginal notes,[26] the illustrations go a great way to explain the intention of the legislature.[27] Sections must be read and construed in connection with the illustrations to be found in the Act.[28] It is true that illustrations cannot control the language of a section, but they certainly afford a guidance to its construction.[29]

The statement of law in illustrations used in the Act cannot be taken as laying down substantive law,[30] and does not bind the courts to place a meaning on the section which is inconsistent with the language.[31] If there be any conflict between the illustration and the main enactment, the illustration must give way to the latter.[32] An illustration cannot have the effect of modifying the language of the section which alone forms the enactment.[33] They are not to be regarded as exhaustive, and are intended only as a guide to the working of the section to which they are appended.[34]

20. Proviso

The purpose and idea of a proviso is always to limit or qualify something provided in that provision, to which it is aided as a proviso. But at the same time, it is a settled rule of law that a proviso has to be interpreted in the spirit of the preceding provision, to which it is appended, a proviso cannot plough through the parent provision to destroy its impact or make it completely nugatory.[35] If the language of the proviso makes it plain that it was intended to have an operation more extensive than that of the provision which it immediately follows it must be given such wider effect. Undoubtedly the general rule is that a proviso is added to an enactment to qualify or17 create an exception to what is in the enactment and ordinarily a proviso is not interpreted as stating a general rule.[36]

A proviso does not travel beyond the provision to which it is a proviso. The golden rule is to read the whole section inclusive of the proviso in such a manner that they throw light on each other and result in a harmonious construction.[37]

The natural presumption when a proviso is inserted to a section, is that, but for the proviso, the enacting part of the section would have included the subject-matter of the proviso also, the proviso is also a useful guide in the choice of one or other of two possible constructions of words in the enactment or to lift the mist as to the scope of the latter in a doubtful case.[38]

A proviso to a section is not always an exception to the main part of it, it may be a saving clause or in exceptional cases, even a substantive provision itself, when the substantive provision to which it is appended as a proviso deals with a different subject altogether.[39]

A proviso has to be considered in relation to the main enactment, it is now well settled that the proviso has to be considered in relation to the main enactment and should not be allowed to completely take away the effect of the enactment itself.[40] It is true that a proviso is limited in its operation to the ambit of the section which it qualifies. This is the general principle of interpretation of a proviso. But where there is a non-obstante clause appearing in the proviso it cannot reasonably be so construed as contradicting the main enactment only when 'it has to be interpreted on the principle that it speaks the last intention of the makers'.[41]

21. Non-obstante Clause

The effect of non-obstante clause in legislation is to enable that legislation to prevail over the provisions in any other legislation, which are contrary to it. In case of conflict, the legislation having a non-obstante clause would prevail.[42]

A non-obstante clause is primarily used in a statutory provision to indicate that the provision shall prevail in disregard of any provision which may stand in the way.[43] A non-obstante clause has to be strictly construed.[44]

22. Explanation

An explanation appended to a section or clause gets incorporated into it, and becomes an integral part of it, and has no independent existence apart from it. There is only one enactment of which both the section and the explanation, are two inseparable parts; they move in a body if they move at all.[45] The orthodox function of18 an explanation is to explain the meaning and effect of the main provision to which it is an explanation and to clear up any doubt or ambiguity in it. But ultimately it is the intention of the legislature which is paramount and mere use of a label cannot control or deflect such intention. The legislature has different ways of expressing itself and in the last analysis the words used by the legislature are the true repository of the intent of the legislature and they must be construed having regard to the content and setting in which they occur. A provision even though called an explanation must be construed according to its plain and not in any a priori consideration.[46]

23. Schedule to Act

A schedule forms part of the statute and must be read together with it.[47]

24. Punctuation

Prior to 1849, no punctuation normally appeared in the Acts on the rolls of Parliament in England and it was, therefore, held that punctuation could not be relied on in construing statutes. But in India there is no unpunctuated original statute book, and there is no reason why the punctuation of editions of an Act issued by the Government of India should be disregarded.[48] The better rule is that punctuation is a part of the Act and may be considered in the interpretation of the Act, but may not be used to distort or defeat the intention of the legislature. Where the intent is uncertain, punctuation, if it affords some indication of the true intention, may be looked to as an aid.[49] Reference to be made to the undermentioned case.[50]

25. Repeal

It is one of the cardinal principles of the interpretation of statutes that a repeal means a complete obliteration of the Act repealed unless it is otherwise expressed.[51] The effect of a repealing statute is to obliterate it as completely from the records of the Parliament as if it had never been passed; and it must be considered as a law that never existed, except for the purpose of those actions which were commenced, prosecuted and concluded whilst it was existing law.[52]But where an enactment is repealed, unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not affect the previous operation of the enactment repealed or anything duly done or suffered thereunder, nor will it affect any legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any right, privilege or liability or forfeiture under the repealed Act.[53] Repeal does not affect the notifications issued under the earlier Act.[54]Where an Act repeals a previous Act and provides that all orders issued thereunder shall, so far as may be deemed to have been issued under the new law, the provision is designed to safeguard the validity of the orders,19 appointments, etc., issued under the repealed Act and not to give retrospective effect to the new Act.[55]

Where a particular clause in an Act of Parliament is repealed, the effect of repeal is that it is to be taken as if that clause had never been enacted. No judge ever laid down as law that where a particular clause in an Act is repealed, the whole Act must be read as if that clause had never been enacted.[56] In considering the effect of a repeal of a section, it is necessary to consider the nature of what is repealed.[57] There is a presumption against an implied repeal.[58]However, where the existence of two sets of provisions is destructive of the object with which the later Act was passed, the court would treat the earlier provision as impliedly repealed. A later Act which confers a new right would repeal an earlier Act if the effect of the two rights co-existing together produces conflict or inconvenience.[59]

Repeal of Repealing Act

Where an Act is repealed and the repealing enactment is then repealed by another which manifests no intention that the original Act shall continue to remain as repealed, the common law rule was that the repeal of the second Act revived the first ab initio.[60]

26. Saving Clause

It is well settled that the repealing and saving provision by its very nature can repeal or save only a law or thing which continues to be in force until the saving provisions itself came into play and can save only such order or action, etc., which is in force under the law they were passed which law is then repealed. If the law sought to be repealed itself stands lapsed or expired, then that saving provision cannot revive or restore only dead or defunct law.[61]

27. General Rules of Interpretation

(a) Use of 'and' and 'or'

It is permissible to look upon the word 'and' as 'or' in some cases, and vice versa in some cases, depending upon facts and circumstances of a particular case.[62]

(b) Means and includes

The words 'means and includes' in definition clause does not attract or take away from the primary meaning of the word.[63]20

(c) Harmonious Interpretation

The court is entitled, and indeed bound when construing the terms of any provision, found in a statute, to consider any other part of the Act which throws light upon the intention of the legislature and which may serve to show that the particular provision ought not to be construed, as it would be, if considered alone, apart from the rest of the Act.[64] A section is to be read in its entirety.[65]

Provisions of statutes should be read so as to harmonise with one another.[66]

(d) Overlapping Provisions

According to the well known canon of interpretation, when there are two provisions in an enactment, overlapping each other, which cannot be reconciled, they should be interpreted harmoniously so as to give effect to both. The construction which makes one of the provisions useless cannot be said to be harmonious. If a special provision has been made in a statute on a particular matter that has to be excluded from the general provision.[67]

(e) Conflict between Judge-made-law and Statute Law

In the presence of a specific provision, which the legislature in its wisdom has thought to operate, the conflict, between the same and the judge-made-law has necessarily to be resolved in favour of the specific provision.[68]

(f) Provisions Mandatory or Directory

Broad purpose of the Act is important, mere language is not a decisive factor

There is no ready test or invariable formula to determine whether a provision is mandatory or directory. The broad purpose of the statute is important. The object of the particular provision must be considered. The link between the two is most important. The weighing of the consequences of holding a provision to be mandatory or directory is vital and, more often than not, determinative of the very question whether the provision is mandatory or directory. Where the design of the statute is the avoidance or prevention of public mischief, but the enforcement of a particular provision literally to its letter will tend to defeat that design, the provision must be held to be directory, so that proof of prejudice in addition to non-compliance of the provision is necessary to invalidate the act complained of. It is well to remember that quite often many rules though couched in language which appears to be imperative, are no more than mere instructions to those entrusted with the task of discharging statutory duties for public benefit.[69]

One of the tests for holding a provision to be of mandatory character, is, whether there is any penalty provided for the non-observance of such a provision or not.[70]

21Even the provisions, which are mandatory in form, have been understood as merely directory. For a proper determination of this question, the background of the provision will have relevance.[71]

Not form but intention of Legislature is material

It is not the form of the provision or the use of the word 'shall' that can be considered to be conclusive in interpreting or deciding whether the provision in a statute is mandatory or not. It is the difference in the intention of the legislature that distinguishes between a directory and a mandatory provision in a statute. What matters, therefore, is the intention of the legislature. This legislative intent can be ascertained by a due consideration of facts like the whole of the provision, its nature, its object and purpose, its previous history, the consequences which would follow from construing the provision one way or the other and also the ground of policy and reasonableness.[72]

Use of 'shall' Not Conclusive

The use of the word 'shall' is not conclusive and decisive of the question whether a particular provision is directory or mandatory. The court has to ascertain the true intention of the legislature, which is the determining factor and that must be done by looking carefully to the whole scope, nature and design of the statute. The two considerations for regarding a provision as directory are: (a) absence of any provision for the contingency of a particular provision not being complied with or followed; and (b) serious general inconvenience and prejudice that should result to the general public if the act of the government or an instrumentality is declared invalid for non-compliance with two particular provisions.[73]

Purposive Construction

A purposive construction of an enactment is one which gives effect to the legislative purpose by following the literal meaning of the enactment where that meaning is in accordance with the legislative purpose or by applying a strained meaning where the literal meaning is not in accordance with the legislative purpose.[74]

Permissibility of the use of the Dictionaries

It is no use turning to dictionaries. Dictionaries give variegated meanings to words. What meaning is to be adopted depends on the context.[75]

While it may be permissible to refer to dictionaries to find out the meaning in which a word is capable of being used or understood in common parlance, the well known canon of construction should not, even for a minute be overlooked that the meaning of the words and expressions used in a statute ordinarily take their colour22 from the context in which they appear. So, dictionaries are not dictators of statutory construction where the benignant mood of law may furnish a different denotation.[76]

28. Construction of Penal Statutes

To be Strictly Construed

A penal provision is to be strictly construed.[77] It has been held in several cases that a penal statute should be construed very strictly in favour of the subject.[78]When it is said that all penal statutes are to be construed strictly it only means that the court must see that the thing charged is an offence within the plain meaning of the words used and must not strain the words. To put it in other words, the rule of strict construction requires that the language of a statute should be so construed that no case shall be held to fall within it which does not come within the reasonable interpretation of the statute. It has also been held that in construing a penal statute it is a cardinal principle that in case of doubt, the construction favourable to the subject should be preferred. But these rules do not in any way affect the fundamental principles of interpretation, namely that the primary test is the language employed in the Act and when the words are clear and plain, the court is bound to accept the expressed intention of the legislature.[79] The Supreme Court has also held that the provisions of a penal section have to be very strictly construed and in case of ambiguity or possibility of two views, the benefit of construction must be in favour of the accused.[80] In the absence of clear compelling language, the provision should not be given a wide interpretation. If two constructions are possible upon the language of the statute, the court must choose the one which is consistent with good sense and fairness and escheat the other which makes its operation unduly oppressive unjust or unreasonable or which would lead to strange inconsistent results or otherwise introduce an element of bewildering uncertainty and practical inconvenience in the working of the statute.[81] The golden rule of criminal jurisprudence is that an accused is presumed to be innocent till he is proved guilty; hence the law requires the accuser to prove all facts compatible with his guilt and incompatible with his innocence.[82] In the interpretation of a penal provision the well-settled rule is that the subject should be held to be free unless he can be found guilty according to the clear and unambiguous language of the statute.[83]

23It is settled canon of interpretation that the penal provisions, particularly with harsher punishments and with clear intendment of the legislature for definite compliance, ought to be construed strictly. The doctrine of substantial compliance cannot be called in aid to answer such interpretations. The principle of substantial compliance would be applicable in the cases where the language of the provision strictly or by necessary implication admits of such compliance.[84]

It is settled principle of interpretation of criminal jurisprudence that the provisions have to be strictly construed and cannot be given a retrospective effect unless legislative intent and expression is clear beyond ambiguity. The amendments to criminal law would not intend that there should be undue delay in disposal of criminal trials or there should be retrial just because the law has changed. Such an approach would be contrary to the doctrine of finality as well as avoidance of delay in conclusion of criminal trial.[85]

So, when provisions which are penal in nature are to be interpreted, a strict construction has to be placed thereon keeping in view the fact that the breach results in inflictment of punishment which may include not only fine but imprisonment also.[86] It is not open to the court to add something to or read something in the statute on the basis of some supposed intendment of the statute. It is not the function of this court to supply the casusomissus, if there be one. As long as the presumption of innocence of the accused prevails in this country, the benefit of any lacuna or casusomissus must be given to the accused. The job of plugging the loopholes must strictly be left to the legislature and not assumed by the court.[87]

Mens Rea when Material

> No doubt all penal statutes are to be construed strictly, that is to say, the Court must see that the thing charged as an offence is within the plain meaning of the words used...Where the thing is brought within the words and within the spirit, then a penal enactment is to be construed like any other instrument according to the fair commonsense and meaning of the language used.[88]

Unless the statute, either clearly or by necessary implication, rules out mens rea as a constituent part of a crime, an accused should not be found guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has a guilty mind.[89] If there is any ambiguity or doubt, the benefit of it must go to the subject.[90] If therefore, a clause or expression in a penal statute is capable of being interpreted either in favour of or against the accused, the former interpretation ought to prevail.[91]24

When Two Views are Possible

If the words are capable of two constructions, one of which is more favourable to the accused than the other, the court will be justified in accepting the one which is more favourable to the accused.[1] In applying a criminal statute and before convicting a person of a criminal offence, care must be taken not to go beyond the obvious intention of the legislature.[2] But where penalties for infringement are imposed, it is not legitimate to stretch the language of a rule, however beneficent its intention, beyond the fair and ordinary meaning of its language.[3] It is a well settled rule of construction of penal statutes that if two possible and reasonable constructions can be put upon a penal provision, the court must lean towards that construction which exempts the subject from penalty rather than the one which imposes penalty. Or if the language of the section is ambiguous, the person charged is entitled to the benefit of the doubt and, where an equivocal word or ambiguous sentence leaves a reasonable doubt of its meaning which the canons of interpretation fail to solve, the benefit of doubt should be given to the subject and against the legislature which failed to explain itself.[4] It is not competent to the court to stretch the meaning of an expression used by the legislature in order to carry out the intention of the legislature.[5]

Plain Meaning to be Seen

The Court cannot proceed with an assumption that the legislature enacting the statute has committed a mistake and where the language of the statute is plain and unambiguous, the Court cannot go behind the language of the statute so as to add or subtract a word playing the role of a political reformer or of a wise counsel to the legislature. The Court has to proceed on the footing that the legislature intended what it has said and even if there is some defect in the phraseology etc., it is for others than the Court to remedy that defect. The statute requires to be interpreted without doing any violence to the language used therein. The Court cannot re-write, recast or reframe the legislation for the reason that it has no power to legislate.[6]

There can be no justification however for adding any words to make provision of law less stringent than the legislature has made it.[7] Courts have to interpret the statutes primarily according to their plain meaning. There is no authority for the view that the meaning of the words used has to be strained so as to make it conform to some assumed latent intention of the legislature.[8]

According to Maxwell:[9]

> The tendency of modern decisions upon the whole, is to narrow materially the difference between what is called a strict and a beneficial construction. All statutes are now construed with a more attentive regard to the language, and criminal statutes with a25 more rational regard to the aim and intention of the legislature, than formerly. It is unquestionably right that the distinction should not be altogether erased from the judicial mind, for it is required by the spirit of our free institutions that the interpretation of all statute should be favourable to personal liberty, and this tendency is still evinced in a certain reluctance to supply the defects of language, or to eke out the meaning of an obscure passage by strained or doubtful influences. The effect of the rule of strict construction might almost be summed up in the remark that where an equivocal word or ambiguous sentence leaves a reasonable doubt of its meaning which the canons of interpretation fail to solve, the benefit of the doubt should be given to the subject and against the legislature which has failed to explain itself. But it yields to the paramount rule that every statute is to be expounded according to its expressed or manifest intention and that all cases within the mischiefs aimed at are if the language permits, to be held to fall within its remedial influence. That the same rules would govern the construction of penal statutes as in the construction of other statutes be taken to be the present law. I am supported in this view of mine by Craies. The learned author says that: 'All statutes whether penal or not are now construed by substantially the same rules.' The distinction between a strict and liberal construction has almost disappeared.

A penal statute must be read in a manner consistent with commonsense. It has to be construed no doubt strictly but the intention of the legislature must govern in the construction of a penal statute as much as in any other statute.[10]

Penal statutes like other statutes must undoubtedly be construed according to their plain provisions. But it is now well recognised that it is the paramount duty of the courts to put upon the language of the legislature honestly and faithfully its plain and rational meaning so as to promote the object of the legislature.[11] Penal statutes are negative commands and the meaning attached to the words should as far as possible, be the same as understood in popular parlance in preference to articulate or special or scientific connotations. The task of interpretation has to be performed to achieve the purpose and the object of a given statute and suppress the mischief for which the prohibition or the penalty was enacted.[12]

General Rule of Construction

It is a well settled general rule of interpretation that the primary and foremost task of the court in interpreting the statutory provision is to ascertain the intention of the legislature actual or imputed and after ascertaining the intention, the court will make every endeavour to interpret the statute with a view to promote the object and purpose of the enactment. It is also well settled that the words, phrases and the sentences should be construed according to the intendment of the legislature that passed the Act. If the words of the statute are clear and precise among themselves no more is necessary than to expound those words, phrases and sentences in their natural and ordinary sense. Only in case of ambiguity or confusion the other rules of interpretation are to be followed with a view to finding out the intention of the legislature.[13]

While interpreting a statute the Court may not only take into consideration the purpose for which the statue was enacted, but also the mischief it seeks to suppress.26 It is this mischief rule, first propounded in Heydon's case[14] which became the historical source of purposive interpretation. The Court would also invoke the legal maxim of construction, ut res magis valeat guam pereat, in such cases i.e. where alternative constructions are possible the Court must give effect to that which will be responsible for the smooth working of the system for which the statute has been enacted rather than one which will put a road block in its way.[15]

The Court cannot proceed with an assumption that the legislature enacting the statute has committed a mistake and where the language of the statute is plain and unambiguous, the Court cannot go behind the language of the statute so as to add or subtract a word playing the role of a political reformer or of a wise counsel to the legislature. The Court has to proceed on the footing that the legislature intended what it has said and even if there is some defect in the phraseology etc., it is for others than the Court to remedy that defect. The statute requires to be interpreted without doing any violence to the language used therein. The Court cannot re-write, recast or reframe the legislation for the reason that it has no power to legislate.[16]

No word in a statute has to be construed as surplusage. No word can be rendered ineffective or purposeless. Courts are required to carry out the legislative intent fully and completely.[17]

Context of Words also Material

It is no doubt true that if the words used in a criminal statute are reasonably capable of two constructions, the construction which is favourable to the accused should be preferred; but in construing the relevant words, it is obviously necessary to have due regard to the context in which they have been used.[18]

An optional legislation that does not contain an unavoidable imperative cannot be stultified by principles of personal law.[19]

29. Retrospective Effect

On the ordinary principles of penal legislation, a penal provision does not have retrospective effect.[20]A new Act or statute which penalises what otherwise is not an offence must be so construed as to make it strike at future acts or omissions unless the legislature has clearly said so.[21] Statutes, particularly statutes creating liabilities, ought not to be so construed as to give them a retrospective operation unless there is a clear provision to that effect or a necessary intendment implied in the provisions.[22]

The cardinal principle is that statutes must always be interpreted prospectively, unless the languages of the statutes makes them retrospective, either expressly or by necessary implication. Penal statutes which create new offences are always27 prospective, but penal statutes which create disabilities, though ordinarily interpreted prospectively, are sometimes interpreted retrospectively when there is a clear intendment that they are to be applied to post events.[23]

30. English Law as Aid to interpretation

In this country, where we have got definite statutes, we have to follow the same. The rules of the common law of England or the legal maxims embodying certain judicial principles, however wholesome they may be, cannot be engrafted upon the Code.[24] In order to ascertain the true meaning and intent of the provisions, we have to turn to the very terms of the statute itself, divorced from all considerations as to what was the state of the previous law or the law in England or elsewhere at the time when the statute was enacted. To do otherwise would be to make the law, not to interpret it.[25] But where we have a Code like the IPC which defines with particularity the ingredients of a crime and the defences open to an accused charged with any of the offences there set out, it would not be proper or justifiable to permit the invocation of some common law principle outside that Code for the purpose of treating what on the words of the statute is a crime, into a permissible or other than unlawful act.[26] It must be remembered that the IPC exhaustively codifies the law relating to offences with which it deals and the rules of the Common Law cannot be resorted to for inventing exemptions which are not expressly enacted.[27]

> The Indian Penal Code defines the offence and also states what matters will afford a defence, and therefore, it may be said that this Code deals specifically with the question and it follows that the Court is not entitled to invoke the common law of England in the matter at all.[28]

Recourse to the law as is obtained in England or in other countries would be permissible only if there was any latent or patent ambiguity and the courts were required to find out what was the true intendment of the legislature. Where, however, the terms of the statute do not admit of any such ambiguity, it is the clear duty of the courts to construe the plain terms of the statute and give them their legal effect.[29] As was observed by Lord Herschell in Bank of England v Vagliano Brothers :[30]

> I think the proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute and to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a statute, intended to embody in a Code a particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated.

28

Reference to the history of legislation can only be legitimately made, as was done by the Judicial Committee in Baboo Deep Narain Singh v Lal Chutterput Singh [31] and Brown v Mclachlan ,[32] when reasonable doubt is entertained as to the construction of a statute. The proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute, to interpret it, to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law; to begin with an examination of the previous state of the law on the point, is to attack the problem on the wrong end; and it is a grave error to force upon the plain language of the section an interpretation, which the words will not bear, on the assumption of a supposed policy on the part of the legislature not to depart from the rules of the English Law on the subject.[33] That the criminal law of India is prescribed by and, so far as it goes, is contained in the IPC, that accordingly (as the Code itself shows) the criminal law of India and that of England differ in sundry respects, and that the Code has first of all to be construed in accordance with its natural meaning and irrespective of any assumed intention on the part of its framers to leave unaltered the law as it existed before, are, though common places, considerations which it is important never to forget. It is, however, equally true that the Code must not be assumed to have sought to introduce differences from the prior law. It continues to employ some of the older technical terms without even defining them, as in the case of 'abetment'.[34]

31. Mens Rea in the Case of Statutory Offences

Unless the statute either clearly or by necessary implication rules out mens rea as a constituent part of the crime, an accused should not be found guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has got a guilty mind.[35] There is a presumption that guilty intent is an essential element of an offence. It is a well established rule that none is guilty under the criminal law unless he has a guilty mind.[36] Before presumption as to mens rea is to be displaced strict liability must be required to give practical effect to the legislative intent.[37]

32. Investigation and Trial of Offences under the Code

All offences under this Code shall be investigated, inquired into, tried, and otherwise dealt with according to the provisions contained in the CrPC)]. Section 188 of the CrPC makes a special provision for offences committed outside India. If during the investigation stage the person, known or reasonably suspected to be the offender having committed the offences outside India, is not available in India, extradition proceedings may have to be resorted to: 'Extradition is the surrender by one state to another of a person desired to be dealt with for crimes of which he has been accused or convicted and which are justifiable in courts of the other states'.[38]29

3 The original words have successively been amended by Act 12 of 1891, s 2 and Sch I, the AO 1937, the AO 1948 and the AO 1950 to read as above.

4 Subs by Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule for 'except Part B States'.

5 The Government of India Act 1858; The Short Title Act 1899, 59 and 56 Vic C 14.

6 Now repealed by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order 1937.

7 Regulation 3 of 1872, as amended by Regulation 3 of 1899, s 3 .

8 Regulation 9 of 1874, s 4 .

9 Act 13 of 1898, s 4 .

10 Regulation 1 of 1890, s 3 .

11 Regulation 5 of 1936, s 3 and Sch and Regulation 4 of 1936, s 3 and Sch, respectively.

12 Regulation 1 of 1895, s 3 .

13 Regulation 5 of 1896, s 3 .

14 Notification of Government of India, dated 13 February 1884; R v Mangal Teckchand 10 ILR Bom 258 .

15 Gazette of India 1876, Pt I, p 505.

16 Gazette of India 1881, Pt I, p 501.

17 Ibid, p 504.

18 Wef 13-9-1994 (vide Notification No. S.O. 516 (E), dt. 9-7-1994).

19 General Clauses Act 1897, s 3(28) .

20 Virender Singh v General Officer Commanding (1974) J&K LR 101 .

21 KRK Vara Prasad v Union of India (1980) 1 ALT 381 .

22 Ranbir Penal Code, ss 190A and 291A - 291D .

23 Ibid, 513-15.

24 Vide the Andhra Pradesh Reorganisation Act 2014, s 10 (wef 2-06-2014).

25 Remla v SP of Police (1993) 1 KLT 412 .

26 Re Kastya Ram(1871) 8 BHC 63 (Cr C).

27 Rolet v R LR 1 PCC 198 ; Q v Anderson LR 1 CC 161 ; Q v Musson 8 E&B 900 ; Emleton v Brown 30 LJMC 1 ; Re Kastya Ram(1871) 8 BHC 63 (Cr C); Potestalern Terrofinlrubt Fainter Armorum v iz (Deominion Mariss, Ch II); R v Elmstone 7 BHCR 89 (Cr) ; Emperor v (Dr) Sylva LR 33 Bom 380, 9 Cr LJ 291 .

28 Per Kemball J, in Re KastyaRam(1871) 8 BHC 63 (Cr C), 9 Cr LJ 291.

29 Openheim's International Law, vol I, seventh edn, p 415; Hyde on International Law, vol I, second edn, p 152 and Higgins and Colombos on International Law of the Sea, second edn.

30 AMSSVM & Co v State of Madras AIR 1954 Mad 291, p 299 .

31 Hyde onInternational Law, vol I, second edn, pp 464-65.

32 ER Corft v Sylvester Dunphy AIR 1933 PC 16, p 17 .

33 Lord Advocate v Wemys (1900) AC 48 .

34 Secy of State v Chellikani Rama Rao AIR 1916 PC 21, p 25 .

35 Fielding v Mosley Corpn (1899) 1 Ch 1 (per Lindley MR); Vacher & Sons Ltd v London Society of Compositors (1928) AC 107, p 128 .

36 State v Hyder Ali AIR 1955 Hyd 128, p 132, 56 Cr LJ 798 ; relying onEast and West India Dock v Shaw Savill and Albian Co* (1888) 39 Ch D 524 .

37 National Telephone Co Ltd v Post-Master General (1913) AC 546 .

38 Re *The Kerala Education Bill 1957*AIR 1958 SC 956, p 974 ; Biswambhar Singh v State of Orissa AIR 1954 SC 139 ; Debendra Narain Roy v Jogindra Narain Deb AIR 1936 Cal 593 .

39 Poppat Lal Shah v State of Madras AIR 1953 SC 274, p 276, 54 Cr LJ 1105 ; Brij Bhukan Kalwar v SDO , *Siwan*AIR 1955 Pat 1, p 15 .

40 Pannalal Lahoti v State of Hyderabad AIR 1954 Hyd 129, p 153, 55 Cr LJ 1093 .

41 Mangilal Karwa v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1955 Nag 153, p 157 ; Commr of Labour v Associated Cement Co Ltd AIR 1955 Bom 363, p 365 .

42 CIT, Bombay v Ahmedbhai Umarbhai & Co AIR 1950 SC 134, p 141 .

43 Crawford, p 124.

44 Craies, Statute Law, fifth edn, p 38; Anil Kumar Bhattacharjee v Dy Commr and Collector, Kamrup AIR 1959 Assam 147 .

45 Coke, 4 Inst 330.

46 Income Tax Special Purposes Commrs v Pemsel (1891) AC 531, p 542 ; Bhola Prasad v Emperor AIR 1942 FC 17, 43 Cr LJ 481 ; Janki Singh v Jagannath Das AIR 1918 Pat 398 .

47 Mills v Wilkins (1703) 6 Mod 62, 90 ER 1266 .

48 Rehman Shagoo v State of Jammu & Kashmir AIR 1958 J&K 29, (1958) Cr LJ 885 .

49 J Nageswara Rao v State of Madras AIR 1954 Mad 643 .

50 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 31, p 461, para 558, quoted in J Nageswara Rao v State of Madras AIR 1954 Mad 643 .

51 Mohammad Yusuf v Imtiaz Ahmad Khan AIR 1939 Oudh 131, p 137, 40 Cr LJ 421 ; Raghavendra Singh v Pushpandra Singh AIR 1955 V P 19, p 20 .

52 State of West Bengal v Anwar Ali Sarkar AIR 1952 SC 75, (1953) Cr LJ 510, (1952) SCJ 55, [1952] SCR 284 .

53 Nanneka Seshayya v State of Madras (now Andhra Pradesh) AIR 1957 AP 466, p 467 ; Jitendra Pratap Bahadur Sahi v Bhagwati Prasad Singh AIR 1956 Pat 457 ; Raghavendra Singh v Pushpendra Singh AIR 1955 VP 19 ; Mohd Bin Salem v Umaji AIR 1955 Hyd 113 ; Mohamdali Fakruddin v Gokulprasad Lalaram AIR 1954 Nag 209 .

54 Kamlesh Kumar Harbans Lal Chhabra v State of Madhya Pradesh (1985) MPLJ 72 AIR 1985 MP 130 (YA Mamarde & Ors v Authority under the Minimum Wages Act (Small Causes Court) Nagpur & Anor AIR 1972 SC 1721 and State of Rajasthan v Leela Jain & Ors AIR 1965 SC 1296 relied on).

55 Om Prakash Mehta v Emperor 49 Cr LJ 230, AIR 1948 Nag 199, (1947) ILR Nag 579 ; Popatlal Shah v State of Madras 54 Cr LJ 1105, AIR 1953 SC 274, (1953) SCA 466, 1953 SCJ 369, [1953] SCR 677, (1953) 1 Mad LJ 739, 66 LW 573 ; Brij Bhukan Kalwar v SDO , *Siwan*AIR 1955 Pat 1, (1954) ILR Pat 690, 2 Bih LJ 513 ; Emperor v Dholaram Holaram AIR 1941 Sind

221 .

56 A Thangal Kunju Musaliar v M Venkatachalam Potti AIR 1956 SC 246, (1956) SCA 259, (1956) SCJ 323, [1952] 2 SCR 1196, [1956] 29 ITR 349 ; District Board of Bhagalpur v Province of Bihar AIR 1954 Pat 529, (1954) ILR Pat 563, 2 Bih LJ 603 ; State v Hyder Ali 56 Cr LJ 798, AIR 1955 Hyd 128, (1955) ILR Hyd 214 ; Savitri Devi v Dwarka Prasad Bhatya AIR 1939 All 305, (1939) ILR All 275, 1939 All LJ 71, 182 IC 84, (1939) All WR 121 ; Rajpali Kunwar v Surju Rai AIR 1936 All 507, 163 IC 756, (1939) All LJ 659, (1936) All WR 580 ; Shah Mohammad v Crown 51 Cr LJ 258, AIR 1950 Pesh 1 ; Om Prakash Mehta v Emperor 49 Cr LJ 230, AIR 1948 Nag 199, (1947) ILR Nag 579, (1947) Nag LJ 326 .

57 D Bywater v Brandling (1928) 7 B&C 643 ; Halten v Cove (1830) 1 B&AD 538, 9 LJKB 74 ; Sussex Peerage Case(1844) 11 Cl & Fn 85, 8 Jur 793, 65 RR 11; Crowder v Steward (1880) 16 Ch D 368, 50 LJ Ch 136, 29 WR 331 ; Income Tax Special Purposes Commrs v Pemsel (1891) AC 531 ; Fenton v Thorley & Co Ltd (1903) AC 443, 72 LJKB 787, 89 LT 314 ; 52 WR 81, 19 TLR 684 ; Debendra Narain Roy v Jogendra Narain Deb AIR 1939 Cal 593, 64 Cal LJ 212 ; M Kevalchand Sowcar v State of Madras (1957) Cr LJ 962, AIR 1957 Mad 514, (1957) ILR Mad 937 .

58 Salke'd v Jonson (1848) 2 Ex 256 ; Pocock v Pickering (1852) 18 QBD 789 ; Taylor v Corpn of Oldham (1876) 4 Ch D 395 ; Overseas of Weatham v Ides (1883) 8 AC 386 ; Powell v Kempton Racecourse Co (1897) 2 QB 242, 66 LJQB 601, 77 LT 2, 46 WR 8, 61 JP 548, Fetcher v Birkanhead Corpn (1907) 1 KB 205 ; Debendra Nath Roy v Jogendra Narain Deb AIR 1936 Cal 593, 64 Cal LJ 212 ; Secy of State v Sanidhiraju Subbaryudu AIR 1932 PC 46 ; Mani Lall Singh v Trustees for Improvement of Calcutta AIR 1919 Cal 551, 45 ILR Cal 243, 44 IC 770, 22 Cal WN 1, 27 Cal LJ 1 (FB) ; Secy of State for India v Maharaja of Bobbili AIR 1919 PC 52, 46 IA 302, 43 ILR Mad 529, 54 IC 154 ; Commr of Labour v Associated Cement Co Ltd AIR 1955 Bom 363, (1955) ILR Bom 467, 57 Bom LR 367 ; Benoari Lal Sarma v Emperor 44 Cr LJ 673, AIR 1943 Cal 285, 207 IC 481 ; Anwar Ali Sarkar v State of West Bengal 53 Cr LJ 450, AIR 1952 Cal 150 .

59 Bassel v Basset (1744) 3 Atk 203, 26 ER 918 ; Kinnaird v Cory and Son (1989) 2 QB 578 ; Walter v Lane (1894) 1 KB 811 ; Debandra Narain Roy v Jogendra Narain Deb, AIR 1936 Cal 593, 64 Cal LJ 212 ; Emperor v Dholaram Holaram AIR 1941 Sind 221 ; Benoarilal Sarma v Emperor 44 Cr LJ 673, AIR 1943 Cal 284, 285, 207 IC 481 (SB) ; Anwar Ali Sarkar v State of West Bengal 53 Cr LJ 450, AIR 1952 Cal 150 .

60 Ratanamma Palat v Muhammaduni (1972) KLT 3, 1972 Ker LJ 29 .

61 Anwar Ali Sarkar v State of West Bengal 53 Cr LJ 450, AIR 1952 Cal 150 ; Mangilal Karva v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1955 Nag 153, (1955) ILR Nag 364 ; Manohar Lal v Emperor 43 Cr LJ 897, AIR 1943 Lah 1, (1943) ILR Lah 95, 202 IC 735, 44 PLR 524 ; Deorajan Debi v Satyadhayan Ghosal AIR 1954 Cal 119, 58 CWN 64 ; Commr of Labour v Associated Cement Co Ltd AIR 1955 Bom 363, (1955) ILR Bom 467, 57 Bom LR 367 ; Tej Bahadur Singh v State AIR 1954 All 655, 55 Cr LJ 1399, 1954 All LJ 681 ; Kedar Nath Bajoria v State of West Bengal AIR 1953 SC 404, 54 Cr LJ 1621, (1953) SCA 835, (1953) SCJ 580, [1954] SCR 30 ; HP Barua v State of Assam AIR 1955 Assam 249 .

62 Anil Kumar Bhattacharjee v Dy Commr and Collector , *Kamrup*AIR 1959 Assam 147, p 151 ; State of Bihar v Sir Kameshwar Singh AIR 1952 SC 252, (1953) SCA 53 ; Mohammadali Fakruddin v Gokul Prasad Lalaram AIR 1954 Nag 209, (1954) ILR Nag 323 .

63 Kedar Nath Bajoria v State of West Bengal 54 Cr LJ 1621, AIR 1953 SC 404, (1953) SCA 835, (1953) SCJ 580, [1954] SCR 30 ; Biswambhar Singh v State of Orissa AIR 1954 SCJ 139, (1954) ILR Orissa 398, (1954) SCJ 219, [1954] SCR 842 ; Re Kerala Education Bill 1957, AIR 1958 SC 956, (1958) ILR Ker 1167, 1958 KLT 465 ; Tej Bahadur Singh v State 55 Cr LJ 1399, AIR 1954 All 655, (1954) All LJ 681 .

64 Sardar Inder Singh v State of Rajasthan AIR 1957 SC 510, (1957) SCJ 376, (1957) SCA 735, [1957] SCR 605 ; Block v Hirsh (1920) 65 Law edn 865, 256 US 135 .

65 Bank of England v Vagliano Brothers (1891) AC 107, 60 LJQB 145 ; Tiruvengada Mudali v Tripurasundari Ammal AIR 1926 Mad 906, p 908 .

66 Gokul Mandar v Pudmanund Singh 29 ILR Cal 707, p 715 ; Kari Singh v Emperor 40 ILR Cal 433 .

67 Courtenay Ilbert*, The Mechanics of Law Making*, second printing 2007, p 36.

68 Regulation 2 of 1802; Regulation 5 of 1802; Regulation 3 of 1808; Regulation 16 of 1825; Bengal Regulation 17 of 1817; Regulation 12 of 1818; Bengal Regulation 14 of 1827; Regulation 18 of 1827; Regulation 22 of 1827; Madras Regulation 6 of 1811; Regulation 13 of 1816; Regulation 14 of 1832.

69 Gopal Naidu v Emperor AIR 1923 Mad 523, p 528-29, 24 Cr LJ 599 (FB) .

70 Empress of India v Mulua ILR 1 All 599 ; Empress of India v Diljour Misser 2 ILR Cal 225 .

71 Tiruvengada Mudali v Tripurasundari Ammal AIR 1926 Mad 906 .

72 Imhoff-Berk Silk Dying Co v US 43 Fed (2) 836, P 837.

73 Re Central Provinces and Berar Sale of Motor Spirit and Lubricants Taxation Act 1938 AIR 1939 FC 1 .

74 RS Nayak v AR Antulay AIR 1984 SC 684, (1984) Cr LJ 613, (1984) SCC 172 (Cr), (1984) Cr LR 163 (SC), (1984) Cr App

Rep 141 (SC), (1984) SC Cr R 138, (1984) Cur Cr J 133, (1984) All Cr LR 410, (1984) 1 Crimes 568, (1984) 1 Serve LR 619, (1984) 2 SCC 183 .

75 AK Gopalan v State of Madras AIR 1950 SC 27, p 38, 51 Cr LJ 1383 .

76 Queen-Empress v Ghulet (1884) 7 All 44, p 52, 53 ; Shaik Moosa v Shaik Essa (1884) 8 Bom 241, p 246 ; Chunilal Maneharam v Manishankar Atmaram (1893) 18 Bom 616, p 625 ; Romesh Chunder Sanyal v Hiru Mondal (1890) 17 Cal 852, p 859 .

77 Mobarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857, p 871, (1957) Cr LJ 1346 .

78 Mangal Singh & Anor v State of Rajasthan (1971) WLN (Pt I) 23 .

79 Kadir Bakhsh v Bhawani Prasad 14 ILR All 145, p 150 .

80 AK Gopalan v State of Madras AIR 1950 SC 27, p 38, 51 Cr LJ 1383 .

81 Charanjit Lal Chaudhary v Union of India AIR 1951 SC 41, p 45, (1950) 1 SCR 869followed inAS Ruben v Narayan Moreshwar* AIR 1953 174 .

82 See alsoDebendra Narayan Roy v Jogendra Narayan Deb* AIR 1936 Cal 593, 619; Shidramappa v Neelavalai 57 ILR Bom 377, AIR 1933 Bom 272, 274 ; Ghulam Mohammad v Panna Ram AIR 1924 Lah 374, 376; Hem Raj v Kishan Lal AIR 1978 Lah 361, referring order of Bhide J, Gopal Krishna Parachure v Sakhojirav 18 ILR Bom 133, 136 ; Sarat Sundari Barmani v Uma Prasad Roy Chowdhry 31 ILR Cal 628, 640; Hiralal v Parasramsao (1941) ILR Nag 582, AIR 1942 Nag 5, 7; Re *New Sind*AIR 1942 Sind 65, 69, 43 Cr LJ 835 (FB); Ratan Chand v Sahiram AIR 1919 Sind 80 (FB) ; Re *Lala Harishen Lal*AIR 1937 Lah 497, 38 Cr LJ 883 (FB) .

83 State of Gujarat v Mirzapur Moti Kureshi Kassab Jamat AIR 2006 SC 212 .

84 Subhash Ramkumar Bind v State of Maharashtra AIR 2003 SC 269 .

85 Lajpat Rai Sahgat v State 1983 Cr LJ 888, (1983) 23 DLT 314, (1983) 1 Crimes 737 (Del) .

86 Re *lala Harkishan Lal*AIR 1937 Lah 497, 499, 38 Cr LJ 883; followingShanta Nand v Basudeva Nand* 52 ILR All 619, AIR 1930 All 225, 238-39 ; Ratansi Hirji v Emperor 58 ILR Bom 627, AIR 1929 Bom 274, 276 .

87 AC Sharma v Delhi Admn (1973) 1 SCC 726, (1973) Cr LR 292 (SC), (1973) SCC 608 (Cr), (1973) Cr App Rep 146, (1973) SC Cr R 212, (1973) 2 SCJ 289, (1973) Cr LJ 902, AIR 1973 SC 913 .

88 Aswini Kumar Ghose v Arbinad Bose AIR 1952 SC 369, [1953] SCR 1 .

89 TK Musaliar v Venkatachalam AIR 1956 SC 246, (1956) SCJ 323, [1955] 2 SCR 1196 ; State of West Bengal v Subodh Gopal Bose AIR 1954 SC 92, [1954] SCR 587 ; Charanjit Lal Chowdhury v Union of India AIR 1951 SC 41, [1950] SCR 868 ; Re *Dudree*1971 LW (Cr) 11; State v Prakash Chandra De (1976-77) 81 CWN 261, p 268.

90 State of Sikkim v Palden Bhutia 1981 Cr LJ 695 (Sikkim) .

1 Emperor v Ismail Sayadsahev Mujawar AIR 1933 Bom 417 .

2 Malhar Stone Lime Co v State of Vindhya Pradesh AIR 1956 V P 46 .

3 Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, seventh edn, pp 37-39, 44; Official Assignee of Bombay v Chimniram , *Motilal*AIR 1933 Bom 51, 34 Bom LR 1915 .

4 K Kanakashapathy v Sri TM Shammugham (1972) LW 208 (Cr) .

5 Sonelal v State of Madhya Pradesh (1972) MPLJ 763, (1972) Jab LJ 1031 .

6 Kalyanji v Ram Deen Lala 48 ILR Mad 395, AIR 1925 Mad 609, p 612 ; Shadhan Chandra v Shewnarayan Golabrai 60 ILR Cal 936, AIR 1933 Cal 699 ; Har Prasad Singh v DM, Ghazipur AIR 1949 All 403 ; Ramchandra Deo v Bhalu Patnaik AIR 1950 Ori 125, p 127 ; R v Surrey (1942) 2 All ER 276 .

7 Durga Thathera v Narain Thathera AIR 1931 All 597 ; Narayanaswami Naidu v Rangaswami Naidu AIR 1926 Mad 749 ; Baldeo Kurmi v Kashi Chamer AIR 1926 All 312 ; Debi Das v Maharaj Rupchand 49 ILR All 903, AIR 1927 All 593 ; Rachpal Singh v Summary General Court Martial (1973) Cr LJ 1036 (J&K) ; Raja Katra alias Rajakatra Pvt Ltd v Corpn of Calcutta (1973) Cr LJ 1505, 77 Cal WN 681 .

8 Bhinka v Charan Singh AIR 1959 SC 960 .

9 Sarah Mathew v Institute of Cardio Vascular Diseases 2014 Cr LJ 586, p 607, AIR 2014 SC 448, (2014) 5 SCC (Cri) 174, (2014) 12 AIC 58 (SC) .

10 Model Electric Oil Mills v Corpn of Calcutta AIR 1960 Cal 388, 63 Cal WN 776 ; Santosh Sahu v State & Anor (1972-73) 77 CWN 495, (1973) Cr LJ 968; Nandini Sathpathy v Sri PL Dani (1978) 45 Cut LT 253, 261, 1978 Cut LR (Cr) 61 .

11 Emperor v Sadashiv AIR 1947 PC 82, p 84 ; Kavasji Pestonji v Rostamji Sorabji AIR 1949 Bom 42, p 46 ; Thola Udayar v Sudai Udayan AIR 1940 Mad 8 ; Rachpal Singh v Summary General Court Martial 1973 Cr LJ 1036 (J&K) ; Raja Katra alias Rajakatra Pvt Ltd v Corpn of Calcutta (1973) Cr LJ 1505, 77 CWN 681 .

12 Emperor v Sadashiv AIR 1947 PC 82 .

13 CIT v Ahmedbhai Umarbhai AIR 1950 SC 134, [1950] SCR 335 ; Aneshwar Prasad v Misrilal AIR 1961 Pat 28 ; Balraj Kunwar v Jagatpal Singh 26 ILR All 393, p 406 .

14 Ram Saran Das v Bhagwati Prasad AIR 1929 All 53, p 58 .

15 Emperor v Ismail Syadsaheb Mujawal AIR 1933 Bom 417 .

16 Vishindas Lachmandas & Ors v Emperor AIR 1944 Sind 1 .

17 Ganpatrao Devaji v Emperor AIR 1932 Nag 174 ; Emperor v Lukman AIR 1927 Sind 39, p 27 ; Emperor v Fulabhai Bhulabhai AIR 1940 Bom 363 .

18 MS Kumar & Co v Official Assignee of Bombay AIR 1956 Bom 38, 51 Bom LR 979 ; Naseema v State of Kerala (1983) 2 Cr LC 245, (1983) KLT 579 (Ker) .

19 Russell's Legislative Drafting and Forms, fourth edn, p 95.

20 Bushell v Hammond 73 LJKB 1005 ; Bakare v Lieut Governor , *Southern Provinces*AIR 1929 Cal 679 .

21 Pheku Chamar v Harish Chandra AIR 1953 All 406 .

22 Ashrafali v Mahommadali AIR 1947 Bom 122, p 130 .

23 VEA Chettyar Firm v Sein Htaung AIR 1935 Rang 420 .

24 Chhotey Lal v King-Emperor AIR 1925 All 220 ; Krishna Das v Dwarkadas (1937) ILR Bom 679, AIR 1936 Bom 459, p 462 .

25 Balla Mal v Ahad Shah AIR 1918 PC 249, p 250 .

26 Ram Lal v Emperor AIR 1928 Oudh 15, p 17, 18, 28 Cr LJ 1029, per Wazir Hassan J.

27 Ram Sabhag Singh v Emperor 30 IC 465, p 478 (Cal), per Sharfuddin J; Satish Chandra Chakravarti v Ram Dayal De 48 ILR Cal 388, p 398 ; Nag Mya v Emperor 32 IC 641 .

28 Sopher v Administrator General of Bengal AIR 1944 PC 67, p 69 ; Aniruddha v Administrator General of Bengal AIR 1949 PC 244, p 250 .

29 Jadav Kumar v Pushpabai AIR 1944 Bom 29, p 31 ; Nga Mya v Emperor 32 IC 641 .

30 BN Rly Co Ltd v Ruttanji Ramji AIR 1938 PC 67 ; Nga Mya v Emperor 32 IC 641 .

31 Satish Chandra Chakravarti v Ram Dayal De 48 ILR Cal 388, p 398 .

32 Sajid-un-Nissa (Mst) v Syed Hidayat Hussain AIR 1924 All 748 ; Balmokand v Emperor 16 Cr LJ 354, 28 IC 738 .

33 BN Rly Co Ltd v Ruttaji AIR 1938 PC 67 ; Ramalinga v Muthuswami Ayyar 50 ILR Mad 94, AIR 1927 Mad 99 ; Kamalammal v Peeru Meera Levvai Rowthen 20 ILR Mad 481 .

34 Chavadappa v Emperor AIR 1945 Bom 292, 221 IC 86, 47 Bom LR 63 .

35 Municipal Committee, Amritsar v Mohan Lal 1975 CLR 476 ; Shimbhu v State of Haryana (2014) 13 SCC 318, AIR 2014 SC 739 .

36 Gokulananda Mohanty & Ors v Murlidhar Mullik (1979) 47 Cut LT 244, p 257 .

37 Union of India v Dileep Kumar Singh 2015 (2) Supreme 480, p 488 .

38 Parashuram Prakash & Ors v State (Special Police Establishment, Hyderabad) (1974) 2 APLJ 204, (1974) 2 Andh LT 421 .

39 Narendra Bhogilal Shah v State of Maharashtra 1971 Bom LR 828 .

40 Biseswar Lal Khandelwalla v Baripada Municipality 1973 Cut LT 1314 .

41 Ranjit alias Ranjit Kumar Hore v Smt Parul Hore & Anor (1979) Cal HN 414, p 417 .

42 K Subrahmanian v State through Inspector of Police (1988) 18 Indian Judicial Reports 19 (Mad) .

43 Zila Parishad, Budaun v State & Anor (1971) All Cr R 210, (1971) All LJ 415 .

44 State of Madhya Pradesh v Chain Karan (1974) MPLJ 336, (1974) Jab LJ 321 .

45 Gangaram v Govt of Andhra Pradesh (1982) Cr LJ 1433 (AP) .

46 Munnalal Agarwal v DM, Aligarh (1985) 1 Cr LC 316 (All) ; (Bengal Immunity Co v State of Bihar AIR 1955 SC 661 ; Dattatraya Govind Mahajan & Ors v State of Maharashtra & Anor AIR 1977 SC 915 relied on); Ashfaque Mohammad v Saida Qureshi (1981) Cr LR 1 (MP) .

47 Badri Singh v State (1973) All Cr R 452 .

48 Taylor v Charles 39 ILR Bom 182 .

49 Gopalan v State of Madras AIR 1950 SC 27, p 45 .

50 Re *Krishnaji Gopal*AIR 1948 Bom 360 .

51 RP Jain & Anor v State of Bihar 1979 BLJR 148, p 153 .

52 Kay v Goodwin (1830) 6 Beng 576 ; Laksmanrao Krishanji v Balkrishna Rangnath 36 ILR Bom 617 .

53 Ramesh Chand v Nagendra AIR 1951 Cal 435, p 438 .

54 Alipilla v State of Kerala 1983 Mad LJ 295 (Cr), (1983) KLN 107 (Ker) .

55 Basant Singh v Rampal Singh AIR 1919 Oudh 217 .

56 Attorney-General v Lamplough (1878) 3 Ex D 214, p 222-23, 227, 231 .

57 Craies' Statute Law, Sir Charles H Odgers (ed), fifth edn, 1952, p 382.

58 Iswar Chandra Chitalangia v State (1976-77) 81 CWN 690, p 693.

59 Tata Tea Ltd v State of Kerala (1985) 1 Cr LC 25 (Northern India Caterers (Pvt) Ltd & Anor v State of Punjab & Anor AIR 1967 SC 1581 followed).

60 GP Nayyar v State (Delhi) Admn AIR 1979 SC 602, p 606, (1979) 1 Serv LR 281, (1979) Cr LR 74 (SC), (1979) 2 SCC 593, (1979) Cr AR 88 (SC), (1979) Cr LJ 589, (1979) SC Cr R 218 .

61 Hem Rai Jhunjhunwala v State of Bihar (1982) Cr LJ 1206, (1981) Bih Cr C 27 (Pat) (DB).

62 Chunder Prakash Tyagi v Dept of Customs (1984) 2 Crimes 24 (Del) .

63 Godrej and Boyce Mfg Co Ltd v State of Maharashtra AIR 2014 SC 1446, p 1462, (2014) 3 SCC 430 .

64 Royal Corpn (Pvt) Ltd v VM Multhuramlingam, Income Tax Officer 1982 Mad LJ (Cr) 217 .

65 State of AP v Mohd. Hussain 2014 Cr LJ 44, (2014) 1 SCC 258 .

66 State of Madhya Pradesh v Moorat Singh , *Roop Singh*1975 MPLJ 172, 1975 Jab LJ 418, 1975 Cr LJ 989; Security Ass. of India v Union of India 2014 (12) SCC 65, AIR 2014 SC 3812 .

67 State of Bihar v Lakshman Shukla (1991) 2 Bih LJ 558, 563, (1991) 2 Bih LJR 1209 .

68 Amar Singh v State of Punjab 1984 Ch Cr Cas 52, (1984) 1 Crimes 500, 503 (P&H).

69 Dulichand v Municipal Corpn Bhopal (1983) Cr LJ 448 (SC), (1983) 1 SCJ 296, AIR 1983 SC 303, (1983) Mad LJ 473, (1984) 2 SCC 486 .

70 Hukum Singh v State of Punjab & Ors (1976) Cr LT 1 (P&H) .

71 Food Inspector, Chalakudy v Prabhakaran (1983) Cr LJ 81 (Ker), (1983) 1 FAC 84, (1983) FAJ 77, (1982) KLT 809, (1982) KLN 721 (FB) .

72 Maniyani v State of Kerala (1979) KLT 183, p 185 .

73 Atlas Cycle Industries Ltd & Ors v State of Haryana (1979) 2 SCC 196, pp 202-04, (1979) Cr LJ 927, 1979 SCC 422, (1979) 2 SCJ 279, (1979) Cr App Rep 42 (SC), (1979) SC Cr R 251, [1979] 1 SCR 1070, AIR 1979 SC 1149 ; State (NCT of Delhi) v Sanjay (2014) 9 SCC 772, AIR 2015 SC 75, 2014 Cr LJ 4854 ; Vijay Dhanuka v Najima Mamtaj 2014 Cr LJ 2295, (2014) 14 SCC 638 .

74 Sarah Mathew v Institute of Cardio Vascular Diseases 2014 Cr LJ 586, p 607 (SC), AIR 2014 SC 448, (2014) 5 SCC (Cri) 174, (2014) 12 AIC 58 (SC) .

75 Tulsi Ram v State of Madhya Pradesh (1985) 22 All Cr C 28 (SC), (1985) Jab LJ 361 (SC) .

76 RS Nayak v AR Antulay AIR 1984 SC 684, (1984) Cr LJ 613, (1984) SCC 172, (1984) Cr LR 163 (SC), (1984) Cr App Rep 141 (SC), (1984) SC Cr R 138, (1984) Cur Cr J 133, (1984) All Cr LR 410, (1984) 1 Crimes 568, (1984) 1 Serv LR 619, (1984) 2 SCC 183 ; State of Punjab v Gurmit Singh, AIR 2014 SC 2561, (2014) 95 CC 632, 2014 Cr LJ 3586, (2014) 9 SCC 632 ; Gulati & Co v CST (2014) 14 SCC 286, 2014 (1) Scale 32 .

77 Prabhakar Laxman Mokashi v Sadanand Trimbak Yardi (1974) 76 Bom LR 191 .

78 Rulia Ram v Rex AIR 1949 All 716 ; Jugal Singh v Emperor AIR 1943 Pat 315 ; Rehmat Aslam v Crown AIR 1950 Lah 232 ; State Govt, Madhya Pradesh v Magan Bhai Dasaibhai AIR 1945 Nag 41 ; Surinder singh v State of Haryana AIR 2014 SC 817, 2014 Cr LJ 561, (2014) 4 SCC 129 .

79 MV Josi v MV Shimpy AIR 1961 SC 1494 .

80 Shaikh Abdul Azees v State of Karnataka (1977) 2 SCC 485, p 490, (1977) Cr LR 252 (SC), (1977) UJ 436 (SC), (1977) 2 SCWR 123 ; (1977) SCC 378 (Cr), (1977) Cr App Rep 179 (SC) ; (1977) 3 SCR 393, (1977) Cr LJ 1124, AIR 1977 SC 1485 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Rani Reoti Devi (1974) All CR 134, (1974) All WR 203 ; Ahmad Sait v Collector of Customs & Central Excise (1973) Mad LJ 531 (Ker) .

81 Dilip Kumar Sharma & Ors v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) Cr LR 624 (SC) .

82 Queen v Nabokisto 8WR 87 (Cr); Queen v Ahmed 11 WR 25, p 27 (Cr) ; Queen v Madhab Chander, 21 WR 13, p 20 (Cr) ; Dy Legal Remembrancer v Karuna 22 ILR Cal 164, p 174 .

83 Bansraj v State AIR 1956 All 27, p 29 .

84 Kishan Chand v State of Haryana 2013 Cr LJ 723, p 728, AIR 2013 SC 357, (2013) 2 SCC 502 .

85 Sukhdev Singh v State of Haryana 2013 Cr LJ 841, p 846, AIR 2013 SC 953, (2013) 2 SCC 212 .

86 State of Gujarat v Jasubhai Prabhudas (1979) Cr LR 390, p 392 (Guj) .

87 Assistant Commr Assessment-II v M/s Velliappa Textiles Ltd AIR 2004 SC 86 .

88 Re 'The Gauntlet' (1872) 4 PC 184, 17 ER 373; Hari Krishna v State (1980) 17 All Cr C43.

89 State Govt, Madhya Pradesh v Maganbhai Dasaibhai AIR 1954 Nag 41, p 42 .

90 Chhuttan v State (1980) 1 FAC 141 (AB) .

91 Joseph D' Silva v Emperor AIR 1947 Bom 310, 48 Cr LJ 305, 229 IC 178, 49 Bom LR 6 ; Emperor v Tehl Ram (1946) ILR Lah 291, AIR 1947 Lah 261 ; Madho Saran v Emperor (1944) ILR 42AIR 1943 All 379, 45 Cr LJ 491, 1943 All LJ 511 ; Bhai Chand v Emperor AIR 1942 Lah 253, 43 Cr LJ 849, 202 IC 452 ; King v Aug Nyun AIR 1940 Rang 259, 42 Cr LJ 124 ; Parmanand v Emperor AIR 1939 Lah 81, 40 Cr LJ 497, 180 IC 835, 41 PLR 137 ; Dewan Singh v Emperor AIR 1936 Nag 55, 37 Cr LJ 474, 19 Nag LJ 84 ; Guranditta v Emperor 39 Cr LJ 970, AIR 1938 Lah 691, 40 PLR 942 ; Ishar Das v State of Punjab (1972) SCD 262, (1972) SC Cr R 198, (1972) Cr App Rep 102, (1972) 2 SCA 16, AIR 1972 SC 1295 ; Sheonandan Paswan v State of Bihar (1983) Cr LJ 348, (1983) 1 SCC 433, 1983 SCC 224 (Cr), (1983) Cr LR 58 (SC), AIR 1983 SC 194, (1983) PLJR 35, (1983) Cr App Rep 61 .

1 Sajjan Singh v State of Punjab (1964) 1 Cr LJ 310 (SC), AIR 1964 SC 464 .

2 Shridhar v State AIR 1954 HP 67, p 68, (1954) Cr LJ 1465 .

3 Shridhar v State AIR 1954 HP 67, p 68, (1954) Cr LJ 1465 .

4 Royal Corpn (Pvt) Ltd v M Mathuramlingam, Income-tax Officer (1982) Mad LJ (Cr) 217 ; Tolaram v State of Bombay AIR 1954 SC 496 .

5 Tolaram v State of Bombay AIR 1954 SC 496, p 498-99, (1954) Cr LJ 1333 .

6 Hardeep Singh v State of Punjab AIR 2014 SC 1400, p 1415, (2014) 3 SCC 92, 2014 Cr LJ 111 .

7 Sajjan Singh v State of Punjab (1964) 1 Cr LJ 310 (SC), AIR 1964 SC 464 .

8 Bansraj v State AIR 1956 All 27, p 29 .

9 Maxwell, Interpretation of Statutes, eleventh edn, p 284.

10 Per Sadut Ali Khan J in State v Hydar Ali AIR 1955 Hyd 128, p 140 .

11 State v Hathiwala Textile Mills AIR 1957 Bom 209, p 211 .

12 State of Maharashtra v Laxmi Narsimham, 1977 Mah LJ 715, p 721 .

13 Sarjug Sah v State of Bihar (1991) 2 Bih LJ 68, p 70 .

14 Heydon's case (1854) 3 Co. 9Rep. 7a,7b.

15 Badshah v Urmila Badshah Godse 2014 Cr LJ 1076, p 1083 (SC), AIR 2014 SC 869, (2014) 1 SCC 188 .

16 Hardeep Singh v State of Punjab 2014 Cr LJ 1118, p 1132, AIR 2014 SC 1400, (2014) 3 SCC 92 .

17 Hardeep Singh v State of Punjab 2014 Cr LJ 1118, p1132, AIR 2014 SC 1400, (2014) 3 SCC 92 .

18 Alamgir v State of Bihar AIR 1959 SC 436, p 439, (1959) Cr LJ 527 .

19 Shabnam Hashmi v Union of India AIR 2014 SC 1281, p 1285, (2014) 4 SCC 1 .

20 Naga Po Ngwe v Emperor 7 ILR Rang 355, AIR 1929 Rang 278 ; Paras Ram v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 145 ; Sukhdev Singh v State of Haryana 2013 Cr LJ 841, AIR 2013 SC 953, (2013) 2 SCC 212 .

21 Gadai Sahu v Emperor AIR 1934 Pat 361 .

22 S Ganesan v AK Goscelyne AIR 1957 Cal 33, p 38 ; Salig Ram v Emperor AIR 1943 All 26 .

23 State of Bombay (now Maharashtra) v Vishnu Ramchandra AIR 1961 SC 307 .

24 Emperor v Joti Prasad AIR 1932 All 18, p 22 .

25 Sales Tax Officer v Kanhaiya Lal AIR 1959 SC 135, p 140 ; Gwynne v Bumell (1840) 7 Cl & Fn 572, p 696; Kumar Kamlaranjan Roy v Secy of State 66 IA 1, p 10, AIR 1938 PC 281, p 283 .

26 Cherubin Gregory v State of Bihar (1964) 1 Cr LJ 138 (SC), AIR 1964 SC 205 .

27 MC Verghese v TJ Ponnan & Anor AIR 1970 SC 1876 .

28 Gopal Naidu v Emperor AIR 1923 Mad 523, p 526 (FB) .

29 The Sales Tax Officer v Kanhaiya Lal AIR 1959 SC 135, p 138 .

30 Bank of England v Vagliano Brothers (1891) AC 107, p 144 .

31 Baboo Deep Narain Singh v Lal Chutterput Singh 3 MIA 100, 6 WRPC 27 and Brown v Mclachlan (1872) 4 PC 543 .

32 Brown v Mclachlan (1872) 4 PC 543 .

33 Satish Chandra Chakravarti v Ram Doyal De AIR 1921 Cal 1, p 6, 7 .

34 Barindra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 7, p 8 .

35 State Govt, Madhya Pradesh v Maganbai Dasanibhai AIR 1954 Nag 41, p 42 .

36 Laxmi Narayan v State of Bihar 1983 BBCJ 518 (Pat) .

37 Hari Krishna v State (1980) 17 All Cr C 43 .

38 State of West Bengal v Jugul Kishore AIR 1969 SC 1171 ; Remla v SP of Police (1993) 1 KLT 412 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter I

Introduction

S. 2.

Punishment of offences committed within India.--

Every person shall be liable to punishment under this Code and not otherwise for every act or omission contrary to the provisions thereof, of which he shall be guilty within [39][India] [40][* * *].

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

This section, as originally enacted, stood as follows:

> Every person shall be liable to punishment under this Code and not otherwise for every act or omission contrary to the provisions thereof, which he shall be guilty within the said territories on or after the 1st day of May 1861.

By Act 6 of 1861, the words 'on or after the 1st day of May 1861' were altered to 'the 1st day of January 1862.' Subsequently, the words 'the 1st day of January 1862' were altogether deleted by Act 12 of 1891 and the words 'British India' by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order 1937. In 1948, the words 'the Provinces' were substituted for the words 'British India' by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1948. Again, the words 'the Provinces' were replaced by the words 'the States' by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1950, finally the words 'the States' were altered to the word 'India' by the Part B States (Laws) Act 3 of 1951, both in the margin and in the body of the section.

2. Scope of the Section

The first question that naturally arises in connection with a body of substantive criminal law like the IPC is, within what time, within what local limits and over what persons is the Penal Code enforceable.

30As regards time, there is no general law of prescription in English Common Law,[41] a maxim of which has always been nullum tempus occurrit regi (lapse or time does not bar the right of the Crown), and in accordance with this principle, this section specifies no period within which criminal proceedings must be brought. A prosecution may therefore, be brought at any time after the commission of an offence.[42] A time limit has since been fixed for prosecution of minor offences punishable with fine only or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years by s 468 of the CrPC,[43] which applies to offences punishable under the IPC . These provisions, however, do not apply to economic offences.[44]

As regards the territorial and personal jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of criminal courts in India is both territorial and personal. Prima facie, the IPC is intended to deal with all unlawful acts and omissions defined to be offences and committed within India and to provide for the punishment thereof of the person or persons found guilty therefor. This is implicit in the preamble and s 2 of the IPC . Sections 3 and 4 deal with offences committed beyond the territorial limits of India and s 2 obviously and by contract refers to offences committed within India. It appears clear, therefore, that it is s 2 that has to be looked to, to determine the liability and punishment of persons who have committed offences within India. If all the ingredients of the offence occur within the municipal territory of India, and the presence of the offender in India for his trial can be secured, the municipal courts have jurisdiction to punish him.[45] Punishment for an offence committed within India is covered by s 2 of the IPC as well as by the procedure as laid down under the CrPC, it is stated that offences under the IPC shall be investigated, inquired into, tried and otherwise dealt with according to the provision contained therein. Therefore, if an offence under the IPC is alleged, the criminal courts in India unless otherwise expressly barred, have power to deal with the matter after complying with the procedure laid down in the CrPC .[46]

3. 'Every Person'

The section asserts categorically that every person shall be liable to punishment under the Code for every act or omission contrary to the provisions of the Code and of which he shall be guilty within India. This recognises the general principle of criminal jurisdiction over persons with reference to the locality of the offence committed by them being within India. The use of the phrase 'every person' in s 2 as contrasted with the use of the phrase 'any person' in s 3 as well as s 4(2) of the Code is indicative of the idea that to the extent of the guilt for an offence committed within India can be attributed to a person, every such person without exception, is liable for punishment under the Code.[47] There is no provision of law by which parties of any sect have a right to be exempted from the operation of the criminal law applicable to all the citizens.[48]

31The plain meaning of the phrase 'every person' in s 2 is that it comprehends all persons without limitation and irrespective of nationality, allegiance, rank, status, caste, colour or creed. If offence was committed by officers of foreign company in India, they shall be tried under the provisions of the Indian Penal Code, the fact that at the time of the commission of offence the accused were not present in India, their residence/abode outside India, their foreign nationality would not come in the way of their being prosecuted/tried under the Indian Penal Code .[49]

This section must be understood as comprehending every person without exception, barring such as may be especially exempt from criminal proceedings or punishment thereunder by virtue of the Constitution[50] or any statutory provisions or some well recognised principle of international law, such as foreign sovereigns, ambassadors, diplomatic agents and so forth, accepted in the municipal law.[51]

4. Juridical Person

Section 11 of the Code itself defines the word 'person' as including 'any company or association, or body of persons, whether incorporated or not'. A corporation is, therefore, liable to punishment under this Code.[52] Knowledge and intention of its servants may be imputed to the body corporate.[53] However, it cannot be said that in every case, where an agent of a limited company, acting in its business commits a crime, the company is automatically to be held guilty. A company cannot be indictable for offences like bigamy, perjury, and rape, etc., which can only be committed by a human individual, or for offences punishable with imprisonment or corporeal punishment. Barring these exceptions, a corporate body ought to be indictable for criminal acts or omissions of its directors or authorised agents or servants, whether they involve *mens rea*or not, provided they have acted or have purported to act under the authority of the corporate body or in pursuance of the aims or objects of the corporate body. The question, whether a corporate body should or should not be liable for criminal action, resulting from the acts of some individual, must depend upon the nature of the offence, disclosed by the allegations in the complaint or in the charge sheet, the relative position of the officer or agent vis-à-vis the corporate body and the other relevant facts and circumstances which should show that the corporate body, as such, meant or intended to commit such act. Each case will have necessarily to depend on its own facts which will have to be considered before deciding whether to proceed against the corporate body or not.[54]

5. Foreigner

A foreign subject comes within the purview of all Acts in force in India, if he chooses to come into this country, unless indeed the Act itself makes an exception in their favour. There is no presumption that a foreigner knew the law enforceable in India--the law makes no such absurd presumption but ignorance of the law does not in any way affect his liability thereunder. Such ignorance might be pleaded in32 mitigation of sentence, if he is convicted of a crime, but it affords him no sort of privilege or immunity.[55] On a plain reading of this section, therefore, the Code does apply to a foreigner who has committed an offence within India notwithstanding that he was corporeally present outside.

A reference to s 3 of the Code clearly indicates that it is implicit therein that a foreigner who commits an offence within India is guilty and can be punished as such without any limitation as to his corporeal presence in India at the time. For if it were not so, the legal fiction implicit in the phrase 'as if such act had been committed within India' in s 2 would not have been limited to the supposition that such act had been committed within India, but would have extended also to a fiction as to his physical presence at the time in India. The fastening of criminal liability on a foreigner in respect of culpable acts or omissions in India which are juridically attributable to him notwithstanding that he is corporeally present outside India at the time, is not to give any extra-territorial operation to the law: for it is in respect of an offence whose locality is in India, that the liability is fastened on the person and the punishment is awarded by the law, if his presence in India for the trial can be secured. Exercise of criminal jurisdiction depends on the locality of the offence and not on the nationality of the alleged offender (except in a few specified cases such as ambassadors, princes, etc.). The fact that this is part of ordinary jurisdiction of a municipal court is well recognised in the Common Law of England.[56] The exercise of criminal jurisdiction at common law is limited to the crime committed within the territorial limits of England,[57] and in specified cases even in respect of acts outside English territory.[58] Offences, the authors of which, at the moment of commission, are in the territory of another state, are nevertheless to be regarded as having been committed in the national territory, if one of the constituent elements of the offences and more especially its effects, have taken place there. The old concept that the exercise of jurisdiction over a foreigner by municipal courts depends on the theory of temporary allegiance to the state by reason of his entry into the state, which carries with it the protection of its laws and, therefore, his submission thereto, is no longer tenable. There are a number of early cases of the High Courts in India[59] which support the view that criminal jurisdiction cannot extend to foreigners outside India. These are, however decisions rendered at a time when the competence of the Indian legislature was considered somewhat limited, under the influence of the decisions like those in Macleod's case[60] in spite of the decision in Queen v Burah .[61] These concepts are no longer tenable.[62] Where a foreigner in foreign territory initiates an offence which is completed in Indian territory, he if found within Indian territory is liable to be tried by the Indian court within whose jurisdiction the offence was committed.[63]33

PERSONS EXEMPT FROM PROSECUTION

6. The King

During British Rule, the Code could not affect the King because the Code was an Act of the Governor-General-in-Council, and he could not legislate so as to 'affect the prerogative of the Crown or the authority of the Parliament or any part of the unwritten law or Constitution of the United Kingdom'. Now India has become an independent sovereign free republic, but the sovereign of England is still exempt from the Code as a foreign sovereign (see Note below under the heading 'Foreign Sovereigns').

7. President and Governors of States

Under art 361(2) of the Constitution of India, no criminal proceedings whatsoever can be instituted or continued against the President of India or the Governor of a State in any court during his term of office.

8. Foreign Sovereigns

In accordance with the law of nations a sovereign prince, resident in the dominion of another, is exempt from the jurisdiction of the court there[64] as the exercise of such jurisdiction would be incompatible with the regal dignity, that is to say, with his absolute independence of every superior authority.[65]

9. Ambassadors

The rights, the powers, the duties, and the privileges of ambassadors are determined by the law of nations, and not by any municipal Constitution. For, as they represent the person of their respective masters, who are not subject to any laws but those of their own country, their actions are not subject to the control of the private law of that state wherein they are appointed to reside. He that is subject to the coercion of laws is necessarily dependent on that power by whom those laws were made, but an ambassador ought to be independent of every power except that by which he is sent, and in consequence, ought not to be subject to the mere municipal laws of that nation wherein he is to exercise his functions. If he grossly offends or makes an ill-use of his character, he may be sent home and accused before his master, who is bound either to do justice upon him or avow himself the accomplice of his crimes.[66]

It is said that the immunity of ambassadors extends only to such crimes as are mala prohibita, and not to those that are mala in se, as murder.[67] For a direct attempt against the life of the sovereign, an ambassador and members of his staff would be directly punishable by the state.[68]

34

10. Diplomatic Agents

These may be classified as follows.

Ambassadors, Legates and Nuncios

These form the highest rank. They alone have the representative character. Legates and nuncios are papal ambassadors representing the Pope.

Envoys, Ministers or Other Person Accredited to Sovereigns

While ambassadors have access to the foreign sovereign, ministers have access to secretary for foreign affairs of the country to which they are accredited. Special envoys are employed to conduct negotiations on specific matters.

Ministers Resident, Accredited to the Various Courts

These are generally sent to the minor states.

Chargé d' Affaires*, Accredited to Ministers for Foreign Affairs

A Chargé d' affaires takes control of the mission during the temporary absence of the head of the mission. A Charge d' affaires is entitled to have audience of the foreign minister only.

Diplomatic agents enjoy immunity from the criminal jurisdiction of the receiving state *vide*art 31 of the Vienna Convention on the Diplomatic Relations 1961. The said article has force in India by virtue of the Diplomatic Relations (Vienna Convention) Act 1972, enacted by the Indian Parliament.

Attaches

Attaches do not hold diplomatic rank but their names are included in the diplomatic lists as members of the staff of a diplomatic mission.

Prior to the enactment of the Diplomatic Immunities (Commonwealth Countries and Republic of Ireland) Act 1952, the High Commissioners exchanged between the commonwealth countries were not entitled to any immunities which belong to 'diplomatic agents'. By this Act, the United Kingdom has conferred on these High Commissioners (including those of India and Pakistan) the same privileges and immunities as belong to diplomatic agents, their staffs, families and servants.

As the representative of a sovereign state, and in order that he may exercise his functions in a foreign state, certain privileges are given by International Law to a diplomatic agent in the state to which he is accredited.

11. Immunities Extended to Family Members of Diplomatic Agents

The immunities of the diplomatic agent are extended to his family living with him, because of their relationship to him, to secretaries and attaches, whether civil or military, forming part of, the mission but not personally accredited, because of their necessity to him in his official relations, and perhaps also to domestics and other persons in his service not possessing a diplomatic character because of their necessity to his dignity or comfort.[69]

35The diplomat, his family and suite are immune from criminal action and arrest in the accredited state. The only remedy for crimes committed by them is to apply to the state which they represent, for the recall of the diplomat. But if they conspire against the foreign state, they may be expelled.[70]

Diplomatic privilege does not import immunity from legal liability, but only exemption from local jurisdiction. The privilege is the privilege of the sovereign by whom the diplomatic agent is accredited, and it may be waived with the sanction of the sovereign or of the official superior of the agent.[71]

12. Alien Enemies

In respect of acts of war, alien enemies cannot be tried by criminal courts as traitors, though they may be dealt with by martial law.[72] But aliens may be proceeded against for any other crime committed by them. Thus, a prisoner of war who shot a sentry in order to escape would not be liable to the criminal law; but if he committed a crime unconnected with an attempt to recover his liberty, such as theft,[73] he would be liable.[74] Protection and allegiance are co-extensive.[75] Even in cases where protection is imposed against the will of the foreign subject;[76] but a wrongful extension of protection does not carry with it a corresponding extension of criminal law.[77]

13. Public Servants

Under s 132 of the CrPC, public servants, officers, members of the Armed Forces and other persons acting in good faith under ch 10 of that Code are immune from prosecution in a criminal court,[78] except with the sanction of the state or Central Government.

14. Men-of-war

There is a partial exception as a result of international courtesy, in the case of a ship of war on the high seas, the officers and crew of which are exempt from the local law in all that concerns the discipline and internal government of the ship, and on board where neither civil nor criminal process can be executed.[79] But this immunity does not extend to Indian subjects who may happen to be on board such vessels.[80] The immunities extend to internal disputes between the crew. Over offences committed on board ship by one member of the crew upon another, the local courts would not exercise jurisdiction.36

15. Two Theories on Jurisdiction in International Law

On the question of jurisdiction two theories have found favour with persons professing a knowledge of the principles of international law. One is that a public ship of a nation for all purposes either is, or is to be treated by other nations as part of the territory of the nation to which she belongs. By this conception will be guided the domestic law of any country in whose territorial waters the ship finds herself. There will, therefore, be no jurisdiction in fact in any court where jurisdiction depends upon the act in question being done or the party to the proceedings being found or resident in the local territory. The other theory is that a public ship in foreign waters is not and is not treated as territory of her own nation. The domestic courts in accordance with principles of international law will accord to the ship and its crew and its contents certain immunities, some of which are well settled, though others are in dispute. In this view the immunities do not depend upon an objective ex-territoriality, but on implication of the domestic law. They are conditional and can in any case be waived by the nation to which the public ship belongs. Their lordships of the Privy Council have held that the latter is the correct conclusion and observed:

> The true view is that in accordance with the conventions of international law, the territorial sovereign grants to foreign sovereigns and their envoys and public ships and the naval forces carried by such ships certain immunities. Some are well settled: others are uncertain. When the local court is faced with a case where such immunities, come into question, it has to decide whether in the particular case the immunity exists or not. If it is clear that it does, the Court will of its own initiative give effect to it. The sovereign himself, his envoy, and his property including his public armed ships are not to be subjected to legal process. These immunities are well settled.[81]

This immunity which is undoubtedly enjoyed by men-of-war has been, by international comity, extended to troopships,[82] and indeed, to all ships of the state. The immunity from such interference arises, not because they are instruments of war, but because they are instruments of sovereignty;[83] and it is on this ground that the exemption of warships has been justified. 'The exemption of a public ship of war of a foreign Government from the jurisdiction of our Courts depends rather upon its public than upon its military character'.[84]

16. 'And not Otherwise'

The use of the words 'and not otherwise' is a sufficient basis for holding that the rules of English common law or the legal maxims embodying certain judicial principles, even though they be very wholesome, cannot be engrafted on the IPC .[85] These words repeal all former laws for the punishment of every offence which is made punishable by the IPC . The effect of s 5, however, is to qualify this general repeal. The two sections taken together declare that offences defined by special and local laws continue to be punishable as before; in other words, all acts or omissions contrary to the provisions of the Code itself, or of the provisions of special and local laws, and the other laws enumerated in s 5, and these alone and none others, are punishable as offences.[86]

37As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, the criminal law of India is prescribed by, and so far as it goes, is contained in, this code, and the criminal law of India and that of England differ in sundry respects. The Code, therefore, has got to be construed in accordance with its natural meaning and irrespective of any assumed intention on the part of its framers to leave unaltered the law as it existed before.[87]

The IPC is a codifying statute, intended to be complete in itself with regard to the subject-matter with which it deals. No doubt a codifying statute does not exclude reference to earlier case-law on the subject covered by the statute for the purpose of throwing light on the true interpretation of the words of the statute where they are, or can be contended to be, open to rival constructions, but it cannot be argued that matter outside the statute can be invoked, not by way of construing its provisions, but by adding something to it which is admittedly not to be found within it.[88]

17. 'Act or Omission'

The word 'act' denotes as well a series of acts as a single act; the word 'omission' denotes as well a series of omissions as a single omission.[89]

18. 'Contrary to the Provisions thereof'

A person is liable to be punished under the IPC only for an act or omission contrary to its provisions. It is not, however, an offence to do an act in anticipation of a statute or enactment which would make that act an offence.[90] The then existing criminal law of India was not specifically repealed by the IPC, the commissioners being of the opinion that it was possible that a few actions which were punishable under the old law, and which the legislature would not desire to exempt, had been omitted from the Code.[91]Accordingly, if after 1 January 1862, the date on which the Code came into operation, a person committed an act which would have been criminal before the Code was passed into law, but which is not forbidden by its provisions, he would still be liable to punishment under the old law. Moreover, since the Code came into operation only from the above date, offences committed before the first day of January 1862, were still punishable under the old regulations.[92]

19. 'Of which he shall be Guilty'

In general a man is responsible only for his own acts, but there are exceptional cases in which the law imposes on him vicarious liability for the acts of others.

20. Vicarious Liability for Acts of Others--General Rule

The reference is to the maxim Qui facit per alium facit per se, i.e., he who does an act through another does it himself. But this is a maxim of the civil law of agency. The law of agency is not a doctrine of criminal law, but of civil law. The principal can be made responsible for, and found guilty of, the acts of his agents, under the criminal code, only where it is proved that he has instigated or otherwise abetted the38 acts of the persons who actually committed the crime. The law of abetment[93] was enacted to deal with such cases.[94]As a general proposition of law, it cannot be doubted that the master is not liable for the criminal acts of his servants not done at his instigation. There is no criminal liability of the principal for any act or omission of his agent unless the principal himself takes part in, authorises, or connives at, such act or omission. A man cannot be guilty of an illegal act by his agent and be held responsible for that act, unless he has given the agent authority, directly or indirectly, to do that illegal act. No one who is an agent for a legal purpose can make the principal responsible for an illegal act, unless the principal has in some way, directly or indirectly, authorised it. The reason for the rules is obvious. It is a general principle of criminal law that there must be some blameworthy condition of mind or mens rea, there may be negligence, malice, guilty knowledge or the like.

Master not Criminally Liable for the Act of Servant

The other well-known principle is that there is no vicarious liability in criminal law, the condition of the mind of the servant is not to be imputed to the master.[95] It has been held that the master cannot be held criminally liable for the acts of his grazier in taking without licence, his cattle into a government forest unless he permits the cattle so to graze by some overt acts or by some negligent omission.[96] The general rule of law that a master is not criminally responsible for the acts of his servants, unless he expressly commands or personally co-operates in them, is well established. In criminal cases they must each answer for their own acts, and stand or fall by their own behaviours.

Exceptions to the General Rule

However, there are exceptions to the general rule of master not criminally liable for the act of the servant. In some cases criminal liability is imposed by the statute upon the master as regards the acts or omission of his servants, both in England and in India. In some enactments provision to that effect is expressly made; in the cases of other enactments, principals have been held criminally liable for the illegal acts of their agents by virtue of constructions placed by the courts on the language of the statute concerned. But in all such cases the question is whether upon the true construction of the statute in question, the master is intended to be made criminally liable for the acts of his servants, done within the scope or in the course of their employment.

Licence Cases

> Licence cases form a class by themselves, in which the master is generally held responsible by reason of his contractual undertaking to use his licence in a particular manner and to avoid acts which are penal and on the occurrence of which, the licensee becomes liable to the penalties imposed...Statutes passed for the benefit of the public health and sanitation are construed in the same way as licensing Acts...The principle governing all these cases is that by statute or by contractual undertaking there is some39 public duty legally binding upon the master, for the breach of which a criminal liability is imposed on him, whether such breach is committed by him personally or by persons whom he chooses to employ in the discharge of that obligation: subject to this that the acts of the servants fall within the scope of their authority. If it is shown that the principal directed the agent to do an illegal act, or really meant he should so act, or afterwards ratified the illegal act, or that he appointed one to be agent to do both legal and illegal acts, to do everything in short which he might think proper to support the interests of the principal, then responsibility can be fastened on the principal.[1]

These principles have been followed in numerous other decisions where mostly the English authorities have been discussed.[2]Where a particular intent or state of mind is not of the essence of an offence, a master can be criminally liable for his servant's acts if an act is expressly prohibited, but not otherwise; and he cannot be so made liable if the act provides for liability for permitting and causing a certain thing unless it can be shown that the act was done with the master's knowledge and assent express or implied.[3]

A licensed vendor of arms and ammunitions was held liable for the sale by his servant of ammunitions to possess them. It was observed:

> We fail to see how it can be contended that under these circumstances a delivery of goods by the man in charge would not be a delivery by the owner of the shop. It is not a question of intention, mens rea, or of knowledge; it is the delivery which the Act makes penal and the delivery by the manager is clearly in this case a delivery by the licensee.[4]

When a servant does anything within the scope of his employment for that purpose, his action will be binding on the master, and the master will be criminally liable for any wrongful act of the servant.[5] But to support the conviction of the master under s 56 of the Bengal Excise Act, it is necessary to show not only that a servant was in the employ of the master, but also that he was acting within the scope of his employment and for the benefit of the latter.

Where a servant, whose duty was to remain at his master's shop and to conduct the business there, was found travelling to another place with ganja in his possession, in contravention of s 46(a) of the Bengal Excise Act, it was held, that the master could not be convicted under s 56, as his servant acted beyond the scope of his employment and for his own private purpose.[6]

Where a particular intent or state of mind is not of the essence of an offence punishable under criminal law, the master is criminally liable for the act of his servant if that act is committed by the servant in the course of his employment even without his master's knowledge or consent but for his master's benefit.[7]40

Law of Liability of Master Summarised

The effect of the authorities has been summarised in Halsbury's Laws of England,[8] where the cases of the liability of the masters for the crimes of their servants are divided into four classes:

(i) The first class consists of cases where the statute might make the master liable for his servant's act in any event. In that case it is only necessary to show that the act is done by the servant in the course of his employment and within the scope of his general authority, and the liability of the master arises solely from his relation to the servant, and the absence of personal guilt is immaterial.

(ii) The second class consists of cases where the statute might make the master liable for his servant's act unless he could prove that he himself was not in default.

(iii) The third class consists of cases where the statute might make the master liable for his servant's act only if the prosecution proves affirmatively that he knew, either actually or constructively, of the servant's act or that he connived at its commission.

(iv) The fourth class consists of cases where the statute might make the master liable, not for his servant's act, but only for his own. These principles have been followed in India.[9]

21. 'Within India'

When offences are charged under the IPC, punishment of the offence committed within India is covered by s 2 of the Penal Code as well as by the procedure laid down under the CrPC 1973.[10] The exercise of criminal jurisdiction depends on the locality of the offence and not on the nationality of the alleged offender (except in a few specified cases such as ambassadors, princes, etc.)--The words 'within India' at the end of the section must be read with the words immediately preceding them, namely, 'of which he shall be guilty' and not with the words 'every person' which occur at the beginning of the section. Hence, a foreigner who commits an offence within India is guilty and can be punished as such without any limitation as to his corporeal presence in India at the time.[11] The courts of many countries interpret criminal law in the sense that offences, the authors of which at the moment of commission are in the territory of another state, are nevertheless to be regarded as having been committed in the national territory. If one of the constituent elements of the offence, and more especially its effects, have taken place there.[12]Thus the offence must be one of which the offender is guilty within India. Accordingly, in the absence of special provisions to the contrary, an act or omission contrary to the provisions of the Code but committed outside India is not punishable under the Code.

But a transfer of Indian territory (to a native state) where an offence has been committed, subsequent to its commission, does not prevent the court in which an appeal had been filed prior to the transfer from having jurisdiction to hear the41 appeal.[13] Where a foreigner in foreign territory initiates an offence which is completed in Indian territory, he is, if found within Indian territory, liable to be tried by the Indian court within whose jurisdiction the offence was completed.[14]

22. Abetment in India of Offence Beyond

Formerly, the abetment in India of an act or omission outside India was not punishable since it was not the abetment of an offence under the Code.[15] But exceptions to this rule were gradually established. The abetment in India of counterfeiting coins outside India was made punishable by s 236 of IPC and so was the abetment in India of waging war against the Queen (now the Government of India) by s 121 of IPC .[16]By s 4 of Act 9 of 1891 it was provided that the abetment in India of an act thereof, which if committed within India would be an offence under the Merchandise Marks Act, or under any section of Chapter 18 of the Code (offences relating to trade, property or other marks) may be tried and punished as if the abettor had committed in India the act which he abetted.

The principle involved in these enactments is now applied generally to the abetment of all offences committed beyond India, for by s 3 of Act 4 of 1898 a new section was added to the Code, viz. s 108A

. Thus for the purpose of abetment, a breach of the Code committed outside India is an offence.[17]

23. Territorial Jurisdiction

Under this section a person is liable to punishment under the Code only for an act or omission of which he is guilty within India.[18]

24. Jurisdiction over Offences Committed at Sea

States can legislate effectively only for their own territories. To what distance seaward the territory of a state is to be taken as extending is a question of international law. Whatever be the limits of territorial water in the international sense, it has long been recognised that for certain purposes, notably those of police, revenue, public health and fisheries State may enact laws effecting the seas surrounding its coasts to a distance seaward which exceeds the ordinary limits of its territory.[19] The criminal jurisdiction of the courts over offences committed at sea beyond the low water mark, was vested in them by virtue of imperial legislation, for the Indian government had no power to legislate with reference to offences committed at sea.[20] This legislation was connected with what is known as admiralty jurisdiction. The then Supreme Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, and the High Courts which were substituted for them, had admiralty jurisdiction by virtue of the Acts by which they were constituted and by the Charters issued under the42 provisions of these Acts.[21] This jurisdiction was at first local, but was extended to the whole sea by the Statute 33, Geo III c 52, s 156 . In 1849 the Statutes 12 and 13 Vic. c. 96 was passed, and was extended to India in 1860 by the Statutes 23 and 24, Vic. c. 88. Under its provisions persons charged with crimes within the jurisdiction of the admiralty could be proceeded against in the courts of British India in the same way as if the offence had been committed upon any waters situate within the limits of British India and within the limits of the local jurisdiction of its criminal courts and on conviction could be punished as if their crimes had been committed in England. Thus the offence had to be one under English Law,[22] and the procedure had to be the ordinary Indian criminal procedure,[23] whilst the punishment had to be according to English Law.[24]

In 1867, Statute 30 and 31 Vic. c. 124, ss 2, 11, extended the above provisions to all persons of whatever nationality on board British ships. In 1874 the Statute 37 and 38 Vic. c. 27, s 3 enacted, in effect, that if the crime or offence were committed within British India; but if the crime or offence was not punishable by the law of British India, he should be liable to such punishment (other than capital punishment) as should seem to the court most nearly to correspond to the punishment to which the offender would have been liable if he had committed the offence in England. The question of procedure and punishment was thus determined by this enactment.

Thus where an offence under the IPC had been committed on a British ship on the high seas, the charge should be under the Code, and the punishment, on conviction, should be awarded under the Code.[25] Even under s 361 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1958, the investigating court is also directed to commit the offence to the proper court. No other special form of procedure is prescribed so as to attract s 5 of CrPC therefore, if an offence under the IPC is alleged, the criminal courts in India, unless otherwise expressly barred, have the power to deal with the matter after complying with the procedure as laid down in the CrPC, and merely because there are provisions in the Merchant Shipping Act for detailed enquiry and investigation, the same does not amount to a bar for taking action under the CrPC when offences under the IPC are alleged to have been committed.[26]

The Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act of 1878 enacted:

(i) that the jurisdiction of the Crown extended over the open seas adjacent to the coasts of all Her Majesty's Dominions to such a distance as was necessary for the defence and security of such Dominions, and that such distance was for the purpose of that Act one marine league from the low-water mark;

(ii) that any offence punishable on indictment under English Law committed by any person, whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, and whether committed on a British or foreign vessel, committed within the said limit was an offence within the jurisdiction of the admiralty. Accordingly, applying the statute to British India, indictable offences under English Law, committed on board vessels of any nationality by British or foreign43 subjects within three miles from the low-water mark, fell within the jurisdiction of the admiralty i.e. they could be tried by the ordinary criminal courts of this country. But by virtue of s 3 of the Act, if the offender was a foreign subject, he could not be tried except with the consent of the Governor of the place where the proceedings were to be instituted.

25. Indictable Offences

All offences under English criminal law are either: (a) offences punishable upon summary conviction, or (b) offences punishable upon indictment. The former, known as petty offences, are triable and punishable without the intervention of a jury. The latter, known as indictable offences, can be finally disposed of, after a 'bill of indictment' has been preferred against the accused before the 'Grand Jury' of the court to which he has been committed for trial. The jurisdiction of the Admiralty, and consequently the jurisdiction of criminal courts of British India thus embraced: (a) offences committed by British or foreign subjects on British ships on the high seas or the extensions thereof in foreign countries; (b) offences committed by British or foreign subjects on foreign ships on that portion of the high seas known as British territorial waters; (c) the offences committed by pirates of whatever nation and sailing under whatever flag. But the jurisdiction extended to foreign pirates only when they committed piracy by the law of nations. The chief ingredient in piracy is the throwing off the authority of the state of which the vessel belongs, and piratical acts are robbery (whether of a vessel by a mutinous crews, or by a vessel cruising for the purpose of robbery and murder).[27]

Under s 18 of the Indian Independence Act 1947,[28] a Statute of Parliament which applied to British India continued to apply to the Indian Dominion even after India attained independence. Article 395 of the Indian Constitution has repealed the Indian Independence Act 1947, but art 372(1) of the Constitution is stated as under:

> Notwithstanding the repeal by this Constitution of the enactments referred to in art 395, but subject to the other provisions of this Constitution, all the law in force in the territory of India immediately before the commencement of this Constitution shall continue in force therein until altered or repealed or amended by competent legislature or other competent authority.

39 The original words 'the said territories' have successively been amended by the AO 1937, the AO 1948, the AO 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule, to read as above.

40 The words and figures 'on or after the said first day of May 1861, rep by Act 12 of 1891, s 2, Sch I.

41 There are a few statutory exceptions, but they are of little importance; Stephen, History of the Criminal Law of England, vol II, p 2.

42 Queen-Empress v Ajudhia Singh 10 ILR All 350 ; Queen-Empress v Nageshappa 20 ILR Bom 543 .

43 Chapter 36 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1973.

44 The Economic Offence (Inapplicability of Limitation) Act 1974.

45 Mobarik Ali Ahmed v The State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857, p 868-69, (1957) Cr LJ 1346 ; Gokaldas Amarsee v Emperor AIR 1933 Sind 333 .

46 Unnikrishnan & etc v Divisional Inspector of Police, Cochin & Ors (2001) Cr LJ 4558 (Ker) .

47 Mobarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857, p 869 .

48 Emperor v Mahabir Singh 25 ILR All 31, p 33 .

49 Lee Kun Hee v State of UP 2012 Cr LJ 1551, p 1564, AIR 2012 SC 1007, (2012) 3 SCC 132 .

50 The Constitution of India, art 361(2) .

51 Mobarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857, p 870 .

52 Emperor v Dhanraj Mills Ltd AIR 1943 Bom 182 .

53 Director of Public Prosecutions v Kent Contractors (1944) 1 All ER 119 .

54 State of Maharashtra v Syndicate Transport Co (Pvt) Ltd (1964) 2 Cr LJ 276, p 280-81, AIR 1964 Bom 195, 66 Bom LR 197, (1964) Mah LJ 308 .

55 Jitendra Nath Ghosh v Chief Secy to the Bengal Govt AIR 1932 Cal 753, p 755 ; Nazar Mohammad v State AIR 1953 Punj 227, p 231 ; Emperor v Baldewa 28 ILR All 372, 3 Cr LJ 247 ; Rex v Esop (1836) 173 ER 203 .

56 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 10, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, p 318.

57 Ibid, para 580.

58 Ibid, para 581.

59 Reg v Elmstone, Whitewell 7 Bom HCR 89(Cr); Reg v Pirtai 10 Bom HCR 356 ; Kishen Kour (Mst) v Crown (1878) 13 Punj Rep 49(Cr); Gokaldas Amarsee v Emperor AIR 1933 Sind 333 .

60 Macleod's case [1878] 3 AC 889.

61 Queen v Burah, [1891] AC 455, 60 LJPC 55 .

62 Mobarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857, p 868-70 ; ER Croft v Sylvester Dunphy AIR 1933 PC 16 ; Governor General-in-Council v Raliegh Investment Co Ltd AIR 1944 PC 51 .

63 Emperor v Chhotulal Babar 36 ILR Bom 524 .

64 Per Lord Langdale in the Duke of Brunswick v King of Hanover (1844) 6 Beav 1, p 50 .

65 Re The Parliament Belge LR 5 PD 197, p 205; Secy of State v Moment 17 CWN 169 .

66 William Blackstone, Commentaries, pp 253-54. The Diplomatic Privilege Act 1708 (7 Anne C 21). As to when he may be arrested, see Hall's International Law, third edn, pp 168-69, Magdalena Steam Navigation Co v Martin (1859) 2 E&E 94 ; Musurus Bey v Gadban (1894) 2 QB 352 .

67 Kerr on Blackstone, vol I, fourth edn, p 224; Phillmore's International Law, vol II, third edn, p 202

68 2 Black 254, 1 Hale PC' s 96, p 99; Phillmore's International Law, vol II, third edn, p 202.

69 Hall's International Law, third edn, pp 174-75.

70 William Blackstone, Commentaries, 1: 254; 1 Hale PC' s 96, p 99; Phillundri's International Law, third edn, p 202.

71 Dickinso v Del Solar (1930) 1 KB 376 .

72 1 Hawk PC c 2, s 6 .

73 Foster's Discourse on High Treason, p 88; R v Johnson 29 St Tr 398 .

74 R v Sattler D & B 525, 543 and SHCLE II, 8 and 9.

75 SHCLE II, 8 eg, R v Lopez D & B 525; R v Anandersen LR 1 CCR 161 .

76 R v Sattler D&B 525.

77 R v Serve 1 Den CC 104 .

78 Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, s 132 .

79 Stephen*, History of the Criminal Law of England*, vol II, p 46.

80 Ibid, p 43 as to the nature of the immunity given to foreign war vessels within British waters.

81 Chung Chi Cheung v King AIR 1939 PC 69, p 70, 73 .

82 Re The Athol(1842) 1 Wm Rob 374.

83 Briggs v The Lightships 11 Allen 157 .

84 Re The Thomas A Scott 10 LT 726; Re The Parliament Belge(1880) LR 5 PD 197, p 213.

85 Emperor v Joti Prasad Gupta AIR 1932 All 18, 53 ILR All 642 ; Re Kari Singh 40 ILR Cal 433.

86 Satish Chandra Chakravarti v Ram Dayal De AIR 1921 Cal 1, p 4-5 ; High Court Proceedings, 22 Dec 1866, (1866) 3 Mad HC App 11.

87 Barendra Kumar Ghose v King Emperor 52 ILR Cal 197 (PC), AIR 1925 PC 1 .

88 Tiruvengada Mudali v Tripurasundari Ammal AIR 1926 Mad 906, p 908 .

89 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 33 . See notes under s 33 .

90 Re *Baron V on Dincklage*AIR 1942 Mad 182, p 193 .

91 Commissioner's Second Report 1847, pp 536, 538.

92 R v Mulua 1 ILR All 599 ; R v Diljour Misser 2 ILR Cal 225 .

93 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 107 .

94 Maung New v Maung Po Hla AIR 1937 Rang 117, p 118, 38 Cr LJ 764 .

95 Harish Chandra Bagla v Emperor AIR 1945 All 90, p 92 .

96 Emperor v Mohmmad Khan AIR 1938 Nag 365 ; but seeEmperor v Mangal Chand* AIR 1934 Rang 182 .

1 Saiyyad Rahim v Emperor AIR 1915 Nag 2, 16 Cr LJ 485, p 486, 487 .

2 L Uttam Chand v Emperor AIR 1945 Lah 238 ; Harish Chandra Bagla v Emperor AIR 1945 All 90 ; Mahommad Bashir v Emperor AIR 1946 Bom 315 ; Manager, Krishna Vinodha Sabha v Emperor AIR 1928 Mad 473 .

3 Varaj Lall v King-Emperor AIR 1924 Cal 985, p 986, 25 Cr LJ 1209 followed; Shanta Ram Rama Wadkar v Emperor AIR 1932 Bom 474 .

4 Queen-Empress v Tyab Ali 24 ILR Bom 423 .

5 Emperor v Haji Shaik Mohammed Shustari 32 ILR Bom 10 .

6 Uttam Chand v Emperor 39 ILR Cal 344 .

7 Emperor v SMANGALCHAND AIR 1934 Rang 182, p 184 ; Refer to the cases cited therein.

8 Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham edn, vol 22, p 232, art 412, cited in Mahommad Bashir v Emperor AIR 1946 Bom 315 .

9 Mahommad Bashir v Emperor AIR 1946 Bom 315 and the cases cited therein.

10 Unnikrishnan & etc v Divisional Inspector of Police , Cochin & Ors(2001) Cr LJ 4558 (Ker).

11 Mubarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay (1957) Cr LJ 1346, AIR 1957 SC 857 .

12 Re Lotus, quoted in Hyde's International Law, vol I, second edn, p 798.

13 R v Mahabir 33 ILR All 578 .

14 Emperor v Chhotalal Babar 13 Cr LJ 426, 36 ILR Bom 524 ; Mubarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857 .

15 R v Elmstone 7 Bom HCR CC 89, p 118; R v Ganpatrao Ram Chandra 19 ILR Bom 105 .

16 Refer to the Indian Penal Code 1860, s 125 .

17 Refer to Notes under s 108A .

18 For territorial extent of India, see Notes under s 1 .

19 ER Crost v Sylvester Dunphy AIR 1933 PC 16 .

20 R v Elmstone 7 Bom HCR CC 89; R v Kastya Raina 8 Bom HCR 63 .

21 24 and 25 V ic c 104, s 9, and the Letters Patent of 1865, ss 32 and 33 .

22 R v Thomson 1 BLR Cr 1 ; R v Elmstone 7 Bom HCR CC 89.

23 R v Thompson 1 BLR Cr 1 ; R v Elmstone 7 Bom HCR CC 89; R v Barton 16 ILR Cal 238 .

24 R v Thompson 1 BLR Cr 1 ; R v Elmstones 7 Bom HCR CC 89.

25 R v Chief Officer of SS 'Mushtari' 25 ILR Bom 636 .

26 Unnikrishnan etc v Divisional Inspector of Police, Cochin & Ors (2001) Cr LJ 4558 (Ker) .

27 Wheaton's International Law, Boyd edn, s 122 and SH CL EI, 27, p 28.

28 10 and 11 Geo V I C 30.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter I

Introduction

S. 3.

Punishment of offences committed beyond, but which by law may be tried within India.--

Any person liable, by any [29][Indian law] to be tried for an offence committed beyond [30][India] shall be dealt with according to the provisions of this Code for any act committed beyond [31][India] in the same manner as if such act had been committed within [32][India].44

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

This section as originally enacted was as follows:

> Any person liable, by any law passed by the Governor-General of India in council to be tried for an offence committed beyond the limits of the said territories, shall be dealt with according to the provisions of this Code for any act committed beyond the said territories the same manner as if such act had been committed within the said territories.

The various amendments by which the section has taken its present shape have been noted in the footnotes to the section.

2. Scope

This and the next section deal with offences committed beyond the territorial limits of India and relate to the extra-territorial operation of the Code.[33]

Just as a foreign subject is liable under the IPC for a crime committed in India, an Indian citizen is liable under the criminal law of a foreign state which he violates. It is open to that state to punish a subject for an offence under its law committed in a foreign state, and accordingly in some cases a breach of the Code committed outside India is dealt with as if it had been committed within India, on the return of the offender thereto.[34]This liability is derived from legislation of the Government of India and not from any Imperial legislation. An Indian citizen shall be deemed to have committed an offence in India even if he has committed the offence outside the limits of the Indian territory, and even if the act complained of does not constitute an offence under the law prevailing in the place in which the offence has been committed.[35] It is implicit in this section that a foreigner who commits an offence within India is guilty and can be punished as such without any limitation as to his corporeal presence in India at the time. For, if it were not so, the legal fiction implicit in the phrase 'as if such act had been committed within India' would not have been limited to the supposition that such act had been committed within India, but would have extended also to a fiction as to his physical presence at the time in India.[36]

3. Competency of State to Legislate for Trial and Punishment for Offences Committed beyond India

As regards the competency of the state to punish offenders for offences not committed within its territorial jurisdiction, the fetter imposed upon the federal legislature, by s 99(2) of the Government of India Act 1935, has now been removed by s 6(1) of the45 Indian Independence Act 1947, and under art 245(2) of the Constitution of India . 'No law made by Parliament shall be deemed to be invalid on the ground that it would have extra-territorial operation'. This clause of the Constitution may be taken to confer unlimited extra-territorial jurisdiction upon the Union Parliament.

The rulers of the native states had, prior to 1947, the authority to pass extra-territorial laws relating to offences committed by their own subjects and vesting in their own courts the power to try them, except where the contrary is made out by evidence in the case of any individual state. That power has not in any way been curtailed either by the Integration Covenant or by the Instrument of Accession. Therefore, ss 3 and 4 of this Code and s 188 of the CrPC, at least in so far as it affected the subjects and courts of the state, were entirely within the legislative competence of the states concerned for all purposes of adaptation and amendments, and having been so adapted, they were validly in force, at least in the erstwhile Vindhya Pradesh.[37] Of course, in international law it is not competent for a state to enact laws for foreigners beyond the jurisdiction of the state[38] or for vessels on the high seas.[39] But whatever be the weight of an extra-territorial law in international law, the municipal courts of the state which passed the law are bound to obey it, leaving it to the government to justify its action with other countries. This view has been taken in England[40] and the Dominions.[41] Though of course extra-territorial operation will not be presumed unless that arises from the statute expressly or by necessary implication.[42]Nor are the municipal courts concerned with the question whether the extra-territorial law is capable of execution. Whenever it shall appear, by a proper construction of an Act of Parliament, that extra-territorial operation was intended, the courts of India must give effect to such an Act, without questioning the competence of the Parliament with reference to any rule of international law. For, what the municipal court is concerned with is the competence of the legislature according to its constitutional powers. Even though it appears that it would not be possible to enforce the law outside the territory of the country, the municipal courts cannot declare the law to be invalid on that account, but must enforce the law with the machinery available to it.[43]

4. 'Liable, by any Indian Law, to be Tried'

The Indian laws referred to are the Indian Extradition Act 1903[44] (15 of 1903) and s 188 of the Indian Criminal Procedure Code 1898 (5 of 1898),[45] which has since been replaced by the CrPC (2 of 1974). Where, by virtue of such an Act, a person may be tried for an offence committed outside India, he is to be 'dealt with according to the provisions of this Code', i.e., according to its definitions, exceptions, and penal provisions. Now, under s 188 of the CrPC, 'When an offence is committed outside India (a) any citizen of India whether on the high seas or elsewhere or (b) by a person not being such citizen on any ship or aircraft registered in India, he may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed at any place within India at which he may be found', i.e., where he is actually present whether discovered there46 or not,[46] subject to a certificate from the political agent for the territory in which the alleged offence was committed, that the charge should be inquired into in India, or subject to the sanction of the state government, where there is no political agent.

Thus, for e.g., under this provision a native Indian subject could be tried for an offence committed in England, Cyprus,[47] or a foreign settlement in India,[48] or on the high seas.[49] The absence of such certificate or sanction, as the case may be, is an absolute bar to the trial, and the proceedings without it are void.[50] Under the proviso to s 188 of the CrPC, previous sanction of the Central Government is necessary for initiating action under the said section.

5. Offence Committed by a Foreign National in a Foreign Vessel

The territorial waters are all lines every point of which is at a distance of 12 nautical miles from the nearest point on the appropriate baseline. If the occurrence took place when the ship was 850 miles away from seashore, even if those 850 miles are taken as nautical miles or land miles, it is clear that the offence is alleged to have been committed by a foreign national in foreign vessel outside the territory of India. Indian courts have no jurisdiction to try an offence which is alleged to have been committed by a foreign national in a foreign vessel outside the territory of India.[51]

6. Presumption Against Extra-territorial Operations of Statutes

A legislature which passes a law having extra-territorial operation may find that what it has enacted cannot be directly enforced, but the Act is not invalid on that account and the courts of each country must enforce the law with the machinery available to them.[52] The enforcement of law is by its nature territorial, for no state allows other states, as a general rule, to exercise powers of government within it.[53]

It is an established rule of construction that municipal courts will interpret and apply every statute, so far as its language admits, so that it may not conflict with the right of other states or the established rules of international law, and that is why every statute is prima facie construed as territorial in its operation. The presumption against extra-territorial operation has its most rigid application as regards criminal or penal laws. Acts committed by foreigners outside the territory of the enacting state are not taken to be covered by a criminal[54] or penal[55] law unless such construction is irresistible. One exception to this rule is piracy jure gentium.[56]

7. Procedure in such Cases

Section 177 of the CrPC 1973 provides that every offence shall 'ordinarily' be inquired into and tried by a court within whose local jurisdiction it was committed. The47 Supreme Court has held in Narumal v State of Bombay [57] that with the use of the word 'ordinarily' the provision has to be understood as 'except as otherwise provided in the Code or special law'. Thus the provisions of s 188 of the CrPC which specifically make a provision or offence committed outside India override the provisions of s 177 as it provides that an offence committed outside India: (a) by a citizen of India; or (b) by a person not being such citizen on any ship or aircraft registered in India may be dealt with as if it had been committed at any place within India with the sanction of the Central Government. Pre-inquiry stage substantially relates to investigation and no sanction is needed for making an investigation in such cases.[58] In case, during the investigation stage the person known or reasonably suspected to be the offender having committed the offence outside India is not available in India, extradition proceedings may be resorted to. Extradition is the surrender by one state to any other of a person desired to be dealt with for crimes of which he has been accused or convicted and which are justiciable in courts of the other state.[59]

29 Subs by the AO 1937, for 'law passed by the Governor-General of India in Council.'

30 The original words 'the limits of the said territories' have successively been amended by the AO 1937, the AO 1948, the AO 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule to read as above.

31 The original words 'the limits of the said territories' have successively been amended by the AO 1937, the AO 1948, the AO 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule to read as above.

32 The original words 'the said territories' have successively been amended by the AO 1937, the AO 1948, the AO 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule, to read as above.

33 Mobarik Ali Ahmad v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857, p 869, (1957) Cr LJ 1346 ; L Schussler v Director of Enforcement 1969 LW (Cr) 274 .

34 Bishen Das v Emperor 11 Cr LJ 390 ; Pheroz Jehangir Dastoor v Roshan Lal Nanavati (1964) 2 Cr LJ 533, AIR 1964 Bom 264, 66 Bom LR 225 .

35 Pheroz Jehangir Dastoor v Roshan Lal Nanavati (1964) 2 Cr LJ 533, AIR 1964 Bom 264, 66 Bom LR 225 .

36 Mobarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857, p 870, (1957) Cr LJ 1346 .

37 Shiv Bahadur Singh v State of V indhya Pradesh AIR 1953 SC 394 on appeal from State of V indhya Pradesh v Shiv Bahadur AIR 1951 VP 17 .

38 Lopez v Burslem (1843) 4 Moo PC 300 .

39 R v Keyn (1876) 2 Ex D 220 .

40 Jeffreys v Boosey (1854) 4 HL 815, p 939 .

41 British Columbia Electric Rly Co v King AIR 1946 PC 180 .

42 Jeffreys v Boosey (1854) 4 HL 815, p 939 .

43 British Columbia Electric Rly Co v King AIR 1946 PC 180, [1946] AC 527, p 542 .

44 Now repealed by the Extradition Act 1962.

45 Refer to notes under s 4 .

46 R v Maganlal 6 ILR Bom 622 .

47 R v Sarmukh Singh 2 ILR All 218 .

48 R v Daya Bhima 13 ILR Bom 147 ; followingR v Maganlal* 6 ILR Bom 622 .

49 Po Thaung v Emperor 12 Cr LJ 198 .

50 R v Ram Sundar 19 ILR All 109 ; R v Kathaperumal 13 ILR Mad 423 ; Bapu Daldi v R 5 ILR Mad 23 ; R v Baku 24 ILR Bom 287 .

51 Raymund Gencianeo v State of Kerala (2004) Cr LJ 2296 (Ker) .

52 British Columbia Electric Rly Co Ltd v King AIR 1946 PC 180 .

53 Salmond's Jurispudence, 1948, p 75.

54 R v Jameson (1896) 2 QB 245 .

55 Cooke v Vogeler Co (1901) AC 102 .

56 R v Walkem (1908) 14 BC 1 .

57 Narumal v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 1329 .

58 Remla v SP of Police (1993) 1 Ker LT 412 .

59 State of West Bengal v Jugal Kishore AIR 1973 SC 1173 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter I

Introduction

S. 4.

[60][Extension of Code to extra-territorial offences].--

The provisions of this Code apply also to any offence committed by--

[61][(1) any citizen of India in any place without and beyond India;
(2) any person on any ship or aircraft registered in India wherever it may be.]
[62][(3) any person in any place without and beyond India committing offence targeting a computer resource located in India.]

[63][Explanation.--In this section--

(a) the word "offence" includes every act committed outside India which, if committed in India would be punishable under this Code;
(b) The expression "computer resource" shall have the meaning assigned to it in clause (k) of sub-section (1) of section 2 of the Information Technology Act, 2000 (21 of 2000).]

[64][Illustration]

[65][* * * A,[66][Who is [67][a citizen of India]], commits a murder in Uganda. He can be tried and convicted of murder in any place in [68][India] in which he may be found.

[69][* * *].48

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

The original section was substituted by the following by s 2 of the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act 1898 (4 of 1898):

The provisions of this Code apply also to any offence committed by.--

(1) any Native Indian subject of Her Majesty in any place without and beyond British India;
(2) any other British subject within the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India;
(3) any servant of the Queen, whether a British subject or not, within the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India.

Explanation.--In this section the word 'offence' includes every act committed outside British India which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under this Code.

Illustrations

(a) A, a coolie, who is a Native Indian subject, commits a murder in Uganda. He can be tried and convicted of murder in any place in British India in which he may be found.
(b) B, a European British subject, commits a murder in Kashmir. He can be tried and convicted of murder in any place in British India in which he may be found.
(c) C, a foreigner who is in the service of the Punjab Government, commits a murder in Jhind. He can be tried and convicted of murder at any place in British India in which he may be found.
(d) D, a British subject living in Indore, instigates E to commit a murder in Bombay. D is guilty of abetting murder.

By the Adaptation of Laws Order 1950, cll (1) and (2) of the old section were replaced by the new clauses which now stand in the section and cl (3) was deleted. The old section had four illustrations. Illustrations (b), (c) and (d) were deleted and in illustration (a) the words 'a coolie who is a Native Indian subject' were replaced by the words 'who is a British subject of Indian domicile' by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1948. Subsequently, the words 'a citizen of India' were substituted for 'a British subject of Indian domicile' by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1950.

In 2008, a new sub-s (3) has been inserted and old explanation to s 4 has been substituted by the existing new one vide s 51 of the Information Technology (Amendment) Act 2008 (10 of 2009), (wef 27-10-2009).

49

2. Scope

This section gives certain extra-territorial jurisdiction in respect of acts committed outside India by certain classes of persons, but it does not affect the nature of the offence.[70] The doctrine that the law of the country where a crime has been committed governs the nature of the offence and that the courts of that country alone have jurisdiction to try the offender is a well established principle of international law.[71] The two classes of persons specified in this section are almost the same as in s 188 of the CrPC and offences by them are thereunder liable to be 'investigated, inquired into, tried, and otherwise dealt with' according to the provisions contained therein.[72] Any investigation of an offence, punishable under the Indian Penal Code and alleged to have been committed outside India by an Indian citizen will not require sanction of the Central Government under s 188 of the CrPC, but an enquiry by a Court into an offence committed outside India can only be with the sanction of the Central Government.[73] These offences may be offences under the IPC, or under other laws.[74] In the former case the IPC applies to them also, i.e., its definitions, exceptions and penal provisions, by virtue of this section. Thus like all offences under the Code committed within India, offences committed outside thereof and which come within s 4 are subject alike to the substantive and adjective criminal law of India.

For applicability of s 4 IPC, the offence must be committed within the territory of India. If the offence has not been committed within the territorial limits of India, the provisions of the Indian Penal Code as also the Code of Criminal Procedure would not apply. Where the accused was not a citizen of India, the offence was committed in Kuwait, outside India, the order of cognizance taken by CJM in India on complaint filed for offences under ss 498A and 506(2) of IPC was illegal and as such was quashed.[75]

Police in Kerala has no jurisdiction to investigate into an incident which occurred at a distance of 20.5 nautical miles from the outline of Kerala beyond its coastline but within Contiguous Zone, only the Union of India can investigate and try such an offence.[76]

3. Clause 1: Offence Committed by a Citizen of India without and beyond India

The language of this section and s 188 of the CrPC plainly means that if at the time of the commission of the offence, the person committing it is a citizen of India, then even if the offence is committed outside India, he is subject to the jurisdiction of the courts in India. The rule enunciated in the sections is based on the principle that qua citizens, the jurisdiction of courts is not lost by reason of the venue of the offence. If however, at the time of the commission of the offence the accused person is not a citizen of India, the provisions of these sections have no application whatsoever.

50In the illustration to s 4, if A was not a Native Indian subject at the time of the commission of the murder, the provisions of s 4 could not apply to his case. The circumstance that after the commission of the offence a person becomes domiciled in another country, or acquires citizenship of that state, cannot confer jurisdiction on the courts of the territory retrospectively for trying offences committed and completed at a time when that person was neither a national of that country nor was he domiciled there.[77]

The provisions of the Indian Penal Code have been extended to offences committed by any citizen of India in any place within and beyond India by virtue of s 4 thereof. As such, offences committed in Botswana by an Indian citizen would also be amenable to the provisions of the Indian Penal Code, subject to the limitation imposed under the proviso to s 188, CrPC .[78]

Where persons, who were British India subjects and after partition became subjects of the Indian Dominion, commit an offence at a place without and beyond the limits of the provinces, but which place was, according to agreement with India and the foreign country administered by Indian Government, the courts in India have jurisdiction to try such offences as if it had been committed within the provinces of India.[79]

4. Citizens of India

The population of a state is divided into two classes--citizens and aliens. Citizens are members of the political community to which they belong. They are the people who compose the State and enjoy full civil and political rights. Aliens do not enjoy all of them-- articles 5 - 10 of the articles 10- 10 of the Constitution of India and the Indian Citizenship Act 1955 deal with the provisions relating to Indian citizenship. The Constitution does not define citizen or citizenship.[80]

Citizenship may be acquired by birth, descent, registration, naturalisation or incorporation of territory.[81] But no person shall be, or be deemed to be a citizen of India if he has voluntarily acquired the citizenship of any foreign state.[82]

5. Offence Committed by a Foreigner Outside India

An offence committed by a person who is not an Indian citizen in a foreign country, is not triable in ordinary criminal courts in India under the IPC .[83] But when the offence is committed by a foreigner in India, he will be liable for criminal trial in India.[84]If an offence is committed by (a) a foreigner in India, or (b) by a foreigner in a foreign territory but he continues the criminal act in India, he can be tried by a court in India. But where an offence is committed wholly by a foreigner in a foreign51 territory, he cannot, on the principles of international law, be tried in India. The doctrine that the law of the country where a crime has been committed governs the nature of the offence and that the courts of that country alone have jurisdiction to try the offender is a well established principle of international law.[85] The courts in India have always declined jurisdiction against foreigners for offences committed outside India, e.g., for theft although the stolen property was found in British India;[86] for criminal breach of trust;[87] for being in possession in a native state of property stolen from British India;[88] for kidnapping though the person kidnapped is concealed in British India;[89] for instigating the offence of murder outside British India although the offence is committed in British India;[90] of abduction in a native state although the abducted woman was brought by the accused into British India.[91]

6. Clause 2: Offence Committed on Ship or Aircraft Registered in India

This clause expressly provides that the provisions of the Code would apply also 'to any offence committed by any person on any ship or aircraft registered in India wherever it may be.' It has been held that the 'territory' of a state also includes its ships, whether armed or unarmed, and the private ships of its subjects on the high seas or in foreign tidal waters, and foreign private ships while within its ports.[92] But this theory was rejected by their Lordships of the Privy Council and it was held that in accordance with the convention of international law the territorial sovereign grants to foreign sovereigns and their envoys and public ships and the naval forces carried by such ships, certain immunities. A public ship in foreign waters is not and is not treated as territory of her own nation. The domestic courts, in accordance with the principles of international law, will accord to the ship, its crew and its contents certain immunities, some of which are well settled, though others are in dispute. The immunities do not depend upon an objective extra-territorially but on implication of the domestic law. They are conditional and can, in any case, be waived by the nation to which the public ship belongs.[93] The same principle applies to aircraft also.

It is to be noted that the use of the expression 'any person' in this clause is in contrast with the expression 'any citizen' used in the earlier clauses. This clause would, therefore, apply not only to citizens of India, but also to foreigners.

7. Offence Committed by a Foreign National in a Foreign Vessel

See under the same heading in s 3, ante.52

8. Procedure in Case of Offences Outside India

Where an offence is committed in any place without and beyond India and the offender is found in India, he may either be: (a) given up or surrendered to the country where the offence was committed, that is, he may be extradited; or (b) tried by a court in India in the exercise of its extra-territorial jurisdiction.

Sections 3 and 4 of this Code read with s 188 of the CrPC give ample power to the courts and authorities to deal with the offences committed outside India: (a) by a citizen of India whether on high seas or elsewhere; or (b) by a person not being such citizen on any ship or aircraft registered in India in the same manner as if such offences had been committed at any place within India. The sanction of the Central Government is, however, necessary for inquiry and trial of such cases in India. An investigation has been held to be a pre-inquiry matter and no sanction is required for making the investigation in respect of the offences committed outside India.[1]

9. Extradition

During the investigation stage of a person known or reasonably suspected to be the offender having committed the offence outside India, if not available in India, extradition proceedings may have to be resorted to. Extradition is the surrender by one state to another of a person desired to be dealt with for crimes of which he has been accused or convicted and which are justiciable in courts of the other state.[2] A person accused of an offence, i.e., of an act which if committed in India would constitute an offence, committed on a ship on the high seas which comes into any port of India may, on the requisition of 'the Government of any State outside India' be dealt with under the provisions of the Indian Extradition Act 1903.[3]

The law about to be briefly referred to refers to the question which arises when a person commits a crime in country A, and escapes from justice to country B. What is country B to do with him. A distinction must at once be made as regards country B, according to whether B is a foreign state, or a part of state A, e.g., India.

Where A and B are foreign states the question is governed by the law of extradition, where they are parts of the same state by the law relating to 'fugitive offenders.'

The British Law of Extradition is regulated by the Extradition Acts of 1870, and 1873, 33 and 34 Vic. c. 52 and 36 and 37 Vic. c. 60 and the Extradition Act of 1895, 58 and 59 Vic. c. 33 and these are 'cited collectively as the Extradition Acts 1870 to 1895'.[4]

In India, extradition is governed by the statutes of 1870 and 1873 and by the Indian Extradition Act 1903[5], which provides 'for the more convenient administration' of the two Statutes of 1870 and 1873, and for the extradition of criminals in cases in which they do not apply.[6] A distinction exists between foreign states, which are either 'foreign states,' i.e., states to which for the time being the Acts of 1870 and53 1873 apply.[7] And states other than foreign states in that sense, i.e., states where there is a political agent. Chapter III, ss 7 - 18 of the Indian Extradition Act deals with extradition in the case of the second class of states.

10. Foreign States

The general principle of extradition as held by majority of international jurists is that, apart from any treaty, there is no duty on country B to deliver the escaped offender to country A. But Great Britain has entered into extradition treaties with nearly all foreign states.[8] Since the passing of the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873, the rules and exceptions laid down in those Acts are embodied in all such treaties:

> Extradition is based on the common assumption that all mankind have a common interest in the punishment of acts universally considered as crimes. On the one hand, just as the interest of mankind justifies extradition, the same interest justifies States in regulating extradition by Treaties, and not exposing the extradited criminal to vindictive proceedings or charges, which are not common ground among civilised communities.[9]

These rules and exception are as follows:

(i) The crime in question must be an offence under the laws of both countries.
(ii) The crime must have been committed in the territory of the state demanding extradition.
(iii) The offender is not a subject of the state from which his surrender is sought.

Exceptions.--

(1) That the crime in question is not one 'of a political character.'
(2) That the offender shall not be tried for any other offence than the one in question, until he has had an opportunity of returning to the country surrendering him.
(3) That if on demand the offender is undergoing punishment for some other offence, he shall not be surrendered until he has undergone or has been discharged from such punishment.

11. Offence of a 'Political Character'

Exception I, which is embodied in s 5(1) of the Indian Extradition Act is the chief difficulty in the subject, and the meaning of a crime of 'a political character' has been fully discussed in Sir JF Stephen's History of the Criminal Law of England.[10]

12. Extradition Offences

The offences under the IPC for which extradition may be granted are termed as 'extradition offences,'[11] and are set out in Sch 1 of Act 15 of 1903.[12] They appear under the head of extradition in the notes to the sections herein.

54In addition to the extradition offences under the Code there are others specified in Sch 1 of the Indian Extradition Act, viz.:

(i) Desertion from any unit of the armed forces.
(ii) Piracy by law of nations.
(iii) Sinking or destroying a vessel at sea, or attempting or conspiring to do so.
(iv) Assault on board a ship on the high seas, with intent to destroy life or to do grievous bodily harm.
(v) Revolt or conspiracy to revolt by two or more persons on board a ship on the high seas against the authority of the master.
(vi) Any offence against any section of the Indian Penal Code or against any other law which may, from time to time, be specified by the Central Government by notification in the official Gazette either generally for all States or specially for any one or more states.

13. Fugitive Offenders

Fugitive offenders from the British Islands or other parts of the Empire, or vice versa, or from the British possession to another are dealt with under the Fugitive Offenders' Act 1881, (44 and 45 Vic. c. 69) and the rules 'for the more convenient administration of this Statute' in India are laid down in s 19 of the Indian Extradition Act 1903[13].

14. Extra-territorial Jurisdiction

Courts in India possess extra-territorial jurisdiction to try offences committed on land, on high seas and in the air and these powers have been conferred by ss 3 and 4 of the IPC and by s 188 of the CrPC .[14]

The warrant issued by a magistrate will not have an extra-territorial effect. It will run inside India and not beyond. And then for offences committed beyond India, if the offender is found in India, as ss 186 and 188 of the CrPC contemplate, he should be either arrested and tried here, (an extra-territorial operation) or extradited into the country where it is said he had committed the offence.[15]

15. Previous Sanction under Proviso to Section 188 , CrPC

The provisions of the Indian Penal Code have been extended to offences committed by any citizen of India within and beyond India by virtue of s 4, IPC . Offences committed in Botswana by an Indian citizen would also be amenable to the provisions of the Indian Penal Code subject to the limitation imposed under the proviso to s 188, CrPC . The Court in India may proceed with the trial relating to offences alleged to have been committed in India. However, in respect of offences alleged to have been committed by an Indian citizen outside India, the Courts shall not proceed with the trial without the sanction of the Central Government as envisaged in proviso to s 188, CrPC .[16]55

16. Form of Charge

As seen, this section, which in effect supplements the provisions of s 2 of the IPC, does not define or state any new offence but simply extends the territorial limits or extents of operation of the Code to make certain offences committed beyond India triable by the courts of this country with its aid. In cases falling under this section, the charge may be worded as follows with necessary modifications:

For cases falling under cl (1):

> (1) I, (name and office of Session Judge, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused person) as follows:That you, being a citizen of India on or about the ...day of...at Rome (name the place and country) in Italy committed murder (name the offence) by causing the death of A, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s 302 read with s 4 of the Indian Penal Code and after the occurrence you were found at Bombay (name the place in India) within the jurisdiction of this court.And I hereby direct that you be tried by this court on the said charge.
>
> Signature and Seal of the Court

For cases falling under cl (2):

> (2) That you, though not an Indian citizen, on or about the...day of...while travelling by air bus, (or ship named...) registered in India between Madras and Colombo (describe the route etc.) committed murder by causing the death of co-passenger A, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s 302, read with s 4 of the Indian Penal Code, and after the occurrence you were found at Bangalore, (name the place within India) within the jurisdiction of this Court.And I hereby direct that you be tried by this court on the said charge.
>
> Signature and seal of the Court

60 Subs by Act 4 of 1898, s 2, for the original section.

61 Subs by the AO 1950 for cll (1)-(4).

62 Ins by the Information Technology (Amendment) Act, 2008 (10 of 2009), s 51 (wef 27-10-2009).

63 Subs by the Information Technology (Amendment) Act, 2008 (10 of 2009), s 51 (wef 27-10-2009) for Explanation. Before substitution, it stood as under: 'Explanation.--In this section the word "offence" includes every act committed outside India which, if committed in India would be punishable under this Code.'.

64 Subs by Act 36 to 1957; s 3 and Sch II for 'Illustrations' (wef 17-9-1957).

65 The brackets and letter '(a)' omitted by s 3 and Sch II of Act 36 of 1957 (wef 17-9-1957).

66 Subs by the AO 1948 for 'a coolie, who is a Native Indian Subject'.

67 Subs by the AO 1950 for 'a British subject of Indian domicile.'

68 The words 'British India' have been successively amended by the AO 1948, the AO 1950, and Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule to read as above.

69 Illustrations (b), (c) and (d) repealed by the AO 1950.

70 Re *Ram Bharthi Hirabharthi*AIR 1924 Bom 51, p 53, 25 Cr LJ 233 .

71 Gokaldas Amarsee v Emperor AIR 1933 Sind 333, p 335 .

72 Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, s 5 .

73 Muhammad Rafi v State of Kerala 2010 Cr LJ 592, p 595 (Ker) (DB) .

74 Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, ss 4 and 5 .

75 Fatma Bibi Ahmed Patel v State of Gujarat 2008 Cr LJ 3065, p 3068, AIR 2008 SC 2392, (2008) 6 SCC 789, 2008 (7) Scale 519 .

76 Republic of Italy v Union of India 2013 (1) KLT 367, 2013 (4) SCC 721, 2013 AIR SCW 836 .

77 Central Bank of India Ltd v Ram Narain AIR 1955 SC 36, p 38-39 ; affirmingRam Narain v Central Bank of India Ltd* AIR 1952 Punj 178 .

78 Thota Venkateswarlu v State of AP 2011 Cr LJ 4925, p 4927, 2011 AIR SCW 5236, AIR 2011 SC 2900, (2011) 9 Scale 603 .

79 Guddar Singh v State AIR 1954 Punj 37 ; Pheroz Jehangir Dastoor v State (1964) 2 Cr LT 533, AIR 1964 Bom 264 .

80 For the definition of these terms see the Indian Citizenship Act 1955, s 2 .

81 Ibid, ss 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 .

82 Constitution of India, art 9 .

83 Mohd Mohy-ud-Din for Burham-ud-Din-Petitioner v Emperor AIR 1946 Lah 158, p 169 .

84 Mobarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 857, (1957) Cr LJ 1346 (SC) .

85 Gokaldas Amarsee v Emperor AIR 1933 Sind 333, relying onMcLeod v Attorney General for New South Wales* (1891) AC 455, 60 LJPC 55, 65 LT 321, 17 Cox CC 341 .

86 Reg v Advigadu (1876) ILR 1 Mad 171 ; Reg v Lakha Govind (1875) ILR 1 Bom 50 ; Emperor v Sunker Gope (1881) 6 Cal 307, 7 CLR 411 ; Queen-Empress v Abdul Latif (1886) 10 Bom 186 ; Queen-Empress v Ranchhod Daya (1900) 2 Bom LR 337 .

87 Re Babu Daldi(1882) 5 Mad 23; Hemandas v Chellaram (1911) 5 SLR 267, 15 IC 836 .

88 Queen-Empress v Kirpal Singh (1887) 9 All 523, (1887) AWN 131 ; Moheshwari Prasad Singh v Emperor AIR 1914 Cal 725, 24 IC 945, 15 Cr LJ 537 .

89 Bhute Santal v Dam Santal (1916) 17 Cr LJ 128, 33 IC 304 .

90 Reg v Pittai (1873) 10 BHCR 356 .

91 Emperor v Koochri (1913) 7 SLR 71, 14 Cr LJ 439, 20 IC 599 ; Emperor v Anandgir (1914) 7 SLR 128, 15 Cr LJ 511, 24 IC 599 ; But SeeMobarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay* AIR 1957 SC 857 .

92 R v Lewis 7 Cox CC 277, (1857) 26 LJMC 104 .

93 Chung Chi Cheung v King AIR 1930 PC 69, p 73 .

1 Remla v SP Police (1993) 1 Ker LT 412 .

2 State of West Bengal v Jugul Kishore AIR 1969 SC 1171 .

3 Indian Extradition Act 1903, ss 2(e) and 20 thereof. Now repealed by the Extradition Act 1962.

4 58 and 59 Vic c. 33 s 2 .

5 Now repealed by the Extradition Act 1962.

6 Preamble to Act 15 of 1903.

7 Indian Extradition Act 1903, s 2(c) .

8 For a list of such treaties, see Encyclopaedia of the Laws of England under 'Extradition.'

9 Barclay, Encyclopaedia of the Laws of England, 'Extradition'.

10 Sir JF Stephen, History of the Criminal Law of England, vol II, pp 65-74; For the whole subject of extradition see the standard work on the subject by Sir E Clarke, Treaties on the Law of Extradition, fourth edn, 1903, to which the reader is referred.

11 Indian Extradition Act 1903, s 2(b) .

12 Now repealed by the Extradition Act 1962.

13 Now repealed by the Extradition Act 1962.

14 See Notes under s 3 .

15 Jugal Kishore More v Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta (1968) Cr LJ 604, AIR 1968 Cal 220, 71 CWN 408 .

16 Thota Venkateswara v State of UP AIR 2011 SC 2900, p 2903, (2011) 3 SCC (Cri) 772, (2011) 9 SCC 527, 2011 (9) Scale 603, 2011 Cr LJ 4925 . See alsoMahesh Kumar Dhawan v State of MP* 2012 Cr LJ 1639, 2012 (3) Crimes 417 (MP) (DB) (Registration of FIR and investigation in India of an offence committed by an Indian citizen in Abu Dhabi (UAE) held illegal in the absence of previous sanction from the Central Government).

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter I

Introduction

17[S. 5.

Certain laws not to be affected by this Act.--

Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of any Act for punishing mutiny and desertion of officers, soldiers, sailors or airmen in the service of the Government of India or the provisions of any special or local law.]56

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

The present section was substituted by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1950, for the original section as amended by Act 14 of 1870, 10 of 1927, 35 of 1934, AO 1937 and AO 1948, which stood as follows:

Nothing in this Act is intended to repeal, vary, suspend or affect any of the provisions of the Statutes 3 and 4, William IV, Chapter 85 or of any Act of Parliament passed after that Statute in any way affecting the East India Company, or the said territories, or the inhabitants thereof, or any of the provisions of any Act for punishing mutiny and desertion of Officers and Soldiers in the service of Her Majesty or of the East India Company, or of any Act for the Government of Indian Navy, or of any special or local law.

2. Scope of the Section

This section saves the operation of certain laws which would otherwise appear to have been repealed by the sweeping general provisions of s 2 . Taken by itself, s 2 would appear to repeal all other laws for the punishment of every offence which is made punishable by the IPC . The effect of s 5 is to qualify the general repeal prescribed by s 2 . The two sections taken together declare that offences defined by special and local laws continue to be punishable as before, in other words, all acts or omissions contrary to the provisions of the Code itself, or of the provisions of special and local laws, and the other laws enumerated in s 5, and these alone and none others are punishable as offences.[18]Though the Code was intended to be a general one, it was not thought desirable to make it exhaustive, and hence, offences defined by local or special laws were left out of the Code, and merely declared to be punishable as heretobefore.[19]

The section as originally enacted purported to save certain enactments of the British Parliament. But the Penal Code, being an Act of the Governor-General-in-Council, a non-sovereign body, could, in no way, repeal, vary, suspend or affect the statutes or Acts of Parliament relating to India. With respect to these Acts of Parliament, this section was enacted only ex majori cautela. Now the section saves only:

(i) The provision of any Act for punishing mutiny and desertion of officers, soldiers, sailors or airmen in the service of the Government of India, and
(ii) The provision of any special or local law.

3. Provisions for Punishing Mutiny and Desertion

Provision for these offences is now made in the Indian Army Act 46 of 1950, the Navy Act 62 of 1957, and the Indian Air Force Act 45 of 1950.

4. Meaning of Special Law and Local Law

A 'special law' is a law applicable to a particular subject,[20] while a 'local law' is a law applicable only to a particular part of India.[21] In other words a 'special law'57 means a law enacted for special cases in special circumstances in contradiction to the general rules of law laid down as applicable generally to all classes with which the general law deals.[22]

5. Special and Local Law may Co-exist

Section 5 clearly declares that the IPC is not intended to repeal, vary, suspend or affect any provisions of any special or local law. The one enactment has not the effect of repealing the other. The two co-exist without conflict. In order to leave no doubt on this point, the law on the subject has been declared by the express provision of s 26, General Clauses Act 1897, which provides that where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under any one of those enactments but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence. It is clear, therefore, that where an act is punishable under a special law and also under a general statute, the offender could be proceeded with under either or both, but could not be punished twice for the same act or omission which constituted the offence. Where there is nothing in the Special Act to exclude the operation of the general criminal law, it cannot be inferred that there was an intention on the part of the legislature to exclude it.[23]

6. Simple Rule of Interpretation of the Indian Penal Code 1860 and other Criminal Laws

The simple rule of interpretation in such cases is that the IPC will apply wherever its application is not expressly, or by necessary implication, excluded, and where the requirements prescribed under the IPC for the offence charged are satisfied.[24] The general rule generalia specialibus non derogant (the general does not detract from the specific) has not been held to be of universal application by courts in India.[25] The general principle of law is that the IPC would apply if the acts fall within it, though there may be specific offences and penalties under the special Act. It is idle to contend that a special law repeals the provisions of the IPC because both of them deal with offences arising under both the Acts.[26]But no prosecution under the Code is admissible if it appears upon the whole frame of the Special Act that it was intended to be complete in itself and to be enforced by the penalties created by it.[27]

7. Statutes Creating New Offence and Statutes Enlarging Ambit of Existing Offence

The distinction between a statute creating a new offence with a particular penalty and a statute enlarging the ambit of an existing offence by including new acts within it58 with a particular penalty, is well settled. In the former case the new offence is punishable by the new penalty only; in the latter it is punishable also by all such penalties as were applicable before the Act to the offence in which it is included.[28] In Emperor v Abdul Hamid ,[29] Das J, observed:

> It has been held in numerous cases that where a statute creates a new offence, which was not an offence at common law, and imposes a penalty in respect of such offence, a person committing such an offence can only be proceeded against under the statute which creates the offence and cannot be indicted under the general law.

The principle is stated with clearness and precision by Hawkins as:[30]

> Also where a statute makes a new offence which was in no way prohibited by the common law, and appoints a peculiar manner for proceeding against the offender as by commitment, or action of debt, or information, etc without mentioning an indictment, it seems to be settled to this day that it would not maintain an indictment, because mentioning the other methods of proceedings seems impliedly to exclude that of indictment.

But as pointed out by Wild J in Bhalchandra Trimbak Ranadive v Emperor ,[31] the true principle is: 'Where a new offence is created and the particular manner in which proceedings should be taken is laid down, then proceedings cannot be taken in any other way'. Where a new law makes an act punishable, which is already penal under an existing law and there is nothing in the latter enactment, which either expresses or implies that the operation of the earlier law is excluded, an offender can be prosecuted and punished under either of the two enactments. The earlier law will not be put out of operation merely because there is some change in procedure or some difference in penalties. The effect of the new enactments is to add a remedy and not to repeal the former remedy.[32]

8. Same Act Punishable under Different Acts--Special Law Prescribing Smaller Penalty will Apply

Where the ordinary criminal law is not excluded by a special law, the provisions of the special law cannot be applied as restriction to the ordinary operation of the criminal law.[33]It cannot be laid down as a general rule of law that where there is a special law making a particular act an offence and providing penalties for such an offence, the general law must be held to be inapplicable. It is possible that the same act may be an offence under two different Acts and both may be applicable simultaneously, and the offender may be prosecuted and convicted under either Act. It may, however, be conceded that where the offence falls strictly within the provisions of a section of a special Act and does not go beyond it, it would be more appropriate to prosecute the offender and convict him under that special Act, rather than fall back upon a more general law which prescribes a heavier penalty. In such a case, it may be assumed that the legislature in prescribing the smaller penalty has59 considered recourse to the special law as the proper course.[34] The principle that where a particular set of acts or omissions constitute an offence under the general law and also under a special law, the prosecution should be under the special law, is confirmed to cases where the offences are coincident or practically so.[35]

9. Application of Criminal Law to Acts Required by Particular Statutes

Whenever there is an intention to apply the provisions of the criminal law to acts authorised or required by particular statutes, that intention is always made clear by express words to that effect. Instances of this may be found in the Cess Act,[36] s 94 ; in the Estates Partition Act,[37]s 148 ; in the Income Tax Act 1886, ss 35 and 37 ; in the Land Acquisition Act 1894,[38]s 10, and in many other Acts. Where, as in the Bengal Municipal Act there are no such words as are necessary to make the provisions of the IPC applicable, the court will have no power to import them.[39]

10. Conflict between Special and General Act

Where a special Act with an offence similar to an offence dealt with by a general enactment, it does not follow that the provisions of the general enactment have been repealed to that extent.[40] Where there is a conflict between a special Act and a general Act, the provisions of the special Act prevail.[41]Where an act is punishable under a special law and also under the Penal Code the offender can be proceeded with under either or both, but cannot be punished twice for the same act or omission which constituted the offence.[42] It is, however, ordinarily desirable that the sentence should be passed under the special law.[43]

If the road traffic offences, which can be regulated and adequately dealt with under the provisions of Motor Vehicles Act, resort to the provisions of the general law i.e. IPC should be avoided.[44]

The prosecution of road traffic offenders under various penal provisions of Motor Vehicles Act is the rule and the prosecution of such guilty persons under various provisions of the Indian Penal Code is violative of the settled principles of law as well as contrary to the legislative intent.[45]60

11. Common Law Power to Punish Contempt of Court Saved

Contempt is a special subject and the jurisdiction is conferred by a special set of laws peculiar to courts of record.[46] The IPC does not affect the power of a court of record to punish an offender. Contempt of court or contempt of the High Court by a libel published out of court when the court is not sitting, is not an offence under the Code. 'A contempt of the High Court by a libel such as the present published out of court when the court is not sitting,' is not included in the words 'offences under the Indian Penal Code ', although the contempt may include defamation. Such an offence is something more than mere defamation, and is of a different character. It is an offence which, by the common law of England, is punishable by the High Court in a summary manner by fine or imprisonment, or both.

The High Courts in the presidencies are superior courts of record, and the offence of contempt, and the powers of the High Court for punishing it, are the same there as in this country, not by virtue of the IPC for British India and the CrPC 1882, but by virtue of the common law of England.[47]

Even a non-presidency High Court in India is vested with an inherent right to punish for contempt of the court itself. It cannot be disputed that a non-presidency High Court is a superior court of record, and this being so, the jurisdiction to punish for contempt of itself is inherently vested in every High Court. It is a necessary incidence of this jurisdiction that such contempts are punishable summarily by committal.[48] The inherent power of the High Courts as superior Courts of Record to punish contempt of themselves has not been taken away by the Contempt of Courts Act 1926; it has been left undisturbed and consequently the High Courts in India continue to have power to deal with contempt of themselves in the same manner as a Court of Record has under the Common Law of England.[49] It has been held by the Bombay High Court that if a High Court considers that a person has committed contempt of that court, although the contempt may have been committed outside the jurisdiction of that court, it can deal with that person if he were within its jurisdiction.[50] But dissenting from this view, the Allahabad High Court has held that where contempt has been committed within the territorial jurisdiction of a High Court in India, such court is competent to issue process to secure the attendance of the offender wherever he may be residing in British India, as in the case of an offence under the IPC or under any other Act for the time being in force.[51] The legislature has given effect to this decision. (Now under s 4 of the Contempt of Courts Act 1952, which has repealed the Contempt of Courts 1926).

A High Court shall have jurisdiction to inquire into or try a contempt of itself or of any court subordinate to it, whether the contempt is alleged to have been committed61 within or outside the local limits of its jurisdiction and whether the person alleged to be guilty of the contempt is within or outside such limits.

Though the Contempt of Courts Act 1952 has been repealed, s 11 of the Contempt of Courts Act 1971 has retained this provision.

If in its true name and effect, the act complained of is really 'scandalising the court' rather than a mere insult, then it is clear that on the ratio of decision in Bathina Ramakrishna Reddy v State of Madras ,[52] the jurisdiction of the High Court is not ousted by reason of the provisions in s 3(2) of the Contempt of Courts Act 1952. When serious aspersions are made against the magistrate which amount to 'scandalising the court', the High Court has jurisdiction to take cognizance of offence.[53]

The jurisdiction conferred on the High Court under art 215 of ConstitutionIndia to punish for contempt of itself is a special one, not arising or derived from the Contempt of Courts Act 1952 and therefore, not within the preview of the IPC . Such a position is also clear from the provisions of the Contempt of Courts Act. The effect of s 5 of that Act is only to widen the scope of existing jurisdiction of a special kind and not conferring a new jurisdiction. So far as contempt of the High Court itself is concerned, as distinguished from that of a court subordinate to it, the Constitution vests these rights in every High Court, and the Act of a legislature could take away that jurisdiction and confer it afresh by virtue of its own authority. That being the position, s 25, General Clauses Act 1897 cannot apply.[54]62

17 Subs by the AO 1950 for the original s 5 as amended by Acts 14 of 1870, 10 of 1927, 35 of 1934, AO 1937 and AO 1948.

18 Satish Chandra Chakravarti v Ram Dayal De AIR 1921 Cal 1, p 5 ; 3 Mad HCR App 11.

19 3 Mad HCR App 11.

20 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 41 .

21 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 42 .

22 Kaushalya Rani v Gopal Singh AIR 1964 SC 260, p 263, [1964] 4 SCR 982, (1964) Cr LJ 152 .

23 Emperor v Joti Prasad AIR 1932 All 18, 21 ; Jiwan Ram v Emperor AIR 1932 All 69, 33 Cr LJ 309 ; Emperor v Bishan Sahai Vidyarthi AIR 1937 All 714 ; Bhup Narain v State AIR 1952 All 35 ; Queen v Husain Ali, 5 NWPH CR 49; Re *Motilal Amratial Shah*AIR 1931 Bom 141, 32 Cr LJ 280 ; Emperor v Bhogilala Chimanlal Nanavati AIR 1931 Bom 409, 32 Cr LJ 1145 ; Kuloda Prosad Majumdar v Emperor 4 Cr LJ 439 ; Proceedings of the high court dated 22 February 1876, ILR 1 Mad 55; Queen v Ramchandrappa 6 ILR Mad 249 ; Re *V V Satyanarayanamurthy*AIR 1953 Mad 137 ; Kaulashia v Emperor AIR 1933 Pat 142 .

24 Re *Mrs B Gervaes*AIR 1950 Mad 599, p 600 ; Kuloda Prosad Majumdar v Emperor 4 Cr LJ 439, 11 CWN 100 .

25 Bhup Narain v State AIR 1952 All 35, p 37 .

26 Re *V V Satyanarayanamurthy*AIR 1953 Mad 137 .

27 Chandi Pershad v Abdur Rahman 22 ILR Cal 131, p 138 .

28 Bonnerjee's Interpretation of Deeds, Wills and Statutes in British India, Tagore Law Lectures, 1901, p 919; Balchandra Trimbak Ranadive v Emperor AIR 1929 Bom 433, p 439 ; Lowe v Dorling & Son (1906) 2 KB 772, 75 LJ KB 1019, 22 TLR 779, 95 LT 243 .

29 Emperor v Abdul Hamid AIR 1923 Pat 1 .

30 Pleas of the Crown, Book II, ch 25, s 4 .

31 Bhalchandra Trimbak Ranadive v Emperor AIR 1929 Bom 433, p 443 .

32 Om Prakash v State AIR 1955 All 275, p 281 ; State v Raj Kumar AIR 1956 Pepsu 1 .

33 Proceedings of the High Court, 22 February 1876, ILR 1 Mad 55.

34 Jewa Ram v Emperor AIR 1932 All 69 dissenting fromMohan Lal Saxena v Emperor* AIR 1930 Oudh 497, and relying onJoti Prasad Gupta v Emperor* AIR 1932 All 18 ; Emperor v Ganesh V arma Joshi AIR 1931 Bom 140 .

35 Suchit Raut v Emperor AIR 1930 Pat 622, p 623 .

36 Bengal Act 9 of 1880.

37 Bengal Act 8 of 1876.

38 Now repealed by the Right to Fair Compensation and Transparency in Land Acquisition, Rehabilitation and Resettlement Act 2013.

39 Chandi Prasad v Abdur Rahman 22 ILR Cal 131, p 139 .

40 Segu Baliah v Ramasamiah AIR 1918 Mad 460, p 461, 18 Cr LJ 992 ; Emperor v Joti Prasad AIR 1932 All 18, p 24 .

41 Collector of Bombay v Kamalavahooji Maharaj AIR 1934 Bom 162, p 163 .

42 Re *VV Satyanarayanamurthy*AIR 1953 Mad 137 ; Emperor v Joti Prasad AIR 1932 All 18, p 21 ; Sukhanandan Rai v Emperor AIR 1918 Pat 649, 19 Cr LJ 157 ; Queen v Ramchandrappa 6 ILR Mad 249 ; Re Kasimuddin 8 WR 55 (Cr); Bhagat Singh v Emperor AIR 1930 Lah 266 ; Re *Naiken Veerarami*AIR 1931 Mad 18 ; Rex v Husson Ali 5 NWP 49, General Clauses Act 1897, s 26 .

43 Kuloda Prosad Mazumdar v Emperor 4 Cr LJ 439, 11 CWN 100 .

44 Ramchandra Rabidas v State of Tripura 2009 Cr LJ 1342, p 1352, (2009) 2 GLR 741, 2009 (1) GLT 90 (Gauh) .

45 Ramchandra Rabidas v State of Tripura 2009 Cr LJ 1342, p 1354, (2009) 2 GLR 741, 2009 (1) GLT 90 (Gauh) .

46 Sukhdev Singh v Hon'ble CJ, S Teja Singh AIR 1954 SC 186 .

47 Surrendra Nath Banerjee v Chief Justice and Judges of High Court at Fort William in Bengal 10 ILR Cal 109, pp 131-32 (PC), 10 IA 171 ; followed in Governor of Bengal v Motilal Ghose AIR 1914 Cal 9 ; Re *Tarit Kanti Biswas*AIR 1918 Cal 988 ; Re *Habib*AIR 1926 Lah 1 ; Re *Tushar Kanti Ghosh*AIR 1935 Cal 419 .

48 Re *Lala Harkishan Lal*AIR 1937 Lah 497, p 498 ; Re *Muslim Outlook, Lahore*AIR 1927 Lah 610 ; Re *KL Gauba*AIR 1942 Lah 105 ; Hadi Hussain v Nasiruddin Haider AIR 1926 All 623 ; Emperor v Murli Manohar Prasad AIR 1929 Pat 72 ; Re *Benjamin Guy Horniman*AIR 1944 Bom 127 .

49 Re *Lala Harkishan Lal*AIR 1937 Lah 497, p 499 .

50 Re *Benjamin Guy Horniman*AIR 1944 Bom 127, p 129 ; relying onHD Rajah v CH Witherington* AIR 1934 Mad 423 and Chanda Mall Karnani v Sardari Lal Thaper (1937) ILR 1 Cal 345, 40 CWN 1285 .

51 Emperor v Benjamin Guy Horniman AIR 1945 All 4 .

52 Bathina Ramakrishna Reddy v State of Madras AIR 1952 SC 149 .

53 State of Madhya Pradesh v Revashankar AIR 1959 SC 102 .

54 RK Kapur v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1972 SC 858 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/Chapter II

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

INTRODUCTION

This chapter is for the most part an elaborate interpretation clause, a key to the interpretation of the whole Code. The leading terms are defined and explained, and the meanings thus announced, are steadily adhered to throughout the subsequent chapters. Sir James Stephen suggests that the object of this chapter is to prevent captious judges from willfully misunderstanding the Code, and cunning criminals from evading its provisions. It does not provide explanations for all cases indiscriminately, but only for those where difficulty may arise, when it will be necessary to refer to this chapter to see what the meaning of the Code is.[1]

1 1860 Proceedings of Council, p 1261 quoted in Ejaj Ahmed 'Law of Crimes', third edn, ch II.

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 6.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 6.

Definitions in the Code to be understood subject to exceptions.--

Throughout this Code every definition of an offence, every penal provision, and every illustration of every such definition or penal provision, shall be understood subject to the exceptions contained in the Chapter entitled "General Exceptions", though those exceptions are not repeated in such definition, penal provision, or illustration.

Illustrations

(a) The sections, in this Code, which contain definitions of offences, do not express that a child under seven years of age cannot commit such offences, but the definitions are to be understood subject to the general exception which provides that nothing shall be an offence which is done by a child under seven years of age.

(b) A, a police-officer, without warrant, apprehends Z, who has committed murder. Here A is not guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement; for he was bound by law to apprehend Z and therefore the case falls within the general exception which provides that "nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is bound by law to do it".

Comments

1. Scope

This section refers to ch IV, ss 76 - 106 of the IPC and might as well have found its place at the commencement, of that chapter.63

All definitions of offences, illustrations thereof, and punishments contained in the Code are subject to the exceptions provided for in ch IV of the IPC . The section provides a part of the definition of every offence.[2] Section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act 1872 (Evidence Act), must be read with this section.[3]Section 6 of the IPC is an extraordinary provision which obligates the court to consider whether a case is covered by any of the exceptions under ch IV of the IPC . Section 6 of the Code should be read as a proviso to ss 105 - 106 of the Evidence Act. That apart, s 6 of the Code imposes statutory obligation on the court to consider as to whether the case is covered by the exception or not.[4]

The provisions of this section are mandatory and the court must consider whether the case of a particular accused is covered by the provisions of ch IV of this Code even if no plea or defence is taken by the accused.[5] Whenever and wherever the court is to consider any provision of the IPC, the court is bound to consider whether the said section is subject to the exceptions contained in ch IV of the Code.[6]

The Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act 1870, s 13 (as amended by Act 12 of 1891, Sch II) made ch IV of the Code applicable to its newly introduced sections, viz. ss 121A, 124A, 225A, 225B, 294A and 304A .

When under attack by an assailant, i.e., where an offence is sought to be committed by an aggressor, the defenders have been given a statutory right to defend their lives and those of others. If the right is taken away, the innocent will suffer and muscle power will prevail as the master of the society. To secure this right a warning note is found in s 6 of the IPC . The courts should always bear in mind s 6 and try to find out the circumstances whenever and wherever they peep from materials on record. Necessary allowance should always be given to the accused until it can be affirmatively said that the law has been broadcast and made known to all.[7]

An investigation officer before filing charge sheet shall not mechanically lay charge against any person for such offence, for the mere reason that those acts constitute offence as defined in IPC . He shall further confirm that an offence is made out against a person despite what is contained in the General Exceptions i.e. Ch IV (ss 76 to 106),[8] because of the mandate in s 6, IPC .

2. Definitions

The Law Commissioners responsible for the first draft of the Code remarked:

> In criminal cases, one with which we are now more immediately concerned, we think that the accused party ought always to have the advantage of a doubt on a point of law, if that doubt be entertained after mature consideration by the highest judicial authority, as well as of a doubt on a matter of fact. In civil suits which are actually pending, we think it, on the whole, desirable to leave to the Courts the office of deciding doubtful questions of law which have actually arisen in the course of litigation.[9]

64

In criminal cases, therefore, the law must be precise and intelligible, and the facts proved must be clear and unequivocal. And so far as regards law, while it may be so, still there may be doubts and difficulties which it is the function of the rules to solve. Indeed, as human language is never so precise and inflexible as to admit of no misinterpretation, it is always necessary, and indeed, desirable, that these rules, which form as it were, the grammar of the Code, should be carefully observed. And for this purpose, it is necessary to examine the whole Code, analyse its scheme and study its vocabulary. Indeed, in order to facilitate this work the draftsmen have avowedly adopted a plan the object of which is to make the Code self-contained, so far as possible, regarding its construction. In the first place, they have added definitions of terms used in the Code, the object of which is to provide a uniform nomenclature and thus avoid the perplexing variety of senses in which the same term may have been used in cognate enactments or parlance. They observe that in the definitions:

> We have repeatedly found ourselves under the necessity of sacrificing neatness and perspicuity to precision, and of using harsh expressions because we could find no other expressions which would convey our whole meaning and no more than our own meaning. Such definitions, standing by themselves, might repel and perplex the reader, and would perhaps be fully comprehended only by a very few students after long application. Yet, such definitions are found, and must be found in every system of law which aims at accuracy. A legislator may, if he thinks fit, avoid such definitions and by avoiding them he will give a smoother and more attractive appearance to his workmanship; but in that case, he flinches from a duty, which he ought to perform, and which somebody must perform. If this is necessary, but most disagreeable work be not performed by the law-giver once for all, it must be constantly performed in a rude and imperfect manner by every Judge in the Empire, and will probably be performed by no two Judges in the same way. We have, therefore, thought it right not to shrink from the task of framing these unpleasing but indispensable parts of a Code.[10]

Importance of Definitions Given in the Indian Penal Code 1860

There is no doubt that when the Code itself provides a dictionary for the words used, we must look into that dictionary first for an interpretation of the words used in the statute. We are not concerned with any presumed intention of the legislature; our task is to get at the intention as expressed in the statute. It is true that an artificial definition may include a meaning different from or in excess of the ordinary acceptation of the word which is the subject of definition; but there must then be compelling words to show that such a meaning different from or in excess of the ordinary meaning is intended. Where, within the framework of the ordinary acceptation of the word, every single requirement of the definition clause is fulfilled, it would be wrong to take the definition as destroying the essential meaning of the word defined.[11]

It is true that generally definitions in statutes or enactments are provided in order to give some artificial meaning to words or phrases used therein, but it does not follow, nor is there any such rule of law, that once a phrase or word is defined in a statute or enactment that definition is necessarily artificial and something different to its natural or grammatical meaning.[12]65

2 Prabhoo v Emperor AIR 1941 All 402, (1941) All LJ 619, 43 Cr LJ 177, (1941) ILR All 843 .

3 Rishi Kesh Singh v State AIR 1970 All 51, (1970) Cr LJ 132, (1969) All LJ 657 .

4 Khuraijam Samoi Singh v State of Manipur (1997) Cr LJ 1461 (Gau) ; Abdul Latif v State of Assam (1981) Cr LJ 1205 (Gau) ;

Patras Mardi v State of Assam (1982) Cr LJ 7 (NOC) (Gau) ; Shibu v State of Kerala, 2013 (4) KLT 323 (Ker), 2013 (4) KLJ 300 .

5 Dharm Singh Nath v State of Assam 1978 Cr LJ 10 (Gau) (NOC) .

6 Sandhya Ram Bardhan v State (1977) Assam LR 36, p 39 .

7 Subodh Tewari v State of Assam (1987) 1 Crimes 791, 1988 Cr LJ 223 (Gau) .

8 Shibu v State of Kerala 2013 (4) KLT 323, 2013 (4) KLJ 300 (Ker) .

9 Prefatory Address, p 18.

10 Prefatory Address, pp 11, 15.

11 Hari Prasad Shivshanker Shukla v AD Divelkar AIR 1957 SC 121, p 126-27 .

12 N Baksi v Accountant-General, Bihar AIR 1957 Pat 515, p 524 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 7.

Sense of expression once explained.--

Every expression which is explained in any part of this Code, is used in every part of this Code in conformity with the explanation.

Comments

1. Scope

The express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another.[13] The generality of this maxim renders caution necessary in its application. It is not enough that the express and the tacit are merely incongruous. It must be clear that they cannot reasonably be intended to co-exist.[14] The rule cannot be applied unless the statute by its language shows that all things different in genus and description from those which are enumerated are intended to be excluded.[15]

2. Meaning of Expressions Same throughout

To say that every expression 'shall have a particular meaning everywhere,' is to say that it shall have no other meaning anywhere. The point, therefore, is to ascertain the meaning of that explanation, and if the words, taken grammatically, have a definite, certain and unequivocal meaning, if they constitute a perfectly complete expression susceptible grammatically of that one unequivocal meaning and of that only, then, however absurd and pernicious the consequences, that meaning is to be followed.

It is an ordinary canon of construction that a word which occurs more than once in the same Act must be given the same meaning throughout the Act, unless some definition in the Act or the context shows that the legislature used the word in different senses.[16]

Words Conveying Several Meanings

If, however, the expression does not include the complete thought of the legislature or if the words are equally susceptible of several meanings we are to seek in other parts of the same statute, or, in other statutes, certainly in those in pari materia with this, the one of the several possible meanings which ought to be put upon the words.[17]

Qualifying Clause

The qualifying clause, 'unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context', not appended to the definitions given in the IPC, must always be understood to exist in the context of definitions given in the IPC .[18]66

13 Blackburn v Flavelle (1881) 6 AC 628, p 634, 50 LJPC 58 .

14 Lowe v Dorling & Son (1906) 2 KB 772, 75 LKJB 1019, per Farwell LJ.

15 Shidrao Narayanrao v Municipality of Athni AIR 1943 Bom 21, p 23 .

16 Emperor v Mukunda 8 Cr LJ 18, 19 ; Rameshwar Prasad v Emperor AIR 1931 Nag 177 .

17 Re Proceedings of 22 December(1866) 3 MHCR App 11; Fateh Chand v Emperor AIR 1917 Cal 123, p 136 .

18 State of Maharashtra v Syndicate Transport Co AIR 1964 Bom 195, p 197, 66 Bom LR 197, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 276, (1964) Mah LJ 308 ; Kartic Chandra v Harsha Mukhi Dasi AIR 1943 Cal 345, 77 Cal LJ 252 (FB) ; Darbari Lal v Dham Wati AIR 1957 All 541, (1957) All LJ 559 (FB) ; Edmund N Sohuster v Asst Collector of Customs AIR 1967 Punj 189, (1967) Cr LJ 58 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 8.

Gender.--

The pronoun "he" and its derivatives are used of any person, whether male or female.

Comments

1. Scope

Under s 13 of the General Clauses Act 1897, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, words importing the masculine gender include females, even s 4 of Lord Broughams Act 1850 was in similar terms.

Under this section the pronoun 'he' and its derivatives have been used for males as well as females. But the section be held to declare that the pronoun 'he' is used everywhere in the Code even to denote a female, is only partially true, for there are sections in which the appropriate pronoun has been and could not but be used, e.g., ss 354, 375, 493 - 94 and 498 . The Madhya Pradesh High Court has, however, held that, in s 354, the pronoun 'he' used in the expression 'that he will thereby outrage her modesty' must be taken under s 8 as importing 'a male or a female'.[19] In view of provisions of s 2(4) of the CrPC, read with s 8 of the IPC and s 13(1) of the General Clauses Act 1897, the pronoun 'his' as used in cl (d) of s 125(1), CrPC, includes both a male and a female. In other words, the parents will be entitled to claim maintenance against their daughters provided, however, the other conditions as mentioned in the section are fulfilled.[20]

19 Girdhar Gopal v State AIR 1953 MB 147 .

20 Vijaya Manohar Arbat v Kashirao Rajaram Sewai & Ors (1987) BLJ 527, (1987) BLJR 32, (1987) 2 SCC 278 ; M Areefa Beevi v Dr KM Sahib (1983) Cr LJ 412 (Ker) .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 9.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 9.

Number.--

Unless the contrary appears from the context, words importing the singular number include the plural number, and words importing the plural number include the singular number.

Comments

1. Scope

The section conveys the sense expressed in s 2 of the English Interpretation Act 1889,[21] and s 13 of the General Clauses Act (10 of 1897). All that it means is that a word need not be construed as 'singular' under 'all' circumstances, and that it merely indicates the intention of the legislature that the word may be interpreted in the plural wherever the circumstances require that it should be so construed.[22]The word 'include' is important. It is not correct to say that for all words in the singular appearing in any Central Act, the plural shall be substituted. A word in the singular may be interpreted in the singular number as well as in the plural number and vice versa.[23]

21 52 & 53 Vict, C 63, SI; Emperor v Tatia Mahadeo 17 IC 794 (Bom) .

22 Shambatta v Narayana AIR 1951 Mad 917, p 920 .

23 Re *Phool Din*AIR 1952 All 491 ; Budhai Sheik v Emperor 33 ILR Cal 292, p 294 ; Abdul Karim v Nangoo AIR 1942 Oudh 407 ; Moti Lal v State AIR 1959 Pat 54 ; Nathu v State AIR 1958 All 460, p 470 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 10.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 10.

"Man" "Woman".--

The word "man" denotes a male human being of any age; the word "woman" denotes a female human being of any age.

Comments

1. 'Of any Age'

Under this section the word 'man' or 'woman' denotes a male or a female of any age. A girl of the age of six years is a woman within the meaning of s 354 .[24] The67 expression 'women' is used in s 354 in conformity with this explanation. A female child of seven-and-a-half months was held to be a 'woman' within the meaning of this section and so may be the victim of an assault with the intention of outraging her modesty as described under s 354 of IPC .[25]

24 Emperor v Tatia Mahadev 13 Cr LJ 858, p 859 .

25 State of Punjab v Major Singh (1966) 1 SCWR 945, (1966) Cur LJ 730, (1966) All LJ 916, (1966) SCD 940, (1966) All Cr R 389, (1966) All WR 668 (HC), 68 Punj LR 794, (1967) Cr LJ 1, (1967) 1 SCA 468, [1966] Supp SCR 286, (1967) 2 SCJ 726, (1967) Mad LJ 868 (Cr), AIR 1967 SC 63 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 11.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 11.

"Person".--

The word "person" includes any Company or Association or body of persons, whether incorporated or not.

Comments

1. Scope

The wording of this section is the same as that of s 3(42) of the General Clauses Act 1897. The definition of the word 'person' in this section is not exhaustive and must be taken to include artificial or juridical persons as well.

Company, firm and other juristic persons come within the definition 'person' given in s 11 of the IPC and, for the purpose of s 415 of the Code.[26]Section 11 of IPC defines the word 'person' to include any company or association or body of persons whether incorporated or not, filing of a complaint by an aggrieved company through its authorized representative is in accordance with law and the same is maintainable.[27] An idol is a juridical person and, therefore, 'person' as defined in s 11 .[28] 'Person' in s 11, IPC includes a company, association or body of persons.[29]

Person in s 11, IPC does not include State.[30]

The word 'person' includes a municipality which is a body of persons incorporated,[31] and so is a corporation,[32] a firm[33] and a club.[34] The Madhya Pradesh High Court has, however, held that a partnership firm is not included in the definition of 'person' and, therefore, a partnership firm cannot be held guilty of an offence68 under the Code though its partners can be held criminally liable for the acts of the other partner and vice versa.[35] A contrary view has been expressed in SK Agarwalla v ESI Corporation ,[36] and it has been held that the word 'person' includes any company or association or body of persons whether incorporated or not. Any artificial or juridical person is, however not competent to execute a surety bond under the provisions of the CrPC .[37] A proprietary concern is not a legal entity or juridical person. The properties of a firm are not included in the definition of 'person' as given in s 11 of the Code.[38] The definition of the word 'person' is sufficiently wide to include the Government as representative of the whole community, so that possession of wood by a forest inspector, who is a servant of the Government, is possession of the Government itself.[39]

A Hindu Undivided Family (HUF) is a legal entity and can be punished for offence under s 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, but being an artificial person cannot be sentenced to imprisonment.[40]

2. 'Includes'

'Including' is a term employed generally where the scope of the class indicated by the words preceding it is wider than that of the class specified by the terms which follow.[41]

3. Qualifying Clause

The qualifying clause 'unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context' must be appended to the definitions in the Code. If this is not done, reading s 11 and s 2 together, a company or a corporate body would be liable to indictment for all kinds of offences. Hence, a body corporate or a company cannot be indicted for offences which can only be committed by a human individual, such as murder, treason, bigamy, rape, perjury, etc., or offences which must be punished with imprisonment.[42]

A municipal council, being a corporate body, can be prosecuted for offences which are only punishable with fine, for, imprisonment of a municipal council is out of the question.[43]

Child in Womb

The word 'person' has not been defined by the Code in such a way as to involve a separate existence of the living creature spoken of as 'a person'. As there is no such technical definition, the court prefers to adopt the ordinary meaning of the term 'persons' as including a 'child' whether born or unborn. Even if the child is unborn69 and within the womb of the mother, it is capable of being spoken of as a 'person' if its body is developed sufficiently to make it possible to call it a 'child'.[44]

State not Person to Avail Revisional Power of High Court

Under s 11 of the Code, 'person' includes any company or association or body of persons, whether incorporated or not. The word 'person' would, therefore, include not only natural persons but juridical persons as well in whatever form designated and whether incorporated or not. By implication, the State stands excluded from the purview of the word 'person' for the purpose of limiting its right to avail the revisional power of the High Court under s 397(1) of CrPC for the reason that the State, being the prosecutor of the offender, is enjoined to conduct prosecution on behalf of the society and to take such remedial steps as it deems proper.[45]

26 Regi Michael v M/s Vertex Securities Ltd & Anor (1999) Cr LJ 3787 (Ker) .

27 CM Ibrahim v Tata Sons Ltd 2009 Cr LJ 228, p 230, 231 (Kant) .

28 Re Vadlivelu v Arusthiyar AIR 1944 Mad 77 ; Ramalinga Chetti v Sivachidambara Chetti AIR 1919 Mad 809 .

29 Standard Chartered Bank v Directorate of Enforcement 2005 Cr LJ 4917 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 2622, (2005) 4 SCC 530 ; Krishnan v Krishnaveni AIR 1997 SC 987, 1997 Cr LJ 1519, (1997) 4 SCC 241 .

30 Krishnan v Krishnaveni AIR 1997 SC 987, 1997 Cr LJ 1519, (1997) 4 SCC 241 .

31 Municipal Committee of Lahore v Ratton Chand AIR 1923 Lah 31 ((1)) ; Pallonjee Edulijee & Sons v Lonavala City Municipality (1937) ILR Bom 782, AIR 1937 Bom 417 ; Prabhudas Mulji Doshi v Governor General of India in Council (1951) ILR 1 Cal 443 ; State of Maharashtra v Syndicate Transport Co Pvt Ltd AIR 1964 Bom 195, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 276, (1964) Mah LJ 308 .

32 Nagpur Corpn v NEL & P Co Ltd AIR 1958 Bom 498 ; Shri Gurdwara Sahib v Harnam Singh AIR 1960 Punj 73 ; Mani Bhai Patel v State AIR 1952 Cal 761 ; Girdharilal v Lalchand AIR 1970 Raj 145, (1970) Cr LJ 987 .

33 Punjab National Bank v Punjab Property Development Co AIR 1958 Punj 57 ; CIT, Madras v Thilai AIR 1925 Mad 1043 ; Kadar Bux v Bukt Behari AIR 1932 Cal 768 ; Senaji Kapur Chand v Pannaji Devichand AIR 1930 PC 300 ; Re *Swaranath Bhatia*AIR 1948 Mad 427 (Defence of India Rules).

34 Emperor v AG Cooke AIR 1914 LB 23 .

35 Chandra Prakash Bhargava v GT Industries (1980) Cr LR (MP HC Notes) 91, pp 92-93.

36 SK Agarwalla v ESI Corporation (1985) 1 CHN 113, (1985) 89 CWN 646 .

37 Edmund N Schuster v Asst Collector of Customs, New Delhi (1967) Cr LJ 586, AIR 1967 Punj 189 .

38 Satish Jayantilal Shah v Pankaj Mashruwala & Anor (1996) Cr LJ 3099 (Guj) .

39 R v Hanmanta 1 ILR Bom 610 .

40 Arpit Jhanwar v Kamalesh Jain 2012 (117) AIC 566, 2013 ACD 366 (Mad .).

41 Dayabhai Poonambhai Patel v Regional Transport Authority AIR 1951 MB 121, p 128 .

42 State of Maharashtra v M/s Syndicate Transport Co Ltd AIR 1964 Bom 195, (1964) Mah LJ 308, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 276 .

43 Girdhari Lal v Lalchand (1980) Cr LJ 897, p 991, AIR 1970 Raj 145 .

44 State of Uttar Pradesh v Jagdish AIR 1966 All 244, (1965) All LJ 977, (1965) All WR 711 (HC), (1965) All Cr R 486, (1966) Cr LJ 503 .

45 Krishnan & Anor v Krishnaveni & Anor AIR 1997 SC 987, (1997) Cr LJ 1519 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 12.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 12.

"Public".--

The word "public" includes any class of the public or any community.

Comments

1. Scope

In popular parlance the word 'public' means the general body of mankind or of a nation, state or community. It is also sometimes used in a more restricted sense of denoting only a particular body or aggregation of people such as an author's public.[46]

The definition in this section is inclusive and does not define the word 'public'. It only says that a class of public or community is included within the term 'public'. A class or community residing in a particular locality may come within the term 'public'.[47] The words 'the public' mean human beings in general and do not include animals.[48]

46 Webster's Dictionary.

47 Harnandan Lal v Rampalak Mahato AIR 1939 Pat 460, p 461 .

48 Sita Ram v Emperor 7 Cr LJ 278, p 279, 3 PRC 1908 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 13.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 13.

"Queen".--

[Repealed by the AO 1950.]

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[49][S. 14.

"Servant of Government".--

The words 'servant of Government' denote any officer or servant continued, appointed or employed in India by or under the authority of Government.]

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

The present section has been substituted for the old one by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1950.70

2. 'Servant of Government'

The term 'Government' is defined in s 17 as denoting the Central Government or the Government of a State. The expression 'servant of Government' will, therefore, denote any officer or servant continued, appointed or employed in India by or under the authority of the Central or any State Government.

49 Subs by the AO 1950, for the original section.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 15.

"British India".--

[Repealed by the AO 1937.]

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 16.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 16.

"Government of India".--

[Repealed by the AO 1937.]

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 17.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[50][S. 17.

"Government".--

The word 'Government' denotes the Central Government or the 'Government' of a [51][* * *] State.]

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

The original section ran as follows:

> The words 'government' denotes the person or persons authorised by law to administer executive government in any part of British India.

The words 'persons...British India' were omitted and replaced by the words 'Central Government or the Government of a Part A State' by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1950 and the words 'Part A' were omitted by s 3 of Act 3 of 1951.

2. 'Government'

Section 3(23) of the General Clauses Act 1897 (General Clauses Act), also lays down that 'Government' or 'the Government' shall include both the Central Government and any State Government. It has been held that the expression 'Government' in s 3(23) of the General Clauses Act did not include the British Government.[52] It does not include a District Board or any local authority.[53]

Under the old section, a collector acting in the management of a khas mehal, the property of the Government, was held to be as much 'the Government', within the meaning of this section, as when he was exercising any other of the duties of his official position.[54]

It may be noted that under sub-s (4) of s 263A of the IPC, which was inserted by s 2 of the Indian Criminal Law (Amendment) Act 1895, as a result of the Vienna Convention, notwithstanding anything in s 17 the word 'Government' in ss 255 - 263A, includes any persons or persons authorised by law to administer executive government in any part of India and also in any part of Her Majesty's Dominion or in any foreign country.71

'Government', however, as defined in s 17 of the IPC, denotes more than the governor and his advisors; it denotes the person or persons authorised by law to administer executive government in any part of British India.[55]

50 Substitute by the AO 1950, for the original section.

51 The words and letter 'Part A', omitted by Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule.

52 Jeramdas Vishendas v Emperor AIR 1934 Sind 96 .

53 Mahalingam v Reghunatha AIR 1940 Mad 916 .

54 Bajoo Singh v Queen-Empress 26 ILR Cal 158 .

55 Bhagwati Charan Shukla v Provincial Govt , *CP and Berar*AIR 1947 Nag 1, (1947) Cr LJ Nag 994 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[56][S. 18.

"India".--

"India" means the territory of India excluding the State of Jammu and Kashmir.]

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

Before 1937 this section defined the word 'presidency' as denoting the territories subject to the government of a presidency. It was repealed by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1937.

The section was again inserted by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1950, as: 'The word 'State' denotes a Part A State or a Part C State, and the word 'State' denotes all the territories for the time being comprised within Part A States and Part C States'. The present section was substituted for it by s 3 of Act 3 of 1951 and the Schedule.

2. Territory of India

See s 1, ante.

3. Section not Unconstitutional

The validity of this section came to be examined before a Division Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in KRK Vara Prasad v Union of India ,[57] and it was held that the power of Parliament to extend the Code to all states except State of Jammu & Kashmir is beyond question and the definition given in the section is not unconstitutional.

56 Substituted by the Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule, for the former section which was inserted by the AO 1950. The original s 18 was repealed by the AO 1937.

57 KRK Vara Prasad v Union of India (1980) 1 ALT 381 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 19.

"Judge".--

The word "Judge" denotes not only every person who is officially designated as a Judge, but also every person,-- who is empowered by law to give, in any legal proceeding, civil or criminal, a definitive judgment, or a judgment which, if not appealed against, would be definitive, or a judgment which, if confirmed by some other authority, would be definitive, or who is one of a body of persons, which body of persons is empowered by law to give such a judgment.72

Illustrations

(a) A Collector exercising jurisdiction in a suit under Act 10 of 1859, is a Judge.
(b) A Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in respect of a charge on which he has power to sentence to fine or imprisonment, with or without appeal, is a Judge.
(c) A member of a panchayat which has power, under Regulation VII, 1816, of the Madras Code, to try and determine suits, is a Judge.
(d) A Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in respect of a charge on which he has power only to commit for trial to another court, is not a Judge.

Comments

1. Scope

Under this section, the word 'Judge' denotes not only every person who is officially designated as a judge, but also every person who is empowered by law to give, in any legal proceedings, civil or criminal, a definitive judgment, or a judgment which, if not appealed against, would be definitive, or a judgment which, if confirmed by some other authority, would be definitive. The illustrations to the section would, however, show that a person other than the one who is officially designated as a judge, and who is empowered to give a definitive judgment, is a judge only when he is exercising jurisdiction in a suit or in a proceeding. So far as that suit or proceeding, revenue, civil or criminal is concerned, he is a judge, but he is not a judge when he has not the seisin of the case in which he can give a definitive judgment. This is obvious from the last words of the section under which a body of persons may come under the definition of 'Judge' when it is empowered by law to give a judgment.[58]

It may be stated broadly that what distinguishes a court from a quasi-judicial tribunal is that it is charged with a duty to decide disputes in a judicial manner and declare the rights of parties in a definitive judgment. To decide in a judicial manner involves that the parties are entitled as a matter of right to be heard in support of their claim and to adduce evidence in proof of it. When a question therefore arises as to whether an authority created by an Act is a court as distinguished from a quasi-judicial tribunal, what has to be decided is whether having regard to the provisions of the Code it possesses all the attributes of a court.[59]73

2. Persons who are Judge

Judicial officers of district courts presiding over civil and criminal courts and judges of the High Courts and Supreme Court who give any definitive judgments in legal proceedings are obviously covered under the definition of 'Judge', however there are other authorities and officers who are found to be covered within this definition of 'Judge', as mentioned below:

(a) Magistrate

A member of a Bench of Magistrates being, for instance, individually incompetent, to deliver a definitive judgment, is, nevertheless, a judge, because the Bench of which he is a member, is so competent. But a magistrate is not a person officially designated as a judge, and he would be a judge within the section read with s 4(2), CrPC, only when he is exercising jurisdiction in a suit or other proceeding. He is not a judge when he has not the seisin of a case in which he can give a definitive judgment,[60] so that an affidavit sworn before him is not a legal affidavit.[61]

(b) Member of Panchayat Adalat/Village Panchayat

Every member of a panchayat adalat in Uttar Pradesh is a judge.[62] The same is true of a member of the village panchayat in Madhya Pradesh.[63]

(c) Panch or Sarpanch

A panch or sarpanch of a panchayat is a judge.[64] But only when he sits for deciding cases and not throughout the tenure of his office.[65]

(d) Village Police Patel

A village police patel deciding a case under s 14 of the Bombay Village Police Act 1867 is a judge.[66]

(e) Election Officer

An election officer empowered to remove names from the electoral rolls is a judge.[67]

(f) President of Union Board

President of a union board when he accepts or rejects a nomination paper gives a definitive judgment and is, therefore, a judge.[68]

(g) Manager under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act 1876

A manager under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act of 1876 is a judge while exercising the functions referred to in Pt 4 of the Act relating to the settlement of debts.[69]74

(h) Arbitrators

Unlike the Indian Arbitration Act 1940, now, under the Arbitration and Conciliation Act 1996, it is not required that the award of the arbitrator should be made rule of the court. The arbitral award is final and binding on the parties and persons claiming through them as per s 35 of the 1996 Act. The arbitral award, after the time for making an application for setting it aside under s 34 of the 1996 Act has expired, or such application having been refused, is enforceable under s 36 of the 1996 Act in the same manner as if it were a decree of the court. Thus now, there is no requirement under the 1996 Act for making an award, the rule of the court unlike the earlier Arbitration Act 1940. Thus the arbitral award, now, is a definitive judgment and the arbitrator unlike in the old Act, now seems to be covered under the definitions of a judge.

3. Persons who are not Judge

The following officers/authorities under different Acts are held not covered within the definition of 'Judge' under this section.

(a) Returning Officer

The decision of a returning officer scrutinising the nomination papers in connection with the election of the Managing Committee of a cane-growers' Co-operative Society under the Punjab Co-operative Societies Act 1961, cannot be called judgment in a civil proceeding or a judicial decision as commonly understood and he therefore does not act as a 'Judge' within the meaning of the section, when he gives a decision as aforesaid.[70]

The function of returning officer acting under s 36 of the Representation of Peoples Act 1951 is judicial in character, but he is not to act judicially in discharging it. The Returning officer deciding on the validity of a nomination paper is not a court for the purpose of s 195(1)(b) of the CrPC .[71]

(b) Revenue Officer

A revenue officer not empowered to administer oath while recording statements in the mutation proceedings under ss 34 and 36 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, who does not give any definitive judgment on the rights of the parties, is not a judge.[72]

The definition of 'Judge' in this section is for a special purpose and has no bearing on the question whether a particular officer belongs to the revenue department or the judicial department.[73]

(c) Commissioners

A commissioner appointed under the Public Servants (Inquiries) Act 1850 has to form his opinion upon legal evidence; he has been given the power to summon witnesses, administer oath to them and also to compel production of relevant documents. These may be some of the trappings of a judicial tribunal, but they cannot make the proceeding anything more than a mere fact finding inquiry. At the75 close of inquiry, the commissioner has to submit a report to the government regarding his finding on each one of the charges made. This is a mere expression of opinion and it lacks both finality and authoritativeness which are the essential tests of a judicial pronouncement. The opinion of the commissioner is not binding upon the government.[74] Therefore, a commissioner appointed under Public Servants (Inquiries) Act is not a 'Judge' within s 19 of the IPC .

4. 'Definitive Judgment'

'Definitive judgment' simply means a final judgment.[75] Illustration (d) to the section says that 'A magistrate exercising jurisdiction in respect of a charge on which he has power only to commit for trial to another court, is not a judge'. No doubt, such a magistrate is empowered to give a definitive judgment in the other cases in which he is trying; still as he is not empowered to give a definitive judgment in the case in which he is only empowered to commit, he is not a judge for the purpose of that case.[76]

The definitions of the words 'Judge' and 'Court of Justice' in ss 19 - 20 of the IPC indicate that the pronouncement of a definitive judgment is considered the essential sine qua non of a court and unless and until a binding and authoritative judgment can be pronounced by a person or body of persons, it cannot be predicated that he or they constitute a court.[77]

5. 'Legal Proceeding'

In this section the expression 'legal proceeding' means a proceeding regulated or prescribed by law in which a judicial decision may or must be given.[78]

6. Act 10 of 1859--Illustration (A)

Act 10 of 1859 is an Act to amend the law relating to the recovery of rent in the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal. It has been repealed in the Chota Nagpur Division of Bengal (except as to the district of Manbhum and the Tributary Mahals) by the Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act 1879 (Bengal Act 1 of 1879); refer to the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act 1908 (Bengal Act 6 of 1908), and in the rest of Bengal (except as to Calcutta, Orissa and the scheduled districts) by the Bengal Tenancy Act 1885 (8 of 1885). It is now in force in the district of Manbhum, in the Darjeeling district and in part of the Jalpaiguri district in Bengal and such parts of it as are not inconsistent with the provisions of Act 8 of 1885 which have been extended to the Orissa division are in force in that Division.

It has also been repealed in the Province of Agra (except as to certain Scheduled Districts) by the United Provinces Tenancy Act 1901 (2 of 1901), and in the Central Provinces by the Central Provinces Tenancy Act 1920 (1 of 1920).

7. Regulation VII of 1816

It has been repealed by the Madras Civil Courts Act 3 of 1873. Consequential amendment in illust (c) or its repeal is overdue.76

58 Ram Chandra Modak v King Emperor AIR 1926 Pat 214, p 217 .

59 Virender Kumar Satyawadi v State of Punjab AIR 1956 SC 153 .

60 Ram Chandra Modak v Emperor AIR 1926 Pat 214, 5 ILR Pat 110 .

61 Bishan Lal v State AIR 1954 HP 57 .

62 Asharafi Lal v State AIR 1952 All 306, (1951) All LJ 551, (1952) Cr LJ 621 .

63 Kamla Patel v Bhagwan Das 37 Cr LJ 294 .

64 Prabhu Dayal v Milap Chand AIR 1959 Raj 12, p 14 ; Kishan Swarup v Brijendra Singh (1961) 2 ILR All 682, (1961) All LJ 859, (1961) All WR 689 (HC), (1962) 2 Cr LJ 408 .

65 Ranjit Singh v State AIR 1956 All 134, p 135 .

66 Emperor v Shankar Sayaji Dalvi AIR 1938 Bom 439, 40 Cr LJ 116, 40 Bom LR 1106 .

67 Hanumantha Rao v Lakshmayya 1937 Mad WN 74 .

68 SC Abboy Naidu v Kaniappa Chettiar AIR 1929 Mad 175 ; Sarvothamma Rao v Chairman, Municipal Council, Suddapet AIR 1923 Mad 475 .

69 Hamendra Nath Gupta v Emperor AIR 1937 Pat 160, p 162 .

70 Data Ram v Ved Prakash Chopra AIR 1970 Punj 21, (1970) Cr LJ 67 .

71 Virender Kumar Satyawade v State of Punjab AIR 1956 SC 153 .

72 Guman Singh, Tehsildar Ist Grade,Amritsar v Kartar Singh & Anor (1989) 2 96 PLR 279.

73 State of Madras v CS Rajgopala Ayyar AIR 1956 Mad 613, (1956) Cr LJ 1330 .

74 SA Venkataraman v Union of India & Anor AIR 1954 SC 375 .

75 Emperor v Shankar Sayaji Dalvi AIR 1938 Bom 489 .

76 Ramchandra Modak v King Emperor AIR 1926 Pat 214, p 217 .

77 Brajanandan Sinha v Jyoti Narain AIR 1956 SC 66, (1956) Cr LJ 156 .

78 SC Abboy Naidu v Kanniappa Chettiar AIR 1929 Mad 175, p 176 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 20.

"Court of Justice".--

The words "Court of Justice" denote a Judge who is empowered by law to act judicially alone, or a body of Judges which is empowered by law to act judicially as a body, when such Judge or body of Judges is acting judicially.

Illustration

A panchayat acting under [79]Regulation VII, 1816, of the Madras Code, having power to try and determine suits, is a Court of Justice.

Comments

1. 'Court of Justice'

The word 'court' originally meant the King's palace, but subsequently acquired the meaning of (a) a place where justice is administered, and (b) the person or persons who administer it.[80]Coke on Littleton and Stroud defined the word 'court' as the place where justice is judicially administered. According to Stephen:

> In every court, there must be at least three constituent parts the actor, reus and judex; the actor or plaintiff, who complains of an injury done; the reus, or defendant, who is called upon to make satisfaction for it; and the judex, or judicial power, which is to examine the truth of the fact, and to determine the law arising upon that fact, and if any injury appears to have been done, to ascertain, and by its officers to apply, the remedy.

Section 3 of the Evidence Act defines 'Court' as including all judges and magistrates, and all persons, except arbitrators, legally authorised to take evidence. This definition however, has been held to be not exhaustive but framed only for the purpose of the Evidence Act and is not to be extended where such an extension is not warranted.[81] The term 'Court' in s 195 of the CrPC is not restricted to a 'Court of Justice' as defined in the IPC .[82]

The definition of expression 'Court of Justice' is not a definition of the expression 'court' as used in the CrPC . The expression 'court' in ordinary parlance is a generic expression and in the context in which it occurs may mean a 'body or organisation' invested with power, authority or dignity.[83]

Reading this section along with s 19, it is clear that in order to constitute a court in the strict sense of the term, an essential condition is that it should have, apart from having some of the trappings of a judicial tribunal, power to give a decision or a definitive judgment which has finality and authoritativeness, which are the essential tests of a judicial pronouncement. The pronouncement of a definitive judgment is the essential sine qua non of a court and unless and until a binding and authoritative77 judgment can be pronounced by a person or body of persons, it cannot be predicted that he or they constitute a court.[84]

2. The Test of a Judicial Tribunal

The test of a judicial tribunal has been laid down in Cooper v Wilson ,[85] as follows:

'A true judicial decision presupposes an existing dispute between two or more parties, and then involves four requisites:

(1) the presentation (not necessarily orally) of their case by the parties to the disputes;

(2) if the dispute between them is a question of fact, the ascertainment of the fact by means of evidence adduced by the parties on the evidence;
(3) if the dispute between them is a question of law, the submission of legal argument by the parties; and
(4) a decision which disposes of the whole matter by a finding upon the facts in dispute and an application of the law of the land to the facts so found, including where required a ruling upon any disputed questions of law.'

This view has been adopted by the Supreme Court in India.[86]

3. Distinction between Court and a Quasi-judicial Tribunal

It is a familiar feature of modern legislation to set up bodies and tribunals, and entrust to them work of a judicial character, but they are not courts in the accepted sense of that term, though they may possess, as observed by Lord Sankey LC, in Shell Co of Australia v Federal Commr of Taxation ,[87] some of the trappings of a court. The distinction between courts and tribunals exercising quasi-judicial functions is well established, though whether an authority constituted by a particular enactment falls within one category or the other may, on the provisions of that enactment be open to argument.

Though all 'Courts' are tribunals all the 'Tribunals' are not courts. The distinguishing feature between the court and tribunal or special forum is that the court is constituted by a state as a part of the normal hierarchy of courts of civil judicature maintained by the state under its constitution exercising judicial power of the state except those which are excluded by law from their jurisdiction, whereas a tribunal is constituted under a special Act to exercise special jurisdiction in order to decide certain controversy arising under special laws.[88]

It may be stated broadly that what distinguished a court from a quasi-judicial tribunal is that it is charged with a duty to decide disputes in a judicial manner and declare the rights of parties in a definitive judgment. To decide in a judicial manner78 involves that the parties are entitled as a matter of right to be heard in support of their claim and to adduce evidence in proof of it.

And it also imports an obligation on the part of the authority to decide the matter on a consideration of the evidence adduced and in accordance with law. When a question, therefore, arises as to whether an authority created by an Act is a court as distinguished from a quasi-judicial tribunal, what has to be decided is whether, having regard to the provisions of the Act, it possesses all the attributes of a court.[89]

79 Repealed by the Madras Civil Courts Act 1873.

80 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 10, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, p 313, para 701.

81 Brajnandan Sinha v Jyoti Narain AIR 1956 SC 66, p 69, (1956) Cr LJ 156 ; Queen-Empress v Tulja 12 ILR Bom 36, p 43 ; Attorney-General v Moore LR 3 Ex D 276.

82 Re Venkatachala Pillai 10 ILR Mad 154, p 157; Re Nanchand Shivchand 37 ILR Bom 365; Bajaji Appaji Kote v Emperor AIR 1946 Bom 7, p 11 ; Raghoobuns Sahay v Kokil Singh 17 ILR Cal 872, p 875 ; Nand Lal Ganguli v Khetra Mohan Ghosh AIR 1918 Cal 932, p 933, but see per contra Emperor v Hayat Fateh Din AIR 1948 Lah 184, p 188 .

83 Ramrao v Narayan AIR 1969 SC 724 .

84 Brajnandan Sinha v Jyoti Narain AIR 1956 SC 66, p 70 ; SA Venkataraman v Union of India AIR 1954 SC 375 ; Maqbool Hussain v State of Bombay AIR 1953 SC 325 ; Bharat Bank Ltd v Employees of Bharat Bank Ltd AIR 1950 SC 188 ; Cooper v Wilson (1937) 2 KB 309 ; Shell Co of Australia v Federal Commr of Taxation (1931) AC 275 ; Huddart Parkar & Co v Moorehead (1909) 8 CLR 330 ; Rex v Electricity Commrs (1924) 1 KB 171 ; Krishna Mishra v State of Uttar Pradesh 1976 All Cr C 209 .

85 Cooper v Wilson (1937) 2 KB 309, p 340 .

86 Bharat Bank Ltd v Employees of Bharat Bank Ltd AIR 1950 SC 188 ; Maqbool Hussain v State of Bombay AIR 1953 SC 325 .

87 Shell Co of Australia v Federal Commr of Taxation (1931) AC 275, p 286 .

88 Union of India v M/s Mysore Paper Mills Ltd AIR 2004 Kant 1 (FB) .

89 Virinder Kumar Satyawadi v State of Punjab AIR 1956 SC 153, p 157 ; Shell Co of Australia v Federal Commr of Taxation (1931) AC 275 ; R v London County Council (1931) 2 KB 215, Cooper v Wilson (1937) 2 KB 309 ; Huddart Parkar& Co v Moorehand (1909) 8 CLR 330 ; Rola C v Commonwealth (1944) 69 CLR 185 ; Bharat Bank Ltd v Employees of Bharat Bank Ltd AIR 1950 SC 188 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 21.

"Public Servant".--

The words "public servant" denote a person falling under any of the description hereinafter following; namely:--

90[* * *]

Second--	Every Commissioned Officer in the Military, 91[Naval or Air] Forces 92[of India];
93[Third--	Every Judge including any person empowered by law to discharge, whether by himself or as a member of any body of persons, any adjudicatory functions;]
Fourth--	Every officer of a Court of Justice 94[(including a liquidator, receiver or commissioner)] whose duty it is, as such officer, to investigate or report on any matter of law or fact, or to make, authenticate, or keep any document, or to take charge or dispose of any property, or to execute any judicial process, or to administer any oath, or to interpret, or to preserve order in the Court, and every person specially authorized by a Court of Justice to perform any of such duties;
Fifth--	Every juryman, assessor, or member of a panchayat assisting a Court of Justice or public servant;
Sixth--	Every arbitrator or other person to whom any cause or matter has been referred for decision or report by any Court of Justice, or by any other competent public authority;
Seventh--	Every person who holds any office by virtue of which he is empowered to place or keep any person in confinement;
Eighth--	Every officer of 95[the Government] whose duty it is, as such officer, to prevent offences, to give information of offences, to bring offenders to justice, or to protect the public health, safety or convenience;

Ninth--	Every officer whose duty it is, as such officer, to take, receive, keep or expend any property on behalf of [1][the Government], or to make any survey, assessment or contract on behalf of [2][the Government], or to execute any revenue process, or to investigate, or to report, on any matter affecting the pecuniary interests of [3][the Government], or to make, authenticate or keep any document relating to the pecuniary interests of [4][the Government], or to prevent the infraction of any law for the protection of the pecuniary interest of [5][the Government] [6][* * *];
Tenth--	Every officer whose duty it is, as such officer, to take, receive, keep or expend any property, to make any survey or assessment or to levy any rate or tax for any secular common purpose of any village, town or district, or to make, authenticate or keep any document for the ascertaining of the rights of the people of any village, town or district;
[7][Eleventh--	Every person who holds any office in virtue of which he is empowered to prepare, publish, maintain or revise an electoral roll or to conduct an election or part of an election;]
[8][Twelfth--	Every person--

(a) in the service or pay of the Government or remunerated by fees or commission for the performance of any public duty by the Government;

(b) in the service or pay of a local authority, a corporation established by or under a Central, Provincial or State Act or a Government Company as defined in section 617 of the Companies Act, 1956 (1 of 1956).]

Illustration

A Municipal Commissioner is a public servant.

Explanation 1.--Persons falling under any of the above descriptions are public servants, whether appointed by the Government or not.

Explanation 2.--Wherever the words "public servant" occur, they shall be understood of every person who is in actual possession of the situation of a public servant, whatever legal defect there may be in his right to hold that situation.80

[9][Explanation 3--The word 'election' denotes an election for the purpose of selecting members of any legislative, municipal or other public authority, of whatever character, the method of selection to which is by, or under, any law prescribed as by election.]

[10][* * *]

STATE AMENDMENT

Rajasthan--In section 21 of the Indian Penal Code 1860 (45 of 1860), in its application to the State of Rajasthan, after clause twelfth the following new clause shall be added, namely--

"Thirteenth--Every person employed or engaged by any public body in the conduct and supervision of any examination recognised or approved under any law.

Explanation--The expression "Public Body" includes--

(a) a University, Board of Education or other body, either established by or under a Central or State Act or under the provisions of the Constitution of India or constituted by the Government; and
(b) "a local authority."[11]

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

The first clause, which has now been omitted by the Adaptation of Laws Order 1950, read as:

'Every covenanted servant of the Queen'.

The Criminal Law Amendment Act 1958, had added a twelfth clause creating an additional class of public servants; it had also added another explanation to define the expression, 'corporation engaged in any trade or industry', used in the new twelfth clause. The government felt that for dealing with the evil of corruption in public services, it was necessary to bring within the scope of the anti-corruption law, the employees of statutory trading corporations and government companies as defined in s 617 of the Companies Act 1956. The original cl 12 was substituted by Act 40 of 1964 and as a consequence thereof, expln 4 was also omitted besides replacing it by the present clause.

The other changes are noted in the footnotes to the section.

2. Scope and Effect of Amendment

The process by which a part of the ninth clause was deleted and it was re-enacted with some modification in the form of sub-cl (a) of the twelfth clause and the original twelfth clause was also deleted and re-enacted in the form of sub-cl (b) of that clause, was a process to which the principle contained in s 8 of the General Clauses Act 1897, would clearly be attracted. Section 8 contemplates that the principle contained therein applies in a case not only where the whole enactment has been repealed and re-enacted with or without modification, but also where any provision of the former enactment is re-enacted. In the Anti-Corruption Laws (Amendment) Act 1964 there is no indication of an intention contrary to the principle contained in s 8 of the General Clauses Act. On the contrary, the intention positively appears to be that the legislature wanted the amendments to several enactments to be carried out with a view to make adequate provisions relating to prevention of corruption. It could not be the intention of the Legislature while enacting the Anti-Corruption Laws (Amendment) Act that when s 21 of the IPC was being amended by providing that every person who was in the service or pay of the Government was to be a public servant, that amendment was not to ensure for working out the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act.[12]82

The crucial date for the purpose of attracting the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1947[13] and West Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Act 1949 is whether the offence has been committed by a public servant within the definition of s 21 of the IPC, is the date of the commission of the offence when the person and object arraigned must be a public servant.[14] Having regard to the Preamble of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1947[15] and the IPC, there can be no doubt that the Act was a statute supplement to the IPC . Therefore, the definition of 'Public Servant' borrowed from s 21 of the Code must be read into s 2 of the Act, not only at the time when it was borrowed, i.e. 1947, but even at the material date when the offence is committed.[16] Members of Parliament and State Legislature are public servants liable to be prosecuted for offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act but they cannot be prosecuted for offences under ss 7, 10 - 11 and 13 thereof because of want of an authority competent to grant sanction thereto. The Supreme Court entertained the hope that Parliament will address itself to the task of removing this lacuna with due expedition.[17]

3. Analogous Law

The term 'public servant' bears some analogy to the term 'servant of government' in s 14 of the IPC which states: 'The words 'servant of government' denote any officer or servant continued, appointed or employed in India by or under the authority of government'.

4. 'Public Servant'

(a) Relevance of Definition

The expression 'public servant' denotes only a natural person and not a corporate body.[18] The definition of 'public servant' is very important, for the entire ch IX[19] of the Code formerly dealt with offences by or relating to public servants, and ch X[20] deals with contempts of the lawful authority of public servants. The definition is also important for the purposes of the CrPC as cl (a) of the first proviso to s 200 of the CrPC enacts that when a written complaint is made by a court or a public servant acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties, the complainant is not required to be examined, as in the case of a conciliation officer who is a statutory public servant by virtue of s 11(6) of the Industrial Disputes Act 1947, and who files a complaint, of an offence under the said Act, in a competent court.[21]Again, if a person who is a public servant is to be prosecuted for an offence committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, prior sanction as required by the terms of s 197 of the CrPC is essential before a court can take cognizance of the offence. Again, if a person who is a public servant is to be prosecuted for an offence committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the83 discharge of his official duty, prior sanction as required by the terms of s 197 of the CrPC is essential before a court can take cognizance of the offence.[22]

(b) This Section Describes but Does Not Define Guilty Servants

The section does not actually define public servants, but describes them only by enumeration, which itself is merely illustrative and by no means exhaustive. But the framework of the section would indicate that though the various items are illustrative and not exhaustive, the wordings of the different heads, especially the ninth, tenth and twelfth are so elaborate and comprehensive that it virtually amounts to an exhaustive definition.[23]

The too comprehensive nature of the description of 'public servant' was objected to at the time of the draft, but the Indian Law Commissioners defined it, adding:

> Supposing the several descriptions he (Mr Norton) specifies to be as comprehensive as he takes them to be, yet it does not appear to us that they are faulty in this respect, with reference to the provisions in the two chapters relating to public servants in the application of which recourse will be had to them. We think they will be found sufficiently distinct and definite for the purpose they are to serve. We have no apprehension that there will be any difficulty in determining who are positively excluded as not falling under any of the descriptions in clause 14 (Penal Code.)[24]

(c) Public Servant Denotes Natural Person

The expression 'public servant' denotes only a natural person. A municipal corporation cannot be a public servant.[25]

(d) Public Servant to be a Servant

A public servant must, generally speaking, be a servant. The word 'servant' has come for judicial interpretation, and it has been held to signify any person duly appointed and invested with authority to administer any part of the executive power of the government or to execute any other public duty imposed by law, whether it is judicial, executive or ministerial.

A mukhia was held not to be a government servant as he is not a servant at all,[26] but in a case under the Representation of the People Act 1951, the Supreme Court has held that a headman or mukhia is a government servant, within the meaning of s 123(8) of that Act.[27] The sarpanch of a Gram Panchayat also falls within the definition of public servant.[28]

In Goolbai Motabhai v Pestonji Cowasji ,[29] Wadia J, of the Bombay High Court observed:

> A servant is a person who voluntarily agrees, whether for wages or not, to subject himself at all times during the period of his service to the lawful orders and directions84 of another in respect of the work to be done by him. It is that other person who is entitled in law to give orders and to have them obeyed. The relationship, therefore, exists only between persons of whom the one has the control of the work done by the other, and it does not depend merely on the mode of payment for service or for the time for which services are engaged, or the nature of those services or on the power of dismissal, though these are certainly matters which the court may take into consideration in assessing the relationship. The test, therefore, is the right of control which a person has in the manner in which the other does the work.

A mukhia cannot be said to be under the control either of the State Government or the Central Government or any of the local authority or a nyaya panchayat and does not conform to the description of a servant as given by Justice Wadia. The mere fact that a mukhia like the owner or occupier or the agent, as the case may be, has to convey some information, would not make him a government servant.[30] The view expressed by the Supreme Court in the above cases is not of general applicability and is confined to cases governed by the Representation of the People Act 1951.

(e) Whether Payment of Salary Determines Status

For a person to be a public servant it is not necessary that he should receive any salary or emoluments for his work. 'Any person, whether receiving pay or not, who chooses to take upon himself duties and responsibilities belonging to the position of a public servant and performs these duties, accepts those responsibilities, and is recognised as filling the position of public servant, must be regarded as one'.[31] Thus, a peon who was remunerated by a fee on processes served by him in a collector's court,[32] and a candidate entertained without any pay in the tahsil office for learning work in the hope and expectation of eventually being taken on the staff,[33] would both be public servants. But in order to be a public servant, the person should not only be performing the duties of a public servant, but should also be recognised as filling that position. If this factor is missing, the mere fact that at the request of one of the clerks in the deputy commissioner's office an unpaid candidate is assisting him in some work connected with the duties of an arms clerk, is not sufficient to make him a public servant.[34]

(f) Must be in Charge of Public Duty though Not Appointed by the Government

It is essential that a public servant must be in charge of some public duty.[35] Public duty is nowhere defined in the IPC, and no general definition of the word would be complete. It may, however, be said that all persons having to discharge, delegated functions of the administration of a State are public servants.[36] The duty imposed upon such a public servant may be exalted or menial, but so long as he is discharging a public duty, he is a public servant. It matters little that there is some flaw in his appointment. As long as he has, in fact, 'taken the duties and responsibilities belonging to the position of a public servant, performs those duties, accepts the85 responsibilities, and is recognised as filling the position of a public servant', he would be a public servant.[37]

Another important point to be noted is that a public servant need not necessarily be appointed by the government. This is obvious from expln 1 and from the illustration to the twelfth clause, in which a municipal commissioner is declared to be a public servant, though he is elected by the suffrage of his constituency subject only to the approval of or confirmation by the government. This illustration however, no longer appears to be wholly valid in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Ramesh Balkrishna Kulkarni v State of Maharashtra .[38]

An extra-departmental branch postmaster may be a 'public servant' within the meaning of this section.[39] A person, who is temporarily carrying on the duties of a particular office, say that of a branch post-master, purely as a nominee of the latter without any authority being given by government by a letter of appointment, cannot be regarded as a public servant within the meaning of this section. He cannot be said to be in actual possession of the situation of the holder of that office merely from the fact that at the material time he was performing all the functions attached to it. As there is absolutely no appointment by government in favour of such a person, no question of any legal defect in his right to hold the situation arises. Explanation 2 has, therefore, no application to such a case.[40]

Similarly, where the son of an extra department agent of a branch post office attended to the duties of his father without himself being appointed or recognised as such by the department it was held that he was not a public servant and did not come within the mischief of expln 2 to the section.[41]

The appellant R was not formally appointed to work in the pass section but while holding the post of khalasi drawing pay from the railway carriage section, his services were actually utilised in the pass section of the works manager. He was, therefore, in actual possession of the situation of a public servant, and in view of expln 2 to s 21 would be 'public servant', notwithstanding the defect in his right to hold that situation.[42]

(g) Consideration for Determination

In order to determine whether a person is a public servant or not, the first thing to be seen is whether he is a servant, If he be found to be servant, then it has to be seenwhether he is staturory public servant or falls within any of the clauses enumerated in this section. On referring to these clauses it will sometimes be found that a give case is covered by more than one clauses which is quite possible, for the clauses are not mutually exclusive and exhaustive, and only a casual reference to them is sufficient to show that a case might conceivably fall within two or more clauses at the same time. But the fact that a man is a public servant within the meaning of more than one clause does not affect his status, if it is once so established.86

5. Statutory Public Servants

Statutory public servants are those who have been declared to be public servants by any statute. The following are the specimens of some such public servants:

(i) Delegates appointed under the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act 1865.
(ii) Protectors and medical inspectors of immigrants under the Indian Emigration Act 1908.
(iii) Registrars under the Indian Registration Act 1908.
(iv) Judges, assessors, officers and surveyors under the Merchant Shipping Act 1880.
(v) Bailiffs and appraisers appointed under the Small Cause Courts Act 1882.
(vi) Persons authorised to hear appeals relating to licences for steam boilers, etc., under the Burma Steam-boilers etc. Act 1882.
(vii) Presidents of a board appointed to investigate charges against pilots under the Burma Pilots' Act 1883.
(viii) Surveyors of Steamships and investigators of explosions thereon under the Inland Steamvessels and Steamship Acts of 1884.
(ix) Registrars under the Births, Deaths and Marriages Registration Act 1886.

(x) Kanungos and *patwaris*under the NW Provinces and Oudh Act 1889.
(xi) Examiners, officers and servants of the University of Allahabad by s 18 of the Allahabad University Act 1887.[43]
(xii) Councillors, etc., of the Bombay (City of) Municipality, under Bombay Act (3 of 1888), s 521 .
(xiii) Prisoners who have been appointed officers of prisons, (convict warders and overseers) under the Prisons Act (9 of 1894), s 23 .[44]
(xiv) Inspectors of mines under the Indian Mines Act (8 of 1901),[45] s 4 .
(xv) Officers and servants employed by the trustees under the Victoria Memorial Act (10 of 1903), s 4 .
(xvi) Census officers, under Act 14 of 1880,[46] s 4 .
(xvii) Coroners of Presidency Towns under Act 4 of 1871, s 5 .
(xviii) Emigration officers, under Act 7 of 1871,[47] s 14 .[48]
(xix) Managers of encumbered estates.[49]
(xx) Factory inspectors, under Act 15 of 1881,[50] s 3 .
(xxi) Forest officers under Act 7 of 1878,[51] s 72 .87
(xxii) Servants and officers of the Indian museums, under s 14 of Act 22 of 1876.[52]
(xxiii) Officers executing warrants of marine courts, under s 15 of Act 4 of 1875.
(xxiv) Municipal commissioners and servants.[53]
(xxv) A Municipal Councillor, is a public servant within the meaning of s 2(c) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988 and s 87 of the Rajasthan Municipalities Act 1959.[54]
(xxva) A member of the Municipal Board is a public servant within the meaning of s 2(c) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988 and s 87 of the Rajasthan Municipalities Act 1959.[55]
(xxvi) Officers and servants of local and district boards.[56]
(xxvii) Canal officers appointed under s 14 of Pegu and Settang Canal Act (2 of 1881).
(xxviii) Embankment officers, under s 2 of Act 15 of 1865.
(xxix) Delegates of Parsi matrimonial courts under s 5 of Act 19 of 1873 and s 8 of Act 8 of 1882.
(xxx) Pound-keeper under s 6 of Act 1 of 1871.
(xxxi) Railway servants under s 27 of Act 4 of 1879.
(xxxii) Telegraph officers of a private company under s 18 of Act 1 of 1876.
(xxxiii) Rangoon Port Commissioners, their officers and servants under s 64 of Act 15 of 1879.
(xxxiv) Sanitary inspectors under s 12 of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act 1884;[57] or s 19 of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act (6 of 1919).
(xxxv) Special judge under Jhansi Encumbered Estates Act under s 50 of Act 7 of 1880.
(xxxvi) Judge and assessors of court of survey and ship surveyors, under s 24(c) of Madras Act 5 of 1879.
(xxxvii) Head of a village for purposes of Madras Abkari Laws Amendment Act under s 17 of Act 15 of 1872.[58]
(xxxviii) Conciliation officers under s 11(6) of the Industrial Disputes Act (14 of 1947.)[59]
(xlix) Clerks appointed under the Broach Thakurs' Relief Act, whose duty it was to receive rents and execute revenue processes.[60]88

(xl) Sarpanch of Gram Panchayat holding office under Madhya Bharat Village Panchayat Act.[61]
(xli) A bill collector under s 358 of the Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920).[62]
(xlii) A Karkun employed, to execute a revenue process.[63]
(xliii) Central Vigilance Commissioner and staff of the Central Vigilance Commission are public servants within the meaning of s 21 of the Indian Penal Code (*vide*Central Vigilance Commission Act 2003, s 16).
(xliv) Chairperson, Members, officers and employees of a Cyber Appellate Tribunal are public servants within the meaning of s 21 of the Indian Penal Code (*vide*Information Technology Act 2000, s 82).
(xlv) Protection officers and members of services acting under the provisions of the > Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act 2005 are public servants within the meaning of s 21 of the Indian Penal Code (*vide*Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act 2005, s 30).

Under the Civic Guard Ordinance, 8 of 1940, until such time as the Civic Guard has been legally called out for duty and the order calling them out for duty has been notified in the Calcutta Police Gazette, the members of the Civic Guard are merely empowered to perform duties which an ordinary citizen may perform, and are not public servants.[64]

6. Clause 2--Commissioned Officers in Military, Naval or Air Forces

The word 'Forces' seems to include not only the regular forces but also other forces such as the auxiliary force, volunteer forces and the militia.[65]

But a servant of the soldier's board which is primarily a private organisation though patronised by the government, is not a public servant.[66]

7. Clause 3--'Every Judge'

The word 'Judge' is defined in s 19 .[67] A panch is a judge within the meaning of that term under s 19 of the IPC . A judge is also a public servant as defined in s 21 of the said Code. Under s 19 any one of the body of persons, which is empowered by law to give a definitive judgment is a judge. A Sarpanch is one of the *Pancha*sunder the Rajasthan Panchayat Act and can, therefore, be said to be a judge.[68] A sarpanch and an *upsarpanch*are deemed to be public servants by virtue of s 145 of the Hyderabad Gram Panchayats Act (17 of 1956).[69]Sarpanch of Gram Panchayat is a public servant even in Bihar.[70] The president of a village panchayat in Madras is a judge and therefore a public servant.[71]89

However, an MLA would not be a public servant within the meaning the expression in cl (3) of s 21 .[72]

8. Meaning of 'Officer'

The meaning of the word 'Officer' which has been used in cll 4, 8, 9-10 of this section has come to be considered in several cases. In Reg v Ramajirao Jivbajirav ,[73] the case before the court concerned an Izaphatdar, that is a lessee, of a village who had undertaken to keep an account of its forest revenue and pay a certain proportion to the government, keeping the remainder for himself. The question for consideration was whether he was an 'Officer' within the meaning of this clause. Justice West, observed:

> We think that the word 'Officer' there means some person employed to exercise to some extent and in certain circumstances, a delegated function of Government. He is either himself armed with some authority or representative character, or his duties are immediately auxiliary to those of some one who is so armed.

Accordingly the court came to the conclusion that Deshmukhs and Deshpandes would be sufficiently within the meaning of the clause, they being appointed to perform for the state a portion of its functions or to aid those who were its active representatives, but not so an Izaphatdar or the lessee as he was not an officer, but a mere contractor and there was no delegation to him of any authority for coercion or interference, nor was he an assistant appointed to help anyone who was vested with such authority. In Nazaimuddin v Queen ,[74] it was held that an 'officer in the service of pay of government' within the terms of this clause is one who is appointed to some office for the performance of some public duty, and that in this sense a peon attached to the office of a superintendent of the salt department would come within the clause. In Ismail Mohamed Hajee v King ,[75] the head clerk to the controller of prices has been held to be a 'public servant' within the meaning of r 2(9) of Defence of Burma Rules.

In Ahad Shah v Emperor ,[76] it was pointed out that the expression 'Officer' is not to be restricted to its colloquial meaning of a commissioned or non-commissioned officer; it means a functionary or holder of some 'officium or office. The office may be one of dignity or importance; it may equally be humble. But whatever its nature, it is essential that the person holding that office should have in some degree delegated to him certain functions a government.

True Test for Determination of Officer of Government

Reviewing the case-law on the subject, their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that:[77]

> The true test, therefore, in order to determine whether a person is an officer of the government, is: (1) Whether he is in the service or pay of the Government, and (2) whether he is entrusted with the performance of any public duty. If both these requirements are satisfied it matters not the least what is the nature of his office, whether the duties he is performing are of an exalted character or very humble indeed.

90

The changes made in the definition of public servant by the subsequent Amendment Act 40 of 1964 are, however, to be kept in view before following the below mentioned ratio of this decision.

> If, therefore, on the facts of a particular case the court comes to the conclusion that a person is not only in the service or pay of the government but is also performing a public duty, he has delegated to him the functions of the government or is in any event performing duties immediately auxiliary to those of some one who is an officer of the government and is therefore 'an officer' of the government within the meaning of section 21(9),Penal Code.

Applying this test, it was held that a person who is employed as a metal examiner known as chaser in the railway carriage workshop, and is working under the works manager who is certainly an officer of the government and the duties which he performed are immediately auxiliary to those of the works manager, is a public servant within the meaning of s 21(9) .[78]

A chartered accountant who is directed by an order of the Central Government to investigate into the affairs of an insurance company under s 33(1) of the Insurance Act does not ipso facto become an officer. There is no office which he holds. He is not employed in service and, therefore, the definition under this clause does not apply to him, even if he is to get some remuneration for the work he is entrusted with.[79] The person, to be an officer, must hold some office. The holding of office implies a charge of duty attached to that office.[80]

9. Clause 4--Officers of a Court of Justice, Liquidator, Receiver, Commissioner, etc.

As has been stated in Bacon's Abridgment,[81] in the article headed 'Of the Nature of an Officer and the Several Kinds of Officers'.

> The word 'officium' principally implies a duty, and in the next place the charge of such duty; and that it is a rule that where one man hath to do with another's affairs against his will, and without his leave, that this is an office, and he who is in it is an officer.

There is a difference between an office and an employment, every office being an employment; but there are employments which do not come under the denomination of offices; such as an agreement to make hay, herd a flock, etc; which differ widely from that of steward of a manor' etc.[82]

A nazir has authority to delegate the execution of warrants of arrest,[83] and a peon acting under such delegation, is a public servant within the meaning of this clause.[84] A sales officer of a co-operative society, whose duty is to take property in execution of decree,[85] is a commissioner appointed by a court to divide the properties by metes91 and bounds as a result of a preliminary decree for partition,[86] and a mukaddam whose duty is to report the commission of certain offices under the IPC,[87] have been held to be public servants within the meaning of this clause.

Payment of wages is not the test.[88] Thus in Queen v Ram Kanto Das ,[89] a supernumerary collectorate peon, whose sole remuneration was the amount received as fees on such occasions as he was entrusted with the service of processes, was deputed, on 21 June 1871, to keep order in the special sub-registrar's office for which duty he was to get no remuneration at all. It was held by Ainslie and Paul JJ, that the peon was a public servant while keeping order in the special sub-registrar's office. A candidate peon*, i.e.*, a person who does not get pay or remuneration but who has a chance of being appointed as a process-server, when entrusted with a service of warrant for attachment by the munsif is a public servant within the meaning of s 21(4) as he is specially authorised by the munsif and also under s 21(9) as he has accepted the duties and responsibilities of executing the warrant.[90] A person in the position of a peon may be a public servant,[91] but labourers or menial servants employed to do work of labour on account of the government are not officers and do not fall within the definition of 'public servant' in this section. A carter employed by the government is not a public servant.[92]

A receiver in insolvency has been held to be public servant;[93] so is a commissioner appointed by a civil court.[94] But a commissioner appointed to seize books of accounts by a civil court has been held not to be a public servant as such appointment is without jurisdiction.[95]

10. Person 'Specially Authorised' by Court of Justice

This clause clearly distinguishes between the person who is an 'Officer of a Court of Justice' and a person who is not: the latter is not a 'Public servant' within the meaning of the section unless he is 'specially authorised' by a court of justice to perform the duties of an officer of a court of justice (for the meaning of the term 'officer', refer above (no 8), and for definition of court of justice refer to s 12).

When a person who has no general power to execute a judicial process is authorised by a court to execute the same, he is 'specially authorised' within the meaning of the section.[96] The words 'specially authorised' obviously imply that the92 delegation of authority is (a) legal; (b) by a person who himself possesses the authority to authorise another;[1] and (c) to a person who is a ministerial officer as against a judicial officer.[2] Again, the authorisation must be express, though in certain cases it may even be implied.[3] The question whether the authority is or is not properly exercised is immaterial so long as it is clothed with the legality necessary to afford protection to the public servant.[4]

Commissioners appointed by civil court under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 are public servants.[5]

11. Clause 5--Jurymen, Assessors and Panchas

Jurors, assessors and panchas, when engaged in the discharge of their duties, are public servants. The sarpanch of gram panchayat has been held to be a public servant.[6]Under s 3(1) of the Punjab Gram Panchayat Act also, panch and sarpanch of a gram panchayat are public servants.[7] Members of a panchayat are public servants under cl 3 also (refer to notes under that clause). An assessor of an insurance company is, however, not a public servant as defined by this section[8] unless he is in the regular appointment of a nationalised insurance company.

12. Clause 6--Arbitrators and Commissioners

In the case of a reference to a person 'to whom any cause or matter has been referred for decision or report,' the 'cause or matter' must be one in controversy.[9] It has been held that an arbitrator appointed by parties to a proceeding under s 145 of the CrPC, 1898, is not an arbitrator within this definition.[10] A person appointed as an arbitrator in pursuance of an arbitration clause in an agreement between the Central Government and a private party is not a public servant under the provisions of this section.[11] A commissioner appointed without jurisdiction can also not be a public servant.[12] For the application of this clause, the person should be a referee or an appointee of the court to whom some subject-matter of the case is referred for decision or report[13] and whose appointment is permissible under the law and is within the jurisdiction of the court.[14]93

13. Clause 7--Persons Empowered to Place or keep any Person in Confinement

Convict warders who, under the jail rules, are empowered to keep persons in confinement fall under the definition of public servant under this clause.[15] Policemen are empowered to place persons in confinement and are, therefore 'public servants' under this clause.[16] A police officer submitting a report under s 173(2), CrPC disclosing an offence under the Essential Commodities Act is undoubtedly a public servant within s 21 of the IPC .[17] But a villager assisting a headman in the discharge of his duties and required to bring an accused person into a police station in arrest is not a 'public servant' within the meaning of this section.[18] The deputy commissioner of police, special branch, Delhi, is a public servant.[19] An MLA is not a public servant within the meaning of cl (3) or cl (7) of s 21, IPC .[20]

14. Clause 8--Officers Preventing Offences, etc

Persons holding office by virtue of which it is their duty to: (a) prevent offences, (b) to give information of offences, (c) to bring offenders to justice, or (d) to protect the public health, safety or convenience, are declared to be 'public servants' under this clause. The term 'officer' has been explained in above.

One of the duties of the mukaddam is to report the commission of certain offences under this Code and he, therefore, falls within the definition of 'public servant'.[21] The clause would include forest officers, officers of the salt, excise or opium departments, or indeed, of any department whose duty it is to protect the interests of their department by preventing the commission of an offence against it. A kotwal is a public servant.[22]

The Bombay High Court has held that the duties of a kotwal certainly relate to bringing the offenders to justice, to protect public health, safety and convenience. The post of a kotwal, therefore, would fall under cll (8) or (12)(a) of s 21 of the Indian Penal Code and it must be held that the kotwal is a public servant within the meaning of this section.[23]

15. Clause 9--Other or Miscellaneous Officers of the Government

This clause includes officers whose business it is to care for the pecuniary interests of the Government e.g., a surveyor employed by a collector in the khas mehal department,[24] and any person appointed to some office for the performance of some public duty.[25] Although the position is different under the ninth clause as the words 'by the Government' did not follow the words 'performance of any public duty'94 although at every other appropriate place, the word, 'Government' was to be found in the ninth clause. The omission of these words shows that the clause was wider when it came to the case of an officer who was remunerated by fee or commission for the performance of any public duty and it was not necessary that the remuneration by way of fee or commission should be paid by the Government as is now necessary under sub-cl (a) of cl 12 after the amendment.[26] The driver of the roadways bus, charged with the care and maintenance of the vehicle in his charge, is a public servant within the meaning of the first part of cl 9. In any case he is covered by the second part of the clause, (sub-cl (a) of cl 12 after the 1964 Amendment) even though he is a Government employee in the commercial undertaking of a State Government for he is in the service or pay of that Government entrusted with the performance of a public duty.[27] A person appointed as an examiner by the university even if he is a lecturer of a Government college is not an officer and therefore not a public servant within s 21, cl 9.[28]

16. Persons held to be Public Servants under Clause 9

A person appointed to be a public prosecutor under s 24, CrPC[29] a teacher in the service of the Government,[30] a canal mate,[31] a PWD Lascar,[32] a minister of state,[33] the chief minister of a State,[34]talayari while assisting the village officer in the matter of the collection of the kist,[35] a lambardar collecting land revenue,[36] a toll collector and his servant employed under s 11 of the Bombay Tolls on Roads and Bridges Act 1875,[37] a head clerk in the supply depot whose duty is to put up bills to his officers,[38] a clerk in a government collectorate,[39] a sub-inspector of police belonging to the fingerprint bureau,[40] and patwaris and other minor officials who prepare maps and plans of rural areas for purposes of assessment of land revenue,[41] have all been held to be public servants within the meaning of this section.

A lady health visitor, in the service and pay of the Government, is a public servant employed in connection with the affairs of the State though the health center where she works is run by a municipal committee.[42]95

17. Railway Servants

(a) Position under the Railways Act, 1989

The Railways Act 9 of 1890 has been repealed and replaced by the Railways Act 1989 (Act 24 of 1989). Section 2(34) of the new Act defines 'railway servant' as follows:

> ...
>
> (34) "Railway servant" means any person employed by the Central Government or by a railway administration in connection with the service of a railway; including member of the Railway Protection Force appointed under clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 2 of the Railway Protection Force Act, 1957 (23 of 1957);

Sub-section (2) of s 197 of the Railways Act 1989 supplements the above definition of 'Railway servant' and runs as follows:

> ...
>
> (2) For the purposes of sections 7, 24, 113, 146, 172 to 176 and 188 to 190, the expression "railway servant" includes a person employed under a railway in connection with the service thereof by a person fulfilling a contract with the railway administration.

(b) Railway Servant Not-necessarily be Government Servant

Further, despite the nationalisation of railways, the Railways Act 1989 contemplates that a railway can still be owned by persons other than government. Sub-section (20) of s 2 of this Act defines 'government railway'. Sub-section (25) defines the 'non-government railway' and provides that 'non-government railway' means a railway other than a 'government railway'. Sub-section (32) of s 2 defines 'railway administration' and its cl (b) provides that 'railway administration' in relation to a non-government railway, means the person who is the owner or lessee of the railway or the person working in the railway under an agreement. In view of these provisions it is evident that every railway servant may not necessarily be a government servant so as to become a public servant under any of the clauses of s 21 of the Code. Keeping this thing in view one can easily appreciate the object behind the exhaustive definition of public servant given in s 188 of the new Railways Act which runs as follows:

> ...
>
> (1) Any railway servant, who is not a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860), shall be deemed to be a public servant for the purposes of Chapter IX[43] and section 409 of that Code.
>
> (2) In the definition of "legal remuneration" in section 161[44] of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860) the word "Government" shall, for the purposes of sub-section (1), be deemed to include any employer of a railway servant as such.

(c) All Railway Servants are Public Servants for the Limited Purpose

Thus broadly speaking, according to the provisions of the Railway Act 1989 all the railway servants employed by the Government Railways are public servants under that deleted part of cl (9), which now distinctly forms part of cl (12) of this section as96 sub-cl (a) and those railway servants, who are employed by 'non-government railway' shall be deemed to be public servants for the limited purposes of ch 9 and s 149 of this Code under s 188 of the Railways Act 1989, which should take in its ambit even those railway servants of Government Railways, who for any reason do not become public servants under s 21 of the Code. This s 188 is analogous to s 137(1) of the old Railways Act 1890, as it stood after the 1955 amendment.

Khalasis in railway carriage section doing work of preparation and issue of passes are officers of the government and, therefore, public servants.[45]

However, if a teacher of a railway school can be declared to be a public servant, there is no reason why the person who at the relevant time was working as a traffic service officer cannot be called a public servant.[46]

18. Clause 10--Officers of Local Bodies

Municipal engineers, who receive money from the municipality and pay it out to contractors are, within the definition,[47] though an engineer, who is merely empowered to sign a bill or cheque upon which a different official pays the money, might be conceivably classed otherwise, on the ground that he does not 'expend any property' of the municipality.[48] Municipal or local board overseers, octroi and cattle-pound moharrirs, cess collectors,[49] goods clerks,[50] or union karmans,[51] are persons who take or receive money for their municipality or local boards, as the case may be. They are, therefore, public servants. But a local board sircar who merely supervises road work is not.[52] The executive officer of a notified area council is a public servant.[53]

The chairman of the managing committee of a municipality is a public servant within the meaning of the section as he has power to expend money of the municipality on payment of bills for fixed recurring charges. This clause merely requires that the person should have the duty to expend property for certain purposes. The power which the chairman has to make payment of fixed recurring charges, such as pay bills, imposes a duty on the chairman to do so when necessary as the power is vested in him for the benefit of the persons entitled to receive those recurring charges.[54] The mere fact that the power of the chairman has to be exercised with respect to fixed recurring charges and in anticipation of the Committee passing the bills does not affect the question whether the power constitutes a duty or not. Clause 10 of s 21 of the IPC is not restricted to such cases only where there is no limitation on the power of expending the property.[55]

A Qarq Amin, though in receipt of wages by way of commission only, is vested with the authority to attach and sell properties and realise the dues from the97 defaulters payable by them to the Co-operative Development Federation. He is a public servant having regard to expln 1 to the section.[56]

The words 'for any secular common purpose of any village, town or district' govern the whole clause and it must be for a public purpose that the money was received or expended. Accordingly, the chairman of a co-operative society is not a public servant within the meaning of this clause.[57]

A port is 'a place for the loading and unloading of ships'.[58] The port trust estate does not fall within the term 'village, town or district' within the meaning of this clause. The chief store-keeper and assistant superintendent of machinery for the port trust estate entrusted with the keeping and the expending of property by the port on their behalf upon their estate are not therefore public servants.[59]

The chairman of a municipality acting under r 13 (1) of the Bihar Municipal Election Rules 1937, appointed the head clerk of the municipality, as his assistant to prepare the electoral rolls of all persons entitled to be registered as voters in each of the five wards into which the municipality was divided at that time. Subsequently by a government notification the municipality was divided into 16 single-seated wards instead of the previous five plural-seated wards and it became necessary to prepare electoral rolls of the new wards. The chairman made no new appointment for this work. The head clerk, however, acted as if he had been appointed to do the work, and electoral rolls written by him were accepted by the chairman when delivered to him by a locum tenens during the absence of the head clerk on short leave. It was held that, inasmuch as the appointment of the head clerk was not revoked subsequent to the government notification and he continued to work as such, he was a public servant, and the absence of his formal appointment subsequent to the notification was immaterial as the head clerk was indubitably 'in actual possession of the situation of the public servant'.[60]

19. Clause 11--Persons Connected with Elections

A clerk empowered to prepare electoral rolls is a public servant.[61] An employee of a government company who acted as a polling agent for a candidate in a general election cannot be said to be in service of government so as to attract electoral offences.[62] The election officer of a co-operative society is, however, not a public servant.[63]

20. Clause 12--"In the Pay of the Government"

(a) A Person may be in the Pay without being the Servant of his Pay Master

It is not implicit in the expression 'in the pay of' that there ought to exist a master-servant relationship between payer and payee. One can be in the pay of another without being in employment or service of the other.98

The setting and the context are very relevant for ascertaining the true meaning of the expression. In order to avoid the charge of tautology, the phrase 'in the pay of government' in cl 12(a) may comprehend a situation that a person may be in the pay of the government without being in the employment of the government. So, this phrase does not import necessity of a master-servant relationship. It is not unusual in common parlance to speak of a person being in the pay of another if he is paid for acting at the behest or according to the desire of the other without the other being his master and he the servant, that is to say, without the control over the manner of doing the work which a master-servant relationship implies. It is such a category in addition to the one 'in the service of the government' that is sought to be comprehended in cl 12(a).[64]

(b) Chief Minister, Ministers and Speaker are Public Servants but Members of Parliament and State Assembly are Not so

A Minister and Chief Minister have however, been held to be public servants.[65] Similarly, the speaker of State Legislative Assembly is a public servant and so can be proceeded against under the Prevention of Corruption Act.[66]

The Members of Parliament and State Legislative Assemblies get their pay and allowances from their respective Governments but their pay masters do not have any control over the doing of their work, which a master-servant relationship implies. They are, therefore, not servants or public servants within the meaning of s 21, cll (3), (7) or 12(a) of the Code.[67]

(c) Nature of Office, Exalted or Humble, not Material

Only a person in the pay, or service of the Government or remunerated by fees or commission by the Government for the performance of any public duty would fall within the sub-cl (a) of the twelfth clause of this section.[68] The word 'pay' in the light of the context, means wages or money given for service, and the words 'in the pay of', construed in the light of the context of the whole clause would carry the meaning 'in the employment of'.[69] Payment of pay or salary is not an essential requirement to call a person as public servant. He may be remunerated for his work by fee or commission.[70] It matters not the least what is the nature of the office, i.e., whether the duties, which a public servant is performing are of an exalted nature or very humble indeed.[71] A public prosecutor,[72] a lady health visitor,[73] a commissioner99 appointed by the civil court,[74] for taking accounts; an extra departmental agent working as village postmaster,[75] police officer filing challan under s 173, CrPC,[76] are public servants.

21. Clause 12(a)--Expression 'Or' not Disjunctive

The use of the expression 'or' in the context in which it is found in cl 12(a) is not disjunctive, the reason being that once it is accepted that 'a person in the pay of the government' connotes a specific and independent category of public servant other than 'a person in the service of the government' and the expression 'in the pay of the government' does not inhere a master-servant or command-obedience relationship between the government as the payer and the public servant as the payee, no part of the section is rendered superfluous. Each part will receive its own construction.[77]

22. Teachers, Invigilators and Examiners

(a) University Examiner, Teachers

Before the Amendment Act 40 of 1964, a lecturer of a government college was appointed as an examiner by the Gujarat University for conducting some practical examination. On the allegation that he had accepted illegal gratification from a candidate for showing some favour, the question that arose for consideration was whether the accused was a public servant at the time of the acceptance of the money. The Gujarat High Court held that (i) the ninth clause [omitted part of it is now sub-cl (a) of cl 12] indicated that the connection with the government was necessary either in respect of the payment of remuneration or in respect of performance of public duty; (ii) the person to be an officer must hold some office. The Supreme Court concurred with the findings of the High Court and held that a university examiner cannot be considered to hold an office in the sense in which that work has been understood and employed in the ninth clause. As such the accused cannot be held to be an officer covered by the said clause of s 21 of the IPC .[78] However, a teacher who is in the service of the government and is paid by the government and who is entrusted with the performance of a public duty, namely, to teach boys, is a public servant within the meaning of the ninth clause of s 21 .[79] But a lecturer of a private college appointed by the university for specified works, viz, to evaluate answer scripts is not covered by definition of public servant under s 21 of the IPC though he is covered by definition of public servant under s 73(a) of the Shivaji University Act 1974.[80]

(b) Teachers and Principals are not, but Invigilators are Public Servants

Teachers and principals of private aided schools and colleges, though receiving pay from the public exchequer are not public servants.[81] Persons appointed as invigilators have, however, been held to be public servant.[82]100

23. Clause 12(b)--'Persons in the Service or Pay of a Local Authority'

The expression 'local authority' is to be given the same meaning as given in the General Clauses Act 1897. Section 3(31) of the General Clauses Act 1897, defines the term 'local authority' as follows:

...

> (31) "Local authority" shall mean a municipal committee, district board, body of port commissioners or other authority legally entitled to, or entrusted by the government, with the control or management of a municipal or local fund.

A corporate body/corporation/local body like MCD or DDA cannot be a public servant within the meaning of s 21 of IPC .[83] Persons in the employment of a local authority, including municipal boards, district boards, panchayats, are public servants within the meaning of this clause.[84] The chairman of a municipal board;[85] a member of a municipal board;[86] a member of a district board;[87] a superintendent in a municipal or district board;[88] a sarpanch or upsarpanch of a village panchayat or nyaya panchyat;[89] a sanitary inspector;[90] a municipal commissioner;[91] and the pradhan of a gram sabha of a village[92] have been held to be public servants.

Without adverting to the only illustration to s 21 the Supreme Court in Ramesh Balkrishna Kulkarni v State of Maharashtra ,[93] following its earlier decision in RS Nayak v AR Antulay ,[94] has, however, held that a municipal councillor is not a public servant and cannot be prosecuted under the Prevention of Corruption Act.

The executive officer of a notified area council is a public servant.[95]

A vice-chairman of a local board is a public servant.[96] The chairman is also a member of the board. The chairman, therefore, must be held to be a public servant.[97]101

24. Office Bearers and Employees of a Co-operative Society

The office bearers and employees of a co-operative society are not public servants. A co-operative society does not fall within the definition of a 'local authority' as given in s 3(31) of the General Clauses Act 1897 as such it is not a local authority. The secretary of a co-operative credit society is not a public servant within the meaning of cll (9), (10) or (12) s 21 of this Code.[1] The president and secretary of a co-operative society are not public servants.[2]

The Chairman of the Maharashtra Co-operative Society though is a public servant under the Societies Act but he is not so under s 21 of IPC . Public servants exercising power under the Co-operative Societies Act by legal fiction become public servants only for the purpose of the said Act but not under s 21 of IPC .[3] The Chairman of a Co-operative Society under West Bengal Co-operative Societies Act, though is a public servant as defined by s 2(3) of the Act, is not a public servant as intended by s 21, IPC, and cannot be prosecuted for offences under the IPC .[4] The office bearers of a co-operative society have also not been held to be public servants.[5]

A co-operative society registered under the Uttar Pradesh Co-operative Societies Act is not a corporation established by the Uttar Pradesh state,[6] and is not covered by sub-cl (b) of s 21(12) . The same is the position regarding the employees of the co-operative societies registered under other state Acts.[7]

A secretary of co-operative society, being a paid employee of society, is a public servant as defined under Karnataka Co-Operative Societies Act 1959.[8]

25. Civil Servants on Deputation with a Co-operative Society

A civil servant working on deputation with a co-operative society does not work there as a civil servant. He is, therefore, not a public servant.[9] A Government officer on deputation posted in a Co-operative Society is not a public servant.[10]102

26. Corporation 'Established' under the Act--Explained

Sub-clause (b) of cl 12 of s 21 treats every person in the service or pay of a corporation established by or under a central, provincial or state act as a public servant. The question for determination before the Allahabad High Court in a case was whether a co-operative society registered under the Uttar Pradesh Co-operative Societies Act is a corporation established by or under that State Act. The High Court observed that this necessarily involves the question as to what is the semantic juristic sweep of the expression 'established' and when that has been answered, there would be the question as to what is meant by the words 'by the Act' or 'under the Act'. It was held that the term 'established' in cl 12 of s 21 of the IPC connotes 'created'. It does not mean 'registered' or 'incorporated'. A co-operative society registered under the Co-operative Societies Act is not established by or under the Co-operative Society Act. A society registered in accordance with the provision of the Co-operative Societies Act is a corporation which comes into existence in accordance with the provisions of that Act, but it is not established by the Act or pursuant to the Act or by virtue of the Act or under the Act.[11]

27. 'Person' in the Service or Pay of a Corporation

Employees of Heavy Electricals, Bhopal, are 'public servants'.[12]Persons in the service or pay of the Board of Trustees of the Port of Bombay, established under the Bombay Port Trust Act 1879, are public servants.[13] All members, officers and servants of a road transport corporation, while acting or purporting to act under the provisions of the Road Transport Corporation Act 1850, are also public servants.[14] An employee of Indian Airlines Corporation is a public servant.[15] But the branch manager of Assam Warehousing Corporation which is not a statutory body, is not a public servant and sanction under s 197 of the CrPC for his prosecution is not required.[16] The Oriental Bank of Commerce is not a corporation though it is a 'body corporate'.[17]

28. 'Government Company'

'Government Company' is defined in s 2(45) of the Companies Act 2013, thus:

...

> (45) "Government company" means any company in which not less than fifty one per cent. of the paid-up share capital is held by the Central Government, or by any State Government or Governments, or partly by the Central Government and partly by one or more State Governments, and includes a company which is a subsidiary company of such a government company.

103

The Indian Telephone Industries Ltd, Bangalore, is a company, falling within the purview of s 617 of the Companies Act 1956 and as such, its servants are 'public servants'.[18]However, an employee in Indian Telephone Industries who acted as a polling agent for candidate in a general election and facing charges of electoral offences under the Representation of People Act (s 134), cannot be said to be in the service of the government to attract such violation.[19] But if the prosecution establishes that a particular corporation is a Government company within the meaning of s 617 of the Companies Act all persons working in that corporation or in a subsidiary unit of such corporation would necessarily be public servants within the meaning of s 21, IPC .[20] The criteria that is laid down by the Supreme Court is that, firstly, the officers of the public undertakings or Government companies are not public servants and even if they are so unless they are included in s 197 of the CrPC, protection of obtaining sanction or requirements of obtaining sanction would not be applicable to them. Thus no sanction under s 197 of the CrPC was required for prosecution of employees, members including chairman of ONGC.[21]

A Government company is not a 'public servant', but every employee of the Government company is a 'public servant'.[22]

29. Employees of Banks

A nationalised bank is not only a body corporate (which word is interchangeable with the word 'corporation') established under a Central Act but also a 'Government company' within the meaning of s 617 of the Companies Act 1956 and the employees of such a bank are 'public servants' within the meaning of clause twelfth (b) of s 21 of the IPC .[23] A Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court in Ashoka Marketing Ltd v Punjab National Bank ,[24]has held that a nationalised bank is a corporation established by a Central Act and is owned and controlled by the Central Government. The Delhi High Court in Oriental Bank of Commerce v Delhi Development Authority ,[25] and the Calcutta High Court in Ashoka Kumar Mitra v State of West Bengal ,[26] has taken the view that an employee of a nationalised bank cannot be a public servant. The said view no longer holds good and in Union of India v Ashoka Kumar Mitra ,[27] the Supreme Court specifically overruling the Calcutta view has held that an employee of a nationalised bank is a public servant under s 21, IPC . Subsequently, Delhi High Court has also held that a nationalised bank is a corporation owned and controlled by the Central Government. Bank employees are public servants within the meaning of the twelfth clause of s 21, IPC, for the purpose of s 197, CrPC .[28]104

The controversy, whether a nationalised Bank is only a body corporate or is a corporation is no longer res integra on account of the nationalisation, the nationalised banks are not only established by a Central Act but are also owned and controlled by the Central Government.[29]

The State Bank of India was established by the State Bank of India Act 1955, and by virtue of the provisions of s 21(12)(b), IPC, its employees are public servants.[30]

30. Employees of Insurance Companies

In view of the express provisions of s 107A of the Insurance Act 1938 read with s 31 of the General Insurance Business Act, there is no scope for any doubt that officers/employees, etc, of an insurance company are public servants but they are deemed to be public servants for a different purpose to make them subject to the penal provisions of ch IX of the IPC .[31]

The General Insurance Corporation of India (GIC) is a nationalised general insurance corporation and the employees of this corporation and its subsidiary companies are public servants under s 21(12)(b), IPC .[32] The Supreme Court has also held that the employees of the LIC and GIC are public servants.[33] An assessor of insurance company has, however, not been held to be a public servant.[34] The person appointed as investigator under s 33 of the Insurance Act is also not a public servant.[35]

31. Medical Officer Acting as Authorised Medical Attendant

None of the ingredients, mentioned in any one of the limbs of cl 12(a) of s 21 are satisfied in the case of a medical officer acting as an authorised medical attendant and therefore, he cannot be said to be a public servant under this sub-clause.[36] A private medical practitioner even if his name is included in the panel of doctors is not a public servant.[37]

32. Advocates Engaged by Government

An advocate engaged by the Government to conduct a particular matter, is not a public servant within the meaning of cl 12(a) of s 21 of the IPC . When an advocate is engaged by the Government official, he has no duty prescribed by such engagement or under the statute in relation to such engagement. An advocate so engaged does no other work except as an advocate and that is no public duty. He is free to return the brief at any time. He is free to appear against the government in the next case. The engagement, if any, is to act as an advocate. But, in the case of a public prosecutor or a Government pleader, it is the office that makes him the public servant.[38]105

33. Persons held not to be Public Servants

The following have been held not to be public servants.

(i) A lessee of a village who keeps accounts of the forest revenue and pays a portion thereof to the Government;[39]
(ii) A clerk in a bank carrying on treasury business;[40]
(iii) A police officer under suspension;[41]
(iv) A manager of an estate under a court of wards;[42]
(v) A carter employed by Government;[43]
(vi) A clerk appointed by a sub-registrar and paid out of an allowance given to the latter;[44]
(vii) A municipal corporation is not a public servant, as distinct from its individual members;[45]
(viii) A local board road sircar;[46]
(ix) The chairman of a co-operative credit society,[47] or the president of a co-operative society;[48]
(x) The sanitary inspector of a panchayat board is not a public servant within the contemplation of this section. The fact that he is authorised by the president of the panchayat board to collect fees for sealing animals before slaughter would not make him a public servant.[49]

(xi) A person who is temporarily carrying on the duties of the branch post master purely as a nominee of the latter without authority given by the Government is not a public servant.[50]

(xii) A cashier in bank;[51]

(xiii) A peon employed by the manager of an estate in charge of the court of wards;[52]

(xiv) Labourers and menial servants employed to do work or labour on account of the government do not fall within the definition of 'public servants'.[53]106

(xv) Though a lascar in Madras has been held to be a public servant,[54] the receiver of an estate appointed pendente lite is not,[55] for his position is that of a guardian of the estate for the protection of which he is appointed.

(xvi) While municipal officers may be, and ordinarily are, classed as public servants, it does not follow that all servants of the municipality are also public servants. A municipal water-rate collector was held not to be a public servant: et hoc genus omne.[56] Similarly, a quarter master's clerk is not a public servant.[57]But officers of a municipal corporation as enumeration in s 680 of the Hyderabad Municipal Corporation Act 1955 would also be deemed to be public servants like commissioner of the corporation who as per illustration of s 21 are public servants.[58]

(xvii) A villager assisting a headman in the discharge of his public duties is no more a public servant than a person whom a magistrate may require to assist him in the discharge of his public duties.[59]

(xviii) The malguzari holding an inquiry in the matter of damage done to a government forest, though it may be his duty under the Forest Act to assist government.[60]

(xix) A private person chosen by parties to settle their dispute, though he is referred to in the order of the court, cannot be regarded as a 'public servant' for he was not appointed by the court.[61]

(xx) A person nominated by the collector under s 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act .[62]

(xxi) A public servant would cease to be so on suspension from duty.[63] A contrary view was, however, expressed in Dhanpal Singh v State ,[64] and it was held that a public servant would not cease to be a public servant on being placed under suspension. The latter appears to be sound.

(xxii) A corporation, though a juridical person, is not a natural person so as to be a public servant within the meaning of the section.[65]

(xxiii) A corporate body/corporation/local body MCD or DDA cannot be a public servant within the meaning of s 21 of the IPC .[66]

(xxiv) A mukhia is not a Government servant as contemplated by s 5A of the Uttar Pradesh Panchayat Raj Act.[67] The argument that as the mukhia (village headman) was not paid by the state, he cannot be in the service of the state, is not sound, for the payment is not the test. All that is required under the definition under s 123(8) read with s 100(2)(b) of the107 Representation of People Act 1951 that he should be a headman employed in the state.[68] Unpaid candidate in the office of the deputy commissioner assisting some clerk in work connected with duties of an arms clerk is not a public servant.[69]

(xxv) An assessor working with an insurance company is not a public servant.[70]

34. Illustration to Twelfth Clause

The term 'Municipal Commissioner', has not been defined anywhere in the IPC . The word 'Commissioner' in the illustration appears to have been used in the sense of a municipal member or councillor and not in the sense of an officer in the employment of a municipality who is sometimes designated by that name.[71] Under the Bengal Municipal Act 1932, a municipality consists of elected municipal commissioners. The members of the municipalities in Bengal are thus called municipal commissioners and they are elected by the public. Even in some other states the elected members of municipalities are called municipal commissioners. Under s 87 of Rajasthan Municipalities Act 1959, the Chairman and the Members of the Municipal Board are public servants within the meaning of s 21 of the IPC . Under the Bombay District Municipal Act 1901 the chairman of a municipality is a public servant.[72]Therefore, it follows that the elected members of the municipalities in some states of this country are called municipal commissioners and they are public servants. On the other hand, in Indore, the municipal commissioner for the city of Indore is appointed by the Government under s 13(1) of the Indore Municipal Act 1909. The position appears to be the same under the City of Nagpur Corporation Act 1948, Madhya Pradesh Municipal Corporation Act 1956 and Bombay Municipal Corporation Act 1888. They all speak of municipal commissioners appointed by the Government. Such municipal commissioners are supposed to be full time public servants like other Government servants appointed by the Government. In case a municipal commissioner elected by the public enjoys the status of a public servant under any local Act, the difference between an elected municipal commissioner and a municipal commissioner appointed by the Government for the purposes of the present discussion, loses its significance as both enjoy the position of a public servant.

In some states the municipal committees or municipal boards are called Municipal Councils and their elected members are known as Municipal Councillors. It is so under the Gujarat Municipalities Act, Bangalore Municipal Corporation Act 1949, the Madhya Pradesh Municipal Corporation Act 1956, the Himachal Pradesh Municipal Act 1979 and the Maharashtra Municipalities Act 1965. Though there is a difference in the nomenclature but for all practical purposes there appears to be no difference in the official position and status of the elected members of municipal Boards, municipal councils and corporations. They are not full time government servants but by virtue of local laws of the various states, they are deemed to be public servants for certain specific purposes.108

35. Explanation 1

As stated earlier, this section does not define public servants and describes them only by enumeration, which is merely illustrative and not exhaustive. Some provisions or descriptions may apparently look conflicting or incomplete. Explanation 1 to the section removes this difficulty and doubts, and clarifies that persons falling under any of the descriptions mentioned in cll 1-12 are public servants and it is not material whether they were appointed by the Government or not.

36. Explanation 2

By virtue of this explanation a person who is actually performing the duties of the office which brings him under one of the classes of this section is a public servant even though there may be some legal defect in his right to hold the office.[73] A person in actual possession of the situation and performing the duties assigned to him is a public servant even if there is a defect in his appointment.[74] But if there was absolutely no appointment at all, no question of any defect in it arises and the explanation has no application.[75] It is necessary for the application of this explanation that the person connected should be in actual possession of the pre-existing office of a public servant. If there be no office or post, there can be no question of any one being in actual possession thereof, and of the person concerned coming within the terms of this explanation. If there is no post or office in existence and a person is appointed to it without jurisdiction, he is not a public servant within the meaning of this section.[76]

Members of the civic guard were not in actual possession of the situation of police officers until there were legally called out for duty under the terms of ordinance of 1940 read with the rules.[77]

90 Clause First omitted by the AO 1950.

91 Substituted by Act 10 of 1927, s 2, Sch I, for 'or Naval'.

92 The original words 'of the Queen while serving under the Government of India or any Government' have successively been amended by the AO 1937, the AO 1948 and the AO 1950 to read as above.

93 Substituted by Act 40 of 1964, s 2 for the former clause (wef 18-12-1964).

94 Inserted by Act 40 of 1964, s 2 (wef 18-12-1964).

95 Substituted by the AO of 1950 for 'the Crown' which had been substituted by the AO 1937 for 'Government'.

1 Substituted by the AO of 1950 for 'the Crown' which had been substituted by the AO 1937 for 'Government'.

2 Substituted by the AO of 1950 for 'the Crown' which had been substituted by the AO 1937 for 'Government'.

3 Substituted by the AO of 1950 for 'the Crown' which had been substituted by the AO 1937 for 'Government'.

4 Substituted by the AO of 1950 for 'the Crown' which had been substituted by the AO 1937 for 'Government'.

5 Substituted by the AO of 1950 for 'the Crown' which had been substituted by the AO 1937 for 'Government'.

6 Certain words omitted by Act 40 of 1964, s 2 (wef 18-12-1964).

7 Inserted by Act 39 of 1920, s 2 .

8 Substituted by the Act 40 of 1964, s 2 for the former clause (wef 18-12-1964).

9 Inserted by the Indian Elections Offences and Inquiries Act 1920, (39 of 1920), s 2 .

10 Explanation 4 inserted by Act 2 of 1958, s 2 and omitted by Act No 40 of 1964, s 2 (wef 18-12-1964).

11 Vide Rajasthan Act 1993, (4 of 1993), s 2 (wef 11-02-1993).

12 Ambadas v State of Maharashtra 1974 Mah LJ 442 .

13 Since repealed by the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988.

14 State of West Bengal v Mammal Bhutoria & Ors AIR 1977 SC 1772, (1977) Cr LJ 1164 .

15 Since repealed by the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988.

16 State of Madhya Pradesh v MV Narasimhan AIR 1975 SC 1835 .

17 PV Narsimha Rao v State etc. (1998) Cr LJ 2930 (SC) .

18 Municipal Corpn of Delhi v SK Jain (1985) 27 Del LT 52 (Del) .

19 Sections 166 - 71 . Sections 161 - 65A since omitted by s 31 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988.

20 Indian Penal Code 1860, ss 172 - 90 .

21 State of Bihar v Deodar Jha AIR 1958 Pat 51, (1958) Cr LJ 81 .

22 Balbir Prasad Bagish v State of Bihar 2008 Cr LJ 1323, 2009 (1) PLJR 577 (Pat) .

23 State of Vindhya Pradesh v Shiv Bahadur Singh AIR 1951 VP 17, p 35 .

24 First Report, s 78 . This section was cl 14 in the Draft Bill.

25 Municipal Corpn of Delhi v SK Jain (1985) 27 Del LT 52 (Del) ; Municipal Corpn of Delhi v Amrti Lal 1981 Cr LJ 422 (Del) .

26 Swami Nath v SDO, Machhlishahr AIR 1958 All 660, p 662 .

27 Harishankar Prasad Gupta v Shibbanlal Saksena AIR 1956 SC 314 .

28 Bindeshwari Sharma v State of Bihar (1980) BLJR 89 .

29 Goolbai Motabhai v Pestonji Cowasji AIR 1935 Bom 333, 37 Bom LR 410 .

30 Swami Nath v SDO, Machhlishahr AIR 1958 All 660 .

31 Queen-Empress v Pameshwar Dat 8 ILR All 201, 1886 All WN 63, per Straight J, followed in Emperor v Ram Chandra AIR 1933 Pat 187 .

32 Queen v Ramkrishna Dass 7 BLR 446, 16 WR 27 (Cr) .

33 Queen-Empress v Parmeshar Dat 8 ILR All 201 ; Subramanya v Somasundaram 21 ILR Mad 428 ; Mahendra Prosad v Emperor 9 IC (C) 698 .

34 Harbilas v Crown AIR 1950 EP 167 .

35 Nazamuddin v Queen-Empress 28 ILR Cal 344 .

36 Cf 55 & 56 Vict C 61.

37 Harvilas v Crown AIR 1950 EP 167, vide expln 2 to this section.

38 Ramesh Balkrishna Kulkarni v State of Maharashtra AIR 1985 SC 1655, (1985) 2 Crimes 378, 379, (1985) Cr AR 259 (SC), (1985) 3 SCC 606 ; Municipal Corpn of Delhi v SK Jain (1985) 27 DLT 527 .

39 Ch Venkata Swamy v Supdt, Post Offices AIR 1957 Ori 112, p 116, per Narasinham J.

40 Elahi Bux Khan v State AIR 1955 Cal 482, p 483 .

41 State of Orissa v Bira Kishore Naik AIR 1964 Ori 202, p 203, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 325, 30 Cut LT 176, (1964) OJD 119 .

42 Bajrang Lal v State of Rajasthan (1976) Cr LR 133 (SC), (1976) SC Cr R 197, (1976) 2 SCC 217, (1976) SCC 272 (Cr), (1976) UJ 277(SC), (1976) Cr AR 119 (SC).

43 Act 15 of 1865 s 23 ; 17 of 1908, ss 12(3) and 14(2) ; Act 16 of 1908, s 84 ; Act 7 of 1878, s 72 ; Act 7 of 1880, s 50 ; Act 15 of 1882, s 52 ; Act 18 of 1882, s 12 ; Act 12 of 1883, s 8 ; Act 6, ss 7 and 42 ; Act 7 of 1884, ss 9, 37 ; Act 6 of 1886, s 14 ; Act 9 of 1889, s 17 ; Act 18 of 1887.

44 R v Muhammadan 22 PR 1908 (Cr) .

45 Now see Act 35 of 1952, s 5 .

46 Now see the Census Act (37 of 1948), s 5 .

47 Now see the Emigration Act (31 of 1983), s 8 .

48 Section 3, Act 3 of 1876; s 50, Act 5 of 1877; s 5, Madras Act 15 of 1886.

49 Local Encumbered Estates Act, s 21, Act 6 of 1876 (Chota Nagpur) s 22, Act 24 of 1870 (Taluqdars of Oudh), 33 Reg 4 of 1877, (Taluqdars, Thakurs and Jagirdars in Ajmer) s 33, Act 21 of 1881 (Broach and Kaira Thakurs, etc.) s 33 Act 20 of 1881 (Sind).

50 Now see the Factories Act (63 of 1948), s 8 .

51 Now see the Indian Forest Act (16 of 1927), s 73 .

52 Now see the Indian Museum Act (10 of 1910), s 13 .

53 Local Municipal Acts and s 25 Act 15 of 1873; s 22, Act 8 of 1874; s 56, Madras Act 5 of 1878; s 51, Bombay Act 3 of 1872; s 15 Bombay Act 6 of 1873.

54 Manish Trivedi v State of Rajasthan 2014 Cr LJ 429, p 435, AIR 2014 SC 648, (2014) 133 AIC 137, (2014) 14 SCC 420 .

55 Manish Trivedi v State of Rajasthan 2014 Cr LJ 429, p 435, AIR 2014 SC 648, (2014) 133 AIC 137, (2014) 14 SCC 420 .

56 Refer to Local Acts, Queen-Empress v Mudali Tiruvengada 21 ILR Mad 428 .

57 Shailesh Chandra v Nehal Chand 59 ILR Cal 234 .

58 Re Isub Musa BUC 117.

59 State of Bihar v Deodhar Ghose AIR 1958 Pat 51 .

60 Re Dina Nath Gangooly 8 DLR App 58, 17 WR 12 (Cr).

61 Narayan v State AIR 1956 MB 51, (1956) Cr LJ 27 .

62 Re Govindaswami(1954) Cr LJ 480.

63 Re Isub Musa BUC 117.

64 Jitendra Mohan De v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 79 .

65 (1881) 44 & 45 Vic C 56, s 177 (7).

66 Ramniwas Sharma v State AIR 1951 Ajmer 76, p 77, 52 Cr LJ 513 .

67 See notes under that section.

68 Prabhu Dayal v Milap Chand AIR 1959 Raj 12, p 14 .

69 Kon Kati Narayana v Balakanti Verrayya AIR 1959 Andh Pra 27 .

70 Bindeshwari Sharma v State of Bihar (1980) BLJR 89 .

71 Poonuswami Thevan v Emperor AIR 1922 Mad 62 .

72 RS Nayak v AR Antulay AIR 1984 SC 684 .

73 Reg v Ramajirao Jivbajirav (1875) 12 Bom 1 .

74 Nazaimuddin v Queen 28 ILR Cal 344, 4 CWN 798 .

75 Ismail Mohamed Hajee v King AIR 1941 Rang 349, 43 Cr LJ 287 .

76 Ahad Shah v Emperor AIR 1918 Lah 152, p 157 (2).

77 GA Monterio v State of Ajmer AIR 1957 SC 13 .

78 GA Monterio v State of Ajmer AIR 1957 SC 13 .

79 RK Dalmia v Delhi Admn AIR 1962 SC 1821, p 1870 .

80 State of Gujarat v Manshankar Prabhashankar Dwivedi AIR 1973 SC 330, (1972) Cr LJ 1247, (1972) 2 SCC 392 .

81 Bacon's Abridgement, vol 6, p 2, article headed 'Of the Nature of an Officer and Several Kinds of Officers'.

82 R v Ramajirao Jivbaji 12 Bom HCR 1 ; quoted with approval in GA Monterio v State of Ajmer AIR 1957 SC 13, p 16-17 .

83 Dharam Chand Pal v Queen-Empress 22 ILR Cal 596 .

84 Sheo Progash Tewari v Bhoop Narain Prasad Pathak 22 ILR Cal 759 .

85 Re *Thimmakka*AIR 1942 Mad 552 ((2)) .

86 Re S Ramiah 52 Cr LJ 847.

87 Lonkaran Mullinchand v Emperor AIR 1946 Nag 60 .

88 Ram Pal Singh v State 1960 All WR 279 (HC), 1960 All LJ 357 .

89 Queen v Ram Kanto Das 16 WR 27, 7 BLR 446 .

90 Emperor v Ram Chandra Sahu AIR 1933 Pat 187, p 188 ; Rajshahi Banking and Trading Corpn Ltd v Surendra Nath Mitra AIR 1942 Cal 434 .

91 Queen v Ram Kristo Dass 16 WR 27, 7 Beng LR 446 ; Emperor v Ram Chandra Sahu AIR 1933 Pat 187 ; Re RL Bhagai Dafadin 2 BLR 21; Rajshahi Banking & Trading Corpn Ltd v Surendra Nath Mitra AIR 1942 Cal 434, 43 Cr LJ 410, (1942) 2 ILR Cal 108 ; Nizamuddin v Queen-Empress 28 ILR Cal 344 ; Saheb Ali v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 274 .

92 Queen v Naihimulla 7 ILR Mad 18, 1 Weir 27 .

93 State of Orissa v Ganesh Prasad Dutta (1962) 1 Cr LJ 658, (1961) All Cr R 402 .

94 Chinubhai Keshavlal Nanavati v KJ Mehta, Commr for Taking Account (1977) Mad Cr R 8, (1977) Guj LR 1022, p 1024 ; Re S Ramaiah 52 Cr LJ 847; Ram Pal Singh v State (1960) All WR 279 (HC), (1960) All LJ 357 .

95 *PadamSen v State of Uttar Pradesh*AIR 1961 SC 218, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 322 .

96 Emperor v Ram Chandra Sahu AIR 1933 Pat 187 .

1 Padam Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1961 SC 218 .

2 Walsh v Southworth LR 6 Ex 150, per Pollock CB.

3 Dharam Chand v Queen Empress 22 ILR Cal 596, followed inSheo Progas v Bhup Narain* 22 ILR Cal 759 ; Abdul Karim v Bullen 6 ILR All 385 .

4 Abdul Ghafur v Queen-Empress 23 ILR Cal 896 ; Satish Chandra v Jadu Nandan 3 CWN 741 ; Conville v Kristo Kishore 26 ILR Cal 746 ; Durga Charan v Nabin Chandra 25 ILR Cal 274 .

5 Chinubhai Keshavlal Nanavati v KJ Mehta 1977 Guj LR 1022, p 1024 .

6 Bindeshwari Sharma v State of Bihar (1980) BLJR 89 .

7 Sukhdev Singh v State of Punjab (1988) Cr LJ 265 .

8 AR Puri v State (1987) 2 Crimes 102 .

9 Empress v Debi Din (1886) WN 295 .

10 Sunder v R 30 ILR Cal 1084 .

11 Maheshwar Vishambhar Sahai v State of Madhya Pradesh (1985) 2 Cr LC 229, (1985) MPLJ 337, (1985) Jab LJ 424 .

12 Padam Sen v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1961 SC 218, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 322 .

13 Sunder v R 30 ILR Cal 1084 ; Emperor v Debi Din (1886) AWN 195 .

14 Padam Sen v State of Uttar Pradesh (1961) 1 Cr LJ 322, p 324 .

15 Queen v Kallachand Moitree 7 WR 63, p 99 (Cr) ; Safin Rasual v Emperor AIR 1924 Bom 385 ; Maula Buksh v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 631, 30 Cr LJ 1103 .

16 Kedarnath Sharia v State AIR 1962 Cal 410 ; Jagannath Prasad Keshri v State of Bihar AIR 1968 Pat 506, p 508 .

17 Satya Narain Musadi & Ors v State of Bihar AIR 1980 SC 506, (1980) Cr LJ 227 (SC) .

18 Nga Paw E v Emperor 18 Cr LJ 351 .

19 FD Larkins v State (Delhi Admn) (1984) 2 Crimes 734, (1984) 26 Del LT 486 (Del) .

20 RS Nayak v AR Antulay AIR 1984 SC 684 .

21 Lonkaran v King-Emperor AIR 1946 Nag 60, 47 Cr LJ 636, p 637 .

22 Shriram v State of Madhya Pradesh 1957 MPLJ 173 (notes) .

23 Doma v State of Maharashtra 1981 Cr LJ 653 (Bom), 1981 Cr LR 232 (Mah) .

24 Bajoo Singh v R 26 ILR Cal 158(2).

25 Nazamuddin v Queen-Empress 28 ILR Cal 344 .

26 State of Gujarat v I Manishankar Prabhshankar Dwivedi & Anor AIR 1973 SC 330, (1972) Cr LJ 1247 .

27 Ranjeet Singh v State (1964) All LJ 1076, (1964) All WR 741 (HC), (1965) 2 Cr LJ 449(2); followingGA Monterio v State of Ajmer* AIR 1957 SC 13 .

28 State of Gujarat v I Manishankar Prabhashankar Dwivedi & Anor AIR 1973 SC 330, (1972) Cr LJ 1247 .

29 Kuber Nayak v State AIR 1962 Cal 195, p 196 .

30 State of Ajmer v Shivji Lal AIR 1959 SC 847 .

31 Badri Prasad v State AIR 1953 All 494, p 495 .

32 Public Prosecutor v Kimidi Annam Naidu AIR 1925 Mad 1093 .

33 Shiv Bahadur Singh v State of Vindhya Pradesh AIR 1953 SC 394, p 401 ; State of Vindhya Pradesh v Shiv Bahadur Singh AIR 1951 VP 17 ; Emperor v Sibnath Banerji AIR 1945 PC 156 .

34 Ram Ditta Mal and Devi Chand v Emperor AIR 1939 Pesh 38, p 39 ; M Karunanidhi v Union of India 1979 SC 898, p 915, AIR 1980 SC Cr R 273 ; M Karunanidhi v Union of India (1977) Cr LJ 1876, p 1890 (Mad)(FB).

35 Re *Karani*AIR 1944 Mad 183 ; distinguishing Re Venkatiganda(1879) 1 Weir 342 and Arjun Mal v Emperor AIR 1923 Lah 260 .

36 Said Mahommad v Emperor AIR 1935 Pesh 189 .

37 Emperor v Suleman AIR 1935 Bom 24 .

38 Emperor v Karam Chand Govind Ram AIR 1943 Lah 255, p 258 .

39 Jugal Singh v Emperor AIR 1943 Pat 315, p 316 .

40 Karam Chand v Emperor AIR 1924 Lah 355 .

41 Madhusoodan(1870) 2 NWP 148; Bajoo Singh v Queen-Empress 26 ILR Cal 158 .

42 MB Kanwar v State 64 Punj LR 1074, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 609, AIR 1963 Punj 201 .

43 Sections 161 - 65A (both inclusive) of the Indian Penal Code 1860 have been omitted by s 31 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988.

44 Ibid.

45 Bajrang Lal & Anor v State of Rajasthan AIR 1976 SC 1008 .

46 Satish Chandra v Union of India (1997) Cr LJ 1210 (Del) .

47 R v Nantamram 6 BHCR 64 .

48 Ibid per Gibbs J.

49 R v Babulal 33 ILR Bom 213 .

50 Re Zakaria 9 PR 1898.

51 Gopalasaminatha Aiyar v R 1 Weir 128 .

52 Addaita v Kali Dass 12 CWN 96 .

53 Ram Chandra Shau v G Basak (1987) 63 Cut LT 546 (Ori) .

54 Julius v Bishop of Oxford (1880) 5 AC 214 .

55 Maharudrappa Danappa Kesarappanavar v State of Mysore AIR 1961 SC 785, p 786 .

56 Ram Pal Singh v State (1960) All LJ 357, p 359, (1960) AWR 279 (HC) .

57 Shridhar Mahadeo Pathak v Emperor AIR 1935 Bom 36, 36 Cr LJ 532 ; Kamam Siddappa v State of Mysore AIR 1958 Mys 82 ; Sombari Behari v Emperor (1935) MWN 1337 .

58 Wharton's Law Lexicon, fourteenth edn.

59 SE Naylor v Emperor AIR 1941 Sind 30, p 31 .

60 Brij Bihari v Emperor AIR 1941 Pat 539, 194 IC 108, 22 PLT 443 .

61 Brij Bihari v Emperor AIR 1941 Pat 539, 42 Cr LJ 508, 194 IC 108, 22 PLT 443 .

62 Abdul Rehman v State of Kerala & Anor (1999) Cr LJ 4801 (Ker) .

63 Suryanarayan Tripathy v Ch Kamalanatham (1990) 2 Crimes 391 .

64 RS Nayak v AR Antulay AIR 1984 SC 684, (1984) Cr LJ 613, (1984) SCC 172 (Cr), (1984) Cr LR 163(SC), (1984) Cr App R 141(SC), (1984) SC Cr R 138, (1984) All Cr LR 410, (1984) 1 Crimes 568, (1984) 1 Ser LR 619, (1984) 2 SCC 183, (1984) Cur Cr J 133.

65 M Karunanidhi v Union of India AIR 1979 SC 898, p 915-16, (1979) Cr LJ 779, (1979) SCC 691 (Cr), [1979] 3 SCR 254 ; Jajwanlal v Krishan Chand Sharma (1987) Cr LJ 1149, (1987) Sim LJ 152 .

66 P Nallammal & Ors v State (1999) Cr LJ 1591 (Mad) .

67 RS Nayak v RR Antulay AIR 1984 SC 684, (1984) Cr LJ 613, (1984) SCC 172 (Cr), (1984) Cr LR 163(SC), (1984) Cr App 141(SC), (1984) SC Cr R 138, (1984) Cur Cr J 133, (1984) All Cr LR 410, (1984) 21 Crimes 568, (1984) 1 SLR 619, (1984) 2 SCC 183.

68 State of Gujarat v MP Dwivedi AIR 1973 SC 330, (1972) Cr LJ 1247, (1973) 2 SCJ 211, (1972) 2 SCC 392 .

69 Manshanker Prbhashanker Dwivedi v State of Gujarat AIR 1970 Guj 97, p 103, (1970) Cr LJ 679 ; confirmed in State of Gujarat v MP Dwivedi AIR 1973 SC 330, (1972) Cr LJ 1247 .

70 RP Singh v State (1960) All LJ 357 ; Sahebzadee v Fargusson 7 ILR Cal 499 (an official trustee was held to be a public servant).

71 GA Monterio v State of Ajmer AIR 1957 SC 13, [1956] SCR 682, (1957) Cr LJ 1 ; Ratanji v State of Maharashtra (1970) Mah LJ 626, (1970) 72 Bom LR 304 (a peon is a public servant).

72 Kumar Nayak v State AIR 1962 Cal 195, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 409 .

73 MB Kanwar v State AIR 1963 Punj 201, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 609, (1962) 64 Punj LR 1074 .

74 Chinubhai Keshavlal Nanavati v KJ Mehta (1977) Guj LR 1022, p 1024 .

75 Manhar Prasad v State of Bihar AIR 1971 SC 2479, (1971) Cr LJ 1712 .

76 Satya Narain v Musadi v State of Bihar AIR 1980 SC 506 .

77 RS Nayak v AR Antulay AIR 1984 SC 684, (1984) Cr LJ 613, (1984) SCC 172 (Cr), (1984) Cr LR 163 (SC), (1984) All Cr LR 410, (1984) 1 Crimes 568, (1984) 2 SCC 183, (1984) 1 Serv LR 619 .

78 State of Gujarat v Manshanker Prabhashanker Dwivedi AIR 1973 SC 330, (1972) Cr LJ 1247 (SC) .

79 State of Ajmer (now Rajasthan) v Shivaji Lal AIR 1959 SC 847, (1958) Cr LJ 1127 .

80 Dilawar Babu Kurane v State of Maharashtra AIR 2002 SC 564, 2002 Cr LJ 980, (2002) 2 SCC 135 .

81 Govind Prasad v State (1971) All Cr R 297 .

82 Raj Kumar v State (1971) All Cr R 610 .

83 MCD v Amrit Lal (1981) Raj LR 1, (1981) Cr LJ 422 (Del) .

84 Maharudrappa v State of Mysore AIR 1961 SC 785, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 857, [1962] 1 SCR 129, 39 Mys LJ 464, (1962) 1 SCJ 454 ; State v Banshi Lal AIR 1962 Raj 250, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 786, (1962) Raj LW 307, (1962) 12 ILR Raj 327 ; Prem Narain v State of Uttar Pradesh (1975) Cr LJ 1783 ; State of Maharashtra v Moreshwar (1971) Mah LJ 852, (1971) Bom LR 823 .

85 Maharudrappa v State of Mysore AIR 1961 SC 785, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 857, [1962] 1 SCR 129, 39 Mys LJ 464, (1962) 1 SCJ 454 ; Shrilal v Manmath Kumar AIR 1960 Raj 173, (1960) Cr LJ 996 ; JM Pendse v Chandra Gopal (1972) Cr LJ 1207, (1972) MPLJ 166 ; State of Maharashtra v Moreshwar (1971) Mah LJ 852, (1971) Bom LR 823 ; Thimmaiah v Narasappa AIR 1955 Mys 113, (1955) Cr LJ 1269 .

86 Bahiron Prasad v Emperor AIR 1928 All 756 .

87 State v Banshi Lal AIR 1962 Raj 250, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 786, (1962) Raj LW 307, (1962) 12 ILR Raj 327 .

88 Bradley v Emperor AIR 1932 Lah 188 .

89 Narayan v State AIR 1956 MB 51, (1956) Cr LJ 227 ; Pukhraj v Umaid Ram AIR 1964 Raj 174, (1964) Raj LW 238, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 339 .

90 Ambalal v Manibhai (1968) 9 Guj LR 672 ; Queen-Empress v Tiruvengada (1898) 21 ILR Mad 428 .

91 State v Banshi Lal AIR 1962 Raj 250, (1962) Raj LW 307, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 786 .

92 Swami Prasad v Hargovind Sahai AIR 1970 All 251, (1969) All LJ 743 (FB) ; but seeSDO, Faizabad v SN Singh* AIR 1970 SC 140 .

93 Ramesh Balkrishna Kulkarni v State of Maharashtra (1985) 2 Crimes 378 .

94 RS Nayak v AR Antulay AIR 1984 SC 684 .

95 Ram Chandra Sahu v G Basak (1987) 63 Cut LT 546 (Ori) .

96 Re Champat Rao Deshmukh 38 Cr LJ 444, 19 Nag LJ 221.

97 Shrilal v Manmath Kumar Misra AIR 1960 Raj 173, (1959) 9 ILR Raj 808, (1959) Raj LW 609 .

1 Somsetti Lakshmi Narasimayya v State of Andhra Pradesh (1971) 2 Andh WR 392, (1971) Mad LJ 678 (Cr) ; Yeshwant Gunaji Sorte v State of Maharashtra (1981) Cr LR 336 (Bom), (1981) Bom CR 752 ; Shri Kisan Mahadeo Hedgine v State of Maharashtra (1993) 1 Bom CR 631 ; Rabindra Nath Bera v State of West Bengal, 2012 Cr LJ 913 (917), 2011 (5) CHN 377 (Cal) . (Previous sanction under s 197, CrPC is necessary for prosecuting him for offence under s 409, IPC).

2 State of Punjab v Kesari Chand & Anor (1987) Cr LJ 549 (P&H)(FB); Shanmugam v State (1997) Cr LJ 2042 (Mad) .

3 State of Maharashtra v Laljit Rajshi Shah & Ors (2000) Cr LJ 1494 (SC), (2000) I CCR 283(SC); See alsoHaladhar Sasmal v State of West Bengal* 2012 Cr LJ 1726, p 1734 (Cal) .

4 Haladhar Sasmal v State of West Bengal 2012 Cr LJ 1726, p 1734 (Cal) State of Maharashtra v Laljit Rajshi Shah AIR 2000 SC 937 followed). President of a Primary Agricultural Co-operative Society may be a public servant under the Co-operative Societies Act, but is not a public servant within the meaning of s 21, IPC . Pinjari Pandlapuram Pedda Hussain Saheb v Government of AP 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 992 (AP) .

5 Gurmit Singh v State of Punjab (1976) Cr LT 686 (P&H) ; Suryanarayan Tripathy v Ch Kamalanatham (1990) 2 Crimes 391 (Ori) ; K Sumasundaram v State by Inspector of Police, Coimbatore (1990) Mad LJ (Cr) 529 .

6 State of Uttar Pradesh v Vishwa Nath Kapoor (1980) Cr LJ 494 (All) ; Madho Ram Sharma v State (1966) All LJ 1070overruled.

7 Prahlad Shambhurao Newale v State of Maharashtra (1988) 16 Reports 103 (Bom) ; Khudiram Bhoumik v State of Assam and Premlal Gayari (1988) 1 Crimes 562 (Gau) .

8 MC Gangadharappa v State (2002) Cr LJ 2755 (Kant) .

9 SS Dhanoa v Municipal Corpn of Delhi AIR 1981 SC 1395, (1981) 3 SCC 431, (1981) UJ 803 (SC), (1981) Cr LR 456(SC), (1981) SCC 733 (Cr), (1983) SC Cr R 139, (1981) Cr LJ 871.

10 NK Sharma v Abhimanyu 2005 Cr LJ 4529, AIR 2005 SC 4303, 2005 (13) SCC 213, 2005 (35) AIC 107 .

11 State of Uttar Pradesh v Vishwa Nath Kapoor (1980) Cr LJ 494 (All) ; Madho Ram Sharma v State (1966) All LJ 1070overruled.

12 State of Madhya Pradesh v MV Narasimhan AIR 1975 SC 1835, (1975) Cr LJ 1639 .

13 Naoraze Dorabji v Labhsankar Hariram Mehta (1973) 75 Bom LR 493, p 497 .

14 State of Maharashtra v Jagatsingh AIR 1964 SC 492, [1964] 4 SCR 299, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 432, (1964) 2 SCJ 215, (1963) 2 SCWR 464, (1964) Mah LJ 404 (Cr) ; Re *Chief Executive Officer*AIR 1963 AP 491, (1963) 2 Cr LJ 601 .

15 Re *HV Jagdesh*AIR 1966 AP 35 (FB), (1966) Cr LJ 120(FB).

16 Ghulam Rabbani v State of Assam (2001) Cr LJ 2331 (Gau), (2002) I CCR 476(Gau).

17 Oriental Bank of Commerce v DDA (1982) Cr LJ 2230 (Del), (1983) Cr LT 6 (Del), (1983) Punj LR 1 (Del)(DB).

18 Subramanya v State (1976) 1 Kant LJ 178, p 180 .

19 Abdul Rehman v State of Kerala & Anor (1999) Cr LJ 4801 (Ker) .

20 M Muniswami v State of Karnataka (1993) 3 Crimes 809, p 813-14(Kant) .

21 Essar Construction Ltd v Central Bureau of Investigation (1999) Cr LJ 1861 (Bom) .

22 National Small Industries Corporation Ltd v State (NCT of Delhi) 2009 Cr LJ 1299, p 1302 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 1284, 2009 (1) SCC 407 .

23 State of Maharashtra v LD Kanchan, Branch Manager, Indian Overseas Bank (1989) 1 Bom CR 59, p 65-67 ; Kurian v State of Kerala (1982) Cr LJ 780, (1982) KLT 280 (DB) ; MP Kimi v State represented by the Supdt of Police, CBI (1990) 2 Andh WR 287, (1991) 1 Crimes 127, (1991) Cr LJ 272 (AP) .

24 Ashoka Marketing Ltd v Punjab National Bank (1990) 4 SCC 406 .

25 Oriental Bank of Commerce v Delhi Development Authority 1982 Cr LJ 2430 .

26 Ashoka Kumar Mitra v State of West Bengal (1995) 1 Crimes 234 .

27 Union of India v Ashoka Kumar Mitra (1995) 1 Crimes 852 .

28 State v SR Vij (1999) Cr LJ 4762 (Del) .

29 Union of India v Ashok Kumar Mitra AIR 1995 SC 1976, (1995) Cr LJ 3633 (SC) .

30 Republic of India v Khagendranath Jha (1981) 52 Cut LT 197, (1982) Cr LJ 961 (Ori) .

31 Oriental Insurance Co Ltd v State of Bihar (2004) Cr LJ 1951 (Pat) (DB) .

32 Rajendra Vithalrao Suryavanshi (Dr) v State of Maharashtra (1991) Cr LJ 2068, (1991) 2 Crimes 141 (Bom) .

33 State through CBI v OP Dogra (1985) 4 SCC 319 ; KP Modi v Basant Kumar Sinha (1978) BLJ 279 (284), (1978) BLJR 158 .

34 AR Puri v State (1987) 2 Crimes 102, (1987) 32 DLT 115 .

35 RK Dalmia & Ors v Delhi Admn AIR 1962 SC 1821 .

36 Kaliyaperumal v State (1982) Mad LJ 197 (Cr) ; State v K Srinivasan (1984) LW 127 (Cr) (Mad); SD Usman v State (1982) Cr LJ 255 (Mad) .

37 Arvind C Shah (Dr) v State of Gujarat (1986) 1 Guj LR 481, (1986) 2 Cr LC 59 .

38 Adi P Gandhi v State of Maharashtra (1989) MPLJ 588, p 599 .

39 R v Ramajirao 12 Bom HCR 1 .

40 Re Madun Mohun 5 ILR Cal 376.

41 R v Dinanath 8 BLR App 58 .

42 Nazamuddin v R 28 ILR Cal 344 ; dissenting from R v Mathura Prasad 21 ILR All 127 .

43 R v Nachimuttu 7 ILR Mad 18 .

44 Mahendra Prosad v Emperor 9 IC 698 (Cal) ; Bhagwati Sahai v Emperor 32 ILR Cal 664 .

45 R v MC of Calcutta 3 ILR Cal 758 .

46 Addaita Bhia v Kali Das 6 Cr LJ 393, 12 CWN 96 .

47 *Shridhar Mahadeo Pathak*AIR 1935 Bom 36, 36 Cr LJ 532, 36 Bom LR 1133 .

48 Karnam Siddappa v State of Mysore (1957) ILR Mys 68, (1957) 1 Mad LJ Cr 71, (1958) Cr LJ 784, AIR 1958 Mys 82 ; Sombari Behari v Emperor 1935 MWN 1337 ; State of Bihar v Amulya Ratan Pathak AIR 1969 Pat 173, p 180 ; Shanti Rajan Bhattacharya v State AIR 1970 Cal 557, p 558 .

49 Subramania Pillai v Ponnian AIR 1939 Mad 569, 40 Cr LJ 822 (2), (1939) Mad WN 469, (1939) 1 Mad LJ 729.

50 Elahi Bux Khan v State AIR 1955 Cal 482, p 483 .

51 Madan Mohan 4 ILR Cal 376.

52 R v Araji 7 ILR Mad 17, but seeNazamuddin v Queen-Empress* 28 ILR Cal 348 and Mathura Prasad 21 ILR All 127.

53 R v Nachimuttu 7 ILR Mad 18 .

54 Public Prosecutor v Kamidi Annan Naidu 48 ILR Mad 867 .

55 Ebrahim v Emperor 29 ILR Cal 236 .

56 Re Gulab 1 All LJR 1252 (Notes).

57 Ahad Shah v Emperor AIR 1918 Lah 152, 45 IC 150, (1918) PR 18 (Cr) .

58 GSK Janardana Rao & Anor v Guntapalli Guru Prasad & Anor (2000) Cr LJ 2927 (AP)(DB).

59 Nga Paw v Emperor 38 IC 735 .

60 Re Meharban 9 IC 669 (All).

61 Sunder Majhi v Emperor 30 ILR Cal 1084, p 1087 .

62 Chattar Lal v Thacoor Pershad 18 ILR Cal 518 .

63 Re Dinanath 8 BLR App 58.

64 Dhanpal Singh v State AIR 1970 Punj 514 .

65 Re Municipal Corpn 3 ILR Cal 763, p 764.

66 MCD v Amrit Lal 1981 Raj LR 1 (Del) .

67 Swami Nath v SDO, Machhlishahr AIR 1958 All 660 .

68 Hari Shankar Prasad Gupta v Sibban Lal Saksena AIR 1956 SC 314 .

69 Harbilas v Crown AIR 1950 EP 167 .

70 AR Puri v State 32 (1987) DLT 115, (1987) 2 Crimes 102 (Del) .

71 State v Banshilal Luhadia AIR 1962 Raj 250, p 257, (1962) 12 ILR Raj 327, (1962) Raj LW 307, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 786 .

72 Maharudrappa Danappa Kesarappanayar v State of Mysore AIR 1961 SC 785, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 857, (1961) All Cr R 196, (1961) 2 Lab LJ 402 .

73 Queen v Ram Kistodos 16 WR 27 (Cr), 7 BLR 446 .

74 Sailesh Chandra Lahiri v Nihal Chand Marwari AIR 1932 Cal 462, 33 Cr LJ 521 ; Brij Behari v Emperor AIR 1941 Pat 539, 42 Cr LJ 508 ; Emperor v Fazal Rahman AIR 1937 Pesh 52 .

75 Elahi Bux Khan v State AIR 1955 Cal 482, p 483 ; State of Orissa v Bira Kishore Naik AIR 1964 Ori 202, p 203, (1964) 6 Ori JD 119 .

76 Padam Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1961 SC 218, p 221, reversingAIR 1959 All 70 .

77 Jitendra Mohan De v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 79, p 82 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 22.

"Movable property".--

The words "movable property" are intended to include corporeal property of every description, except land and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything which is attached to the earth.109

Comments

1. Definition of Movable Property Differs from one given in other Central Acts

This section defines the words 'movable property'. The definition given here differs from the one in other Acts of the Indian Legislature.[78] Under the Indian Registration Act 1908, 'movable property' includes standing timber, growing crops and grass, fruit upon and juice in trees, and property of every other description, except 'immovable property'. Under s 3(36) of the General Clauses Act 1897, 'movable property' shall mean property of every description except immovable property, and under s 3(26) 'immovable property' shall include land, benefit to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. Under s 3 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882, immovable property does not include standing timber, growing crops or grass. Section 3 of the Indian Companies Act 1913, provides that 'the shares or other interest of any member in a company shall be movable property, transferable in manner provided by the articles of the company'. The definition in this section restricts 'movable property' to corporeal property, that is to say, tangible movable property as distinguished from intangible rights which law regards as property and clothes the holder with rights of ownership therein. The definition, thus, excludes all incorporeal objects such as legal relations and rights which are included in the term in civil law. In other words, it takes no account of rights or interest in things apart from the things themselves. The definition in this section is meant only for the special purposes of the IPC and is much narrower than the definition in other Acts.

This definition is of importance in relation to offence of theft and its kindred offences. Electricity has not been held to be movable property though its theft has been made punishable under the Indian Electricity Act.[79]

2. Standing Tree, Growing Crop, Fish, Electricity, etc

Standing teak trees are immovable property.[80] Under s 2(13) of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, movable property includes growing crops, but under this section or s 3(36), General Clauses Act, movable property does not include growing crops.[81] So is a tree when cut down, growing fruit when severed,[82] and lead piping or other fixtures, when stripped from a house.[83] Fish is a corporeal property and when separated from the waters becomes the subject-matter of theft.[84] Electricity is not movable property.[85]110

3. Property

Property means things or thing owned. There is no good reason to restrict the meaning of the word 'property' to movable property only when it is used without any qualification in other sections of the IPC . Whether the offence defined in a particular section of the IPC can be committed in respect of any particular kind of property will depend not on the interpretation of the word 'property' but on the fact whether that particular kind of property can be subject to the acts covered by that section. It is in this sense that it may be said that the word 'property' in a particular section covers only that type of property with respect to which the offence contemplated in that section can be committed. The word 'property' is used in the Code in a much wider sense than the expression 'movable property'.[86]

4. Corporeal Property

Corporeal or tangible property is property which may be perceived by the senses, in contradistinction to incorporeal rights which are not so perceivable. Thus a cheque is movable property[87] and so also the papers forming part of the record of a case.[88] But the right in the cheque or record of the case is incorporeal property.

A Thing Thrown Away as a Waste

In an Allahabad case, it was observed by Knox J:

> It would be difficult to hold that an envelop thrown by its owner into a waste paper basket and picked up or carried away by another person would be property within the meaning of 'movable property' as used in the Penal Code.[89]

The underlying idea appears to be that a thing thrown away as waste loses its value and can no longer be regarded as a property. The general exceptions provided by s 95 of the IPC should also apply to such cases.

5. 'Except Land and things Attached to the Earth'

Land and things attached to the earth are here excepted from the category of movable property. In fact, 'land and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth' are also immovable property under the General Clauses Act.[90] Land, as such, is immovable property. Land is the solid part of the surface of the earth, as opposed to water as constituting a part of such surface. The expression 'land and water' includes 'buildings, markets, fisheries, crops or other produce of land, and the rents or profits of any such property',[91] for the purposes of s 145 of the CrPC .

6. Meaning of the Expression 'Attached to Earth'

The expression 'attached to earth' means (a) rooted in the earth, as in the case of trees and shrubs, (b) embedded in the earth, as in the case of walls or buildings, (c) attached to what is embedded for the permanent beneficial enjoyment of that to111 which it is attached.[92] Earth, i.e., the soil, and all the component parts thereof inclusive of stones and minerals, when severed from the land to which it was attached, is 'movable property'.[93] In R v Sivram ,[94] where the accused were charged with stealing 100 cart-loads of earth from the complainant's land, the court upheld their conviction for theft, observing:

> It appears to us that earth when dug or ploughed up, so as to be in a state in which it can be put into a cart and taken away, ceases to be land or a thing 'attached to the earth' within the meaning of section 22 of the Indian Penal Code . By the process of digging or ploughing, earth may become severed from 'the earth' or form 'any land' to which it was attached; and may become 'movable property' within the definition contained in that section.

In another case where a swamp had been taken possession of by the Government, and the accused gathered salt, which had spontaneously formed on it, it was held that the removal of salt from the swamp converted it into movable property, so that the accused were rightly convicted of this theft. The court observed:

> We cannot distinguish this case from theft of wood in a reserved forest, except that salt is actually a part of the soil, while trees are not; yet things immovable become movable by severance, and this would apply to severed parts of the soil, e.g., stone quarried, minerals, iron, or salt collected, as well as to timber which has grown or edifices which have been raised on the land.[95]

78 See also s 2 of the General Clauses Act 1 of 1868, s 3(36) of the General Clauses Act 1897, s 3 of the Registration Act 1897, s 2(9) of the Indian Registration Act 1908, s 3 of the Indian Succession Act 1865, s 2 of the Indian Trustees Act 1866, s 3 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882, s 82 of the Companies Act 1956.

79 Autar Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1965 SC 666, p 668, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 605, [1965] 1 SCR 103, (1965) 1 SCWR 289, (1965) Cur LJ 308 .

80 Re *U Ka Deo*AIR 1930 Rang 158, p 159 .

81 Nallamadan Chettiar v Emperor AIR 1930 Mad 509 .

82 Section 378, illust (a).

83 R v Cooper 24 TLR 867, (CCA); R v Richard LR [1911] 1 KB 260.

84 State v Pooran Singh (1977) Cr LJ 1055 (Raj) .

85 Autar Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1965 SC 666, p 668, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 605 .

86 RK Dalmia v Delhi Admn AIR 1962 SC 1821, p 1833 .

87 SF Rich v Emperor AIR 1930 All 449, p 450 ; RK Dalmia v Delhi Admn AIR 1962 SC 1821, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 805 .

88 Ramaswamy Aiyar v Vaithilinga Mundali (1882) 1 Weir 28 .

89 Ashbey Clarke Harrison v Emperor AIR 1918 All 353, p 354 .

90 Section 2(5), Act 1 of 1868, s 3(26) Act 10 of 1897.

91 Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, s 145(2) .

92 Transfer of Property Act 1882, s 3 .

93 R v Sivram 15 ILR Bom 702, and s 278, expln 1; Suri Venkatappayya v Madula 27 ILR Mad 531, see also Digest 47, 2, 57, overruling Kotayyan 10 ILR Mad 255 and followingR v Tamma Ghantayya* 4 ILR Mad 228 ; R v Sivram 15 ILR Bom 702 .

94 R v Sivram 15 ILR Bom 702, expln 1 to s 378 of the Indian Penal Code 1860.

95 R v Tamma Ghantayya 4 ILR Mad 228 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 23.

"Wrongful gain".--"

Wrongful gain" is gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not legally entitled.

"Wrongful loss"--"Wrongful loss" is the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled.

Gaining wrongfully, losing wrongfully--A person is said to gain wrongfully when such person retains wrongfully, as well as when such person acquires wrongfully. A person is said to lose wrongfully when such person is wrongfully kept out of any property, as well as when such person is wrongfully deprived of property.112

Comments

1. 'Wrongful Gain' and 'Wrongful Loss'

This section defines 'wrongful gain' and 'wrongful loss' which are the main ingredients of the definition of the word 'dishonestly' in s 24 . The expressions refer exclusively to the gains and loss of property. 'Wrongful gain' or 'wrongful loss' may be effected either by negative or positive means, as pointed out in the third clause of this section. Two things are essential to constitute wrongful gain or its correlative wrongful loss: by (a) wrongful acquisition, retention or deprivation of property and (b) unlawful means.[1] Under this section, 'wrongful gain' includes wrongful acquisition as well as wrongful retention and 'wrongful loss' includes wrongful deprivation of property as well as wrongfully being kept out of property.[2] Wrongful gain or wrongful loss may be temporary,[3] it may also be permanent.[4] Wrongful gain includes wrongful retention and wrongful loss includes being kept out of the property as well as being deprived of property.[5]

2. There must be Gain or Loss

'For either wrongful loss or gain, the property must be lost to the owner, or the owner must be wrongfully kept out of it'.[6] The 'gain' in this section means acquisition of the specific property in respect of which a person causes wrongful loss to another. If, therefore, a person maliciously impounds another's cattle with a view to put him to expense, the latter would be put to pecuniary loss generally, but not of the property in question, and, therefore, the person impounding his cattle cannot be, as stated before, proceeded against for their theft.[7]

Where the accused, the pledgee of a turban, was convicted of criminal breach of trust for using it, the conviction was set aside on the ground that the wrongful beneficial use of property by him was not a gain to him, nor was it a wrongful loss to the real owner.[8]

Where a person maliciously impounded another's cattle with a view to cause him expense, inconvenience and annoyance, there being neither 'wrongful gain' nor 'wrongful loss' of the property, he could not be convicted of theft.[9]

Where a servant being piqued at being wrongly suspected of the theft of a box, removed it and concealed it in a cowshed to teach his master a lesson, the question arose whether his act caused wrongful gain to him, or wrongful loss to his master, so as to justify his conviction for theft. It was held that as there was no wrongful gain or loss, the accused could not be so convicted.[10] When a particular thing has gone into the hands of a servant, he will be guilty of misappropriating the thing in all113 circumstances which show a malicious intent to deprive the master of it.[11] When, however, the owner is kept out of possession of a property with the object of depriving him of the benefit arising from its possession even temporarily, the case will come within the definition. But where this is done, not with any such intention, but only with the object of causing him trouble in the sense of mere mental anxiety, and with the ultimate intention of restoring the thing to him without exacting or expecting any recompense, it is difficult to say that the detention amounts to causing wrongful loss in any sense.[12] But forcible or illegal seizure of a woman's bullocks in satisfaction of an alleged debt owed by her husband, would be causing wrongful loss to her.[13]

3. The Person Losing should be Legally entitled to such Property

The person losing must be legally entitled to such property; in other words, he must have some legal right in that property.[14] A bull dedicated and set at large at the shradh of a Hindu in accordance with religious usage, ceases to be the property of its former owner, so that a person capturing and killing it cannot be said to cause 'wrongful loss' of any property to any one.[15]

4. Gain or Loss must Relate to Property

The term 'property' as used in this section means anything which not only may be, but is, the subject of ownership. Where, for instance, a student forged a certificate to get another so as to secure his admission to a higher class, the certificate which he so procured was held to be property within the meaning of this section.[16] In Empress R v Bandhu ,[17] Straight J remarked:

> It was not only not the subject of ownership by any person but the original owner had surrendered all his rights as its proprietor, and had given the beast its freedom to go whithersoever it chose; it was therefore, nullius proprietas and is incapable of larceny being committed in respect of it as if had been ferae naturae.

The fact that the bull was given rice by the dedicator's family and their permission was taken by the villagers using it for breeding purposes would not convert it into the property of the family.[18]

A gold mohar found on the plain must be taken to have been abandoned and is not property within the meaning of this section.[19]

In Paltu Goswami v Ram Kumar Das ,[20] there was a dispute between the complainant and the accused regarding the right to use a pond. The complainant kept his jute dipped in the pond. The accused removed the jute from the pond and kept it114 outside and asked the complainant to take it away, but he refused. It was held that the complainant had not been kept out of possession of his property or deprived of his property, and hence no wrongful loss was caused to him within the meaning of this section.

5. Gain or Loss must be Material and not Remote

The 'gain' and 'loss' in this section must be taken to mean material gain or loss.[21] In Jan Mahomed v Queen-Empress ,[22] it was held that a recognition from a settlement officer that a person was entitled to the little of loskur was not 'gain' within the meaning of s 24 . In Queen-Empress v Haradhan Rakhal Dass ,[23] the accused used as genuine a forged certificate purporting to have been given to him by the headmaster of a school in order to obtain permission to sit for the entrance examination of the Calcutta University and it was held that a fraudulent or dishonest intent had not been established and that, therefore, the accused was not guilty under s 471 of the IPC . In this case all the immediate gain that the accused could have obtained by means of the false certificate was permission to sit for the entrance examination of the Calcutta University. Assuming that he passed that examination and there afterwards obtained distinction, he might have eventually at some future time derived some material benefit from having done so; yet such material benefit would be very remote. But where a candidate for a lucrative post made a false statement in his application and also produced a forged certificate, the applicant's intention being to obtain a lucrative appointment immediately, the gain which he might have obtained through his deception, had it succeeded, could be measured in rupees, and it would have been a wrongful gain.[24]

Mere permitting of cattle by the accused to stray does not establish his intention to cause, or knowledge that he was likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to the public or any person.[25]

6. Gain or Loss must be by Unlawful Means

The term 'wrongful loss' is defined under s 23, IPC, and according to that definition, loss would be wrongful if it is done by wrongful means.[26]The Code does not define the word 'unlawful', though it says in s 43 what the word 'illegal' means. But the two concepts bear an identical meaning as was explained by the law commissioners.[27] The words 'by unlawful means' in the definition of 'wrongful gain' and 'wrongful loss' are intended to refer to an act which would render the doer liable either to a civil action or to a criminal prosecution. Thus the holder of the stakes of a wager is not legally entitled to the stakes; he may return them to the depositors and may be compelled to do so by civil suit; he may absolve himself from civil liability by paying them over, before they are demanded back, to the winner; but there is no law or rule which justifies him in converting them to his own use. If he does so, he acts with the intention of causing to himself 'wrongful gain' within the meaning of115 the definition and he acts 'dishonestly'. The stakeholder may not have caused wrongful loss to the depositor but he has caused wrongful gain to himself.[28] Obtaining money by deception or false pretences is to obtain money by unlawful means.[29] Taking away cattle belonging to a person forcibly and against his consent is depriving him of property to which he was legally entitled by unlawful means, and, therefore, causing wrongful loss to him.[30]

Gain to One and Loss to Other by Lawful Means--Instances

In Jamesetji's case,[31] the servant of a liquor contractor was entrusted with liquor by his master for sale. For selling the liquor, he was to receive a certain quantity for himself and was to account for the remainder to his master, with whom he made a legal contract that he would not adulterate it with water before selling it. In violation of that contract he adulterated the liquor with water and sold it at the rate of unadulterated liquor, appropriating the profit thus made to his own use. It was held that he obtained by unlawful means, namely, adulteration, property to which he was not legally entitled. However, a milkman who sells adulterated milk cannot be said to cause wrongful loss to his customers.[32]

Where the case was that a particular crop belonged to A and that B by deceit unlawfully reaped it; it was held that the allegations involved that B intended to gain unlawfully by taking possession of the crop and to cause loss unlawfully to A by doing so.[33]

Where the accused had gathered and demolished a part of the terrace and the walls, which another person had built, on the pretext that the construction was an encroachment on a public street, it was held that the demolition of the building was not justified by law and that the loss caused to the owner of the building by reason of the demolition was caused by unlawful means within the meaning of this section. Further, if the demolition of the walls and the terrace undertaken by the accused had no justification in law, then the loss caused to the complainants by reason of that demolition must be deemed to be by unlawful means. Unless these accused have got a right of abating a public nuisance, the acts done by them can in no sense be deemed to be lawful.[34]

Where A was keeping, in storage, rice and paddy, delivered to him on behalf of the government, it was held that the removal of the food grains, from storage, by A's partner to his own house and telling the civil supply officer that he would not return the same, amounted to intentionally keeping A out of the property which had been kept in his charge by the government and wrongful loss to A and dishonest removal within the meaning of s 403 of the IPC .[35]116

No Gain to One and no Loss to Other by Unlawful Means--Instances

Where A closed a water-course and thereby prevented the water from flowing to B's fields, but there was nothing to show that B had a legal right to the water intercepted, it was held that no wrongful loss was caused to B.[36] It is not unlawful to do something on your own land without trespassing on your neighbour's land which necessarily causes injurious effects to the property of your neighbour.[37]

Where the accused was sold rice by a famine relief officer at 16 seers per rupee on condition that he should sell it at the rate of 15 seers, instead of which he was discovered having sold it at the rate of 12 seers, it was held that it did not amount to a crime, the reason given for the finding being, that as the property on sale became vested in him, it could not be said that his sale at otherwise than the stipulated rate caused wrongful loss to the famine relief officer, nor was there a gain on the part of the accused by unlawful means, for the rice having been sold to him and he having paid for it, it was not unlawful for him to sell it again at such price as he though fit.[38]

7. Acquisition, Retention and Deprivation

As pointed out in the third clause of this section the words 'gaining wrongfully' or 'losing wrongfully' need not be confined only to the actual acquisition or to the actual deprivation of property and would cover also cases of wrongful retention of property in the one case and wrongfully being kept out of property in the other.[39] 'Wrongful gain' according to the definition in s 23 is constituted not only by wrongful acquisition of property (which is in accordance with the ordinary meaning of the words) but also by wrongful retention of the same, even though such retention does not result in any profit to the person retaining it; 'wrongful loss' is, therefore, constituted not only by wrongful deprivation of property, but also by being wrongfully kept out the same.[40] For wrongful loss or gain, the property must be lost to the owner, or the owner must be wrongfully kept out of it.[41] The reference to being kept out of the property in this section means being kept out of possession of property. If a man is kept out of possession of his property, wrongful loss can be said to have been caused.[42]

In Matabar Shekh v Emperor ,[43] the accused was an employee of a steamer company and his business was to check the tickets of the passengers. The complainant, a passenger, had no ticket, and the accused, therefore, took possession of his umbrella as security, so that the complainant might be compelled to pay his fare. It was held that as he did not intend either to make any wrongful gain to himself by compelling payment of the fare or to cause any wrongful loss to the complainant, who was bound to pay his fare, there was no wrongful gain or wrongful loss.117

8. Wrongful Loss or Gain Covers Temporary Loss or Gain

Wrongful loss covers temporary wrongful loss, and wrongful gain covers temporary wrongful gain.[44] If the owner is kept out of the possession with the object of depriving him of the benefit arising from possession even temporarily, the case will come within the definition. But where the owner is kept out of possession temporarily not with any such intention, but only with the object of causing him trouble in the sense of mere mental anxiety, and with the ultimate intention of restoring the thing to him without exacting or expecting any recompense, it is difficult to say that the detention amounts to causing wrongful loss in any sense.[45] The gain or loss contemplated need not be a total acquisition or a total deprivation, but it is enough if it is a temporary retention of property by the person wrongfully gaining or a temporary 'keeping out' of property from the person legally entitled. This is clearly brought out in illust (1) to s 378 . Thus, the taking out of aircraft owned by government by a person for an unauthorised flight gives him the temporary use of the aircraft for his own purpose and temporarily deprives the owner of the aircraft, namely, the Government, of its legitimate use for its purposes. Such use being unauthorised is a gain or loss by unlawful means. It is wrongful gain to the person and wrongful loss to the government.[46]

In Nabi Buksh v Queen-Empress ,[47] the Calcutta High Court observed:

> To constitute the offence of theft it is not necessary that the taking should be permanent or with an intention to appropriate the thing taken, or that there should be wrongful gain to some one in addition to wrongful loss to the real owner.[48] ...Of course, when the owner is kept out of possession with the object of depriving him of the benefit arising from the possession even temporarily, the case will come within the definition. But where the owner is kept out of possession temporarily not with any such intention, but only with the object of causing him trouble in the sense of mere mental anxiety, and with the ultimate intention of restoring the thing to him without exacting or expecting any recompense, it is difficult to say that the detention amounts to causing wrongful loss in any sense.

Gain by Wrongful Retention--Instances

Under this section a person is said to gain wrongfully also when he retains wrongfully.

When delivery of VP parcels cannot be made to the addressees, the postman (accused) is bound to return the parcels to the post master. But where, instead of doing this, he signed the postal receipts himself and made it appear that they were received by some person for and on behalf of the addressees and the accused retained them for himself, such retention is wrongful gain within the meaning of this section.[49]

9. Burden of Proof

The burden of proving wrongful loss is on the complainant.[50]Where wrongful loss is caused, it may be presumed that the accused intended to cause wrongful loss as every man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act.[51]118

1 Bhima Mahapatra v Krishna Chandra Rath (1966) 32 Cut LT 788 ; Ram Krishna v Kishan Shivraj (1974) Mah LJ 659, 661, (1974) 76 Bom LR 424 .

2 RL Mallick v PG Menon (1968-69) 73 CWN 371.

3 Local Govt v Madho Patwari AIR 1923 Nag 146 .

4 Re Nanak Singh(1968) 1 Andh LT 254, (1968) ILR AP 1094.

5 Krishna Kumar v Union of India AIR 1959 SC 1390, (1959) Cr LJ 881 .

6 Proceeding, 8 November 1866, 3 MHCR App (vi).

7 Aradhun v Myan Khan 24 WR 7, 8 (Cr); Dayal v Emperor AIR 1943 Oudh 280, 44 Cr LJ 640 .

8 Proceeding, 8 November 1866, 3 MHCR App (vi).

9 Aradhun v Myan Khan 24 WR 7, p 8 (Cr) .

10 Nabi Baksh v R 25 ILR Cal 416 .

11 Krishna Kumar v Union of India AIR 1959 SC 1390, (1959) Cr LJ 881 ; Harakrishna Mahatab v Emperor AIR 1930 Pat 209 .

12 Nabi Baksh v R 25 ILR Cal 416 .

13 Queen v Preonath Banerjee 5 WR 68 (Cr) ; Queen-Empress v Chum Chungo 22 ILR Cal 1022 (FB), overrulingProsonno Kumar Patra v Udoy Sant* 22 ILR Cal 669 and cases cited therein.

14 Bhima Mohapatra v Krishna Chandra Rath (1966) 32 Cut LT 788 .

15 Empress v Bandhu 8 ILR All 51 ; R v Nihal 9 ILR All 348 ; Romesh Chander v Hiru Mondul 17 ILR Cal 852 .

16 Sashi Bhusan v R 15 ILR All 210 .

17 Empress R v Bandhu 8 ILR All 51, (1885) All WN 326 .

18 Romesh Chander v Hiru Mondul 17 ILR Cal 852 .

19 Queen-Empress v Sita 8 ILR Bom 212 .

20 Paltu Goswami v Ram Kumar Das AIR 1960 Tri 40 .

21 Nga Ba Thein v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Rang 9 .

22 Jan Mahomed v Queen-Empress (1884) 10 Cal 584 .

23 Queen-Empress v Haradhan Rakhal Dass 19 ILR Cal 380 .

24 Nga Ba Thein v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Rang 9, p 11 .

25 Re Toorebaj Khan BUC 11.

26 Shiram & Anor v Thakurdas & Anor 1978 Cr LJ (Bom) 715 (Nagpur Bench).

27 First Report, s 658 .

28 Nag Te v King-Emperor 1 Cr LJ 730 (FB) overrulingQueen-Empress v Po Twe* (1881) SJLB, BUC 130.

29 Nadir Ali Barqa Zaidi v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1960 All 103, p 111 ; *Re MK Srinivasan*AIR 1944 Mad 410 ((2)), 46 Cr LJ 266 .

30 Queen v Madwill Chowkeedar 3 WR (Cr) 2 ; Tarinee Prosad Banerjee v Babii Diirga Mohan Dass 18 WR 8 (Cr) ; Queen v Preonath Banerjee 5 WR 68 (Cr) .

31 Jamesetji's case (1888) BUC 395.

32 Re Hiri(1888) BUC 367.

33 Naraindas v Kashi Prasad AIR 1935 All 264, (1935) All WR 36, (1935) All LJ 248 .

34 Gujjula Narasimhu v Nagur Sahi AIR 1934 Mad 95, p 97 .

35 Khandeshwar v State (1964) 1 Cr LJ 525, AIR 1964 Ori 119, (1963) ILR Cut 869 .

36 Tun Aung v Emperor 7 Cr LJ 448 .

37 Re *Athi Ayyar*AIR 1921 Mad 322, p 323 .

38 Queen v Lal Mohammed 22 WR 82 (2).

39 Dharmaendra Nath Shastri v Rex AIR 1949 All 353, p 358 .

40 Queen-Empress v Sir Churn Chungo 22 ILR Cal 1017, p 1024 .

41 Proceeding, 8 November 1866, 3 MHCR App (vi).

42 Budhan Singh v State AIR 1960 Pat 518, (1960) Cr LJ 1485, (1960) BLJR 275 .

43 Matabar Shekh v Emperor 11 Cr LJ 444, 14 CWN 936 .

44 Local Govt, CP v Madho Patwari AIR 1923 Nag 146, p 147, 23 Cr LJ 557 .

45 Queen-Empress v Sir Churan Chungo 22 ILR Cal 1017 (FB) ; overrulingProsonna Kumar Patra v Uddy Sant* 22 ILR Cal 669 .

46 KN Mehra v State of Rajasthan AIR 1957 SC 369, p 372, (1957) Cr LJ 552 .

47 Nabi Buksh v Queen-Empress 25 ILR Cal 416, p 418 .

48 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 378, illust (1).

49 Re *Mahalingayya Muddayya Pujari*AIR 1959 Mys 185 .

50 Bhima Mahapatra v Krishna Chandra (1966) Cut LT 788 .

51 Sheodani Singh v State of Bihar (1961) 2 Cr LJ 364, p 366, AIR 1961 Pat 362 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 24.

"Dishonestly".--

Whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing "dishonestly".

Comments

1. Meaning of 'Dishonestly'

This section defines the word 'dishonestly'. The word 'dishonestly' is used here in a technical sense which is at variance with its popular significance as implying deviation from probity. Dishonesty in law is at times different from the dishonesty of the market place.[52] The expression 'dishonestly' used in the Code should not, therefore, be confused with the commonly used word 'dishonesty' which is understood to involve an element of fraud or deceit.[53] The deceit is, however, not an ingredient of the definition of the word 'dishonestly'.[54]As will appear from the next section the two terms are not used in the same sense. An act may be fraudulent without being dishonest or dishonest without being fraudulent.[55] The definition in this section applies only to wrongful gain or wrongful loss.[56]

2. 'Dishonestly' refers only to Property

When a person does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss, he is said to do that thing 'dishonestly'. Hence the word 'dishonestly' is restricted in meaning to an intention to cause a wrongful gain or loss of property or pecuniary or economic gain or loss.[57]

It has been held that this section does not give an exhaustive definition of the word 'dishonestly'. It does not say that the word 'dishonestly' is applicable only when there is an intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person but, properly construed means, that cases of intention of causing such wrongful gain or loss are to be considered as coming within the wider class of dishonest actions.[58]119

3. 'With the Intention'

The question whether an act was dishonest or not does not depend, for its answer, on the question whether wrongful gain or wrongful loss was actually caused. The determining factor is the intention with which it was done.[59] It is the intention which is important and not whether a man is under a legal duty to disclose or suppress facts within his knowledge. Therefore, where a person with the intention of causing wrongful loss to another makes a false representation to him or suppresses certain facts, he will be said to have acted dishonestly even if the law does not require him to state the truth.[60] If the intention is not to cause wrongful loss but to conceal a fraud which had been previously committed, it is not the intention referred to in this section, even if wrongful loss might have been caused.[61]

4. Primary and not the Remote Intention must be looked at

The word 'intent', by its etymology, seems to have metaphorical allusion to archery, and implies 'aim' and thus connotes not a casual or merely possible result, foreseen perhaps not as an improbable incident, but not desired, but rather the one object for which the effort is made; and thus has reference to what has been called the dominant motive, without which the action would not have been taken.[62] In considering ss 24 - 25, it is the primary, and not the remote, intention of the accused that must be looked at.[63]

Where the accused without attending the necessary proportion of the first year course of law lectures presented a false certificate of having so attended and obtained admission to the second year law class and again presented the false certificate with a view to his obtaining a consolidated certificate necessary to enable him to become a candidate for pleadership examination, it was held that the certificate was made not only dishonestly but also fraudulently.[64]

The court has to look to the real intent in the mind of the accused person and not to speculate as to some other intent over and above it which might have presented itself to him.[65]Mere knowledge of the consequence is not the intention to cause them. It is one thing to entertain a certain intention and another to have the knowledge that one's act may possibly lead to a certain result.[66]

5. Antedating of Receipt for using Forged Receipt in lieu of Lost Genuine Receipt

The wrongful gain or wrongful loss involved in 'dishonestly' is pecuniary or economic gain or loss. The antedating of a receipt cannot be said to have been done 'dishonestly'.[67] Using forged receipts in lieu of genuine receipts which have been120 lost is not using them dishonestly.[68] In BK Birla v PN Agarwal ,[69] the Bombay High Court has held that the word 'dishonestly' as defined in the IPC implies that the act of investment of money in the two companies must have been done 'with the intention of causing wrongful gain' to the company or 'wrongful loss to another person'. If the accused invested the money by exercising the authority given to them by law, there is no question of dishonesty in such transactions. In order to do a thing dishonestly, there must be the intention to cause wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person.[70] In order to ascertain the existence or otherwise of dishonest intention, it is not necessary that there must be wrongful gain to the thief; it also does not matter whether the intention of the thief was, or was not, to derive profit from the property; it is sufficient if the removal of movable property causes wrongful loss to the owner.[71]

6. 'Intention' Distinguished from Motive

Motive is the longing for the satisfaction of desire which induces the mind to wish and then to intend doing something which would bring about the realisation aimed at. The word 'intention' is used to denote the mental attitude of a man who has resolved to bring about a certain result if he can possibly do so. He shapes his line of conduct so as to achieve his desired end.[72] Motive and intention are thus two different things. While motive is directed to the ultimate end, good or bad, which a person hopes to secure, his intention is concerned with the immediate effects of his acts. End cannot justify the means, in other words, the motive does not justify the intention.[73] The motive, object or design, of a person should never be confused with his intention.

7. Intentions and not Motives are Material

Criminal law regards only a man's intentions and not his motives. The motive of the creditor seizing his debtor's goods to coerce him to pay up his debt was certainly not to cause permanent loss of the goods to the debtor but he did cause him loss, however temporarily, and he did so intentionally. He was, therefore, held guilty of theft.[74] The law commissioners explained:[75]

> We do not find that it is permitted to any person to set up his private intentions, or to allege virtuous motives, simply as defence or excuse under a criminal charge. We hold with the English Criminal Law Commissioners that to allow any man to substitute for law his own notions of right would be in effect to subvert the law. To investigate the real motive, in each case, would be impracticable, and even if that could be done, a man's private opinion could not possibly be allowed to weigh against the authority of law.121

8. Intention must be to Cause Wrongful Gain or Wrongful Loss

For definition of 'wrongful gain' and 'wrongful loss' refer to Notes under s 23 of the IPC . Dishonesty involves wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another. It has been held that this section does not apply to a case where no pecuniary question arises.[76] If no wrongful gain or wrongful loss is caused, a thing is not done dishonestly.[77]For an act to be dishonest it is not necessary that the intention should be to cause both wrongful gain and wrongful loss. It is enough if the intention is to cause either wrongful gain or wrongful loss.[78]

A person, who, by falsely pretending to be the winner of a lottery prize, dishonestly induces the lottery officials to pay the prize to him, does not cause 'wrongful loss' to the rightful winner of the prize; but causes a 'wrongful gain' to himself by obtaining by false pretence what he is 'not legally entitled' to and therefore he acts 'dishonestly' within the meaning of this section.[79]

9. Wrongful Gain need not be to the Accused Himself

The question whether or not the act of the accused was dishonest does not, as a matter of fact, depend on the question whether wrongful gain or loss was actually caused. The determining factor is the intention with which payment is made.[80] The wrongful gain need not be to the accused himself.[81]

In Queen-Empress v Raghunath Rai ,[82] several Hindus, acting in concert, forcibly removed an ox and two cows from the possession of a Mohammadan, not for the purpose of causing 'wrongful gain' to themselves or 'wrongful loss' to the owner of the cattle, but for the purpose of preventing the killing of the cows, and it was held that there was no dishonest intention and that Hindus could not be properly convicted of dacoity, but only of riot. In a subsequent Division Bench case,[83] in which the facts were almost similar, a contrary view was taken and it was held that the offence of which the Hindus were guilty was dacoity under s 395, and not merely riot. Referring to the previous decision it was observed:

> We have the authority of Mr Justice Tyrrell, for saying that his judgment in the Queen-Empress v Raghunath Rai ,[84] was a judgment based solely on the facts found in that case. We have also his authority for saying that he never ruled that it is not theft to deprive a man of his property under the influence of religious prejudices and that in his opinion such a deprivation is theft, and might, according to circumstances, be dacoity. Mr Justice Tyrrell, informs us that in that case he was dealing with the facts found by the court below and his judgment must be so read.122

10. Proof and Presumption of Intention

For conviction of an offence of which dishonest intention is an essential ingredient such intention must be proved.[85]But intention being a mental act, it is not always possible to give direct evidence of it. It is nothing more than the expectation of particular consequences at the moment of action. 'The only possible way of discovering a man's intention is by looking at what he actually did, and by considering what must have appeared to him at the time of natural consequences of his conduct'.[86] This agrees with Austin's analysis of 'intention' which has been widely accepted. No doubt a common notion prevails that there is something more in intention than the expectation of consequences at the moment of action. This, however, is not correct.[87] In Queen v Hickin ,[88] Blackburn J said:

> I take the rule of law to be as stated by Lord Ellenborough in Rex v Dixon ,[89] in the shortest and clearest manner: 'It is a universal principle that when a man charged with doing an act (that is, a wrongful act without any legal justification) of which the probable consequence may be highly injurious the intention is an inference of law resulting from the doing of the act.

And although the appellant may have had another object in view, he must be taken to have intended that which is the natural consequence of the act. Reference may also be made to similar remarks of Lord Coleridge CJ, in Queen v Martin ,[90] and to R v Lobett ,[91] in which Littledale J, said: 'With respect to the intent of the defendant, a man must be taken to intent the natural consequences of what he has done'.

11. Presumption is that a Person intends to bring about the Possible Result of his Act

The result of these authorities is that, although there is no presumption that a person intends what is merely a possible result of his action or a result which, though reasonably certain, is not known to him to be so, still it must be presumed that when he voluntarily does an act, knowing at the time that in the natural course of events a certain result will follow, he intends to bring about that result.[92] Every man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act and it is from the consequences that the court has often to presume his intention in doing a particular act.[93] A dishonest intention may, therefore, be presumed from the facts and circumstances of a case,[94] but only if an unlawful act is done or if a lawful act is done by unlawful means.[95]123

Where the accused, without the consent of the proper authorities, took out a government aircraft for an unauthorised flight to Pakistan, it was a legitimate inference that he took out the aircraft with a dishonest intention.[1]

Where a person makes use of money belonging to another without the latter's consent, and contrary to the purpose for which possession thereof has been given by the latter to him, his intention must prima facie be dishonest within the meaning of s 24 .[2]

Where the accused manifestly took away the bamboos with the intention of causing wrongful loss to the proprietors who were entitled to them, it cannot be said that their intention was not dishonest within the meaning of the word as used in the IPC .[3] The suppression of a vital detail influencing the decision of a party to stand guarantee for another may be evidence of dishonesty and/or fraud.[4]

12. Claim of Right as a defence

The question of dishonest intention plays a prominent part in cases of theft. In such cases the accused often asserts a claim of right. To constitute theft, it is sufficient if property is removed, against his wish, from the custody of a person who has an apparent title or even a colour of right to such property.[5] In Hari Bhuimali v Emperor ,[6] Woodroffe J said:

> In criminal law what is generally understood by theft and its kindred offences are such acts as those of the pickpocket, the shoplifter, the house-breaker, the dacoit and so forth--acts in fact of a truly criminal nature in which no claim of title is made. No doubt an accused cannot escape the penalty of crime by the mere pretence of a bona fide claim which has clearly no foundation. But I think that the Criminal Courts should not convict of theft any person who asserts a claim of right, unless it is in a position to say that claim is a mere pretence.

Justice Das of the Patna High Court agreed with this view.[7] The expression 'dishonestly' used in this Code should not be confused with the commonly used word 'dishonesty' which is understood to involve an element of fraud or deceit. To a charge of theft, the plea that the property was removed under the bona fide claim of right would not avail. For example, a person who bona fide believes that the fountain pen on his neighbour's desk is his, has no right in law to trespass into the neighbour's house and snatch away the pen without the latter's consent. The offence of theft is essentially against the possession of another of the movable property involved. The accused are thus clearly guilty of the offence charge against them.[8] But whenever there is an assertion of a claim of right, it is the bounden duty of the court to inquire into the question whether that claim is a bona fide claim or is a mere pretence. If when that claim is actually put forward, the court fails to decide124 the question whether the claim is a bona fide claim or is a mere pretence, the conviction cannot be sustained.[9]

13. Test of Dishonesty is the Mental Element of belief

A tenant cutting trees standing on his own agricultural land, and for which he has executed an agreement, which gives the landlord only a claim for compensation for trees so cut cannot be said to be acting 'dishonestly' within the meaning of this section and is not guilty of theft.[10] The test of dishonesty is the mental element of belief; and if a person believes that he has title to property although there is none, no offence is committed.[11]

14. Dishonest intention as against Joint Property

Dishonest intention consists, as defined in s 24 of the IPC, in causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss. A person is said to gain wrongfully when such person retains wrongfully, as well as when such person acquires wrongfully. A person is said to lose wrongfully when such person is wrongfully kept out of any property, as well as when such person is wrongfully deprived of property.[12] Therefore a co-owner of a movable property having a defined share can be held guilty of theft, if he is found to remove the joint property without even an implied consent of the co-owner with dishonest intention, that is, with a view to cause wrongful loss to the co-owner and consequently wrongful gain to himself or anybody else. Joint possession of the parties does not alter the liability of the accused.[13]

52 Sardar Singh v Emperor AIR 1934 All 711 ; Budhan Singh v State AIR 1960 Pat 518 .

53 Boddepalli Lakshminarayana v Suvvari Sanyasi Appa Rao AIR 1959 AP 530, p 533 .

54 Vimla v Delhi Admn AIR 1963 SC 1572, (1963) 2 Cr LJ 434, (1963) All LJ 999, (1963) MLJ (Cr) 560 .

55 Kedar Nath Chatterji v King-Emperor 5 CWN 897 ; Emperor v Mohit Kumar Mukherjee AIR 1926 Cal 89 ; Sanjiv Ratnappa v Emperor AIR 1932 Bom 545 ; Balaram Rai v Emperor 32 ILR Cal 775, p 779, Cr LJ 368.

56 Sanjiv Ratnappa v Emperor AIR 1932 Bom 545, p 547 ; Ramsharanagat Singh v State of Bihar 1966 Cr LJ 856, p 861 .

57 Ram Krishna v Shivraj 1974 Mad LJ 659, p 661 ; Jagdish Prasad v State of Rajasthan 1981 Raj Cr C 101 .

58 Baju Jha v Emperor AIR 1929 Pat 60, p 63 .

59 Dharamdas Lilaram v Emperor AIR 1932 Sind 169, p 173 ; Re *Ram Bilas*AIR 1955 Mad 600, 15 Cr LJ 688 ; King-Emperor v Srinvasan 25 ILR Mad 726 .

60 Kuldip Singh v State AIR 1954 Punj 31, p 33 .

61 Queen-Empress v Girdhari Lal 8 ILR All 653, p 662 .

62 Bhagwant Appaji v Kedari Kashinath 25 ILR Bom 202, p 226 .

63 Queen-Empress v Haradhan 19 ILR Cal 380 ; Queen-Empress v Girdhari Lal 8 ILR All 653 .

64 Queen-Empress v Soshi Baushan 15 ILR All 210 .

65 Queen-Empress v Syed Hussain 7 ILR All 403 .

66 Queen-Empress v Rayapadayachi 19 ILR Mad 240 .

67 Jagdish Prasad v State of Rajasthan (1981) Raj Cr C 101 .

68 Queen-Empress v Sheo Dayal 7 ILR All 459 .

69 BK Birla v PN Agarwal (1990) 1 Crimes 440 (Bom) .

70 Jagdish Prasad v State of Rajasthan (1981) Raj Cr C 101 .

71 Ahmad v State (1967) Cr LJ 1053, AIR 1967 Raj 190, (1967) Raj LW 54 .

72 Russell on Crimes, eleventh edn, p 44.

73 Sheodani Singh v State of Bihar AIR 1961 Pat 362, p 364 .

74 Re Balok Khan 4 SLR 38; Vithoo v Emperor, 7 NLR 185 ; Waris Ali v Emperor 7 NLR 180, 13 IC 919 .

75 First Report, s 114 ; Dawkins v Lord Pouler LR 5 QB 94, 112 ; Bowen v Hall 6 QBD 333 .

76 Sanjiv Ratnappa v Emperor AIR 1932 Bom 545, p 547 .

77 State of Uttar Pradesh v Joti Prasad AIR 1962 All 582 .

78 Ajodhya Nath Parlu v Emperor AIR 1920 Pat 582, p 583 ; WS Shamarsundariah v State of Mysore (1968) Cr LJ 1149, (1968) 1 Mysore LJ 294 .

79 Nga Thayin v Emperor AIR 1914 LB 220 .

80 Dharamdas Lilaram v Emperor AIR 1932 Sind 169, p 173, Re *Ram Bilas*AIR 1915 Mad 600, 15 Cr LJ 688 ; Kalyanmal Mulchand Marwari v Emperor AIR 1937 Nag 89 .

81 PS Hay v Emperor AIR 1925 Oudh 469 .

82 Queen-Empress v Raghunath Rai 15 ILR All 22, (1892) All WN 220 .

83 Queen Empress v Ram Baran 15 ILR All 299 .

84 Queen-Empress v Raghunath Rai 15 ILR All 22, (1892) AWN 220 .

85 Sarsar Singh v Emperor AIR 1934 All 711 ; Venkatapathi v Kalaman 1936 MWN 1017 .

86 Stephen's History of the Criminal Law, Vol II, p 111.

87 Empress v Girdhari Lal 8 ILR All 653, 659.

88 Queen v Hickin (1868) LR 3 QB 375 .

89 Rex v Dixon 3 M&S, p 15.

90 Queen v Martin (1881) 8 QBD 58 .

91 R v Lobett (1839) 9 C&P 462, p 466 .

92 Emperor v Lakshman Raghunath 26 ILR Bom 558, p 562, 4 Bom LR 280 .

93 Sheodeni Singh v State of Bihar AIR 1961 Pat 362, p 364 ; Empress v Girdhari Lal 8 ILR All 653, p 659 .

94 FS Hay v Emperor AIR 1925 Oudh 469 .

95 Sarsar Singh v Emperor AIR 1934 All 711 .

1 KN Mehra v State of Rajasthan AIR 1957 SC 369 .

2 NN Burjorjee v Emperor AIR 1935 Rang 453, p 455 .

3 Lal Mahommad v Emperor AIR 1931 Pat 337, p 338 .

4 N Vaghul v State of Maharashtra 1987 Cr LJ 385, (1987) 2 Crimes 289, (1987) 1 Rep 402, (1986) Bank J 634 (Bom), (1986) 3 Bom CR 422 .

5 Queen-Empress v Gangaram Sant Ram 9 ILR Bom 135 ; Pandita v Rahimulla Akundo 27 ILR Cal 501 ; Alguraswami Tevan v Emperor 28 ILR Mad 304, 2 Cr LJ 754 .

6 Hari Bhuimali v Emperor (1905) 9 CWN 974, 2 Cr LJ 836 .

7 Ajodhya Nath Parhi v Emperor AIR 1920 Pat 582, p 583 .

8 Boddepalli Lakshminarayana v Suvvari Sanyasi Appa Rao AIR 1959 Andh Pra 530, p 533 .

9 Ajodhya Nath Parhi v Emperor AIR 1920 Pat 582, p 583 ; Empress of India v Budhsingh 2 ILR All 101 .

10 Reddi Yeranna v Emperor AIR 1915 Mad 270(1) .

11 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 11, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, p 675, para 1263; R v Turner (1971) 2 All ER 443, [1971] 1 WLR 901 (CA) .

12 KN Mehra v State of Rajasthan AIR 1957 SC 369 .

13 Ramsharangat Singh v State of Bihar 1966 Cr LJ 856 (Pat) (DB) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 25.

"Fraudulently".--

A person is said to do a thing fraudulently if he does that thing with intent to defraud but not otherwise.

Comments

1. Scope

The section, simply explains the circumstances or the manner, when one is said to act fraudulently. As a definition, s 25 is obviously defective since it leaves undetermined125 the meaning of the word 'defraud'.[14] The section does not define or describe 'fraudulently' but only limits its sense for the purposes of the Code. Fraud is a term which enters largely in the law of contract and it has there received a meaning much too extensive for the purpose of the Code. This section, therefore, enacts that there can be no fraud unless there is an intention to defraud. Thus the code eliminates from its consideration all constructive frauds and only confines the use of the term of deception, planned and practiced.

In Emperor v Harjivan Vallejo ,[15] Faucet J had expressed the view that the word 'defraud' is popularly used in a sense which differs from its legal sense and that a man may be said to intend to defraud in a popular sense whenever he resists a claim which is well founded in law, and that in this statue the word is used in its popular sense. But dissenting from this, in Visram Valji v Emperor ,[16] Beaumont CJ, with whom Wadia J agreed, observed:

> I do not agree with the learned Judge. To my mind 'defraud' always denotes some form of dishonesty. But even if the learned Judge were right in thinking that the expression 'intend to defraud' has one meaning in law and another in popular usage, I fail to see why the court should give to the expression its popular, rather than its legal, meaning in a penal statute as against an accused person. Such a construction infringes the principle that penal statutes must be construed strictly.

According to Le Blanch J: 'By fraud is meant an intention to deceive, whether it be from any expectation of advantage to the party himself, or from ill-will towards the other, the fact is immaterial'.[17]

The definition of 'fraudulently' does not give much help as it is used tautologically. The word 'fraud' or 'fraudulently' must be understood in the general and popular sense. It involves two elements, namely: (a) deceit, and (b) injury caused or likely to be caused to the person deceived or someone else in consequence of the deception of a person by deceiving another derives any advantage from it, which he could not have had, if the truth had been known and thereby causes injury to the body, mind or reputation of the deceived, he commits fraud. In all cases where an advantage has been obtained by the deceiver, there will be invariably an equivalent disadvantage in loss or risk of loss to the deceived or to someone else.[18]

2. Double Meaning of Fraud

The word 'defraud' is of double meaning in the sense that it either may or may not imply deprivation. It should not be confined to transactions of which deprivation of property forms a part. Thus it is not an essential quality of fraud that it should result in or aim at the deprivation of property, i.e., a 'fraudulent' act need not necessarily be a 'dishonest' act, though that may often be the case.[19]126

3. Elements of Fraud

The elements which make an act fraudulent are deceit or intention to deceive and in some cases even mere secrecy. Where there is neither the intention to deceive nor secrecy, the act though dishonest, is not fraudulent. A dishonest concealment of facts is a deception.[20] Where property is removed openly in the light of day and there is no question of concealment, secrecy, clandestine action, deception or anything else covered by the word, the act cannot be said to be done fraudulently.[21] The matter also came up for consideration before the Supreme Court in Vimla (Dr) v Delhi Admn ,[22] and it has observed thus:

> The expression 'defraud' involves two elements, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived. Injury is something more than economic loss, that is, deprivation of property, whether movable or immovable, or of money, and it will include any harm whatever caused to any person in body, mind, reputation or such others. In short, it is a non-economic or non-pecuniary loss. A benefit or advantage to the deceiver will almost always cause loss or detriment to the deceived. Even in those rare cases where there is a benefit or advantage to the deceiver, but no corresponding loss to the deceived, the second condition is satisfied.

The person who deceives another and derives benefit or advantage, possibly causing injury to the deceived in body, mind or reputation and such others commits fraud and even if no corresponding loss or disadvantage to the deceived is established, it could be inferred that if one gets benefit or advantage; someone will incur loss or disadvantage to some extent.[23]

4. Deceit

Deceit is the first element in fraud. A person is deceived when he is induced to believe as true that which is untrue. As to what is sufficient to constitute deception must be decided on the facts of each case.[24]

(a) Means of Deceit

The means of deceit are false representations, and representations may be made by writing, words or conduct.[25]

(b) Representation is Essential for Deceit

A representation of some sort, however mad, is essential, and without it one person cannot be said to deceive another, though the latter may as a fact be deceived. Deceiving involves causing a person to believe the false representation to be true. Thus where A, knowingly buys watered milk from B, and prosecutes him for cheating, B cannot be said to have deceived A.[26]127

(c) False Representation must be of Fact and not of Opinion

The representation must be of a fact and not of a mere matter of opinion. A man, in seeking to influence another, may express what opinion he likes, so long as he does not misrepresent the facts upon which the opinion is based. Thus, a vendor of property may say that in his opinion the property is worth so much, but he must not falsely state that he gave so much for it. So a statement of confident expectation of profits must be distinguished from an assertion as to profits actually made.[27] A dishonest concealment of fact is deception for the purposes of cheating.[28]

5. Injury

Mere deceit is not fraud.[29] Fraud also involves another element, namely, some injury to the person deceived. The word 'injury' denotes any harm whatever illegally caused to any person in: (a) body; (b) mind; (c) reputation; or (d) property.[30]There are thus two elements in a fraudulent act: (a) An intention to deceive; and (b) an intention to thereby cause an injury of one or other of the four kinds specified.

As regards the fourth kind of injury, viz, to property, a person suffers injury in respect thereto either by its destruction or damage, or by loss of possession thereof; and if the intention of a person is to deceive another, and thereby cause a wrongful loss of possession of property, his intention is dishonest, and his act is done, dishonestly.[31]If, on the other hand, his intention is to cause, by means of his deceit, destruction or damage to that other's property, or injury to him in his body, mind or reputation, his intention is fraudulent, and his act is done fraudulently.[32]

The expression 'intent to defraud' implies deceit and consequent injury or intended injury, i.e., the infringement or intended infringement of some legal right possessed by the person deceived. It does not necessarily imply that the person deceived should be deprived of property. It includes deceit which causes or is likely to cause any damage or harm to the person deceived in respect of his property or otherwise.[33] The word 'fraudulently' is not confined to transactions in which there is wrongful gain on the one hand or wrongful loss on the other, either actual or intended. The word 'defraud', which is not defined in the Code may or may not imply deprivation, actual or intended.[34] In Re Somasundaram Pillay,[35] Ayling J, referred to Emperor v Ali Hasan ,[36] and Kotamraju Venkatrayudu v Emperor ,[37] and observed:

> It was clearly laid down that an intent to defraud implies something more than mere deceit. The object for which the deceit is practiced has to be considered. The advantage intended to be secured, or the harm intended to be caused need not have relation to property to be such as is implied in the term 'dishonestly' but it must be something to which the party perpetrating the deceit is not entitled either legally or equitably.

128

The latter portion of this observation cannot, however, be supported. The intention to defraud need not necessarily be to obtain something which a person is not legally or equitably entitled. It is sufficient if by means of the perpetration of the fraud somebody is defrauded.[38] Intention to cause injury clearly exists in a case where a judgment-debtor gives an undertaking to the court not to transfer certain property and immediately thereafter transfers the same by a sale-deed in favour of his son with the knowledge that the son would be in a position to claim the property as his own. The object of the transfer is thus to injure the creditor and to prevent execution against the property.[39] The definition of injury in s 44 of the Code is very wide. Priyanath Gupta v Lal Jhi Chowkidar ,[40] shows how the threat of a decree that could not be executed by any competent authority, is a threat of harm or injury within the meaning of the Code.[41]

6. 'To do a thing'

To defraud is to deprive by deceit; it is by deceit to induce a man to act to his injury. To put it more tersely 'to deceive' is, by falsehood to induce a state of mind: 'to defraud' is by deceit to induce a course of action.[42]

7. Fraud and Forgery

Where there is an intention to deceive and to obtain an advantage by means of the deceit, there is fraud and if a document is fabricated with that intent, it is forgery.[43]

8. Intent to Defraud

The expression 'with intent to defraud' used in s 25 is thus of great significance for the proper construction of this section. The essential elements to constitute an intent to defraud are: (a) an intent to deceive another, and (b) an intent to cause, by that deception, injury to some person (ordinarily but not necessarily, the person deceived). The injury intended need not necessarily be pecuniary, or even economic, amounting to a deprivation of property, but may be any harm, whatsoever, to any person in body, mind or reputation. The words 'intent to defraud' are not synonymous with 'intent to deceive'. These words indicate not a bare intent to deceive, but an intent to cause a person to act, or to omit to act, as a result of deception, played upon him, to his disadvantage. Fraud, thus, involves two concepts, namely: (a) deceit; and (b) injury to some person as a result of such deception.[44]

(a) No Fraud unless there is Intention to Defraud

There can be no fraud unless there is an intention to defraud. A general intention to defraud without an intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss129 to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction.[45] Justice Maule, R v Nash , stated:[46] 'There may be an intent to defraud without the power or the opportunity to defraud', and at p 503; 'It is not necessary that any person should be in a situation to be defrauded.

An offence is committed under s 471 whenever a document known or believed by the accused to have been forged is used as genuine with the intention that some person should, thereby, be deceived, and by means of such deception that either an advantage should accrue to the person so using the document or injury should befall some other person or persons.[47] Where the accused altered the date of the certified copy of a decree sought to be executed by him from 2-24 August under the erroneous impression that the decree had become time-barred while the decree in fact was within time by reason of a subsequent amendment, it was held that a sufficient intent to defraud was involved in the advantage directly aimed at by the accused on the basis of the altered dates, and it was immaterial that the alterations were brought about under an erroneous impression that the decree was time-barred. A fraud was attempted upon the court. It was unnecessary for the prosecution to establish further an intent to cause loss or risk of loss.[48] The question whether fraud was fruitless or unnecessary is immaterial. Justice Norris observed:

> Let a person's title to property be ever so good, yet if, in the course of an action brought against him to gain possession of the property, he uses by way of supporting his title, though there may be no necessity for the use of it, a forged document, such as this hiba (gift), I am clearly of opinion that he uses it fraudulently.[49]

(b) Words 'Intent to Defraud' not Synonymous with 'Intent to Deceive'

The words 'with intent to defraud' in this section, indicate not a bare intent to deceive, but an intent to cause a person to act, or to omit to act, as a result of deception, played upon him to his disadvantage. This is the most extensive meaning that may be given to the expression 'with intent to defraud' in the IPC, and the words 'but not otherwise' clearly show that the words 'with intent to defraud' are not synonymous with 'intent to deceive' and require some action resulting in some disadvantage which, but for the deception, the person deceived would have avoided.[50]

When the prosecution has not proved that the accused has in any way benefitted by getting the petrol coupons nor it is suggested that he utilised them in the black market or otherwise in order to get a profit and when the conspiracy is not proved, it cannot be said that the accused would have knowingly or willfully made false representation with dishonest or fraudulent intention.[51]

9. Only Primary Intention to be Looked at

In construing ss 24 - 25 of the IPC, the primary, and not the more remote, intention must be looked at.[52] The question of primary and secondary intention generally arises130 in cases of forgery. In some cases, it has been held that it would not amount to forgery under the IPC, if the intention with which a false document was made was to conceal a fraud which had been previously committed.[53] But, dissenting from this view, it has been held in other cases that even if the intention with which the false entries are made is to conceal a fraudulent or dishonest act previously committed, the intention would be to defraud and the case would fall within s 477A of the IPC .[54] As to whether or not there is an intent to defraud in any particular case manifestly must depend on the actual circumstances of that case.

Where the real purpose of an alteration of accounts was not to defraud but to remove the evidence of a crime, it was held that no offence under s 465 or s 477A was committed.[55]

10. Distinction between 'Dishonestly' and 'Fraudulently'

There is a significant difference between the word 'dishonestly' defined in s 24 and 'fraudulently' defined in s 25 of the IPC . In order to do a thing dishonestly there must be an intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain of property, but in order to do a thing fraudulently it is not necessary that there should be the intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain of property. The legislature advisedly uses the terms 'dishonestly' and 'fraudulently'. To say that to do a thing fraudulently there must be the intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain would be attributing redundancy to the Legislature. On the other hand, the words 'dishonestly' and 'fraudulently' are used to denote two different things.[56]The difference between an act done dishonestly and an act done fraudulently is this. If there is the intention by the deceit practised to cause wrongful loss that is dishonesty; but even in the absence of such an intention, if the deceitful act wilfully exposes any one to risk of loss, there is fraud.[57] The word 'defraud' is of double meaning in the sense that it may or may not imply deprivation. The word 'fraudulently' is not confined to transactions in which there is wrongful gain on the one hand, or wrongful loss on the other, either actual or intended. The word 'defraud', which is not defined in the Code, may or may not imply deprivation, actual or intended. On the other hand a person is said to do a thing 'dishonestly' if he does it with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another.[58] An act may be dishonest and yet not fraudulent.[59]A dishonest act is not necessarily a fraudulent act. The elements which make an act fraudulent are deceit or intention to deceive and in some cases even mere secrecy. Where there is neither the intention to deceive nor secrecy, the act, though131 dishonest, is not fraudulent.[60] On the other hand, an act may be fraudulent though not dishonest.[61]

11. Illustrative Cases

A, desiring to appear at an examination in order to qualify as an engineer on ocean-going steamers presented a false testimonial, of service and good character, such a testimonial being a condition precedent to appearance at the examination. It was held that he acted 'fraudulently' and was guilty of forgery.[62] Similarly the use of a forged document of title in an action,[63] or of forged letter of recommendation for a vacant post[64] are both fraudulent, but not the fabrication of receipts in lieu of lost genuine ones.[65]

A presented to B, the principal of a college, a false certificate purporting to have been signed by C, the principal of another college, to the effect that he A had attended a course of law lectures for one year in C's college.

Thereby A obtained admission into the second year law class in B's college, without paying the fee for the first year course. At the end of the year A again presented the false certificate to B, in order to obtain a consolidated certificate for the two years. Held, that A acted 'dishonestly', since he caused wrongful gain to himself of the first year course fee, and wrongful loss to the college thereof; and that he also acted 'fraudulently', since he intended to deceive B, and obtain admission to the second year class in consequence thereof.[66]

14 Queen-Empress v Abbas Ali 25 ILR Cal 512 (FB) ; Baburam Rai v Emperor 32 ILR Cal 775, 2 Cr LJ 358 .

15 Emperor v Harjivan Vallejo AIR 1926 Bom 231, 27 Cr LJ 1335 .

16 Visram Valji v Emperor AIR 1935 Bom 162, p 164 .

17 Haycraft v Creasy 2 East 92 (1908) followed in Queen-Empress v Vithal 13 ILR Bom 515 ; Queen-Empress v Khandu Singh 22 ILR Bom 768 ; Queen-Empress v Lalit Mohan 22 ILR Cal 313, p 322 ; Rash Behari v Emperor 35 ILR Cal 450 ; Balkrishna 32 ILR Bom 666.

18 Daniel Hailey Walcott & Anor v State (1968) Cr LJ 1282, (1968) 1 Mad LJ 229, (1968) Mad LJ 161 (Cr), (1968) Mad LW 49 (Cr), (1968) 2 ILR Mad 843, AIR 1968 Mad 349 .

19 Queen Empress v Abba Ali 25 ILR Cal 512 (FB) ; Baburam v R 32 ILR Cal 775, p 779 ; Emperor v Bansi Sheikh AIR 1924 Cal 718 .

20 Explanations to s 415 ; notes thereunder.

21 Y Kothandarama Reddi v Kandra Balarami Reddy AIR 1937 Mad 713 .

22 Vimla (Dr) v Delhi Admn (1963) Sup 2 SCR 585, AIR 1963 SC 1572, p 1576 ; re-affd in GS Bansal v Delhi Admn AIR 1963 SC 1577, p 1580 .

23 Daniel Hailey Walcott & Anor v State AIR 1968 Mad 349, (1968) Cr LJ 1282, (1968) 1 Mad LJ 220, (1968) Mad LJ 161 (Cr), 1968 Mad LW 49 (Cr), (1968) 2 ILR Mad 843 .

24 Ramanath v Emperor 3 Cr LJ 160, 2 Cal LJ 524 .

25 Khoda Bux v Bakeya 32 ILR Cal 941 ; Ramanath v Emperor 3 Cr LJ 160, 2 Cal LJ 524 ; Ramchand v Jai Dial 13 Cr LJ 456 .

26 R v Kalu Modock 18 WR 61 (Cr) .

27 Bellairs v Tucker 13 QBD 562 .

28 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 415, expln.

29 R v Jungle Lall 19 WR 40 (Cr) ; R v Lal Gumul 1870 NOW 11 ; R v Fateh 5 ILR All 217 ; R v Jiwanand 5 ILR All 221 ; R v Shankar 4 ILR Bom 657 .

30 See the Indian Penal Code 1860 1860, s 44 .

31 Ibid, s 24 .

32 See the Indian Penal Code 1860, s 25 .

33 Ram Chand Gurvala v King-Emperor AIR 1926 Lah 385 ; Surendra Nath Ghose v Emperor 38 ILR Cal 75 (FB), 11 Cr LJ 505, case-law discussed there.

34 Babu Ram Rai v Emperor 32 ILR Cal 775, 2 Cr LJ 358 .

35 Re Somasundaram Pillay(1909) 6 Mad LT 266, 3 IC 736, 10 Cr LJ 367.

36 Emperor v Ali Hasan (1906) 28 ILR All 358, 3 All LJ 149, (1906) All WN 48 .

37 Kotamraju Venkatrayudu v Emperor (1905) 28 ILR Mad 90 (FB) .

38 Re *Sivananda Mudali*AIR 1926 Mad 1072, p 1074 .

39 Crown Prosecutor v T Sellamuthu AIR 1940 Mad 271 .

40 Priyanath Gupta v Lal Jhi Chowkidar AIR 1923 Cal 590, 72 IC 508, 24 Cr LJ 396, 37 Cal LJ 526, 27 Cal WN 479 .

41 Baij Nath Bhagat v Emperor AIR 1940 Pat 486, p 492 .

42 Re London & Globe Finance Corpn Ltd[1903] 1 Ch 726, 72 LJ Ch 368, 51 WR 651, per Buckely J.

43 Queen-Empress v Mahommad Saeed Khan 22 ILR All 113, p 115 ; Emperor v Raghu Ram AIR 1933 All 525 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Joti Prasad AIR 1962 All 582 .

44 Katamaraju Venkata Rayadu v Emperor 28 ILR Mad 90, p 96 (FB) ; Vimla v Delhi Admn AIR 1963 SC 1572, (1963) 2 Cr LJ 434 ; S Dutt v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1966 SC 523, (1966) Cr LJ 549, 1966 SCD 139 ; Daniel v State (1968) Cr LJ 1282, p 1287, AIR 1968 Mad 349 .

45 Empress v Dhunum Kazee 9 ILR Cal 53, 11 Cr LJ 169 .

46 R v Nash 2 Dearsly's CCR, 500.

47 Emperor v Mohit Kumar AIR 1926 Cal 89, 27 Cr LJ 177 .

48 Baijnath Bhagat v Emperor AIR 1940 Pat 487 ; Re *Sevananda Mudali*AIR 1926 Mad 1072, p 1074 .

49 Empress v Dhunum Kazee 9 ILR Cal 53, p 61 .

50 S Dutt v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1966 SC 523, (1966) Cr LJ 549, (1966) SCD 139, [1966] 1 SCR 493 .

51 Jumman v State of Punjab AIR 1957 SC 466, (1957) Cr LJ 583 .

52 Queen-Empress v Haradhan 19 ILR Cal 380, p 391 ; the observations of Edge CJ, in Queen-Empress v Girdhari Lal 8 ILR All 653 .

53 Empress of India v Jiwanand 5 ILR All 221 ; Empress v Mozhar Hussain ILR 5 All 553 ; Queen-Empress v Girdharilal 8 ILR All 653 .

54 Emperor v Rash Bahari Das 35 ILR Cal 450, p 452 ; Lalit Mohan Sarkar v Queen-Empress 22 ILR Cal 313 ; Queen-Empress v Sabapati 11 ILR Mad 411 ; Emperor v Balkrishna Vaman Kulkarni 37 ILR Bom 666 .

55 Jyotish Chandra Mukherjee v Emperor 36 ILR Cal 956, 10 Cr LJ 531 .

56 Re *Sivanand Mudali*AIR 1926 Mad 1072, p 1074 ; Y Kothandarama Reddi v Kundra Balarami Reddy (1937) ILR Mad 713 .

57 Sukhamoy Maitra v Emperor AIR 1938 Pat 165, p 169 relying onQueen-Empress v Abbas Ali* 25 ILR Cal 512 (FB) ; Queen-Empress v Mahommad Saeed Khan 2 ILR All 113 ; Kotamraju Venkatarayudu v Emperor 28 ILR Mad 90 (FB) .

58 Queen-Empress v Abbas Ali 25 ILR Cal 512 (FB) ; overrulingQueen-Empress v Karadhan* 19 ILR Cal 380 ; Babu Ram Rai v Emperor 32 ILR Cal 775, 2 Cr LJ 358 .

59 Y Kothandarama Reddi v Kundra Balarama Reddy AIR 1937 Mad 713 .

60 K Jayarama Iyer v State of Hyderabad AIR 1954 Hyd 56, p 59 .

61 PL Causley v Emperor 43 ILR Cal 421, 17 Cr LJ 69 .

62 R v Abbas Ali 25 ILR Cal 512, overrulingR v Haradhan* 19 ILR Cal 380 ; R v Ali Hasan 28 ILR All 358, p 364 .

63 R v Dhunum Kazee 9 ILR Cal 58 .

64 Abdul Hamid v R 13 ILR Cal 349 .

65 R v Sheo Dayal 7 ILR All 459 ; R v Syed Husain 7 ILR All 403 .

66 R v Sosi Bhushan 15 ILR All 210 ; R v Ali Hasan 28 ILR All 358, p 364 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 26.

"Reason to believe".--

A person is said to have "reason to believe" a thing, if he has sufficient cause to believe that thing but not otherwise.

Comments

1. 'Reason to Believe'

This expression is used in ss 411 - 14 relating to receipt of stolen property. A person can be supposed to 'know' where there is a direct appeal to his senses. A person 'has reason to believe' under this section if he has sufficient cause to believe the thing but not otherwise.[67] The expression 'Reason to believe' has been defined under s 26, IPC, and it lays down that a person is said to have a 'reason to believe' a thing, if he has sufficient cause to believe that thing but not otherwise. A person can be supposed to know where there is a direct appeal to his senses. Suspicion or doubt cannot be raised to the level of 'reason to believe'.[68]132

2. 'If he has Sufficient Cause'

The words used are 'if he has sufficient cause to believe' and not 'if there is sufficient cause to believe'. This shows that the mere existence of a sufficient cause is not enough, if it was not brought to his knowledge. Sufficient cause must exist and he must know of its existence, otherwise he has no 'reason to believe a thing'. Suspicion will not amount to sufficient cause to believe, the word 'believe' is much stronger than the word 'suspect'.[69] The court has to see whether the person concerned had sufficient cause to believe. This section is confined to finding out whether an alleged offender could have sufficient cause to believe. Where circumstances exist on which two views may reasonably be possible, the court will not hold the accused guilty of the offence.[70]

3. 'Knowledge' and 'Reason to Believe'

'Knowledge' means state of mind entertained by a person with regard to existing facts which he has himself observed, or the existence of which has been communicated to him by persons whose veracity he has no reason to doubt.[71] The word 'knowledge' means 'a mental cognition' and not necessarily 'visual perception'. It implies a notice to the receiver of such facts as could not but have led him to believe that the property was stolen and could not but have been dishonestly obtained.[72]

The word 'knowledge' is much stronger than 'reason to believe' and the word 'believe' in s 414 of the IPC is a stronger word than 'suspect'. If the circumstances are such that a reasonable man would be led by the chain of probable reasoning to the conclusion or inference that the articles, that were found in the possession of the accused, were stolen properties, although the circumstances may fall short of carrying absolute conviction, to his mind, on the point, a person must be held to have reason to believe.[73] It is not enough that the receiver suspects the goods to be stolen property,[74] nor is it sufficient in such a case to show that the accused person was careless or that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen or that he did not make sufficient inquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired.[75]

67 Emperor v Latoor AIR 1930 All 33, p 34, 31 Cr LJ 288 .

68 Prabha Malhotra (Dr) & Ors v State (2000) Cr LJ 549 (All) .

69 Hamid Ali v State (1961) 2 Cr LJ 801, AIR 1961 Tri 46 .

70 Balwant Singh v Director of Inspection , *Income-tax*AIR 1969 Del 91, p 99 .

71 Emperor v Zamin AIR 1932 Oudh 28, p 30, 33 Cr LJ 275 .

72 Abdur Rahim v Emperor AIR 1927 Nag 40, p 41 .

73 Abdul Kareem v State of Mysore 1972 Cr LJ 217, p 218, (1971) 2 Mys LJ 337, 1971 Mad LJ 648 (Cr) .

74 Emperor v Sankara Narayana Chetti AIR 1917 Mad 418(1), 17 Cr LJ 312 .

75 Abdur Rahim v Emperor AIR 1927 Nag 40, p 41 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 27.

Property in possession of wife, clerk or servant.--

When property is in the possession of a person's wife, clerk or servant, on account of that person, it is in that person's possession within the meaning of this Code.

*Explanation.--A person employed temporarily or on a particular occasion in the capacity of a clerk or servant, is a clerk or servant within the meaning of this section.133

Comments

1. 'Possession and Custody'

The doctrine expressed in this section is that the physical or de facto possession of a wife, clerk or servant who holds the thing possessed for the husband or master, is the possession in law of the latter. The section is based on the distinction made by English law between 'possession' and 'custody'. When a person has power to deal with a thing as owner to the exclusion of any other person, (the corpus, or physical element of possession) and where he intends so to deal with it in case of need, (the animus, or mental element), then he has 'possession'. But wives, clerks and servants do not have this intention to deal with things in their charge, as owners. They exercise their control on behalf of the husband and master respectively. They do not, therefore, have the animus and, therefore, do not have possession, and are consequently said merely to have custody. The word 'custody' means 'such a relation towards a thing as would constitute possession, if the person having custody had it on his own account'.[76] Thus a servant who is carrying his master's gun to a blacksmith for repairs is not in possession of the gun, and cannot, therefore, be convicted for the unlawful possession of the arm under the Indian Arms Act 1878.[77]

2. Section Abolishes Distinction between Possession and Custody

The distinction is of importance in relation to the law concerning 'theft',[78] and the other offences based thereon, which are essentially offences against possession. Thus, by reason of s 27 of the IPC a third party who dishonestly deprives a man's wife of his goods in her charge, takes them out of the husband's possession, thus steals from him;[79] and likewise, the dishonest wife who, during her husband's absence, for instance, dishonestly converts his property in her charge, commits theft from him.[80]

This section abolishes the distinction, recognised in English law between 'possession' and 'custody'.[81] Strictly speaking the two ideas are mixed up in the section.[82]

Clauses 17--19 which were originally framed and were altered into this section ran thus:

> 17. When property is put into the possession of a person's wife or servant, in trust for that person, it is put into that person's possession if it was not before in his possession, and continues in his possession if it was before in his possession.134

> 18. Property in the possession of a child under 12 years of age, of a lunatic, or of an idiot, if such child, lunatic or idiot, be in the keeping of a guardian or guardians, is in the possession of such guardian or guardians.

> 19. Property is not said to be in the possession of any party other than a person.

It was felt that it was both arbitrary and inconsistent to attribute possession to cestui que trusts and to guardians of those things which are put into a wife's or servant's possession in trust for the husband or master, or into an idiot's possession, as for instance, without the consent or knowledge of the husband or master or guardian. The three clauses were consequently altered and simplified as enacted in the section, which does away with the distinction recognised in English Law between 'possession' and 'custody'.[83]

It is interesting to note that Mr Norton, senior, objected to cll 17 and 18 (the original sections corresponding to s 27) when the Code was under discussion, as it did not contain the words 'with the consent and knowledge of the husband or master'. The law commissioners, although they made some alterations which do not affect this point, though the objections would have weight if such constructive possession could be charged against the party possessing, as a criminal possession, in order to bring him within the definition of any offence, and to render him liable to a penal prosecution, but said that they were not aware that the clauses in question were capable of being so perverted under the provisions of the Code.[84]

3. Interpretation of Term 'Possession'

The term 'possession' in the Code has to be interpreted in the light of s 27, which by virtue of s 7 is applicable wherever the term is used in the Code.[85]

4. Section not Applicable to Offences under Special Laws

Section 27 extends the meaning of the expression 'possession' for the purpose of offences under the IPC in such a manner so as to include the possession of person's wife, clerk or servant to be on account of that person. The provisions contained in this section are not made applicable to cases or offences under any special law such as Rajasthan Prohibition Act[86] or the Arms Act.[87] The reason appears to be that the concept of possession under the Penal Code is not necessarily the same as that under any special law.

5. 'Wife'

A view has been taken that the word 'wife' seems to have been used in this section in a wide sense so as to include a permanent mistress.[88] But the correctness of this decision is open to doubt. It is, however, evident that the possession of the wife must be on account of the husband and during the continuance of the marital tie.135

6. 'Clerk or Servant'

The expression 'clerk or servant' is borrowed from English law and is used in some of the sections.[89]

The clerk or servant may be permanent or temporary or for a particular occasion.

7. 'On Account of that Person'

This clause is very important. It means that there must be recognition, express or implied that the property is held by the wife, clerk or servant merely as its custodian. When a man furnishes a house for his mistress' occupation, he may reasonably be presumed to be in possession of all articles therein which can reasonably be inferred to belong to him or to be in the possession of his mistress on his behalf. But the inference must be inapplicable to articles of which the mistress is in possession illegally or contrary to the provisions of law, especially when the article in question is such that he might well remain in ignorance that it was in his mistress' possession. The prosecution in cases of this kind must prove something more than that the article was found in the possession of the wife (or mistress). They must establish facts from which a court is justified in presuming that such possession was on account of the husband (or protector). That such must be the law, is clear from the terms of the section and also from the fact that under those terms a clerk or servant is placed in the same position as a wife.[90] It is true that s 27, IPC, requires proof that the possession of a wife, which is deemed to be the possession of the husband, must be shown to be on account of the husband. In proper cases a conclusion may however, be arrived at on the basis of presumption or inference under s 114 of the Evidence Act and on the circumstantial evidence in the absence of direct evidence of entrustment by him to the wife.[91]

Possession of wood by a forest inspector, who is a servant of the government, is possession of the government itself; and a dishonest removal of it, without payment of the necessary fees, from his possession, albeit with his actual consent, constitutes theft, within the meaning of s 378 of the Code, if that consent was unauthorised or fraudulent.[92] So also the possession of the driver and cleaner of a lorry is possession of their master.[93] But where a servant uses his master's premises as his private residence, the possession is his and not of the master.[94] Temporary possession by a wife should always be attributed to the husband.[95]

8. Doctrine of Possession cannot be Extended to Illegal Possession of Wife, Servant

The doctrine of possession cannot be extended to illegal possession of things by the wife on her own account.[96] Where there is nothing to show that a pistol is a sort of136article that one can reasonably expect to be for sale in the shop of the accused, possession by servant of the accused of the pistol is not possession on account of master.[1] But where in the husband's absence from home, the accused entered his house with his wife's consent in order to commit adultery with her, it was held, (a) that the accused was guilty of the offence specified in s 451, IPC ; (b) that the house being in the wife's possession on account of her husband, it was in his possession within the meaning of s 27, and the consent of the wife to the entry of the accused could not save him.[2] There are cases where the wife happened to associate with bad characters and some incriminating articles were recovered from the house, yet the husband could not be held responsible for the same as it was possible that he did not know of the presence of those incriminating articles in the house at all. This view is supported by Re Marimuthu Kavadan,[3] where it was held that the production of stolen property by the wife from the house in which both husband and wife were living could not warrant the conviction of the husband under s 411 . A similar view was taken in Emperor v Santa Singh .[4]

9. Joint Possession

In Beoparia v State of Ajmer ,[5] it was held that where a house is occupied jointly by the husband and wife, it cannot, in the absence of positive evidence be held that one is in exclusive possession. Hence, where stolen articles are produced from the house of the accused women, who are living with their husbands, the possession cannot be said to be exclusively theirs for the purpose of s 411 . The theory that the head of the family or the husband is responsible for the incriminating articles recovered from the house occupied by many persons jointly has long been exploded.[6] It is not the law that every person in a joint family should, merely on the ground that a bomb is found in the joint family residence, be liable to be tried for an offence under the Explosive Substances Act. If the article is found in a portion of the house, of which one member of the family has the exclusive use, then such member must prima facie be held to be liable. But if it is found in a portion of the house of which all the members of the family have the use, then prima facie, the managing head of the family is responsible. But in either case it is only a presumption which may be rebutted; and if the police act on information showing that an article found in a house is in the exclusive possession of one member of the family and the article is found in a portion of the joint family residence of which all the members of the family have the use, the head of the family is not liable merely on the ground that the article is found in a portion of the house, to which all the family can resort.[7]

10. Rebuttable Presumption about the Possession of Head of Family

In Re Wahib Basha,[8] the Madras High Court has ruled that possession implies dominion and consciousness in the mind of the person having dominion over an137 object that he has it and that he can exercise it. It is well settled that in the case of a family living jointly in the same house the head of the family is presumed to be in possession of any illicit article found in the house. The presumption is however rebuttable and weight attached to it must vary according to the circumstances. Such presumption also varies according to the improbabilities that the article owing to its size, etc, should have escaped notice of the head of the family, or any of the sons could have hidden it in the house without informing him or some such other reasons. Where two or more persons are charged with joint illegal possession, it is incumbent on the state to prove: (a) that each of the accused had either physical or constructive possession of the property; or (b) that one or more of them had possession thereof either physical or constructive on behalf of themselves and the other accused to the knowledge of latter.[9]

On the other hand in Ram Charan v Emperor ,[10] wherein the police and magistrate had proceeded on the assumption that property found in a house occupied by several male and female members residing therein should be considered to be in possession of the head of the family, it was held that this is a wholly unwarranted assumption and can have no place in cases in which possession and criminal intent form the essential elements of an offence. It is equally unwarranted to assume that everyone residing in the house should be deemed to be in possession of an article recovered from it. Possession implies dominion and consciousness in the mind of the person having dominion over an object that he has it and can exercise it. A person cannot be said to be in possession of a thing unless it is shown by evidence that he had dominion over it and knew that he had it. The mere fact that a thing is found in a house occupied by a person in common with others or at a place in the house which is as much accessible to others as to him is no proof that he was in possession of it.

11. Explanation

The explanation is in accordance with English Law where the word 'servant' includes any person acting as a servant for any particular purpose or occasion.[11]

12. Burden of Proof

Where an incriminating article is found in a house occupied by several persons the onus is not thrown upon those persons to establish their innocence. The onus of proving the conscious possession of the accused always rests on the prosecution and it never shifts on the accused.[12]

76 JW Seager v Hukma Kessa 24 ILR Bom 458 .

77 R v Tota Ram 16 ILR All 276 .

78 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 378 .

79 Ibid, illust (o).

80 R v Butchi 17 ILR Mad 401 .

81 Fatehchand Agarwalla v Emperor AIR 1917 Cal 123, p 127 (FB), 44 ILR Cal 477, 18 Cr LJ 385, per Mookerjee J.

82 Ibid, Fatehchand Agarwala v Emperor AIR 1917 Cal 123, per Chaudhari J.

83 Law Commissioner's First Report, ss 83 and 84 .

84 Fatehchand Agarwala v Emperor AIR 1917 Cal 123, p 135-36 (FB) .

85 Abdur Rahim v Emperor AIR 1927 Nag 40, p 41, per Chaudhary J, p 136.

86 Chela Ram v State of Rajasthan 1984 Cr LJ 1143, p 1144 (Raj) .

87 Norendra Nath Mazumdar v State AIR 1951 Cal 140, p 142 .

88 Banwari Lal v Emperor AIR 1914 Lah 455, p 456, 15 Cr LJ 172 .

89 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 381, and notes thereunder.

90 Banwari Lal v Emperor AIR 1914 Lah 455, p 457, 15 Cr LJ 172 ; Dharam Singh Mangal Singh v State AIR 1961 Punj 30 .

91 Prem Raj v State (1971) All Cr C 40, (1971) All Cr R 337 .

92 R v Hanmanta 1 ILR Bom 610, p 622 .

93 HJ Ransom v Triloki Nath AIR 1942 Oudh 318 .

94 Margam Aiyar v SJ Mercer AIR 1914 Mad 196, 15 Cr LJ 225 .

95 Wazir v Emperor AIR 1935 Pesh 68, 36 Cr LJ 1437 .

96 Banwari Lal v Emperor AIR 1914 Lah 455 .

1 Chhotey v Emperor AIR 1923 All 33(2), 23 Cr LJ 729 .

2 Anand Ram v Emperor 22 Cr LJ 118 .

3 Re *Marimuthu Kavadan*AIR 1941 Mad 684 .

4 Emperor v Santa Singh AIR 1944 Lah 339 (FB) .

5 Beoparia v State of Ajmer AIR 1955 Ajmer 10 .

6 Emperor v Santa Singh AIR 1944 Lah 339, 46 Cr LJ 1 (FB) .

7 Queen Empress v Sangam Lal 15 ILR All 129 ; Peary Mohan Das v D West 13 Cr LJ 65 ; Emperor v Budh Lal 29 ILR All 598, 6 Cr LJ 23 .

8 Re *Wahib Basha*AIR 1961 Mad 162 .

9 Satyanarayana v State AIR 1953 Mad 534, (1953) Cr LJ 1048, (1953) 1 Mad LJ 175, (1953) Mad WN 96 (Cr) .

10 Ram Charan v Emperor AIR 1933 All 437 .

11 Stephen's Criminal Law, p 210; Smith v Webb 12 TLR 450 .

12 Re Wahib Basha(1961) 1 Cr LJ 533, p 535, AIR 1961 Mad 162 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 28.

"Counterfeit".--

A person is said to "counterfeit" who causes one thing to resemble another thing, intending by means of that resemblance to practise deception, or knowing it to be likely that deception will thereby be practised.

[13][Explanation 1.--It is not essential to counterfeiting that the imitation should be exact.138

Explanation2--When a person causes one thing to resemble another thing, and the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived thereby, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the person so causing the one thing to resemble the other thing intended by means of that resemblance to practise deception or knew it to be likely that deception would thereby be practised.]

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

The present explns 1 and 2 were substituted for the original explanations by s 9 of the Metal Tokens Act 1889.

2. Counterfeit

It appears from the definition of the word 'counterfeit' that counterfeiting is a process by which one thing is caused to resemble another thing. It supposes that there is an original. The act of counterfeiting is the effect of producing another so as to resemble the original and the object of which is to practise deception or knowing it to be likely that the deception will thereby be practised.[14]

This section defines the word 'counterfeit' which occurs in chs 12 (offences relating to coin and government stamps) and 18 (offences relating to documents and to trade or property marks). The main ingredients of counterfeiting as laid down in this section are:

(i) causing one thing to resemble another thing, and (ii)
  (a) intending by means of that resemblance to practise deception, or
  (b) knowing it to be likely that deception will thereby be practised.[15]

Thus, if one thing is made to resemble another thing and the intention is that by such resemblance deception would be practised, or even if there is no intention, but it is known to be likely that the resemblance is such that deception will thereby be practised, there is counterfeiting.[16] Where a stamp-vendor caused some used stamps to resemble genuine ones and attached them to the licences issued for grazing cattle, it was held that his act amounted to counterfeiting.[17] The passing off a one-anna stamp as a one rupee stamp is not counterfeiting a one-anna stamp.[18]

3. Analysis of the Section

The analysis of the section shows that there is no necessity of importing words like 'colourable imitation' therein.[19] The definition of the word counterfeit in this section139 is not confined to coins alone.[20] When the court shrinks the content of the expression 'currency note', to make it referable to only 'Indian currency note', it is defeating the intention of the legislature partly in as much as the court makes it lawful to counterfeit notes other than Indian currency notes. The manifest purpose of the provision is that the citizens should be protected from being deceived or cheated. It is inconceivable why the legislature should be anxious to protect citizens from being deceived or cheated only in respect of Indian currency notes and not in respect of currency notes issued by other sovereign powers.[21]

4. 'Explanation 1'--Imitation Need not be Exact

Explanation 1 lays down that it is not essential to counterfeiting that the imitation be exact. 'Counterfeit' in s 28, IPC does not connote an exact reproduction of the original counterfeited.[22]

Section 28, IPC defines the word 'counterfeiting' in very wide terms. The main ingredients of counterfeiting as laid down in Section 28 are:

(1) Causing one thing to resemble another thing;
(2) Intending by means of that resemblance to practice deception; or
(3) Knowing it to be likely that deception will thereby be practiced.[23]

'Counterfeiting' in s 28 does not connote an exact reproduction of the original counterfeited. Explanation 2 of s 28 lays down a rebuttable presumption where resemblance is such that a person might be deceived thereby. In such a case the intention or the knowledge is presumed unless the contrary is proved. There is no necessity of importing words like 'colourable limitation' therein. In order to apply s 28, what the Court has to see is whether one thing is made to resemble another thing and if that is so and if the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived by it, there will be a presumption of the necessary intention or knowledge to make the thing counterfeit, unless the contrary is proved.[24] Ordinarily, counterfeiting implies the idea of an exact imitation; but, for the purpose of this Code, it would amount to counterfeiting even if the imitation is not exact, and there are differences in detail between the original and the imitation, so long as the resemblance is so close that deception may thereby be practised.[25] The word 'counterfeit' does not connote an exact reproduction of the original counterfeited and it follows that the difference between the counterfeit and the original is not limited to a difference existing only by reason of faulty reproduction.[26] For the purpose of the Code there can be counterfeiting even though the imitation is not exact and even if there are differences in detail between the original and the imitation so long as the resemblance is so close that the deception may thereby be practised.[27]140

In order that coins may be counterfeit, it is not essential that they should exactly resemble genuine coins, or that they should be of silver and not of some other inferior metal. It is sufficient if they are of the same size as the King's coins and bear the imitation of the Crown and surrounding decorations as are found in a genuine coin.[28] It is sufficient if resemblance to genuine currency note is so caused that it is capable of being passed as such. In this regard, expert's evidence can be considered by the Court.[29]

5. Deception is one of the Ingredients of Counterfeiting

Although the resemblance need not be exact, it is essential that the counterfeit must be of such a character that it would be possible to pass it off as a genuine coin, and, unless that is so, it would not be possible to practise deception, and to practise deception is one of the ingredients of the definition of counterfeit in this section.[30] Where the edges of the alleged counterfeit coins are irregular and none could be deceived by such coins, they cannot be said to be counterfeit coins.[31] But if the resemblance is so great that one is likely to be mistaken for the other, slight differences do not matter.[32]

6. Intention to Deceive

For the purposes of the section, there must be an intention to practise deception or knowledge that deception will be practised. The deception meant is with regard to the nature of the coins. It is deception through the resemblance of the true coin with the false and it means that someone must be led to believe that the false coin is a true one. Where the accused counterfeited some coins and introduced them into another's house with the sole object that he should be thought to be the counterfeiter and be prosecuted accordingly, the accused cannot be said to counterfeit the coins.[33]

7. Explanation 2--Presumption of Intention is Rebuttable

Explanation 2 lays down that where the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived thereby it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the person causing one thing to resemble another was intending by means of that resemblance to practise deception or knew it to be likely that deception would thereby be practised. This explanation lays down a rebuttable presumption where the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived thereby. In such a case the intention or the knowledge is presumed unless the contrary is proved.[34] In order to apply the section, what the court, therefore, has to see is whether one thing has been made to resemble141 another thing. If it finds that in fact one thing has been made to resemble another, it has further to decide whether the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived. If it comes to the conclusion that the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived by it, it can presume the necessary intention or knowledge (until the contrary is proved) and counterfeiting would then be complete.[35] If the coins manufactured by the accused are very good imitations of genuine coins and persons might be deceived by the resemblance, the presumption referred to in the explanation arises, and it is for the accused to prove that their intention was innocent or that they did not know that it was likely that deception would be practised.[36] Where in a case of alleged counterfeiting of a trademark the trademark similar to that of the complainant had been moulded in the glass of the bottles on which the name of the hair oil had also been moulded: it was held that according to s 28, it must be presumed that the accused intended to sell that hair oil in those bottles and thereby cause deception. In this case, the onus was on the accused to show that in making these bottles he had no fraudulent intention.[37]

8. Counterfeiting may be Inferred from Facts and Circumstances

It may be noted that the general onus of establishing the elements of the offence in a particular case rests entirely upon the prosecution, but the prosecution can successfully discharge that onus by praying in aid the presumption under expln 2 to this section. Thus, in the case of an offence under s 485 of the code, the onus of proving either of the purposes mentioned in s 485 is discharged by the prosecution establishing possession of the instrument for counterfeiting and the close resemblance between the counterfeit trademark and the genuine trademark whereby deception becomes inevitable.[38] Where no direct evidence as to ingredient of counterfeiting is available they may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case.[39]

13 Substituted by Act 1 of 1889, s 9, for the original Explanation.

14 Golo Mandla Ram Rao v State of Jharkhand 2004 Cr LJ 1738 (Jhar) (DB) .

15 K Hasim v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 2005 SC 128, 2005 Cr LJ 143, p 152 .

16 State of Uttar Pradesh v Hafiz Mohd Ismail AIR 1960 SC 669, p 670, (1960) Cr LJ 1067 .

17 Ramlal v Emperor AIR 1921 Nag 86(2) .

18 Queen v Shuroot Chander Dass (1865) 2 WR 65(Cr).

19 State of Uttar Pradesh v Hafiz Mohd Ismail AIR 1960 SC 669, p 670 .

20 Bachan Singh v State of Punjab 1981 Cur LJ 93 (Cr) .

21 State of Kerala v Mathai Verghese AIR 1987 SC 33, (1987) Cr LJ 308 .

22 K Hasim v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 2005 SC 128, 2005 Cr LJ 143, p 152, 2005 (1) SCC 237 .

23 K Hashim v State of Tamil Nadu 2005 (1) SCC 237, AIR 2005 SC 128, 2005 Cr LJ 143 .

24 Liyakat Ali v State of Rajasthan 2010 Cr LJ 2450, p 2459 (Raj) .

25 State of Uttar Pradesh v Hafiz Mohd Ismail AIR 1960 SC 669, p 670, (1960) Cr LJ 1017 ; State of Mysore v Natarajan (1971) Mad LJ 400, p 402 (Cr), (1971) 1 Mys LJ 508 ; Local Govt v Motilal Jain AIR 1937 Nag 341, p 342 .

26 Local Govt v Seth Motilal Jain AIR 1937 Nag 341, p 342 ; Golo Mandla Ram Rao v State of Jharkhand (2004) Cr LJ 1738 (Jhar) .

27 Golo Mandla Ram Rao v State of Jharkhand (2004) Cr LJ 1738 (Jhar) .

28 Amrit Sonar v Emperor AIR 1919 Pat 330, 20 Cr LJ 439, 51 IC 263 ; Narayan Maruti Wagmode v State of Maharashtra 2011 Cr LJ 3318 (Bom) (DB) ; Shahid Sultan Khan v State of Maharashtra 2007 Cr LJ 568 (Bom) (DB) .

29 Narayan Maruti Wagmode v State of Maharashtra 2011 Cr LJ 3318, p 3320 (Bom) (DB) .

30 Gulam Rabbani Gulam Umam v State AIR 1956 Bom 511, (1956) Cr LJ 881 ; Satyanarayana Rao v State of Mysore (1972) Mad LJ 321 (Cr) .

31 Ranchhod Mula v State (1961) 2 Cr LJ 472 .

32 Jitendra Mohan Pal v Durga Pado Banerjee 16 Cr LJ 719, 14 CWN 957 .

33 Sahebrao Awadhut Maratha v Emperor AIR 1938 Nag 444, p 445, 39 Cr LJ 838 ; Velayudham Pillai v Emperor AIR 1937 Mad 711, p 712, 39 Cr LJ 51, (1939) ILR Mad 80 ; Lalchand v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 252 ; Gulam Rabbani Gulam Umam v State AIR 1956 Bom 511, (1956) Cr LJ 881 ; Dinanath v State AIR 1963 All 133, (1963) Cr LJ 282, (1962) All LJ 1038 .

34 K Hasim v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 2005 SC 128, 2005 Cr LJ 143, 2005 (1) SCC 237 .

35 State of Uttar Pradesh v Hafiz Mohd Ismail AIR 1960 SC 669, p 670-71 .

36 Emperor v Qadir Bakhsh ILR 30 All 93, 6 Cr LJ 395 ; Nemi Chand v Secy of State for India 34 ILR Cal 511 ; Supdt & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v Prafulla Kumar AIR 1954 Cal 277, p 279, (1954) Cr LJ 841 .

37 Sheikh Abdul Sovan v Jitendra Nath Dutta AIR 1931 Cal 445 .

38 Supdt & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v Prafulla Kumar AIR 1954 Cal 277, p 279, (1954) Cr LJ 841 .

39 Ram Nath v State (1968) All Cr R 359 (HC) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 29.

"Document".--

The word "document" denotes any matter expressed or described upon any substance by means of letters, figures, or marks, or by more than one of those means, intended to be used, or which may be used, as evidence of that matter.

Explanation 1.--It is immaterial by what means or upon what substance the letters, figures or marks are formed, or whether the evidence is intended for, or may be used in, a Court of Justice, or not.

Illustrations

A writing expressing the terms of a contract, which may be used as evidence of the contract, is a document.

A cheque upon a banker is a document.

A power-of-attorney is a document.142

A map or plan which is intended to be used or which may be used as evidence, is a document.

A writing containing directions or instructions is a document.

*Explanation 2.--Whatever is expressed by means of letters, figures or marks as explained by mercantile or other usage, shall be deemed to be expressed by such letters, figures or marks within the meaning of this section, although the same may not be actually expressed.

Illustration

A writes his name on the back of a bill of exchange payable to his order. The meaning of the endorsement, as explained by mercantile usage, is that the bill is to be paid to the holder. The endorsement is a document, and must be construed in the same manner as if the words "pay to the holder" or words to that effect had been written over the signature.

Comments

1. What is 'Document'

This section defines the term 'document'. It has also been defined in two other Central Acts, namely, the Indian Evidence Act 1872, s 3 and the General Clauses Act 1897, s 3(18) . The definitions in the Indian Evidence Act 1872 and the General Clauses Act 1897, are wider in scope than the definition given in this section.[40] In the definition given in this section the words used are 'as evidence of that matter' in place of the words ' for the purpose of recording that matter' used in the other Acts. A document need not necessarily be something which is signed, sealed or executed.[41]

2. 'Matters Expressed or Described on any Substance by Letters, Figures or Marks'

An assessment order[42] or a skiagram or X-ray photoplate,[43] is a document within the meaning of this section. Letters imprinted on trees and intended to be evidence that the trees have been passed by the forest ranger and, consequently, could be removed from the place, where they were lying in the forest, are also 'documents' within the meaning of this section.[44] A hammer bearing certain letters, used for making sleepers, passed by a special officer, has also been held to be a document.[45] Currency notes are written on paper by means of letters, figures and marks and the substance, namely, the paper is intended to be used for the purpose of recording the matter. In such a case, the matter written will mean a document and the matter written on paper143 makes it a 'currency note'. In the same way in the case of coins, the substance used is metal on which the matter is written expressly or described by means of letters, figures or marks and it is that matter which makes it a coin and so it cannot be said that coin is not a document within the meaning of this section.[46]

3. Difference between English and Indian Law

The definition of 'document' in the Indian Acts differs from that in the English law. In R v Daye ,[47] Darling J defined a document as 'any writing or printing capable of being made evidence, no matter on what material it may be inscribed'. Citing this case Best says that under the term 'are properly included all material substance on which the thoughts of men are represented by writing, or any other species of conventional marks or symbol'.[48]Section 6(1) of the English Evidence Act enacts that 'document includes books, maps, plans, drawings and photographs'. Thus, in English law, the word 'document' applies to the material on which the writing is written, whereas in Indian law it applies not to the material but to the matter written.[49]

4. Mere Expression of Ideas does not Convert writing into a Document

The mere expression of ideas does not convert a writing into a document unless the writing was 'intended to be used or which may be used as evidence of that matter'. What constitutes the 'making' of a document, depends essentially upon the nature and the use it is intended for. Indeed the definition of a document does not necessarily require that it would in every case be in the writing, or contain the signature or facsimile, of any person, but includes what is done by way of printing. A printed marriage invitation has, therefore, been held to be a document.[50]

5. 'Intended to be used as Evidence of that Matter'

The word 'evidence' occurring in this section precedes the words 'of that matter' and the word 'matter' as occurring in the opening portion of the section, is qualified by the words 'expressed or described upon any substance by means of letters,' etc. This means that the matter contemplated by this section is what is expressed or described upon any substance, and the question is whether such a matter can be evidence of its existence. The matter expressed or described upon any substance, would certainly be the evidence of the fact that that matter exists, though it may not by itself be a proof of the truth of the contents of that matter. The word 'evidence' in this section does not imply evidence of the truth of the matter expressed. The word 'evidence' or the word 'evident' only means 'that which can be seen with the naked eye'. It is not necessarily synonymous with the word 'proof'.[51] In Madapusi Srinivasa Ayyangar v Queen ,[52] it was remarked:

> The term 'evidence' in its ordinary sense signifies that which makes apparent the truth of a matter in question. It is no doubt more frequently applied to proof by a judicial tribunal, but it is not necessarily confined to this sense.

144

A writing though not legal evidence may yet be a 'document' if the parties framing it believed and intended it to be evidence of such matter.[53]

40 Syama Charan Saha v SDM AIR 1962 Tri 50, p 54, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 794 .

41 Emperor v Krishtappa Khandappa AIR 1925 Bom 327, 87 IC 838, 26 Cr LJ 1014, 27 Bom LR 599 .

42 Iswarlal v State of Maharashtra AIR 1969 SC 40, 70 ITR 95, (1969) Cr LJ 271 .

43 Harun Rashid v State (1962) 1 ILR Cal 392 .

44 Emperor v Krishtappa Khandappa AIR 1925 Bom 327, 26 Cr LJ 1014, 87 IC 838, 27 Bom LR 599 .

45 AV Joseph v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Rang 122, p 128, 3 ILR Rang 11, 26 Cr LJ 492 .

46 Shyama Charan Sahu v SDM AIR 1962 Tri 50, p 54, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 794 .

47 R v Daye (1908) 2 KB 233 .

48 Best Ev, s 215 .

49 Law Commissioner's First Report on the Indian Penal Code, s 88 ; Dharmendra Nath Shastri v Rex AIR 1949 All 353, 50 Cr LJ 550, (1949) All LJ 183 .

50 LK Siddappa v Lalithamma AIR 1954 Mys 119 .

51 Dharmendra Nath Shastri v Rex AIR 1949 All 353, p 355 .

52 Madapusi Srinivasa Ayyangar v Queen 4 ILR Mad 393, p 395 .

53 R v Sheefait Ally 2 BLR, 12 (A Cr), 10 WR 61 (Cr).

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 29A.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[54][S. 29A.

"Electronic record".--

The words "electronic record" shall have the meaning assigned to them in clause (t) of sub-section (1) of section 2 of the Information Technology Act, 2000.]

54 Inserted by the Information Technology Act 2000 (21 of 2000), s 91 and Sch I (wef 17-10-2000).

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 30.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 30.

"Valuable security".--

The words "valuable security" denote a document which is, or purports to be, a document whereby any legal right is created, extended, transferred, restricted, extinguished or released, or where by any person acknowledges that he lies under legal liability, or has not a certain legal right.

Illustration

A writes his name on the back of a bill of exchange. As the effect of this endorsement is to transfer the right to the bill to any person who may become the lawful holder of it, the endorsement is a "valuable security".

Comments

1. 'Valuable Security'

Section 29 defines the term 'document'. This section defines 'valuable security', as a document creating or extinguishing a legal right, or acknowledging a liability.[55] A document conferring or creating rights is a valuable security, even though all the signatures which it is intended to obtain or is necessary to obtain have not been affixed.[56] The expression 'valuable security' is used in ss 324 - 331, 347 384, 420, 467 and 477 of the Code.

2. Copy of a Document

Under this section it is the original document which creates or purports to create or extinguish legal rights, that is a valuable security. A copy of a document which is a valuable security is not itself a valuable security.[57] But the counterpart of a document is not a copy and might be a valuable security.[58]145

3. Cancelled or Spent Document

A cancelled instrument cannot be a valuable security. The law commissioners said:

> Sir H Seaton asks, would not a cancelled instrument be a valuable security under this clause? We think not: for an instrument available for the purpose for which it was made is clearly what the clause intended; a cancelled instrument, therefore, though by the cancelling of it a legal right may be extinguished, inasmuch as the instrument upon which such right depended, is thereby voided, does not fall within its scope.[59]

But a qabuliat though it relates to a period which has passed away, is a valuable document, though a suit thereon would be barred by time because, it can even then be used, at any rate to show the lessor's right to possession and the contract of tenancy during these years between him and the lessee.[60]

4. 'A Document which is or Purports to be a Document'

The words 'purports to be' appearing in the definition of valuable security show that a document, though not a legal document receivable in evidence in any court complying with the provisions of the Registration Act 1908 or other enactment, will be a valuable security even if it purports to be a document whereby a legal right is created, extended, transferred, restricted, extinguished or released and the said document will be receivable in evidence for the purposes of the IPC .[61] The use of the words 'which is, or purports to be', in this section, indicates that a document which, upon certain evidence being given, may be held to be invalid but on the face of it creates, or purports to create, a right to immovable property, although a decree could not be passed upon the document, is contemplated within the purview of the section. Had it not been so, any forged document, if the forgery was admitted, or any document which was not executed or stamped according to law, and on which no decree could be passed by a civil court, could not be called a valuable security.[62] If on the face of it a document creates or extinguishes a legal liability, it is immaterial that it might subsequently, upon certain evidence being given, be held to be of no effect against the executant. Even a hand note executed by a minor is a valuable security as it purports to be a document whereby a legal right is created.[63]

5. Documents found to be Valuable Securities

Even if a document, not signed by a competent authority, is void, it is still a valuable security.[64] A cinema ticket, with a forged stamp, has been held to be a valuable security.[65]146

A document which was not stamped and was, therefore, not admissible in evidence, may nevertheless be a valuable security.[66]

Where a blank promissory note and a blank receipt contained the forged signatures of the executant but contained no specification of the person in whose favour either document purported to be executed, nor yet of the date or place of execution, nor yet of the money involved, it was held that the two purported to be documents whereby a legal right was created and were, therefore, valuable securities.[67] Where the accused intentionally put a person in fear of injury to himself and thereby dishonestly induced him to place his thumb-impression upon certain pieces of paper, being in each case something signed which could be converted into a valuable security, it was held that the document was a valuable security within the meaning of this section.[68] A settlement of account in writing may be a valuable security, though not signed.[69]

An unregistered document, although it may not be an effectual document so as to pass title until it is registered, purports to be a valuable security from the date of its execution.[70]

A time-barred document is valuable security.[71]

A forged certificate enabling a dealer to get exemption from the levy on general sales taxes has been held to be a valuable security, even though the dealer had no licence and had no right to furnish the certificate and get the exemption.[72] A qabuliat is a valuable security, because it creates a legal right, namely, the right of a tenant to hold the land. It is also an acknowledgement by the tenant that he is legally bound to pay the rent and to hold the land in accordance with the conditions of the qabuliat.[73] A deed of divorce is a valuable security because it extinguishes a legal right of the parties.[74] An import licence is a valuable security because it creates a right in the licence to import goods.[75] So also a certificate in 'K' form under s 9 of the Bombay Sales Tax Act 1953, as it creates a legal right in the purchasing dealer to get exemption from payment of general sales tax.[76] The original of a transit pass without which no forest produce can be removed, is a valuable security.[77] The Income Tax Assessment Order is a valuable security under s 420 read with s 29, IPC .[78]

6. Documents not found to be Valuable Security

Academic certificates[79], certificates of good character and having passed certain examinations issued by a school or private institutions[80] which are found to be forged147 certificates,[81] are, however, not 'valuable security'. An acknowledgement of receipt of an insured parcel[82] or a decree[83] or character certificate, issued by an educational institution[84] or a mere endorsement for calling a particular candidate for interview[85] or an application for compromise, filed by a party but not accepted by the court and, therefore, returned to the applicant[86] have also not been held to be valuable security. A sanad conferring a title of dignity on a person is also not a valuable security.[87]

7. What is 'Legal Right'

A legal right is one which is either enforceable, or recognised, by a rule of law.[88] The test of enforceability, though it may be a normal one, is not the only a test for determining a legal right. A legal right may be asserted even, before administrative agencies. It includes the liberty of freedom from penalty.[89] If the body of the blank paper ticket, giving details of journey and the cost of the ticket, is filled in without the signature of the station master, or a person authorised by him, appended thereon, such a document cannot be deemed to be a valuable security as it does not create any right to the passengers to travel by rail on the basis of that ticket.[90]

8. Decree or Administrative Order of Court

A 'decree' does not come within the definition of a 'valuable security'; a decree merely declares the existence of legal rights or the extinguishment, extension, transfer or restriction of legal rights, etc; the rights are there, and all that the decree does is that it formally expresses the adjudication by the court on the rights of the parties. A 'decree' is not, therefore, a 'valuable security'.[91] An administrative order of a court, by which the nazir of the court was asked to take a document of suretyship from the accused for his being released on bail and the necessary certificate for the solvency of the surety was to be taken, does not by itself create any legal right in favour of the nazir and it is not, therefore, a valuable security.[92]

9. Account Books

Ordinarily speaking account books do not by themselves create any right or liability to become 'valuable security', though they may evidence the existence of such rights and liability. In other words, an account book, generally speaking may be valuable evidence but is not valuable security within the definition given in s 30 .[93] Account148 books, as such, do not create any right, and entries therein cannot be the basis of charging an accused with the liability of what is noted against him. These entries can be merely evidence of certain alleged facts and are, as such, relevant evidence in view of s 34, Evidence Act. Certain entries which might be signed by a constituent may form the basis of a charge against him in view of his acknowledging his liability and the correctness of the contents noted in that entry. Where they are not so signed, the account-books are not 'valuable security'.[1] But a title page in an account book containing the names of the partners and the amount of the capital contributed by each is, if signed by them, a 'valuable security'.[2]

10. Document Purporting to be Acknowledgement

The words 'valuable security' denote not only a document which creates or extinguishes legal rights, but also a document whereby any person acknowledges that he lies under legal liability or has not a certain legal right. An account paper which purports to be a document whereby a person acknowledges that he lies under legal liability is a valuable security.[3] The expression 'legal liability' has a wide import and embraces every legal liability though not directly pecuniary.[4] Account books are not valuable security unless the entries in them are signed by the constituents in acknowledgement of their liability or the correctness of the entries.[5] A counterfoil of a paying-in slip purporting to be an acknowledgement of receipt of a sum of money by the bank is a document within the definition of valuable security.[6] A discharge receipt purporting to have been signed by a fictitious nominee in an insurance policy is, on the face of it, a valuable security within the meaning of this section, or a 'document purporting to be an acquittance or receipt acknowledging the payment of money' within the meaning of s 467 of this Code.[7] An acknowledgement of receipt of an insured parcel is not a valuable security. It merely evidences that a parcel of some sort was delivered to the complainants and cannot operate as a discharge of any liability and is not, therefore, a valuable security.[8]

Where the accused gave a post-dated cheque for certain goods delivered to him at an earlier date and got a receipt, but the cheque was dishonoured, it was held that the receipt was not a valuable security as it was only an acknowledgement of the receipt of a cheque.[9]***

55 Neki Ram v State of Haryana (1974) 76 Punj LR 780 .

56 GS Ramassami Iyer v Emperor AIR 1918 Mad 150, 19 Cr LJ 177, 41 ILR Mad 589 .

57 Govind Prashad Pauri v State AIR 1962 Cal 174 ; Supdt and Legal Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v Daulatram Modi AIR 1932 Cal 390, 33 Cr LJ 685, 59 ILR Cal 1233 ; Charu Chandra Ghose v King-Emperor AIR 1924 Cal 502, 25 Cr LJ

1034 ; Reg v Khushal Hirman 4 Bom HCR 28 ; Emperor v Nano Gopal 5 Bom HCR 56 .

58 Ismail Panju v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Nag 337 .

59 Law Commissioner's First Report on the Indian Penal Code, s 89 .

60 Ismail Panju v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Nag 337, p 339, 26 Cr LJ 1115 .

61 Jaswant Singh v State of West Bengal (1977) Cr LJ (NOC) 260 (Cal) ; See alsoJohn Paul v State* 2012 (118) AIC 659 (Mad) .

62 Ram Harakh Pathak v Emperor AIR 1926 All 57, p 58, ILR 48 All 140, 26 Cr LJ 1617 .

63 Ram Narain Sahu v Emperor AIR 1933 Pat 601(1), 35 Cr LJ 123 ; Ram Harakh Pathak v Emperor AIR 1926 All 57, 27 Cr LJ 1617 ; Ram Kamal v Chandra Nath (1971) Cr LJ 708, p 709, (1970) Assam LR 101 (DB) ; SK Gupta v State (1967) All WR 527 (HC) .

64 SK Gupta v State (1967) All WR 527 (HC) ; GS Ramasami Iyer v Emperor AIR 1918 Mad 150, 19 Cr LJ 177 ; Ram Harakh Pathak v Emperor AIR 1926 All 57, 27 Cr LJ 1617 ; Ram Kamal v Chandra Nath (1971) Cr LJ 708, p 709, (1970) Assam LR 101(DB).

65 Abraham John v State of Kerala (1968) Mad LJ 476 (Cr), (1968) KLT 552 ; Ratanchand Radha Krishandas v State AIR 1960 Bom 146, (1960) Cr LJ 461, 61 Bom LR 1161 ; Batisa Singh v Emperor AIR 1932 Pat 335, 34 Cr LJ 81 ; GS Ramasami Iyer v Emperor AIR 1918 Mad 150, 19 Cr LJ 177, 41 ILR Mad 589 .

66 High Court Proceedings of 5 August 1873, 7 MHCR App 26; Queen-Empress v Ramasami 2 ILR Mad 148 ; Jawahar Thakur v Emperor AIR 1916 All 197, 17 Cr LJ 203, 38 ILR All 430 .

67 Jawahar Thakur v Emperor 17 Cr LJ 203 .

68 Batisa Singh v Emperor AIR 1932 Pat 335, 34 Cr LJ 81 .

69 R v Kapalavaya Saraya 2 Mad HCR 247 .

70 Kashi Nath Naek v Queen-Empress 25 ILR Cal 207, 7 CWN 681 .

71 Ismail Panju v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Nag 337, p 339, 26 Cr LJ 1115 ; Chacko v State of Kerala (1970) KLT 358, (1970) Cr LJ 173 (Ker) .

72 Ratanchand Radha Kisordas v State AIR 1960 Bom 146, 61 Bom LR 1161 .

73 Ismail Panj v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Nag 337, p 338, 26 Cr LJ 1115 .

74 R v Azimooddeen 11 WR 15 (Cr) .

75 Durga Das Tulsiram v State AIR 1955 Bom 82, 56 Bom LR 188 .

76 Ratanchand Radha Kisondas v State AIR 1960 Bom 146 .

77 Supdt & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v Daulatram Mudi AIR 1932 Cal 390, 59 ILR Cal 1233 .

78 Ishwarlal Girdharilal Parikh v State of Maharashtra & Ors AIR 1969 SC 40, (1969) Cr LJ 271 .

79 Shrinivas Pandit Dharamadhikari v State of Maharashtra (1980) All Cr C 336 (SC), (1980) Cr AR 342 (SC), (1980) 4 SCC 551, (1980) UJ 908(SC), (1980) Cr LR 560 (SC); see alsoJohn Paul v State* 2012 (118) AIC 659 (Mad) .

80 Govind Prasad v State (1971) All Cr R 297 .

81 Bhausaheb Kalu Patil v State of Maharashtra (1980) Cr LJ 1312 (SC) ; Shaik Noor Mohammad Shaik Fazal v State of Maharashtra (1980) Cr LR 406 (SC), (1980) Cr LJ 1345 (SC) .

82 Sadholal v Emperor AIR 1917 Pat 699, 17 Cr LJ 272 .

83 Charu Chandra Ghose v King-Emperor AIR 1924 Cal 502, p 507, 25 Cr LJ 1034 .

84 Govind Prasad v State (1971) All Cr R 297, (1971) All WR 345 (HC) .

85 KK Pandey v Narpal Singh (1973) Cr LJ 1640 (Raj), (1972) WLN 980 .

86 Prayag Das v State (1963) 1 Cr LJ 279 (280), AIR 1963 All 131 .

87 Jan Mohomed v Queen-Empress ILR 10 Cal 584, p 587 .

88 KK Pandey v Narpat Singh (1973) Cr LJ 1640 (Raj) ; Govind Prasad v State (1971) All Cr R 297, (1971) All WR 345 (HC) ; Daniel Hailey Walcott v State (1968) Cr LJ 1282, (1968) 1 Mad LJ 229, 1968 Mad LJ 161 (Cr), AIR 1968 Mad 349 .

89 Daniel Hailey Watcott v State (1968) Cr LJ 1282, (1968) 1 Mad LJ 229, (1968) Mad LJ 161 (Cr), 1968 Mad LW 49 (Cr), (1968) 2 ILR Mad 843, AIR 1968 Mad 349 .

90 Jagdish Prasad Verma v State (1980) Cr LR 284, p 287 (UP) .

91 Charu Chandra Ghose v King-Emperor AIR 1924 Cal 502, p 507, 25 Cr LJ 1034 .

92 Emperor v Sher Alam Khan Sahib AIR 1933 Bom 494, p 495, 35 Bom LR 1062 .

93 Kishakkeppallike Moosa & Ors v State AIR 1963 Ker 68 .

1 Hari Prasad v State AIR 1953 All 660, p 661 .

2 Hari Charan Gorai v Sirish Chandra Sadhukhan 38 ILR Cal 68, 11 Cr LJ 525 .

3 Idu Jolaha v Emperor AIR 1918 Pat 274, p 275, 19 Cr LJ 709 ; Queen-Empress v Ramasami 12 ILR Mad 148 .

4 Prayagdas v State (1963) 1 Cr LJ 279, p 280, (1962) Ker LJ 1075, AIR 1963 Ker 68 .

5 Hari Prasad v State AIR 1953 All 660, (1953) Cr LJ 1496, (1953) All LJ 318 ; Moosa v State of Kerala AIR 1963 Ker 68, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 180, (1962) Ker LJ 1075, (1962) KLT 815 .

6 AH Tumer v Emperor AIR 1926 Cal 425 .

7 Harol Narmada Prasad Singh v State of Vindhya Pradesh AIR 1956 VP 30, p 32, (1956) Cr LJ 1246 .

8 Sadho Lal v Emperor AIR 1917 Pat 699, 17 Cr LJ 272 .

9 HK Shaw v Suresh Chandra Mitter AIR 1936 Cal 324, p 325, 37 Cr LJ 828 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 31.

"A will".--

The words "a will" denote any testamentary document.

Comments

1. Scope

The term 'Will' has been defined under s 2(h) of the Indian Succession Act (39 of 1925), 'as the legal declaration of the intentions of the testator with respect to his149 property which he desires to be carried into effect after his death'. Section 3(64) of the General Clauses Act 1897, defines it so as to 'include a codicil, and every writing making a voluntary posthumous disposition of property. 'Will' means the whole testamentary instruments including codicils'.[10] This term has been used in ss 467 and 477 of the Code.

A testament is a declaration for the last will of a person as to what he desires to be done after his death. According to the Judicial Dictionary by Aiyar,[11] 'testament' means 'a disposition of personal property to take place after the owner is deceased, according to his desire and direction'.

10 Pigot v Wilder 26 Beav 92 .

11 Aiyar, Judicial Dictionary, eleventh edn, p 1105.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 32.

Words referring to acts include illegal omissions.--

In every part of this Code, except where a contrary intention appears from the context, words which refer to acts done extend also to illegal omissions.

Comments

1. Scope

According to this section throughout the IPC except where a contrary intention appears from the context, acts done also include illegal omissions. Acts and omissions or action and non-action are closely connected with an 'event' or 'events',[12] which are sensibly external[13] matters, and may be defined as 'transient arrangements of permanent sensible objects',[14] such as the burning of a house, the killing of a man, the removal of silver spoons to a servant's room. Events may or may not have to do with human agency, but they concern criminal law only if they have something to do with it.[15] As per s 32 of the IPC, the word which refer to 'acts done' extends also to illegal omissions. The word 'omission' is used in the sense of intentional non-doing. Thus, according to this section 'act' includes intentional doing as well as intentional non-doing. The omission or neglect must no doubt be such as to have inactive effect conducing to the result, as a link, in the chain of facts from which an intention to bring about the result may be inferred. The Code makes punishable omissions which have caused, which have been known to be likely to cause, a certain evil effect in the same manner as it punished acts, provided they were illegal. And when the law imposes on a person a duty to act, his illegal omission to act renders him liable to punishment.[16]

2. Action and Non-action of Human Agency

Human agency consists of either action or non-action, of doing something, or of not doing something,[17] or in other words, of positive or negative conduct.

Action consists of an act or acts.

(a) Action

Action consists of an act or acts. Acts are classified and defined by Austin as: (a) Internal acts, or 'determinations of the will', and (b) External acts, or 'such motions of the body as are consequent upon determinations of the will'.[18] In considering determinations of the will, i.e., a state of things within a man's breast, which we have to infer or presume, as 'act', Austin followed Bentham,[19] but the ultimately abandoned the view,[20] and limited the meaning of 'acts' to external ones.

Now although strictly speaking the meaning of an 'act' is restricted to a motion of the body consequent upon a determination of the will, yet in ordinary language, as Austin points out,[21] the word 'act' includes some of the more immediate and obvious consequences of the bodily movement, i.e. consequences very near and very certain; e.g., A intentionally stabs B in the heart. B dies. A's 'act' is, strictly speaking, his bodily movement, or the thrusting of the knife into B's heart, but in ordinary language A's act would be designated the killing of B, i.e., the immediate and certain consequence of A's bodily movement, viz, B's death, is included in the word 'act'.

According to Austin if the bodily movement is not in consequence of a determination of the will it is not an 'act'; e.g., a man falling into the water.[22]

The word 'act' cannot be applied to involuntary motions of the body. Whether this view be adopted or not[23]is, for the purpose of criminal law, of no importance, for the consequences of an involuntary act are never punishable; e.g., A and B are on a tour through the Alps. A is suddenly seized with an epileptic fit, throws out his arm and pushes B over a precipice. B is killed. A is not liable for B's death. Thus practically the word 'act' means a voluntary act, or bodily movements which are in consequence of volition or will.

The word 'act' accordingly means a motion or motions of the body consequent upon a determination of the will, coupled with the more immediate consequences of such motion or motions.

(b) Non-action

Non-action (or not doing) as contrasted with action (or doing) is frequently termed omission 'doubtless from the attractive antithesis between omission and commission'.[24] Non-action may be either (a) intentional or (b) unintentional; e.g., A, a woman, intentionally omits to give her child food, in order that the child may die, B, a151 hospital nurse, omits to give a patient his medicine, because she forgets all about it. C, a pointsman, sends a train on the wrong rails, by intentionally omitting to pull the right lever, in order that the engine driver may be killed in a collision, or he sends to train on the wrong rails, because he omits to pull the right lever, since he is asleep or forgetful.

(c) Intentional and Non-intentional Non Doing/Omission

There is a marked distinction between non-doing which is intentional, and non-doing which is not intentional--a distinction of great practical importance in criminal law; for in intentional non-doing there is an exercise of will, and therefore it involves a greater criminal liability than non-doing in which the volition is dormant. To intentional non-doing Austin has given the term 'forbearance', which he defines as 'the not doing some given external act in consequence of a determination of the will'.[25] Unintentional non-doing he terms 'omission' and defines it as 'the not doing a given act, without adverting to the act'[26]i.e., a man does not do a given act because he never thinks about it.

(d) 'Act'

As a general rule, the word 'act' in the Code is not confined to its ordinary meaning, as explained above, of positive conduct, of doing something, but includes also illegal omission.

It may be noted that an act, properly speaking, means something voluntarily done by a human being and having an effect in the sensible world. It involves an operation of the mind as well as of the body. But, as understood in the Code, the term may signify only an operation of the mind, for, under s 32 an act includes an illegal omission which implies bodily inaction.[27]

3. 'Omission'

This word is not used here in the sense in which Austin uses the word, but in the same sense as he employs the word 'forbearance' i.e., in the sense of intentional non-doing. By the force of this section then, 'act' includes intentional doing ('act' in its strict sense) and intentional non-doing or conscious abstinence from action (Austin's 'forbearance'), if that non-doing is illegal.

The employment of the word 'omission' in this sense in the Code is shown in several of its illustrations. Thus, in the illustration to s 36 in 'omitting' to give Z food intentionally causes Z's death; so also in illusts (b) and (c) to s 37 .[28]

'The illegal omission or neglect must be such as to have an active effect conducing to the result as a link in the chain of events from which an intention to bring about the result may be inferred'.[29]Even an omission can, in certain circumstance, amount to an act. This is the purpose of s 32 of the Code. So, the act mentioned in s 34 of the Code need not be an overt act, even an illegal omission to do a certain act in a certain situation can amount to an act.[30]152

4. 'Illegal'

Not only must the non-action be intentional, but it must be illegal as well. 'In the case of a clearly proved forbearance, although this is in all mental conditions exactly on a level with action, and may be preceded by the strongest wish, and even purpose, so far as the forbearance is concerned, of consequences which would be criminal when resulting from a positive act; yet, if the train of events which ends in these consequences is not due in any point to the person, who is merely a complacent spectator, he does not appear to be, in actual legal systems, criminally liable, whatever moral abhorrence his conduct would naturally excite; unless the act from which he forbore was one which he was under a legal obligation to perform'.[31]

Criminal law fastens liability on persons who omit to perform the duty required by law such as to provide food, clothing, shelter, or medical aid to another, but a refusal to perform acts of mere charity or mercy, not coupled with a legal duty, does not entail legal punishment even if death ensues from such refusal or neglect. Thus where the wife is in a helpless state and unable to appeal elsewhere for aid, and the husband who has the means to provide necessaries for existence, deliberately withholds them with the intention to kill her, he commits murder. To the rule of culpability for acts or omission of the nature mentioned above there is one rider. The criminal liability of such persons is conditional on their capacity, means, and ability to perform the legal duty.[32] Illegal omission is an 'act' under s 304A of the IPC and may constitute offence if it is negligent.[33]

Illustrations of Lawful Omissions

(i) A, a stranger, sees B, a small child, struggling face downwards in a pool of water. A does not interfere. B is drowned. A is not liable for B's death.[34]

(ii) A woman's head-dress catches fire; water is at hand. A man, instead of assisting to quench the fire, looks on and laughs at it. He is not liable for the injury inflicted.[35]

(iii) Gunpowder lies scattered about in a room. A knows of it, but allows B to go in with a lighted candle without warning him. B is injured by an explosion. A is not liable.[36]

(iv) A, a stranger on whom Z has no other claim than that of humanity, intentionally omits to tell Z that a river is swollen so high that Z cannot safely attempt to cross it. Z attempts to do so and is drowned. A is not liable for his death.[37]

(v) A, a passer-by, sees a savage dog attack Z. He does not try to call off the dog, although he knows it is likely that Z will be killed. A is not liable for the death of Z, if Z is killed.[38]

It is no wonder that Bentham asked,[39] 'who is there that in any of these cases would think punishment misapplied?' and suggested that it should be the legal duty of every153 one, when another is in danger, to save him from mischief, when it can be done without prejudicing himself. But, happily, such cases are rare, or a speedy imposition of legal obligations to meet the emergency would be made.

'The word 'illegal' is applicable to everything which is an offence'; (i.e., a thing made punishable by the Code, s 40, IPC), 'or which is prohibited by law; or which furnishes ground for a civil action (s 43 of the IPC). Thus, if the omission is per se an offence under the Code, or is prohibited by law*, i.e.,* there is a duty imposed by law to do the thing abstained from, or will give grounds for a civil action, then the omission is illegal, and the agent will be as liable for the consequences thereof as if he had brought them about by his own act.

Illustrations of Illegal Omissions

(i) If A in illustration 4 above is a peon stationed by the authority to warn travellers, A is liable for Z's death. So also if he is a guide who had contracted to conduct Z.[40]

(ii) If A in illustration 5 above is the owner of the dog, he is liable for Z's death.[41]

(iii) A, a guide hired by B, deserts B in a jungle, knowing that B is likely to die. A is liable for B's death.[42]

(iv) A keeps B in wrongful confinement, and omits to procure medical advice for B, knowing that B is likely to die for want of it. A is liable for B's death.[43]

(v) A, a policeman, stands by and acquiesces in an assault on a prisoner committed by B, another policeman, for the purpose of extorting a confession. The law requires A to prevent B using torture but he did not even expostulate. The law, therefore, punishes his failure to act, Queen-Empress v Latif Khan ,[44] it is no defence to A that B was his superior or that B had been ordered by his superior to commit the torture.[45]

When the law places a duty to act on a person, his illegal omission to act is to be judged by the same principles. It may be a form of abetment under s 107 of the IPC ; while s 116 of the IPC takes particular notice of the omission of a police officer whose duty it is to prevent a crime. So where a police officer purposely kept out of the way, knowing that some persons were likely to be tortured to get confessions out of them, he was pronounced guilty of abetment. It was not a defence to say that he was not present at the time of the torture, as by withdrawing from the spot he facilitated the commissions of the torture.[46]

The codified criminal law of India does not render a mere casual inadvertence of criminal duty, but such neglect of duty as either directly results in loss of life or injury to person (ss 304A, 337 - 338, IPC and in certain special cases) or such neglect154 as endangers life or property (ss 279 - 89, IPC and ss 102 and 128 of the old Indian Railways Act).[47] But the mere fact that the offence of extortion under s 384 of the IPC is committed in the presence of the village chowkidar, without eliciting any disapproval on his part, will not render him liable as an abetter of the offence. There was no illegal omission on the part of the chowkidar in this case. He was not bound by s 89 or by s 90 of the CrPC to report the offence of extortion; and even if he were so bound, his subsequent omission to report the commission of the offence could not be said to be intentionally aiding the doing of the thing itself which must have been done before it could be reported by the chowkidar.[48]

5. Burden of Proof

No doubt, an omission is included in an act, but it is incumbent that such an omission must be illegal and the onus lies on the prosecution to show that the omission, which is being treated as an act, was either an offence or was prohibited by law or was one which furnished ground for a civil action as required by s 43 .[49]

12 Austin's Jurisprudence, 1 Lect 14.

13 Ibid, p 375 includes under the word 'event', internal determinations of the will, but the ordinary meaning of the word is limited to external matters. Clark, Analysis of Criminal Liability, ch II, p 13.

14 Austin's Jurisprudence, 1, p 386, and Clark, Analysis of Criminal Liability.

15 For example, a house destroyed by lightning; a man killed by an avalanche; spoons removed by the magpie of the story; Clark, Analysis of Criminal Liability.

16 Narendra v State of Rajasthan (2003) Cr LJ 1995 (Raj) .150

17 Clark, Analysis of Criminal Liability, ch 3, p 21.

18 Austin's Jurisprudence, 1, pp 376, 377.

19 Introduction, chs 7 and 11, p 73.

20 Austin's Jurisprudence, 1, Lect 19, p 433.

21 Ibid.

22 Austin's, Jurisprudence, 1, Lect 14, p 376.

23 Thus Prof Clark in Analysis of Criminal Liability (ch 3, p 22) defines an 'act' as an external state of things produce by the body of the agent whether voluntarily or involuntarily.

24 Clark, Analysis of Criminal Liability, ch 3, p 40.

25 Austin's, Jurisprudence, 1, Lect 14, p 377.

26 Ibid, Lect 20, p 438.

27 Thomotti, Madathill Poker, 1 Weir 495.

28 See also the illustrations given by the Commissioners in the Report of 1837 to s 294 of the Code as originally drawn, p 55.

29 Thomotti, Madathill Poker, 1 Weir 495.

30 Suresh v State of Uttar Pradesh (2001) Cr LJ 1462 (SC) .

31 Clark, Analysis of Criminal Liability, ch 3, pp 43-44.

32 Om Prakash Tilak Chand v State AIR 1959 Punj 134, 145 .

33 Captain D'Souza v Pashupati Nath Sarkar 1968 Cr LJ 405 (Cal) .

34 Stephen's Digest, art 212, and Ct Bentham, Principles of Morals and Legislation, p 323, note.

35 Ibid.

36 Stephen's Digest, art 212, and Ct Bentham, Principles of Morals and Legislation, p 323, note.

37 Commissioner's Report on Penal Code 1837, s 55 .

38 Ibid.

39 Bentham, Principles of Morals and Legislation, p 323.

40 Commissioners' Report on Penal Code 1837, s 55 .

41 Ibid.

42 Illustration to s 94 of Indian Penal Code 1860, as originally drawn.

43 Illustration to s 94 of Indian Penal Code 1860, for other examples of homicide in consequence of omission, notes to s 299 .

44 Queen-Empress v Latif Khan 20 ILR Bom 394 .

45 Queen v Behari Singh 7 WR 3 (Cr) ; Queen v Sonoo 10 WR 48 (Cr) ; Queen-Empress v Magan Lal 44 ILR Bom 115 .

46 Queen v Baboo Ashutosh Dhur 21 WR 11 (Cr) .

47 Frank Crossley Woodward v Crown AIR 1925 Sind 233 .

48 Gopal Chunder Sirdar v Foolmoni Bewa 8 ILR Cal 728 ; Khajah Noorul Hossein v C Fabre-Tonneree 24 WR 26 (Cr) ; R v Khadim 4 LBRA Cr 7 ; R v Coovirji 5 Cr LJ 176 .

49 Basharate v Emperor AIR 1934 Lah 813, p 814 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 33.

"Act"; "Omission".--

The word "act" denotes as well a series of acts as a single act: the word "omission" denotes as well a series of omissions as a single omission.

Comments

1. Meaning of 'Act'

See commentary under s 32 ante.

Act has nowhere been defined in the IPC . It must be construed in the light of common and not metaphysical sense.[50] It must necessarily be something short of a transaction which is composed of a series of acts, but cannot, in ordinary language, be restricted to every separate willed movement of a human being; for when we speak of an act of shooting or stabbing, we mean the action taken as a whole, and not the numerous separate movements involved.[51]

The word 'Act' does not only mean any particular specific, instantaneous act of a person, but denotes, according to s 33, a series of acts.[52] Where the action, which ultimately results in the death of a person, is continuous and it is impossible to resolve the different incidents into wholly separate actions, inspired by different motives and committed for different reasons, the person, who did that act, must be deemed as having done it with the intention of causing death and as having155 succeeded in carrying out his object and must, therefore be held to be guilty of murder.[53]An act may constitute an offence under two or more enactments,[54] but a man cannot be punished twice for the same offence.[55] An 'act' generally means something voluntarily done by a person but in the Code the term 'act' is not confined to its ordinary meaning of positive conduct of doing something but also includes illegal omission. The effect of ss 32 - 33 of the IPC taken together is that the term 'act' comprises one or more 'acts' or one or more illegal omissions. The Code makes punishable omissions which have caused, which have been intended to cause or which have been known to be likely to cause certain evil effect in the same manner as it punishes acts provided they were illegal and when the law imposes on a person a duty to act, his illegal omission to act renders him liable to punishment.[56]

Liability for an omission requires a legal duty to act; a moral duty to act is not sufficient. The duty may arise either from the offence definition itself or from some other provision of criminal or civil law. A duty arises from the former when an offence is defined in terms of omission.[57]

2. Effect of Sections 32 and 33 taken Together

Not only does the word 'act' include an illegal omission, but by virtue of s 33, it includes a series of acts and a series of omissions. The effect of ss 32 - 33, taken together is, consequently, that, unless the contrary appears from the context, the word 'act' comprises one or more acts, and one or more illegal omissions. For an example of an offence caused partly by an act and partly by an omission, refer to the illustration to s 36 ; by a series of acts, illust (a) to s 37 ; and by a series of illegal omissions, illusts (b) and (c) to s 37 .

From the foregoing discussion it will be seen that crimes or criminal events are caused either: (a) by intentional action, or (b) by intentional non-action, or (c) by unintentional non-action. The first species of conduct is termed an 'act', the second a 'forbearance', or in the language of the Code an 'omission', which if 'illegal' is comprised with an act (in its strict positive sense) under the term, 'act', as used in the Code, which therefore means intentional doing or intentional non-doing, if the non-doing is illegal. Crimes or criminal events are usually caused by an act or acts in the strict sense of the word, but the same events are sometimes caused by an illegal non-act. Thus, A desires to kill B. This crime may be effected, according to circumstances, either by shooting B, or by starving B, i.e., by illegally omitting to supply B with food. Again a railway pointsman may cause the same effect either by pulling a wrong lever or by omitting to pull the right one.

3. Unintentional Non-action

The consequences of such conduct are not regarded as criminal unless; (a) the conduct amounts to what is termed 'negligence', and this must be of a certain kind; and (b) the act not done must be one which it was the legal duty of the person to perform.156

4. Negligence

Negligence must be culpable or criminal, but it is not possible to define the amount of negligence necessary to constitute criminal negligence;[58] and the same may be said of what is termed 'gross' negligence, which affords a ground for recompense to the individual sufferer in the case of torts. The same negligence, as it affects the individual, and the state is, in fact, respectively 'gross' negligence, and 'criminal' negligence[59] and the question whether negligence is 'gross' or 'criminal' is in each a question of fact to be decided in the circumstances of each particular case.

5. A Breach of Legal Duty

The general nature of this duty is one tending to the preservation of persons from injury or death in the doing of prima facie dangerous acts, such as the use of machinery, and the keeping of dangerous animals.[60]

6. Two Forms of Criminal Negligence

Criminal negligence is of two species: (a) It may exist in reference to the very act which is not performed, as where a pointsman, from pure carelessness, say, chatting with a friend, omits to set his points right and the train runs off the line in consequence; or where a parent causes death or bodily injury to his or her child by neglecting to feed the child; (b) Negligence, however, is in practice more often combined with a positive act, i.e., it does not exist in reference to the very act, but with regard to the neglect of certain necessary precautions in doing the act.[61] Thus, through the fault of his gaoler a prisoner escapes from his cell. Apart from any intentional conduct on the gaoler's part the escape may be due either to the fact that the gaoler forgot to lock the cell door, or he fastened the door, but neglected to do so securely. In the first case the negligence is in respect of the act itself, in the second, it exists in reference to the accompanying precautions.

7. Criminal Liability Depends on Mental Attitude towards Consequences of Act or Omission

All crimes then are the results of one or other of these three species of conduct, which are thus, conversely, the means whereby crimes are committed. But it does not necessarily follow that the results of such conduct are always crimes, for this depends, in the case of the first two species of conduct, upon the mental attitude of the agent in regard to the consequences of his physical action or inaction.[62]

50 Emperor v Bhogilal Chimanlal Nanawati AIR 1931 Bom 409, p 410, 32 Cr LJ 1145, per Beaumont CJ.

51 Emperor v Bhogilal Chimanlal Nanawati AIR 1931 Bom 409, p 410, 32 Cr LJ 1145, per Beaumont CJ, per Murphy J, p 411.

52 Om Prakash v State of Punjab AIR 1961 SC 1782, (1960) 1 Cr LJ 848 .

53 Emperor v Gajjan Singh AIR 1931 Lah 27, p 29, 32 Cr LJ 483 ; Nehal Mahto v Emperor AIR 1939 Pat 625, and the case-law discussed therein.

54 Sesha Ayyar v Venkatachala Chetty AIR 1924 Mad 487, 25 Cr LJ 442 .

55 General Clauses Act 1897, s 26 ; Emperor v Bhogilal Chimanlal Nanawati AIR 1931 Bom 409 ; Re V v Satyanarayana Murthy AIR 1953 Mad 137 .

56 Raj Karan Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh (2000) Cr LJ 555 (All) .

57 PB Desai v State of Maharashtra 2014 Cr LJ 385, p 396, (2013) 15 SCC 481, AIR 2014 SC 795, (2013) 131 AIC 94 (SC) .

58 R v Eyre Fin Rep 57, per Blackburn.

59 Beven's Negligence in Law, second edn, pp 1, 7- 8.

60 Wharton on Homicide, ch 4, s 72 .

61 Clark, Analysis of Criminal Liability, ch 9, pp 103-04.

62 For which topic, refer to Notes under s 39 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[63][S. 34.

Acts done by several persons in furtherance of common intention.--

When a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone.]157158159

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

As the section stood originally, the words 'in furtherance of the common intention of all' were not there. By s 1 of Act 27 of 1870, the present section was substituted for the previous one with the addition of the words 'in furtherance of the common intention of all'. This was done in order to make the object of this section clear.[64]

2. Scope

Section 34 of the IPC has been enacted on the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act. The section is only a rule of evidence and does not create a substantive offence. The distinctive feature of the section is the element of participation in action. The liability of one person for an offence committed by another in the course of criminal act perpetrated by several persons arises under s 34 if such criminal act is done in furtherance of a common intention of the persons who join in committing the crime.[65]Section 34, IPC does not create any distinct offence, but it lays down the principle of constructive liability.[66]Section 34, IPC carves out an exception from the general law that a person is responsible for his own act as it provides that a person can also be held vicariously responsible for the act of others, if he has the 'common intention' to commit the offence.[67]

Section 34 of the IPC deals with the doing of separate acts, similar or diverse, by several (two or more) persons; if all are done in furtherance of a common intention, each person is liable for the result of them all as if he had done them himself.[68]Section 34 is intended to meet a case in which it may be difficult to distinguish between acts of individual members of a party who act in furtherance of the common intention of all or to prove exactly what part was taken by each of them.[69] The leading feature of s 34 of the IPC is participation in action: a common intention connotes meeting of minds to commit an offence and participation in the commission of offence in furtherance of that common intention. Participation need not in all cases be by physical presence. Existence of a common intention in several persons, who commit the criminal act, and the doing of the criminal act in furtherance of that common intention are the essential requirements for the applicability of s 34 . When these two requirements are satisfied, each of such persons is liable for the entire criminal act in the same manner as if he alone had done it irrespective of the fact whether he was present at the spot or not. Thus, the essence of s 34 is a simultaneous consensus of the minds of the persons participating in the criminal action to bring160 about a particular result.[70] It is well settled that for the applicability of s 34, IPC, the prosecution is required to prove prior meeting of minds or a prior concert or a pre-arranged plaint.[71]To invoke the aid of this section successfully, it must be shown that the criminal act, complained of was done by one of the accused persons in furtherance of the common intention of all; if this is shown, then the liability for the crime may be imposed on any one of the persons in the same manner as if the act was done by him alone.[72]This being the principle, the common intention within the meaning of the section implies a pre-arranged plan and to convict the accused of an offence applying the section, it should be proved that the criminal act was done in concert pursuant to the pre-arranged plan.[73]

Section 34 is applicable even if no injury has been caused by the particular accused himself.[74]

For holding a person liable for commission of murder of the deceased with the aid of s 34, IPC, it must be established that there was common intention in the sense of a pre-arranged plan between the two, or such intention had developed on the place of occurrence at the spur of moment prior to commission of the offence. The acts may be different in character, but it should have been proved that they must have been actuated by one and the same common intention in order to attract the provisions of s 34, IPC . Though accused A2 came with accused A1, but he only attacked the witness (PW9), and neither assaulted the deceased nor assisted the co-accused (A1) to assault the deceased. The accused (A2) could not be convicted for offences under ss 302 / 34 and 307 / 34 IPC .[75]

But the plan need not be elaborate nor a long interval of time is required and presence of offender sought to be rendered liable may not be one of the conditions of its applicability.[76]

Section 34 of the IPC embodies the principle of joint liability in doing of a criminal act, the essence of that liability being the existence of a common intention. Participation in the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention invites its application.[77] The leading feature of this section is, therefore, 'participation in action'.[78]A particular criminal act, done by an individual, in order to constitute a constructive liability against others, must be one which is done, in furtherance of a common intention, as a step-in-aid to attain it or as a means to the161 end underlying that or must be one which is a link in the chain of acts, all originating out of the common intention and culminating in its attainment. Once the criminal act becomes independent of the common intention, though done in pursuance of an intention, similar to that common intention or giving rise to consequences similar in nature, as contemplated by the common intention, the rule of constructive liability, as laid down in s 34, ceases to operate and others, who were parties to the original common intention, cannot be held liable constructively for that criminal act.[79] Where main accused is acquitted, his associates cannot be convicted with the aid of s 34 or s 149, IPC .[80]

For applicability of s 34, IPC it is not necessary that the name of each accused must be known.[81]

Section 34 does not say 'the common intention of all', nor does it say 'and intention common to all' Under the provisions of s 34 the essence of the liability is to be found in the existence of a common intention animating the accused leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of such intention. As a result of the application of principles enunciated in s 34, when an accused was convicted under s 302 read with s 34, in law it means that the accused is liable for the act which caused death of the deceased in the same manner as if it was done by him alone.[82]

The true concept of the s 34 is that if two or more persons intentionally do an act jointly, the position in law is just the same as if each of them has done it individually by himself.[83]

The existence of a common intention amongst the participants in a crime is the essential element for application of this section. It is not necessary that the acts of the several persons charged with commission of an offence jointly must be the same or identically similar. The acts may be different in character, but must have been actuated by one and the same common intention in order to attract the provision.[84]

Section 34 is applicable even if no injury has been caused by the particular accused himself. For applying s 34 it is not necessary to show some overt act on the part of the accused.[85]

3. Acts Partly in Jurisdiction of one Court and Partly in Other

The section provides not only for liability to punishment but also for subjection of a conspirator to the jurisdiction of court, even if he conspires at a place beyond its jurisdiction, provided overt acts are done within such jurisdiction.[86]162

4. Parties to Crime

Under English law persons who are in any way connected with the perpetration of a crime are divided into two classes. Those who take part in the actual execution of the crime called 'principals', i.e., those who 'counsel, procure or command' the execution; and those who in any way assist the criminal after the crime with a view to shielding him from justice, called 'accessories'; the former being 'accessories before the fact', and the latter 'accessories after the fact'.[87]

This subject of 'parties to a crime' has not been dealt with at one place in the Code: for, while ss 34 - 38 of the IPC deal with 'principals', the law in regard to 'accessories before the fact' is to be found in ss 107 - 120 (abetment), and 'accessories after the fact' are treated in scattered sections, viz, ss 130, 136, 157, 212 and 216, under the title 'harbouring'. Even if, in a given case, the charge disclosed only the named persons as co-accused and the prosecution witnesses confined their testimony to them, even then it would be permissible to come to the conclusion that others named or unnamed, besides those mentioned in the charge or the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, acted conjointly with one of the charged accused if there was other evidence to lead to the conclusion, but not otherwise.[88]

5. Principals in Crime (Sections 34-38)

Principals are of two kinds: (a) Those who actually commit the crime, i.e., principals in the first degree, and (b) those who aid in the actual commission, i.e., principals in the second degree. No distinction has, however, been made, in regard to the punishment of such persons, all being liable to be punished alike. The purpose of ss 34 - 38 of the IPC is to show under what circumstances a person is a 'principal in the second degree' and therefore punishable as if he were a 'principal in the first degree'. The following observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in this connection in Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King Emperor ,[89] would be of some interest:

> The Code must not be assumed to have sought to introduce differences from the prior law. It continues to employ some of the older technical terms without even defining them, as in the case of abetment...One object which those who framed the Code had in view, was to simplify the law; and to get rid of the terms 'principal in the first degree' and 'principal in the second degree' and others, was no doubt a step in that direction, but to introduce a general section, section 34, which has little, if any content, and to attach a wholly new importance to abetments and attempts, was to complicate, not to simplify the administration of the law, for participation and joint action in the actual commission of crime are, in substance, matters which stand in antithesis to abetments or attempts.

Section 34 of the IPC contemplates the doing of an act by several persons as principals and not as principals and agents.[90]

6. Liability of Principal Offender not Whittled Down

Section 34 of the IPC applies when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all. In such a case, the other offenders are163 liable for that act in the same manner as the principal offender, as if the act were done by such offenders also. This section does not whittle down or do away with the liability of the principal offender committing the principal act; it merely provides that all other offenders are also vicariously liable.[91]

7. Combinations of Persons in Crimes

In Joel Prentiss Bishop's Commentaries on the Criminal Law,[92] there is a discussion in ch 45 on 'Combinations of Persons In Crime'. The general principles enunciated by the learned author are given as follows.

> If one employs another to do a thing we commend or blame him precisely as though it were done with his own hands. In like manner, we commend or blame the other, if his will concurred, the same as though he had proceeded self-moved. And if two act together in the doing, it is the same as to each...The doctrine of combination in crime is, that, when two or more persons unite to accomplish a criminal object, whether through > the physical volition of one, or of all, proceeding severally or collectively, each individual whose will contributed to the wrong-doing is in law responsible for the whole, the same as though performed by himself alone. It may be particularised thus. If persons, combining in intent, perform a criminal act jointly, the guilt of each is the same as if he had done it alone; and it is the same if, the act being divided into parts, each proceeds with his several parts unaided. Since an act by an agent has in, law, the effect of a personal act, if one employs another to do a criminal thing for him, he is guilty of the same as though he had done it himself. Nor is his guilt the less if the agent proceeds equally from his own desires or on his own account. Finally, by this sort of reasoning we reach the conclusion, that every person whose corrupt intent contributes to a criminal act, in a degree sufficient for the law's notice, is in law guilty of the whole crime. Thus, it may be said in a sort of general way, that all who by their presence countenance a riot or a prize fight or any other crime--especially if ready to help should necessity require, are liable as principal actors. But this statement needs to be made more exact. A mere presence is not sufficient; nor is it alone sufficient in addition, that the person present, unknown to the other, mentally approves what is done. There must be something going a little further; as for example, some word or act. The party to be charged 'must', in the language of Cockburn CJ, 'incite, or procure, or encourage the act'. His will must, in some degree, contribute to what is done...From the proposition that mere presence at the commission of a crime does not render a person guilty, it results, that, if two or more are lawfully together, and one does a criminal thing without the concurrence of the other, they are not thereby involved in guilt. But, however, lawful the original coming together, the after-conduct may satisfy a jury that all are guilty of what is done...The true view is doubtless as follows: Every man is responsible for what of wrong flows directly from his corrupt intention; but not, though intending wrong, for the product of another's independent act. If he sets in motion the physical power of another, he is liable for its result. If he contemplated the result, he is answerable though it is produced in a manner he did not contemplate. If he did not contemplate it in kind, yet if it was the ordinary effect of the cause, he is responsible. If he awoke into action in an indiscriminate power, he is responsible. If he gave directions vaguely and incautiously, and the person receiving them acted according to what he might have foreseen would be the understanding, he is responsible. But, if the wrong done was a fresh and independent product of the mind of the doer, the other is not criminal therein merely because, when it was done, he meant to be a partaker with the doer in a different wrong. These propositions may not always be applied readily to cases arising, yet they seem to furnish the true rules.164

Referring to the above passage, Sankar Saran J, of the Allahabad High Court, in State v Saidu Khan [93] observed:

> I do not know whether it is possible to summarise the legal position of joint responsibility any better than has been done, if I may say so with respect, by the learned author in his Commentaries on the Criminal Law. The Indian Law has embodied these principles in sections 32 - 38,Penal Code, specially sections 34, 35, 37 and 38 .

8. Two Conditions of Joint and Vicarious Liability

The vicarious or constructive liability under s 34 of the IPC can arise only where the two conditions stand fulfilled: i.e., (a) the mental element, called the intention to commit the criminal act conjointly with another or others; and (b) actual participation in one form or the other in the commission of the offence. The accused is not liable to be punished under s 34, IPC, for what another or others have done by himself or themselves, but only for what he had done in furtherance of the common intention to commit the offence conjointly with another or others. Neither the entertaining of the common intention for the commission of the criminal act by itself, nor the participation in the commission of the offence by itself, would render the accused liable to be punished under s 34, IPC . To convict an accused under s 34, it should be proved that the criminal act was done in concert, pursuant to the pre-arranged plan.[94] In Suresh v State of UP ,[95] the Supreme Court observed:

> Thus to attract Section 34IPC two postulates are indispensable: (1) The criminal act (consisting of a series of acts) should have been done, not by one person, but more than one person. (2) Doing of every such individual act cumulatively resulting in the commission of criminal offence should have been in furtherance of the common intention of all such persons.

Accused Jointly Transporting Sandal Wood Billets - Section 34 applied

Where the charge-sheet material disclosed that all the accused persons were jointly transporting sandal wood billets, they shared common intention and were jointly transporting sandal-wood billets. Section 34IPC was applicable.[96]

9. Constructive Liability

A person may be constructively liable for an offence which he did not actually commit by reason of:

(1) the common intention of all to commit such an offence (s 34);
(2) his being a member of a conspiracy to commit such an offence (s 120A);
(3) his being a member of a unlawful assembly, the members whereof knew that an offence was likely to be committed (s 149).[97]165

10. Doer of Fractional Act is Doer of Entire Act

Section 34 of the IPC deals with the doing of separate acts, similar or diverse, by several persons; if all are done in furtherance of a common intention, each person is liable for the result of them all as if he had done them himself, s 35 in effect provides for a case where several persons join in an act which is not per se criminal, but is criminal only if it is done with a criminal knowledge or intention; in such a case each of those persons who joins in the act with that particular knowledge or intention will be liable for the whole act as if it were done by him alone with that knowledge or intention, and those who join in the act but have no such knowledge or intention will not be liable at all. Section 37 of the IPC, in effect, provides for a case where several persons co-operate in the commission of an offence by doing separate acts at different times or places, which acts, by reason of intervening intervals of time, may not be regarded as one act or which may not be necessarily committed with a common intention. Section 38 of the IPC provides that if several persons are engaged or concerned in the commission of a criminal act, having been set in motion by different intentions, they may be guilty of different offences by means of that act. This section which is the converse of s 34, provides for different punishments for different offences where several persons are concerned in the commission of a criminal act, whether such persons are actuated by one intention or the other.[1]The basic principle which runs through all these sections is that an entire act is to be attributed to a person who may have performed only a fractional part of it. Sections 35 , 37 - 38 of the IPC begin by accepting this proposition as axiomatic, and each of them then goes on to lay down a rule by which the criminal liability of the doer of a fractional part (who is to be taken as the doer of the entire act), is to be adjudged in different situations of mens rea. The axiom itself is laid down in s 34 of the IPC in which emphasis is on the act. What has to be carefully noted is that in ss 35, 37 - 38 of the IPC, this axiom that the doer of the fractional act is the doer of the entire act is taken up as the basis of a further rule. Without the axiom these sections would not work, for it is the foundation on which they all stand.[2]

11. Principle of Joint Liability

Section 34 of the IPC has been enacted on the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act. The section is only a rule of evidence and does not create a substantive offence. The distinctive feature of the section is the element of participation in action. The liability of one person for an offence committed by another in the course of criminal act perpetrated by several persons arises under s 34 if such criminal act is done in furtherance of a common intention of the persons who join in committing the crime. Direct proof of common intention is seldom available and, therefore, such intention can only be inferred from the circumstances appearing from the proved facts of the case and the proved circumstances. In order to bring home the charge of common intention, the prosecution has to establish by evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, that there was plan or meeting of mind of all the accused persons to commit the offence for which they are charged with the aid of s 34, be it pre-arranged or on the spur of moment; but it must necessarily be before the commission of the crime. The true concept of the section is that if two or more166 persons intentionally do an act jointly, the position in law is just the same as if each of them has done it individually by himself.[3]

Section 34 envisages a principle of fault liability in doing a criminal act and renders every person liable irrespective of the role which he had in its perpetration.[4]

Sections 34 - 38 are Explanatory Sections

Section 34, as well as ss 35 - 38 of the IPC, which follow on its heels are all explanatory sections. They are provisions of an interpretative character and, being so, they are automatically imported into the definition of every substantive offence with which an accused is charged. They are, therefore, to be applied in every case according to the facts disclosed by the evidence in that case. The necessary consequence of the above position is that the mention or non-mention of s 34, IPC, in the charge along with the substantive offence cannot be treated as an illegality under the CrPC necessarily vitiating the conviction or trial of an accused and entitling him to claim a re-trial irrespective of the question of prejudice.[5]

12. Principle Underlying the Section

The principle embodied in s 34 of the IPC is that if two or more persons intentionally do a thing jointly, it is just the same as if each of them had done it individually. As the Privy Council pointed out in Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King Emperor ,[6] ' s 34 deals with the doing of separate acts, similar or diverse, by several persons; if all are done in furtherance of a common intention, each person is liable for the result of them all, as if he had done them himself'. The essence of this principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act is the existence of a common intention. Participation, in the commission of the offence, in furtherance of the common intention, invites its application.[7] The participation need not, in all cases, be by physical presence.[8]

The section really means that if two or more persons intentionally do a common thing jointly, it is just the same as if each of them had done it individually. It is a well recognised canon of criminal jurisprudence that the courts cannot distinguish between co-conspirators, nor can they inquire, even if it were possible as to the part taken by each in the crime. Where parties go with a common purpose to execute a common object each and every person becomes responsible for the act of each and167 every other in execution and furtherance of their common purpose; as the purpose is common, so must be the responsibility. All are guilty of the principal offence, not of abetment only. In combination of this kind a mortal stroke, though given by one of the party, is deemed in the eye of law to have been given by every individual present and abetting. But a party not cognizant of the intention of his companion to commit murder is not liable, though he has joined his companion to do an unlawful act. The leading feature of this section is the element of participation in action. The essence of liability under this section is the existence of a common intention animating the offenders and the participation in a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention. The essence is simultaneous consensus of the minds of persons participating in the criminal action to bring about a particular result.[9]

13. Section does not Create Substantive or Distinct Offence

This section does not create a substantive offence; it is merely a rule of evidence.[10] The section is really nothing more than explanatory and embodies, in the IPC, the ordinary common sense principle that if two or more persons intentionally do a thing jointly, it is just the same as if each of them had done it individually.[11] The section does not create a distinct offence; it only lays down the principle of joint (constructive) liability.[12] The Kerala High Court, in Mathai v State of Kerala ,[13] has held that s 34 does not, by itself, create an offence; it only lays down the rule of law without creating a definite head of criminality.

A charge framed against the accused person, referring to s 34 of the IPC is but a convenient form of giving notice to him that the principal of joint liability is sought to be invoked. Section 34 does not create an offence, it merely enunciates a principle of joint liability for criminal acts done in furtherance of the common intention of the offenders. Conviction of an accused person recorded, relying upon the principle of joint liability, is, therefore, for the offence committed in furtherance of the common intention of himself and others, a reference in the order recording conviction to s 34 may appear to be surplus.[14]

14. Common Intention may be Inferred from Conduct

If one of the three accused opens fire and, after the deceased falls down, the other two inflict injuries on the deceased with the iron rods which they had in their hands, the irresistible conclusion is that all the three accused were actuated by common168 intention to cause his death.[15] The appellants accused had come armed in a body and acted in a pre-concerted and coordinated manner to the spot to do away with the life of the victim, attacked the victim and therefore there was no escape from the obvious conclusion that all the appellants shared the common intention to commit the murder of the victim. All the accused appellants were convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[16]

No overt act was attributed to the second accused to kill the deceased, he was on the spot and prevented the eye-witness from intervening. Section 34 , IPC was attracted in the case, he was convicted under s 302 read with s 34 .[17]

The accused police officials indulged in indiscriminate firing at the hard core wanted criminal in retaliation to killing of innocent police official. Their conviction with the help of s 34, IPC was held proper.[18]

The manner in which the accused appellants had scaled down from the roof top and had unlatched the entrance of the campus where deceased was murdered gives a clear picture that they were definitely sharing common intention and that was to do away with the life of the deceased on that fateful night. The three appellants accused were convicted under s 302, IPC read with s 34, IPC .[19]

The appellant armed with a lathi went along with another accused who was carrying an axe, entered inside the house of the deceased, took part in the incident by giving blows of lathi on the person of the deceased when other appellant was giving blows of axe. Held, the appellant shared common intention with another co-accused, and he was convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[20]

Appellant No. 2 was alleged to have given lathi blow on the knees of the victim who fell down. Appellant No. 1 was alleged to have caused serious injuries with gandasa. It was highly doubtful if the Appellant No. 2 shared common intention with Appellant No. 1 and if both of them wanted to kill the injured victim. Appellant No. 2 was acquitted of the charge under s 307 read with s 34, IPC .[21]

15. Applicability

Applicability of s 34 of the IPC depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. As such no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the applicability or non-applicability of s 34 . For applicability of the section it is not necessary that the acts of several persons charged with commission of an offence jointly, must be the same or identically similar. The acts may be different in character, but must have been actuated by one and the same common intention in order to attract the provision.[22]169

Requisite Conditions for Applicability

It may be noted that the words 'in furtherance of the common intention of all' were not to be found in the original section. They were added by s 1 of Act 27 of 1870. But even before these words were added, Sir Barnes Peacock CJ (with whom Trevor and Norman JJ, concurred), held in Queen v Gorachand Gope ,[23] that before the section could be applied to a particular case, it must be shown first that a criminal act was done by several persons, secondly that all of them intended that the criminal act should be committed and lastly that the criminal act was done in furtherance of the common intention.

Before the section can be applied to a particular case, it must be shown: (a) a criminal act was done by two or more persons; (b) all of them intended that the criminal act should be committed; and (c) the criminal act was done in furtherance of the common intention.[24] To establish the common intention of several persons so to attract the mischief of s 34, IPC, the following two fundamental facts have to be established: (i) common intention to commit an offence and (ii) participation of the accused in commission of the offences. If the above two ingredients are satisfied, even overt act on the part of some of the persons sharing the common intention was held to be not necessary.[25]If common intention is proved but no overt act is attributed to the individual accused, s 34 will be attracted as essentially it involves vicarious liability but if participation of the accused in the crime is proved and a common intention is absent, s 34 cannot be invoked. In any case, it is not possible to have direct evidence of the common intention. It has to be inferred from the facts and circumstances of each case.[26]

For holding a person liable for commission of murder of the deceased with the aid of s 34, IPC, it must be established that there was common intention in the sense of a pre-arranged plan between the two, or such intention had developed on the place of occurrence at the spur of moment prior to commission of the offence. The acts may be different in character, but it should have been proved that they must have been actuated by one and the same common intention in order to attract the provisions of s 34, IPC . Though accused (A2) came with accused A1, but he only attacked the witness (PW9), and neither assaulted the deceased nor assisted the co-accused (A1) to assault the deceased. The accused (A2) could not be convicted for offences under ss 302 / 34 and 307 / 34, IPC .[27]

Mere participation of all the accused persons, in the alleged assault, even if believed, does not necessarily signify prior concert of mind or pre-arranged plan having developed at the spot of incident. In a given case, several persons can simultaneously attack a man and each one may individually inflict separate fatal blows and yet none may have the common intention required by s 34 if there is no evidence of prior meeting of minds. In such a case, each would be individually liable for whatever injury one causes, but none could be vicariously convicted for the act of any of the others.[28]170

Section not Applicable to Certain Acts

Section 34 of the IPC can be applied when a criminal act is committed by several (two or more) persons. There can be a criminal act which cannot be committed by several persons. If, in such a case, the criminal act is done by several persons, it amounts to a repetition of the criminal act. For example, a currency note can be forged by several persons, each doing a part of the forgery. In such a case, s 34 cannot be applied. But each of the persons, taking part in the forgery, would be guilty of the substantive offence of forgery.[29]Section 34 pre-supposes the sharing of a particular intention, by more than one person, to do a criminal act.[30]

16. Ultimate Criminal Act

The dominant feature for attracting s 34 of the IPC is the element of participation in absence resulting in the ultimate 'criminal act'. The 'Act' referred to in the later part of Section 34 means the ultimate criminal act with which the accused is charged of sharing the common intention. The accused is, therefore, made responsible for the ultimate criminal act done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all. The section does not envisage the separate act by all the accused persons for becoming responsible for the ultimate criminal act. If such on interpretation is accepted, the purpose of s 34 shall be rendered infructuous.[31]

17. Section not Applicable without a Substantive Charge

This section can be invoked only when there is a substantive charge of an offence having been committed.[32]

18. Section not Applicable in case of Sudden Fight

A charge under s 34, IPC, presupposes the sharing of a particular intention by more than one person, to do a criminal act.[33] Where there was a melee at the time of the incident and the two groups indulged in a free fight resulting in injuries on persons of both groups and death of two, if the court comes to the conclusion that the injuries sustained by the persons were in the course of a free fight, then only those persons who are proved to have caused injuries or death can be held guilty for the offences individually committed by them. In such cases s 34, IPC, is not attracted.[34]

This section does not normally apply if the fight has begun suddenly. In such cases, every person, who participates in the fight, is held guilty for his individual acts,[35] the reason being that it may not be easy to find whether there was any common intention and if there was any, what that common intention was. In such cases, there is commonly a cry for assistance or a call for assault or the doing of a certain act which is criminal. The person, who asks for assistance cannot possibly be sure of the171 reaction of others. All those, who come, may come with different designs and different intentions. If they immediately engage in transaction, it will be an extremely difficult task to discover, whether they have any common intention, from their acts alone. They do not have any chance of disclosing their minds to the others.[36] But where there is proof that some of the persons, participating in the fight, which had suddenly arisen, went and jointly committed an offence and there are indications that their object was to commit that offence, there is no bar for the courts to hold that they had formed a common intention there and that they had done the act of violence.[37]In a particular case, it may be found from the injuries inflicted or the conduct of the accused, that they had the common intention to kill even though the occurrence may be sudden. The question, whether there was a common intention and the act, complained of, was done in furtherance of the common intention is a question of fact dependent on the circumstances of each case.[38]

Section not Applicable to Cases under Section 285, Part I

Section 34 of the IPC cannot be applied in cases falling under s 285, Pt I, as the question of common intention does not arise in such cases.[39]

The sentence for offence under s 397 of the IPC cannot be awarded to those of the members of the group dacoits who did not use any deadly weapon. Guilt under s 397 can be attributed only to that offender who uses any deadly weapon or causes grievous hurt to any person during the course of the commission of the robbery. The provision postulates that only the individual act of accused will be relevant to attract s 397, IPC . The provisions of s 397, IPC negate the use of the principles of constructive or vicarious liability engrafted under s 34, IPC .[40]

There Ought to be at Least Two Offenders

The section can well be applied, and it has been applied, to cases in which the offence was committed only by one of the two or three persons who all had a common intention.[41]Before a person is convicted of an offence under s 326, read with s 34, it must be established that some other specified person, whose intention the accused shared, committed the act resulting in causing grievous hurt.[42] It is thus clear that the criminal act referred to in s 34, IPC, is the result of the concerted action of more than one person if the said result was reached in furtherance of the common172 intention and each person must be held liable for the ultimate result as if he had done it himself.[43]However, the prosecution is not bound to prove that the act was done by a particular specified person.[44]

19. Mob/group Fight

In cases of mob and groups fights, s 34 does not apply, and every person is liable for his individual act.[45]

20. Two Aspects of the Section

A perusal of the section shows that it deals with an offence from two aspects, the first of which may be described as the physical and the second as the mental aspect. The physical aspect of the offence referred to above has been described as 'the criminal act' in the section. This 'criminal act' must be 'done by several persons'. The emphasis in this part of the section is on the word 'done'. It naturally follows from this that before a person can be convicted by following the provisions of this section that person must have done something along with other persons. In other words, he must be shown to have individually participated in the commission of the criminal act. The second or mental aspect is termed in s 34 as the 'common intention' which permeates the criminal act and in furtherance of which the said act is done. The common intention required under this section need not, however, be identical with the guilty intention or mens rea which is the ingredient of the offence and is to be distinguished from it.[46]

21. Liability in case of Exceeding the Right of Private Defence

In order to attract s 34 of the IPC, a criminal act has to be done by a number of persons, if a number of persons are doing a lawful act, this section has no application. Persons lawfully exercising the right of private defence and rescuing cattle illegally seized cannot be said to be committing any illegal act. But if one of them exceeds the right of private defence he may be liable, but the others cannot be held responsible on the principle of s 34 .[47] Where, of several accused persons, only one accused has exceeded the right of private defence, constructive liability on other accused under s 34 IPC is not attracted.[48]If, however, the act of the one who exceeded the right of private defence is done in pursuance of the common intention of all, the section173 applies and all of them can be held liable.[49] The mere fact of a person being present on a certain lawful occasion raises no presumption of that person's complicity in an offence then committed.[50]

The liability for a criminal act done by several persons in furtherance of a common intention is allotted to each of such persons as if he alone and unaided had done that act. In such circumstances each of such persons is guilty of the one offence and it is not possible to so grade this offence as to hold, in the case of a murderous assault committed in furtherance of a common intention, that some are guilty of murder and others only of causing grievous hurt.[51]

This section provides not only for liability to punishment but also for subjection of a conspirator to the jurisdiction of a court, though he conspires at a place beyond the jurisdiction, provided overt acts are done within such jurisdiction.[52]

22. Effect of Sections 32 and 34 taken together

Even an omission can, in certain circumstances, amount to an act. This is the purport of s 32 of the IPC . So, the act mentioned in s 34, IPC, need not be an overt act, even an illegal omission to do a certain act in a certain situation can amount to an act, e.g., a co-accused, standing near the victim face to face saw an armed assailant nearing the victim from behind with a weapon to inflict a blow. The co-accused, who could have alerted the victim to move away to escape from the onslaught deliberately refrained from doing so with the idea that the blow should fall on the victim. Such omission can also be termed as an act in a given situation.[53]

23. Effect of Sections 33 and 34 taken together

When s 34, IPC, speaks of a criminal act, it embraces all the series of acts by which the injuries were inflicted. This is clear enough from a reading of ss 33 - 34 .[54]When s 34 is read alongwith the preceding s 33, it makes it clear that 'act' spoken of in s 34, indicates a series of acts as a single act.[55]

Section 34 is to be read alongwith the preceding s 33 which makes it clear that the 'act' spoken of in s 34 includes a series of acts as a single act.[56]

24. Distinction between Sections 34 and 35

Section 35 of the IPC also embodies the principal of joint liability and supplements the principle embodied in s 34 . Under it, where several persons are concerned in committing an act which is criminal only by reason of its being done with a criminal knowledge, each of such persons, who joins in the act with such knowledge, is liable for the act in the same manner as if the act were done by him alone with that knowledge.[57]Section 34 requires common intention whereas s 35 requires criminal174 knowledge or intention. The common intention required by s 34 is different from the mens rea mentioned in s 35 (refer to notes under s 35).

25. Distinction between Sections 34 and 37

If common intention is the hub of s 34 of the IPC, intentional co-operation is the spindle of s 37 of the IPC . One who shares common intention can as well co-operate in the commission of the offence intentionally. In that sense the two sections are not contradictory to each other. The former does not necessarily exclude the other. Cooperation in the commission of the offence need not be for the entire gamut of the offence committed. It is enough if he cooperates in one of the several acts which constitute the offence.[58] The distinction between ss 34 and 37 of the IPC is that while the former requires common intention for a criminal act which is done by a number of persons in order that they should become liable as if the act was done by each of them, the latter deals with the intentional co-operation in the offence which has resulted from several acts, each of which standing by itself is not the offence with which the accused are charged.[59] In Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor ,[60] Lord Sumner pointed out that the intentional co-operation required by s 37 may not be the same as the common intention required by s 34 .

> Now, if, as Lord Sumner says, intentional co-operation may not be the same as a common intention, it must in my opinion, include action which contributes to the offence and is done with the consciousness that the offence is on foot, though without sharing the intention to commit that offence.[61]

Section 37 of the IPC can have no application where a number of persons are charged with the offence of causing simple and grievous hurt by use of lathis and it is not possible to say that there were several acts which resulted in the offence of causing grievous or simple injuries. But the case would fall under s 34 if there was a common intention amongst them to commit a crime punishable under the IPC .[62]

26. Distinction between Sections 34 and 38

Section 38 of the IPC is the converse of this section and provides for different punishments for different offences where several persons are concerned in the commission of a criminal act, whether such persons are actuated by one intention or the other.[63] Where the three accused were assaulting the victim, two used their weapons and the manner in which they gave blows clearly showed their intention to kill the victim. The third accused did not use his lathi for causing injuries to the victim. It was held that on facts and circumstances that liability of the two accused for the murder of victim was established with the aid of s 34 of the IPC . However, applying the principle of law under s 38 of the IPC, the third accused could be held guilty only under s 304, Pt II as he had intentionally joined in the commission of the act with the knowledge that the assault on victim was likely to result in his death and that he never had intention to commit murder.[64]175

27. Distinction between Sections 34 and 107 (Abetment)

Section 34 of the IPC embodies the principle of joint liability in doing of a criminal act. The existence of common intention is the essence of that liability. Section 109 on the other hand may be attracted even if the abettor is not present when the offence abetted is committed provided that he has instigated the commission of the offence.[65] This section requires participation in crime, whereas mere instigation is sufficient for abetment under s 107 of the IPC . Generally under s 34 a criminal act must be done in furtherance of a common intention, but, to constitute the offence of abetment it is not necessary that the act abetted should be committed or that the effect required to constitute the offence should be caused [s 108, expln (2)]. Again, it is not necessary that the person abetted should be capable by law of committing an offence, or that he should have the same guilty intention or knowledge as that of the abettor, or any guilty intention or knowledge [s 108, expln (3)], but these are the pre-requisites of liability under this section. further, a preconcert and the abettor's presence at the scene of the offence are not necessary for abetment [s 108, expln (5)] but they are necessary under this section.[66]

28. Whole Object of Sections 34 and 114

The whole object of ss 34 and 114, IPC, is to provide for cases in which the exact share of one of several criminals cannot be ascertained, though the moral culpability of each is clear and identical. Neither of these two sections should be so interpreted as to defeat the very object which underlies them.[67]

29. Distinction between Sections 34 and 114

Section 114 of the IPC deals with persons who, having previously abetted (as accessories before the fact), are also present when the offence is committed.[68]

Abetment does not in itself involve the commission of the crime abetted. It is a crime apart, s 114 deals with the case not merely where there has been the crime of abetment, but also where there has been actual commission of the crime abetted and the abettor has been present thereat, and the way in which it deals with such a case is this. Instead of the crime being still abetment with circumstances of aggravation, the crime becomes the very crime abetted. The section is evidentiary not punitory. Because participation, de facto (as this case shows) may sometimes be obscure in detail, it is established by the presumption juris et de jure that actual presence plus prior abetment can mean nothing else but participation. The presumption raised by section 114 brings the case within the ambit of s 34 .[69]

Section 114 resembles s 34, in that it rather regulates procedure and punishment than creates an offence. But the basis of the liability under the two sections is not identical. In the case of s 34 there need not be any abetment which is necessary under176 s 114, and in the case of s 114 there need not be any common intention which is necessary under s 34 .

> Section 114 marks the fact that where it can be proved that the accused, if absent, would be liable as an abettor, his mere presence when the offence is committed is, without more sufficient proof of common intention, to make him an accessory at the fact or principal.[70]

A mere direction from one person to another and the carrying out of that direction by the other may be the only instigation of the latter's act and may not be a case of joint act falling under s 34 . But where two persons with their followers, all of them armed, move about together for a said purpose and one gives instructions to other and keeps himself on the spot in readiness to see it carried out and the other carries it out, it is hardly possible to say that the act is not one which was done in furtherance of common intention of both.[71] Actual presence plus prior abetment can mean nothing else but participation. The presumption raised by s 114 brings the case within the ambit of s 34 .[72]Even if the evidence makes out no more than mere instigation by the person present at the scene of the offence where the act is committed, the instigator is deemed to commit the offence by virtue of s 114 .[73]

30. Distinction between Sections 34, 120A and 120B

The general principle of criminal liability is that it primarily attaches to the person who actually commits an offence and it is only such person that can be held guilty and punished for the offence. Sections 34 and 149 of the IPC deal with the liability for constructive criminality. Section 149 creates a specific offence and postulates an assembly of five or more persons having a common object. Section 34 has enacted a rule of co-extensive culpability when the offence is committed with common intention by more than one accused. The offence of criminal conspiracy punishable under s 120, IPC, consists in the very agreement between two or more persons to commit a criminal offence. Before these sections can be applied, the court must find with certainty that there were at least two persons sharing the common intention or five persons sharing the common object or two persons entering into an agreement.[74]

There is not much substantial difference between, 'conspiracy' as defined in s 120A of the IPC and 'acting on a common intention' as contemplated in s 34 . While the gist of the offence in the former case is the bare engagement and association to break the law, even though the illegal act does not follow that of the offence under s 34, is the commission of a criminal act in furtherance of a common intention of all the offenders which means a unity of criminal behaviour resulting in something for which an individual would be punishable as if it were done all by himself.[75] If evidence of conspiracy has once been rejected, the same evidence cannot be used for finding a common intention under s 34 .[76]177

31. Distinction between Sections 34 and 149

The distinction between 'common intention' under s 34 and 'common object' under s 149 of the IPC is of vital importance. The words 'in furtherance of common intention of all' are the most essential part of s 34 . Common intention is the intention to commit the crime actually committed and this common intention is anterior in time to the commission of the crime. On the other hand, s 149 speaks of an offence that has been committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in pursuance of the common object of that assembly.[77] The 'common intention' in s 34 should not be mixed up with the 'common object' required by s 149 . The two expressions are not synonymous.[78] In Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor ,[79] Lord Sumner pointed out that there is a difference between 'object' and 'intention', for although the object may be common, the intentions of the several members of an unlawful assembly may differ and indeed may be similar only in respect that they are unlawful.[80]

Common intention and common object stand on different footing. For common intention, evidence is required showing previous meeting of minds and pre-arranged plan. In case of common object, there is no need for prior concert and common meeting of minds before the commission of crime. Common intention may develop on the spot, but to that effect, there must be very specific and cogent evidence.[81]

There is a substantial difference between ss 34 and 149, IPC . When several persons, numbering five or more, do an act or intend to do it, both ss 34 and 149, IPC may apply. Section 149 , IPC is of wider scope than s 34, IPC and in a case where s 149 applies, a constructive liability arises in respect of those persons who do not actually commit the offence.[82]

The 'common intention' as used in s 34 should not be mixed up with the 'common object' as required in s 149 . The two expressions are not synonymous and they have been used in different senses and should be kept distinct, though both the sections relate to vicarious or collective liability and on the surface involve some amount of resemblance and overlapping. Section 34 is restricted to 'common intention' and does not embrace any knowledge. Under s 149 it is the knowledge which is necessary to attract culpability.[83]

The facts constituting the common intention and those of common object may in some cases overlap.[84] In such a situation, both ss 34 and 149, IPC are attracted.[85] There are two vital differences between this section and s 149 . They are:[86]178

(i) Whereas s 34 does take into account the fact of the participation of every individual offender in the offence which is therein described as a 'criminal act' as well as his mental state which is therein connoted by the word 'intention'; Section 149 ignores both these factors completely.

(ii) Whereas s 34 is merely declaratory of a rule of criminal liability and does not create a distinct offence; s 149 is not merely a declaratory provision and does create a distinct offence. As pointed out by Lord Summner in his classic judgment in Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor ,[87] there is much difference in the scope and applicability of ss 34 and 149, though they have some resemblance and are to some extent overlapping. The two sections are again compared and contrasted in Karnail Singh v State of Punjab .[88] As stated above, s 34 does not by itself create any offence, whereas s 149 does. In a charge under s 34, there is active participation in the commission of the criminal act; under s 149, the liability arises by reason of the membership of the unlawful assembly with a common object, and there may be no active participation at all in the perpetration or commission of the crime. The overlapping arises in those cases where two or more persons commit a murder in furtherance of the common intention, but it is not possible to say which of them was responsible for the fatal injury and the others are sought to be made liable for the result owing to the common intention involved.[89] The leading feature of s 34 is the element of participation in action, whereas membership of the assembly at the time of committing of the offence is the important element in s 149 . The two sections have a certain resemblance and may to a certain extent overlap, but it cannot be said that both have the same meaning.[90]

(iii) Some active participation, especially in crime involving physical violence, is necessary under s 34, but s 149 does not require it and the liability arises by reason of mere membership of the unlawful assembly with a common object and there may be no active participation at all in preparation and commission of the crime;

(iv) Section 34 speaks of common intention, but s 149 contemplates common object which is undoubtedly wider in its scope and amplitude than intention; and

(v) Section 34 does not fix a minimum number of persons who must share the common intention, whereas s 149 requires that there must be at least five persons who must have the same common object.[91]

To sum up, s 149 differs from s 34 of the IPC in the following respects:

(i) It requires an assembly of five persons.

(ii) The common object must be one of those specified in s 141, whereas according to the strict language of s 34 'common intention' may be any intention whatsoever.179

(iii) The offence actually committed is required by s 149 to be one which the members of the unlawful assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. It need not be a criminal act in actual furtherance of the common object which under s 34 it has to be.

(iv) Section 34 requires some act, however, small, to be done whereas under s 149 mere membership of the unlawful assembly is sufficient.

(v) Section 34 enunciates a mere principle of liability, but creates no offence; s 149 creates a specific offence.[92]

(vi) Section 149 is of wider scope than s 34 IPC .[93]

Section 149 applies not only where an offence is committed by a single member of an unlawful assembly but also where an offence is committed by two or more members of such an assembly acting in furtherance of a common intention. Therefore, where two or more members of an unlawful assembly are found guilty of an offence by reason of s 34, the other members of the assembly may be liable for that offence under s 149 .[94]

32. Sections 34, 109 and 120B Considered Together

Section 34 of the IPC embodies the principle of joint liability in doing of a criminal act, the essence of that liability being the existence of a common intention. Participation in the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention invites its application. Section 109 of the IPC, on the other hand, may be attracted even if the abettor is not present when the offence abetted is committed provided that he has instigated the commission of the offence or has engaged with one or more other persons in a conspiracy to commit an offence and pursuant to that conspiracy some act or illegal omission takes place or has intentionally aided the commission of an offence by an act or illegal omission. Criminal conspiracy differs from other offences in that mere agreement is made an offence even if no step is taken to carry out that agreement. Though there is close association of conspiracy with incitement and abetment the substantive offence of criminal conspiracy is somewhat wider in amplitude than abetment by conspiracy as contemplated by s 107, IPC . A conspiracy from its very nature is generally hatched in secret. It is, therefore, extremely rare that direct evidence in proof of conspiracy can be forthcoming from wholly disinterested quarters or from utter strangers. But, like other offences, criminal conspiracy can be proved by circumstantial evidence. Indeed, in most cases proof of conspiracy is largely inferential though the inference must be founded on solid facts. Surrounding circumstances and antecedent and subsequent conduct, among other factors, constitute relevant material. In fact, because of the difficulties in having direct evidence of criminal conspiracy, once reasonable ground is shown for believing that two or more persons have conspired to commit an offence then anything done by anyone of them in reference to their common intention after the same is entertained becomes, according to the law of evidence, relevant for providing both conspiracy and the offences committed pursuant thereto.[95]180

The accused who only keeps the common intention in his mind, but does not do any act, overt or covert, at the scene, cannot be convicted with the aid of s 34, IPC . There may be other provisions in the IPC like s 120B or s 109 which could be invoked then to catch such non-participating accused. Thus participation in crime in furtherance of common intention is sine qua-non s 34, IPC .[1]

33. Sections 34, 120A and 149 Considered Together

Participation of the individual offender in the criminal act in some form or the other, which is the leading feature of s 34, differentiates it not only from s 149, but also from other similar offences like criminal conspiracy and abetment. A bare agreement between two or more persons to do or cause to be done an illegal act might make a person liable for the offence of criminal conspiracy as defined in s 120 . If the said agreement is to commit an offence, such an agreement would by itself be enough to make a man guilty and no overt act apart from the agreement would be necessary. If, however, the agreement is to commit an act which is not tantamount to an offence, then some overt act in pursuance thereof will be necessary. Such overt act may, however, be performed by any person who is a party to the agreement and not necessarily by the particular accused who might be guilty of the offence without having participated in the act. On the other hand, under s 34, a mere agreement, although it might be sufficient proof of the common intention, would be wholly insufficient to sustain a conviction with the application of s 34, unless some criminal act is done in furtherance of the said common intention and the accused himself has in some way or the other participated in the commission of the said act.[2] The offence of criminal conspiracy consists in the very agreement between two or more persons to commit a criminal offence irrespective of the further consideration whether or not those offences have actually been committed.[3] While under this section, criminality ensues from the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention, criminal liability under s 120A of the IPC ensues from the moment two or more persons agree, which confines *mens rea*within narrower limits, though, if there is an agreement, the act need not be criminal. Under this section there need be no proof of agreement, since a mere common intention would suffice; but in that case the act itself must be criminal and proved to have been done in furtherance of the common intention.

Section 149 requires the presence of at least five participants in the crime, but under ss 34 and 120A, their number may be less. Again under s 149, there need be no common intention as required by s 34, nor common agreement as required by s 120A . All that s 149 requires is a common object or failing this, even knowledge on the part of any member that the object of that assembly was to commit any of the acts enumerated in s 141, though he may himself have had neither the intention to commit that act nor have agreed to do so.

34. Both Sections 34 and 149 may or may not Apply/Overlap

It is well settled by a catena of decisions that s 34 as well as s 149 of the IPC deal with liability for constructive criminality, i.e., vicarious liability of a person for acts181 of others. Both the sections deal with combinations of persons who become punishable as sharers in an offence. Thus they have a certain resemblance and may to some extent overlap. But a clear distinction is made out between common intention and common object in that common intention denotes action in concert and necessarily postulates the existence of a pre-arranged plan implying a prior meeting of the minds, while common object does not necessarily require proof of prior meeting of minds or pre-concert. Though there is substantial difference between the two sections, they also overlap to some extent and it is a question to be determined on the facts of each case whether the charge under s 149 overlaps the ground covered by s 34 . Thus, if several persons, numbering five or more, do an act and intend to do it, both ss 34 and 149 may apply. If the common object does not necessarily involve a common intention, then the substitution of s 34 for s 149 might result in prejudice to the accused and ought not, therefore, to be permitted. But if it does involve a common intention then the substitution of s 34 for s 149 must be held to be a formal matter. Whether such recourse can be had or not must depend on the facts of each case. The non-applicability of s 149 is, therefore, no bar in convicting the appellants under s 302 read with s 34, IPC, if the evidence discloses commission of an offence in furtherance of the common intention of them all.[4]

35. Section 34 and Ss 192 and 199

Neither s 192, IPC, incorporate the principle of vicarious liability, and therefore, it was incumbent on the complainant to specifically aver the role of each of the accused in the complaint.[5]

[I] PARTICIPATION IN A CRIMINAL ACT

36. 'Criminal Act'

This section contemplates the case where more than one person share in the doing of an act; and it is necessary to bear in mind the definition of 'act' given in s 33 and also the provisions of ss 35 and 37 - 38 .[6] As defined by s 33, the word 'act' denotes as well a series of acts as a single act, and by the word 'act', s 34 contemplates a series of acts though done by several persons[7] but all these acts must be done in pursuance of a common intention.[8]The 'criminal act' obviously may include not only a single act, but also a series of acts or omissions; different actors may be responsible for doing different acts or different omissions. It is, however, necessary that every such act, or omission, or a combination of both, must be in furtherance of the common intention shared by all.[9] It is not necessary that the particular act, detached from the other acts, shall itself be a criminal act.[10] The 'criminal act' must include at least two acts; it182 must be a series of acts. If only one act has been done, s 34 cannot apply, for its applicability it is essential that the criminal act is done by several persons. Obviously, one act cannot be done by several persons. If several persons do an act, they must do several acts even though they may be of the same nature and effect. If only one blow with a lathi is given by A, B, who is present there at the time, may be guilty as an abettor but would not be guilty under s 34, unless his presence at the spot is itself deemed to be an act. In certain cases, it may be deemed to be an act but not in all. The 'criminal act' is the whole series of acts. It is, what Lord Summer called, 'unity of criminal behaviour' in Barendra Kumar Ghosh v Emperor .[11]

37. Criminal Act is the Totality of the Series of Acts

The criminal act mentioned in s 34 of the IPC is the physical act or totality of the series of acts which result in the offence and not the offence as a whole. In the case of a person assaulted by several persons the criminal act is the offence when finally results though achievement of that criminal act may be the result of action of several persons: Provided there is common intention, the whole of the result achieved by several offenders is attributed to each offender notwithstanding that individually they might have done separate acts, diverse or similar. The common intention must ordinarily be with regard to act of beating or stabbing.[12]

Even omission to prevent an offence being committed may be an act.[13] As held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor ,[14]s 34 deals with the doing of separate acts, similar or diverse, by several persons; if all are done in furtherance of a common intention, each person is liable for the result of them all, as if he had done them himself, for 'that act' and 'the act' in the latter part of the section must include the whole action covered by 'a criminal act' in the first part, 'because they refer to it'. In other words, 'a criminal act' means that variety of criminal behaviour, which results in something, for which an individual would be punishable, if it were all done by himself alone, that is, in a criminal offence.[15]The criminal act contemplated in this section is a joint act which is the result of several persons individually acting in a particular manner. Every individual member of the entire group charged with the aid of s 34, must therefore, be a sharer in the joint act which is the result of their combined activity.[16]

In a statute the singular is deemed to include the plural, and it is plain that the words in the beginning of s 34 : 'When a criminal act is done by several persons' means, and can only mean, 'when criminal acts are done by several persons', or to put it more broadly, 'when several persons engage in a criminal enterprise'. The acts may be different acts, as when several men set out to burgle a house, and one of them keeps watch outside and the others enter the house, and one of the latter uses a firearm and shoots one of the inmates; or they may be similar acts as where several men combine to assault another. In either case, in order that s 34 may apply, it is183 incumbent on the prosecution to show in the first place, the existence of a common purpose or design or enterprise. When the acts done are similar, as where a number of blows are struck with lathis, then each of them is liable for every one of the blows struck, and if in the event of every blow having been struck by one man, that man would have been guilty of murder, each of them is guilty of murder, it being immaterial as to whose blow it was which was the direct and immediate cause of death.[17]

The 'criminal act' mentioned in the section is the physical act that has been done. It must be distinguished from the effect or result or consequence of it.[18]

The word 'criminal act' is used in s 34 of the IPC in the broadest possible sense. It would cover any word, gesture, deed or conduct of any kind on the part of a person, whether active or passive, which tends to support the common design. A 'criminal act' consists of the entire bundle of acts or omissions, tied together with the chain of common intention, that have combined to constitute the offence.[19]

38. 'Done by Several Persons'

The next requirement of this section is that the 'criminal act' must be done by several persons. If it is done by one person, even if it consists of a series of acts, s 34 will not apply.[20] The essence of s 34 is simultaneous consensus of the minds of persons participating in the criminal action to bring such a particular result. Such consensus can be developed at the spot and thereby intended by all of them.[21] In a case of an attempted murder only three persons, A, B and C were named in the charge under s

307 read with this section and it was not even suggested that any other unknown person or persons were involved in the commission of the crime, and B and C were acquitted. It was held that A alone could not be convicted under s 307 with the aid of s 34 . Section 34 speaks of joint liability and there can be no question of joint liability where all others charged are acquitted and only one accused remains.[22]

Similarly, in another case, it has been observed by the Bombay High Court that before a person may be convicted of an offence under s 326 read with s 34, it must be established that some other specified person, whose intention that accused shared, committed the act resulting in causing grievous hurt.[23]These observations have, however, to be read in the context of the facts of these cases. In order that the section may apply, it is not necessary that the prosecution must prove that the act was done by a particular or a specified person. In fact, the section is intended to cover a case where a number of persons act together and, on the facts of the case, it is not possible for the prosecution to prove as to which of the persons who acted together actually committed the crime.[24] It has also been held that where the accused, alleged to be the actual assailants, are acquitted, such acquittal means that there is no such person who took part in the assault resulting in causing grievous hurt and hence, the conviction of184 the remaining accused under s 326 read with s 34 cannot be upheld.[25] But where four persons are prosecuted under s 302 read with this section, failure of the prosecution to prove that one of them took part in the commission of the offence does not introduce any infirmity in its case against the remaining accused at all. The acquittal of one cannot render the conviction of the remaining accused unreasonable or illegal.[26]

Like s 149 of the IPC, s 34 also deals with cases of constructive criminal liability. It provides that where a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone. The essential constituent of the vicarious criminal liability prescribed by s 34 is the existence of common intention. If the common intention in question animates the accused persons and if the said common intention leads to the commission of the criminal offence charged, each of the persons sharing the common intention is constructively liable for the criminal act done by one of them. Just as the combination of persons sharing the same common object is one of the features of an unlawful assembly, so the existence of a combination of persons sharing the same common intention is one of the features of s 34 .[27]

All accused appellants came together. They were also searching for one P. The very fact that all of them came heavily armed and that too with many firearms clearly goes to show that a common intention was formed to commit a murder. Merely because they did not find P, who they were looking for, and instead committed the murder of M, by itself, may not be sufficient to arrive at a conclusion that they had no intention to commit the offence of murder.[28]

39. Participation in Action Necessary

The accused who is to be fastened with liability on the strength of s 34 of the IPC should have done some act which has nexus with the offence. Such act need not be very substantial, it is enough that the act is only for guarding the scene for facilitating the crime. The act need not necessarily be overt, even if it is only a covert act, it is enough, provided such a covert act is proved to have been done by the co-accused in furtherance of the common intention. In other words, the accused who only keeps common intention in mind, but does not do any act at the scene, cannot be convicted with the aid of s 34, IPC .[29] Participation in the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention invites the application of s 34, IPC .[30] To apply s 34, IPC, apart from the fact that there should be two or more accused, two factors must be established: (a) common intention and (b) participation of the accused in the commission of an offence. If a common intention is proved but no overt act is attributed to the individual accused, s 34 will be attracted as essentially it involves185 vicarious liability, but if participation of the accused in the crime is proved and a common intention is absent, s 34 cannot be invoked in every case.[31] Participation in the crime is an essential condition for a person's liability under this section.[32] The principle embodied in s 34 is participation in some action with intention of committing a crime. Once such participation is established, s 34 is attracted at once.[33]

Where the appellant accused did not participate in the assault on the injured, held he did not share common intention with the co-accused of causing grievous hurt to the victim. He was acquitted of the charge under s 307 read with s 34, IPC .[34]

Where there was no evidence to show the actual participation of the appellant accused T in causing the death of the deceased or sharing of common intention with the appellant R, appellant T was acquitted of the charge under s 302, IPC read with s 34, IPC .[35]

In Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v State of Bombay [36] the Supreme Court analysed s 34 and observed:-

> It is the essence of Section 34 that the person must be physically present at the actual commission of the crime. He need not be present in the actual room; he can, for instance, stand guard by a gate outside ready to warn his companions about any approach of danger or wait in a car on a nearby road ready to facilitate their escape, but he must be physically present at the scene of the occurrence and must actually participate in the commission of the offence in some way or other at the time the crime is actually being committed. .... The emphasis in Section 34 is on the word 'done'. It is essential that the accused join in the actual doing of the act and not merely in planning its perpetration. If the accused was not present he cannot be convicted with the aid of section.

In the case of an offence involving physical violence, it is essential for the application of s 34 that the person who instigates or aids the commission of the crime must be physically present at the actual commission of the crime for the purpose of facilitating or promoting the offence, the commission of which is the aim of the joint criminal venture. Presence of those who in one way or the other facilitate the execution of the common design, itself tantamounts to actual participation in the criminal act. The essence of s 34 is simultaneous consensus of the minds of persons participating in the criminal action to bring such a particular result. Such consensus can be developed at the spot and thereby intended by all of them.[37]All the persons who are sought to be made liable by virtue of s 34 must have done some act which is included in the 'criminal act'. One who has not taken any part in doing the criminal act cannot be made liable under the section.[38]

Where there was no reliable and clinching evidence against accused A5, A6 and A7 who were also alleged to have participated in the commission of offence, they were acquitted of the charge under s 302 / 34 IPC .[39]186

Accused (A3) armed with stick and another armed with iron pipe had assaulted the deceased. The eye-witness neither assigned any role to the accused (A3), nor deposed that the accused (A3) assaulted the deceased on the head by a stick. The doctor who conducted the postmortem deposed that the death was caused by head injuries. The conviction of the appellant accused (A3) under s 302 / 34 IPC was set aside.[40]

It is essential that the several persons join in the actual 'doing of the act' and not merely in planning and preparation.[41] The antithesis is between the preliminary stages, the agreement, the preparation, the planning, which is covered by s 109 of the IPC, and the stage of commission when the plans are put into effect and carried out. Section 34 of the Code is concerned with the latter.[42]Where the accused persons were found to be armed with firearms as well as other deadly weapons, they went in as a body of persons and participated in the occurrence of the act, in such a situation even s 34, IPC is attracted, particularly having regard to the fact that four persons were killed and several others received injuries at the hands of the members of the unlawful assembly. The participation of each of the accused persons was established. Therefore, all of them shared the common object and s 149 was also attracted.[43] There was evidence that the four accused appellants armed with weapons reached the place of occurrence, two of the appellants dragged the deceased, on the exhortation of one, fired a shot at the deceased causing death. Held, it could be said that not only the two appellants were present at the scene of offence but they actively participated in the commission of the offence by doing acts in furtherance of the common intention of killing the deceased. Their conviction under s 302 / 34 was held proper.[44] The principle which the section embodies is participation in some action with the common intention of committing a crime; once such participation is established, s 34 is at once attracted.[45] But the participation need not in all cases be by physical presence.[46]

The three appellants accused approached armed with lethal weapons the field where the deceased was cultivating the land. All of them chased when the deceased ran for his life. Their conviction under s 302, IPC read with s 34, IPC was held proper.[47]

Simply because a person was sitting in the vehicle without doing anything more, it cannot be said that he a shared common intention for driving the vehicle in a particular manner for committing a specific offence.[48] The petitioner no. 2 was driving the vehicle and the petitioner no. 1 was sitting by the side of petitioner no. 2. The petitioner no. 2 driver tried to run over the complainant constable who tried to stop the vehicle for checking. No overt act was attributed to the petitioner from which it could be inferred that petitioner no. 1 shared common intention with petitioner no. 2. The order framing charge against petitioner no. 1 under s 307 read with s 34, IPC was set aside.[49]187

The prosecution evidence showed that all the eight accused were present at the scene of occurrence. They had demanded money and extended threat of dire consequences, if their demand was not satisfied. Thereafter, they had altercation with the deceased and the deceased was strangulated by the accused persons and then his body was disposed of by cutting it into pieces and packing the same in gunny bags and abandoning the same at a deserted place. Thus, all these acts obviously were in furtherance to the common intention of doing away with the deceased, if he failed to given them Rs. 40,000/- as demanded. The offence having been committed with common intention and collective participation, each of the accused had common intention. Section 34 was attracted in the case. Accused appellants were convicted under ss 300 / 34, IPC .[50]

When no overt act whatsoever has been attributed to two of the accused persons in spite of the fact that they were known to the eyewitnesses very well, non-mention of their names in the evidence as to their participation in firing upon the deceased throws a great doubt as to their sharing of the common intention and it is difficult to hold that they had shared common intention with other accused persons who actively participated in the crime.[51]

Co-accused was empty handed, the evidence that he caught hold of the deceased was given for the first time before the Court, his presence/participation in the commission of crime was doubtful, he was given benefit of doubt and acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34 .[52]

Co-accused was present on the spot but did not take any part in the assault, and PWS having deposed that the co-accused persons arrived on the spot after the assault was completed, co-accused were acquitted of the charge under ss 307 / 34, IPC .[53]

Where there was evidence that the two accused persons dragged the deceased and assaulted him with fists and kicks, they were convicted under ss 325 / 34, IPC .[54]

Where the participation of the accused charged with the offence of murder etc, in the occurrence is not proved beyond reasonable doubt, he was held to be entitled to acquittal.[55]

A5 to 8 did not take part in the assault at all and the allegations made against them were not established by the evidence on record, particularly the medical evidence. It was doubtful if A5 to 8 took part in the occurrence though the eye-witnesses stated that they assaulted the deceased but no corresponding injury was found on the person of the deceased. Having regard to the fact that there was certain amount of animosity between the villagers of the two villages, one could not rule out the possibility of false implication. It was considered proper to give benefit of doubt to them. They were acquitted of the charge under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[56]188

Evidence showed that the intention conceived by appellant no. 1 was known to appellant no. 2 and shared by him. The presence of appellant no. 2 was established by the prosecution, but the prosecution did not prove any circumstance or conduct of appellant no. 2 from which sharing of his common intention with appellant no. 1 could be gathered. There was discrepancy in the evidence of eye-witnesses relating to the alleged conduct of appellant no. 2 and except his presence, nothing could be gathered with certainty from their evidence. Held that though the presence of appellant no. 2 at the place of occurrence was established by the version of the prosecution witnesses, it was not established that appellant no. 2 shared common intention with appellant no. 1 to commit murder of the deceased or to cause such body injury to the deceased. The conviction of the appellant no. 2 under ss 302 / 34, IPC was set aside.[57]

40. Individual Participation Required

Before a person can be convicted with the aid of provisions of s 34, that person must have done something along with other persons. Some individual participation in the commission of the criminal act would be the requirement.[58]

63 Substituted by Act 27 of 1870, s 1, for the original section.

64 State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, p 22 (FB) ; Mahbub Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, p 120 ; Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 9 ; Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1, p 3 ; Kamaldin v Emperor AIR 1947 Sind 41, p 47 . Refer to notes below under the heading 'Criminal act must be done in furtherance of the common intention of all'.

65 Surinder Singh alias Chhinda v State of Punjab (2007) Cr LJ 49 (SC), 2006 AIR SCW 5454, 2006 (8) Scale 745 ; Harbans Kaur v State of Haryana 2005 Cr LJ 2199, AIR 2005 SC 2989 ; Gharbharan v State of Chhattisgarh 2010 Cr LJ 471, p 473 (Chhat) (DB) .

66 Virendra Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 952 (SC), 2011 AIR SCW 31, (2010) 8 SCC 407, 2010 (8) Scale 27 .

67 State of Haryana v Satender 2014 (139) AIC 22 (SC), 2014 AIR SCW 4471, JT 2014 (7) SC 616 ; Umedbhai Parshottambhai Talpada v State of Gujarat 2014 (136) AIC 519 (Guj) .

68 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7, 26 Cr LJ 431, 23 All LJ 314 ; Dhansai Sahu v State AIR 1969 Ori 105, 35 Cut LT 18 ; Umelbhai Parsho Hambhai Talpada v State of Gujarat 2014 (136) AIC 519 (Guj) ; Bogadhar Munda v State of Assam 2018 (118) AIC 950 (Gauh) .

69 Rajeev Lochan v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 631, p 637 (MP) .

70 Arjun Thakur v State (1994) Cr LJ 3526 (SC) .

71 Megh Singh v State of Rajasthan (1983) 2 Crimes 134, p 140 (Raj)(DB).

72 Mahbub Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, p 120 ; Chik-Karange Gowda v State of Mysore AIR 1956 SC 731 ; Re *Kamraj Govinda*AIR 1960 Mad 125 ; Matiullah v State of West Bengal AIR 1965 SC 132, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 126 ; Hethuba v State of Gujarat AIR 1970 SC 1266, (1970) Cr LJ 1138, p 1141 ; Bhaba Nand Sharma v State of Assam AIR 1977 SC 2252, p 2254 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Iftikhar Khan AIR 1973 SC 863, (1973) Cr LJ 636 ; Jagir Singh v State of Punjab (1968) 1 SCJ 244 ; State v Dharanidhar Mohanty AIR 1976 Ori 79, (1976) 42 Cut LT 29 ; Hadibandhu Mohalik v State (1986) 61 Cut LT 167, p 175-76 ; Kartar Singh v State (1992) 1 Crimes 924, p 929-30 .

73 Mahbub Shah v King-Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118 ; Shankarial Kacharabhai v State of Gujarat AIR 1965 SC 1260 ; Karatar Singh v State of Haryana (1992) 1 Crimes 924, p 929-30 (P&H) .

74 C Phulla Reddy v State of AP AIR 1993 SC 1899, 1993 Cr LJ 2246, 1993 Supp (3) SCC 134 .

75 Jumman v State of Madhya Pradesh 2013 Cr LJ 697, p 701 (Chh) (DB) .

76 Hadibandhu Mohalik v State (1986) 61 Cut LT 167, p 175-77 .

77 Noor Mahommad Mohd Yusuf Momin v State of Maharashtra AIR 1971 SC 885, (1971) Cr LJ 793 .

78 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 ; Hethuba v State of Gujarat AIR 1970 SC 1266, (1970) Cr LJ 1138, 1140 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Iftikhar Khan AIR 1973 SC 863, (1973) Cr LJ 636 .

79 State of Bihar v Lalu Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161, p 169, (1955) Cr LJ 597 ; Ramkrishnaiah v State AIR 1965 Andh Pra 361, p

366, (1965) 2 Cr LJ 458 .

80 Harandra Sah v State of Bihar 2013 (130) AIC 666 (Pat) .

81 Md Asir Ali v State of Assam 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 687 (Gauh) (DB).

82 Harbans Kaur v State of Haryana 2005 Cr LJ 2199, p 2201 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 2989, 2005 (2) Scale 457, (2005) 9 SCC 195 .

83 Sachin Jana v State of West Bengal 2008 Cr LJ 1596 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 885, (2008) 3 SCC 390 .

84 AshokKumar v State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 109, (1977) 1 SCC 746 .

85 Chinta Pulla Reddy v State of AP AIR 1993 SC 1899, 1993 Cr LJ 2246, 1993 Supp (3) SCC 134 ; Hemchand Jha v State of Bihar 2008 Cr LJ 3203 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 4291, 2008 (9) Scale 211, (2008) 11 SCC 303 .

86 Emperor v Chhotelal Babar 36 ILR Bom 524, 13 Cr LJ 426 .

87 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 137.

88 State of Andhra Pradesh v K Venkata Reddy & Ors AIR 1976 SC 2207, (1976) Cr LJ 1723 (SC) ; Maina Singh v State of Rajasthan AIR 1976 SC 1084, (1976) Cr LJ 835 (SC) .

89 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 8-9, 26 Cr LJ 431, 23 All LJ 314 .

90 Narayan v State (1982) 81 DLT 256 .

91 Kalawati v State of Rajasthan (1994) Cr LJ 691 (Raj) .

92 Joel Prentiss Bishop, Commentaries on the Criminal Law, vol I, sixth edn, quoted in State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, p 35 .

93 State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21 .

94 Mathai v State of Kerala (1983) 1 Crimes 429, (1982) KLT 692, (1982) Cr LC 642 (DB) ; Sunny Kapoor v State (UT of Chandigarh)(2006) Cr LJ 2920 (SC); Saravanan v State of Pondicherry (2005) Cr LJ 117 (SC) .

95 Suresh v State of UP (2001) 3 SCC 673, AIR 2001 SC 1344 .

96 State of Karnataka v Abdul Rasheem 2006 Cr LJ 3169, p 3170 (Kant) .

97 Krishnan v State represented by Inspector of Police (2003) 7 SCC 56, 2003 Cr LJ 3705 ; Sham Shankar Kankaria v State of Maharashtra (2005) Cr LJ 502 (Bom) .

1 Sultan v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 749, p 750 .

2 Ibra Akanda v Emperor AIR 1941 Cal 339, p 358, 45 Cr LJ 771, per Khundkar J.

3 Girija Shankar v State of Uttar Pradesh (2004) Cr LJ 1388 (SC) ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Deshraj (2004) Cr LJ 1415 (SC) ; Raju Pandurang Mahale v State of Maharashtra (2004) Cr LJ 1441 (SC) ; Janak Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh (2004) Cr LJ 2533 (SC) ; Harbans Kaur v State of Haryana 2005 Cr LJ 2199 (SC), p 2200, 2201, AIR 2005 SC 2989, 2005 (2) Scale 457, (2005) 9 SCC 195 ; Pasupuleti Siva Ramkrishna Rao v State of Andhra Pradesh 2014 (137) AIC 129 (SC), (2014) 5 SCC 369, 2014 (85) ACC 7145 .

4 Birendra Das v State of Assam 2013 (128) AIC 225 (SC), JT 2013 (9) SC 182, 2013 (12) SCC 236, 2013 (8) Scale 113 .

5 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 248 .

6 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7, 52 IA 40, p 51, 26 Cr LJ 431, 23 All LJ 314 .

7 NNMY Momin v State of Maharashtra AIR 1971 SC 885, p 888, [1971] 1 SCR 119, (1971) Cr LJ 793 ; Mahbub Shah v Emperor AIR 1954 PC 118, p 120 ; Chik-Karange Gowda v State of Mysore AIR 1956 SC 731 ; Re *Kamaraj Govinda*AIR 1960 Mad 125 ; Ethuba v State of Gujarat AIR 1970 SC 1266, (1970) Cr LJ 1138, p 1141 ; Bhaba Nand Sharma v State of Assam AIR 1977 SC 2252, p 2254 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Iftikhar Khan AIR 1973 SC 863, (1973) Cr LJ 636 ; Hadibandhu Mohalik v State (1986) 61 CLT 167, p 175-76 .

8 Hadibandhu Mohalik v State (1986) 61 Cut LT 167, p 175-76 .

9 Ramaswami Ayyanagar v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1976 SC 2027 ; Parasa Raja Manikyala Rao v State of Andhra Pradesh (2004) Cr LJ 390 (SC) .

10 BN Srikantiah v State of Mysore AIR 1958 SC 672, p 676 ; Virendra Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 952, (2010) 8 SCC 407 ; Umrao Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1961 MP 45 ; Parmeshware Kurup v Krishna Pillai (1966) Cr

LJ 1269, (1966) KLT 295 .

11 Waryam Singh Arur Singh v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 214, p 215 .

12 Gurdata Mal v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1965 SC 257, p 260, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 242 ; Surjamoni Misra v State (1968) 34 Cut LT 554 ; Re Panduranga Rao AIR 1952 Andh Pra 257, p 260; Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241 ; State of Orissa v Rai Kishore Singh (1966) 32 Cut LT 41 ; Dhansai Sahu v State AIR 1969 Ori 105, (1969) Cr LJ 626, 35 Cut LT 18 ; Nepal Ghosh v State (1992) 1 Crimes 833, p 837 (Cal)(DB); Hadibandhu Mohalik v State (1986) 61 CLT 167, p 175-76 .

13 Mathai v State of Kerala (1983) 1 Crimes 429, (1982) KLT 692, (1982) Cr LC 641 (Ker)(DB).

14 Jai Krishanadas Manohardas Desai v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 889, p 893 .

15 Tehal Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1979 SC 1347, p 1351 ; Kashmere Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1979 SC 1435 ; Nityasen v State of West Bengal AIR 1978 SC 383, p 385, (1978) Cr LJ 481 ; Harihar Singh v Emperor AIR 1926 Pat 182, p 183, 184 .

16 Goutam Ghosh v State of West Bengal 2013 Cr LJ 1577, p 1583 (Cal) (DB) .

17 Janpad Ram v State of Chhattisgarh 2013 Cr LJ (NOC) 197 (Chh) (DB).

18 Satyavir Singh Rathi v State thr CBI 2011 Cr LJ 2908 (SC), AIR 2011 SC 1748, (2011) 6 SCC 1, 2011 (5) Scale 339 .

19 Gaindan Singh v State of UP 2012 Cr LJ 2893, p 2897 (All) (DB) .

20 Balram v State of MP 2011 Cr LJ 836, p 842 (MP) (DB) .

21 Jagdish v State of Haryana 2005 Cr LJ 3073 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 2576, (2005) 11 SCC 146 .

22 Krishnan v State (2003) Cr LJ 3705 (SC) .

23 Queen v Gorachand Gope 5 WR 45 (Cr), 443, Beng LR Supp.

24 Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1, p 3 ; Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 244 .

25 Sunny Kapoor v State (UT of Chandigarh) 2006 Cr LJ 2920, p 2923 (SC), AIR 2006 SC 2242, 2006 SCC (Cr) 522 ; Rajpal Shyamlal Soude v State of Maharashtra 2003 Cr LJ 4238 (Bom) .

26 Rajpal Shyamlal Soude v State of Maharashtra (2003) Cr LJ 4238 (Bom) .

27 Jumman v State of Madhya Pradesh 2013 Cr LJ 697, p 701 (Chh) (DB) .

28 Gani Miah v State of Tripura 2013 Cr LJ 49, p 54 (Gauh) (DB) .

29 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 671, (1953) Cr LJ 1505 ; Girasia Lakhuba Pathubha v State of Gujarat (1966) Cr LJ 727, 1966 Guj LR 700 .

30 Halim Mian v State of Bihar AIR 1971 SC 1836, (1971) Cr LJ 1299, p 1300 .

31 Lallan Rai v State of Bihar (2003) Cr LJ 465 (SC) ; Suresh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 2001 SC 1344, (2001) Cr LJ 1462 .

32 Reazuddi v King-Emperor (1912) 16 CWN 1077 .

33 Halim Mian & Ors v State of Bihar AIR 1971 SC 1826, (1971) Cr LJ 1299 .

34 Kanvi Nanji Veerji & Ors v State of Gujarat AIR 1970 SC 219, (1970) Cr LJ 363 .

35 Dost Mohammad v Emperor AIR 1942 Pesh 29, p 32, (1974) WLN (UC) 26 (Raj), (1974) Punj LR 308, p 311 (Cr) .

36 Kinaramdas v State AIR 1955 Assam 2, p 5 ; Mahboob Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118 ; Gorey v Rex AIR 1949 All 191 ; Dipu v Emperor AIR 1947 All 408 ; Emperor v Bishwanath Tiwari AIR 1946 All 153 ; Mian Jan v Emperor AIR 1924 Oudh 248 ; Nandlal v Emperor AIR 1938 Lah 747, p 749 ; Lal Chand v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 523 ; Re *Padamraja Shetty*AIR 1951 Mad 741 ; Mabengham v Manipur Admn (1968) Cr LJ 1237 .

37 Dost Mohammad v Emperor AIR 1942 Pesh 29, p 32 ; Mian Jan v Emperor AIR 1924 Oudh 248 ; Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668 (FB) ; Mamand v Emperor AIR 1946 PC 45 ; Public Prosecutor v Laruppanna Thervar (1971) 1 LW 124 (Cr) ; (1974) WLN (UC) 26 (Raj), (1974) Punj LR 308, p 311 (Cr) .

38 Kinaramdas v State AIR 1955 Assam 2, p 7 .

39 Komaraswami v State by SI of Police (1966) 1 Mad LJ 385, (1966) Mad LW 175 (Cr) .

40 Manik Shankarrao Dhotre v State of Maharashtra 2008 Cr LJ 1505, p 1508 (Bom) .

41 Lachho Singh v Emperor AIR 1917 Pat 456 ; Hardeo Singh v State AIR 1975 SC 179, p 182, (1975) Cr LJ 243 ; reversing(1971) 73 Punj LR 283; Harihar Singh v Emperor AIR 1926 Pat 182 ; Emperor v Sada Singh 32 Cr LJ 56 ; Raja Ram v Emperor AIR 1938 Oudh 256, p 258, 40 Cr LJ 14, but seeBanwarilal v State* AIR 1956 All 341, (1956) Cr LJ 452 .

42 Raja Ram Raghu Patil v State AIR 1958 Bom 469, p 470, (1958) Cr LJ 1385 ; Harchandra v Rex AIR 1950 All 355, p 361 .

43 Saravanan v State of Pondicherry (2005) Cr LJ 117 (SC) .

44 Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Raj 24, p 28, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 155 ; Sunder Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1962 SC 1211, p 1215, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 290 ; Jagir Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1968 SC 43, (1968) Cr LJ 89 ; Bisheswar v State (1963) 1 Cr LJ 645 (All) .

45 Mohammad Khalil Chisti v State of Rajasthan 2013 Cr LJ 637 (SC), (2013) 2 SCC 541 .

46 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 244 .

47 Ram Prasad Ahir v State AIR 1959 All 790, p 792 ; State of Bihar v Nathu AIR 1970 SC 27, (1970) Cr LJ 5 ; Joginder v State of Bihar (1971) Cr LJ 1285, p 1287, AIR 1971 SC 1834 ; Halim Mian v State of Bihar AIR 1971 SC 1826 ; Kanvi Nanji v State of Gujarat AIR 1970 SC 219, (1970) Cr LJ 363 ; Iswar Singh v State of Rajasthan (1973) Cr LJ 811, p 817 (Raj) ; Baljit Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1976 SC 2273, (1976) Cr LJ 1745 ; Pehalwan v State of Rajasthan (1977) Raj Cr C 173, p 177 ; Arjun Pradhan v State of Orissa (1975) 41 Cut LT 186, p 201 ; Kunja Bhuaiya v Emperor 15 IC 481 ; Ram Manorath v State (1971) Cr LJ 1584, p 1585 (All) ; Mithu Pandey v State of Bihar AIR 1966 Pat 464, (1967) Cr LJ 102 ; State of Orissa v Raghuram Sahu (1979) 47 Cut LT 39, p 50 (DB) ; State of Rajsthan v Manoj Kumar 2014 Cr LJ 2420, (2014) 2 SCC (Cri) 702 .

48 State of Rajasthan v Manoj Kumar 2014 Cr LJ 2420, p 2423, 2424 (SC), (2014) 2 SCC (Cri) 702, (2014) 138 AIC 261 (SC) .

49 Bridha v State AIR 1959 Raj 124, p 126 .

50 R v Farier 8 C&P 106 ; R v Maganlal 14 ILR Bom 115, p 125, per Fardine J.

51 Sultan v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 749, p 750 ; Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 674 .

52 Emperor v Chhotalal Babar 36 ILR Bom 524 .

53 Suresh & Anor v State of Uttar Pradesh (2001) Cr LJ 1462 (SC) .

54 Re Thanugraj(1972) LW 170 (Cr).

55 Kundan Lal v State of Rajasthan (1983) Raj Cr C 281 (DB) .

56 Ramaswamy Ayyangar & Ors v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1976 SC 2027, (1976) Cr LJ 1563 (SC) .

57 Ghurey v Rex AIR 1949 All 342, p 345 (DB), (1950) Cr LJ 535 (All) .

58 Justus v State of Kerala (1987) 2 KLT 330 .

59 Makka v State AIR 1952 All 435, p 436, (1952) Cr LJ 707 .

60 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 .

61 Emperor v Itwa Munda AIR 1938 Pat 258, p 262, per Dhavle J.

62 Makka v State AIR 1952 All 435, p 436 .

63 Sultan v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 749 .

64 Bhabha Nanda Sarma & Ors v State of Assam AIR 1977 SC 2252, (1977) Cr LJ 1930 (SC) .

65 Dhan Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1989) Cr LR 9 (MP) ; Noor Mohammad Mohd Yusuf Momin v State of Maharashtra AIR 1971 SC 885, (1971) Cr LJ 793 .

66 King-Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghosh AIR 1924 Cal 257, p 292 (FB) .

67 Jaimangal v Emperor AIR 1936 All 437, p 439 .

68 King-Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghosh AIR 1924 Cal 257, 292 (FB) .

69 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 ; Jaimangal v Emperor AIR 1936 All 437 .

70 King-Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghosh AIR 1924 Cal 257, p 293 (FB), per Richardson J.

71 Mathurala Adi Reddi v State of Hyderabad AIR 1956 SC 177, (1956) Cr LJ 341 .

72 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 .

73 Mathurala Adi Reddy v State of Hyderabad AIR 1953 SC 177, p 180 .

74 Brathi alias Sukhdev Singh v State of Punjab (1991) 1 Crimes 74 (78)(SC), (1991) Cr LJ 402.

75 Provincial Govt, CP and Berar v Dinanath Lala Ganapatri AIR 1939 Nag 263, p 264 .

76 Ram Nath Madhoprasad v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1953 SC 420, p 424 followed in Anna v State of Hyderabad AIR 1956 Hyd 99, p 106 .

77 Devi Lal & Anor v State of Rajasthan AIR 1971 SC 1444, (1971) Cr LJ 1132 (SC) ; Munna Chanda v State of Assam (2006) 3 JT SC 366, (2006) 3 SCC 752 ; Ram Dular Rai v State of Bihar (2004) Cr LJ 635 (SC) .

78 Sahibzada v Crown AIR 1950 Pesh 24, p 27 ; Dalip Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1953 SC 364, p 366 ; Nga Maung Giji v King-Emperor AIR 1923 Rang 268 ; Ritbaran Singh v Emperor AIR 1918 Pat 146 ; Bhabataran Mahto v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Pat 706 ; BN Srikantiah v State of Mysore AIR 1958 SC 672, p 675 ; Emperor v Dharam Raj 1887 AWN 236, p 237 ; Muthu v State 1986 KLT 468, (1986) 2 Crimes 385 .

79 Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 .

80 Nanak Chand v State of Punjab AIR 1955 SC 274, p 278 .

81 Gani Miah v State of Tripura 2013 Cr LJ 49, p 54 (Gauh) (DB) .

82 Virendra Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 952, 2011 AIR SCW 31, (2010) 8 SCC 407, 2010 (8) Scale 27 .

83 Arjun Thakur v State (1994) Cr LJ 3526 (SC) .

84 Re P Ramulu AIR 1956 Andh Pra 247, p 248. Reference to be made to the old cases discussed therein.

85 Amarjit Singh & Ors v State of Punjab AIR 1993 SC 229, (1992) Cr LJ 3858 (SC) .

86 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 244 .

87 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1 .

88 Karnail Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1954 SC 204 .

89 Willie (William) Slaney v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1956 SC 116, p 134 .

90 Chik-Karange Gowda v State of Mysore AIR 1956 SC 731, p 732 .

91 Virendra Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 952, 2011 AIR SCW 31, (2010) 8 SCC 407, 2010 (8) Scale 27 .

92 Ibra Akanda v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, p 363, per Khandkar J; Virendra Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 952, (2010) 8 SCC 407 .

93 Virendre Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 952, (2010) 8 SCC 407 .

94 Supdt & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v Golok Tikadar AIR 1944 Cal 234, p 237, 46 Cr LJ 31 ; Ramkaran v State of Rajasthan (1994) SCC 1717 (Cr) .

95 NNMY Momin v State of Maharashtra AIR 1971 SC 885 .

1 Suresh & Anor v State of Uttar Pradesh (2001) Cr LJ 1462 (SC) .

2 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 245 ; Provincial Govt, CP and Berar v Dinanath Lala Ganapatrai AIR 1939 Nag 263 .

3 Bimbadhar Pradhan v State of Orissa AIR 1956 SC 469, p 476 .

4 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1 ; Mannam Venkatadari v State of Andhra Pradesh AIR 1971 SC 1467 ; Nethala Pothuraju v State of Andhra Pradesh AIR 1991 SC 2214 ; Ram Tahal v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1972 SC 254, (1925) 26 Cr LJ 431 ; Chittarmal v State of Rajasthan (2003) Cr LJ 889 (SC) .

5 Maharashtra State Electricity Distribution Co Ltd v Datar Switchgear Ltd 2011 Cr LJ 8, p 15 (SC) 2010 (10) Scale 591, (2010) 10 SCC 479.

6 Nga Tun Baw v Emperor 7 Cr LJ 205, p 206 .

7 Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1, p 3 .

8 Nepal Ghosh v State (1992) 1 Crimes 833, p 834 (Cal)(DB).

9 State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, 33 (FB); Emperor v Motilal Malik AIR 1935 Cal 526 .

10 Justus v State of Kerala (1987) 2 KLT 330 .

11 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1 .

12 Afrahim Sheikh v State of West Bengal AIR 1964 SC 1263, (1964) All LJ 437 ; Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 246 ; Santosh v State of Kerala (1991) Cr LJ 570, p 584 (Ker) (DB) .

13 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 671 ; King-Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghosh AIR 1924 Cal 257, p 312 (FB) .

14 Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 .

15 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 9 ; Indar Singh v Emperor AIR 1933 Lah 819 ; Mian Khan v Emperor 29 Cr LJ 474 ; Re *Krishnaswami*1936 Mad WN 644.

16 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 244 .

17 State v Hira Dube AIR 1952 Pat 135, p 136 .

18 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 670 .

19 Rex v Sudbury (1699) 88 ER 1309, 12 Mod Rep 262 .

20 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 671 .

21 Ramaswamy Ayyangar & Ors v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1976 SC 2027, (1976) Cr LJ 1563 (SC) .

22 Babulal Bajpai v State AIR 1959 Cal 693, relying onPrabhu Babaji Navle v State of Bombay* AIR 1956 SC 51 ; King v Plummer (1902) 2 KB 339 .

23 Raja Ram Raghu Patil v State AIR 1958 Bom 469, p 470 .

24 Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Guj 16, p 18 ; Mohan Lal v State AIR 1961 Raj 24, p 28 .

25 Raja Ram Raghu Patil v State AIR 1958 Bom 469, p 470 .

26 Sunder Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1962 SC 1211, p 1215, distinguishingKing v Plummer* (1902) 2 KB 339 .

27 Brathi alias Sukhdev Singh v State of Punjab (1991) 1 Crimes 74, p 81 (SC), (1991) Cr LJ 402 .

28 Ramdeo Kahar v State of Bihar 2009 Cr LJ 1715, p 1718 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 1803, 2009 (1) Scale 634 .

29 Suresh & Anor v State of Uttar Pradesh (2001) Cr LJ 1462 (SC) .

30 Noor Mahommad Mohd Yusuf Momin v State of Maharashtra AIR 1971 SC 885, (1971) Cr LJ 793 (SC) ; Nand Kishore v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 4243, AIR 2011 SC 2775, 2011 (12) SCC 120 .

31 Surendra Chauhan v State of Madhya Pradesh 2000 Cr LJ 1789 (SC) .

32 Narayan v State (1982) 21 DLT 256 .

33 Jagir Singh & Anor v State of Punjab AIR 1968 SC 43 .

34 Hanif Laskar v State of West Bengal 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 768 (Cal) (DB).

35 Rati Ram Khadiya v State of Chhattisgarh 2009 Cr LJ 2563, p 2566 (Chh) (DB) .

36 Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v State of Bombay AIR 1955 SC 287, [1955] 1 SCR 1177, 1955 Cr LJ 857 .

37 Ramaswamy Ayyangar & Ors v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1976 SC 2027, (1976) Cr LJ 1562 (SC) .

38 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 671 .

39 Rajender Singh v State of Haryana 2009 Cr LJ 1561, p 15467 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 1734, 2009 (1) Scale 751, 2009 (11) SCC 382 .

40 Nagappan v State by Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu AIR 2013 SC 3298, 2013 (15) SCC 252, 2013 Cr LJ 3878, p 3882 (SC) .

41 Dileep Kumar v State of Kerala (1985) Cr LJ 114 (Ker), (1984) Ker LJ 672 .

42 Kantiah Ramayya Munipalli v State of Bombay AIR 1955 SC 287, p 293 .

43 Amarjit Singh & Ors v State of Punjab AIR 1993 SC 229, (1992) Cr LJ 3858 (SC) .

44 Patai v State of UP 2010 Cr LJ 2815, p 2818 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 2254, (2010) 4 SCC 429, 2010 (3) Scale 496 .

45 Bharwad Mopa Dana v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 289, p 296 ; Mohanlal v State AIR 1961 Raj 24 .

46 Hadibandhu Mohalik v State (1986) 61 Cut LT 167, p 175-76 .

47 Brihaspati Mahali v State of West Bengal 2008 Cr LJ 3659 (Cal) .

48 Chuhru Ram v State of Himachal Pradesh 2013 Cr LJ 1824, p 1825 (HP) .

49 Chuhru Ram v State of Himachal Pradesh 2013 Cr LJ 1824, p 1826 (HP) .

50 Shyamal Ghosh v State of West Bengal 2012 Cr LJ 3825, p 3848 (SC), AIR 2012 SC 3539, 2012 AIR SCW 4162, 2012 (7) SCC 646, 2012 (6) Scale 381 .

51 Hare Krishna Singh & Ors v State of Bihar AIR 1988 SC 863, (1988) Cr LJ 925 (SC) .

52 Veer Singh v State of UP 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 440 (All) (DB).

53 Chagan Kisan Koli v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 91 (Bom) .

54 Chaku Khadia v State of Orissa 2007 Cr LJ 4472 (Ori), CLT (2008) Supp Crl 171, 2007 (Supp-2) OLR 111 .

55 Bishan Singh & Ors v State of Punjab AIR 1983 SC 748, (1983) Cr LJ 973 (SC) .

56 Pichai v State of Tamil Nadu 2005 Cr LJ 5111, p 5114, (2005) 10 SCC 505, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1617 .

57 Saligram Mukund v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 2855, p 2860 (Chh) (DB) .

58 Nand Kishore v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 4243 (SC), AIR 2011 SC 2775, 2011 (7) Scale 386, 2011 AIR SCW 4350 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[S. 34.

Acts done by several persons in furtherance of common intention.--

41. Mere Presence may Amount to Commission of the Offence

The essence of s 34 of the IPC is simultaneous consensus of minds of several persons participating in criminal action to bring about particular results. When a scheme is carried out and the murderer turns up according to a pre-arranged plan, the very presence of the person would be an act contributing as effectively to the perpetration of murder as the actual act of killing. It reflects criminal behaviour resulting in the offence. Participation in commission of an offence in furtherance of common intention is discernible from conduct of the accused.[59] The accused had killed the deceased by assault with stone was proved by the prosecution evidence. The mere fact that the co-accused wife and the daughter of the deceased were present on the spot and their clothes were stained with human blood did not prove that they also participated in the assault on the deceased. Both the co-accused were not convicted under s 302 read with s 34 IPC .[60]

Where the PWS had not attributed any overt act to the accused appellant, the mere fact that he was in the company of the accused who were armed would not be sufficient to attract s 34, IPC . Appellant was not armed and he had no animosity with the deceased. In view of this evidence, the conviction of the accused appellant under s 302 read with s 34 IPC was not sustained, and was set aside.[61]

42. For Participation not Physical Presence but Common Consent Necessary

In order to justify the application of s 34 of the IPC, an element of participation in action needs to be proved. Physical presence at the scene of occurrence may189 sometimes be dispensed with, but there must be common consent which implies acting in concert.[62]

In order to convict a person for an offence with the aid of the provisions of s 34, it is not necessary that that person should actually with his own hand commit the criminal act. Several persons share the common intention of doing a particular criminal act and if in furtherance of that common intention all of them join together and aid or abet each other in the commission of the act, then although one of these persons may not actually with his own hand do the act, but if he helps by his presence or by other acts in the commission of the act, he would be held to have done that act within the meaning of s 34 .[63]

Evidence was not adduced to show that all the accused were present at the time when the deceased was strangulated, and as to which of the accused strangulated the deceased. Charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC was not proved.[64]

Where one of the two accused persons gave a lathi blow on the head of the deceased and medical evidence showed that the skull of the deceased was fractured and that internal injuries to the brain of deceased were sufficient to cause his death, the accused who gave the lathi blow was held rightly convicted under s 300, IPC . But although no clear evidence regarding the co-accused was on record of the case that he caused any fatal injury to the deceased, but his participation in murderous assault with co-accused was proved beyond doubt, it was held that the other accused was liable to be convicted under s 300 read with s 34, IPC .[65] The manner in which looted properties are distributed between the accused persons is also one of the circumstances which may prove joint participation of accused persons in the commission of crime.[66] A number of injuries suffered by the deceased would point out that it could not have been inflicted by one person. Common intention on the part of the accused no. 1 together with others to commit the murder of the deceased was inferred.[67]

In a case of human sacrifice, mere presence of the accused cannot amount to attribution of common intention, and as such, accused cannot be convicted with the aid of s 34, IPC . Accused were acquitted of the charge under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[68]

Common intention on the part of accused persons to commit murder cannot be inferred in view of circumstantial evidence. The mere fact that medical evidence shows more than one weapon was used is not sufficient to infer participation of accused persons in crime.[69]190

43. Co-accused--Liability

Co-accused cannot escape liability under s 34, IPC by pleading that no overt act was attributed to him/them.[70]

Where the only allegation against the co-accused was that he dragged the deceased from behind, and the co-accused had no enmity with the deceased, held, co-accused could not be said to have shared common intention, and he was acquitted of the charge under ss 326 / 34, IPC .[71]

A1 caused head injury to the deceased causing his death. Though A2 had no motive or grouse against the deceased, still his involvement was apparently clear. He sat on the deceased, thereby disabling the deceased from moving, as a result of which, A1 beat the deceased with the stone. The evidence of PW1 was found reliable. A1 was found guilty for offence under s 302, IPC, while A2 was found guilty for offence under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[72]

44. Overt Act not Necessary

It is the settled law that overt act of the co-accused is not always necessary in applying s 34 . If the prosecution succeeds in establishing that the accused shared the intention with the other for the acts committed by him, he can be held liable by invoking the aid of s 34, IPC .[73] It is always not necessary that every accused must do a separate act to be responsible for the ultimate criminal act. What is required is that an accused person must share the common intention to commit the act.[74]The act need not necessarily be overt, even if it is only a covert act. It is enough, provided such a covert act is proved to have been done by co-accused in furtherance of the common intention.[75]There must, however, be material to show that the overt act or acts of one or more of the accused was or were done in furtherance of the common intention of all the accused or in prosecution of the common object of the members of the unlawful assembly.[76]Where no overt act is proved or established on the part of the accused which might show that he shared common intention of the person or persons who inflicted the injury or injuries, the accused persons cannot be fastened with liability and convicted with the aid of s 34, IPC .[77]

If a common intention is proved but no overt act is attributed to the individual appellant, s 34 will be attracted as it involves vicarious liability, but if participation191 of the accused in the crime is proved and a common intention is absent, s 34 cannot be invoked.[78]

No overt act was attributed to the appellant accused G. From his mere presence on the spot it could not be inferred that he shared common intention to commit the murder of the deceased. Appellant G was held entitled to benefit of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[79]

Section 34 is applicable even if no injury has been caused by the particular accused himself. For applying s 34 it is not necessary to show some over act on the part of the accused.[80]

If it is not clear which of the accused caused which particular injury, it will not matter where s 34, IPC is clearly attracted to the facts of the case. When persons go together armed with deadly weapons and cause fatal injuries to the deceased, all of them are equally liable in view of s 34, IPC .[81]

The appellant and the accused no. 1 had entered the house of the deceased, and accused no. 1 poured a watery substance over her from the pot carried by him on the deceased leading to her death. The deceased had refused sexual favour to them. However, no overt act was attributed to the appellant. Held, in absence of any active role played by the appellant or overt act being done by the appellant, it cannot be said with certainty that the appellant had accompanied the accused no. 1 to the house of the deceased with a common intention to murder the deceased. In view thereof, the conviction of the appellant under s 302 read with s 34, IPC was not sustained. The appellant was convicted under s 326, IPC and s 304, Part II, IPC . As the death ensued after twenty six days of the incident as a result of septicemia and not as a consequence of burn injuries, the sentence was reduced to the period already undergone.[82]

It was not proved that all the accused persons came together to the place of occurrence or near the place of occurrence, and then two of them entered into the shop and committed the offences. Either of the two accused (A3 and A4) did not come in the second round or if they came here, they were standing at a distance of 20-25 feet from the shop of the deceased; they were unarmed; they did not do any overt act. The above evidence showed that they (A3 and A4) did not share common intention with accused (A1 and A2), either for commission of murder of the deceased or for making an attempt on the life of the injured. These two accused (A3 and A4) were thus acquitted of the charges under ss 302 / 34 and 307 / 34, IPC .[83]192

45. Participation may be of Passive Character

Mere distance from the scene of the crime cannot exclude culpability under s 34 which lays down the rule of joint responsibility for a criminal act performed by a plurality of persons. Criminal sharing, overt or covert, by active presence or by direction from a distance, of the act is the essence of s 34 . Even assuming that presence at the scene is pre-requisite to attract s 34 and that such propinquity is absent, s 107, which is different in one sense, still comes into play to rope in the accused.[84]In the case of an offence involving physical violence, it is essential for the application of s 34 that person who instigates or aids the commission of the crime must be physically present at the actual commission of the crime for the purpose of facilitating or promoting the offence, the commission of which is the aim of the joint criminal venture. Such presence of those who in one way or the other facilitate the execution of common design, itself tantamounts to actual participation in the criminal act.[85] Where the co-accused prevent the witnesses from rescuing the deceased from the clutches of the main accused assailant, the co-accused are liable to convicted under s 302, IPC with the aid of s 34, IPC .[86]The participation required by the section may be of a passive character, such as standing by a door, proved that it is done with the intention of assisting in furtherance of the common intention of them all and there is a readiness on the part of the man so standing to play his part in the pre-arranged plan when the time comes for him to act.[87] Where three persons took the deceased to the jungle, two took the victim inside the jungle and one person stood in guard, the question arose whether the person who did not go inside the jungle could be held liable under s 34, IPC as he had no common intention to commit the murder. It was held that all the three persons were liable for the offence of murder.[88] Where the appellants V and J caught hold of the father of the deceased, caused injuries on his person, continued to hold him till the very end, and facilitated the commission of the murder of the deceased, held V and J shared common intention with two other appellants, and they were rightly convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[89] Where the appellant nos. 1, 2 and 3 dragged the deceased in a gali, and the appellant no. 1 suddenly took out a knife from his pocket, gave repeated knife blows and the three co-accused appellants were holding the deceased causing death, the fact that appellant nos. 2 and 3 were holding the deceased was not stated by the PWS in their statements under s 161, CrPC . There being no evidence on record even to show that appellant nos. 2 and 3 were having knowledge that appellant no. 1 was holding a knife in his back pocket, held it could not be said that appellant nos. 2 and 3 shared a common intention for commission of murder of the deceased, and the conviction of the appellant nos. 2 and 3 under ss 302 / 34, IPC recorded by the lower Court was set aside.[90]

Where the co-accused caught hold of the collar of the eye-witness, put knife blade on his stomach, and thereby prevented the eye-witness from rescuing his master193 deceased, though had not caused any injury to either the deceased or the eye-witness, the co-accused was convicted under ss 302 and 323 read with s 34, IPC .[91]

Where no overt act was attributed to the co-accused G, brother of the main accused L, and he had not inflicted any injury on the victim, there was no evidence of prior meeting of minds between the two accused G and L, thus, the co-accused G was held entitled to acquittal and was acquitted of the charge under ss 307 / 34, IPC .[92]

The fact that accused (A3) M was standing outside the house was testified by the eye-witness. The murder was committed inside the house. There was no evidence of the formation or sharing of any common intention with the other accused. There was neither any reference to a third person in the FIR; nor was there any evidence that he came with the other accused or left with them. No weapon was seized from him, nor was any property connected with the crime, seized. M (A3) was acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[93]

Where the informant and the PW5 deposed before the court that when they reached almost 30-40 yards away from the place of occurrence, two accused S and P who were holding fire arms threatened them not to proceed ahead otherwise they would also be killed like the deceased, held there was participation of the accused persons and the common intention also. Section 34 , IPC was attracted in the case, and conviction of the accused persons under ss 302 / 34, IPC was proper.[94]

Accused persons armed with axe and jambia had assembled at one place and the moment deceased came out of the house to spit, one of the accused started abusing him. By catching and immobilizing the deceased the two accused nos. 3 and 4 facilitated the assault by accused no. 5. Accused no. 5 stabbed the deceased with jambia over the left side of the chest. The blow was so severe that it penetrated into the heart and liver. The fact that these appellants held the deceased and facilitated the other accused to give the fatal blow and made no effort to prevent him from assaulting the deceased leads to irresistible and inescapable conclusion that these two appellant nos. 3 and 4 shared the common intention with accused no. 5. Accused nos. 3, 4 and 5 were convicted under s 302 with the aid of s 34, IPC .[95]

Co-accused Preventing Persons from Saving the Deceased on the Point of Knife - Section 34 Attracted

In the instant case, the appellant accused prevented PWS present on the spot from saving the deceased, threatened them with knife, such that he facilitated the other accused in furtherance of common intention to commit the murder of the deceased. Section 34 , IPC was attracted in the case, and conviction of accused under s 302 read with s 34, IPC was held proper.[96]194

46. Criminal Act may be Act of One Individual

In Emperor v Nirmal Kanta Roy ,[1] Stephen J had taken the view that s 34, applied only where a criminal act was done by several persons of whom the accused charged thereunder was one, and not where the act was done by some person other than the latter. In that case, two persons had fired at another. Only one hit the victim who was killed. The accused had not hit the deceased, and it was held that he could not be convicted under s 302 read with s 34 . But this view is no longer good law. A Full Bench of Calcutta High Court held in Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghose ,[2] that if several persons armed with pistols go to a place with the common intention of robbing a person, and, if necessary to kill him, and one of them fires a fatal shot in furtherance of their common intention, all of them would be guilty of murder under s 302 read with s 34 . And this view was upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor ,[3] s 34 will therefore, be applicable equally to those cases in which the criminal act done in furtherance of a common intention of several persons is the act of a single individual.[4] The principle of vicarious liability also does not depend upon the necessity to convict a requisite number of persons.[5]

Once it is found that accused are liable to be convicted for their individual acts, s 34 cannot be invoked to hold them liable.[6]

Courts have stood as one holding that a person who participates in a crime with the mens rea of that crime alone is responsible and not one who is neither perpetrator nor a person acting with necessary actus reus. A person cannot be convicted if he is not the perpetrator as a secondary party unless he was aware of all the essential matters which made the act done a crime. He may not have noted that his act amounted in law to a crime, but he must be aware of all the essential matters of the act done, which essential matters together make the act done a crime. It thus follows that if several persons bear a common unlawful object and one of them does a criminal act within the scope of a common purpose, all are responsible for that act whether it was originally contemplated or not; where, however, one of them does an act which was not contemplated by the others and it is outside the common purpose, the others are not criminally liable in respect of that act, even though they may all have been engaged in an unlawful enterprise. In such circumstances, those who claim a secondary role may be liable for any other crime and their individual acts may become relevant.[7]

47. Presence at Scene of Occurrence--Presumption of Participation

Section 34 of the IPC is intended to meet a situation wherein all co-accused have also done something to constitute the commission of a criminal act. Even the concept of presence of a co-accused at the scene is not a necessary requirement to attract s 34,195*e.g.*, co-accused can remain a little away and supply weapons to the participating accused either by throwing or by catapulting them so that the participating accused can inflict injuries on the targeted person. Another illustration, with advancement of electronic equipment can be etched like this: one of such persons in furtherance of the common intention, overseeing the actions from a distance through binoculars can give instructions to the other accused through mobile phones as to how effectively the common intention can be implemented. There is no reason why s 34 cannot apply in the case of the two persons indicated in the illustration.[8] In the leading case of Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor ,[9] Lord Summer, explaining s 114 of the Code observed:

> Because participation 'de facto' (as this case shows) may sometimes be obscure in detail, it is established by the presumption 'juris et de jure' that 'actual presence' plus prior abetment can mean nothing else but 'participation'. The presumption raised by section 114 brings the case within the ambit of section 34 .

Relying on this observation, in Kantiah Ramayya Munipalli v State of Bombay ,[10] it was observed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court:

> It is true there must be some sort of preliminary planning which may or may not be at the scene of the crime and which may have taken place long beforehand, but there must be added to it the element of physical presence at the scene of occurrence coupled with actual participation which, of course, can be of a passive character such as standing by a door, provided that it is done with the intention of assisting in furtherance of the common intention of them all and there is readiness to play his part in the pre-arranged plan when the time comes for him to act.

A person present on the scene might or might not be guilty by the application of s 34 . If he is present on the scene for the purpose of participating in the offence, he would certainly be guilty as a participator in the offence. On the other hand, if he is there merely as a spectator, he would not be so guilty. Thus, where a person, who is an eyewitness of the incident, is present at the spot for the purpose of facilitating or promoting the offence, his presence is itself tantamount to actual participation in the criminal act.[11] Appellant accused immobilized the deceased by attack on his legs. Co-accused thereafter caused fatal injuries leading to death. Held, the appellant had common intention to cause death, and his conviction under s 304, Part I read with s 34, IPC was held proper.[12]

48. Presence at the Scene not Necessary

Following this decision, it was held in some cases that presence at the scene of occurrence is a necessary condition for fixing liability under this section.[13] But this is not quite correct. As observed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in a relevant case:[14]

> 196To establish joint responsibility for an offence it must, of course, be established that a criminal act was done by several persons, the participation must be in doing the act, not merely in its planning...But this > participation need not, in all cases, be by physical presence. In offences involving physical violence, normally presence at the scene of offence of the offenders sought to be rendered liable on the principle of joint liability may be necessary, but such is not the case in respect of other offences where the offence consists of diverse acts which may be done at different times and places. In Kantiah's case,[15] misappropriation was committed by removing goods from a government depot and on the occasion of the removal of the goods, the first accused was not present. It was, therefore, doubtful whether he had participated in the commission of the offence, and this court in those circumstances held that participation by the first accused was not established. The observations in Kantiah's case,[16] in so far as they deal with section 34 of the Indian Penal Code must, in our judgment, be read in the light of the facts established and are not intended to lay down a principle of universal application.

Absence of physical presence of an accused in the room is not sufficient to absolve him from vicarious liability. It is true that participation in actions is one of the prominent features in s 34 . Its essence is to be found in the existence of common intention animating the perpetrator to the doing of the act. Physical presence at the very spot is not always a necessary ingredient to attract the action. He need not be present in the actual room; he can, for instance, stand guard by a gate outside ready to warn his companions about any approach of danger. What is required is his actual participation in the commission of the offence in some way or other at the time when the crime is actually being committed.[17]

49. Mere Presence not Sufficient for Common Intention for Crime

The mere presence without proof of any act or omission done to facilitate the offence or at least without proof of the existence of a common intention will not be sufficient to support a conviction with the aid of this section.[18] Where no act or conduct on the part of the accused has been proved from which an inference of a pre-arranged plan to commit a murder may be drawn, the mere fact that the accused were seen at the spot at the time of the murder is not enough to prove a common intention to murder.[19]If, in cases where there is no direct evidence of the actual participation of the accused in a specific act of violence, though the accused are proved at a particular point of time to be members of the mob, but they are not shown to have taken part in the specific act, they are to be found guilty of that act by force of s 34, it must be clearly found that, that act was in furtherance of the common intention of the mob while these accused were in it, or if s 149 is used, that the act was also in prosecution of the common object or such as these accused knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object. It is not the law, that a court is to presume that any and every person who is proved to have been present in a riotous mob at any time or to have joined it at any stage during its activities is in law guilty of every act committed by it from the beginning to the end, or that each member of such a crowd must, from the beginning, have anticipated and contemplated resistance to the organised forces of order, that is, the police, or have made up his mind before the riot197 began, to oppose such resistance and overcome such forces as stood in the way of the mob accomplishing its common object.[20]

The mere circumstance of a person being present on a lawful occasion does not raise a presumption of that person's complicity in an offence then committed so as to make s 34 applicable.[21] But mere presence of the accused persons together at the spot is not sufficient to hold that they share common intention to murder or injure the victim.[22] A person, merely because he or she was present at or near the scene of occurrence without doing anything more, without carrying a weapon and even without marching along with other assailants, would not be convicted with the aid of s 34, IPC for the offence committed by the other accused.[23]

50. Exhortation

Appellant accused D exhorted co-accused R who was armed with pistol to kill the deceased. On exhortation, the co-accused R fired at the deceased from behind causing death. The evidence of exhortation was reliable. Section 34 , IPC was held attracted in the case. Both the accused D and co-accused R were convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[24]

All the accused appellants of the same family, living close together in the same locality, had come out armed and raised a lalkara that the opposite party be done away with and inflicted injuries on PW and one injury to deceased which proved fatal. A case of common intention was held spelt out.[25]

Conviction under Section 302 / 34 Upheld

The accused H and his two sons K and V (appellants) armed with weapons went to the house of the deceased to eliminate him. K on exhortation of his father H, fired a pistol shot and killed B. On the principle of vicarious or constructive liability, the appellant was convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC along with his father H and his brother K.[26]

Acquittal of the Accused

Where only the role of exhortation was assigned to the appellant no. 3, and no overt act was attributed, he was acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[27]

51. Accused Merely Passerby-Conviction not Proper

The accused appellants A2 and A3 were merely passers-by and near the spot who picked up stone on the spur of the moment causing one simple injury each on the198 person of the deceased, held, their conviction under s 304, Part II read with s 34, IPC was not proper, and was set aside.[28]

Two accused, L and S, set the huts of the complainant on fire. Appellant B was merely standing on the spot. There was absolutely no evidence to hold that he also had common intention with the other co-accused. Appellant B was acquitted of the charge under ss 436 / 34, IPC .[29]

Rule of Exhortation

Where the co-accused was attributed the role of exhortation, he was unarmed, another appellant co-accused who had also been assigned the role of exhortation was given benefit of doubt, the appellant co-accused was also given benefit of doubt and was acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[30] Where the appellant accused exhorted after infliction of injuries were completed, he by no means can be held guilty of sharing a common intention with other accused. Appellant accused was given benefit of doubt and acquitted of charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[31]

Mere exhortation by itself may not be sufficient to draw an inference that the persons shared the common intention. Co-accused who was attributed the role of exhortation was not convicted under s 302 / 34, IPC .[32]

(II) 'IN FURTHERANCE OF COMMON INTENTION OF ALL'

52. Criminal Act 'In Furtherance of the Common Intention of All'

The section does not say 'the common intention of all', nor does it say 'and intention common to all'. Under the provisions of s 34, the essence of the liability is to be found in the existence of a common intention animating the accused leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of such intention.[33] To attract the application of s 34, it must be established beyond any shadow of doubt that the criminal act was done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all. In other words, the prosecution must prove facts justifying an inference that all the participants of the act shared a common intention to commit the criminal act which was finally committed by one or more of the participants.[34] Common intention must exist before the commission of the crime.[35]

One accused P had given beating with her plastic shoes to the deceased, an old lady, causing her death. Petitioners, persons who arrived on the spot, were not armed, nor did they indulge in or facilitated the shoe beating by the accused P. Held, the199 petitioners accused did not share common intention of the accused P, so, all were acquitted of the charge under ss 325 / 34, IPC .[36]

For the application of s 34 of the IPC, a furtherance of a common design is condition precedent for convicting each of the persons, who take part in the commission of a crime. The mere fact that several persons took part in a crime will not, in the absence of a common intention, be sufficient for convicting them of that crime.[37]The view that even the person not committing the particular crime could be held guilty of that crime with the aid of s 34 if the commission of the act was such as could be shown to be in furtherance of a common intention not necessarily intended by every one of the participants, is not correct. The common intention must be to commit the particular crime although the actual crime may be committed by any one sharing common intention, then only can others be held to be guilty.[38] Both ss 149 and 34 deal with a combination of persons who become liable to be punished as sharers in commission of offences. The non-applicability of s 149 is, therefore, no bar in convicting an accused under the substantive section read with s 34 if evidence discloses commission of an offence is in furtherance of the common intention of them all.[39]

The rule of law laid down in this section, comes into play only when as a fact it has been found that the criminal act done by an individual is in furtherance of the common intention and not without it.[40] Where the prosecution case was that the accused A went to the house of B and told him to vacate the house and on his refusal, A exhorted co-accused K to finish B and that K fired two shots from his pistol and caused injuries to B and M, in the circumstances, accused persons were held to have acted in furtherance of common intention.[41] A common intention--a meeting of minds--to commit an offence and participation in the commission of the offence in furtherance of that common intention would invite the application of s 34 .[42]It is true that in order to convict persons vicariously under s 34 or s 149, it is not necessary to prove that each and every one of them had indulged in overt acts. Even so, there must be material to show that the overt act or acts of one or more of the accused was or were done in furtherance of the common intention of all the accused or in prosecution of the common object of the members of the unlawful assembly.[43] Where the testimony of the PWS about the presence/involvement of the two appellants in the commission of the murder was contradictory, there was no material to show that the appellants had committed the alleged offence in the furtherance of their common intention, the appellants were acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[44]

There was evidence that in the scuffle between the deceased and the accused to take possession of lathi, co-accused caught hold of the deceased which facilitated the accused in taking possession of the lathi, but in the meanwhile the accused gave stab200 blow to the deceased. Held it could not be said that the co-accused shared common intention with the accused to commit the murder of the deceased. Co-accused was acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[45]

Both the accused D and K, in furtherance of their common intention, caused injuries on the vital organs of H and P, resultantly, H died whereas P survived. Both were armed with the deadly weapons, therefore, case of both these accused could be segregated from the case of S, K and M who caused injuries on the non-vital parts of the persons of P and K. As such, both can be stated to have pre-planned to inflict grievous injuries to H and P, whereas the remaining three accused who had inflicted injuries on the non-vital parts of the body of witnesses cannot be said to have shared common intention with the accused inflicting the fatal blows.[46]

The evidence of PW1, PW2 and PW3 made it clear that the deceased was attacked by A1, A2, A3 and A4 in furtherance of their common intention and therefore, all the four accused persons (the appellants) were liable for the criminal act of causing the death of the deceased under s 34, IPC, as if the criminal act was done by each of them alone.[47]

Two accused appellants assaulted the victim with lathi on head, causing injuries in temporal region. Accused shared common intention, had knowledge also that their act was likely to cause death. Accused were convicted under s 308 read with s 34, IPC .[48]

53. Foundation of Constructive Liability

The foundation of the constructive liability is the common intention animating the accused to doing of the criminal act, and the doing of such act in furtherance of such intention.[49] When the two accused persons armed with sticks, participated equally in actual assault on the deceased as also in abuses hurled on him, having come together and having gone together, there was no room for doubt about the common intention of both the accused causing the murder of the deceased.[50] Where the deceased had illicit relations with the mother of the accused, both accused came together to the place where deceased was working and assaulted him in furtherance of their common intention. The evidence of eyewitnesses was consistent and did not suffer from any infirmity. The conviction of both the accused was held proper.[51] But where accused persons were charged with causing the death of five persons by inflicting gunshot injuries, the testimony of eyewitnesses was found not truthful, there was no material showing as to who had caused whose deaths, the defence version was that they fired shots in self-defence and it was supported by evidence, the evidence on record did not show that while firing shots, the accused were acting in furtherance of their common intention. The acquittal of accused was found proper.[52]201

54. Crucial Test of Applicability of Constructive Liability

The crucial test as to the applicability of constructive liability under this section is to be found in the phrase 'in furtherance of the common intention of all'. It is, therefore, clear that a particular criminal act done by an individual in order to constitute a constructive liability against others must be one which is done in pursuance of a common intention as a step-in-aid to attain it or as a means to the end underlying it or must be one which is a link in the chain of acts all originating out of the common intention and culminating in its attainment. Once a criminal act becomes independent of the common intention, though done in pursuance of an intention or giving rise to consequences same or similar in nature as contemplated by the common intention, the rule of constructive liability as laid down under s 34 ceases to operate and others, who are a party to the original common intention, will not be held liable constructively for that criminal act.[53]The essence of joint liability under this section 'is to be found in the existence of a common intention animating the accused leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of such intention'.[54]

55. Meaning and Significance of the Words 'In Furtherance Of'

In the Oxford English Dictionary the word 'furtherance' is defined as 'the action of helping forward'. Adopting this definition, Russell says: 'It indicates some kind of aid or assistance producing an effect in the future', and adds that any act may be regarded as done in furtherance of the ultimate felony if it is a step intentionally taken for the purpose of effecting that felony. Thus the driving of a motorcar in order to reach the spot where the felony is to be committed is done in furtherance of the felony; but if while on the way the driver runs over and kills a pedestrian, this collision is merely incidental and the running over of the pedestrian is not done in furtherance of the felony, for the driver did not purposely drive over the pedestrian as a means of getting to his desired destination. If, however, A, who wishes to commit a felony involving violence against B, is impeded by X, and throws X aside in order to get at B then this attack upon X is made in furtherance of the felony. So also, any act of preparation for the commission of the felony is done in furtherance of it.[55]

In a Lahore case, the common intention of the culprits was to commit robbery and in furtherance of that intention different acts were committed by different persons. While S, one of the accused had gone to fetch K for carrying out that common intention, another accused shot down the deceased who was the son of K in furtherance of the same. If was held that S also was constructively liable for the murder.[56]

56. Prior Concert and Prearranged Plan is Foundation of Common Intention

A charge under s 34 of IPC presupposes the sharing of a particular intention by more than one person to commit a criminal act. The dominant feature of s 34 is the element of participation in actions. This participation need not in all cases be by202 physical presence. Common intention implies acting in concert. There is a pre-arranged plan which is proved either from conduct or from circumstances or from incriminating facts. The principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act is embodied in s 34 of the IPC . The existence of common intention is to be the basis of liability. That is why the prior concert and the pre-arranged plan is the foundation of common intention to establish liability and guilt.[57] The common intention implies acting in concert, existence of a pre-arranged plan which is to be proved either from conduct or from circumstances or from any incriminating facts. It requires a pre-arranged plan and it presupposes prior concert. Therefore, there must be prior meeting of minds. The prior concert or meeting of minds may be determined from the conduct of the offenders unfolding itself during the course of action and the declaration made by them just before mounting attack. It can also be developed at the spur of the moment, but there must be a pre-arrangement or premeditated concert. This being the requirement of law for applicability of s 34, IPC, from the mere fact that the accused 'RP' and 'RY' came and caught hold of the deceased, whereafter 'SY' and 'SL' came with the gandasa (chopper) in their hands and gave blows by means of gandasa, it cannot be said that the accused 'RP' and 'RY' shared the common intention with 'SY' and 'SL'. Consequently, accused 'RP' and 'RY' cannot be held guilty of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC but the accused 'SY' and 'SL' did not compute the offence under ss 302 / 34, IPC having assaulted deceased on his head by means of gandasa on account of which he died.[58] There was no evidence of pre-concert or proof of a prior meeting of minds between the appellant and his co-accused, they reached on the spot one after the another. Appellant's shot by gun missed the deceased. His conviction under s 302, IPC read with s 34 was set aside. Appellant accused was convicted under s 307, IPC .[59] Where occurrence had taken place suddenly in the heat of the moment without any provocation, s 34 would not apply.[60]

None of the PWS stated that the appellant accused A2 had pre-mediated with A1 and A3 before the offence was committed. The witnesses admitted that the appellant was not armed with weapon and no overt act was attributed to him. He was coming from a different direction and, therefore, the question of his sharing the common intention was not there. His conviction under s 302, IPC with the aid of s 34, IPC was set aside.[61]

There was no evidence of a plan or prior meeting of minds between the two accused appellants A1 and A2. A1 had assaulted and caused injuries to the PW5, hence his conviction under ss 302 / 34, IPC was altered to one under s 323, IPC . The appellant A2 had assaulted the deceased with a tabbal, and had caused as many as 8 incised wounds on various parts of the body of the deceased, thus, his conviction under s 302, IPC was upheld.[62]203

Criminal Act must be Connected with Common Intention and not Opposed to it

The criminal act for which all the conspirators are sought to be made liable must be connected with the common intention; it must have been done while, or for the purpose of, executing or carrying out the common intention. If it is extraneous to the common intention or is done in opposition to it, or is not required to be done at all for carrying out the common intention, it cannot be said to be in furtherance of it. If A and B jointly decide to strike X then all the striking done by them, whatever be the result, is done in furtherance of it, provided there is nothing unusual or nothing that was not contemplated or anticipated in the striking or the means used for the purpose.[63] Only such acts are not to be deemed to be the acts done in furtherance of the common intention as could not have taken place ordinarily in carrying out of the common intention. Such acts would be mostly unpremeditated ones by some of the persons joining in the criminal act. For such an unpremeditated act of one person, the others cannot be made liable. But there is no justification for others not to be liable for such acts of the other confederates as were likely to be committed in the carrying out of the common intention and which would have been normally foreseen and even contemplated by those persons.[64]

Importance of Facts and Circumstances of the Case

Under s 34, IPC, the question of common intention is one of fact.[65] The facts and circumstances of cases vary and each case has to be decided in view of the actual facts.[66] Kenny in his Outlines of Criminal Law,[67] writes: 'The act done must relate to the common design and not totally or substantially vary from it'.

A slight variation will not prevent the act from being in furtherance of the common intention; what is required to prevent that is altogether departing from the agreement or direction. Whether an act is in furtherance of the common intention or not depends upon the common intention and the nature of the act. It is an incident of fact and not of law.[68] It should not be altogether foreign, entirely different, from the aim of the concerted action.[69] Whether the criminal act complained of in any particular case has been done by one or more accused persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, must depend upon the facts of such case.[70]

Pre-meditated Attack

Where it was a case of pre-meditated attack at the instance of the three appellants, the appellant accused R must be deemed to have shared the common intention with the attackers for murder even though the weapon used by him caused no injury. Conviction of the appellant R under ss 302 / 34, IPC was held proper.[71]204

57. A Different Common Intention may Develop while Committing the Crime

The case of Mukunda Murari Lal v Emperor ,[72]is distinguishable. There the two accused, who were armed with guns and had plenty of ammunition, entered a shop for the purpose of committing robbery: they were disturbed in their act by a large number of villagers; they decided to retreat and in so retreating they fired a large number of shots and one of the pursuers was killed by one of the shots fired by one of them. It was held that though their primary intention was to effect their escape and not to kill any of their pursuers, still it must be concluded from the circumstances that their intention was to effect their escape even though, for that purpose, it was necessary to shoot any of the pursuers mortally, and that the other accused should be convicted under s 302 read with s 34 or s 114 . The decision is justified because though their original intention was only to commit robbery, the court found that the subsequent intention of the accused was to effect their escape from their pursuers and the shooting was in furtherance of that intention.

Though there may not be a pre-arranged plan to commit a major offence when some men start with a pre-arranged plan to commit a minor offence, their conduct may show that in the course of committing the minor offence, they came to an understanding to commit even the major offence and that therefore, a common intention of committing that offence came into existence. If the major offence was committed in furtherance of this common intention, each one of them will be liable for the offence as if he himself committed it.[73]

Common intention can develop on the spot.[74]

It is not necessary that common intention should exist from the beginning and it can develop at the last minute before commission of the offence.[75]

Three Types of Acts Included in Furtherance of Common Intention

The act done in furtherance of the common intention includes three types of acts:

(i) the act which is directly intended in between all the confederates;
(ii) the act which the circumstances of the case leave no doubt to conclude that though the act was not directly intended in between them it was taken by all of them as included in the common intention; and
(iii) the act which any one of the confederates commits in order to avoid or remove any obstruction or resistance put up in the way of the proper execution of the common intention.

In doing the third type of the act the individual doer may cause a result not intended by any other of the confederates.[76]

58. 'Common intention'--Meaning of

The section requires that there must be a general intention shared by all the persons concerned in the offence, that is to say, when several persons unite with a common205 purpose to commit a criminal offence, even those who assist in the accomplishment of that object would be equally guilty. The foundation of the constructive liability is, therefore, the common intention animating the accused to the doing of the criminal act, and the doing of it in furtherance of that intention.[77]The essence of the liability under this section is to be found in the existence of a common intention animating the offenders leading to the doing of a criminal act in furtherance of the common intention.[78] What is meant by 'common intention' is the 'community of purpose' or 'common design' or 'common intent'. It will not be wrong to interpret the words 'common intention' to mean 'community of purpose', 'common design' or 'common enterprise'.

Common intention implies a pre-arranged plan or preconcert, though such intention can develop at the spot just before the overt act. Common intention cannot be limited to mens rea or guilty mind necessary for the constitution of the crime actually committed. Common intention should not be confused with the intention that is an ingredient of many of the offences defined in the IPC . The intention, is the intention formed by a person himself committing the offence. The common intention is the common design and common intent of two or more persons acting together. Common intention may be intention to do a particular criminal act or bring about a particular result not necessarily the act or the result which constitutes the crime charged. When several persons act in furtherance of a common design, each is responsible for the doing of others provided what the others actually do is something which may have been in the contemplation of all at the time when the common intention was entertained by them.[79]

Common Intention is Akin to Motive or Object

'Common intention' as pointed out, is not to be confused with the intention. It is more akin to motive or object. It is remoter than the intention with which each act included in the criminal act is done; it is what the persons jointly decide to achieve. It is the reason or object for doing all the acts forming the criminal act. The common intention may be to do a certain act regardless of the end and the means, it may be to achieve a certain end regardless of the means, or it may be to do an act with certain means regardless of the end. These may be common intention in which only the doing of a certain physical act is fixed and the end of the means is not decided upon.[80]

Common Intention to be Shared by all the Members

In order that an intention should be common, it should be attributable to every member of the group. This is also clarified by the fact that the section itself characterises the common intention to be 'the common intention of all'. The section does not ignore the intention of the individual offender. It only adds some more persons in the commission of the offence and postulates that the same intention jointly existed in the mind of every individual member of the group as well. It may be that the intention is alleged to be common. But that only means that every member206 shared it along with others and not that some members shared it and others did not.[81] Where all the accused persons belonged to one family and there was evidence that each one participated in the assault, held that they shared common intention in assaulting the deceased.[82]

Where participation of the accused in the crime is proved, but common intention is absent, s 34, IPC would not be attracted.[83]

Where the accused no. 1 came to the house of the deceased and gave an axe blow to him, accused nos. 2 and 3 who were bare handed and caught hold of the deceased when the accused no. 1 inflicted fatal blow on the deceased, it could not be said beyond reasonable doubt that they shared common intention with the accused no. 1 to commit the murder of the deceased.[84]

59. Common Intention Implies Preconcert And Pre-arranged Plan

It is one of the settled principles of law that the common intention must be anterior in time to the commission of the crime.[85] In the leading case, Mahboob Shah v Emperor ,[86]their Lordships of the Privy Council held that common intention within the meaning of this section implies a pre-arranged plan, and that to convict an accused of an offence, applying this section, it should be proved that the criminal act was done in concert pursuant to the pre-arranged plan. And this view has been followed in subsequent cases in India.[87] It is thus well established that a common intention presupposes prior concert. It requires a pre-arranged plan, as before a man can be vicariously convicted for the criminal act of another, the act must have been done in furtherance of the common intention of them all.[88] Accordingly, there must have been a prior meeting of minds.[89] There was land dispute between two brothers. The accused assaulted the victim with chura, his minor son i.e. co-accused, caught hold of the victim. Evidence was lacking to show that there was prior meeting of minds between the accused and his minor son co-accused, thus, the conviction of the co-accused minor son under s 300 read with s 34, IPC was not proper, and was set aside.[90]207

All the three accused appellants along with one more person acquitted by the Courts below were lying in wait near the spot for the deceased. All of them belaboured the deceased and continued their assault and aggression even when the deceased had fallen to the ground on account of the head injuries sustained by him. The appellants fled from the place of occurrence only when they felt that the deceased was dead. All these circumstances left no manner of doubt that the appellants shared the common intention to kill the deceased and that they had acted under a premeditated plan. Accused appellants were convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[91]

If there is no evidence of any act or conduct on the part of the accused from which an inference of the pre-arranged plan to commit the offences may be drawn, the mere presence of all the accused on the spot at the time of the commission of the offence is not enough to prove a common intention to commit the offence and this section will have no application.[92]But this does not mean either that there should be confabulation, discussion and agreement in writing or by word, nor that the plan should be arranged for a considerable time before the doing of the criminal act.[93]

> A pre-arranged plan does not mean that there should be a conference at which resolutions are moved and a decision arrived at to commit a particular crime. All that appears necessary in such circumstances is that before the actual criminal act is performed, an agreement, not necessarily vocal, should be arrived at amongst those who participate in the crime.[94]

The plan need not be elaborate, nor is a long interval of time required. It could arise and be formed suddenly, as, e.g., when one man calls on bystanders to help him kill a given individual and they, either by their words or their acts, indicate their assent to him and join him in the assault. There is then the necessary meeting of the minds; there is a pre-arranged plan however hastily formed and rudely conceived. In pre-arrangement, there must be a premeditated concert.[95]

To constitute common intention it is necessary that the intention of each one of them should be known to the rest of the accused. Mere participation in the crime with others is not sufficient to attribute common intention to one of others involved in the crime.[96]

There was no evidence of pre-plan, accused no. 1 had fired shot at the deceased, accused nos. 2 and 3 had not fired at the deceased. Accused nos. 2 and 3 were acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 324, IPC .[97]

In the case in hand, the prosecution led the evidence that the accused I slapped PW1. He had not participated in the crime nor exhorted to accused H to give knife blows to the deceased. He only caught hold of PW1 from behind and exhorted him to cause fatal blow on the person of PW1. Thus, the participation of accused I while causing injuries by knife blows to deceased was not proved. He did not participate in208 giving knife blows to the deceased. There was nothing in the evidence to show that due to instigation of accused I, accused H gave knife blows on the person of the deceased.

Held, it could not be inferred that accused I had a common intention to cause the death of the deceased; thus, his conviction under ss 302 / 34, IPC recorded by the Sessions Judge was set aside.[1]

Intention of one should be known and shared by the other

In order that intention may be common, the test which is applied is whether the intention of one was known to the other and shared by that other.[2] To constitute common intention it is necessary that the intention of each one of them is known to the rest of them and be shared by them.[3] Appellant accused held the hands of the deceased, while two other accused assaulted the deceased with deadly weapons causing death. There was no evidence of prior meeting of mind and pre-planning between the appellant and the other accused. Sudden quarrel was the reason of assault. The appellant accused could not be attributed with knowledge that other accused persons would assault the deceased on the vital parts of the body causing death. Appellant accused was convicted for his individual act under s 323, IPC .[4]

60. Common Intention may Develop on the Spot

That the common intention referred to in s 34 of the IPC presupposes a prior concert, a pre-arranged plan, i.e., a prior meeting of minds, does not mean that there must be a long interval of time between the formation of the common intention and the doing of the act.[5] Common intention can be formed at the spur of the moment.[6]

The participators may concert immediately before the commission of the offence or even at the time of the commission of the offence.[7]But the pre-concert or the meeting of minds should be distinct from the act itself.[8]

The common intention or state of mind and the physical act, both may be arrived at the spot. Common intention is not alike or identical to mens rea. The latter may be co-incidental with or collateral to the former but they are distinct and different.[9]

Common intention may be conceived of, immediately before or at the time of the offence,[10] or as soon as the people get together,[11] or in the course of occurrence.[12]209 The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Mahboob Shah v Emperor ,[13]did not lay down that a certain interval should elapse between the formation of a pre-arranged plan and the doing of the criminal act and did not negative the formation of a pre-arranged plan just a moment before the doing of the criminal act.[14] A preconcert in the sense of a distinct previous plan is not necessary to be proved. The common intention to bring about a particular result may well develop on the spot as between a number of persons, with reference to the facts of the case and circumstances of the situation.[15] Common intention may be formed just before or even during the course of the assault.[16] Common intention can develop even during the course of occurrence.[17] Common intention can develop at the spur of the moment. Therefore, what was the common intention of the accused can only be adjudicated after the entire trial is complete. The trial Court on the facts of the case was justified in framing charge under s 34 .[18] The criminal intention need not be present to start with, and it may be developed in the course of events; and may be inferred from the conduct of assailants.[19] The common intention to commit an offence graver than the one originally designed may develop during the execution of the original plan, e.g., during the progress of an attack on the person who is intended to be beaten up but the evidence in that behalf should be clear and cogent for suspicion, however strong, cannot take place of the proof which is essential to bring home the offence to the accused.[20]

There was cogent evidence to hold that even at the spot, common intention had developed amongst the accused persons. The participation of all the accused persons in the offence was found to be doubtful. Thus, conviction under ss 302 / 34, IPC was not proper.[21]

Where the deceased himself was aggressor, took out a danda and had given danda blows to the five boys, there was no common intention to cause any injury till the deceased got down and gave danda blows to the five boys. Thereafter, the acts of the assailants were spontaneous. At the most, there could be common intention to cause serious injuries on the person of the deceased but there was no common intention to cause injuries with the intention or knowledge to cause death of the deceased.[22]

Common Intention in Cases of Sudden Quarrel and Fight

Normally, this section will not apply, if the fight has begun suddenly. In such cases every person who takes part in the fight will be taken to be responsible for his210 individual acts. But where there is proof that some of the persons taking part in the fight, which has suddenly arisen, go and jointly commit an offence and there are indications that their joint object was to commit that offence, there is no bar for the courts to hold that they had formed a joint intention there and then to do the act of violence.[23]In cases where there is a sudden quarrel without any premeditation, where there is no previous design for killing or for murder or even for assault, but something happens and tempers flare up and then several persons engage in a transaction, which ends in an offence or offences, it may not be easy to find if there was any common intention and, if there was, what that common intention was. In such cases there is commonly a cry for assistance or a call for assault or the doing of a certain act which is criminal. Now the person who asks for assistance or who gives a certain direction or a certain order, cannot possibly be sure of the reaction of others. All those who come may come with different designs and different intentions. If they immediately engage in the transaction, it will be an extremely difficult task to discovery whether they had any common intention from their acts alone. They do not have any chance of disclosing their mind to the others.[24]

Where in a case of sudden fight the common intention of the party of the accused appears to have been merely to abuse and possibly to use fists on the opposite party for an alleged insulting behaviour on their part, and there was mutual exchange of abuse before the fight ensued, a common intention to commit a murder cannot be inferred, even though death is caused in the course of the fight.[25]

Where the accused P mounted the assault all of a sudden by snatching the axe from the deceased before anybody could perceive or think about such an act by a person unarmed and the co-accused in quick succession inflicted the second blow on a non-vital part of the body of the deceased, held the co-accused P would not be liable under s 302, IPC inasmuch as he cannot be said to have shared the common intention with P to cause murder of the deceased. He may be held guilty for his individual act alone and not by aid of s 34, IPC .[26]

In this context the undermentioned cases can be referred to.[27]

61. Presumption of Common Intention

It is true that presumption of common intention is subject to the same restrictions as other presumptions and it must not take the form of a bare surmise, conjecture or suspicion. Inference of common intention should never be reached unless it is a necessary inference deducible from the circumstances of the case. A common intention must be anterior in time to the commission of crime showing a pre-arranged plan and prior concert, and though, it is difficult in most cases to prove the intention of an individual, it has to be inferred from the act or conduct or other relevant circumstances of the case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down in this regard and the question whether inference of common intention can be drawn depends upon211 facts and circumstances of each case. Sometimes this inference can be gathered by the manner in which the accused persons arrived on the scene of occurrence and mounted the attack, the determination and concert with which the beating was given or the injuries caused by one or some of them, the others to assist those causing the injuries, the concerted conduct subsequent to the commission of the offence for instance that all of them left the scene of occurence together and other acts which all or some may have done as would help in determining the common intention. In other words, totality of circumstances must be taken into consideration in arriving at the conclusion whether the accused had the common intention to commit an offence with which they could be connected.[28]

In Mamand v Emperor ,[29] the existence of common intention was presumed as one of the persons had strong grounds for entertaining feelings of enmity against the deceased, the other conspirators were related to, or connected with him, all lived together and all of them ran away together after the assault. Their Lordships did not ascertain what was the exact common intention formed by the three accused but concluded that the murder was committed in furtherance of it.

In a case it has been held that 'when several persons inflict numberless injuries, the common intention should be safely presumed'. What is meant, perhaps, is that when several persons inflict numerous injuries, a common intention may safely be presumed. In a sudden altercation between the complainant and one of the three accused, all the accused beat the complainant in a fit of anger and without any pre-arranged plan, with the result that one of them caused a grievous hurt to the complainant, and there was no evidence as to who caused the grievous hurt. It was held that s 34 was inapplicable and all the accused could be convicted under s 323, but none under s 325 .[30]

Presumption of Common Intention of Partners

Where the knowledge of the transaction is admitted by the four partners and they are beneficiaries of the wrongful gain, merely because of the contention that some documents have been signed by one of them, would not be sufficient to absolve the remaining partners of the liability that arises where the offence is held to be established. It is true that there may be cases where a particular partner is able to demonstrate to a court that he had no knowledge of a transaction or for that matter, that he was opposed to a particular course of action but that will have to be brought on record by the defence and cannot merely be canvassed on the basis of a vague statement under s 313 of the Cr PC to the effect that a particular partner was looking after the transaction.[31]

Common Intention must be known and Shared by All

To invoke the aid of s 34 of the IPC successfully, it must be shown that the criminal act complained against was done by one of the accused persons in the furtherance of the common intention of all.[32] Common intention does not mean similar intention of several persons. To constitute common intention it is necessary that the intention of212 each one of them be known to the rest of them and be shared by them.[33] The section requires that there must be a general intention shared by all the persons concerned in the offence.[34] In order that an intention may be said to be common, it should be attributable to every member of the group. This is also clarified by the fact that the section itself characterises the common intention to be the 'common intention of all'. This clearly means that every member shared the intention along with others, and not that some members shared it and others did not.[35]To apply the section it must be shown that all the persons who did the 'criminal act' intended that it should be committed.[36]

Where a charge against police officers was that they killed the occupants of a speeding vehicle by chasing them, there was no evidence showing that there was common intention to kill when the police officers left the police station for chasing the vehicle, the police officials were armed with revolvers and constables with rifles and police started indiscriminate firing at a particular place where vehicle of deceased was found stationary. The postmortem report showed that the deceased were killed on account of firing from rifles. However, the vehicle in which the deceased were moving was found to have been fired at, by revolvers. On these facts it was held that all police personnel developed common intention to kill at a particular place and were liable to be convicted under ss 300 / 34, IPC .[37] Where the three accused persons came to the victim's place on a motorcycle and two of them threw acid on the victim, thereafter all the three accused attacked the victim by knives. Evidence in this aspect was found un-impeachable. Acid burn injuries were also found on the person of two of the accused persons. Conviction of the accused under ss 300 / 34 was held proper.[38] Where the accused had borrowed money from the deceased and had failed to return the same, the deceased went to the house of the accused and demanded money. The accused armed with a gun, alongwith the co-accused came out of his house and the demand by the deceased led to exchange of words between parties followed by grappling between the accused and the deceased. The co-accused also took part in assault and after holding deceased by his hairs, gave lalkara to the accused to fire a shot. The death of the deceased was caused by a gunshot wound on the chest. The co-accused can be said to have shared common intention to cause death of the deceased and his conviction under ss 302 and 34 of the IPC was maintained by the Apex Court.[39]

The three accused G, K and L armed with rods appeared at the scene at an odd hour. Accused G and K caught hold of the deceased tightly and accused L hit her with iron rod, causing injuries leading to death. There was union of minds of the three accused G, K and L to commit the offence, thus, all of them were held liable to be convicted with the aid of s 34, IPC .[40]213

Effect of Common Intention not shared after a Stage

For the application of this section the common intention must be shared by all throughout the enterprise. In Mutukdhari Singh v Emperor ,[41]A was keeping watch over his master's crop. The four accused B, C, D and E, who had formerly an interest in the land, went to it armed and proceeded to cut the crop. A remonstrated, but seeing that the accused were armed, ran away, B and C pursued and assaulted him. D and E also joined in the pursuit of A, but they soon stopped and did not go up to A or strike him or molest him. It was held that D and E could not 'with the aid of this section' be held liable for the assault and the injuries caused by B and C. Similarly, where the two accused, namely NH and NY took the deceased to their house and caused 13 incised wounds. The accused NH, however, left the spot before fatal injuries were inflicted by accused NJ. It was held that the accused NH can be held guilty only for sharing common intention of causing fatal injuries and not for murder.[42]

Where a gang of persons making preparations to commit dacoity were discovered and pursued by a body of villagers who succeeded in arresting two members of the gang, and just about this time one of the dacoits at large fired his gun and killed one of the pursuing party, it was held that inasmuch as the separation of the two accused from the gang was prior to the murder, neither s 149 nor s 34 applied, and the members arrested could not be held liable for a murder committed by a member of the gang to which they no longer belonged.[43]

Where the common intention of all the accused extended only to the causing of simple hurt but one of them exceed that common intention by causing grievous hurt, others cannot be held guilty under s 325 .[44]

62. Same or Similar Intention not to be Confused with Common Intention

In order to constitute a constructive liability under this section, the intention of the different confederates should not only be same or similar, but also 'common' between them, though the acts done by each one of them in pursuance of the common intention may either be the same, similar or diverse.[45] Several persons can simultaneously attack a man and each can have the same intention, namely the intention to kill, and each can individually inflict a separate fatal blow and yet they may not have the common intention required by the section if there was no prior meeting of minds to form a pre-arranged plan. In a case like this, each would be individually liable for whatever injury he happens to cause, but none could be vicariously convicted for the act of any of the others; and if the prosecution cannot prove that his separate blow was a fatal one, he cannot be convicted of the murder however clearly an intention to kill could be proved in his case.[46]Section 34 uses the words 'in furtherance of the common intention of all'. It does not say 'the common intentions of all' in the plural which might mean similar intentions. Nor does the214section say 'an intention common to all' which might mean same intention. Care must, therefore, be taken:

> Not to confuse same or similar intention with common intention; the partition which divides 'their bounds' is often very thin; nevertheless, the distinction is real and substantial, and if overlooked will result in miscarriage of justice.[47]

In Gajraj Singh v Emperor [48] it was observed:

> Persons who have a common intention must have the same intention. 'Same intention' must, to make it 'common intention', be indicated in some way by words or acts between the persons who share it. Such indication may be inferred from circumstances.

Common intention denotes action in concert and necessarily postulates the existence of a pre-arranged plan and that must mean a prior meeting of minds. Cases to which s 34 can be applied disclose an element of participation in action on the part of all the accused persons. The acts may be different, may vary in their character, but they are all actuated by the same common intention. The common intention required by s 34 is different from the same intention or similar intention.[49] There is a material difference between the sharing of similar intention and common intention. Section 34 , IPC can be attracted only if the accused share a common intention and not where they share only similar intention.[50] A similar intention would not be enough to bring the case with the meaning of s 34 . Suppose several persons, each acting independently of the other, intend to commit a crime and all of them choose the same moment and commit the crime which each of them intended separately; there would be no common intention in such a case.[51] In order to attract the provisions of this section it is not enough that every accused possessed the same intention.[52] Common intention does not mean similar intention of several persons. To constitute common intention it is necessary that the intention of each one of them be known to the rest of them and be shared by them.[53] Whether in a situation all the individuals concerned therein have developed only simultaneous and independent intentions or whether a simultaneous consensus of their minds to bring about a particular result can be said to have been developed and thereby intended by all of them, is a question that has to be determined on the facts.[54] Where five men assault at one and the same time, each of them seeing that the other four are assaulting also, the assault may be regarded as a common one though the impulse to assault may have arisen independently.[55]

Acts of all the accused need not be same or identical, but must be actuated by some common intention and even if the accused has not caused any injury to the deceased, but some overt act is shown to have been committed by him in furtherance of the common intention to cause death, he would be liable to be convicted under s 302,215IPC with the aid of s 34, IPC .[56] In the instant case, all the three accused appellants came together to the place of occurrence, they attacked the deceased concertedly, one of them dealing the dagger blow on the head of the deceased which caused death. Thus the accused appellants came with preplanning and with a meeting of minds to commit the offence. There was active participation by all the accused persons in attacking the deceased. All the three appellants were convicted under s 302, IPC read with s 34 .[57]

63. Does 'Common Intention' Mean Mens Rea or Guilty Knowledge or Intention to Commit the Particular Offence Committed?

Taking up the question of knowledge first, s 34 is restricted to common intention and does not embrace any knowledge.[58] Knowledge that an offence is likely to be committed is not what is contemplated in this section.[59] In Sanlaydo v Emperor ,[60] Dunkley J, (with whom Cunliffe J concurred), observed:

> It seems to me that it would be going very far to hold that, because a man takes part in a robbery in which some of the robbers are armed with deadly weapons, it can be presumed that he thereby becomes a party to an intention to kill any person who may happen to resist them in carrying out the robbery. Of course, when a man accompanies robbers, who are armed with such weapons, he must know it to be likely that a murder will be committed if the attempt to rob is resisted, but further than that, in my opinion, it is not safe to go. Knowledge is not the same thing as intention.

Knowledge of a likely result does not amount to an intention to bring about that result; knowledge of the likely result and the actual result may justify the determination of the intention of the actual doer, but are not the right factors to determine the common intention of others who had made a common cause with the actual doer and whose liability for the actual acts of the doer will be dependent on the question whether the actual acts done were done in furtherance of 'the common intention of all or not'.[61]

As for intention, it has been held in some cases that 'common intention' in s 34 means the mens rea or mental ingredient required by law to constitute the very offence which has, in fact, been committed, and must therefore, embrace the results or consequences of the physical act of the accused, and further that it means intention in the narrow sense as opposed to mere knowledge that certain consequences may follow.[62] But if 'common intention' in s 34 be limited to mens rea, or criminal intention or knowledge, necessary for the commission of the crime actually216 committed, the provisions of ss 35 and 37 - 38 of the IPC would become unworkable. It is no doubt true that a certain kind of common intention, i.e., to co-operate in the doing of an act animating all the doers of the fractional acts is necessary for the working of the provisions of s 35 and 37 - 38, yet the common intention within the meaning of those sections is different from an intention common to all within the meaning of s 34 . The observations of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Barendra Kumar Ghose,[63]respecting the scope of s 37 as well as respecting a 'criminal act' in s 34, would come in conflict if 'common intention' is understood in the sense of mens rea which makes the act an offence. Again the expression 'where a criminal act is done' as used in s 34 is also applicable to the criminal act which is punishable as an offence under this Code without the requirement of any mens rea or guilty knowledge or intention, e.g., a public nuisance as defined in s 268 and made punishable in s 290 . Section 34 is applicable to such offence as it is applicable to any others.[64]Lastly, the intention which is an ingredient of many of the offences, is the intention formed by a person himself committing the offence; it is a personal matter, it is the intention immediately behind the act done by the doer. On the other hand, 'common intention' is the common design or common intent of two or more persons acting together.[65] The principle which the section embodies is participation in some action with the common intention of committing a crime; once such participation is established, s 34 is at once attracted.[66] It is not necessary that the common intention must be to commit the very crime which is actually committed.[67] In order that s 34 may be applicable, there must be a common intention to commit some crime, that is, something punishable under the IPC or any other law; if that is so, everyone would be liable for the result of their joint act in committing the crime' if the result was such as was likely to follow from their joint act in committing the crime intended and was not foreign to their common intention; and it is not necessary in order that s 34 should apply that the common intention should have been to cause the particular result which came about in committing the crime.[68]

It is not necessary that in case of a gangrape, the victim should have been raped by all the accused persons. If she is raped by one or more in a group of persons, each of the persons shall be 'deemed to have committed gangrape', provided those persons are acting in furtherance of their common intention. The common intention of all the five accused persons can be gathered from their conduct, prior to the incident and during the course of the incident.[69]

64. Application of Section 34 to Cases under Section 304, Part II

The question may arise whether common intention could be attributed for an act which does not require intention but only knowledge. An offence punishable under the second part of s 304 of the IPC does not require any intention to cause death or intention to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. What is required is217 only knowledge of the likelihood of death. That does not mean that for that reason, s 34 is excluded. Knowledge is only regarding the possible result of the act. Every act is done with an intention, which can take in common intention also. An act done with common intention even if it is done without the intention to bring about the particular result but only with the knowledge of the likelihood of that result happening can also attract s 34 . Each of the persons could have had such knowledge when they were doing the act. Common intention required for the application of s 34 is only the common intention of perpetrating the act. When common intention along with knowledge available is taken into account, s 34 is attracted.[70]

It has been held in some cases that this section, which is based on a common intention, cannot possibly be used with the second part of s 304 which expressly includes intention.[71]But although to constitute an offence under s 304, Part II, there must be no intention of causing death or such injury as the offender knew was likely to cause death, there must still be a common intention to do an act with the knowledge that it is likely to cause death though without the intention of causing death. Each of the assailants may know that the act they are jointly doing is one that is likely to cause death but have no intention of causing death, yet they may certainly have the common intention to do that act.

No one will dispute that such an act is a criminal act. Clearly, therefore, s 34 can apply to a case under s 304, Part II.[72] In Ibra Akanda v Emperor ,[73] Lodge J, was of the view that 'there is no difficulty in applying ss 34 - 35 to culpable homicide punishable under s 304(2) ',[74] and Das J, was of the view that s 34 can in no case be read with Part II of s 304 .[75] Khundkar J, to whom the case was referred did not wholly agree with either and held that ' s 34 can be applied to an offence punishable under s 304, Part II, in some cases and not all'.[76] Following this it has been held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court that if the common intention of s 34 is not necessarily confined to an intention to commit the very crime with which the accused are charged, a number of persons may act in pursuance of a common intention with this result that the doer of a fractional part would, in law, be deemed to be the doer of the whole and, if any or all persons participating in the action is or are shown to have a knowledge that the act done either singly or jointly with others is likely to bring about death, every such person can be punished under s 304, Part II. There is no possible conflict between the kind of 'knowledge' contemplated by s 304, Part II and the kind of 'common intention' contemplated by s 34 in pursuance of which the group of persons in question started the operations. If any one or more of them is proved to have the requisite kind of intention, e.g., the intention expressed in the earlier part of the s 299, he will be punishable either under s 302 or under s 304, Pt I, as the case may be. If, however, there is only guilty 'knowledge' as distinct from guilty 'intention', i.e., knowledge that the act which is being performed may result in death, he will be punishable under Part II of s 304 . There is no difficulty in applying s 34 so interpreted to a case which falls under218 s 304, Pt II. The common intention in the one case and the knowledge that the act is likely to bring about death in the other, do not come into conflict at all. The result is that it is possible to convict an accused person of an offence under s 304, Pt II read with s 34, provided the court is of the opinion that each person taking part in committing the crime in furtherance of the common intention of all had knowledge that their act was likely to cause death.[77] And this is now the prevailing view.[78] In a case where one act of the two accused caused injuries to the deceased by a sharp-edged weapon and the other by a blunt-edged weapon, and the assault on the deceased by them was with prior concert, the acquittal of the latter was held improper. In such a case, conviction of the accused who had caused the injury that was likely to result in death, for having committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder punishable under ss 304(2) and 323 and the other accused under s 304 Pt II read with s 34 would be proper.[79]

65. Single Injury - Common Intention not Inferred

Where only accused B inflicted fatal injury on the deceased, common intention was not inferred. Other accused persons were not convicted under s 302, IPC with the aid of s 34, IPC .[80]

[III] PROOF AND INFERENCE OF COMMON INTENTION

66. Proof Required for Application of Section 34

In order to bring home the charge of common intention, the prosecution has to establish by evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, that there was plan or meeting of mind of all the accused persons to commit the offence for which they are charged with the aid of s 34, be it pre-arranged or at the spur of the moment; but it must necessarily be before the commission of the crime.[81] Proof of participation by acceptable evidence in certain circumstances would lead to a conclusion that the accused had a common intention to commit the offence. Presence or absence of community of interests may not be of much significance. Each case, however, has to be considered on its own merit. Facts of each case may have to be dealt with differently.[82]

Direct proof of common intention is seldom available and, therefore, such intention can only be inferred from the circumstances appearing from the proved facts of the case and the proved circumstances.[83]219

The section cannot be pressed into use unless there is sufficient evidence to establish common intention.[84] The court must record a finding as to the common intention.[85] Different High Courts have expressed different but almost similar views in this respect. In Santosh v State of Kerala ,[86] the Kerala High Court has stated that common intention is seldom capable of direct proof, it is almost invariably to be inferred from proved circumstances relating to the entire conduct of all the persons and not only from the individual act actually performed. The criminal act actually committed would certainly be one of the important factors to be taken into consideration but should not be taken to be the sole factor. Common intention can always be presumed from proved circumstances, but the presumption is subject to some restrictions as other presumptions; it must not take the form of a bare surmise or conjecture or suspicion. There must be data from which it can be inferred and the presumption in favour of common intention should not be reached unless it is a necessary inference deducible from the circumstances of the case. It must be inferred with the least amount of flights of fancy.

The Orissa High Court has held that the common intention referred to in s 34, presupposes a prior concert, a pre-arranged plan, i.e., a prior meeting of minds. This does not mean that there must be a long interval of time between the formation of the common intention and the doing of the act. It is not necessary to adduce direct evidence of the common intention. Indeed, in many cases, it may be impossible to do so. The common intention may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the parties.[87]

The common intention is gathered from the manner in which the crime has been committed, the conduct of the accused soon before and after the occurrence, the determination and concern with which the crime was committed, the weapon carried by the accused and from the nature and injury caused by one or some of them. Therefore, for arriving at a conclusion whether the accused had the common intention to commit an offence of which they could be convicted, the totality of circumstances must be taken into consideration.[88]

The Allahabad High Court has expressed the view that undoubtedly it is a difficult thing to prove the intention of an individual and, therefore, it is all the more difficult to show the common intention of a group of persons. But however difficult may be the task, the prosecution must lead evidence of facts, circumstances and conduct of the accused from which their common intention can be safely gathered. In most cases it has to be inferred from the act or conduct or other relevant circumstances of the case in hand. This reference can be gathered by the manner in which the accused arrived on the scene and mounted the attack, the determination and concert with which the beating was given or the injuries caused by one or some of them.[89] The Patna High Court has held that common intention cannot be proved by actual fact. It has to be inferred from the subsequent conduct of the accused persons and their220 previous behaviour.[90] The Rajasthan High Court has also taken a almost similar view and it has been held that common intention implies a pre-arranged plan and acting in concert. Direct evidence relating to formation of common intention is seldom available and it is generally inferred from the acts and conduct of accused persons and such other relevant circumstances. The existence of common intention is, thus, largely inferential from surrounding circumstances and antecedents and subsequent conduct of the culprits. The inference of common intention should never be raised unless it is a necessary inference deducible from the circumstances of case.[91]

The common intention can be inferred from the circumstances of the case and can also be gathered from the circumstances as they arise even during the course of an incident.[92]

67. Omission of Name of Accused in FIR

Where the name of the accused was not mentioned in the FIR, he was acquitted of the charge under s 302 read with s 34 .[93]

68. Difficulty in Procuring Direct Evidence to be Inferred in most Cases

As has often been observed, it is difficult, if not impossible to procure direct evidence to prove the intention of an individual; in most cases it has to be inferred from his act or conduct or other relevant circumstances of the case.[94] Direct proof of common intention is seldom available and, therefore, such intention can only be inferred from the circumstances appearing from the proved facts of the case and the proved circumstances.[95] When the common intention is formed by conduct, obviously it can be proved only from the conduct of all the persons. Direct evidence to prove the formation and nature of the common intention is possible in theory only when it is formed in writing or by word of mouth, but in practice it is difficult to procure. Conspiracies are not hatched within the sight or hearing of others. Presumption of 'common intention' is subject to the same restrictions as other presumptions. It is not the form of a bare surmise or conjecture or suspicion. There must be data from which it can be inferred. When the nature of the 'common intention' is to be inferred it must be inferred with the least amount of flights of fancy. It does not matter whether the inference is to be drawn in favour of the prosecution or the defence. In either case there must be evidence to support it. As stated above, it is not essential in every case to find out the exact nature of the 'common intention'. If the 'common intention' is formed by or to be inferred from conduct, the court can infer only a general outline of the common intention and not its details.[96]221

In Jogendra Singh v State of Haryana ,[1] the Supreme Court has held that it is settled law that intention of the individual has to be inferred from the overt act or conduct or from the relevant circumstances. Therefore, the totality of the circumstances have to be taken into consideration to arrive at a conclusion to see whether the accused had a common intention to commit the crime.

The two accused along with others came fully armed with iron rods and both of them gave two blows each on the vital part of the body i.e. head and forehead which proved fatal for the deceased. Their conviction under ss 302 / 34 was held proper.[2]

59 Dileep Kumar v State of Kerala (1985) Cr LJ 114 (Ker), (1984) Ker LJ 672 .

60 Popat alias Bhujangrao Bhausaheb Mahurkar v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 1276, 2010 (2) Bom CR (Cri) 518, 2010 (3) All MR (Cri) 2060 .

61 Munnilal v State of MP 2009 Cr LJ 1590, p 1592, AIR 2009 SC 1759, 2009 (3) SCC 439 .

62 Nepal Ghosh v State (1992) 1 Crimes 833, p 837 (Cal)(DB).

63 Harihar Singh v Emperor AIR 1926 Pat 182, p 183-84 .

64 Sunny Kapoor v State (UT of Chandigarh) 2006 Cr LJ 2920 (SC), AIR 2006 SC 2242, 2006 SCC (Cri) 522 .

65 Hari Singh & Anor v State of Rajasthan AIR 1997 SC 1505, (1997) Cr LJ 733 (SC) .

66 Mukund alias Kundu Mishra & Anor v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1997 SC 2622, (1997) Cr LJ 534 (SC) .

67 Rotash v State of Rajasthan 2007 Cr LJ 758, p 761 (SC), 2007 (50) All Ind Cases 374, 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 382, 2006 (13) Scale 186 .

68 State of UP v Sahrunnisa AIR 2009 SC 3182, 2009 (9) Scale 170, 2009 Cr LJ 4151 (SC) .

69 Kamal Murmu & Anor v State of West Bengal AIR 1997 SC 3802, (1997) Cr LJ 4411 (SC) .

70 Ram Naresh v State of UP 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 304, 2009 (1) All LJ 218 (All) (DB) .

71 Raja Hiralal Boyat v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 538 (Bom) (DB).

72 Satish Kumar v State of Andhra Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ 1099, p 1103 (AP) (DB) .

73 Sunny Kapoor v State (UT of Chandigarh) 2006 Cr LJ 2920, AIR 2006 SC 2242 ; Lakhma v State of Rajasthan (1983) Raj LW 593, (1984) 1 Cr LC 50 (Raj) (DB) ; Rajeev Lochan v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 631, p 637 (MP) ; Pasupulati Siva Ramkrishna v State of AP 2014 (137) AIC 129 (SC), (2014) 5 SCC 369 ; Ram Adhar v State of Uttar Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 568, 2009 (2) All LJ 485 (All) (DB) .

74 Syed TYOUSUF Hussain v State of Andhra Pradesh 2013 Cr LJ 2172, AIR 2013 SC 1677, 2013 (5) Scale 346, (2013) 4 SCC 517 .

75 Suresh & Anor v State of Uttar Pradesh (2001) Cr LJ 1462 (SC) .

76 Rambilas Singh v State of Bihar AIR 1989 SC 1593, (1989) SCJ 280, (1989) SCC 659 (Cr), (1989) 2 JT SC 101, (1989) All

WC 657, (1989) 15 All LR 115 (Summary) ; Pappu Yadav v State of Bihar 2015 (149) AIC 322 (Jhar) .

77 State of Rajasthan v Manoj Kumar 2014 Cr LJ 2420, p 2423, 2424 (SC), (2014) 2 SCC (Cri) 702, (2014) 138 AIC 261 (SC) ; Munshi Ram v Delhi Administration AIR 1968 SC 702, 1968 Cr LJ 806 referred to; Joginder v State of Bihar AIR 1971 SC 1834, (1971) 3 SCC 449 .

78 Bhaktu Gorain v State 2010 Cr LJ 4524, p 4533, 4534 (Cal) (DB) (Common intention proved though overt act not attributed, accused appellants convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC).

79 Girind Singh Yadav v State of UP 2008 Cr LJ 1978, p 1983 (All) (DB) .

80 Chaman v State of Uttarakhand 2009 Cr LJ 978 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 1036, (2008) 5 Scale 385 ; Anil Sharma v State of Jharkhand (2004) 5 SCC 679 ; Harbans Kaur v State of Haryana (2005) 9 SCC 1951 ; Amit Singh Bhikamsingh Thakur v State of Maharashtra (2007) 2 SCC 310 ; Sewa Ram v State of UP 2008 Cr LJ 802, p 805 (SC), 2007 AIR SCW 7797 . See alsoState of Sikkim v Rakesh Rai* 2012 Cr LJ 2737 (Sikk) (DB) .

81 Balwant Singh v State of Punjab 2008 Cr LJ 1648, p 1650 (SC), AIR 2008 SC 1243, 2008 AIR SCW 1253, 2008 (2) Scale 247 .

82 Bengali Mandal v State of Bihar 2010 Cr LJ 1420 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 686, 2010 AIR SCW 877, (2010) 2 SCC 91, 2010 (1) Scale 182 .

83 Jumman v State of Madhya Pradesh 2013 Cr LJ 697, p 701, 702 (Chh .) (DB).

84 Tukaram Ganpat Pandare v State of Maharashtra AIR 1974 SC 514, (1974) Cr LJ 469 (SC) .

85 Ramaswamy Ayyangar & Anor v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1976 SC 2027, (1976) Cr LJ 1562 (SC) .

86 Laxmi Devi v State 2011 Cr LJ 3515, p 3526 (Del) (DB) (Co-accused prevented the parents of the deceased from rescuing their son); Kishore Eknath Nikam v State of Maharashtra (2006) 10 SCC 666, 2006 AIR SCW 5477, 2007 Cr LJ 1007 .

87 Kantiah Ramayya Munipall v State of Bombay AIR 1955 SC 287, p 294 ; Bijay Singh Dangal Singh v State of Madhya Bharat AIR 1956 MB 170 ; Ramchand v State AIR 1956 MB 262 .

88 Kalayan Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1994) 3 Recent CR 49 (MP) .

89 Joginder v State 2010 Cr LJ 1770, p 1787 (Del) (DB) .

90 Satya Prakash v State of MP 2010 Cr LJ 4562, p 4566 (Chh) (DB) .

91 Fulchand alias Fulya v State of Maharashtra 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 177, 2007 (6) AIRBOM R 664 (Bom) (DB) .

92 Lugga Singh v State of Punjab 2008 Cr LJ 90, p 92 (P&H).

93 Raju v State of Chhattisgarh 2014 Cr LJ 4425, p 4430 (SC), (2014) 9 SCC 299 .

94 Pappu Yadav v State of Bihar 2015 (149) AIC 322 (Jhar) (DB).

95 Goudaxppa v State of Karnataka 2013 Cr LJ 1762 (SC), AIR 2013 SC 1677, 2013 (4) SCC 517, 2013 (5) Scale 346 ; see alsoRamesh Singh v State of AP* (2004) 11 SCC 305, AIR 2004 SC 4545 .

96 Kishore Eknath Nikam v State of Maharashtra 2007 Cr LJ 1007, p 1009 (SC), (2006) 10 SCC 666 .

1 Emperor v Nirmal Kanta Roy AIR 1914 Cal 901, 15 Cr LJ 460 .

2 Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghose AIR 1924 Cal 257 (FB), 25 Cr LJ 817 .

3 Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, overruling; Emperor v Nirmala Kanta Roy AIR 1914 Cal 901, and also impliedly overrulingHamam Singh v Emperor* AIR 1919 Lah 256, 20 Cr LJ 635 .

4 Irshadullah v Emperor AIR 1933 All 528, p 533 ; Emperor v Rachpal Singh AIR 1924 Bom 502 .

5 Brathi alias Sukhdeo Singh v State of Punjab (1991) 1 Crimes 74, p 78 (SC), (1991) Cr LJ 402 .

6 Nagarathinam v State 2006 Cr LJ 2120 p 2125 (SC), AIR 2006 SC 1736, 2006 (4) Scale 92, (2006) 9 SCC 57 .

7 Ram Yadav v State of Bihar (1988) 15 Reports 319 (Pat), (1988) PLJR 129 .

8 Suresh & Anor v State of Uttar Pradesh (2001) Cr LJ 1462 (SC) .

9 Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1 .

10 Kantiah Ramayya Munipalli v State of Bombay AIR 1955 SC 287, p 293-94 .

11 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 246 .

12 Prakash v State of Madhya Pradesh 2007 Cr LJ 798, p 802 (SC), (2007) 2 Crimes 74 (SC), 2006 (4) Scale 92, (2006) 9 SCC 57 .

13 Bijaysingh Dangulsingh v State of Madhya Bharat AIR 1956 MB 170 ; Ranchod v State AIR 1956 MB 262 .

14 Jai Krishandas Manohardas Desai v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 889, 892; Hadibandhu Mohalik v State (1986) 61 Cut LT 161, p 175-76 .

15 Kantiah Ramayya Munipalli v State of Bombay AIR 1955 SC 287 .

16 Ibid.

17 Justus v State of Kerala (1987) 2 KLT 330 .

18 Mahadeo Nath Khetri v Emperor AIR 1941 Pat 550, 553; Basharat v Emperor AIR 1934 Lah 813 .

19 Ram Nath Madho Prasad v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1953 SC 420, 424; Public Prosecutor, AP High Court v Pulicherla Govinda Reddy (2004) Cr LJ 238 (AP) (DB) .

20 Ganpathi Sarma v Emperor AIR 1923 Mad 369, p 371 (2).

21 Queen-Empress v Maganlal 14 ILR Bom 115, p 125 (FB) ; Reguia v Farler 8 C&P 106 .

22 State of Uttar Pradesh v Rohan Singh & Anor (1996) Cr LJ 2884 (SC) .

23 Dhruv Lal Chandrakar v State of Chhattisgarh 2012 (119) AIC 479 (MP) (DB).

24 Damodar v State of UP 2005 Cr LJ 330 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 1247, (2005) 1 SCC 543, (2004) 8 Supreme 136 .

25 Gurmail Singh v State of Punjab 2012 Cr LJ 665, p 667 (SC), 2011 (6) Scale 322, (2011) 15 SCC 412 .

26 Virendra Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 952 (SC), 2011 AIR SCW 31, (2010) 8 SCC 407, 2010 (8) Scale 27 .

27 Vithal Laxman Chalawadi v State of Karnataka 2011 Cr LJ 83 (SC), 2010 AIR SCW 6408, AIR 2011 SC 173, (2010) 14 SCC 739 .

28 Swaminanthan v State of Tamil Nadu 2011 Cr LJ 1683, p 1684 (SC), 2011 AIR SCW 1301, 2011 (2) Scale 229, AIR 2011 SC 1592, (2011) 15SCC196.

29 Bhupendra v State of Madhya Pradesh 2008 Cr LJ 2479, p 2481 (MP) (DB) .

30 Lulu alias Ram Pratap v State of UP 2011 Cr LJ (NOC) 117 (All) (DB).

31 Idrish Bhai Daudbhai v State of Gujarat 2005 Cr LJ 1422, p 1426, AIR 2005 SC 733, 2005 (1) Supreme 372 ; Nirmal Singh v State 2011 Cr LJ 2258 (Del) (DB) .

32 Nirmal Singh v State 2011 Cr LJ 2258, p 2265 (Del) (DB) .

33 Harbans Kaur v State of Haryana (2005) Cr LJ 2199 (SC) ; Girija Shankar v State of Uttar Pradesh (2004) Cr LJ 1388 (SC) ; (2004) Cr LJ 1415 (SC) (DB) ; Raju Pandurang Mahale v State of Maharashtra (2004) Cr LJ 1441 (SC) ; Janak Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh (2004) Cr LJ 2533 (SC) ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Deshraj (2004) Cr LJ 1415 (SC) ; Mohd Abdul Ali v State of Tripura 2012 Cr LJ 1944 (Gauh) (DB) .

34 Bhaba Nanda Sarma & Ors v State of Assam AIR 1977 SC 2252, (1977) Cr LJ 1930 (SC) .

35 Dhani Ram v State of UP 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 1196 (All) (DB).

36 Dhian Singh v State of Himachal Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ 1977 (HP) .

37 Dhian Singh v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 265, p 266 .

38 Hardev Singh & Anor v State of Punjab AIR 1975 SC 179, (1975) Cr LJ 243 (SC) .

39 Nemala Pothuraju & Ors v State of Andhra Pradesh AIR 1991 SC 2214, (1991) Cr LJ 3133 (SC) .

40 State of Bihar v Lala Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161, p 169 ; Bhabhataran Mahto v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Pat 706, p 707 ; Rajaram Raghu Patil v State AIR 1958 Bom 460 ; Joginder Singh v State of Himachal Pradesh (1995) Cr LJ 124 (HP) .

41 Surjan Singh & Anor v State of Haryana (1998) 4 Scale 657 (SC), (1998) 3 Crimes 208 (SC) .

42 Jai Krishnadas Manohardas Desai v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 889, p 892 .

43 Ramvilas Singh & Ors v State of Bihar AIR 1989 SC 1593, (1989) Cr LJ 1782 .

44 Md Abdul Ali v State of Tripura 2012 Cr LJ 1944, p 1954 (Gauh) (DB) .

45 Sanat @ Chaku Jena v State of Orissa 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 358 (Ori) .

46 Mohinder Singh v State of Punjab 2007 Cr LJ 2478, p 2487 (P&H) (DB).

47 Dhanna v State of MP (1996) 10 SCC 79, AIR 1996 SC 2478, 1996 AIR SCW 3066 ; Babu v State 2013 Cr LJ 2176, AIR 2013 SC 1769, (2013) 4 SCC 448, 2013 (4) Scale 557 .

48 Rajpal v State of Uttarakhand 2014 Cr LJ (NOC) 509 (Utr) .

49 Re *Kamaraj Goundar*AIR 1960 Mad 125, p 128 .

50 *State of Maharashtra v Kalu Sivram Jagtap & Ors*AIR 1980 SC 879, (1980) Cr LJ 570 (SC) .

51 State of Punjab v Bhola Singh & Anor AIR 1998 SC 1983, (1998) Cr LJ 2836 (SC) .

52 Harjinder Singh v Karnail Singh & Ors (1998) Cr LJ 2556 (SC) .

53 State of Bihar v Lala Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161 p 169; State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, p 33 (FB) ; Hulliah v State AIR 1954 Hyd 54, 55 (FB); Irshadullah Khan v Emperor AIR 1933 All 528 .

54 Mahbub Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, p 120 ; Kamaldin v Emperor AIR 1947 Sind 1 .

55 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 555.

56 Indar Singh v Emperor AIR 1933 Lah 819 .

57 Krishnan v State (2003) Cr LJ 3705 (SC) ; Ramashish Yadav v State of Bihar (2000) Cr LJ 12 (SC) ; Mohinder Singh v State of Punjab (2007) Cr LJ 2478 (P&H) .

58 Mohinder Singh v State of Punjab 2007 Cr LJ 2478, p 2487 (P&H) (DB).

59 Alkoo Ahir v State of Bihar 2010 Cr LJ 3822, p 3823 (SC), 2010 AIR SCW 3950, 2010 (4) Scale 313, (2010) 12 SCC 424 .

60 Dalip Singh v State of Haryana 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 871 (P&H).

61 Shashi Mohan v State of MP 2008 Cr LJ 3863, p 3864 (SC), AIR 2008 SC 2961, 3 (2008) CLT 832, ILR (2009) MP 897, JT 2008 (7) SC 546, 2008 (10) Scale 165, (2008) 8 SCC 145 .

62 Gharbharan v State of Chhattisgarh 2010 Cr LJ 471, p 475 (Chhat) (DB) .

63 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 673 .

64 Nazir v Emperor AIR 1948 All 229, p 234 .

65 Mitter Sen & Ors v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1976 SC 1156, (1976) Cr LJ 857 (SC) ; Rishideo Pande v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1955 SC 331, (1955) Cr LJ 873 (SC) ; Maqsoodan & Ors v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1983 SC 126 .

66 Emperor v Ram Newaz 14 Cr LJ 615 .

67 Kenny, Outlines of CriminalLaw, fifteenth edn, p 162.

68 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 673-74 .

69 State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, p 33 (FB), per Wali Ullah J.

70 Photo v Emperor AIR 1933 Sind 407, p 409 ; State of Bihar v Lal Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161 .

71 Girind Singh Yadav v State of UP 2008 Cr LJ 1978, p 1983 (All) (DB) .

72 Mukunda Murari Lal v Emperor AIR 1934 Cal 10 .

73 Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1, p 4 .

74 Murai v State 2011 Cr LJ 3750 (Del) (DB) .

75 Dev Cyrus Colabawala v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 758, p 761 (Bom) .

76 State of Bihar v Lal Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161, p 171 .

77 Re *Kamaraj*AIR 1960 Mad 125, p 128 ; Bachchulal v State AIR 1957 All 184 .

78 Jaikrishnadas Manohardas Desai v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 889, p 892 ; Mahboob Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118 ; Joginder Singh v State of Himachal Pradesh (1995) Cr LJ 124 (HP) .

79 Santosh v State of Kerala (1991) Cr LJ 570, p 584 (Ker)(DB).

80 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 671 ; Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 244 .

81 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 244 .

82 Vaman Jaidev Raval v State of Goa 2007 Cr LJ (NOC) 431 (Bom) (DB).

83 Namubhai Karsanbhai Rathod v State of Gujarat 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 775 (Guj) .

84 Namubhai Karsanbhai Rathod v State of Gujarat 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 775 (Guj) .

85 Joginder Singh v State of Haryana (1994) Cr LJ 134 (SC) .

86 Mahboob Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, p 120 .

87 Jai Krishen v Thotaram AIR 1953 Hyd 160 ; Fakirchand Nandram v State AIR 1950 MB 76 (FB) ; Kamaldin v Emperor AIR 1947 Sind 41 ; Bishwanath v Emperor AIR 1946 All 153 ; Gajraj Singh v Emperor AIR 1946 Oudh 250 ; Kinaram Das v State AIR 1953 Assam 2 ; Ramchand Tolaram Khatri v State AIR 1956 Bom 287 ; Mohindar Singh v State AIR 1960 Punj 135 ; Hasan Abdulla v State of Gujarat AIR 1962 Guj 214 ; Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216 ; Re *Kamaraj Goundar*AIR 1960 Mad 125 ; State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, p 37 (FB) ; Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668 ; Gheba v Crown AIR 1949 Lah 44 ; Re *Padmaraja*AIR 1951 Mad 746 ; Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1 ; Bijay Singh Dangal Singh v State of Madhya Bharat AIR 1956 MB 170 ; Sitaram Dhaku Charan v State AIR 1958 Bom 439 ; Periathamtri v State (1994) 1 ALT (Cr) 20 (DB) (Mad) .

88 Mahbub Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, p 120-21 ; Santosh v State of Kerala (1991) Cr LJ 570, 584 (DB).

89 Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216, 222 ; Rishideo v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1955 SC 331, p 332 ; Kanvi Nagji Kala v State AIR 1956 Sau 107 ; Alakunta Narsimloo v State of Andhra Pradesh (1994) 1 Andh LT 248 (Cr), (1994) 1 Andh LT 53, (1994) Cr LJ 1721 (AP)(DB).

90 Baijnath Mahto v State of Bihar 2014 Cr LJ (NOC) 180 (Pat) (DB).

91 Chinnam Kameswara Rao v State of AP 2013 Cr LJ 1540, p 1546 (SC), AIR 2013 SC 3602, 2013 (1) Scale 643, (2013) 12 SCC 689 .

92 Ram Nath Madho Prasad v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1953 SC 420, p 424 .

93 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 671 .

94 State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, p 37 (FB), per Sankara Saran J.

95 Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216, p 222 .

96 Om Prakash v State of UP 2009 Cr LJ 1677, p 1682 (All) (DB) .

97 Om Prakash v State of UP 2009 Cr LJ 1677, p 1682 (All) (DB) .

1 Hari Singh v State 2008 Cr LJ 133, p 140 (Utr) (DB) .

2 Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Guj 16, p 19, 1961 Cr LJ 251 .

3 Tilu Ahir v Rex AIR 1949 All 89, p 90 ; Om Prakash v State of UP 2009 Cr LJ 1677 (All) (DB) .

4 Dhulya @ Dhulji v State of MP 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 495 (MP) (DB).

5 Rishideo Pande v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1955 SC 331, p 332 .

6 Balram Singh v State of Punjab 2003 (6) AIC 106 (SC), AIR 2003 SC 2213 ; Raju v State 2015 (149) AIC 598 (Del) (DB).

7 Hasan Abdulla v State of Gujarat AIR 1962 Guj 214, p 217 ; Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Guj 16, p 18 ; Kundan Lal v State of Rajasthan 1983 Raj Cr C 281 (DB) ; Satish Sah v State of Bihar 1995 Cr LJ 213 (Pat) ; Joginder Singh v State of Himachal Pradesh (1995) Cr LJ 124 (HP) .

8 Kanbi Nagji Kala v State AIR 1956 Sau 107, p 109 .

9 Nand Kishore v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 4243, p 4248 (SC), AIR 2011 SC 2775, 2011 (7) Scale 386, 2011 AIR SCW 4350 .

10 Kassim Pillai Asmane Kutty v State AIR 1952 Tr & Coch 565; Jaimangal v Emperor AIR 1936 All 437 .

11 Harijan Behar Badha v State of Gujarat (1987) 2 Guj LR 1164 ; Kundan Lal v State of Rajasthan 1983 Raj Cr C 281 (DB) and Ibrahim Kutty v State of Kerala 1984 Cr LJ 221 (Ker), 1983 Ker LJ 656 .

12 Hari Om v State of Uttar Pradesh (1994) Mad LJ 42 (Cr)(SC); Ramji Sonkar v State of West Bengal (2004) Cr LJ 4398 (Cal) (DB) .

13 Mahboob Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118 .

14 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 671 ; State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, p 37 (FB) .

15 Kripal v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1954 SC 706, p 710 ; Sharif Ahmad v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1957 All 50 ; Bhesu Singh v State AIR 1956 MB 269 ; Amrik Singh v State of Punjab (1972) Cr LJ 465(SC); Khem Karan v State of Uttar Pradesh (1991) Cr LJ 2138, p 2142 (All) ; Santosh v State of Kerala (1991) Cr LJ 570, p 584 (Ker)(DB); Joginder Singh v State of Haryana (1994) Cr LJ 19 (SC) ; Nand Kishore v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 2011 SC 2775, 2011 Cr LJ 4243, 2013 (15) SCC 252, 2014 (1) JT 331, 2013 (9) Scale 363 .

16 Mohanlal v State AIR 1961 Raj 24 .

17 Rajesh Govind Jagesha v State of Maharashtra (2000) Cr LJ 380 (SC) ; Jai Singh v State of Rajasthan 2011 Cr LJ 3628 (Raj) .

18 Jai Singh v State of Rajasthan 2011 Cr LJ 3628, p 3632 (Raj) .

19 Mohinder Singh v State AIR 1960 Punj 135, p 140 ; Kassim Pillai Asmane Kutty v State AIR 1952 Tr & Coch 565, p 568; Re *Nachimuthu Gounder*AIR 1947 Mad 259, p 261 .

20 Dharam Pal & Ors v State of Haryana AIR 1978 SC 1492, (1978) Cr LJ 1538 (SC) .

21 Gani Miah v State of Tripura 2013 Cr LJ 49, p 55 (Gauh) (DB) .

22 Murari v State 2011 Cr LJ 3750, p 3761 (Del) (DB) .

23 Dost Mohammad v Emperor AIR 1935 Pesh 29, p 32 (2), explaining and reconcilingMasti Khan v Emperor* AIR 1935 Pesh 41 ; Mohd Zaman v Emperor AIR 1938 Pesh 18 .

24 Kinaramdas v State AIR 1955 Assam 2, p 5 ; Tadidugi Rammurty v State of Orissa 2011 Cr LJ 2791, p 2794 (Ori) (DB) .

25 Mian Singh Nand Lal v Emperor AIR 1938 Lah 747, p 749 .

26 Tadidngi Rammurty v State of Orissa 2011 Cr LJ 2791, p 2794 (Ori) (DB) .

27 Lal Chand v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 523 ((1)) ; Re *Padmaraja Chetty*AIR 1951 Mad 741 ; Bhramarbar Prusty v State of Orissa (1994) Cr LJ 378 (Ori) .

28 Munney v State of Uttar Pradesh (2002) Cr LJ 1541 (All) (DB) .

29 Mamand v Emperor AIR 1946 PC 45 .

30 Gorey v Rex AIR 1949 All 191 ; Dipu v Emperor AIR 1947 All 408 ; Emperor v Bishwanath Tiwari AIR 1946 All 153 .

31 State of Maharashtra v Chandraprakash Keshavdeo Shinghaniya (1991) Cr LJ 3187, p 3192 (Bom) .

32 Mahboob Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, p 120 .

33 Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Guj 16, p 19 ; Tillu Ahir v Rex AIR 1949 All 89, p 90 ; Liaqat v State of Uttar Pradesh (1994) 3 Crimes 269 (All)(DB); Jakir Hussain v State of Madhya Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ 1289 (Chh) (DB) .

34 Re *Kamaraj*AIR 1960 Mad 125, p 128 .

35 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 244 .

36 Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1, p 3 ; Shangara v State of Punjab (1994) Cr LJ 1098 (SC) .

37 Brijlala Prasad Sinha v State of Bihar AIR 1998 SC 2443, (1998) Cr LJ 3611 (SC) .

38 Asha alias Ashanand & Ors v State of Rajasthan AIR 1997 SC 2828, (1997) Cr LJ 3508 (SC) .

39 Harpal Singh v State of Haryana AIR 1998 SC 1553, (1998) Cr LJ 1563 (SC) .

40 Gita Rani Ghosh v State of West Bengal 2012 Cr LJ 794, p 798 (Cal) (DB) .

41 Mutukdhari Singh v Emperor AIR 1942 Pat 376 .

42 Nanhoo v State of Madhya Pradesh (1994) Cr LR 217(MP).

43 Hari Bijal v Emperor AIR 1915 Bom 247 .

44 Sankata Prasad v Emperor AIR 1935 Oudh 178 .

45 State of Bihar v Lala Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161, p 170 .

46 Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216, 222, relying onBarendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor* AIR 1925 PC 1, p 5-6 ; Mahboob Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118 .

47 Mahboob Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, 121 ; Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216, 222 ; Kinaram Das v State AIR 1955 Assam 2, 5 ; Dewji Moti Bhil v State AIR 1955 MB 26, 27 ; Ramsakal Koiri v State AIR 1955 Pat 268, 270 ; Sahibzada v Crown AIR 1950 Pesh 24 ; Gajraj Singh v Emperor AIR 1946 Oudh 250, 253 ; Megh Singh v State of Rajasthan (1983) 2 Crimes 134, 140 (Raj)(DB) ; Wakil Khan v State of MP 2005 Cr LJ 3410 (MP) (DB) .

48 Gajraj Singh v Emperor AIR 1946 Oudh 250, 253 .

49 Mohan Singh & Anor v State of Punjab AIR 1963 SC 174 .

50 State of Uttar Pradesh v Rohan Singh & Anor 1996 Cr LJ 2884 (SC) .

51 Re *Kamraj Goundar*AIR 1960 Mad 125, 128 ; Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1 .

52 Mohinder Singh v State AIR 1960 Punj 135, p 140 .

53 Tillu Ahir v Rex AIR 1949 All 89, p 90 .

54 Kripal v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1954 SC 706, p 710 ; followed inRamsakal Koiri v State* AIR 1955 Pat 268, p 270 .

55 Emperor v Ebrahim AIR 1931 Rang 321 .

56 Girja Shanker v State of UP AIR 2004 SC 1808, 2004 Cr LJ 1388, (2004) 3 SCC 793 .

57 Haren Pao v State of Assam 2008 Cr LJ 3290, p 3293 (Gauh) (DB) .

58 Sunder Singh v Emperor AIR 1939 Oudh 207, p 209 .

59 Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1, p 4 .

60 Sanlaydo v Emperor AIR 1933 Rang 204, p 206 .

61 Nazir v Emperor AIR 1948 All 229, p 233 .

62 Ibra Akanda v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, per Das J; Re *Kamraj Goundar*AIR 1960 Mad 125, p 128 ; Nga Zun Baw v King-Emperor 7 Cr LJ 205 ; Queen-Empress v Duma Baidya 19 ILR Mad 483, 1 Weir 29 ; Nga E v King-Emperor AIR 1931 Rang 1 (FB), 32 Cr LJ 493; Nga Tha Aye v Emperor AIR 1935 Rang 294, 36 Cr LJ 1380 ; Zahid Khan v Emperor AIR 1939 Oudh 40, 40 Cr LJ 187 ; Sundar Singh v Emperor AIR 1939 Oudh 207 ; Jai Mangal v Emperor AIR 1936 All 437, 37 Cr LJ 864 ; Emperor v Bhola Singh 29 ILR All 282, 5 Cr LJ 13 ; Emperor v Dharam Rai 1887 All WN 236, 237 ; Anirudha Mana v Emperor AIR 1925 Cal 913 ; Faiyaz Kahn v Rex AIR 1949 All 180, p 184 ; Raja Ram v Emperor AIR 1938 Oudh 256, p 258 ; Ram Nath v Manna AIR 1955 All 250, p 251 ; Emperor v Mujjaffar Sheikh AIR 1941 Cal 106, p 109 ; Re *Basappa*AIR 1951 Mys 1 .

63 Barendra Kumar Ghose 52 ILR Cal 197, AIR 1925 PC 1, 26 Cr LJ 431 .

64 Ibra Akanda v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, p 358, per Khundkar J.

65 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 671 .

66 Bharwad Mepa Dana v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 289, p 296 .

67 Mohanlal v State AIR 1961 Raj 24, p 28 ; Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668 ; State v Saidu Khan AIR 1961 All 21 (FB); Nazir v Emperor AIR 1948 All 229 .

68 Halliah v State AIR 1945 Hyd 54, p 55 (FB) ; State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21 (FB); Madhuwa Pyare Lal v State of Vindhya Pradesh AIR 1954 VP 36 .

69 Nitin Ramprasad Bachicha (Dhobi) v State of Gujarat 2009 Cr LJ 2330, p 2341 (Guj) (DB) .

70 Benny v State of Kerala (1991) 2 Crimes 576, p 581 (Ker), 1991 Cr LJ 2411 ; Afrahim Sheikh v State of West Bengal AIR 1964 SC 1263 .

71 Aniruddha Mana v Emperor AIR 1925 Cal 913, p 914 ; Sher Ali v Emperor AIR 1942 Pesh 51 ; Ramnath v Emperor AIR 1943 All 271 ; Sahibzada v Crown AIR 1950 Pesh 24 .

72 Adam Ali v King-Emperor AIR 1927 Cal 324, p 325 ; Panchaiah v State of Karnataka (1994) Cr LJ 1213 (SC), AIR 1994 SC 963 .

73 Ibra Akanda v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339 .

74 Ibid, p 345.

75 Ibid, p 355.

76 Ibid, p 363.

77 State v Saidu Khan AIR 1951 All 21, p 33-34 (FB) ; Ankeri v State of Rajasthan (1994) Cr LJ 947 (Raj) .

78 Muklene Rahman v King AIR 1950 Assam 98 ; Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668 ; Rajindra Kumar v State AIR 1960 Punj 310 ; Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Guj 16 ; Rex v Sadlal AIR 1950 All 418 ; Santosh v State of Kerala 1991 Cr LJ 570, p 584 (Ker)(DB).

79 State of Punjab v Mann Singh & Anor AIR 1983 SC 172, (1983) Cr LJ 229 .

80 Mukati Prasad Rai v State of Bihar AIR 2005 SC 1271, 2005 Cr LJ 681, 2005 SCC (Cri) 69, (2004) 7 Supreme 695 .

81 Harbans Kaur v State of Haryana (2005) Cr LJ 2199 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 2989, (2005) 9 SCC 195 ; Jakir Hussain v State of Madhya Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ 1289 (Chh) (DB) .

82 Prakash v State of Madhya Pradesh (2007) Cr LJ 798 (SC) .

83 Sewa Ram v State of UP 2008 Cr LJ 802, p 805 (SC), 2007 AIR SCW 7797, AIR 2008 SC 682, 2007 (14) Scale 145, (2007) 15 SCC 75 .

84 Shariff Ahmad v State AIR 1957 All 50, p 53 ; Alakunta Narsimloo v State of Andhra Pradesh (1994) 1 Andh LT (Cr) 248, (1994) 1 Andh LT 53, (1994) Cr LJ 1721 (AP)(DB).

85 Krishna Pillai Vasu Pillai v State AIR 1956 Tr & Coch 230, p 232.

86 Santosh v State of Kerala (1991) Cr LJ 570, p 584 (Ker)(DB); Mathai v State of Kerala (1983) 1 Crimes 428, (1982) Ker LT 692 .

87 Bijoy Kumar Mohapatra v State (1982) Cr LJ 2162 (Ori)(DB).

88 Goudappa v State of Karnataka 2013 Cr LJ 1762, p 1766 (SC), AIR 2013 SC 1677, 2013 (4) SCC 517, 2013 (5) Scale 517 .

89 Khem Karan v State of Uttar Pradesh (1991) Cr LJ 2138, p 2142-43 (All)(DB) ; Mohar Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh (1995) Cr LJ 649 (All) .

90 Bishwanath Singh v State of Bihar (1987) BLJ 695 ; Satish Sah v State of Bihar (1995) Cr LJ 213 (Pat) .

91 Mal Singh v State of Rajasthan (1984) Raj LW 307, (1984) Cr LJ 299 (Raj) .

92 State of AP v M Sobhan Babu 2011 Cr LJ 2175, p 2177 (SC), 2011 AIR SCW 1914, 2011 (3) Scale 451, (2010) 15 SCC 69 .

93 Ajuram v State of Chhattisgarh 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 408 (Chh) (DB).

94 Mahbub Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, p 120 ; Rishideo v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1955 SC 331 ; Ramchand Takaram Khatri v State AIR 1956 Bom 287 ; Narayan v State AIR 1953 Hyd 161 ; Irshadulla v Emperor AIR 1933 All 528 ; Kriaram v State AIR 1955 Assam 2 .

95 Harbans Kaur v State of Haryana 2005 Cr LJ 2199, p 2200, 2201 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 2989, 2005 (2) Scale 457, (2005) 9 SCC 195 .

96 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 672 ; Satrughan Patar v Emperor AIR 1919 Pat 111 ; Krishna Pillai Vasu Pillai v State AIR 1956 Tr & Coch 230.

1 Jogendra Singh v State of Haryana (1994) Cr LJ 19 (SC), AIR 1994 SC 461 .

2 Pal Singh v State of Punjab 2014 Cr LJ 2573 (SC), (2014) 3 SCC (Cri) 411, (2014) 136 AIC 65 (SC) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[S. 34.

Acts done by several persons in furtherance of common intention.--

69. Inference of Common Intention should be a Necessar Inference Deducible

Common intention is a question of fact. It is subjective. But it can be inferred from facts and circumstances,[3] which existed and which are brought on record (Dev Cyrus Colabawala v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 758, p 761 (Bom) (DB) . The inference of common intention within the meaning of s 34 should never be reached unless it is a necessary inference deducible from the circumstances of the case.[4]

> But to say this is no more than to reproduce the ordinary rule about circumstantial evidence, for there is no special rule of evidence for this class of cases. At bottom, it is a question of fact in every case and, however, similar the circumstances, facts in one case cannot be used as a precedent to determine the conclusion on the facts in another. All that is necessary is either to have direct proof of prior concert, or proof of circumstances which necessarily lead to that inference, or, as we prefer to put it in the time-honoured way, 'the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation on any other reasonable hypothesis.[5]

The presence of motive and recovery of blood-stained clothes and dharias from accused persons are wholly insufficient for sustaining charge under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[6] The true rule of law which is to be applied is the rule which requires that guilt is not to be inferred unless that is the only inference which follows from the circumstances of the case and no other innocuous inference can be drawn. If after bearing in mind this rule for the appreciation of circumstantial evidence, on the facts of a particular case, the court can reach the conclusion that the events as they developed indicated a common intention, then, there is no reason why, in law, the court should be deterred from drawing such an inference.[7] The presumption of constructive intention must not be too readily applied, or pushed too far. It is only when a court can, with some judicial certitude, hold that a particular accused must have preconceived or premeditated the result which ensued, or acted in concert with others in order to bring about the result, that s 34 may be applied.[8]222

Common Intention to be inferred from all Circumstances and not Merely from any Individual Act

There is no uniform inflexible rule for applying the principle of common intention. The inference therefore must be drawn from the totality of the facts and circumstances of each case. It is difficult to find out two similar cases.[9] For common intention, there could rarely be direct evidence. The ultimate decision, at any rate, would invariably depend upon the inferences deducible from the circumstances of each case. The common intention or the intention of the individual concern in furtherance of common intention could be proved either from direct evidence or by inference from the acts or attending circumstances of the case and conduct of the parties.[10]The common intention should be inferred from the whole conduct of all the persons concerned and not merely from any individual act. As a criminal act is not to be assumed to be in furtherance of the common intention, the common intention is not to be inferred exclusively from the criminal act done. The criminal act done is certainly one of the factors to be taken into consideration, but it should not be taken to be the sole factor.[11]

No premeditation or previous meeting of minds is necessary for the applicability of s 34, IPC . The existence of common intention can be inferred from the attending circumstances of the case and the conduct of the parties. No direct evidence of common intention is necessary.[12] It is not possible to have direct evidence of common intention. It has to be inferred from the facts and circumstances of each case.[13]

The 'common intention' ought to be determined from such known facts and circumstances which existed before the commencement of the criminal act, as the criminal act itself is committed in furtherance of that common intention.[14]In order to invoke s 34 against the accused, prior concert or a pre-arranged plan has to be established. And though common intention has to be inferred from his act, or conduct and other relevant circumstances, it is not necessary that any overt act must have been done by any particular accused. It is enough if the criminal act has been done by one of the accused in furtherance of common intention.[15] All the relevant circumstances of the case are to be taken into consideration.[16]

The inference aforesaid may be drawn from the conduct of the assailants or their participation in the commission of the crime, and from circumstances such as the character of the attack, the nature of the injuries inflicted, and the nature of the weapons employed.[17]223

Accused A2 and A3 held the hands of the deceased, disabled the deceased, then accused A1 assaulted the deceased, held all the accused A1, A2 and A3 shared common intention, thus, all were convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[18]

> Community of purpose may be proved by independent facts, but it need not be. If the other defendant is shown to be committing other acts, tending to the same end, then though primarily each set of acts is attributable to the person whose acts they are, and to him alone, there may be such a concurrence of time, character, direction and result as naturally to lead to the inference that these separate acts were the outcome of pre-concert, or some mutual contemporaneous engagement, or that they were themselves the manifestations of mutual consent to carry out a common purpose, thus forming as well as evidencing a combination to effect the one object towards which the separate acts are found to converge.[19]

70. Random Acts

Once accused hitting the deceased with a bottle on his head which did not cause even a visible injury and the other accused throwing a burning kerosene lamp from a distance cannot be said to be acts done in furtherance of a common intention to cause the death of the deceased. These are random acts done without meeting of minds. They can only be held guilty for the individual overt acts.[20]

71. Inference from Conduct

Section 34, IPC implies an element of participation of action on the part of the accused person. Though the acts may be different and there may be variations in their character but they must have the element of common intention. This common intention is to be gathered from the acts and conduct of the accused persons preceding, attending and succeeding the occurrence.[21] Prior concert and arrangement may, and indeed often is, determined from subsequent conduct as, e.g., by a systematic planned campaign unfolding itself during the course of the action, which could only be referable to prior concert and pre-arrangement or a running away together in a body, or a meeting together subsequently.[22] Thus, there may be circumstances where incidents subsequent to the act may also have to be considered in arriving at a conclusion as to whether or not there was a common intention if the subsequent act is so proximate in point of time that the act and the incident may be co-related.[23]

Co-accused B was riding the motorcycle, and had gone with the accused R to commit the murder of the deceased. Main accused R fired the shot which hit the head of the deceased causing death. Co-accused kept the motorcycle running, facilitating the escape from the spot. The behavior and active role of the co-accused B depicted his knowledge as well as common intention of the two accused to commit the crime.224 Held, common intention being proved, s 34, IPC was attracted in the case. The co-accused was convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[24]

The main accused, the co-accused and the deceased were travelling in a car when the main accused assaulted the deceased in the car, and the co-accused was present in the car throughout the journey. Held that the conduct of the co-accused amply demonstrated that he shared common intention with the main accused. Co-accused was convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[25]

Where five men assault at one and the same time, each of them seeing that the other four are assaulting. The assault may be regarded as a common one, though the impulse to assault may have arisen independently.[26]

The complainant and his father (deceased) were returning home from the police station at 9 PM. The accused persons appeared on the way, being armed with lathi, sword and iron rod, and assaulted the deceased, gave continuous beating, caused serious injuries, including fractures, resulting in death. The injuries sustained by the deceased were caused by the accused persons in pursuit of their common intention to cause the death of the deceased. The accused appellants were convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[27]

Common intention has to be judged by the part played by all the accused, nature of injuries inflicted and the surrounding circumstances.[28] As the appellant R was not carrying any deadly weapon with him, the two other co-accused who accompanied him could not be said to have shared common intention with R to attempt to commit murder. Only R had hit the injured on the head with a hard substance, and the injuries were sufficient in the ordinary course to cause the death, but injured was saved on account of timely treatment, so R was convicted under s 307, IPC, while the two other co-accused were convicted under s 323, IPC read with s 34, IPC .[29] Appellant no. 2 had assaulted with a sharp cutting weapon, and the injury caused was sufficient to cause the death of the victim. As regards appellant no. 1, the prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that he had a common intention to inflict the said fatal injury on the person of the injured. Also, the informant having turned hostile in the Court, it was difficult to say that the appellant no. 1 had any common intention to commit murder of the injured. Appellant no. 1 was given the benefit of doubt and acquitted of offences under ss 326, 307, IPC read with s 34, IPC .[30]

Conduct of Accused in Running or Advancing towards Victim shows Common Intention

In Mamand v Emperor ,[31] there was evidence of enmity on the part of the accused who only joined in the attack, but had no hand in the killing, and none on the part of the two who did the actual murder. There was evidence that all three lived together and that one was a younger brother and the other a tenant of the appellant in question. There was evidence that they all ran away 'together'. Their Lordships of the Privy225 Council held that the evidence justified the inference that the murder was committed in furtherance of the common intention of all the accused. In one case, there was some distance between the accused and the deceased. The accused, who were three brothers and were armed with sticks, covered the distance and attacked the deceased. In the circumstances, it was held that the when each brother advanced, for making an assault on the deceased, he knew what the intention of the other brothers was and shared that intention.[32]

Where on being attacked with lathis by the accused the complainant ran away raising an alarm, but the accused pursued him and persisted in assaulting him and those who came to his help, the inference is clear that the second attack was the result of a previous concert.[33] The accused appellant though herself did not assault the deceased, the conduct of the appellant was such that s 34 was attracted in the case, and appellant was convicted for principal offences under ss 302 / 201 / 379, IPC and s 34, IPC .[34]

Prosecution evidence revealed that the accused appellants firstly assaulted the deceased in his house, thereafter, they dragged the deceased on the lane and again assaulted him by axe and stick and caused repeated injuries on head. Held, accused appellants shared common intention to cause the death of the deceased. They were convicted under ss 302 / 34 and ss 323 / 34, IPC .[35]

Appellants accused trespassed into the courtyard of the deceased, being armed with bombs they hurled bombs causing death of the deceased, and left the spot in a body such that common intention to commit the murder of the deceased was inferred.[36]

Where the accused, one of whom had an axe in his hand, chased the deceased and two of them caught hold of the deceased and the other inflicted injuries on the neck and body with the axe, common intention to commit murder can be inferred from their act.[37] Merely because a person runs away from the spot, it cannot be said that he shared common intention, and he was given the benefit of doubt and was acquitted of charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[38]

The commonality of intention to cause death of the deceased was established from the fact that the appellants had all come armed with weapons like lathi, bat and moongri and continued beating the deceased even after he had fallen down on the ground. All the accused were convicted under ss 302 / 325 read with s 34, IPC .[39]

72. Inference from Presence on Spot at the Time of Commission of Offence

It may be that when some persons start with a pre-arranged plan to commit a minor offence, they may in the course of their committing the minor offence come to an226 understanding to commit the major offence as well. Such an understanding may appear from the conduct of the persons sought to be made vicariously liable for the act of the principal culprit or from some other incriminatory evidence but the conduct or other evidence must be such as not to leave any room for doubt in that behalf. A criminal court fastening vicarious liability must satisfy itself as to the prior meeting of the minds of the principal culprit and his companions who are sought to be constructively made liable in respect of every act committed by the former. There is no law which lays down that a person accompanying the principal culprit shares his intention in respect of every act which the latter might eventually commit. The existence or otherwise of the common intention depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. The intention of the principal offender and his companions to deal with any person who might intervene to stop the quarrel must be apparent from the conduct of the persons accompanying the principal culprit or some other clear and cogent incriminating piece of evidence. In the absence of such material, the companion or companions cannot justifiably be held guilty for every offence committed by the principal offender. The common intention to commit an offence graver than the one originally designed may develop during the execution of the original plan, e.g., during the progress of an attack on the person who is intended to be beaten but the evidence in that behalf should be clear and cogent, for suspicion, however strong, cannot take the place of proof which is essential to bring home the offence to the accused.[40]

Out of eight accused persons, four accused persons A5 to A8 at 9.30 p.m. were found near the house of the complainant, they shared common intention, thus, they were convicted with the aid of s 34, IPC .[41]

The deceased who had come to the field of the accused unexpectedly was attacked by accused by gandasa. The accused were not waiting for him to come or had come to assault him with any common intention. Held, the accused did not have common intention to cause the death of the deceased. The accused who gave fatal blow was convicted under s 302, IPC, others were convicted under s 323, IPC .[42]

73. Purpose of Presence Determines the Intention

A person present on the scene might or might not be guilty by the application of this section. If he is present on the scene for the purpose of participating in the offence, he would certainly be guilty as a participator in the offence. On the other hand, if he is present there merely as a spectator, he is not guilty at all.[43] Even if it is proved that all the accused were seen at the spot at the time of murder, this fact by itself cannot prove a common intention to commit the murder. It can well be that all the accused were standing together and one of them suddenly seeing the deceased fired at him. If this possibility is not eliminated by some evidence on the record and it is not known who fired the fatal shot none of the accused can be convicted under s 302 and this section can have no application.[44] When a murder takes place, and when there are more than one accused, it is not necessary for the prosecution to lead evidence as to which accused has dealt which blow on what part of the body of the deceased. Any227 inquiry into the question as to who among the accused has dealt the fatal blow is clearly not warranted.[45]

The mere presence of a person at the time of the commission of an offence by his confederates is not in itself sufficient to bring his case within the purview of s 34 of the IPC, unless the community of design is proved against him.[46]A mere presence without proof of any act or omission done to facilitate the offence or at least without proof of the existence of a common intention will not be sufficient to support a conviction.[47] The physical presence must be 'coupled' with actual participation which, of course, may be of a passive character such as standing by a door, provided that is done with the intention of assisting in furtherance of the common intention and there is a readiness to play his part in the pre-arranged plan when the time comes for him to act.[48]Although a man is present when a felony is committed, if he takes no part in it and does not act in concert with those who commit it, he will not be a principal merely because he did not endeavour to prevent it or to apprehend the felon. But if several persons go out together for the purpose of apprehending a man and to bring him to the thana on a charge of theft, and some of the party in the presence of the others beat and ill-treat the man in a cruel and violent manner, and the others stand by and look on without endeavouring to dissuade them from their cruel violent conduct, it might properly be inferred that they were all assenting parties and acting in concert and that the beating was in furtherance of a common intention.[49]

To constitute common intention, it is necessary that the intention of each of the accused is known to the others and is shared by them. It is true that in crimes as in other cases, 'they also serve who stand and wait', but then what is necessary for application of the principle of joint liability, embodied in s 34, is that the accused, by his presence and behaviour, has served or sub-served that common cause in some way or the other. Where the overt act or the rule ascribed to one of the accused persons is disbelieved by the sessions judge, his conviction, with the aid of s 34 of the IPC, only because he was present at the scene of offence, is wrong as there is nothing from which any inference of meeting of minds can be deduced.[50]

The co-accused S along with main accused R had gone to commit the murder of the deceased. He was a pillion rider. He was not attributed any role by the eye-witness. During investigation of the case, the prosecution tried to portray that he had also fired a shot from his pistol but it had missed. The eye-witnesses did not depose that S co-accused was armed with any weapon. Co-accused S was thus acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[51]

Where the accused, who was in the company of others who had fired shots, did not try to run away or even try to prevent his companions from doing what they did, but he was seen putting his hand on his waist belt where a dagger lay to wound those228 who were surrounding him, it was held that he was also guilty of the murder like his companions.[52]

Sudden Attack--Common Intention

Accused no. 2 inflicted lathi blow on the knees of victim as a result of which the victim fell down. Thereafter the accused no. 1 attacked the victim with a gandasa causing serious injuries on the head and arms. Also it took place suddenly in a public place. Held, it was highly doubtful if the accused no. 2 shared a common intention with accused no. 1 to commit the murder of the victim, thus, the conviction of the accused no. 2 under s 307 read with s 34, IPC was set aside.[53]

74. Interference of Common Intention from Nature of the Attack

If the assault is not sudden, common intention may be easily presumed, unless there is something to show that there was no opportunity for the accused to have a prior concert.[54] A1 and A2 hit on the head of the deceased almost simultaneously with such force as to fracture his skull. They are certainly guilty of the offence under s 302 read with s 34, IPC . A2 was dead. A1 was convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[55]

The manner in which all the accused assaulted the deceased even after he fell to the ground and the act of continuously inflicting blows on the body of the deceased, clearly showed that they had a pre-determined mind to kill the deceased at any cost, which they did. Accused were liable to be convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[56]

There was evidence that all the accused persons had come with weapons, assaulted the deceased and taken him inside the house where he was again assaulted by the accused persons and after sometime, his body was dragged by the accused persons, including the appellant and thrown near the hand pump. In such case(s), s 34, IPC would be attracted, and it is of no consequence if all or any of them had not assaulted or inflicted injuries on the victim.[57]

Inference of Common Intention from Number of Injuries Inflicted

A number of injuries suffered by the deceased clearly point out that it could not have been inflicted by one person. Common intention on the part of the accused persons to commit the murder of the victim can, therefore, be inferred.[58] When several persons inflict numberless injuries, the common intention may be safely presumed.[59] It is not material, to bring the case under s 34, IPC, as to who, in fact, inflicted the fatal blow.[60]229

Inference from Nature of Weapons Used

A common intention to use a loaded revolver for the purpose of killing, if necessary, has to be presumed against bandits, and highway robbers, who are armed with these weapons, and if a man is killed, the robbers so armed and acting in concert are all clearly guilty of murder under s 302, read with s 34, though each may not have actually fired a fatal shot.[61] As observed by Richardson J, in Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghose .[62]

> Without mincing matters, the ascription of a common intention to add murder, if necessary to robbery, is not easily avoided, where all, or some to the knowledge of the rest, of those engaged in the enterprise, are proved to have carried firearms, and firearms have been used with fatal effect.[63]

The two accused armed with country made pistols accompanied the other accused armed with SBBL gun and DBBL gun respectively, went to the place of occurrence, way-laid the deceased party and attacked the deceased. It cannot be said that they accompanied the other accused out of idle curiosity. Common intention was inferred, thus, conviction under s 302 read with s 34, IPC was held justified.[64]

However, where evidence proved that the accused inflicted a solitary blow with a sharp edged weapon on the neck of the victim but there was no evidence as to the presence and involvement of other accused persons nor was there any evidence to show by whom further blows were given to the deceased, it was held that the accused cannot be said to have killed the deceased in furtherance of common intention of himself and some others and considering the nature of weapon and part of the body on which the blow was given, the conviction of the accused was altered from s 302 read with s 34 to one under s 326, IPC .[65]

Co-accused Holding the Deceased, Facilitating Assault by Main Accused-Co-accused Convicted

Evidence of the eye-witnesses that the co-accused were holding the deceased by hand, exhorted the accused to bring gun and shoot at the deceased was found reliable. Co-accused convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[66]

Stone Throwing Cases

In case(s) where the role of the accused is restricted to throwing a stone toward the deceased, and the accused harbours no intention to kill, s 34, IPC would not be attracted. Accused cannot be convicted under s 302, IPC read with s 34, IPC .[67]230

75. Applicability to Cases of Thefts--Presumption from Possession of Stolen Property

When a person is found in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft, the court may presume that such person is either the thief or the receiver of stolen goods.[68] In some cases it is suggested that the presumption is not confined to charges of theft, but extends to all charges however penal, not excluding even murder.[69] But in Nga Thein Pe v King ,[70] Roberts CJ, (with whom Dankely J agreed) observed:

> I desire, with respect, but with emphasis, to dissent from this expression of the law. The highest presumption which can be drawn from possession of stolen property, by itself, and in the absence of any other evidence, is presence at the scene of the theft. Where it is shown that only one person is present at the scene of the theft and it is clear that the crime has been committed, it may well be that the logical conclusion to be drawn from that is that the possessor of the stolen property is the person who committed the crime; but, in a case in which there are several persons involved and the question of common intention arises, great care must be taken not to assume that a person merely found in possession of stolen property should have attributed to him, for this reason alone, a common intention respecting the guilt of murder.

But if a stolen article, almost at the very moment when it is stolen, is handed over by the thief to a companion who was with him at the time of the commission of the offence, the proper inference to be drawn from this circumstance is that the second person was in concert with him and not that he merely received the stolen property.[71]

76. Common Intention--A Question of Fact

Intention is a question of fact, which is to be gathered from the acts of the parties.[72] Common intention is a question of fact, it is subjective, but it can be inferred from facts and circumstances.[73] The existence or otherwise of the common intention depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case.[74] The question whether or not a number of persons who joined in the commission of an offence had a common intention is one of fact not of law. Although, as laid down by the judicial committee in Mahbub Shah v King-Emperor ,[75] there is distinction between 'same' or 'similar' and common intention, the difference does not relate to a point of law.[76] After all, the existence of common intention said to have been shared by the accused persons is, on ultimate analysis, a question of fact.[77] Whether or not an act is in furtherance of the common intention depends upon the common intention and the nature of the act. It is, therefore, an incident of fact and not of law.[78] Refer to the undermentioned cases.[79]231

77. In-laws of Deceased Acquitted

There was no evidence of common intention and demand of money by the father-in-law and mother-in-law of the deceased. They were entitled to benefit of doubt and acquittal, charge under s 34, IPC was not established.[80]

78. Co-accused acquitted

Only the appellant accused armed with gun, fired a shot at the deceased, the common intention on the part of the co-accused who were not armed, was not proved, thus, the other co-accused were acquitted for offence under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[81]

[IV] LIABILITY UNDER THE SECTION

79. 'Each of Such Persons is Liable for that Act'

Section 34 of the IPC deals with the doing of separate acts, similar or diverse, by several persons; if all are done in furtherance of a common intention, each one of them will be liable for the result of them all, as if he had done them himself, for the words 'that act' and 'the act' in the latter part of the section must include the whole action covered by 'a criminal act' in the first part, as they refer to it.[82]In other words, 'a criminal act' means that unity of criminal behaviour, which results in something, for which an individual would be punishable, if it were all done by him alone, i.e., in a criminal offence.[83] This means that whatever acts are done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all constituted as a whole the particular criminal act for which each person will be liable. All such acts which were either contemplated or were to be done ordinarily in furtherance of that common intention will be included in the criminal act.[84] If the conditions mentioned in the section are fulfilled, then each of the culprits will be responsible for the whole criminal act done by all of them.[85] When a number of persons are engaged in the commission of something criminal, and are acting in furtherance of a common intention, each one of them is of course punishable for what he has done. But his liability does not end there, for he is liable not only for his own acts, but also for those which he thereby facilitates, provided of course they are done in pursuance of the common intention.[86]

All the appellants will be constructively liable under s 302 read with s 34, IPC for the commission of the crime, though the fatal injury was inflicted by A1 only, as the other appellants participated in giving beatings to the deceased which caused injuries on other parts of his body.[87]232

80. Extent of Liability

If the conditions mentioned in s 34 of the IPC are fulfilled, each one of the culprits is responsible for the whole criminal act done by all of them. If A and B do a criminal act in furtherance of their common intention, each of them is guilty of that offence of which he would have been guilty if he alone had done the whole criminal act. The law makes no distinction between them or between the parts played by them in doing the criminal act; each is guilty of the same offence. If s 34 applies, it is impossible to convict the conspirators of different offences.[88]Even if a confederate did not inflict any blow on the deceased, yet if he shared in the common intention to kill him and actually participated in the criminal act by being present on the spot armed with his lathi, in the eye of law he is as much guilty of the whole criminal act as is the person who actually dealt the fatal blow on the deceased.[89]

81. Lesser Sentence in Certain Cases

If the common intention was only to beat the deceased with weapons, which were likely to produce grievous injuries, and one of the confederates stabbed him to death, he alone will be guilty of murder under s 302 and the others would be liable only for the offence under s 326 .[90]The liability for a criminal act done by several persons in furtherance of a common intention is allotted to each of such persons as if he alone and unaided, had done that act. In such circumstances each of such persons is guilty of the one offence, and it is not possible to so grade this offence as to hold, say, in the case of a murderous assault, committed in furtherance of a common intention, that some are guilty of murder and others only of causing grievous hurt.[91] Where the common intention was to kill the deceased, and it is not known which of the two assailants was responsible for the fatal injuries, both of them are equally liable and no distinction is to be made in awarding punishment to them.[92] But in Dalip Singh v State of Punjab ,[93] the Supreme Court has laid down that where it is evident that some alone among the appellants might have inflicted fatal injuries, and it is impossible to ascertain who had done so, it will be a sound exercise of judicial discretion to award lesser sentence, in a case in which each is convicted for murder under s 302 read with s 34 .[94] A distinction in awarding sentences was made in the undermentioned case.[95] In a Lahore case Coldstream J, was of the opinion that 'the degree of constructive guilt' of the appellants would be sufficiently punished by a much lighter sentence than had been inflicted.[96]233

82. Necessity of Mentioning Section 34 in Charge--Effect of Omission

Section 34 does not create an offence. It simply lays down a principle of criminal liability. Omission to mention s 34 in the charge, be it of a substantive offence or a substantive offence read with s 149, is no bar to the recording of a conviction for that offence read with s 34, if the facts alleged and proved justify the application of that section against the accused.[1] It is, therefore, open to the court to take recourse to s 34 of the IPC, even if the said section was not specifically mentioned in the charge and instead s 149, IPC, has been included. A finding that the assailant concerned had a common intention with the other accused is of course, necessary for resorting to such a cause.[2] Therefore, an accused charged under ss 302 / 149, IPC, can be convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[3] Where charge under ss 302 / 149, IPC has been framed against the accused, if evidence shows common intention, the accused can be convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC if no prejudice is shown to the accused. It would be immaterial if charge under s 34, IPC has not been framed against the accused.[4] It does not, however, mean that the magistrate and judges should not indicate, in the charge, that s 34 would be used against the accused.[5] There is a grave lapse on the part of the trial court in not invoking s 34, IPC for holding joint trial. The failure to do so would become fatal to the prosecution case. The absence of s 34, IPC, in the charge could enable each of the accused to disclaim possession throwing blame on the others and thus ultimately making the case of prosecution vulnerable at trial. This type of lapse has become a routine order in umpteen number of criminal cases. It is necessary that the trial Judges should always bear in mind that unless the provisions of law relating to common intention, common knowledge, conspiracy and common object are invoked in the charge, it is not permissible to hold joint trial of two or more accused be it for the offences under IPC or under any special penal enactments.[6]

Where there is clear evidence that the accused persons by use of deadly weapons inflicted as many as 16 injuries on the vital parts of the body of the deceased, the234 accused persons can be convicted under s 302, IPC even in the absence of a charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[7]

Chandrasekhar Aiyar J, observed in Willie (William) Slaney v State of Madhya Pradesh :[8]

> Sections 34, 114 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code provide for criminal liability viewed from different angles as regards actual participants, accessories and men actuated by a common object or a common intention; 'and the charge is a rolled up one involving the direct liability and the constructive liability' without specifying who are directly liable and who are sought to be made constructively liable. In such a situation, the absence of a charge under one or other of the various heads of criminal liability for the offence cannot be said to be fatal by itself, and before a conviction for the substantive offence, without a charge, can be set aside, prejudice will have to be made out. In most of the cases of this kind, evidence is normally given from the outset as to who was primarily responsible for the act which brought about the offence and such evidence is of course relevant.

Where the Court finds that the strength of the assembly was insufficient to constitute it into 'unlawful assembly', but the remaining persons who participated in the crime had shared common intention with the main perpetrators of the crime, the Court can take the aid of s 34 of the IPC even if the said section was not specifically mentioned in the charge.[9]

A person can be convicted of an offence read with s 34 or s 149, if the facts of the case justify it and if the accused has not been misled in his defence, and if there has been no failure of justice, irrespective of the fact that in the charge framed against him, s 34 or s 149 is not specifically mentioned.[10]

Where the charge under s 34 was not framed, but the facts showed that the two accused shared common intention, both the accused were present on the spot where the deceased was assaulted, both of them left the spot together, conviction of the two accused under ss 302 / 34, IPC was held proper.[11]

83. Omission to Mention Section 34 in Charge cannot affect the Case unless Prejudice is shown

The omission to frame a charge is a grave defect and should be vigilantly guarded against. In some cases, it may be so serious that by itself it would vitiate a trial and render it illegal, prejudice to the accused being taken for granted. The provisions of s 464, Cr PC would apply to cases of inadvertence to frame a charge induced by the belief that the matter on record is sufficient to warrant the conviction for a particular offence without express specification, and where the facts proved by the prosecution constitute a separate and distinct offence, but closely relevant to and springing out of the same set of facts connected with the one charged.[12] As was laid down by the235 Privy Council in Begu v Emperor ,[13] and also by the Supreme Court in Lachhman Singh v State ,[14] 'a man may be convicted of an offence, although there has been no charge in respect of it if the evidence is such as to establish a charge that might have been made'.[15] Omission to mention s 34 in the charge cannot affect the case unless prejudice is shown to have resulted in consequence thereof.[16] Only when the accused persons plead and satisfactorily demonstrate that prejudice had indeed resulted from the omission of a charge under s 34 of the IPC that any such omission may assume importance.[17] The object of the charge is to warn the accused of the case he is to answer. It cannot be treated as if it was a part of a ceremonial. Imperfection in the charge is, therefore, curable provided no prejudice has been shown to have resulted because of it.[18] It is true that in certain circumstances a conviction for liability under s 34, can be entered even though the charge mentions only s 149, IPC . But there can be no doubt that the proper procedure is to give the accused person notice of the precise ground on which liability is cast upon him.[19]

Where there is neither any proof of conspiracy between the accused (father and son) or pre-meditation to kill the deceased, nor is there any other evidence of common intention, and the accused, who are charged under s 302, have not been given any notice either by framing a charge under s 34, or putting the necessary question in their examination under s 313, CrPC that this was the case of the prosecution which they had to meet, the accused cannot be made liable on the ground of any vicarious liability. Each of the accused can be convicted and punished for what is actually done by him.[20]

84. Belated Plea of Juvenile after Framing of Charge

If no plea is taken that the accused were juvenile at the time of framing of charge under s 302 read with s 34 of IPC, such plea cannot be allowed to be raised at the belated stage after 25 years of commission of crime.[21]

85. Charge under Section 34 --Conviction for Substantive Offence Simpliciter

Where an accused is charged with a substantive offence by invoking the aid of s 34 there is no legal bar to his conviction under the substantive offence simpliciter.[22]In law there is little or no distinction between a charge for an offence under a particular section and a charge under that section read with s 34 . By the application of this section the accused is not charged for being responsible for anything done by one of his companions, but for the act done by himself along with some others. In a case where other persons are not proved to have joined in committing the offence, but the236 offence is proved to have been committed by the accused himself, there is no reason why he cannot be convicted for his own acts and for committing the offences himself. No question of prejudice arises, for the accused is convicted for the offence for which he was charged.[23]

86. Appellate or Revisional Court can Apply Section 34

It is a misnomer to say 'acquittal of s 34 ' as the section does not create a substantive offence. An appellate or revisional court can apply s 34 while maintaining a conviction for a substantive offence, even if it was not applied by the lower courts.[24] Even there no charge was framed under s 34 and the lower court convicted the accused under s 302 alone, the appellate court can convict them under s 302 read with s 34 .[25] Mention of section in the judgment is not a requirement of law to convict a person. If the ingredients of the offence are present, conviction can be made.[26]

87. Substitution of Charge under Section 34 for Charge under Section 149 --Permissibility

Though there is a substantial difference between ss 34 and 149, but as observed by Lord Summer in Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor ,[27] they also to some extent overlap and it is a question to be determined on the facts of each case whether the charge under s 149 overlaps the ground covered by s 34 . If the common object which is the subject-matter of the charge under s 149 does not necessarily involve a common intention, the substitution of s 34 for s 149 might result in prejudice to the accused and ought not, therefore, to be permitted.[28] But if the facts to be proved and the evidence to be adduced with reference to the charge under s 149 would be the same if the charge were under s 34, failure to charge the accused under s 34 could not result in any prejudice, and in such cases the substitution of s 34 for s 149 will be a formal matter.[29] Although there is difference in 'common object' and 'common intention', they both deal 'with combination of persons who become punishable as sharers in an offence', and a charge under s 149 is no impediment to a conviction by the application s 34 if the evidence discloses the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention of all.[30] In Lachman Singh v State ,[31] the substitution of s 34 or s 149 was upheld on the ground that the facts were such 'that the accused could have been charged alternatively either under s 302 read with s 149, or under s 302 read with s 34 '. The court cannot enter a conviction for an offence237 read with either section unless it finds that the elements justifying its application have been made out on the evidence. In such cases the court must record a finding as to the common intention of the participants, and as in the case of the common object of an unlawful assembly, it cannot be left for conjecture on inference from other facts set out in the judgment.[32] A conviction made with the aid of s 149 may be maintained with the aid of s 34 even in the alternative.[33]

88. Substitution of the Charge under Section 149 for Charge under Section 34 --Divergent Views

There is no unanimity on this point and some High Courts have expressed divergent opinions despite that opinion expressed by the Supreme Court in Willie (William) Slavey v State of Madhya Pradesh .[34] The Kerala High Court in Benny v State of Kerala ,[35] has held that when unlawful assembly and common object were not alleged, but s 34 alone was invoked, conviction with the aid of s 149 may be illegal. Membership of an unlawful assembly itself is a substantive offence, for which there must be a charge and in order to fix constructive liability under s 149, the act must be proved to be in prosecution of the common object of the assembly or such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. In the absence of prejudice, there is no legal bar to the recording of conviction under s 302 read with s 149 when the accused were charged under s 302 read with s 34 . Where the charge for rioting with deadly weapons, resulting in brutal murders, against the several accused clearly stated that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to commit murder and all the accused were also charged under s 302 read with s 34 in respect of the murders on the footing that they were committed in furtherance of the common intention of all the accused, and the evidence did not establish which of the accused had actually participated in the attack on the deceased persons, it was held that the accused whose participation in the rioting had been proved beyond doubt should be convicted under s 302 read with s 149 for the murders.[36]

89. Conviction under Section 302 Read with Section 34 can be altered to one under Section 326 read with Section 149

In the case of Tilkeshwar Singh v State of Bihar ,[37] the Patna High Court had, in appeal, altered the conviction of the accused under s 302 read with s 34, to one under s 326 read with s 149 and it was contended that the High Court had no power to substitute s 149 for s 34 . The Supreme Court held that the High Court had the power to do so.

90. Conviction under Section 304 / 34 can be altered under Section 326 / 34

Where the High Court was not justified in convicting the accused persons for offence punishable under s 304 read with 34, IPC, while the appropriate conviction would238 have been one under s 326 read with s 34, IPC . The Supreme Court modified the conviction and sentence recorded by the High Court and converted it to one under s 326 read with 34, IPC .[38]

91. Effect of Acquittal of some Accused on Conviction of others

When more persons than one are prosecuted and one of them is convicted and others are acquitted, the order of acquittal cannot be set aside unless an appeal has been duly preferred in that behalf against the said order. But there is no bar to the appellate court acting under s 386 of the Cr PC to appreciate the whole evidence in a given case for the purpose of accepting or rejecting the appeal before it. The evidence as a whole may show that the appellant is guilty under s 34 of the IPC having shared a common intention with the other accused who are acquitted and the acquittal of these persons was bad. There is nothing in law to prevent the appellate court from expressing that view and recording that finding. The conviction of the appellant in such a case could be maintained on the basis of that finding. This is the correct legal approach to prevent miscarriage of justice. A wrong and erroneous order of acquittal though irreversible in the absence of an appeal by the state would not operate as a bar in recording constructive liability of the co-accused when concerned action with common intention stands proved.[39]

Cases sometimes arise where persons are charged with being members of an unlawful assembly and other charges are framed against him in respect of offences committed by such assembly. In these cases, if the names of the persons constituting the unlawful assembly are specifically and clearly recited in the charge and it is not suggested that any other persons, known or unknown, also were members of the unlawful assembly, it may be that if one or more persons specifically charged are acquitted, that may introduce a serious infirmity in the charge in respect of the others against whom the prosecution case may be proved. It is in this class of cases, for instance, that the principle laid down in the case of Plumer[40] may have some relevance. If out of the six persons charged under s 149 along with other offences, two persons are acquitted, the remaining four may not be convicted because the essential requirement of an unlawful assembly might be lacking. Where, however, four persons are prosecuted under s 302 read with s 34, failure of the prosecution to prove that one of them took part in the commission of the offence does not introduce any infirmity in its case against the remaining accused at all. Even if he is held not to be present at the scene of the offence, that in law, cannot prevent the prosecution from presenting its case against the remaining accused if the evidence adduced by it is otherwise satisfactory and cogent.[41] Even if one of the co-accused is acquitted, that does not by itself absolve other co-accused of their conjoint liability of the crime. In spite of acquittal of one o-accused it is open to the Court to convict the other accused on the basis of joint liability under s 34, if there is evidence against them of committing the offence in 'furtherance of the common intention'.[42]239

Where more than one accused are charged under s 302 read with s 34 and all except one are acquitted, the remaining one accused cannot be convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC on the basis of constructive liability. A1 and A2 were charged under s 302 read with s 34, IPC, A1 was acquitted for want of evidence, A2 could not be convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC as the element of sharing the common intention by both the accused was the core of the charge.[43]

Where the finding is that the number of persons who constituted the unlawful assembly was more than five, though the identity of only four was established and the killing was done in prosecution of the common object of the entire unlawful assembly, there can be no serious difficulty in applying s 149 to such a case. Whether or not such a finding can be given must depend on the facts of each case and on the evidence led. A mere error, omission or irregularity in the charge will not invalidate the finding as a matter of law in the absence of prejudice to the convicted persons. If it is found that all the four accused and others had the common intention to kill the deceased, and the four accused took part in the assault in furtherance of the common intention, they can be convicted under s 302 read with s 34 even though others are acquitted.[44] Where one out of the two accused caused injuries to the deceased by a sharp edged weapon and the other by a blunt edged weapon, and the assault on the deceased by them was with prior concert, the acquittal of the latter was held improper. In such a case, conviction of the accused who had caused the injury that was likely to cause death, for having committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder punishable under s 304, Pt 2 and s 323 and the other accused under s 304, Pt 2 read with s 34 would be proper.[45]

In a case where some of the co-accused stand acquitted and the common intention to cause death is not established beyond a reasonable doubt, the prosecution must establish the exact nature of the injuries caused to the deceased by the accused with a view to sustain the conviction of that accused for inflicting that particular injury.[46] Where all accused but one were acquitted and even through there was no evidence that the said one accused caused one of the fatal injuries, he cannot escape conviction under s 302 read with s 34, IPC, when his participation with three other assailants in the attack on the victim has been established beyond reasonable doubt by the prosecution.[47]

92. When Acquittal of other Accused is not Material

In Prabhu Babaji Navle v State of Bombay ,[48] it was held that if a person is charged under s 302 read with s 34 for having shared a common intention of four named persons and for having participated in the crime, and the four persons are all acquitted, the element of sharing a common intention with them disappears; and240 unless it can be proved that he shared a common intention with the actual murderer or murderers, he cannot be convicted with the aid of s 34 .[49]Before one of the accused can be convicted of an offence under s 326 read with s 34, it must be established that some other specified persons, whose intention the accused shared, committed the act resulting in causing grievous hurt. When the accused alleged to be the actual assailants are acquitted such acquittal means that there is no such person who took part in the assault resulting in causing grievous hurt and hence the conviction of the remaining accused under s 326 read with s 34 cannot be upheld.[50]

An almost similar view was taken by the Rajasthan High Court in Moolaram v State of Rajasthan ,[51] where a number of persons were charged with an offence read with s 34, IPC, and all of them except one were acquitted, it was held that the 'one' could not be convicted for the offence read with s 34, IPC, the reason being that the essential element of the offence being committed by more than one person in pursuance of their common intention is absent. In such a case, that 'one' of course, can be convicted of the offence which he had individually committed. The basic requirement for applying s 34, IPC, is that it requires at least two persons to form common intention. It is not necessary that the identity of all of them should be established. But where the prosecution case is that the accused committed the offence is furtherance of the common intention of known and identified co-accused and these co-accused are acquitted, the remaining accused cannot be convicted with the applicability of s 34 because there were none with whom he can be said to have share the common intention.

93. Conviction of Single Accused with the Aid of Section 34

In a situation when all the accused but one have been acquitted of the charge, it is possible to convict even the solitary accused under s 302 with the aid of s 34 .[52]

94. In Evaluating Evidence the High Court is Free to Reach its Own Conclusion without Disturbing Acquittal

In Bratri alias Sukhdeo Singh v State of Punjab [53] the Supreme Court held that the High Court is entitled to evaluate the prosecution evidence and arrive at its own conclusion. Such assessment is for the limited purpose of determining whether the infirmity which led to the acquittal of one of the accused persons could be availed of by the other accused who had been convicted on re-examination of the evidence the appellate court is free to reach its own conclusion which may be contrary to the one reached by the trial court while acquitting the co-accused. It can certainly come to an independent finding that evidence against the acquitted accused was satisfactory and should not have been discarded. On the basis of such a finding, the appellate court does not proceed to disturb the order of acquittal which has become final. It can241 certainly consider the impact of its conclusion on the case of the appellant before it. If on the evidence, the High Court can unmistakably arrive at the conclusion that the appellant and acquitted person had acted in furtherance of their common intention, the conviction of the appellant with the aid of s 34 is legal. It would be a travesty of justice if no conviction can be founded with the aid of s 34 notwithstanding the finding that the acquitted person was in fact one of the participants in the offence.[54] This view was taken by the Supreme Court even earlier in Wasim Khan v State of Uttar Pradesh ,[55] the High Court found that the appellant along with two others committed the offences of robbery and murder, but the two co-accused were acquitted. The Supreme Court held that on the finding of the High Court that, the appellant could be convicted by the application of s 34, even though the two co-accused of the appellant were acquitted. That was a case in which the number came down to one by the acquittal of the two co-accused. The same view was taken in Mathur Dhana v State .[56] Where two co-accused are charged under s 302 read with s 34 and one of them is acquitted or found not guilty of the offence charged, the other co-accused can be convicted of murder under s 302, provided of course the evidence justified it. That there was no alternative charge under s 302 against the convicted person is not of much consequence.[57] It is thus not essential that more than one person should be convicted of the offence and that s 34, IPC can be invoked if the court is in a position to find that two or more persons were actually concerned in the criminal offence sharing a common object. Where the evidence examined by the appellate court unmistakably proves than the appellant was guilty under s 34 having shared a common intention with the other accused who were acquitted and the acquittal was bad, there is nothing to prevent the appellate court from expressing that view and giving the finding and determining the guilt of the appellant before it on the basis of that finding.[58] Where the charge against three accused persons was that they committed murder in furtherance of their common intention and the two accused person were acquitted and the third accused was convicted under s 302, IPC (simpliciter) by the trial court, the decision was confirmed by the High Court and no conclusive evidence was adduced by the prosecution to prove that the injury inflicted by the third accused resulted in the death of the victim. Though the evidence on record showed that the third accused inflicted grievous injuries on the person of victim, the conviction of the accused was altered from s 302, IPC (simpliciter) to s 326, IPC .[59]

An order recording the conviction for the offence under s 409 when the accused were charged under that section read with s 34, is not therefore illegal.[60] Where two co-accused are charged under s 302 read with s 34 and one of them is acquitted or found not guilty of the offence charged, the other co-accused can be convicted of murder under s 302, provided of course the evidence justifies it. That there was no alternative charge under s 302 against the convicted person is not of much consequence.[61]242 A conviction of an accused person under s 420 would be valid though the charge is under s 420 read with s 34, unless prejudice is shown to have occurred.[62]

Where certain persons are charged with the offence under s 302, with the aid of s 34, any one of them who is found to have actually committed the offences under ss 304 and 324 can be convicted of them even if the offence against the other accused is not proved and s 34 is not applicable.[63]

95. Section 34 where Held Applicable--Illustrative Cases

Where both the accused were armed with weapons, and one waited for the other, and as a group attacked the deceased, both were convicted under s 304, Pt I read with s 34, IPC .[64]

The appellants came on a motorcycle, entered the clinic of the injured, fire shots at the injured who suffered two injuries. Both the appellants were convicted under ss 307 / 34, IPC .[65]

In prosecution for offence under ss 7 and 13 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988 read with s 34, IPC, the allegation was that accused appellant and accused no. 2 demanded Rs. 100/- as illegal gratification from the complainant for alleged violation of traffic rules, the accused appellant directed the complainant to meet the accused no. 2, the complainant met the accused appellant in the presence of the accused no. 2, the accused no. 2 accepted the bribe amount of Rs.100/- in the presence of the appellant, no complaint for traffic violation was filed, the appellant was convicted for offence under ss 7 / 13 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988 read with s 34, IPC .[66]

Three accused persons entered the house of the victim forcibly, lifted her, carried her to the shop of one accused, committed rape on her, the testimony of the prosecutrix having been found reliable, the accused were convicted under ss 366 / 457, 376 / 34, IPC .[67]

Accused H and K came on a motorcycle on the spot, H was driving the motorcycle. They stopped the motorcycle, accused K came near the deceased and shot at him with a pistol. Both fled away on motorcycle. Held, s 34 was attracted in the case, and accused H was convicted under s 302 read with s 34, IPC, while accused K was convicted under s 302, IPC .[68]

Victim was travelling in TSR. Accused, driver of the TSR, along with three other co-accused, robbed the victim of his valuables at knife point, pushed down the victim and tried to flee away, and after chase was arrested. Valuables of the victim and the offending weapon knife were recovered from his possession. Accused, in furtherance of common intention with other co-accused, committed the offence. Conviction under ss 392 / 34 and 397 / 34, IPC was held proper.[69]243

Prosecution evidence was not very specific with regard to the role played by A1, A2 and A3. It was the prosecution version that A4 had the knife in his pocket which he suddenly brought out and stabbed the deceased. Section 34 , IPC was not attracted in the case. The conviction of Accused 1, 2 and 3 with the aid of s 34, IPC was not proper, and was set aside. Only A4 was convicted under s 304, Pt II, IPC .[70]

When the evidence indicates that the three accused had repeatedly given blows with lathi, farsi and tanchia, and it is not possible to identify and ascribe a particular accused, there would be nothing illegal in convicting the accused of the charge of s 302 with the aid of s 34, IPC .[71]

Accused A1 and A2 Brothers--conviction proper

Accused A1 and A2 were real brothers, and had enmity with the deceased. Prosecution witnesses deposed that A2 was sitting on the chest of the deceased and A1 was assaulting him with stone, causing his death. Held, both accused A1 and A2 shared common intention, and were convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[72]

The accused appellant struck the first blow on the right side of the head of the deceased, and the post-mortem report stated that this blow itself might have caused the death of the deceased. Held, s 34, IPC was attracted in the case, and the accused appellant was convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[73]

The two brothers accused A1 and A2, dragged the deceased outside the house and accused A1 gave the blows. A2 did not give the blow, but his participation from the beginning till the end was proved, which revealed that he shared the common intention with his brother. He also assaulted the other witnesses who had tried to intervene. Thus, though A2 might not have inflicted the injury, yet it could be concluded that he shared the common intention making him jointly liable. Accused A2 was convicted for offence under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[74]

The accused husband was already married, but had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, and did not disclose his earlier marriage to the prosecutrix, prima facie a case under s 376, IPC is made out against the accused. The parents of the accused husband residing with him did not disclose the fact of earlier marriage to the complainant, and were part of the conspiracy, thus, they can be prosecuted under s 376, IPC, read with ss 120B and 34, IPC .[75]

Accused persons had dragged the deceased out of the car, the co-accused fired upon the victim's car from another car in which the accused persons were sitting. The prosecution evidence proved that the accused persons had acted in furtherance of their common intention, their acquittal giving them benefit of doubt was held not proper, and was set aside.[76]244

Accused appellants along with others had gone to the shop of the complainant to settle certain dispute. One of the accused persons with the assistance of the accused appellant who had caught hold of the injured, inflicted knife injuries, thus, the conviction of the accused appellant under ss 307, 323 with the aid of s 34, IPC was held proper.[77]

There was evidence of the prosecution witness that all the four accused holding weapons in their hands opened fire towards the deceased, who started to run and after the initial firing, two of the accused continued to fire pursuant to which the deceased fell down and finally, accused R ensured that the deceased lost his breath. Held, s 34 was fully applicable in the case, thus, accused appellants were convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[78]

The evidence of the victim that the two accused together assaulted him with arms causing grievous injuries was fully corroborated by medical evidence. The assault was voluntary and not in exercise of right of private defence on sudden and grave provocation. Accused were convicted under ss. 325 / 34, IPC .[79]

Where A and B accused caught hold of the deceased and the C accused with knife inflicted two fatal blows on the deceased, the intention was not to cause death but to create terror, all would be guilty and convicted under ss 304 Pt I/34, IPC .[80]

There was reliable evidence of the eye-witness that the accused C along with other three accused persons attacked the deceased with knife, corroborated by the recovery of knife. Accused were convicted under ss 302 / 34 and 120B, IPC .[81]

Out of seven accused persons put on trial five accused persons were acquitted by the trial Court. Two accused H and M armed with lathi and sharp-edged weapon had come together on the spot, gave abuses, and had inflicted injuries with the said weapons and had left together from the spot. Held, common intention was proved, thus, the Supreme Court upheld the conviction of the two accused appellants not with the aid of s 149, IPC, but with the aid of s 34 .[82]

The prosecution evidence showed that the appellant J came to the place of occurrence and made inquiries from the father of the deceased about the whereabouts of the deceased, the appellant J remained present at the place of occurrence throughout the time when the three other appellants S, V and B were stabbing the deceased. These facts strongly suggested that appellant J shared a common intention with the other appellants to murder the deceased and that the role assigned to him was to lure the deceased who was a tough guy to come out of his house and entrap him so that the other appellants could overpower and murder him.[83]

The evidence of PWS and the eye-witnesses established that the appellant accused A armed with pistol on the extortion of the co-accused AK and V had shot at the deceased. Co-accused AK and V had caught hold of the deceased. The evidence of the eye-witnesses was corroborated by medical evidence. Held, s

34 was attracted in245 the case. Conviction of the all the appellants accused under s 302, IPC was held proper.[84]

Evidence showed that the appellant J was armed with a bow and the appellant T was armed with falia, who intercepted the deceased when he was returning to the village. Appellant J shot arrows causing injuries on chest and other parts of the body, in total 8 arrows and appellant T gave blow by falia causing injury on the waist of deceased. Held, appellant T caused falia injury after 5 arrow shot injuries caused by appellant J, was sufficient to establish that they were having common intention to commit murder of deceased and in furtherance of their common intention, they acted. Both the appellants were convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[85]

In the instant case, appellants P and K, initially in order to strike terror in the market opened fire in the air, thereafter S made fire from his katta at deceased, hitting deceased on the left side of the abdomen and killed him. Held, P and K were rightly held guilty under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[86]

Where the deceased and injured victim were bare handed, while the accused persons were armed with deadly weapons viz. knife and kencha, and nine incised wounds were found on the persons of the deceased, three of them being on the abdominal region, the appellants M and G had given kencha blows in the abdominal region of the deceased, and the other appellants M and K had dealt knife blows on the back of the deceased, the act of the accused appellants indicated that they shared common intention to kill the deceased, thus, their conviction under ss 302 / 34, IPC was held proper.[87]

Appellant H had gone to the house of the deceased along with the other appellants who were armed with deadly weapons like knife, danda and banda. When they tried to attack the deceased, he went inside his house and hid himself in the puti but the appellant went inside the house, searched out the deceased; took him out from the puti, forcefully dragged him out of the house and then assaulted him with danda, knife, banda & hands and fists. The act of appellant H clearly showed that he was sharing a common intention with the other appellants to commit the murder of the deceased and nothing less than that. His conviction under s 302, IPC was held proper.[88]

96. Section 34 where held Inapplicable - Illustrative Cases

Allegation was that the appellants no. 1 and no. 2 caught the deceased, and thereafter fatal knife blow was given by the appellant no. 3. In the FIR there was no specific allegation against the appellant nos. 1 and 2 about catching of the deceased by them to facilitate the appellant no. 3 to give knife blow to the deceased. The appellant nos. 1 and 2 were not convicted under s 302, IPC with the aid of s 34, IPC .[89]246

A3 and A4 admittedly did not assault the deceased. They simply caught hold of the deceased with a view to facilitate the others to assault. Since the common intention of the accused was only to cause grievous hurt and not murder, conviction of A3 and A4 under s 302 read with s 109, IPC was set aside and they were convicted under s 324 read with s 109 .[90]

In the present case, evidence was that PW14 took away the lathi from the accused appellant and threw it out. Thereafter, the only role played by the accused according to the prosecution witnesses was that he was running. He did not pick up the lathi which had been thrown by PW14 and the prosecution witnesses accepted that he did nothing thereafter except running. The conviction of the accused appellant under ss 302 / 34, IPC was set aside.[91]

Prosecution evidence was not very specific with regard to the role played by A1, A2 and A3. It was the prosecution version that A4 had the knife in his pocket which he suddenly brought out and stabbed the deceased. Section 34 , IPC was not attracted in the case. The conviction of A 1, 2 and 3 with the aid of s 34, IPC was not proper, and was set aside. Only A4 was convicted under s 304, Pt II, IPC .[92]

Eleven accused persons including the two appellants surrounded the deceased and caused injuries. Accused 9 to 11 were acquitted. The accused appellant no. 1 caused injuries armed with ballam and accused appellant no. 2 armed with pharsa assaulted the deceased. In post mortem examination, eleven injuries were found on the persons of the deceased. The doctor opined that the death occurred due to excessive bleeding and shock on account of the injuries. The death had not taken place as a result of the injuries caused by the two appellant nos. 1 and 2. Hence, they could not be held guilty under s 302, IPC*simplicitor* or with the aid of s 34, IPC . The conviction of the two appellants under s 302 was altered to one under s 326, IPC .[93]

Eleven persons named in FIR were alleged to have inflicted five incised wounds on the deceased. The Courts below convicted only two accused appellants 1 and 2 and acquitted nine other accused persons. Medical evidence showed that the death of the deceased was due to excessive bleeding and shock as a result of the five injuries sustained. Held, the death had not taken place as a result of the injuries caused by the appellants or any one of them. Hence, they could not be held guilty under s 302, IPC*simplicitor* or with the aid of s 34, IPC . The conviction of the accused appellants under ss 302 / 34, IPC was altered to one under ss 326 / 34, IPC .[94]

Co-accused (father), assaulted the deceased with stone and when the deceased fell down, main accused assaulted the deceased with sword, giving several blows causing death. Only main accused had motive as the deceased was having illicit relations with his wife. Held, s 34, IPC was not attracted. Co-accused was convicted under s 325, IPC instead of s 302, IPC, and conviction of main accused under s 302, IPC was held proper.[95]247

The victim had received grievous injuries on his hand and head. The prosecution case that two co-accused along with two other accused had assaulted the victim was not proved by medical evidence, and neither was any overt act attributed to the co-accused, nor was any common intention on their part proved. Conviction of the two accused under s 325 read with s 34, IPC was not proper, and was set aside.[1]

The delinquent accused had pulled down the victim from the roof when the victim was painting the kitchen roof. Other co-accused gave khhoncha blow to the victim on left ear, causing injuries. As the delinquent accused had not prompted other co-accused to bring khhoncha and give blow to the victim, the delinquent accused was acquitted of the charges under ss 307, 324 read with s 34, IPC .[2]

There was evidence that the main accused assaulted the deceased on his head with an axe resulting in death. Two other accused assaulted the other victims with clubs. The other victims had suffered simple injuries. There was bare allegation but no evidence that all the accused shared common intention to cause the death of the deceased. The two other accused were convicted not under s 304, Pt I, but were convicted under s 323, IPC .[3]

Where the accused appellant A5 had caused simple injury by bamboo stick to the deceased, while other accused A1 had given fatal blow, he was convicted under s 323, IPC and not under s 302 read with s 34, IPC .[4]

Where all the accused had attacked the deceased together and only two blows, one by axe and another by knife were given, there was no common purpose, thus, s 34, IPC was held not attracted in the case.[5]

The incident occurred at the spur of the moment. The accused caught the hands of the deceased, his brother co-accused suddenly brought a glass bottle, broke it and stabbed the deceased causing death. Held, accused did not share common intention of his brother to cause the death of the deceased. He was acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[6]

Appellant A parted with the company of the main accused R before the prosecutrix was raped by the accused R. There was no evidence that the accused A guarded the place where the main accused R committed rape on the prosecutrix. Appellant A was acquitted of the charge of gang rape.[7]

Where it was alleged that the Appellant nos. 2 and 3 had assaulted the deceased with kicks and fists, their overt act was not corroborated by medical evidence, and there was no evidence available on record that they had any pre-meditation, pre-meeting of mind and pre-plan with the appellant no. 1, thus, held that the two appellants deserved to be acquitted of the charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[8]

Where the prosecution case was that when the victim crossed the appellants accused persons he received gun shot at back and then both the appellants ran away, and victim deposed that he did not see as to which of the appellants accused had248 fired, held that the common intention was not proved, thus, both the accused persons were acquitted of the charges under ss 307, 326 / 34, IPC .[9]

Where there was testimony of solitary witness that the co-accused chased and caught hold of the deceased, his conviction under s 302 with the aid of s 34, IPC was not proper and was set aside.[10]

Father and son were alleged to have gone to the house of the deceased, where father caught hold of the deceased and son attacked the deceased with Gupti. Father was not named in FIR, hence he was acquitted of charge under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[11]

3 Maqsoodan & Ors v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1983 SC 126, (1983) Cr LJ 218 (SC) .

4 Mahbub Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, p 121 ; Re *Shankarappa*AIR 1958 AP 380 ; Mal Singh v State of Rajasthan 1984 Raj LW 307, (1984) Cr LR 299 (Raj) .

5 Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216, p 222 ; Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 672 ; Kinaram v State AIR 1952 Assam 2 ; State of Bihar v Lala Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161, p 169 ; Mohinder Singh v State AIR 1960 Punj 135 ; Kamaldin v Emperor AIR 1947 Sind 41 ; Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Guj 16 ; Aruna v State of Hyderabad AIR 1956 Hyd 98 .

6 Narsingh Bhai Haribhai Prajapati etc. v Chhatra Singh & Ors AIR 1977 SC 1753, (1977) Cr LJ 1144 (SC) .

7 Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Guj 16, p 18 .

8 Satrughan Patar v Emperor AIR 1919 Pat 111, p 119 .

9 Rotash v State of Rajasthan (2007) Cr LJ 758 (SC) .

10 State of Uttar Pradesh v Jhinkoo Nai (2001) Cr LJ 3965 (SC) .

11 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 672-73 ; State v Hira Dubey AIR 1952 Pat 135, p 137 ; Abu Bahar Siddik v State of Tripura (2005) Cr LJ 1332 (Gau) (DB) .

12 Rajesh Govind Jagesha v State of Maharashtra (2000) Cr LJ 380 (SC) ; Harbans Kaur v State of Haryana (2005) Cr LJ 2199 (SC) .

13 Surendra Chauhan v State of Madhya Pradesh (2000) Cr LJ 1789 (SC) .

14 Nazir v Emperor AIR 1948 All 229, p 232 .

15 State of Uttar Pradesh v Iftikhar Khan & Ors AIR 1973 SC 863, (1973) Cr LJ 636 (SC) .

16 Mahbub Shah v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118 ; State of Bihar v Lala Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161, p 169 ; Irshadullah Khan v Emperor AIR 1933 All 528 ; Narayan v State AIR 1953 Hyd 161 ; Nga E v Emperor AIR 1931 Rang 1, p 4 (FB) .

17 Kassim Pillai Assanaru Kutty v State AIR 1952 Tr & Coch 565, p 568.

18 Ramesh Singh v State of AP (2004) 11 SCC 305, AIR 2004 SC 4545 .

19 King and the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth v Associated Northern Collieries 14 CLR 387, p 400, per Issacs J.

20 Sree Vijayakumar v State by Inspector of Police 2005 Cr LJ 3085, p 3091 (SC), 2005 SCC (Cri) 1896, (2005) 10 SCC 737, (2005) Supp(1) SCR 398.

21 Arbind Kumar Singh v State of Bihar (1990) 1 BLJR 393, p 410 .

22 Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216, p 222 .

23 Abdul Bari v State of West Bengal 1984 Cr LJ 201, (1984) 1 Cal HN 49, (1983) 87 CWN 1108 (Cal), (1983) 2 Crimes 922 (Cal)(DB).

24 State of Haryana v Satendra 2014 Cr LJ 4052, p 4058 (SC), (2014) 7 SCC 291 .

25 Sandeep v State of UP 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 1198 (All) (DB).

26 Emperor v Ibrahim AIR 1931 Rang 321, but seeMahbub Shah v Emperor* AIR 1945 PC 118 .

27 Ram Kumar v State of MP 2014 Cr LJ 3694, p 3697 (SC), (2014) 13 SCC 128, (2014) 140 AIC 61 (SC) .

28 Mohinder Kumar v State of HP 2009 Cr LJ 4235, p 4240 (HP) .

29 Mohinder Kumar v State of HP 2009 Cr LJ 4235, p 4240 (HP) .

30 Shano Singhdeo v State of Jharkhand 2009 Cr LJ 4718, p 4720 (Jhar) .

31 Mamand v Emperor AIR 1946 PC 45 .

32 Oswal Danji Tejsi v State AIR 1961 Guj 16, p 19 ; State of Punjab v Jagtar Singh (1995) Cr LJ 833 (P&H) .

33 Khacheru Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1956 SC 546 .

34 Deepak Pradhan v State of Sikkim 2013 Cr LJ 4834 (Sikk) (DB) .

35 Mehttar Ram v State of Chhattisgarh 2011 Cr LJ 1584, p 1588 (Chh) (DB) .

36 Ali Akbar Mondal v State of West Bengal 2011 Cr LJ (NOC) 312 (Cal) ; Mehttar Ram v State of Chhattisgarh 2011 Cr LJ 1584 (Chh) (DB) .

37 Narayan v State AIR 1953 Hyd 161, p 165 .

38 Manoj Budha Chavan v State of Maharashtra 2012 Cr LJ (NOC) 358 (Bom) (DB), (2012) 4 Bom CR (Cri) 69).

39 Rakesh Kumar v Stat, 2014 Cr LJ 3401, p 3409 (Del) (DB) .

40 Dharam Pal & Ors v State of Haryana AIR 1978 SC 1492, (1978) Cr LJ 1538 (SC) .

41 Kareem v State 2009 Cr LJ 1236 (Kant) .

42 State of HP v Nazar Singh 2009 Cr LJ 3984, p 3987 (SC), 2009 AIR SCW 4243, 2009 (7) Scale 666, (2009) 12 SCC 89 .

43 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241, p 246 .

44 Ramnath Madho Prasad v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1953 SC 420, p 424 .

45 State of Sikkim v Rakesh Rai 2012 Cr LJ 2737, p 2768 (Sikk) (DB) (Four accused persons convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC) Alakunta Narsimloo v State of Andhra Pradesh 1994 Cr LJ 1721followed; Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216, 1955 Cr LJ 572 referred.

46 Basharat v Emperor AIR 1934 Lah 813, p 814 .

47 Mahadeo Nath Khetri v Emperor AIR 1941 Pat 550, p 553 ; Basharat v Emperor AIR 1934 Lah 813, p 814 .

48 Kantiah Ramayya Munipalli v State of Bombay AIR 1955 SC 287, p 294 .

49 Queen v Gorachand Gope 5 WR Cr 45, p 48 (FB) .

50 Rewaram v State of Maharashtra (1983) Cr LJ 1845 (Bom) .

51 State of Haryana v Satendra 2014 Cr LJ 4052, p 4058 (SC), (2014) 7 SCC 291 .

52 Emperor v Motilal Malik AIR 1935 Cal 526, p 534 ; Irshadulla Khan v Emperor AIR 1933 All 328 .

53 Jagdish v State of Haryana 2005 Cr LJ 3073, p 3075 (SC), (2005) 11 SCC 146, AIR 2005 SC 2576 .

54 Ganpat v State 1961 Raj LW 313 .

55 Pichai v State of Tamil Nadu 2005 Cr LJ 5111, p 5113, (2005) 10 SCC 505, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1617 .

56 Atmaram v State of Madhya Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ 2882, p 2888 (SC), AIR 2012 SC 1956, 2012 (5) Scale 300, (2012) 5 SCC 738 .

57 Kuria v State of Rajasthan 2012 Cr LJ 4707 (SC), 2012 AIR SCW 5259, AIR 2013 SC 1085, 2012 (9) Scale 42, (2012) 10 SCC 433 .

58 Rotash v State of Rajasthan (2007) Cr LJ 758 (SC) .

59 Mohanlal v State AIR 1961 Raj 24, p 29 .

60 Narender Singh v State of Punjab (2000) Cr LJ 3462 (SC) .

61 Re *Ramaswami*AIR 1952 Mad 411, p 413 ; Re *Muniyandi*AIR 1954 Mad 196, p 197 .

62 Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghose AIR 1924 Cal 257, p 258 .

63 Emperor v Nga Aung Thein AIR 1935 Rang 89 (FB) .

64 State of UP v Ganga Ram 2005 Cr LJ 4643, p 4647, AIR 2006 SC 20, 2005 (4) Crimes 198 (SC) .

65 Ramchandra Ohder v State of Bihar (1999) Cr LJ 1449 (SC) ; Mukati Prasad Rai v State of Bihar AIR 2005 SC 1271, 2005 Cr LJ 681, 2004 (9) Scale 1, (2004) 13 SCC 144 (Other accused were not convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC).

66 Mahesh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ 2713 (SC), AIR 2012 SC 2172, 2011 (9) SCC 626 ; see alsoState of Haryana v Shakuntala* 2012 Cr LJ 2850 (SC), AIR 2012 SC 2123, 2012 (4) Scale 526, (2012) 5 SCC 171 .

67 Manoj v State of Karnataka 2014 Cr LJ 60, p 63 (SC), AIR 2013 SC (Supp) 116, (2013) 14 SCC 666, 2013 AIR SCW 5547, 2013 (8) Scale 387 . (Conviction under ss 302 / 34, IPC altered to one under s 325, IPC).

68 Indian Evidence Act 1872, s 114, illust (a).

69 Ram Sarup Singh v Emperor AIR 1930 Pat 513 ; Emperor v Niamat Ullah 14 Cr LJ 556 ; Queen Empress v Sami 13 ILR Mad 426, p 432, 1 Weir 290 ; Emperor v Chintamoni Shahu AIR 1930 Cal 379, 31 Cr LJ 497 ; Re *Venkataswamy*AIR 1950 Mad 309, 51 Cr LJ 497 ; Ram Prashad Mukundram v Crown AIR 1949 Nag 227, 50 Cr LJ 713 ; Sadashiva Daulat v State AIR 1950 MP 104, p 105 and cases cited therein .

70 Nga Thein Pe v King AIR 1939 Rang 361, p 365 .

71 Ganga v State AIR 1957 All 678, p 680 .

72 BN Srikantiah v State of Mysore AIR 1958 SC 672, (1958) Cr LJ 1251 (SC) .

73 Maqsoodan & Ors v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1983 SC 120, (1983) Cr LJ 218 (SC) .

74 Dharam Pal & Ors v State of Haryana AIR 1978 SC 1492, (1978) Cr LJ 1538 (SC) .

75 Mahbub Shah v King-Emperor AIR 1945 PC 118, 46 Cr LJ 689 .

76 Har Sahai v Rex AIR 1949 All 582, p 584 .

77 Rishideo v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1955 SC 331, p 333 .

78 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 674 ; State of Bihar v Lala Mahto AIR 1955 Pat 161, p 169 .

79 Pandurang v State of Hyderabad AIR 1955 SC 216 ; BN Srikantiah v State of Mysore AIR 1958 SC 672 ; Nga v Emperor AIR 1931 Rang 1 (FB) ; Shariff Ahmad v State AIR 1957 All 50 ; Mamand v Emperor AIR 1946 PC 45 ; Kripal v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1954 SC 706 ; Emperor v Nga Aung Thein AIR 1935 Rang 89 .

80 Laxman Anaji Dhundale v State of Maharashtra 2007 Cr LJ 3191, p 3193, AIR 2007 SC 1876, (2007) 5 Scale 330, 2007 (3) Supreme 502 .

81 Anil v State of Haryana 2007 Cr LJ 4294, p 4298 (SC), 2007 (7) Scale 56, 2007 (5) Supreme 15 .

82 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 .

83 Ibid, p 9.

84 Nazir v Emperor AIR 1948 All 229, p 232 ; Madhawa Pyare Lal Kurmi v State of Vindhya Pradesh AIR 1954 VP 36 .

85 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 674 ; Mian Khan v Emperor 29 Cr LJ 474 .

86 Mangla v Emperor 38 Cr LJ 628, p 630 ; Joginder Singh v State of Himachal Pradesh (1995) Cr LJ 124 (HP) .

87 Rajender Singh v State of Haryana 2009 Cr LJ 1561, p 1567 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 1734, 2009 (1) Scale 751 .

88 Bashir v State AIR 1953 All 668, p 674 .

89 Rishideo v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1955 SC 331, p 333-34 ; Emperor v Nga Aung Thein AIR 1935 Rang 89 (FB) ; Nga Tha Aye v Emperor AIR 1935 Rang 299 ; Nga E v Emperor AIR 1931 Rang 1 (FB) ; Bhikari Pati v Emperor AIR 1930 Pat 545 .

90 Kripal v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1954 SC 706 ; Bachan Lal v State AIR 1957 All 184 .

91 Sultan v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 749, p 750 ; Fateh Khan v Emperor AIR 1930 Lah 950 .

92 Wazir Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1956 SC 754, p 757 ; Ram Chandra v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1957 SC 381 .

93 Dalip Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1953 SC 364 .

94 Re *Periaswami*AIR 1960 Mad 362 .

95 Re *Nachimuthu Goundan*AIR 1947 Mad 259 .

96 Lal v Emperor AIR 1927 Lah 831 .

1 Rawalpenta Venkalu v State of Hyderabad AIR 1956 SC 171 ; Harbans Singh v State (1960) 62 Punj LR 286 ; Harwant Singh v State AIR 1969 NSC 79 ; Bhoor Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1974 SC 1256, (1975) Cr LJ 929 (no prejudice caused to the accused); Amar Singh v State of Haryana AIR 1973 SC 1409 ; Jagir Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1968 SC 43, (1968) Cr LJ 89 ; Mohan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1963 SC 174, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 100 ; Karan Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1965 SC 1037, (1965) 2 Cr LJ 142 ; Kartar Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1961 SC 1787, (1961) 2 Cr LJ 855 ; Ram Murti v State of Haryana (1977) 79 Punj LR 12 (SC) ; Karnail Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1954 SC 209, (1954) Cr LJ 580 ; Sivapada v State AIR 1969 Cal 28, p 31, (1969) Cr LJ 160 ; Nemal Adak v State AIR 1965 Cal 89, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 160 ; Lachman Singh v State AIR 1952 SC 167, p 170, (1952) Cr LJ 863 ; Harmohan v State of Orissa (1970) 36 Cut LT 731 ; Anasi Sabara v State (1975) Cr LJ 567 ; A Gopaiah v State of Andhra Pradesh (1978) Cr LJ 789, p 804 (AP) ; Re Poreddi Venkata Reddy(1961) 1 Cr LJ 42; Narayanan v State of Kerala (1978) KLT 197, (1963) MPLJ (Notes) 14 ; Dalip Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1953 SC 364, (1953) Cr LJ 1465 ; Dhansai v State AIR 1969 Ori 105, (1969) Cr LJ 626 ; Garib Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1973 SC 460, p 464, (1972) Cr LJ 1286 ; Anshad v State of Karnataka (1995) 1 East Cr C 14 (SC), (1996) 10 SCC 79, AIR 1996 SC 2478, 1996 (Supp-4) SCR 28, 1996 Cr LJ 3516 ; Babu v State 2013 Cr LJ 2176, (2013) 4 SCC 448, AIR 2013 SC 1769 .

2 Dhanna etc. v State of Madhya Pradesh (1996) Cr LJ 3516 (SC) .

3 State of Orissa v Arjun Das Aggarwal & Ors (1999) Cr LJ 4078 (SC) .

4 Dhaneswar Mahakud v State of Orissa 2006 Cr LJ 2113 (SC), AIR 2006 SC 1727, 2006 (4) Scale 170 .

5 State v Babulal AIR 1956 Raj 68, p 75 ; Dewji Moti Bhil v State AIR 1955 MB 20 ; State v Hanumatha Nath Das AIR 1960 Cal 183, p 185 .

6 State of Karnataka v Abdul Rasheem (2006) Cr LJ 3169 (Kant) .

7 Dhulya @ Dhulji v State of MP 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 495 (MP) (DB).

8 Willie (William) Slaney v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1956 SC 116, p 137 .

9 Dhanna v State of MP (1996) 10 SCC 79, AIR 1996 SC 2478, 1996 AIR SCW 3066 ; Babu v State 2013 Cr LJ 2176, AIR 2013 SC 1769, (2013) 4 SCC 448, 2013 (4) Scale 557 .

10 Madhuwa Pyarelal Kurmi v State of Vindhya Pradesh AIR 1954 VP 36, p 38 ; Re *Theethumalai Gounder*AIR 1925 Mad 1 (FB) .

11 Benu Namasudra v State of Tripura 2010 Cr LJ 781, p 793 (Gauh) (DB) .

12 Willie (William) Slaney v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1956 SC 116, p 137-38 ; Re *Sankarappa*AIR 1958 AP 380 .

13 Begu v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 130, p 131 .

14 Lachhman Singh v State AIR 1952 SC 167, p 170 .

15 Willie (William) Slaney v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1956 SC 116, p 132 .

16 BN Srikantiah v State of Mysore AIR 1958 SC 672, p 675 ; Chinhan Kameswara Rao v State of AP 2013 Cr LJ 1540, AIR 2013 SC 3602, (2013) 12 SCC 689 ; Re *Periaswami*AIR 1960 Mad 362 ; Murao Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1961 MP 45 .

17 Chinnam Kameswara Rao v State of AP 2013 Cr LJ 1540, p 1546 (SC), AIR 2013 SC 3602, (2013) 12 SCC 689 .

18 Ibid.

19 Krishnan Bala Krishnan v State of Kerala AIR 1958 Ker 95 .

20 Dewji Moti Bhil v State AIR 1955 MB 20 .

21 Jogi v State of Uttar Pradesh (2005) Cr LJ 3216 (All) (DB) .

22 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 241 ; Bishwanath v Emperor AIR 1946 All 153 dissented from.

23 Bachan Singh v State AIR 1955 Pepsu 162 .

24 Murao Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1961 MP 45, p 46, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 270 ; Nana Gangaram v State of Maharashtra 1970 Mah LJ 172 ; Taga v State of Rajasthan 1976 Raj LW 589, p 600 .

25 Re *Periaswami*AIR 1960 Mad 362 ; Kalayan Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1994) 3 RCR 49 (MP) .

26 Narender Singh & Anor v State of Punjab (2000) Cr LJ 3462 (SC) .

27 Barendra Kumar Ghose v Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1 .

28 Dalip Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1953 SC 364 ; Kashi Ram Nanda v State AIR 1954 MB 143 ; State of Bihar v Rahim Nadaf AIR 1957 Pat 52 ; Madhu Yadav & Ors v State of Bihar II (2002) CCR 236 (SC) .

29 Karnail Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1954 SC 204, p 207 ; B Bhadriah v State of Andhra Pradesh 1995 (1) East Cr C 41 (SC) .

30 BN Srikantiah v State of Mysore AIR 1958 SC 672, p 675 ; Bhondu Das v Emperor AIR 1929 Pat 11 ; Nethuraji v State of Andhra Pradesh 1991 Cr LJ 3133, p 3134 (SC) ; Benny v State of Kerala (1991) 2 Crimes 576, p 581 (Ker) .

31 Lachman Singh v State AIR 1952 SC 167, p 170 ; Bollneedi Venkataramiah v State of Andhra Pradesh 1994 Cr LJ 61 (SC) .

32 Krishna Pillai Vasu Pillai v State AIR 1956 Tr & Coch 230, p 232.

33 Bolineedi Venkataramaiah v State of Andhra Pradesh (1994) Cr LJ 61 (SC) .

34 Krishna Pillai Vasu Pillai v State AIR 1956 Tr & Coch 230, p 232.

35 Benny v State of Kerala (1991) 2 Crimes 576, p 581 .

36 Re *Poreddi Venkata Reddy*AIR 1961 AP 23, p 28 ; relying onTilkershwar Singh v State of Bihar* AIR 1956 SC 238 .

37 Tilkeshwar Singh v State of Bihar AIR 1956 SC 238 .

38 Chowa Mandal v State of Bihar (2004) Cr LJ 1405 (SC) .

39 Brathi alias Sukhdeo Singh v State of Punjab (1991) 1 Crimes 74, p 78 (SC), (1991) Cr LJ 402 ; AmrikSingh Satnam Singh v State of Punjab (1994) 1 Crimes 297 (SC), (1994) 1 SCC 563, (1994) SCC (Cr) 147 .

40 King v Plumer (1901) 2 KB 339 .

41 Sunder Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1962 SC 1211, p 1215 ; distinguishingKing v Plumer* (1902) 2 KB 339 .

42 Y Venkaiah v State of AP 2009 Cr LJ 2834, p 2839 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 2311, 2009 (4) Scale 154 ; Gurunath Donkappa Keri v State of Karnataka 2009 Cr LJ 2995 (SC), 2009 AIR SCW 3540, 2009 (7) Scale 482 .

43 Irapa Kumbhar v State of Goa 2010 Cr LJ 1498, p 1504 (Bom) (DB) ; see alsoKrishna Govind Patil v State of Maharashtra* AIR 1963 SC 1413, [1964] 1 SCR 678, 1963 Cr LJ 351 ; State of West Bengal v Vindu Lachandas Sakhrani AIR 1994 SC 772, 1994 Cr LJ 919, 1995 SCC (Cr) 175 .

44 Bharwad Mepa Dana v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 289, p 295 ; Kapildeo Singh v King AIR 1950 Tr & Coch 80; Dalip Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1953 SC 364 ; Narisingh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1954 SC 457 ; Bolineedi Venkataramiah v State of Andhra Pradesh (1994) Cr LJ 61 (SC) ; Jadu Yadav v State of Bihar (1994) Cr LJ 1209 (SC), AIR 1994 SC 957, (1994) 2 East Cr C 535 (SC) .

45 State of Punjab v Mann Singh & Anor AIR 1983 SC 172, (1983) Cr LJ 229 .

46 Nadodi Jayaraman v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1993 SC 777, (1993) Cr LJ 426 .

47 Subhash and Shiv Shankar v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1987 SC 1222, (1987) Cr LJ 991 (SC) .

48 AIR 1956 SC 51.

49 Prabhu Babaji Navle v State of Bombay AIR 1956 SC 51 ; Babulal Bajpai v State AIR 1959 Cal 693 ; Sheo Shankar alias Chhotey v State of Uttar Pradesh 1995 Cr R 45, 50 (UP).

50 Raja Ram Raghu Patil v State AIR 1958 Bom 469 ; Fazoo Khan v Jatoo Khan AIR 1931 Cal 643 relied on.

51 (1987) Cr LR 344 (Raj); State of West Bengal v VL Sakharani 1994 Cr LJ 919 (SC), AIR 1994 SC 772 .

52 Mangu Khan v State of Rajasthan 2005 Cr LJ 1748, p 1753 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 1912, 2005 (2) Scale 365, (2005) 10 SCC 374 ; Sukh Ram v State of UP AIR 1974 SC 323 ; Pipal Singh v State of Punjab (2001) 2 SCC 292, 2001 Cr LJ 740, 2001 SCC (Cr) 344, 2001 (1) Crimes 20 (SC) .

53 (1991) 1 Crimes 74, p 79, (1991) Cr LJ 402 (SC).

54 Brathi alias Sukhdeo Singh v State of Punjab (1991) 1 Crimes 74, p 79 (SC), (1991) Cr LJ 402 .

55 Wasim Khan v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1956 SC 400 .

56 Mathur Dhana v State AIR 1956 Bom 393 .

57 Willie (William) Slaney v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1956 SC 116 ; Basanta Gohain v State AIR 1957 Assam 45 .

58 Brathi alias Sukhdeo Singh v State of Punjab (1991) 1 Crimes 74, p 81 (SC), (1991) Cr LJ 402 .

59 Rupa Ram v State of Rajasthan (1999) Cr LJ 2901 (SC) .

60 Jai Krishanadas Manohardas Desai v State of Bombay AIR 1960 SC 889, p 893 .

61 Willie (William) Slaney v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1956 SC 116 ; Basanta Gohain v State AIR 1957 Assam 45 .

62 Mobarik Ali Ahmed v State of Bombay AIR 1957 SC 270 .

63 Ram Chandra v State (1957) Cr LJ 857 .

64 Mohsin v State 2012 Cr LJ (NOC) 82 (Del) (DB).

65 Babloo v State of Uttarakhand 2012 Cr LJ 198, p 200 (Utr) .

66 Syed Yousuf Hussain v State of Andhra Pradesh 2013 Cr LJ 2172, p 2176 (SC), AIR 2013 SC 1677, [2013] 2 SCR 528, (2013) 4 SCC 517 .

67 Balwan Singh v State through P/S Katra 2013 Cr LJ (NOC) 553 (J&K).

68 Hemchand Jha v State of Bihar 2008 Cr LJ 3203, p 3205 (SC) .

69 Lalit Kumar v State 2014 Cr LJ (NOC) 437 (Del) .

70 Sripathi v State of Karnataka 2009 Cr LJ 4646 (SC), 2009 AIR SCW 5927, 2009 (5) Scale 5 .

71 Mangu Khan v State of Rajasthan 2005 Cr LJ 1748, p 1753 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 1912, 2005 (2) Scale 365, (2005) 10 SCC 374 .

72 State of Rajasthan v Shobha Ram 2013 Cr LJ 2227 (SC), AIR 2013 SC 1760, (2013) 14 SCC 732, 2013 (2) Scale 10, 2013 (1) SLT 690 .

73 Lokesh Shivakumar v State of Karnataka AIR 2012 SC 926, 2012 (3) SCC 196, 2012 (2) Scale 420, 2012 Cr LJ 1625, p 1629 (SC) .

74 Thoti Manohar v State of Andhra Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ 3492, p 3500 (SC), 2012 AIR SCW 3752, 2012 (7) Scale 215 .

75 Surekha Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2014 Cr LJ 1194, p 1196 (MP), ILR (2013) MP 3000 .

76 Papa Laxmi Kant v State of Madhya Pradesh 2014 Cr LJ (NOC) 28 (MP) .

77 Satbir v State of Haryana 2013 Cr LJ 7 (SC), 2013 AIR SCW 5780, 2012 (10) Scale 371 .

78 Sheo Shankar Singh v State of UP AIR 2013 SC 2853, 2013 Cr LJ 3788, p 3794 (SC), (2013) 12 SCC 539 .

79 Papa Laxmi Kant v State of Madhya Pradesh 2014 Cr LJ (NOC) 28 (MP) .

80 Babloo alias Babu v State 2013 Cr LJ (NOC) 578 (Del) (DB).

81 Raju v State of Chhattisgarh 2014 Cr LJ 4425 (SC), (2014) 9 SCC 299 .

82 Murli v State of Rajasthan 2010 Cr LJ 2228, p 2234 (SC), 2011 AIR SCW 412, (2009) 9 SCC 417 .

83 Virender Pal v State 2011 Cr LJ 3082, p 3093 (Del) (DB) .

84 Vinay Kumar Rai v State of Bihar 2008 Cr LJ 4319, p 4322 (SC), AIR 2008 SC 3276 ; Aizaz v State of UP 2008 Cr LJ 4374, p 4376 (SC), 2008 (6) All LJ 228, [2008] 12 SCR 13, (2008) 12 SCC 198, 2008 (11) Scale 46 (Defence plea that only one accused had enmity, other accused did not use weapon was repelled).

85 Janiya Chamayadiya Bhill v State of MP 2009 Cr LJ 2456, p 2459 (MP) (DB) .

86 Pintoo v State of Rajasthan 2009 Cr LJ 748, p 757, 758 (Raj) (DB) .

87 Mullu Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ 273, p 279 (MP) (DB) .

88 Markami Deva v State of Chhattisgarh 2009 Cr LJ 585, p 589 (Cal) (DB) .

89 Jakir Hussain v State of Madhya Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ 1289, p 1294 (Chha) (DB) .

90 Pichai v State of Tamil Nadu 2005 Cr LJ 5111, p 5113, (2005) 10 SCC 505, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1617 .

91 Rajesh Kumar v State of HP 2009 Cr LJ 335, p 338 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 6833, AIR 2009 SC 1, [2008] 14 SCR 234, (2008) 15 SCC 705 .

92 Sripathi v State of Karnataka 2009 Cr LJ 4646 (SC), 2009 AIR SCW 5927, AIR 2010 SC 249, [2009] 5 SCR 309, 2009 (11) SCC 660, 2009 (7) JT 146, 2009 (5) Scale 5 .

93 Vijay Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2014 Cr LJ 2158, p 2160 (SC), (2014) 137 AIC 78, (2014) 12 SCC 293 .

94 Vijay Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2014 Cr LJ 2158 (SC), (2014) 12 SCC 293, (2014) 137 AIC 78 .

95 Manoj v State of Karnataka 2014 Cr LJ 60, p 63 (SC), AIR 2013 SC (Supp) 116, (2013) 14 SCC 666, 2013 AIR SCW 5547, 2013 (8) Scale 387 .

1 Papa Laxmi Kant v State of Madhya Pradesh 2014 Cr LJ (NOC) 28 (MP) .

2 Ravinder Kumar v State of Himachal Pradesh 2013 Cr LJ (NOC) 15 (HP) (DB).

3 Amol Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2014 Cr LJ 4688 (Chh) (DB) .

4 Pratap Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2006 Cr LJ 314 (SC), AIR 2006 SC 518 .

5 Mevabhai Bhikabhai Gamar v State of Gujarat 2014 (140) AIC 553 (Guj) .

6 Ramesh Kumar @ Mahesh v State of Delhi 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 36 (Del) (DB).

7 Amit v State 2010 Cr LJ 3154, p 3161 (Del) (DB) .

8 Ramesh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ 3268, p 3271 (MP) (DB) .

9 Raju Lahiri v State of West Bengal 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 473 (Cal) (DB).

10 Sasthi Bagdi v State of West Bengal 2007 Cr LJ 2600 (Cal) (DB) .

11 Baijnath Chullu Kanwar v State of Madhya Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ (NOC) 514 (Chh) (DB).

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 35.

When such an act is criminal by reason of its being done with a criminal knowledge or intention.--

Whenever an act, which is criminal only by reason of its being done with a criminal knowledge or intention, is done by several persons, each of such persons who joins in the act with such knowledge or intention is liable for the act in the same manner as if the act were done by him alone with that knowledge or intention.

Comments

1. Scope

This section supplements the principle embodied in s 34 .[12]It is applicable to a case where a number of persons join in an act which is criminal only by reason of its being done with a certain knowledge or intention.[13]

This section deals with those cases in which acts are crimes by reason only of a particular intent or knowledge. In order to convict a person assisting the individual who actually performs the act, it must be shown that he had the particular criminal intent or knowledge. In the Bhopal gas tragedy case which resulted in several deaths, permanent and temporary disablement, the Apex Court held that the mere fact of running of a plant with proper permission could not be a criminal act and the mere act of storing hazardous substance or having a defective plant could not suggest prima facie that the accused had knowledge that they were likely to cause death of human beings. Framing of charge under s 304, Pt II read with s 35, IPC, therefore, was not proper and was quashed.[14]

2. Criminal Facts may be Offences of Two Kinds

Section 34 of the IPC begins by speaking of 'a criminal act'. It starts with the assumption that a criminal act has been committed. Now a criminal act may be an offence of one of two kinds:249

(a) one which is punishable even if there is no mens rea such as an offence under s 283 or s 290 of the IPC ;
(b) one which requires the mens rea stated in the section of the IPC defining the offence which that criminal act may turn out to be.

As regards class (a), there is no difficulty, for it is per se an offence, and by operation of what s 34 enacts, each and every person who performs even a fractional part of the act is to be regarded as the performer of the whole of it. But class (b) raises an obvious difficulty, for the doer of a fractional portion of the act may not have the necessary mens rea. Is he to be considered as culpable as others who have mens rea? As already pointed out, such a result has been avoided by the introduction of the words 'in furtherance of the common intention of all,' which means that before a particular doer of a fractional portion of the criminal act can be fastened with criminal liability for the entire act, it will have to be shown that he shared the common purpose of all the doers, and also that the entire criminal act furthered the accomplishment of that purpose. Before the Amendment of 1870, the section as it then stood literally rendered liable class (b) as well class (a). But at that time s 34, in so far as it was express, was only a partial enunciation of the real principle. As far as its language went, it was incomplete, and the remainder of the principle had to be provided for in other sections. Section 35 took the matter up, and it started at the point where s 34 left off. Class (a) being offences for which no mens rea was required, had been already completely legislated for by s 34 . But as to class (b) it was necessary to say something further in order to make it clear that culpability in this class of offences depended upon the nature of the offender's *mens rea.*Section 35 accordingly started with the words: 'Whenever an act, which is criminal only by reason of its being done with a criminal knowledge or intention'.[15]

3. Overlapping of Sections 34 and 35

The section simply makes it clear that where a number of persons join in an act which is criminal only by reason of its being done with a certain knowledge or intention, each person is liable for the act to the extent of his knowledge or intention; in other words, that the court or jury have to consider what is the knowledge or intention with which each person joined in the act.[16] If the offence which the criminal act is found to constitute, requires knowledge, then only that fractional doer who was possessed of such knowledge is to be adjudged liable for the offence. This is clear from the closing words of the section: 'as if the act (meaning the whole act) were done by him alone with that knowledge'. If the offence, which the criminal act is found to constitute, requires intention, then only that fractional doer who was animated by such intention is to be adjudged liable for the offence. Here again this is made plain by the closing words of the section, 'as if the act (meaning the whole act) were done by him alone with that...intention.[17] From this it would appear that the introduction of the words 'in furtherance of the common intention of all' into s 34 has caused a certain overlapping with s 35 . In those cases where, on facts, common intention is, as it may very well be, exactly the same in its actual range as the mens rea needed to convert the criminal act into an offence, the same principle is contained in s 35 as it stated in s 34 .[18] Where beating results in death of the victim and each of250 the assailants possess the knowledge that death is the likely consequence of the criminal act, i.e., the beating, there is no reason whys 34 or s 35 should not be read with the second part of s 304, IPC to make each assailant liable individually.[19]

4. 'Act which is Criminal'

Section 35 like s 34 of the IPC assumes that a criminal act has been committed. It says 'an act, which is criminal', except in the grammatical structure of the phrase, there is no difference between these words and the expression 'criminal act' which is what occurs in s 34 .[20]

5. Distinction between Sections 34-35

It may be noted that the expression 'in furtherance of the common intention of all' which is found in s 34 is absent in s 35 . The latter section deals with an act which is criminal only by reason of its being done with a criminal knowledge or intention. Thus s 35 applies also to a case of criminal knowledge whereas s 34 does not. Again the 'common intention' required by s 34 is different from the mens rea mentioned s 35 . Synopsis notes under s 34 under same heading may be referred to.

12 Ghurey v Rex AIR 1949 All 342, p 345, 50 Cr LJ 535, (1949) All LJ 87 .

13 Mallappa Shivappa v State of Mysore (1961) 2 Cr LJ 515, (1961) Mys LJ 293 .

14 Keshub Mahindra v State of Madhya Pradesh JT (1996) 8 SC 136 .

15 Ibra Akanda v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, p 362, per Khundkar J.

16 Adam Ali Taluqdar v King-Emperor AIR 1927 Cal 325, p 325-26 .

17 Ibra Akanda v King-Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, p 362 .

18 Ibid, p 363.

19 Abrahim Sheikh v State of West Bengal AIR 1964 SC 1263, p 1268, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 350 .

20 Ibra Akanda v King-Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, p 362, 45 CLJ 771, 48 CWN 336 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 36.

Effect caused partly by act and partly by omission.--

Wherever the causing of a certain effect, or an attempt to cause that effect, by an act or by an omission, is an offence, it is to be understood that the causing of that effect partly by an act and partly by an omission is the same offence.

Illustration

A intentionally causes Z's death, partly by illegally omitting to give Z food, and partly by beating Z. A has committed murder.

Comments

1. Scope

This section can be better understood keeping in view the provisions of s 32 of the IPC . The legal nature and consequences of an 'act' and of an 'omission' being identical,[21] it follows that it matters not in the eye of the law whether the criminal injury (e.g., murder) be caused either by an act (e.g., beating), or by an omission or omissions, (e.g., starving), or partly by one and partly by the other (e.g., beating and starving). This is what is pointed out by s 36 .[22] Sometimes there may be more than one factor contributing to the damage and the ultimate result may be on account of interplay of several factors. When causes are in a chain the last and nearest to the occurrence may be treated as proximate and efficient cause but there may be cases where the causes are not in a chain but like a net interlinked, interwoven, overlapping and so interdependent on each other that without one or the other, the ultimate incident could not have been taken place. The entire net then is the 'causa causans'.[23]251

21 Synopsis notes under ss 32 - 33 .

22 King-Emperor v Barendra Kumar Ghosh AIR 1924 Cal 257, p 273 (FB), 25 Cr LJ 817, 28 CWN 170 .

23 Sushil Ansal v State (2002) Cr LJ 1369 (Del) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 37.

Co-operation by doing one of several acts constituting an offence.--

When an offence is committed by means of several acts, whoever intentionally co-operates in the commission of that offence by doing any one of those acts, either singly or jointly with any other person, commits that offence.

Illustrations

(a) A and B agree to murder Z by severally and at different times giving him small doses of poison. A and B administer the poison according to the agreement with intent to murder Z. Z dies from the effects of the several doses of poison so administered to him. Here A and B intentionally co-operate in the commission of murder and as each of them does an act by which the death is caused, they are both guilty of the offence though their acts are separate.

(b) A and B are joint jailors, and as such have the charge of Z, a prisoner, alternatively for six hours at a time. A and B, intending to cause Z's death, knowingly co-operate in causing that effect by illegally omitting, each during the time of his attendance, to furnish Z with food supplied to them for that purpose. Z dies of hunger. Both A and B are guilty of the murder of Z.

(c) A, a jailor, has the charge of Z, a prisoner. A, intending to cause Z's death, illegally omits to supply Z with food; in consequence of which Z is much reduced in strength, but the starvation is not sufficient to cause his death. A is dismissed from his office, and B succeeds him. B, without collusion or co-operation with A, illegally omits to supply Z with food, knowing that he is likely thereby to cause Z's death. Z dies of hunger. B is guilty of murder, but, as A did not co-operate with B, A is guilty only of an attempt to commit murder.

Comments

1. Scope

Section 37 of the IPC deals with the liability of a person who intentionally co-operates in the commission of an offence.[24]It deals with cooperation between several accused persons in the completion of a criminal act.[25] It provides that when several acts are done so as to result together in the commission of an offence, the doing of any one of them, with an intention to co-operate in the offence (which may not be the same as an intention common to all), makes the actor liable to be punished for the commission of the offence.[26] The principle is that any one supplying a link (by way of an act or omission) to the chain, or series of acts or omissions which causes the evil, is liable for that consequent evil as if he were the author of the whole chain of acts and omissions.

2. Section Commences with Certain Assumptions

Section 37 of the IPC commences by assuming that an offence has been committed, which implies a criminal act plus *mens rea.*It further assumes that the criminal act is made up of distinct acts done by different persons as exemplified in the illustration.252 And then it provides that each of those persons is guilty of the offence, provided he performed his own act with the mens rea which the offence requires. This mens rea as the Privy Council pointed out in Barendra Kumar Ghose v King-Emperor ,[27] need not necessarily be the same thing as the intention common to all, or in other words the purpose by which all the performers were animated. Looked at from one point of view, the section, in effect, says that in the circumstances assumed, it is no defence for the doer of any of the distinct acts, who had the *mens rea*for the offence, to say that as his own act was one entire completed act, the offence which was constituted by the totality of all the separate acts of the individual performers, was not his offence.[28]

3. 'Whoever Intentionally Co-operates'

If, as pointed out by the Privy Council in Barendra Kumar Ghose v King-Emperor ,[29] the intentional co-operation mentioned in this section is not the same as a common intention, it must include action which contributes to the offence and is done with the consciousness that the offence is on the same footing, though without sharing the intention to commit that offence.[30]

Where several offenders by diverse acts and with prior concert chased the deceased, throwing him to the ground and beating him to death, the conviction of all offenders under s 304, Pt II read with s 34 was held legal, notwithstanding that s 304, Pt II speaks only of knowledge, while s 34 deals with common intention.[31]

Where the two accused rushed at the deceased, the first accused striking him savagely with a heavy stick, held in both hands, and the second accused smashing his skull by a blow dealt with a stone, not thrown as a missile but held firmly in second accused's hands, it was held that the attack was a single indivisible thing in which the first accused intentionally co-operated in the commission of the murder and that both of them were, by virtue of this section, liable for the result which ensued.[32]

4. Co-operation may be by Active Participation or a Passive One

The co-operation required by the section need not be by active participation, it may be of a passive character. As Lord Sumner pointed out in Barendra Kumar Ghose v King-Emperor ,[33] in crime as in other things 'they also serve who only stand and wait'.

5. Distinction between Sections 34 and 37

Notes under the same heading in s 34 may be referred to.

24 Emperor v Itwa Munda AIR 1938 Pat 258, 39 Cr LJ 554 (SB) .

25 Abrahim Sheikh v State of West Bengal AIR 1964 SC 1263, p 1267, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 431 .

26 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7, 52 IA 40 .

27 Barendra Kumar Ghose v King-Emperor 52 IA 40, AIR 1925 PC 1, 26 Cr LJ 431 .

28 Ibra Akanda v King-Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, p 362, per Khundkhar J.

29 Barendra Kumar Ghose v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 .

30 *Emperor c Itwa Munda*AIR 1938 Pat 258, p 262 (SB), per Dhavle J.

31 Afrahim Sheikh v State of West Bengal AIR 1964 SC 1263, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 350 (SC) .

32 Subbappa Channapa v Emperor 14 CR LJ 235, 15 Bom LR 303 .

33 Barendra Kumar Ghose v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 7 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 38.

Persons concerned in criminal act may be guilty of different offences.--

Where several persons are engaged or concerned in the commission of a criminal act, they may be guilty of different offences by means of that act.

253Illustration

A attacks Z under such circumstances of grave provocation that his killing of Z would be only culpable homicide not amounting to murder. B, having ill-will towards Z and intending to kill him, and not having been subject to the provocation, assists A in killing Z. Here, though A and B are both engaged in causing Z's death, B is guilty of murder, and A is guilty only of culpable homicide.

Comments

1. Scope

Section 38 of the IPC is the converse of s 34 of the IPC and provides for different punishments for different offences where several persons are concerned in the commission of a criminal act, whether such persons are actuated by one intention or the other.[34]Sections 34 and 35 deal with cases in which the joint completed act is one offence. But as one criminal act may be done by one person with one intention or mens rea and by another with some other mens rea, it is possible that the same criminal act may in law amount to one offence in the case of one fractional doer, and another offence in the case of another. The tail here is taken up by s 38, which deals with several fractional doers of a joint act in circumstances where it is possible that one had one kind of mens rea and the other had another.[35] When several persons are engaged or concerned in the commission of a criminal act, they may be guilty of different offences by means of that act.[36]

2. Responsibility for the Completed Act may be of Different Grades

Section 38 of the IPC applies where a criminal act is jointly done by several persons and several persons have different intentions or states of knowledge in doing of joint act.[37] The section provides that the responsibility for the completed act may be of the different grades according to the share taken by the different accused in the compilation of the criminal act; the section does not mention anything about the intention, common or otherwise or knowledge.[38]

Where the evidence on record only indicated that both the accused had joined in the beating of the victim (i.e., the thief who had gone to their field to steal the crop), as a result of which he died, and they had no intention to kill him, it was held that s 38 was applicable and each of the accused was responsible for the individual acts, committed by him.[39] Where the death of the victim was as a result of the criminal acts, committed by accused P and H in furtherance of their common intention; and B254 intentionally joined in the commission of an act with the knowledge that the assault on the victim was likely to result in his death it was held that P and H could be convicted for murder with the aid of s 34 and B could be convicted under s 304, Pt II with the aid of s 38 .[40]

The accused A2 and A3 caught hold of the deceased and the accused A1 swiftly took out knife from his waist and stabbed the deceased causing death. Held, the acts on the part of A2 and A3 stood on a different footing than the act committed by A1. The common intention to attack the deceased was there in the mind of A2 and A3 along with A1. They suddenly jumped together in front of the deceased. It stood proved that all the appellants came together and they wanted to attack the deceased. A2 and A3 were having knowledge that their acts alongwith the acts of A1 were likely to cause the death of the deceased. At the same time, an intention to commit murder could not be attributed to A2 and A3. Apart from catching hold of the deceased and stopping him, A2 and A3 had not attacked the deceased. Applying the principle of law under s 38 of IPC, the case of A2 and A3 can be separated from that of A1. A2 and A3 can be held guilty only under s 304, Pt II, IPC as they had intentionally joined in the commission of an act, with the knowledge that the assault of the deceased was likely to result in his death. A1 was convicted under s 302, IPC, while the A2 and A3 were convicted under s 304, Pt II read with s 34, IPC .[41]

3. Principle of Section 38 Applies to Offences under Section 149

The effect of s 149 of the IPC may be different in the case of different members of the same assembly.[42] So the principle of s 38 applies to offences under s 149 and the liability of individual members of an unlawful assembly depends on the intention or knowledge of the members.[43]

4. Distinction between Section 34 and Section 38

Notes under the s 34, [ante] may be referred to.

34 Sultan v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 749, p 750, 32 Cr LJ 1219 ; Mallappa Shivappa Kankanwadi v State of Mysore (1961) 2 Cr LJ 515, p 517, (1961) Mys LJ 293 ; Ibra Akanda v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, p 362-63, 45 Cr LJ 771, per Khundhkar J; State v Bhimshankar (1968) Cr LJ 898, AIR 1968 Bom 254 ; Ajith Kumar v State of Kerala 2014 Cr LJ 2313 (Ker) (DB) .

35 Ibra Akanda v Emperor AIR 1944 Cal 339, p 362-63, per Khundhkar J.

36 Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King-Emperor AIR 1925 PC 1, p 6, 26 Cr LJ 431 .

37 State v Bhimshankar 1968 Cr LJ 898, p 903, AIR 1968 Bom 254 ; Bala Nandan Sharma v State of Assam AIR 1977 SC 2252, (1977) Cr LJ 1930 .

38 Abrahim Sheikh v State of West Bengal AIR 1964 SC 1263, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 350, p 353 .

39 Re Mallappa(1961) 2 Cr LJ 515, p 517, (1961) Mys LJ 293.

40 Baba Nandan Sharma v State of Assam (1977) Cr LJ 1930, AIR 1977 SC 2252, p 2254 .

41 Ajithkumar v State of Kerala 2014 Cr LJ 2313, p 2320, 2321) (Ker) (DB) ; Bhaba Nanda Sharma v State of Assam AIR 1977 SC 2252, 1977 Cr LJ 1930, and Afrahim Sheikh v State of West Bengal AIR 1964 SC 1263, 1964 Cr LJ 350, relied on.

42 Queen Empress v Sabid Ali 20 WR 5, p 11 (Cr), Beng LR 147 (FB), per Phear J; Behari v Emperor AIR 1924 All 670, 26 Cr LJ 154 ; Barakan Singh v Emperor AIR 1920 Oudh 152, 22 Cr LJ 279 ; Ahmed v Emperor AIR 1927 Sind 108 .

43 Bhagwat Singh v Emperor AIR 1936 Pat 481, p 485, 37 Cr LJ 630 ; dissenting fromRam Prasad Singh v Emperor* AIR 1923 Pat 50, 24 Cr LJ 65 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 39.

"Voluntarily".--

A person is said to cause an effect "voluntarily" when he causes it by means whereby he intended to cause it, or by means which, at the time of employing those means, he knew or had reason to believe to be likely to cause it.

Illustration

A sets fire, by night, to an inhabited house in a large town, for the purpose of facilitating a robbery and thus causes the death of a person. Here, A may not have intended to cause death, and may even be sorry that death has been caused by his act; yet, if he knew that he was likely to cause death, he has caused death voluntarily.255

Comments

1. Scope

This section expresses in detail the well known rule of law that a man is presumed to intend the probable consequences of his act and, therefore, in performing the act he voluntarily causes the consequences. The maxim that everyone must be taken to intend the natural consequences of his acts is incorporated in the definition of 'voluntarily' in s 39, and thus made applicable in every section where that word is used.[44]

A bare reading of this section shows that person need not intend to cause a certain effect. If an act is probable consequence of the means used by him, he is said to have caused it voluntarily whether he really means to cause it or not. The section implicitly lays down the principle that a man is presumed to intend the probable consequences of his act.[45]

2. Definition of 'Voluntarily'

This is an important section, and one to which frequent reference must be made while studying the IPC . The question for criminal law to decide in each case is: 'Is A liable for the consequences (i.e., the 'effect') of his conduct?' The reply is, 'A is liable for those consequences or effects, if he caused them voluntarily, unless he is justified or excused by law in acting as he did'. See the General Note prefixed to ch 4.

'Voluntarily' is defined in s 39 of the IPC as an act done to cause the effect whereby the doer intended to cause that effect, (or he knew or had reason to believe that the effect would be that). The word is given a peculiar meaning which is different from the widely understood ordinary meaning of it. The word 'voluntarily' is thus to be understood in relation to the causation of effects and not to the doing of acts from which those effects result. Hence, if the accused were unaware that the person whom they confined was a public servant, offence under s 332 is not attracted.[46]

This section defines the term 'voluntarily' with reference to the causation of effects and not with reference to volition. The word 'voluntarily' has, for the purpose of the IPC, been given an artificial meaning at variance with its ordinary sense. The definition overlooks the difference between 'intention' and 'knowledge of likelihood'. The Indian law commissioners justified the definition on the ground that as the penal consequences in the two cases is the same, the distinction between the256 two terms is a distinction without a difference.[47] It is stated in Halsbury's Laws of England:[48]

> For the purpose of criminal law, an act or omission is voluntary if it might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care; thus a negligent act or omission is willed, because the person responsible does not will to prevent the commission or omission.

Voluntary offenders will include not only those who directly intend to inflict a particular injury, but also all such as willfully and knowingly incur the hazard of causing it.[49]

> The proper test of guilty in such cases is that of knowledge and consciousness on the part of the malefactor that damage is likely to result or will probably result from what he does; his criminality consists in the willfully incurring the risk of causing loss or suffering to others. The case of a party so misconducting himself; and so regardless of the interest of others seems to be indistinguishable in point of legal guilt and penal consequences from that of a criminal who acts with the most direct intention to execute an illegal purpose, and it seems to us that he may properly be described as the voluntary author of the mischief produced.[50]

3. Intention and Knowledge may be Express or Implied

This section defines the term 'voluntarily' by applying to it the test of 'intention'. The intention may be express or implied. It is express if the agent expects a given consequence as a result of his act. It is implied if he has knowledge of the likelihood of the consequence. A person does not intend what is merely a possible result of his action, or a result which, though reasonably certain, is not known to be so. But it must be presumed that when a man voluntarily does an act, knowing at the time, that in the natural course of events, a certain result will follow, he intends bringing about that result.[51] Knowledge may also be express or implied, i.e., a man may actually realise that a given consequence is likely to happen or he may have reason to believe so, though he actually did not realise the fact. No distinction is made, in law, between these states of mind, coupled with an act, each constitutes voluntary conduct.[52] If A strikes B on the head with a heavy stick, and thereby kills B, and, as a an ordinary reasonable human being, he had reason to believe that his stoke would be likely to kill B, it is of no avail to urge in defence that as a fact he did not know that such was likely or that he did not intend to kill B.

Intention or knowledge of the offender may be determined from the nature of the injury, the weapon used, the part of the victim's body attacked, force used and other related circumstances.[53]

4. Means of Committing Crime

The word 'means' in the section means an act or omission. It has been seen in the notes under ss 32 - 33 of the IPC that the means or physical conduct by which crimes257 or penal consequences are brought about consist of intentional doing or non-doing, or of unintentional non-doing, or, in other words, of acts for positive conduct; of forbearance (or 'omission' in the language of the IPC) or negative conduct, and of negligence.

5. Criminal Responsibility Depends on Mental Attitude Towards Consequences or Degree of Negligence

Now whether the agent is criminally responsible for the consequences of his conduct depends upon his mental attitude towards those consequences, in the case of acts and omission, and upon the degree of his negligence in the third case. Thus, in this section the word 'means' signifies acts and omissions only, for it is clear that the agent who is guilty of a negligent act can have no mental attitude whatever towards the consequences of a non-act of which he is unconscious, and thus cannot cause those consequences voluntarily. Therefore, the criminality of negligence consists in the non-doing of that which ought to have been done, and not, as in the case of acts or omissions, in the mental attitude towards the consequences of the conduct. Refer to notes under s 33, ante.

6. Three States of Mind Constitute Voluntary Attitude Towards Consequences

A person who acts or omits to act may or may not possess a mental attitude towards the consequences of his act or omission i.e., he may or may not think about them. In the former case his conduct is either voluntary or rash; in the latter it is heedless. Section 39 of the IPC sets out the three states of mind which constitute a voluntary attitude towards the consequences of given conduct. In rashness, the party guilty of a rash act neither intends evil, nor does he know that evil is likely, nor has he reason to believe that it is likely. On the contrary, he does not think that evil will ensue. He thinks of the probable consequences of his act or omission, but from insufficient advertence, assumes that they will not ensue.[54] He does think about the consequences (although insufficiently) and it is this fact which distinguishes 'rashness' from 'heedlessness' for in 'heedlessness' the person acts because he does not think about the probable consequences of his conduct at all.[55]

In present systems of law, however, this distinction does not seem to be made, and in the IPC . 'heedlessness' is included in the term 'rashness', which thus signifies an insufficient advertence or complete inadvertence on the part of the agent to the consequences of his conduct. And this state of mind is contrasted with 'negligence', which denotes entire inadvertence to some act which ought to have been performed and, a fortiori, to the consequences of its non-performance. As Holloway J, pointed out in R v Widamarts Naga Ulurshanam :[56]

> Culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow, but with the hope that they may not, and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precautions to prevent their happening. The imputability arises from acting despite the consciousness. Culpable negligence is acting without the consciousness that the illegal or mischievous effect will follow, but in circumstances which show that the actor has not exercised the caution incumbent upon258 him, and that, if he had, he would have had the consciousness. The imputability arises from the neglect of the civic duty of circumspection.

An act or omission must be treated as a voluntary act or omission, for the purpose of criminal law, if it may have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care. Therefore, negligent acts or omissions are to be treated as voluntary acts or omissions. One R, who was the proper driver and in control of a lorry carrying passengers allowed H, a minor, with full knowledge that H did not know driving well, to drive the lorry so rashly and negligently as to endanger the lives and personal safety of the passengers inspite of the requests of the passengers. R was sitting by the side of H when the accident took place and some passengers suffered grievous hurt, it was held that R was liable as a principal offender under the provisions of s 114 . In fact, he was the person driving through the hand and instrumentality of boy H to whom he had consciously and knowingly given the steering wheel. Therefore, he intentionally aided him (both by not preventing him from driving as well as by allowing him to drive) in his act endangering human life and personal safety of others likely to cause hurt or injury to them. Therefore, R was himself liable to be punished for offence under ss 338 and 279, IPC .[57]

7. Three Forms of Mens Rea

According to Salmond:

> There are in reality three forms of mens rea or fault: (1) that in which the consequences are foreseen and wrongfully intended, (2) that in which they are not intended but are foreseen and should have been avoided, and (3) that in which they are neither foreseen nor intended, but ought to have been foreseen and avoided. In the present work (1) is called intention, (2) is called advertent negligence (or recklessness), and (3) is called inadvertent negligence...

> The practical importance of the distinction between (2) and (3) is that, as already seen, recklessness is frequently for legal purposes classed with intention.[58]

Thus all crimes consist of voluntary acts or omissions; or negligent non-action, or, adopting the language of the IPC which makes 'act' include 'omission' (s 32), crimes consist of voluntary acts, rash acts or negligence.

Crimes Usually Consist of Voluntary Acts

The great majority of crimes, consist of voluntary acts, since the very consequences of the agents conduct constitute his primary motive for the crime; and of these the large majority are the product of acts or positive conduct, and not doing something, and not by leaving something undone.

8. Provisions of Code Relating to Rashness and Negligence

Rashness and negligence accompanying an act or omission are punishable under the following provisions of the Code:

(i) Irrespectively of any consequence, if their effect is to endanger human life or the personal safety of other persons (refer to s 336).259

If the act or omission is one connected with certain prima facie dangerous occupations (riding and driving navigation, use of poisons, combustibles, explosives, machinery, the constructing or pulling down of buildings, and the care of animals) then the rash or negligent conduct is punished more severely (refer to ss 279 - 289). Negligence in respect to the custody of prisoners and their consequent escape is punishable under ss 129, 223 and 225A (refer to also s 269, negligence in matters affecting the public health.)

(ii) If hurt (s 319) is the result of rashness or negligence which renders an act or omission dangerous to human life or the personal safety of others, then the offence falls under s 337 ; and if grievous hurt (s 320) be the result, then the offence is punishable under s 338 .

(iii) Finally, if death is caused by any rash or negligent act, the offence falls under s 304A .[59]

9. Intention and Knowledge of Consequences

It is clear from a perusal of the various sections of the Code that a difference has been drawn between 'intention' and 'knowledge of consequences', and that the Code takes notice of actual and not presumed intention in determining criminality, though in determining what a man's actual intention was, courts can raise all inferences that can be fairly drawn from his acts. When an act is made an offence by reason of its having been committed with a specified intention, the intention has to be found as a matter of fact upon evidence which justifies the inference that the accused had the intention required to render his action criminal. When proof of intention is necessary it is clear that, unless the accused admits that his intention was such as would render him guilty of the offence charged, intention, which is a psychological fact, can only be proved by having regard to the nature of the act he commits, and a criminal intent is often presumed from acts which are reasonably susceptible of but one interpretation. The rule of law that a man must be taken to intend the natural consequences of his act is really a rule of evidence. The court is not bound to accept the statement of the accused as to his intention but may find the same from the facts what his intention was, and in order to arrive at a conclusion may hold that when a man uses means which at the time he used them knew or had reason to believe to be likely to cause a result, his intention was to cause the result.

Where the accused was charged with adulterating liquor with methyl alcohol, a poisonous substance, the consumption of liquor resulted in death and permanent loss of eyesight of several persons, the accused pleading that they had no knowledge that the effect of consumption of the adulterated liquor would be so injurious. It was held that the contention of the accused was not sustainable as adulteration itself was an illegal act under the Kerala Abkari Act and having regard to the percentage of methyl alcohol, the poisonous substance, in the liquor, it is clear that the persons responsible for mixing the same had knowledge that consumption of liquor was likely to cause very serious adverse effects and the fact that all the consumers were not adversely affected is not material and the accused were held to have voluntarily caused grievous hurt under s 326 read with s 39, IPC .[60]260

As pointed out by Sir William Markby,[61] expectation that a consequence would follow or a knowledge that it is likely to follow, without any desire that should follow is an attitude of mind which is distinct from intention, and the framers of the Act clearly keep the two distinct and treat knowledge as a state of mind differing from intention. In some sections, e.g., ss 118 - 20, 153 - 54, 217, 293, etc, the words used are: 'intending or knowing it to be likely'. In others only intention is referred to e.g., in ss 124, 140, 174 - 76, 193, 211, 509, etc. In some sections the word used is 'knows' as in ss 127, 130, 188, 196, 260, etc, in some the words are 'knowing' or 'having reason to believe' or 'believing' e.g., in ss 136, 181 - 83, 201 - 03, 499, etc. In some the words are 'reason to believe' e.g., in ss 155 and 156 and in others 'for the purpose of', e.g., ss 189 - 90 . In s 298, the words used are 'deliberate intention'.[62]

10. Intent and Knowledge of Likelihood--Law Commissioners' View

The Law Commissioners expressly said:

> The Commissioners saw clearly the difference between 'intent' and 'knowledge of likelihood' and meant to express it distinctly in order to avoid the necessity of fiction in laying a charge as for example by imputing 'intent' constructively when the circumstances imply only 'a knowledge of likelihood', advisedly intending as they did that there should be no distinction in general, in respect of penal consequences between cases in which a man causes an effect which is an offence designedly, and cases in which he causes it by doing what 'he knows is likely to cause it'. Advisedly intending this in general they worded the enactment so that the charge may be always expressed in according to the truth.[63]

11. 'Reason to Believe'

This expression means sufficient cause to believe (refer to notes under s 26).

12. 'Likely'

An effect is 'likely' to take place when there is a likelihood of its being caused, and likelihood is distinguishable from mere possibility. A thing is possible when it may happen; likely when the chances are in favour of its happening, and probable when the chances are strongly in its favour. Thus probability is the stronger degree of likelihood. A thing may, therefore, be likely without being probable, though a thing probable must be likely.

44 Vullappa v Bheema Row AIR 1918 Mad 136, p 139 (FB) .

45 Meeru Bhatia Prasad v State (2002) Cr LJ 1674 (Del) .

46 Abdul Majeed & Anor v State of Kerala (1994) Cr LJ 1404 (Ker) .

47 First Report, s 101 .

48 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 9, second edn, p 10, fn (h); cited in Ram Rup v Crown AIR 1951 Punj 418, p 419 .

49 English Law Commissioner's Seventh Report, s 22, approved and followed in First Report, s 105 .

50 Ibid, s 23, cited in First Report, s 106 .

51 R v Lakshman 26 ILR Bom 558 ; Sell Muthu v Pallamuthu 12 Cr LJ 30, p 31 ; R v Sunku Seethiah 11 Cr LJ 400, 4 ILR Mad 92 ; Killikykyetra Bomma v R 14 Cr LJ 207 .

52 R v Sunku Seethiah 11 Cr LJ 400 .

53 Shyamlal v State of Uttar Pradesh (1968) 2 SCWR 801, p 804 .

54 Austin's Jurisprudence, Lecture 20, pp 440-41.

55 Ibid.

56 R v Widamarts Naga Ulurshanam 7 Mad HCR 119, p 120 .

57 Ram Rup v Crown AIR 1951 Punj 419, (1952) Cr LJ 930 (Punj) (DB) .

58 Salmond's Jurisprudence, 1947 edn, p 393.

59 R v Morgan 36 ILR Cal 302, 9 Cr LJ 393 .

60 EK Chandrasenan v State of Kerala (1995) 2 SCC 99 .

61 Elements of Law, para 222.

62 Vullappa v Bheema Row AIR 1918 Mad 136(2) (FB) ; Bageshwari Devi v Indian Union AIR 1950 Pat 295 ; Brij Mohan Lal v Emperor AIR 1947 All 61 ; Gaya Bhan v Emperor AIR 1916 All 152 ; Queen-Empress v Rayapadayachi 19 ILR Mad 240 ; Emperor v SD' Cunha AIR 1936 Bom 15 .

63 First Report, s 100 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[64][S. 40.

"Offence".--

Except in the [65][Chapters] and sections mentioned in clauses 2 and 3 of this section, the word "offence" denotes a thing made punishable by this Code.

In Chapter IV, [66][Chapter VA] and in the following sections, namely, sections [67][64, 65, 66, [68][67], 71], 109, 110, 112, 114, 115, 116, 117, [69][118, 119 and 120],261 187, 194, 195, 203, 211, 213, 214, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 347, 348, 388, 389 and 445, the words "offence" denotes a thing punishable under this Code, or under any special or local law as hereinafter defined.

And in sections 141, 176, 177, 201, 202, 212, 216 and 441, the word "offence" has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months or upwards, whether with or without fine.

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

In para 2 of s 40, after the figures 117, new figures (118, 119 and 120) have been inserted by the Information Technology (Amendment) Act 2008 (10 of 2009) (wef 27-10-2009).

2. 'Definition': Its History and Scope

As a general rule the word 'offence' denotes a thing made punishable by the IPC, but not a breach of a 'special' or local law.

Under s 2, things, punishable by the IPC are acts or omissions; (a) 'contrary to the provisions thereof'; and (b) 'committed within the territories of India'. The word 'offence' has thus a two-fold limitation; it is limited to breaches of a particular body of law, viz, the IPC, and to breaches of such law within a certain territory, viz, India.[70] Therefore apart from special exceptions, nothing is an 'offence', and punishable under the IPC, unless it satisfies these two conditions. But special exceptions have been made to the second or territorial limitation, by ss 3 - 4 of this IPC,[71] and by s 188 of the CrPC .[72]

'Offence' means 'an act or instance of offending'; 'commit an illegal act' and illegal means, contrary to or forbidden by law'. 'Offence' has to be read and understood in the context as it has been prescribed under the provisions of ss 40, 41 and 42, IPC which cover the offences punishable under IPC or under special or local law or as defined under s 2(n) CrPC or s 3(38) of the General Clauses Act 1897.[73]262

This section provides certain exceptions to the first limitation, by extending the term 'offence' in certain cases to things made punishable by any 'special' or 'local' Law. The provision for these exceptions was not to be found in the IPC as originally enacted, but was introduced for the first time by s 1 of Act 27 of 1870. The effect of the amendment is to enlarge the scope of the IPC by making offences under special laws also offences under the IPC . The result, therefore, was that offences under the Excise Act 1896, under the Explosive Substances Act 1908, the Police Act 1861, under the Registration Act 1908, or under the Arms Act 1959[74] also became offences under the IPC .[75]In these Acts, the abetment of certain offences has been provided for as a substantive offence for which reference may be made to s 70 of the Post Office Act, s 12 of the Explosives Act, s 6 of the Explosive Substances Act, s 82 of the Registration Act and s 36 of the Police Act. Therefore, if we read this section in conjunction with the relevant penal sections of the special or local Acts,[76] it would follow that:

(i) all acts or omissions in contravention of special or local Acts which are punishable under the said Acts, fall under the definition of 'offence' in the IPC ; and
(ii) abatement of offences which are offences under the special or local Acts and are punishable under the said Acts, also fall under this definition of 'offence'.

But an abetment of an offence committed in foreign territory is not an offence punishable under this IPC .[77]

The scope of this definition has been further enlarged by an explanatory definition added to s 216 which provides for the punishment of a person who harbours an offender.

The definition of 'offence' in s 2(n) CrPC is only applicable for the purpose of the CrPC and is not applicable to the IPC .[78]

There are three essential attributes of criminal offence: (i) the crime is an act of commission or omission on the part of human being, which is considered harmful by the State; (ii) the transgression of such harmful act is prevented by the threat or sanction of punishment administered by the State; and (iii) the guilt of the accused is determined after the accusation against him has been investigated in legal proceeding of a special kind in accordance with established procedure contained in the relevant provisions of law.[79]

3. Offences under Special or Local Law

Nothing contained in the Amending Act 27 of 1870, which added the second and third clauses to s 40 is to be taken to effect any of the provisions of any special or local law.[80]Section 5 clearly declares that the IPC is not intended to repeal, vary, suspend or263 affect any of the provisions of any special or local law. The one enactment has not the effect of repealing the other. The two co-exist without conflict. In order to leave no doubt on this point, the law on the subject has been declared by the express provisions of s 26, General Clauses Act 1897, which provides that where an act or omission constitutes an offences under two or more enactments, the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence. It is clear, therefore, that where an act is punishable under a special law and also under a general statute, the offender could be proceeded with under either or both but not twice for the same act or omission which constituted the offence. Where there is nothing in the special Act to exclude the operation of the general criminal law, it cannot be inferred that there was an intention on the part of the legislature to exclude it.[81]

4. Definition of 'Offence' in other Enactments

The definition of 'offence' in this section differs somewhat materially from the definition in s 2(o) of the CrPC under which 'offence' means any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force'. This definition is the same as in s 3(38) of the General Clauses Act 1897. It may be noted that this definition is much wider than the definition in this section, under which 'offence' denotes anything made punishable only by the IPC or by any special or local law, whereas under the two other enactments it means an act or omission made 'punishable by any law for the time being in force'. To constitute an offence under these two enactments all that is necessary is that the act or omission should have been made punishable by a law enacted by a legislature or by a body of persons authorised to do so[82] and that the law must be in force in the territories of India.[83]

From a reading of s 2(n), CrPC and s 40, IPC, it is clear that s 40, IPC refers to offences prescribed by IPC while s 2(n), CrPC, refers to offences under different laws, apart from those under the IPC . Thus, the definition of 'offence' under s 2(n), CrPC is wide enough to enable the police to investigate offences under other enactments also, apart from those under the IPC .[84]

The word 'offence' as used in the Extradition Act 1879 is not restricted to the definition of 'offence' in the IPC or in the CrPC .[85]

5. Clause 1--'Thing Made Punishable by the Code'

The word 'offence' is not used in its ordinary meaning but has a technical meaning in the IPC . Section 40 says that, 'except in the chapters and sections mentioned in clauses 2-3, of this section the word 'offence' denotes a thing made punishable by this Code'. It follows that an act or omission is not an 'offence' under the IPC if it is punishable only under some other enactment. Reading ss 40, 43 and 176 together it follows that, though failure to furnish information is an offence under s 10 of the Mussalman Wakf Act 1923 (as amended) in Bombay by the Mussalman Wakf (Bombay Amendment) Act 1935, yet it is not an offence punishable under the IPC .[86]264

In Emperor v Moorga Chetty ,[87] Melville J, observed:

There is an inaccuracy in section 40 . 'A thing' meaning an act or omission, is not susceptible of punishment. What is meant is 'a thing for which he who is guilty of it, is punishable'. It had been provided already in sections 2, 3 and 4, what persons, in what places acting contrary to the Code, might be punished under it. What remained was to define the acts themselves. They are the things which make the person punishable--things' determined by themselves as having the particular attribute, and thus fulfilling one, not all, of the three requisites as to person, place and quality of the act done. It is obvious, indeed, that an 'act or omission' having no corporeal existence has really no locality, fills no place in space, but is merely a movement or abstinence from movement of one who does fill such a place. Locality is, therefore, rightly connected in the Code with the person and the general conditions of possible responsibility. These being ascertained, the definitions or descriptions follow the acts and omissions themselves, abstracted generally from time and place (and indeed from personality also), which in each case induce punishableness. These are offences, though a personal or local condition of liability may be wanting.

6. Things Punishable and Preventive Remedies

The IPC defines an offence as a 'thing punishable', and (a) a 'thing' (compare ss 32 - 33 of the IPC) must be an act, or a series of illegal acts or an illegal omissions, or a series of illegal omission; or, to use the words of Mr Bentham, 'we give the name of offence to every act which we think ought to be prohibited by reason of some evil which it produces or tends to produce'; (b) 'punishable' must mean that the commission or omission of the act, the commission or omission of which is prohibited renders the person who commits or omits it liable to the sanction of the law, i.e., to 'punishment'.

An order under s 118 of the CrPC, to furnish security is what Bentham calls a 'preventive remedy', as contrasted with a 'penal remedy' or a 'punishment'. Mr Bentham defines 'punishment' as an evil resulting to an individual from the direct intention of another, on account of some act that appears to have been done or omitted'; and he adds: 'An evil resulting to an individual, although it be from the direct intention of another, if it be not on account of some act that has been done or omitted, is not a 'punishment'.'[88]

7. Certain Provisions are not Offences

An order for payment of maintenance is not a conviction for an 'offence'.[89] The offence under r 35, Defence of India Rules 1939, is not an offence defined in this section.[90] A complaint under s 28 of the Bombay Public Conveyances Act 1887, is not a complaint in respect of an 'offence'.[91]Section 149 and ch 8, in which s 149 occurs, are not mentioned in cll (2) and (3) of this section and consequently the word 'offence' in s 149 means only an offence under the Penal Code, and does not include an offence, e.g., under the Railways Act.[92]265

8. Attempt to Commit Offence, if an Offence

An attempt to commit an offence is itself an offence within the definition of an offence as given in s 40, and where no express provision is made in any other part of the IPC for the punishment of such offence, it is punishable under s 511 .[1] But s 511 is omitted from s 40 . Therefore, unless an attempt to commit an offence under a special or local law has been expressly made punishable under the special or local law, it cannot be punished under the IPC .[2]

Suicide

The word suicide in itself is nowhere defined in the Indian Penal Code . 'Sui' means 'self' and 'cide' means 'killing', thus implying an act of self-killing. A person committing suicide must commit it by himself, irrespective of the means employed by him in achieving this object of killing himself.[3]

Suicide not Offence

Suicide by itself is not an offence under either the English or Indian Criminal Law, though at one time it was a felony in England. Attempt to commit suicide is an offence under s 309, IPC .[4]

9. Contempt of Court and Technical Offences

The contempt of a High Court is an offence though it may not be an offence under the IPC . The High Court being a court of record is the sole and exclusive judge of what amounts to contempt of court.[5] Though generally contempt of court as such is not an offence under the IPC but when the facts are covered by s 228, IPC, then in such cases it may be an offence under the IPC also.

The IPC does not exempt an act done under a mistake of law from the operation of the penal law but, it is obvious that if a person accepts the decision of a full Bench of the High Court in the state (from which no appeal has been preferred to the Supreme Court), as a guide to his conduct, he commits nothing more than a technical offence if that view is later not accepted as laying down the correct law.[6]

10. Clause 2 and Chapter IV

Section 79, IPC, comes within ch IV and, therefore, an offence to which that section refers, includes an offence under a local or special law.[7]Section 82 is in ch IV of the IPC and under cl (2) of this section the word 'offence' denotes a thing punishable under this IPC or under any special or local law. So the exemption under s 82 in266 favour of a child under seven years of age is not confined to offences made punishable by this IPC .[8]

11. Special or Local Law

Notes under ss 41 - 42 may be referred to.

12. Clause 2 and Section 109

The words 'punishment provided for the offence' in s 109 of the IPC, mean the punishment provided for the offence either in the IPC or in some special or local law: (ss 40 - 41 may be referred to).[9] Where a local law declares a breach of the rules made under its authority to be punishable, a breach of such rules might constitute an offence within the meaning of this section.[10] But a local law does not necessarily include a rule made under the provisions of a local law.[11]The abetment of a breach of the byelaws framed by a district council under the authority of the Burma Rural Self-Government Act is not punishable under s 109 of the IPC as it is not an abetment of an offence within the meaning of that section.[12]

13. Clause 3 and Section 216

No doubt s 216 is included in the sections mentioned in cl (3) of this section, but the definition of the word 'offence' in this section cannot affect the clear provision made in s 216 for the punishment of a person who harbours an offender. Section 216 very clearly provides for the punishment of harbourers only where the person harboured is wanted for an offence for which the minimum sentence of one year's imprisonment is provided. No provision whatever is made in s 216 for the punishment of a harbourer where the man harboured is wanted for an offence punishable with imprisonment of less than one year.[13]

14. Presumption that Mens Rea is an Integral Part of a Statutory Offence

There is a presumption that mens rea is an essential ingredient of a statutory offence. This may be rebutted by the express words of a statute creating the offence or by necessary implication.[14] It is a well settled principle of common law that mens rea is an essential ingredient of a criminal offence. Doubtless a statute can exclude that element, but it is a sound rule of construction adopted in England and also accepted in India to construe a statutory provision creating an offence in conformity with the common law rather than against it unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication excluded mens rea. But the mere fact that the object of a statute is to promote welfare activities or to eradicate grave social evils is in itself not decisive of the question whether the element of guilty mind is excluded from the ingredients of the offence. The nature of mens rea that will be implied in a statute creating an offence depends upon the object of the Act and the provisions thereof.[15]267

Mens rea (guilty intentions) is a very essential and important element/constituent of crime. Unless it is proved that the accused has the guilty intention, he cannot possibly be held guilty of committing the offence. In the instant case, the allegations were that the accused and co-accused (since deceased) were involved in illegal trade of kerosene. Twelve drums were recovered from a Tata vehicle, the deceased co-accused Y was driving the vehicle and the accused appellant R was seated by his side. There was not an iota of evidence on record to suggest or to involve the appellant in the crime in question. How, when, in what manner and to what extent, he was connected with the ownership, sale and recovery of kerosene, remains an unfolded mystery. The mere presence of surviving appellant in the vehicle and in the complete absence of prosecution evidence of intention (mens rea), specific role or overt act, the case of the prosecution was doubtful and deserved to be outrightly rejected. The conviction of the accused for contravention of the provisions of the Haryana Kerosene Dealers Licensing Order 1976 read with s 7 of the Essential Commodities Act 1955 was found not sustainable, and was set aside.[16]

15. No Conviction without Proving Mens Rea unless Provided Otherwise

The well established rule is that unless a statute clearly or by necessary implication rules out mens rea as a constituent part of crime, the accused could not be held guilty of an offence under a criminal law unless he has a guilty mind.[17] Thus the general rule is that to bring home the guilt to the accused the prosecution should also prove that the accused had a guilty mind in committing the offence.

64 Substituted by Act 27 of 1870, s 1, for the original section.

65 Substituted by Act 8 of 1930, s 2 and Sch I, for 'Chapter'.

66 Inserted by Act 8 of 1913, s 2 .

67 Inserted by Act 8 of 1882, s 1 .

68 Inserted by Act 10 of 1886, s 21(1) .

69 Inserted by the Information Technology (Amendment) Act, 2008 (10 of 2009), s 51 (w.e.f. 27-10-2009).

70 R v Moorga Chetty 5 ILR Bom 338, p 347 .

71 Notes under s 4 .

72 Indian Penal Code 1860, ss 2 - 4 and notes thereunder.

73 S Khushboo v Kanniammal 2010 Cr LJ 2828, p 2835, AIR 2010 SC 3196, (2010) 5 SCC 600, 2010 AIR SCW 2770 ; Standard Chartered Bank v Directorate of Enforcement AIR 2006 SC 1301, (2006) 4 SCC 278, 2006 (3) JT 421, 2006 (2) Scale 638 .

74 Ram Swarup v State (1972) Cr LJ 1159, (1972) All Cr R 49, (1972) All WR 287 (HC) .

75 Emperor v Joti Prasad AIR 1932 All 18, p 21 ; Kishnan Lal Sharma v Girish Chander Dutt 29 ILR Cal 496 .

76 Emperor v Joti Prasad AIR 1932 All 18, p 21 .

77 Queen-Empress v Ganpatrao Ramchandra 19 ILR Bom 103 ; Empress v Moorga Chetty 5 ILR Bom 338 (FB) ; Regina v Elmstone 7 BHCR Cr C 89.

78 State of Maharashtra v Govind Mhatarba Shinde 2010 Cr LJ 3586, p 3590 (Bom) (DB) .

79 Abdul Rashid v State of Haryana 2014 Cr LJ 1588, p 1594 (P&H).

80 Act 27 of 1870, s 15 .

81 Emperor v Joti Prasad AIR 1932 All 18, p 21 .

82 Raj Narain Singh v Atmaram AIR 1954 All 319 .

83 Govind Kesheo Powar v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1955 Nag 236 .

84 Dharma Reddy v State & Anor 1991 Cr LJ 1476 (AP) .

85 Adams v Emperor 26 ILR Mad 607, 614.

86 Ali Mahommad Adamalli v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 147, 151 .

87 Emperor v Moorga Chetty 5 ILR Bom 338, 353 (FB).

88 Queen-Empress v Kandhaia 7 ILR All 67, p 71 relying on the Empress v Shasti Chum Napit 8 ILR Cal 331 .

89 Re Pomrammal 16 ILR Mad 234; Queen v Golam Hussain Chowdhary 7 WR Cr 10 ; R v Thakur Ira 5 B No CR 81.

90 Gopi Lal v Emperor AIR 1945 Nag 186, p 187 .

91 Re *Valli Mitha*AIR 1920 Bom 350(1) .

92 Inder Sain v Emperor AIR 1920 Lah 144, p 159 ; Vasudeva Mudaliar v Emperor AIR 1929 Mad 880 ; Aydrooss v Emperor AIR 1923 Mad 187 ; Re *Puvanur Athamu*AIR 1925 Mad 239 .

1 Queen-Empress v Ajudhia 17 ILR All 120, p 123 .

2 Md Akram v State AIR 1951 Assam 17, p 18 .

3 Gangula Mohan Reddy v State of Andhra Pradesh 2010 Cr LJ 2110, p 2111 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 327, (2010) 1 SCC 750, 2010 (1) Scale 1 .

4 Gangula Mohan Reddy v State of Andhra Pradesh 2010 Cr LJ 2110, p 2111 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 327, (2010) 1 SCC 750, 2010 (1) Scale 1 .

5 PL Jaitely v Sir Iqbal Ahmad , *Chief Justice, Allahabad & Ors*AIR 1945 Oudh 266 (DB) .

6 State v Kishna Murari AIR 1995 All 397 .

7 Abdul Aziz v Emperor AIR 1943 Pesh 72, p 73, 45 Cr LJ 95 dissenting fromKB Lewis v Emperor* AIR 1914 Mad 277, 15 Cr LJ 171, which itself dissented from in Emperor v Kassim Isub Sab 13 Cr LJ 530, 14 Bom LR 365 .

8 King v Ba Ba Sein AIR 1938 Rang 400 .

9 Emperor v Po Han AIR 1914 LB 145 .

10 Bux Soo Meah Chowdry v King AIR 1938 Rang 350, p 351 .

11 Gonda Shah v Queen-Empress 23 PR 1894 (Cr) .

12 Ma Khwet Kyi v Emperor AIR 1929 Rang 75 .

13 Deo Baksh Singh v Emperor AIR 1943 Oudh 51, p 52 .

14 State of Maharashtra v Mayer Hans George AIR 1965 SC 722, p 731 .

15 State of Maharashtra v Mayer Hans George AIR 1965 SC 722, p 731-32 ; Madan Lal Arora v State AIR 1961 Cal 240, p 244 ; Nathulal v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1966 SC 43, p 45 .

16 Abdul Rashid v State of Haryana 2014 Cr LJ 1588 (P&H), 2013 (4) RCR (Cri) 738 .

17 Atul Chandra Pal v State AIR 1970 Cal 88, p 89 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 41.

"Special Law".--

A "special law" is a law applicable to a particular subject.

Comments

1. Scope and Definition of 'Special Law'

This section defines 'special law' as a law applicable to a particular subject.[18] Taking this definition by itself, the expression, 'special law' means a provision of law, which is not applicable generally, but applies to a particular or specified subject or class of subjects.[19]Expression 'special law' means a provision of law which is not applicable generally but which applies to a particular or specific subject or class of subjects. Sometimes a particular act or part of a procedural law may be considered as general and can be given effect to with reference to some act. But it may be special with reference to other act.[20] 'Offence' has to be read and understood in the context as it has been prescribed under the provisions of ss 40, 41 and 42, IPC which cover the268 offences punishable under IPC or under special or local law or as defined under s 2(n), CrPC or s 3(38) of the General Clauses Act 1897.[21]

While it is true that the mainstream view in our society is that sexual contact should take place only between marital partners, there is no statutory offence that takes place when adults willingly engage in sexual relations outside the marital setting, with the exception of 'adultery' as defined under s 497, IPC .[22]

According to the Supreme Court as observed in Kaushalya Rani v Gopal Singh :[23] 'A 'special law' means a law, enacted for special causes, in special circumstances, in contradiction to the general rules of the law, laid down as applicable generally to all cases with which the general law deals'.

The 'particular subject' cannot be defined in any general words. It is always a question whether an Act or a particular section of the Act is a 'special law' dealing with a particular subject or not by comparison with the law with which there is an apparent conflict. It may be that a particular Act may be considered to be general with reference to another Act and be considered to be a 'special law' with reference to some other Act. Thus, in other words, the question whether a particular Act or particular section is or is not a 'special law' is entirely a relative matter and can only be considered in comparison with a particular Act or section with which it has an apparent conflict. As Dalip Singh J pointed out in Hakam Khuda Yar v Emperor :

> Viewed from this point the Evidence Act may be taken to be a 'special law' dealing with evidence. On the other hand, there are provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code which deal with evidence in criminal traits and such provisions would, it seems to me, naturally be 'special laws, as compared with the Evidence Act in general which deals with evidence in all classes of suits whether civil or criminal.[24]

Salmond's Division of Laws in Two Parts and Special Law

Salmond divides the whole body of law--the entire corpus juris into two parts:

(i) general, consisting of the ordinary law of the land; and
(ii) special, which, according to his division, includes international law, martial law, foreign law, conventional law, etc.

It is obvious that in the IPC and the CrPC the expression 'special law' is not used in this sense. Here, it has been given a specific meaning, namely that a 'special' law is one which deals with a particular subject.[25]

2. Special Law Contemplated In Sections 40 And 41

In Emperor v Po Han ,[26] Twomey J, held, 'The special laws contemplated in Sections 40 and 41 of the Code are only laws, such as the Excise, Opium and Cattle Trespass Acts, creating fresh offences, that is, laws making punishable certain things which269 are not already punishable under the general Penal Code'; and that the Whipping Act (now repealed) was not a Special Act as it did not create a fresh offence but merely provided a supplementary or alternative punishment for offences already punishable under the IPC . The interpretation of ss 40 - 41 was accepted by the Madras High Court in the case of Swami Arunagirinatha,[27] where it was held that the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act 1932, was a special law as it made picketing in certain circumstances an offence, and also in Public Prosecutor v Annadham Annamalai ,[28]where it was held that the Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act 1 of 1947, was not a special law as it created no fresh offences but merely provided supplementary or alternative punishment for offences already primarily punishable under the IPC .

Special law is a provision of law, which is applicable to a particular and specified subject or class of subject, it will apply to a special class of case and have no application in general cases. Special law prevails over the general law. Where there is a specific punishment provided in a special Act, it takes precedence over the general punishment prescribed under the IPC, but when there is no specific punishment provided under special law then the punishment prescribed under the general law *i.e.*IPC comes into operation.[29]

Section 92 of the Factories Act prescribes punishment for the occupier or manager of the factory for contravention of any of the provisions of the Factories Act or any rules made thereunder or any order in writing given thereunder. There is nothing in the Factories Act which prescribes punishment for the rash and negligent act of occupier or manager of the factory which results in the death of any worker or any other person. In such a case, the general law i.e. IPC will apply.[30]

3. Specific Punishment takes Precedence over General Punishment

In Hakam Khuda Yar v Emperor ,[31] Bhide J dissented from Emperor v Po Han ,[32] and held that the language of s 41 being plain enough, there could be no justification for ignoring the general language of the section and putting a restricted meaning on it. But this criticism applies only to the interpretation of s 41 . So far as s 40 is concerned, the context in which the expression 'special law' is used would appear to show that the section contemplates only those special laws which create fresh offences, that is, laws making punishable certain things which are not already punishable under the general IPC, as was held by Twomey J in Emperor v Po Han .[33]

4. Simple Rule of Interpretation

The simple rule of interpretation in such cases is that the IPC will apply wherever its application is not expressly, or by necessary implication, excluded, and where the requirements prescribed under the

IPC for the offence charged are satisfied. The usual rule of law is that where there is a specific punishment provided in a special Act it takes precedence over the general punishment under the IPC, and where there270 is no specific punishment provided the general law of the land, under the IPC, comes into operation if the requirements under any section thereof are satisfied.[34]

5. Special Laws

The Indian Evidence Act 1872[35] of the Coroner's Act 1871,[36] special rule of limitation, laid down in s 378(5) and ch 36 of the CrPC 1973,[37] law relating to Contempt of Court,[38] the Rajasthan Municipalities Act 1959[39] and the Calcutta Municipalities Act 1899[40] have been held to be the special laws within the meaning of this section. The last two Acts are also local laws within the definition of s 42 of the IPC . The Central Reserve Police Force Act 1949 is a special law within the meaning of the term defined in s 49, IPC, and therefore by virtue of the effect of s 5, CrPC, the provisions of the CrPC are inapplicable to the matters covered by the said Act of 1949.[41]

18 Isak Chand Palkar v Myamothibi (1980) Cr LJ 1180, (1980) Cr LR 466 (Guj), (1980) Mah LJ 287 .

19 Anjanbai Yeshwant Rao v Yeshwantrao Daulatrao Dudhe AIR 1961 Bom 154, p 155 .

20 Kirpalsingh Pratapsingh Ori v BKH Lobana (2004) Cr LJ 3786 (Guj) .

21 S Khushboo v Kanniammal 2010 Cr LJ 2828, p 2835, AIR 2010 SC 3196, (2010) 5 SCC 600, 2010 AIR SCW 2770 ; Standard Chartered Bank v Directorate of Enforcement AIR 2006 SC 1301, (2006) 4 SCC 278, 2006 (3) JT 421, 2006 (2) Scale 638 .

22 S Khushboo v Kanniammal 2010 Cr LJ 2828, p 2836 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 3196 .

23 Kaushalya Rani v Gopal Singh (1964) 1 Cr LJ 152, p 155, AIR 1964 SC 260 .

24 AIR 1940 Lah 129, p 136 (FB); Gunepally Thammayya v Rajah Tyadapusapati Khandendu Dora AIR 1930 Mad 963, p 968, per Ramesan J.

25 Hakam Khuda Yar v Emperor AIR 1940 Lah 129, p 133 (FB), per Takchand J.

26 Emperor v Po Han AIR 1914 LB 145, p 146 .

27 *Swami Arunagirinatha*AIR 1939 Mad 21, p 25, 26 .

28 Public Prosecutor v Annadham Annamalai AIR 1954 Mad 321, p 322-23 .

29 Ejaj Ahmad v State of Jharkhand 2010 Cr LJ 1953, p 1955 (Jhar) .

30 Ejaj Ahmad v State of Jharkhand 2010 Cr LJ 1953, p 1956 (Jhar) .

31 Hakam Khuda Yar v Emperor AIR 1940 Lah 129, p 139 (FB) .

32 Emperor v Po Han AIR 1914 LB 145 .

33 Emperor v Po Han AIR 1914 LB 145 .

34 Re *B Gervase*AIR 1950 Mad 599, p 600, 51 Cr LJ 1578 .

35 Emperor v Faujdar AIR 1933 All 440, p 442 ; Hakam Khuda Yar v Emperor AIR 1940 Lah 129, p 133, 138 (FB), per Takchand and Bhide JJ; observations of Dalip Singh J, p 135.

36 Queen-Empress v Mahomed Rajuddin 16 ILR Bom 159 ; Emperor v Jogeshwar Passi 31 ILR Cal 1, p 6 .

37 Kaushalya Rani v Gopal Singh (1964) 1 Cr LJ 152, p 155, AIR 1964 SC 260 .

38 Narayan Nambiar v MS Namboodripad 1968 KLT 299, p 309-10 (FB) .

39 Dhoopa v State AIR 1966 Raj 238, p 240-41, (1966) Cr LJ 1329, (1966) Raj LW 408 .

40 Sukhdeo Singh v Calcutta Corpn (1953) Cr LJ 196, p 197, AIR 1953 Cal 41 .

41 Hanuman Singh v Union of India (1997) Cr LJ 1054 (Raj) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 42.

"Local law".--

A "local law" is a law applicable only to a particular part of [42][43][* * *] [44][India]].

Comments

1. Local Law

'Offence' has to be read and understood in the context as it has been prescribed under the provisions of ss 40, 41 and 42, IPC which cover the offences punishable under IPC or under special or local law or as defined under s 2(n), CrPC or s 3(38) of the General Clauses Act 1897.[45]

Just as a 'special law' is confined to a particular subject a 'local law' is confined to a particular locality.[46]Thus, the Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act 1947,[47] the Calcutta Municipalities Act 1899[48] and the Rajasthan Municipalities Act 1959[49] are local laws within the meaning of this section.271

2. Law does not Necessarily include Rules made thereunder

A local law does not necessarily include a rule made under the provisions of a local law.[50] Where a local law declares a breach of the rules made under its authority to be punishable, a breach of such rules might constitute an offence within the meaning of s 40 of the IPC .[51]But if the local Act itself does not declare a breach of byelaw to be an offence, it would not be an offence within the meaning of s 40 even if the authority framing the byelaw has made the breach of it punishable.[52]

42 Substituted by the AO 1948 for 'British India'.

43 The words 'the territories comprised in' omitted by Act 48 of 1952, s 3 and Sch II.

44 Substituted by Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule, for 'the states' which had been substituted by the AO 1950, for 'the Provinces'.

45 S Khushboo v Kanniammal 2010 Cr LJ 2828, p 2835, AIR 2010 SC 3196, (2010) 5 SCC 600, 2010 AIR SCW 2770 ; Standard Chartered Bank v Directorate of Enforcement AIR 2006 SC 1301, (2006) 4 SCC 278, 2006 (3) JT 421, 2006 (2) Scale 638 .

46 Reference 3 MHCR (App) 21.

47 Public Prosecutor v Annadham Annamalai AIR 1954 Mad 321 .

48 Sukhdeo Singh v Calcutta Corpn 1953 Cr LJ 196, p 197, AIR 1953 Cal 41 (obiter).

49 Dhoopa v State AIR 1966 Raj 238, p 240, (1966) Cr LJ 1329 .

50 Ganda Shah v Queen-Empress 23 PR Cr 1894 .

51 Public Prosecutor v Anadham Annamalai AIR 1954 Mad 321, p 323, (1954) Cr LJ 396 .

52 Ma Khwet Kyi v Emperor AIR 1929 Rang 750 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 43.

"Illegal", "Legally bound to do."--

The word "illegal" is applicable to everything which is an offence or which is prohibited by law, or which furnishes ground for a civil action; and a person is said to be "legally bound to do" whatever it is illegal in him to omit.

Comments

1. Scope

This section defines the word 'illegal' and the expression 'legally bound to do'.

The word 'illegal' has here been given an extensive meaning, including anything and everything which is prohibited by law or which constitutes an offence and which furnishes the basis for a civil suit, ending in damages.[53]

Where the managing committee of a co-operative society passed a resolution recommending to the general body that a certain grant made by the general body to one of its members on certain considerations be rescinded as those considerations had failed, it was held that the passing of such a resolution cannot possibly be said to be an offence or an act prohibited by law or to afford a ground for a civil action.[54]

2. Distinction between 'Unlawful' and 'Illegal'

The IPC defines the word 'illegal', but not the word 'unlawful' which is used in some sections (e.g., s 23). Generally the word 'illegal' has the same meaning as 'unlawful'.[55] The law commissioners themselves say that the two terms are intended to be used in the same sense and bear the same meaning.[56] But in Punjabi Bapuji Bagul v Emperor ,[57] Beaumont CJ, with whom Wadia J, agreed, observed:

> Generally speaking I should say that there is no difference in meaning between the word 'unlawful' and the word 'illegal' but it does not follow that if one of those words is specially defined' in a statute, and the other is not, the two words must necessarily have272 the meaning given to the one word by the definition. Prima facie, I should have thought that the word 'unlawful' or the word 'illegal' used in a Penal Code would not cover anything which gives rise to a civil suit. The word 'illegal' has been defined as covering everything which gives rise to a civil suit but, but I am not prepared to say that in the Penal Code the word 'unlawful' which has not been so defined, must be taken throughout as having that very wide meaning. The word 'unlawful' in its general connotation means what is not justified by law. It is akin to the word 'illegal' but has been used in a more elastic manner and not in the same restricted sense as the word 'illegal'.[58]

The word 'illegal' as defined in the section and the word 'unlawful' as used in s 3 of the Madras Gift Goods (Unlawful Possession) Act 1961 have the same meaning.[59]

3. 'Which is Prohibited by Law'

Where a mukhtar appearing for an accused person threatened the complainant to put to him and the ladies of his household such questions in cross examination, as were scandalous and irrelevant to the matters at issue and were intended to insult and annoy the complainant, it was held that such a case of conduct on the part of the mukhtar was forbidden by law and was, therefore, illegal.[60]But sexual intercourse between two unmarried persons out of consent does not amount to an illegal act.[61]

4. 'Which Furnishes Ground for a Civil Action'

The section covers a breach of contract, and not merely a tort. The breach of contract, however, must be one which furnishes a ground for a civil action, that is to say, in respect of which damages could be obtained under s 73, Contract Act, or which could be enforced specifically.[62]The act of publishing a defamatory pamphlet would be illegal within the meaning of this section as it would furnish grounds for a civil action to the persons defamed.[63]

5. 'Legally Bound to do'

If ss 40, 43, and 176 of the IPC are read together it would follow that one who fails to furnish information which he is legally bound to furnish, is punishable under s 176, that he is legally bound to furnish what it is illegal for him to omit, that it is illegal for him to omit what is an offence and that and offence is what is punishable under the IPC . The statement is no doubt true, but it is not of much assistance in ascertaining what is punishable under the IPC . In order to ascertain what is punishable under the IPC one must look elsewhere than to s 176 and if no other section of the IPC deals with the matter, one must conclude that the particular crime may be punishable under some other enactment but not under the IPC . Thus, the failure to furnish the information may be an offence under the Mussalman Wakf (Bombay Amendment) Act 1935, but it is not an offence punishable under the Penal Code, so a person cannot be said to be legally bound to furnish the information within the meaning of s 176 of the IPC .[64] So also the furnishing of false returns or the273 preparation of a false diary by a government servant may be a breach of departmental rules, but is not contrary to law, and is not, therefore, 'illegal'.[65] A chowkidar is not legally bound to apprehend or keep, in confinement any person charged with or liable to be apprehended for an offence and it is not illegal for him to do so.[66]

53 Bhagwan Din v Emperor AIR 1929 All 935, p 936, 31 Cr LJ 12, 52 ILR All 203 ; Punjabi Bapuji Bagul v Emperor AIR 1935 Bom 164, p 165, 36 Cr LJ 940 .

54 Jhamandas Thawerdas v Khemchand Gellaram AIR 1933 Sind 196, p 198, 34 Cr LJ 834 .

55 Emperor v Fazlur Rahman AIR 1930 Pat 593, p 595, 32 Cr LJ 87 .

56 First Report, s 658 .

57 Punjabi Bapuji Bagul v Emperor AIR 1935 Bom 164, p 165, 36 Cr LJ 940 .

58 Re Mahendra Nath Chakravarti(1934) 62 ILR Cal 629, pp 633-34.

59 1977 Cr LJ 231 (NOC).

60 Emperor v Fazlar Rahman AIR 1930 Pat 593, p 595, 32 Cr LJ 87 .

61 Mailsami v State 1994 Cr LJ 2238 (Mad) .

62 Ganpat Subrao Kashyapi v Emperor AIR 1934 Bom 202, p 204, 35 Cr LJ 1429, 36 Bom LR 373 .

63 Rahamatalli Mahomedalli v Emperor 22 Cr LJ 513, p 515, AIR 1923 Bom 402 .

64 Ali Mohammad Adamalli v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 147, p 151 .

65 Queen-Empress v Appayya 14 ILR Mad 484 ; dissenting from High Court Proceedings, dated 21 December 1871, 6 Mad HCR App 48; Veeraswami Mudali v Queen 4 ILR Mad 144 .

66 Bhagwan Din v Emperor AIR 1929 All 935, p 936, 31 Cr LJ 12, 52 ILR All 203 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 44.

"Injury".--

The word "injury" denotes any harm whatever illegally caused to any person, in body, mind, reputation or property.

Comments

1. Scope and Meaning of 'Injury'

An injury is an act contrary to law.[67] The definition, in this section, shows that 'injury' embraces only such harm to body, mind, reputation or property as may be caused illegally. A threat by a landed proprietor to report to the police smuggling of liquor by the complainant is not a threat to cause injury to him as there is nothing illegal in the proprietor asking the police to investigate a suspected case of smuggling liquor.[68] Before a person can be said to put any person in fear of any injury to that person, it must appear that he has held out some threat to do or to omit to do what he is legally bound to do in the future. On the other hand, if a person promises to speak favourably to a person in authority and to do his best to induce him to do something, and in consideration of this promise receives money, it cannot be said that he threatened to cause injury to the person who gives the money.[69] If someone illegally causes harm to any person in body, mind etc. then injury would be caused within the ambit of s 44, IPC .[70]

When the accused committing rape kept his hand on the mouth of the prosecutrix, so that she should not shout and in that process if she died due to suffocation, then certainly the accused caused an injury to the prosecutrix which caused the death of the prosecutrix, and offence falls within the purview of s 376A . The conviction of the accused appellant under s 376A, IPC was held proper.[71]

Where due to any illegal act, if a person suffers any bodily injury, mental injury or injury to his reputation or to property, then such sufferings can be called an 'injury'.[72]

Obtaining money against the will of a person on the threat of loss of appointment is extortion by putting the person in fear of an injury.[73]274

An unlawful detention of a cart at a toll-gate caused as a result of illegal demand if toll has been paid, has been held to cause injury.[74]

Taking bribe for releasing arrested persons on bail under threat of not releasing them unless the money was paid would amount to extortion under threat of an injury.[75]

A false charge held before the police and never intended to be prosecuted in court, may obviously subject the accused party to a very substantial injury, as defined in s 44 of the IPC .[76] But the case would be different if the charge is proceeded with.[77]

Threat of a decree that cannot be executed by any competent authority is a threat of injury within the meaning of the IPC .[78]

Definition Wide to include Tortious Act

The definition of 'injury' in this section is very wide,[79] and has been held to include every tortious act.[80] 'Injury' is wider in import than damage. As defined in this section 'injury' denotes any harm whatever illegally caused to any person in body, mind, reputation or property. But if a person does an act to save himself from injury such as a conviction in a criminal case, that does not mean that he caused injury to another.[81]

2. Social Boycott, if Amounts to Injury

Excommunication may, in some cases, give a cause of action for a civil suit, but not for a criminal case. Thus, where certain labourers try to improve their lot by bargaining with the mirasdars to obtain better conditions, and try to persuade their fellow labourers not to work until they have secured better terms, they are entitled to enforce a social boycott against those who decide to work; for that would not amount to an injury within the meaning of this section.[82]

3. Injury to Widow by Causing Death of her Husband

On a question whether the widow of a man who has been killed by the criminal act of another can be said to have suffered an 'injury' within the meaning of this section, the majority of the judges in Yalla Gangulu v Mamidi Dali ,[83] answered the question in the negative, Shepard J, observed:

> In my opinion it is impossible to answer that question in the affirmative. She has certainly not suffered in body, or reputation, nor has she suffered any injury in mind for which an action would lie, and I do not think it can be said that she has suffered in275 property. I take it that the term 'property' means something in existence and that it cannot, with any property, be applied to the reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit for the loss of which an action is maintainable by the representative of a deceased person. Such a claim on behalf of a widow is analogous to that which may be made by a master in respect of wrongful acts done to his servants. He is entitled in such cases to recover damages for the loss of service. There is no question of loss of property. If the claim of the widow in such a case as the present is maintainable, it must follow that the master of a servant, who has been disabled or put in wrongful confinement, may equally apply for compensation to be paid out of > the fine inflicted on the offender. In my opinion it would be putting an undue strain on the language of the section to hold that it refers to and includes actions which may be brought on account of loss of service.

The same view had earlier been taken in the undermentioned cases.[84] The Calcutta High Court has taken a contrary view.[85] In Queen-Empress v Sab Ali ,[86] the Punjab Chief Court also held that the loss of her husband's support affecting the widow prejudicially is a legal right and is therefore an 'injury' within the meaning of this section for which substantial compensation can be allowed by a civil court. Now, under s 357, CrPC compensation is payable to any person for any loss or injury caused by an offence, if it is recoverable by such person in civil court. And under cl (c) of the same section, when any person is convicted of any offence for having caused the death of any person or having abetted the omission of such an offence the compensation is payable not only to the widow but to all the persons who are, under the Fatal Accidents Act 1855, entitled to recover damages from the person sentenced 'for the loss resulting to them such death'.[87]

4. 'Property'

'Property' means something in existence.[88] In this section, 'property' means something tangible and capable of being destroyed or damaged in value or utility.[89]

67 Swami Nayudu Subramania Mudali 2 Mad HCR 158, p 160, per Halloway J.

68 Re *Mantripragada Mattapalli Narasimha Rao*AIR 1919 Mad 954, p 955, 19 Cr LJ 445 .

69 Habibul Razak v King-Emperor AIR 1924 All 197 .

70 Sessions Judge v Arvind 2014 Cr LJ 4024, p 4030 (MP) (DB) .

71 Sessions Judge v Arvind 2014 Cr LJ 4024, p 4030 (MP) (DB) .

72 Meharunnissa v Syeed Habeeb 2015 Cr LJ 1836, p 1843 (Kant) .

73 Ameer Abbas Ali v Umed Ali 18 WR 17 (Cr) ; Shamumal v RA Gordon AIR 1936 Sind 29, 37 Cr LJ 457 .

74 Re B Appalaswami(1892) 1 Weir 441.

75 Jagdish Narain v Emperor AIR 1942 Oudh 163 .

76 Ashraf Ali v Empress 5 ILR Cal 281, p 282 .

77 Ramaswami v Queen-Empress 7 ILR Mad 292, 1 Weir 185 .

78 Priyanath Gupta v Lal Jhi Chowkidar AIR 1923 Cal 590, 23 Cr LJ 396 ; Baijnath Bhagat v Emperor AIR 1940 Pat 486 .

79 Baijnath Bhagat v Emperor AIR 1940 Pat 486, 492, 41 Cr LJ 427 ; Jagdish Narain v Emperor AIR 1942 Oudh 163, 168, 43 Cr LJ 139 ; Shamumal v RA Gordon AIR 1936 Sind 29, 37 Cr LJ 457 .

80 Shamumal v RA Gordon AIR 1936 Sind 29, 37 Cr LJ 457 .

81 Prayag Das v State AIR 1963 All 131, p 133, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 457 .

82 Arumuga Mudaliar v Muthiah Mudaliar (1933) Mad WN 736 ; Re *Selathu*AIR 1949 Mad 546, 50 Cr LJ 797, (1948) 2 Mad LJ 522 .

83 Yalla Gangulu v Mamidi Dali 21 ILR Mad 74 (FB) .

84 Re Lutchmaka 12 ILR Mad 352; Re Roop Lal Singh 10 WR 39 (Cr); R v Shivbassappa 7 Bom HCR 73 .

85 Emperor v Morgan 36 ILR Cal 302, 9 Cr LJ 393 .

86 Queen-Empress v Sab Ali 112 PR 1898 (FB) .

87 See Commentary on s 357 of Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure, vol 4 twenty-first edn, Lexisnexis.

88 Yalla Gangulu v Mamidi Dali (1898) 21 ILR Mad 74 (FB) .

89 Abid Ali Khan v Prabhakara Rao 1968 Cr LJ 398, 401 (AP).

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 45.

"Life".--

The word "life" denotes the life of a human being, unless the contrary appears from the context.

Comments

1. Scope

No definition of 'human being' is given in the IPC . Under English law, a child becomes a human being when it has completely proceeded in a living state from the body of its mother, and the killing of such is homicide, whether it is killed by injuries inflicted before, during or after birth.[90] Indian law is contrary. Under s 299, expln 3, a276 child is a human being if 'any part of that child has been brought forth', and under s 315 a person who causes an injury before birth, from which the child dies after birth is not guilty of murder or culpable homicide, but punishable under the section for the particular offence. The word 'life' in s 45 denotes the life of a human being.[91]

2. Life Imprisonment

'Imprisonment for life' means imprisonment for the natural life term of a convict, though the actual period of imprisonment may stand reduced on account of remissions earned. But in no case, with the possible exception of the powers vested in the President under art 72 of the Constitution and the power vested in the Governor under art 161 of the Constitution, even with remissions earned, can a sentence of imprisonment for life be reduced to below 14 years. It is thereafter left to the discretion of the concerned authorities to determine the actual length of imprisonment having regard to the gravity and intensity of the offence.[92]

A convict undergoing life imprisonment is expected to remain in custody till the end of his life, subject to any remission granted by the appropriate Government under s 432 of the CrPC which in turn is subject to the procedural checks in that section and the substantive check in s 433A of the CrPC .[93]

90 R v Poulton 5 C&P 329 ; R v Brain 6 ib 349 ; R v Trilloe 650, 3 Russ Cr 7, 8; R v Enoch 5 C&P 539 ; R v Wright 9 C&P 754 ; R v Sellis 7 C&P 850 .

91 Duryodhan Rout v State of Orissa AIR 2014 SC 3345, 2014 (140) AIC 109 (SC) .

92 Ramraj v State of Chhattisgarh 2010 Cr LJ 2062, p 2066 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 420 ; Rajendra Prasad v State of UP (1979) 3 SCC 646, AIR 1979 SC 916 ; Maru Ram v Union of India (1981) SCC 107, AIR 1980 SC 2147 ; State of Punjab v Joginder Singh (1990) 2 SCC 661, AIR 1990 SC 1396 ; Laxman Naskar v Union of India (2000) 2 SCC 595, 2000 AIR SCW 646 ; Subhash Chander v Krishan Lal (2001) 4 SCC 458, 2001 AIR SCW 1492 ; Mohd Munnna v Union of India 2005 AIR SCW 4524 ; Swamy Sharaddananda v State of Karnataka AIR 2008 SC 3040, 2008 Cr LJ 3911 .

93 Sangeet v State of Haryana AIR 2013 SC 447, 2013 Cr LJ 425 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 46.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 46.

"Death".--

The word "death" denotes the death of a human being, unless the contrary appears from the context.

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 47.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 47.

"Animal".--

The word "animal" denotes any living creature, other than a human being.

Comments

1. Scope

This 'definition', says Sir James Stephen, is 'not only superfluous, but of doubtful correctness. It would include an angel, frogspawn, and probably a tree'.[94] But perhaps the definition is intended to include in the term 'animal' fauna such as fish, and insects and other creatures which are generally not classed as animals.

A 'hen', though, in common parlance, would fall within the category of the bird, would be covered by the definition of 'animal'.[95]

94 SHCLE III, 306.

95 Syed Ali v State (1972) All WR 901 (HC), (1972) All Cr R 590 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 48.

"Vessel".--

The word "vessel" denotes anything made for the conveyance by water of human beings or of property.277

Comments

1. Scope

The IPC does not define the word 'property'. But since only movable property can be carried from one place to another, the word 'property' in the definition should refer to movable property, which expression has been defined under s 22 .

'Property' would include livestock also.

The train compartment is neither a building, tent or vessel used as a human building nor a place for worship nor a place used for the custody of property. The train compartment cannot be deemed to be the property in possession of the passenger travelling therein to attract the ingredients of the offence.[1]

1 P Balaraman v State (1991) Cr LJ 166 (Mad) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 49.

"Year", "Month".--

Wherever the word "year" or the word "month" is used, it is to be understood that the year or the month is to be reckoned according to the British calendar.

Comments

1. Scope

The terms 'year' and 'month' are defined in the same terms in s 3(35) and (66) respectively, of the General Clauses Act 1897. But for this statutory meaning, the expression 'month' would mean a lunar month.[2]

The British calendar has, since the 2 September 1752, been the same as the Gregorian calendar.[3] The true measure of the 'year' is the period in which one revolution of the earth round the sun is completed, and that is about 365 days, 5 hours 48 minutes and 51.6 seconds. To do away with the odd hours, the new style calendar has adopted the average length of 365 days per every ordinary year and 366 days for a leap year, which is every fourth year.[4] By statute 21 Hen III, the increased day in the leap year and the preceding day all counted as one day only. By statute Geo II c 25, it was enacted that the commencement of the year shall be from the 1 January instead of the 25 March as hitherto before.

2. Computing Period of Sentence of Imprisonment

With regard to computing the period of a sentence in Migothi v Colvill ,[5] Denman J, said:

> I am of opinion that a sentence of imprisonment for one calendar month, passed on any given day of any given month, is to be held to begin to run from the first moment of that day, and to expire upon arriving at the first moment of the corresponding day in the succeeding month. If there be no such corresponding day by reason of the succeeding month, not having so many days as the preceding month, then by analogy to the law278 established in the case of bills of exchange, I think the calendar month should be held to have expired at the last moment of its first day.[6]

In calculating sentence of imprisonment, the day upon which the sentence is passed and the day of release both ought to be included and considered as days of imprisonment, e.g., a man sentenced on 1 January to one month's imprisonment should be released on 31 January, not on 1 February.[7] In the case of imprisonment for one day, as the day on which the sentence is passed counts as one day, the accused could not be detained in jail on a warrant issued for such period. In other words, there should be no further trouble on this point. The accused must be taken to have suffered this imprisonment.[8]

2 South British Fire & Marine Insurance Co v Brojonath Shaha 36 ILR Cal 516, p 540-41 .

3 Limitation Act 1908, s 25 .

4 Statute 25, Geo II c 25.

5 Migothi v Colvill (1879) 4 CPD 233, p 236 .

6 Field v Jones 9 East 151 ; Glassington v Rawlins 3 East 407 ; Re Edwards 9 Ex 628; Re Wright Mills 4 H&N 488.

7 Madras GO No 2411, dated 22 November 1881; Migotti v Colvill (1879) 4 CPD 233, p 236 .

8 Mulluckchand Sheikh v King AIR 1949 Cal 104 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 50.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 50.

"Section".--

The word "section" denotes one of those portions of a Chapter of this Code which are distinguished by prefixed numeral figures.

Comments

1. Scope

Even the word 'section' has been defined under the IPC . A chapter is sometimes sub-divided into different sub-chapters or sections, each headed by a separate heading. That will not be regarded as section, but only such portions of a chapter as are given a separate distinctive numerical figure in the beginning.

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter II General Explanations/S. 51.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 51.

"Oath".--

The word "Oath" includes a solemn affirmation substituted by law for an oath, and any declaration required or authorised by law to be made before a public servant or to be used for the purpose of proof, whether in a Court of Justice or not.

Comments

1. Scope

An oath is a solemn appeal to the creator of the universe that the truth only shall be witnessed. It is an adjuration to God to punish the affiant if he swears falsely. It is an outward pledge given by the person taking it that the attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of responsibility to God. An oath is a religious act by which the party invokes God not only to witness the truth and sincerity of his promise, but also to average any imposture or violated faith. In Taylor's Works[9]279 'oath' is defined on the authority of R v White ,[10] and the Queen's case[11] to be 'a religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven if he does not speak the truth'.

But a much more complete definition of oath is given by Bentham (who has been rightly denominated as the father of English Jurisprudence). In his Work he says:[12]

> By the term 'oath', taken in its largest sense, is universally understood a ceremony composed of words and gestures, by which the Almighty is engaged eventually to inflict on the taker of the oath, or swearer, as he is called, punishment in quantity and quality, liquidated, or more commonly unliquidated, in the event of his doing something which he, the swearer, at the same time and thereby engages not to do or omitting to do something which he in like manner engages to do.

Considering the efficiency of an oath he goes on to say:[13]

> When the question has been concerning a Muhammadan, a Hindu, a Chinese, or even a Christian, if a Catholic, great doubts have been entertained by pious and learned Church of England men, lawyers and non-lawyers concerning the degree of binding force, which in any such heterodox bosom ought to be ascribed to the ceremony of an oath.

The doubts to which this passage refers have, however, been set at rest by the leading case of Omichand v Barker ,[14] where the Lord Chancellor and three other judges concurred in laying down the rule that the depositions of witnesses professing the Gentoo (Hindu) religion, who were sworn according to the ceremonies of their religion, taken under a commission out of Chancery, could be admitted and read as evidence.

Affidavits are not included in the definition of evidence in s 3 of the Evidence Act and can be used only if the Court permits it to be so used for sufficient reasons. The Magistrate is not bound to accept affidavit at the stage of s 200 CrPC, and s 51, IPC does not apply.[15]

2. 'Solemn Affirmation'

Act 5 of 1940, substituted 'solemn affirmation' for an 'oath' and s 6 of the Oaths Act 1873, provided that 'where the witness, interpreter, or juror is a Hindu or Mahommadan, or has an objection to making an oath, he shall, instead of making an oath make an affirmation,' and that 'in every other case the witness interpreter or juror shall make an Oath'. Section 5 of the new Oaths Act 1969 now gives full option to a witness, interpreter or juror to take an oath or make an affirmation.

An affirmation is a solemn and formal declaration or assertion that a declaration or affidavit is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc, this being substituted for an oath in certain cases.[16]

3. Object of Oath

The real object of giving oath is the idea that there will be superhuman retribution in case of falsehood and consequently actual words or ceremonies are immaterial. The280 purpose of giving oath is not to call the attention of God to the party but to call the attention of the party to God.[17]

Idea of Oath

The idea of the oath, viz, that the person swearing renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of heavens if he does not speak the truth, the idea of binding the conscience of the witness which still prevails in England and which in the former times led to the swearing of Hindus on tulsi or water from the Gangas, and that of Mahommadans on the Qoran find no place in the Oaths Act. The superstition of religious sanction has been disregarded and the legal sanction alone is relied upon.[18]

Religious and Moral Sanctity of Oath

The practice of supporting a promise by an oath is practically as old as the existence of belief in God and it appears to have been utilised from the very earliest times to ratify and insure the fulfillment of any special contract or undertaking by importing into the transaction the fear of Divine wrath in case of wilful failure to perform the delegation entered into. The use of oath to bind the conscience was practiced even by the Greeks and Romans and is virtually as old as creation itself.

Legal Sanctity of Oath

Apart from the religious and moral sanctity of an oath legal sanctity is also attached to it where a person is a non-believer or has no belief in the supreme being, he can do nothing which would be binding on his conscience as an oath.[19] Law fully takes notice of such persons, making false statement on oath is an offence as defined by s 191 of this IPC and is punishable with imprisonment from three years of life imprisonment under the provision of ss 193 - 95, IPC . A great weight and sanctity is attached to sworn testimony of a witness under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act 1872 and cannot be easily brushed aside unless there are cogent reasons to do so.

4. Statutory Provisions Relating to Oaths and Affirmations

Indian Oaths Act 1873 has been Replaced by Oaths Act 1969

Formerly, the law relating to the judicial oaths, special oaths and oaths for other purposes was contained in the Indian Oaths Act 1873, which was repealed and with effect from 26 December 1969 has been replaced by the Oaths Act 1969. The new Act has made some drastic changes. According to its s 5, 'a witness interpreter or juror may, instead of making an oath, make an affirmation'. Section 6 of the old Act, which was analogous to s 5 of the present Act provided that 'where the witness, interpreter or juror is a Hindu or Mohammedan; or has an objection to making an oath, he shall, instead of making an oath, make an affirmation. In every other case the witness, interpreter, or juror shall make an oath'. Thus under the old law oath was the rule and affirmation an exception. This is not the position now under the new Act. In order to give every person the liberty of making an affirmation irrespective of his religious persuasions or whether or not he raises any objection to make an oath this281 new provision has been made. Sections 9 - 12 of the old Act contained some provisions relating to the conclusive or binding character of special oaths. These provisions were opposed to juristic principles and public policy. These provisions have not been retained in the new Act and the provisions of s 6, which is s 5 of the new Act, have been modified as above.

Under sub-s (2) of s 6 the present Act the oaths and affirmations are to be administered by the presiding officer of the court himself except in the case of the Supreme Court and the High Courts. For the sake of uniformity in the form to be adopted in the matter of oaths, affirmations affidavits etc, in the courts throughout the country the proforma forms have been given in the Schedule to the Act. Section 4 of the Oaths Act 1969, which is the main section in the Act, may be quoted here for the sake of proper appreciation. It runs as follows:

> 4. Oaths or affirmations to be made by witnesses, interpreters and jurors.--
>
> (1) Oaths or affirmations shall made by the following persons, namely:--
>
> (a) all witnesses, that is to say, all persons who may lawfully be examined or give, or be required to give, evidence by or before any court or person having by law or consent of parties authority to examine such persons or to receive evidence;
> (b) interpreters of questions put to, and evidence given by, witness; and > (c) jurors.
>
> Provided that, where the witness is a child under twelve years of age, and the court or person having authority to examine such witness is of opinion that, though the witness understands the duty of speaking the truth, he does not understand the nature of an oath or affirmation, the foregoing provisions of this section and the provisions of s 5 shall not apply to such witness, but in any such case the absence of an oath or affirmation shall not render inadmissible any evidence given by such witness nor affect the obligation of the witness to state the truth.
>
> (2) Nothing in this section shall render it lawful to administer, in a criminal proceeding, an oath or affirmation to the accused person, unless he is examined as a witness for the defence, or necessary to administer to the official interpreter of any court, after he has entered on the execution of the duties of his office, an oath or affirmation that he will faithfully discharge those duties.

5. Administration of Oath to Child Witness

Before the Indian Oaths (Amendment) Act 1939 there was a conflict of opinion on the question whether it was necessary to administer an oath or affirmation to a child witness. This controversy has been completely set at rest by the provisions contained in the proviso to sub-s (1) of s 4 of the Oaths Act 1969. Every witness under s 118, Evidence Act, is competent to testify unless the court considers that he is prevented from understanding the questions put to him, or from giving rational answers to those questions by reason of tender years, extreme old age, disease etc. Competency of a witness is the rule and incompetency is an exception. The net effect of ss 4 and 7 of the Oaths Act 1969 is that oath or affirmation must be administered to every witness unless the court is of the opinion in case of a child 12 years of age, that he does not understand the nature of the oath.[20] Thus an oath can be and should be administered to every child witness above 12 years and in case of witnesses below 12 years only if on a preliminary examination by the court, it appears that they understand the nature and sanctity of oath.282

In case of a child below 12 years, the omission to take oath will not affect the admissibility of his evidence and such evidence might be acted upon if the court is of the opinion that he understands the duty to speak the truth. Even if there is failure on the part of the court to formally record the requisite opinion, it should be merely an irregularity curable under s 7 and might not in all cases affect the evidence. There is no legal requirement to hold a preliminary examination to determine the competence of a child witness. However, as a rule of prudence it is not only desirable that a preliminary examination should be made by the court but that a formal record of such examination should also be maintained. In the case of criminal prosecution, where the fate of the accused depends on the testimony of such a witness, the imperative necessity of voir dire has been underlined with the greater emphasis.[21]

6. Omission does not Invalidate Proceedings

Under s 7 of the Oaths Act, 'no omission to take any oath or make any affirmation...and no irregularity whatever in the form in which it is administered, shall invalidate any proceeding or render inadmissible any evidence whatever...or shall affect the obligation of a witness to state the truth'.

7. Object of Oath and Effect of Omission

Under s 4 of the Oaths Act, oath shall be administered only to those witnesses who may lawfully be examined which means who can understand the sanctity of oath. A witness may be a competent witness, and yet he may not be in a position to understand the sanctity of an oath. In such a case s 7 of the Act comes into play. A witness of this type can be examined without an oath, and his testimony is as good as that of a witness to whom oath has been administered.[22] The Oaths Act does not deal with competency. Its main object is to render persons who give false evidence liable to prosecution. It is true, a subsidiary object is to bring home to the witness the solemnity of the occasion and to impress upon him the duty of speaking the truth. But in view of s 118 of the Indian Evidence Act these matters touch the credibility and not the admissibility of the evidence.

9 Taylor's Works, 1382, eighth edn, p 1175.

10 R v White 1 Lea 403 .

11 Queen's case 2 B&B 185.

12 Volume 5, p 191.

13 Volume 5, p 195.

14 Omichand v Barker 1 Sim LC 381 .

15 U Valvi Basha v Mohd Bashu 2008 Cr LJ 1011, p 1013 (Kant) .

16 Black's Law Dictionary.

17 Indar Prasad v Jagmohan Das AIR 1924 Oudh 442, 11 OLJ 485, 84 IC 314, 1 OWN 167 .

18 Gobind Chandra v Queen-Empress 19 ILR Cal 355 .

19 Attorney-General v Bradlaugh 14 QBD 667 .

20 Sataji Nathaji v State of Gujarat 1976 Guj LR 254 .

21 Sataji Nathaji v State of Gujarat 1976 Guj LR 254 .

22 Ghasi Ram *v State*AIR 1952 Bhopal 25 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

S. 52.

"Good faith".--

Nothing is said to be done or believed in "good faith" which is done or believed without due care and attention.283

Comments

1. 'Good Faith' in Civil and Criminal Law

The expression 'good faith' in criminal jurisprudence has a definite connotation. Its import is totally different from saying that the person concerned has honestly believed the truth of what is said.[23]

Good faith plays an important part in criminal law, as it affords a good defence in a number of cases.[24]

The definition of 'good faith' in this section is a negative definition,[25] and means that if an act is done without due care and attention it will not be deemed to have been done in good faith. 'Good faith' in criminal law is different from 'good faith' as understood in civil law. If an act is not done with due care and attention, it cannot be said to be done in good faith as far as criminal law is concerned.[26]

The question of good faith must be considered with reference to the position of the accused and the circumstances under which he acted. 'Good faith' requires not logical infallibility but due care and attention. The question of good faith is always a question of fact to be determined in accordance with the proved facts and circumstances of each case.[27]

2. Distinguishing Features of Definition of 'Good Faith' in General Clauses Act 1897

Under s 3(22) of the General Clauses Act 1897, 'A thing shall be deemed to be done in 'good faith' where it is done in fact honestly whether it is done negligently or not'. The definition in this IPC, as pointed out above is a negative one. The term 'good faith' is not attempted to be defined there but all that is stated is that if an act is not done with due care and attention, it would not be said to be done in 'good faith'. This definition comes into conflict with the definition in the General Clauses Act to this extent that if a thing has been done negligently, though honestly, it would not be deemed to have been done in 'good faith'. The definition in the General Clauses Act lays stress on one aspect only, while the one in this section emphasises two aspects; the honesty of intention as well as due care and attention. Thus this section excludes the element of negligence from the purview of 'good faith'. Both the definitions retain the real essence of 'good faith', which is that a thing is done 'honestly'. This is a feature common to both the definitions without which the term 'good faith', will lose its real meaning. 'Good faith', therefore implies, not only an upright mental attitude, and clear conscience of a person, but also the doing of an act, showing that ordinary prudence has been exercised according to the standards of a reasonable person. 'Good faith' contemplates an honest effort to ascertain the facts upon which exercise of the power must rest. It must, therefore, be summed up as 'an honest determination from ascertained facts'. 'Good faith' precludes pretence or deceit, and also negligence and recklessness. A lack of diligence, which an honest man of284 ordinary prudence is accustomed to exercise, is in law, a want of good faith. Once this is shown, good faith does not require a sound judgment.[28] This section, however, makes no reference to the moral elements of honesty and right motive which are involved in the popular significance of 'good faith' and which are predominant in the positive definition enacted in the other Acts of the legislature. It, therefore, follows that while an honest blunderer acts in good faith within the meaning of the General Clauses Act, he can never act in good faith within the meaning of the IPC for being negligent, he has not acted with due care and attention.[29]

The element of honesty which is introduced by the definition prescribed by the General Clauses Act is not introduced by the definition of the IPC and we are governed by the definition prescribed by s 52 of that IPC .[30] Absence of good faith in this connection, and within the meaning of this (ss 52 and 79), means simply carelessness or negligence. Absence of good faith, under the General Clauses Act, means 'want of honesty'.[31] Negligence does not by itself show want of good faith, where General Clauses Act applies. This definition in the General Clauses Act applies to the Limitation Act, s 14 . It is only in the IPC that good faith requires due care and attention. Such requirement is not mentioned in the General Clauses Act.[32] The element of honesty has been introduced by the latter and good faith therein has been defined in a positive form.[33]

3. Proper Inquiry before Making Imputation

Before a person proposes to make an imputation on another, the author must first make an inquiry into the factum of imputation which he proposes to make. It is not enough that he just does a make believe show for an inquiry. The inquiry expected of him is of such a depth as a reasonable and prudent man would make with the genuine intention in knowing the real truth of imputation. If he does not do so he cannot claim that what he did was bona fide, i.e., done in good faith. When the President of India determines question of age of Chief Justice of India, it is not open for the contemnor to raise this question over again and again.[34]

4. 'Due Care and Attention'

A person cannot be said to have acted in good faith if he has not proceeded with 'due care and attention'.[35]Section 52 of the IPC starts in the negative tone including all except what is allowed to be within its amplitude. Insistence sought to be achieved through the commencing words of the definition 'nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith' is that the solitary item included within the purview of the expression 'good faith' is what is done with 'due care and attention'. Due care285 denotes the degree of reasonableness in the care sought to be 'such a degree of care, precaution or diligence as may fairly and of the subject-matter and the circumstances surrounding the transaction. It is such care as an ordinary prudent person would exercise under the conditions existing at the time he is called upon to act.[36]

Where poisonous propaganda was made by the accused against the school, no sane parents would send their ward to such an institution and where there was defamation of character of the lady principal before the general public, and particularly before the authorities, so that she and her institution may suffer in many ways, the action of the accused was held not in good faith, attracting the exception of s 499, IPC .[37] Good faith does not attach to belief or action done without due care and attention.[38]

Where the question is whether a public servant was justified in doing a certain thing, his justification must have a better foundation than his mere private belief, for a man may be very foolish in believing himself justified, but the law cannot adopt so vague and unsafe a criterion.[39]

5. Writer of a Defamatory Statement

Where the allegations against the accused were of defamation under s 499, IPC, it was held that in order to establish good faith and bona fides, it has to be seen first the circumstances under which the letter was written or words uttered; secondly, whether there was any malice; thirdly, whether the accused made any inquiry before he made the allegations; fourthly, whether there are reasons to accept the version that he acted with care and caution and finally whether there is preponderance of probability that the accused acted in good faith.[40]

The writer of a defamatory statement cannot be said to have acted in good faith when he ignores the sources of truth which were open to him.[41] In a case of defamation the defence therefore must prove that accused used 'due care and attention'. It is certainly not using due care and attention to publish defamatory statements about a person and also to publish his denial and leaving the public to take their choice.[42] Dealing with the expression 'good faith' in relation to the exceptions enumerated under s 499 of the IPC (relating to the offence of defamation) the Apex Court in Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab & Anor [43] has stated thus:

> The element of honesty which is introduced by the definition prescribed by the General Clauses Act is not introduced by the definition of the code; and we are governed by the definition prescribed by s 52 of the Code. So, in considering the question as to whether the appellant acted in good faith in publishing his impugned statement, we have to enquire whether he acted with due care and attention. There is no doubt that the mere plea that the accused believed that what he stated was true by itself, will not sustain his case of good faith under the Ninth Exception. Simple belief or actual belief by itself is not enough. The appellant must show that the belief in his impugned statement had a rational basis and was not just a blind simple belief. That is where the element of due286 care and attention plays an important role. If it appears that before making the statement the accused did not show due care and attention, that would defeat his plea of good faith.

The above observations in Harbhajan Singh's case were quoted with approval by the Supreme Court in Re SK Sundaram.[44]

6. Ayurvedic Doctor

A vaid (ayurvedic doctor), uneducated in the matter of surgery, cannot be said to have acted in good faith if he operates on a man and causes his death, even if he thought he was acting for the benefit of the patient.[45]

7. Magistrate

A magistrate tendering pardon without complying with the provisions of the CrPC acts either in ignorance or in conscious disregard thereof. He cannot be said to have bestowed due care and attention within the meaning of this section in tendering the pardon. He cannot, therefore, be said to have acted in good faith.[46]

In a case, the district supply officer who was also a magistrate of the first class ordered the arrest of a person against whom a report had been placed before him that the person had contravened the Brick and Cement Control Order made under r 81 of the Defence of India Rules. The facts also disclosed that he had acted with care and circumspection and in the belief that he could arrest the offender. There was also no previous enmity between the officer and the offender and nothing to show that the officer acted in a high handed or harsh manner. It was held that the officer, in arresting the person, acted in good faith.[47]

8. Police Officials

So also, a sub-inspector of police cannot be said to have acted in good faith in making a search without complying with the provisions of s 165 - 66, CrPC .[48]

In the undermentioned case[49] the warrant was executed by constables different from the constables who had been authorised to execute them because the man whose arrest was required was not in the village where he had been supposed to be, and the officer of the police station on discovering this made a copy of the warrant from the register in the thana and endorsed in it the names of other constables who were directed by him to make the arrest. The warrant was executed by these constables who were held to have acted in good faith under colour of their office. There is nothing to suggest that with due care and attention these police constables could have ascertained that they were not legally authorised to make the arrest.

Where a police constable having an honest suspicion that the complainant was in possession of stolen property, questioned him and not receiving satisfactory answers detained the property for examination and there was scuffle, it was held that the287 constable acted in good faith.[50]But where a police officer acted on unfounded suspicion without taking the trouble of getting any credible information, it was held that he did not act in good faith.[51]

Qurq Amin

If a qurq amin knowing fully well that the date fixed for the execution of a warrant of attachment had expired, proceeded to execute it, it cannot be said that he acted in good faith.[52] An execution warrant sought to be executed is bad if the date on or before which it is to be executed and the date on or before which it is to be returned to the court is not specified in it, and the person executing it cannot be said to have acted in good faith.[53] Where warrants issued by an assistant collector authorised a particular qurq amin to execute them and he returned them unexecuted on account of resistance offered to him, and the naib-tahsildar on his own initiative asked for police help and ordered another qurq amin to execute the warrants, it was held that naib-tahsildar may have acted with the best of intentions and may have believed himself entitled to act as he did, but if he had examined the warrants he would have seen at once that only the qurq amin named in it, was authorised to execute them and if he had considered the matter for a moment, he must have realised that it was not within his power to authorise any other *qurq amin*to execute them, and it could not therefore be held that he acted with due care and attention, and if he did not act with due care and attention he could not be said to have acted in good faith.[54] But where the warrant of attachment had been signed by the deputy collector instead of the collector and was valid in all other respects and executed by the qurq amin, it was held that the qurq amin acted in good faith under colour of his office.[55]

9. Bank Manager

Where a bank manager in the normal course and in the discharge of his legal duties received from an auditor a report containing defamatory matter and placed it before his official superiors without an expression of his own opinion in the matter, it was held that he did not act in good faith.[56]

10. Standard of 'Due Care and Attention'

Good faith requires due care and attention, but there can be no general standard of care and attention applicable to all persons and under all circumstances.[57] As pointed out in Emperor v Abdool Wadood Ahmed :[58]

> The standard of care and caution must be judged according to the capacity and intelligence of the person whose conduct is in question. It is only to be expected that the honest conclusion of a calm and philosophical mind may differ very largely from the288 honest conclusions of a person excited by sectarian zeal and untrained to the habits of reasoning.

11. Question of Good Faith

The question of good faith must be considered with reference to the position of the accused and the circumstances under which he act. The law does not expect the same standard of care and attention from all persons regardless of the position they occupy.[59] 'What is due care and attention depends on the position in which a main finds himself and varies in different cases'.[60] The court in determining the question of good faith should have to take into account the intellectual capacity of the person, his predilections and the surrounding facts.[61] The care and attention required by law must have relation to the occasion and the circumstances, and the question as to what would be due care and attention must be determined with reference thereto.[62] Justice Markby in the case of Re Shibo Prosad Paidah,[63] in dealing with the question of good faith within the meaning of the exceptions to 499 and in view of s 105, Evidence Act, observed:

> The law in the mofussil is apparently that which commonsense seems to me to teach, namely, that in a care of this kind the court had a right to call upon the party making the imputation to show that he has some reasonable ground for making it.

12. Belief must be Reasonable

The question of good faith is a question of fact and must be gathered from the surrounding circumstances. Mere actual belief without any reasonable grounds for believing is not synonymous with good faith; but good faith does not require logical infallibility but due care and caution which must in each case be considered with reference to the general circumstances and the capacity and intelligence of the person whose conduct is in question. The law does not expect the same care and attention from all persons regardless of the position they occupy.[64]

Due care and attention implies a genuine effort to reach the truth and not the ready acceptance on ill-natured belief.[65] There must be some reasonable foundation for the belief.[66] Good faith does not attach itself to belief or action done without due care and attention.[67] It does not constitute good faith necessarily that the person making the imputation believed it to be true. Where the question is whether a public servant289 was justified in doing a certain thing, his justification must have a better foundation than his mere private belief, for a man may be very foolish in believing himself justified, but the law could not adopt so vague and unsafe a criterion.[68] In a case where a police officer acted on suspicion that certain cloth was stolen property, Birdwood J, observed:

> We are forced, therefore, to consider whether there was some ground for suspicion, and whether the accused, in the circumstances in which he was placed, acted with such care as is sufficient to shield him from a criminal prosecution. Though we think that there was very little ground, indeed, to justify a reasonable suspicion that the cloth was stolen property, yet we think that there was some ground which gave rise to an honest belief on the part of the accused, after such inquiry as he was able to make, that such a state of facts existed as would justify his action. We think, therefore, that the magistrate ought to have found in this case that the accused acted in good faith.[69]

In the case of defamation, good faith in the formation or expression of an opinion can afford no protection to an imputation which does not purport to be based on that which is the legitimate subject of public comment.[70]

Where a person killed what he considered to be ghosts, and from the circumstances under which the apparition appeared before him and his predisposition, it could be reasonably inferred that he believed that he was attacking a ghost and not a human being, it was held that he acted in good faith.[71]

13. Blind Simple belief is not Enough

In considering the question whether one has acted in good faith or not, the court has to examine whether the said person acted with due care and attention. Simple belief or actual belief by itself is not enough. On the other hand, it must be shown that the belief in the impugned statement had a rational basis and was not just a blind simple belief. The element of due care and attention plays an important role. Good faith does not require logical infallibility. The true test to be applied for the proof of the existence of good faith is whether there is no lack of good faith and it must be gathered only from the surrounding circumstances.[72]

14. Sections 52 and 79

Section 79 of the IPC provides that nothing is an offence which is done by any person who is justified, or who by reason of mistake of law, in good faith, believes himself to be justified by law, in doing it. Under this section, although an act may not be justified by law, yet if it is done under a mistake of fact, in the belief and in good faith that it is justified by law it will not be an offence. Such cases are not uncommon where the courts in the facts and circumstances of the particular case have exonerated the accused under s 79 on the ground of his having acted in good faith under the belief, owing to a mistake of fact that he was justified in doing the act which constituted an offence. As laid down in s 52 of the IPC, nothing is said to be done or believed to be done in good faith which is done or believed without due care and290 attention. The question of good faith must be considered with reference to the position of the accused and the circumstances under which he acted. 'Good faith' requires not logical infallibility but due care and attention. The question of good faith is always a question of fact to be determined in accordance with the proved facts and circumstances of each case.[73]

23 Re SK Sundaram, suo motu contempt petition (Cr) 5 of 2000, I (2001) CCR 45 (SC).

24 Indian Penal Code 1860, ss 76 - 79, 81, 88-89 and 92.

25 Re *Ganapathia Pillai*AIR 1953 Mad 936, p 937 ; Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1961 Punj 215, p 222 ; reversed on another point in Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1966 SC 97 ; Bibhuti Bhushan Das v Sudhir Kumar Majumdar AIR 1966 Cal 473, p 476, (1966) Cr LJ 986 ; Gulab Chand Bhunder Bhai Soni v State of Gujarat AIR 1970 Guj 171, (1970) Cr LJ 1100 .

26 Pagla Baba v State AIR 1957 Ori 130, p 147 ; State of Bihar v Shiv Prasad Lal Seth AIR 1960 Pat 326, p 328 .

27 State of Orissa v Bhagaban Barik AIR 1987 SC 1265, (1987) Cr LJ 1115 (SC) .

28 Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1961 Punj 215, p 222-23 ; Kailash Sizing Works v Municipality of Bhivandi AIR 1969 Bom 127, p 131, 70 Bom LR 554, (1968) Mah LJ 916, (1968) ILR Bom 564 (DB) .

29 Re *Ganapathia Pillai*AIR 1953 Mad 936, p 937 ; Shimbhu Narain v King-Emperor AIR 1923 All 546, p 547 .

30 Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab & Anor AIR 1966 SC 97 .

31 Bux Soo Meah Chowdry v King AIR 1938 Rang 350, p 352 .

32 Gopal Chandra v Bepin Behari AIR 1955 Cal 353, p 354 ; Public Prosecutor v Vattem Venkataramayya AIR 1963 Andh Pra 106, p 108 .

33 Md Abdur Rauf v Shib Kumar Khanna (1980) 1 CHN 276 .

34 Re SK Sundaram, suo motu contempt petition (Cr) No 5 of 2000, I (2001) CCR 45 (SC).

35 Deivasigamani v MS Kamsudeen Rawther (1977) Mad LJ 86, p 90 (Cr) ; Mithu Khan v State of Rajasthan AIR 1969 Raj 121, p 123, (1969) Cr LJ 515, (1969) 19 ILR Raj 559 .

36 Re SK Sundaram, suo motu contempt petition (Cr) No 5 of 2000, (2001) I CCR 45 (SC).

37 Dogar Singh v Shobha Gupta (1998) Cr LJ 1541 (P&H) .

38 Channing Arnold v King Emperor AIR 1914 PC 116, p 119, 15 Cr LJ 309 .

39 Gayadin v Emperor AIR 1934 All 124, p 126 ; Prag v Emperor AIR 1942 Oudh 256, p 257, 43 Cr LJ 518.

40 Chaman Lal v State of Punjab AIR 1970 SC 1372, (1970) Cr LJ 1266 (SC) .

41 Emperor v PC Tarapore AIR 1940 Sind 239, p 246, 42 Cr LJ (1)(FB).

42 Emperor v JM Chatterjee AIR 1933 All 434, p 435, 34 Cr LJ 926 .

43 Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab & Anor AIR 1966 SC 97 .

44 Suo motu contempt petition (Cr) No 5 of 2000, (2001) I CCR 45 (SC).

45 Sukaroo Kobiraj v Empress 14 ILR Cal 566, p 568 .

46 Re *Mukhesh Ramachandra Reddy*AIR 1958 AP 165, p 168, (1958) Cr LJ 343 .

47 Ram Narain Singh v A Sen AIR 1958 All 758, p 763 .

48 Gopi Mahto v Emperor AIR 1932 Pat 66, p 68, 33 Cr LJ 233 (DB) ; Dhanna v State of Rajasthan (1964) Raj LW 126 (Raj) .

49 Queen Empress v Dalip 18 ILR All 246 .

50 Bhawoo Jivaji v Mulji Dayal 12 ILR Bom 377 .

51 Sheo Saram Sahai v Mahommad Fazil 10 WR 720 (Cr) .

52 Raghubir v Emperor AIR 1942 Oudh 57, p 58, 43 Cr LJ 60 ; Mahadeo v Emperor AIR 1927 Oudh 71, 28 Cr LJ 157 ; Nand Lal v Emperor AIR 1924 Nag 68, 25 Cr LJ 233 ; Kishailal v Emperor AIR 1934 All 1016, 36 Cr LJ 295 ; Prag v Emperor AIR 1942 Oudh 256, p 257, 43 Cr LJ 518 .

53 Kishori Lal v Emperor AIR 1934 All 1016, 36 Cr LJ 295 .

54 Prag v Emperor AIR 1952 Oudh 256, p 257 .

55 Sundar Lal v Emperor AIR 1933 Oudh 276, 34 Cr LJ 732 ; Queen-Empress v Dalip 18 ILR All 246 .

56 Brij Ballabh Goyal v Satya Dev AIR 1960 Raj 213, 1960 Cr LJ 1136 .

57 State of Orissa v Ram Bahadur Thapa AIR 1960 Ori 161, 163, 1960 Cr LJ 1349 .

58 Emperor v Abdool Wadood Ahmed 31 ILR Bom 293 .

59 Bhawo Jivaji v Julji Dayal 12 ILR Bom 377 ; Re *Ganpathia Pillai*AIR 1953 Mad 936, 937, 1953 Cr LJ 1730 .

60 Po Mye v King 1940 Rang LR 109, 118, AIR 1940 Rang 129, 132, 41 Cr LJ 634 .

61 Mahommad Gul v Hazi Fazle Karim AIR 1929 Cal 346, 349, 31 Cr LJ 369; Yad Ali v Emperor AIR 1929 Cal 779 .

62 Anandrao Balkrishna Rangnekar v Emperor AIR 1915 Bom 28(2), 35(FB), 16 Cr LJ 177 (FB) .

63 Re Shibo Prosad Paidah(1879) 4 Cal 124, 3 CLR 122.

64 Re *Ganapathia Pillai*1953 Cr LJ 1703, AIR 1953 Mad 936, 937; Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1966 SC 97 ; Deivasigamani v MS Kamrudeen Rowther 1977 Mad LJ 86, p 96 (Cr) ; Thangavelu Chettiar v Pannamal AIR 1966 Mad 363, p 364, (1966) 1 Mad LJ 547 (Cr), 1966 Mad LW 115 (Cr) ; Gulabchand Bhunder Bhai Soni v State of Gujarat (1970) Cr LJ 1100, AIR 1970 Guj 171, p 173 .

65 Re *Ganapathia Pillai*AIR 1953 Mad 936, p 937, (1953) Cr LJ 1730 ; Anandrao Balkrishna Rangnekar v Emperor AIR 1915 Bom 28 (2), 35, 16 Cr LJ 177 (FB) .

66 State of Orissa v Ram Bahadur Thapa AIR 1960 Ori 161 ; Bonda Kui v Emperor AIR 1943 Pat 64 ; Chandrasekhara v K Karthikeyan AIR 1964 Ker 277, p 283, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 549, 1964 Ker LJ 422 .

67 Channing Arnold v King-Emperor AIR 1914 PC 116, p 119 .

68 Gaya Din v Emperor AIR 1934 Oudh 124, p 126 .

69 Bhawoo Jivaji v Mulji Dayal 12 ILR Bom 377, p 394 .

70 Emperor v Abdool Wadood Ahmed 31 ILR Bom 293 .

71 State of Orissa v Ram Bahadur Thapa AIR 1960 Ori 161 ; Waram Singh v Emperor AIR 1926 Lah 554 ; Bondakui v Emperor AIR 1943 Pat 64 .

72 Daulat Shinandar v P Karuna Bai 1979 LW 115, p 118-19(Cr) .

73 State of Orissa v Bhagaban Barik AIR 1987 SC 1265 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter II

General Explanations

[74][S. 52A

"Harbour".--

Except in section 157, and in section 130 in the case in which the harbour is given by the wife or husband of the person harboured, the word "harbor" includes the supplying a person with shelter, food, drink, money, clothes, arms, ammunition or means or conveyance, or the assisting a person by any means, whether of the same kind as those enumerated in this section or not, to evade apprehension.]

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

This section defining the term 'harbour' is new and was inserted by s 2 of the IPC (Amendment) Act 8 of 1942. Before this the term 'harbour' was defined by s 216B of the IPC which had been inserted by the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act 1894. That definition was intended only of the purposes of ss 212, 216 and 216A and ran as follows:

> In Sections 212, 216 and 216-A, the word 'harbour' includes the supplying a person with shelter, food, drink, money, clothes, arms, ammunition or means of conveyance, or the assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension.

Section 216B has now been repealed by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act 1942 (8 of 1942), s 3 and the present section inserted instead.

2. Reasons for the Change

The reason for the above change is stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Amending Act of 1942 is as follows:

Section 216-B of the Indian Penal Code widens the meaning of the word 'harbour' as used in ss 212, 216 and 216-A . The word is also used in Sections 130, 136 and 157, and as used in those sections bears its narrower dictionary meaning. There is no rational justification for differentiating between the meaning of the word as used in different sections of the Code and the fact that the word is used in sections other than sections 212, 216 and 216-A, appears to have been overlooked when section 216-B was inserted by Act 3 of 1894. The fact that the wider meaning does not attach to the word as used in section 130 which provides for the punishment of persons who harbour an escaped prisoner of war might well produce untoward results in existing circumstances, and it is proposed to render the definition in section 216-B applicable to the Code generally by transferring that section to Chapter II of the Code. It is also proposed to insert words in the definition with a view to resolve a conflict of judicial opinion on the question whether the concluding words of the definition as contained291 in section 216-B embrace all forms of assistance or only forms of assistance ejusdem generis with those previously mentioned in the section. The Allahabad High Court[75] has held that the meaning is so limited, while the Calcutta[76] and Lahore High Courts[77] have taken the contrary view. It is proposed to clarify the point in the sense of the views taken by the Calcutta and Lahore High Courts.292

74 Inserted by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act 1942 (8 of 1942), s 2 .

75 Emperor v Hussain Baksh 25 ILR All 261 .

76 Muchi Mian v Emperor 18 Cr LJ 731, AIR 1918 Cal 826, 26 Cr LJ 141, 21 CWN 1062 .

77 Re Tara Singh 7 ILR Lah 30.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

1. Evolution of Legal Punishment

The IPC not only defines the offences thereby created, but also prescribes the punishments to which the offenders are to be liable.[1] According to Blackstone[2] and Holland,[3] crimes are violations of public rights and duties due to the whole community Austin,[4] in criticising Blackstone's theory, points out that the greater portion of crimes are violations of rights due to individuals directly, e.g., murder, mischief, assaults and thefts) and therefore affect individuals in the most direct way, and further that all offences affect both the community and individuals. Bentham[5]also says that the consequences arising from a harmful act affect both the individual 293injured thereby and the public, the former directly and the latter indirectly. The injured individual suffers directly by the harmful results of the act, whilst those connected with him suffer indirectly. The public suffers: (1) alarm, through fear and expectation of similar conduct towards its component individuals, and (2) danger, from the evil example set, and the weakening of the restraining sanction. Now when the alarm from apprehension, and especially when the dangers from example are sufficiently great to call for state interference, the state will itself call for the enforcement of a penalty, on the ground of pre-eminent public injury, and, owing to the special nature of such injury, viz, the spread of the sense of alarm and danger, the sanction enforced will be one of punishment, inflicted for the purpose of deterring the offender and others (by way of example).

The origin of crimes and criminal law lies in a primitive system, by which all wrongs were redressed by private revenge.

Mayne states:

A system of self-redress in the form of private vengeance, preceded everywhere the establishment of a regular judicature. The development of unlicensed revenge into a system of legal punishment, or criminal law, may be divided into three states:

First. --	A custom arose for the injured party to accept pecuniary satisfaction in lieu of vengeance.
Second.--	Then followed the stage of arbitration, the amount of the fines being settled by the tribal assembly. In its earlier form arbitration was entirely non-coercive; it was merely suggestive. But a system of coercive arbitration followed in due course, the means of coercion being outlawry whereby he who refused to obey the law was deprived of its benefits.
Third. --	Punishment then took the place of fines. The object of both system being to check private retaliation, those acts which tended to provoke vengeance were the earliest crimes.[6]

2. Punishment if must follow Conviction

In a Nagpur case,[7] Hallifax AJC, observed, 'There is no law that says a penalty must always follow a conviction. The maximum penalty for each breach of the law is fixed by it, but there is no minimum, except in a few special cases'. But dissenting from this it has been held that it is imperative that every conviction of an offence shall be followed by the prescribed punishment while, in case no minimum is prescribed, to reduce it to something nominal is completely within the discretion of the court.[8]

In ss 255 and 248 of the CrPC it has been laid down that in summons and warrant cases, respectively that in case the magistrate finds the accused guilty but does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of s 325 or s 360 of the CrPC, he shall pass sentence on him according to law. This lends support to the idea that leaving the minor offences, some penalty must be inflicted on a conviction.

Imperative that every Conviction must follow Punishment unless the Convict Released is on Probation

As their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed in a case, the law does not envisage a person being convicted for an offence without a sentence being imposed 294therefor. The power to impose a sentence, on a conviction, is a power which can and ought to be exercised by all the courts which, having jurisdiction to decide whether the accused is guilty or not, find that he is. The power is preserved to the appellate court by s 386 of the CrPC . When a conviction is affirmed in appeal and no sentence had been awarded by the trial magistrate, the award of a sentence is consequential on and incidental to the affirmation of the conviction, and it is a just and proper order to be passed under the law.[9] But s 360 of the CrPC and the provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act 1958, give the courts wide discretionary powers to release on probation, in all suitable cases, an offender found guilty of any offence not punishable with death or imprisonment for life. And an order directing release on probation is not a punishment.[10] Reading ss 255 and 248 with s 360 of the Crpc and the Probation of Offenders Act 1958, it would appear that unless he releases the accused under s 360, CrPC or other analogous provision of law, a magistrate must inflict some punishment on an offender whom he finds guilty of an offence.[11]

Demanding of security[12] or release on probation[13] is not a punishment.

3. Principle and Object of Punishment

Almost two centuries and a decade back thus spoke Edmund Burke.[14]

> Men are qualified for civil liberty, in exact proportion to their disposition to put moral chains upon their own appetites; in proportion as their love to justice is above their rapacity; in proportion as their soundness and sobriety of understanding is above their vanity and presumption; in proportion as they are more disposed to listen to the counsel of the wise and good, in preference to the flattery of knaves. Society cannot exist unless a controlling power upon will and appetite be placed somewhere and the less of it there is within, the more there must be without. It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things that men of intemperate minds cannot be free. Their passions forge their fetters.

A similar note was expressed by E Barrett Prettyman, a retired chief judge of US court of appeals:[15]

> In an ordered society of mankind there is no such thing as unrestricted liberty, either of nations or of individuals. Liberty itself is the product restraints; it is inherently a composite of restraints; it dies when restraints are withdrawn. Freedom, I say, is not an absence of restraints; it is a composite of restraints. There is no liberty without order. There is no order without systematized restraint. Restraints are the substance without which liberty does not exist. They are the essence of liberty. The great problem of the democratic process is not to strip men of restraints merely because they are restraints. The great problem is to design a system of restraints which will nurture the maximum development of man's capabilities, not in a massive globe of faceless animations but as a perfect realization of each separate human mind, soul, and body; not in mute, motionless meditation but in flashing, threshing activity.

> Thus, liberty, the priceless treasure of human soul, is not an absolute abstract concept. True it is, individual liberty is the most important aspect of human existence but it has 295to be guided and governed by law. The individuality and the power to exercise free will cannot be given total freedom. Liberty is to be achieved by rule of law which includes the procedural law. Procedures are to be followed as they are the hallmark of authenticity and exposit sacrosanctity. Sometimes procedure is evolved to curb wanton moves of the unscrupulous litigants and to curtail the unwarranted passion of an unethical and unprincipled mind and further to nip the unnecessary and uncalled for problems in the bud.[16]

In all punishments, there is the element of vindictiveness, which cannot be left out of sight, notwithstanding what has been said by Plato on the subject. Both personal and public sentiments demand that the person, who has made others suffer unjustly, should himself be made to suffer in return. This is quite distinct from the moral side of an act with which the courts have nothing to do. Their concern is solely with the nature of the act viewed as a crime or breach of the law. The law indicates the gravity of the act by the maximum penalty provided for its punishment and the courts have to judge whether the act committed falls short of the maximum degree of gravity, and, if so, by how much.[17] Bentham regarded the prevention of mischief as the sole aim of punishment.[18]

Every Punishment is Intended to have Double Effect

The object of punishment is the prevention of crime, and every punishment is intended to have a double effect, namely, to prevent the person who has committed a crime from repeating the act or omission, and to prevent other members of the community from committing similar crimes.

As regards the particular offender, there are three ways of prevention by punishment against the recurrence of an offence: (1) by taking from him power of offending (incapacitation); (2) by taking away the desire of offending (reformation); (3) by making him afraid of offending (intimidation).

As regards other members of the community who are disposed to commit similar offences, the only way of providing by punishment against the commission of the offence is by the deterrent effect which the punishment of an individual has upon others. In recent years the reformative aspect of punishment; viewed in relation to both penal treatment and the avoidance of the possibility of a new offender becoming a persistent offender has received increasing attention, particularly with regard to young offenders.[19] It has been said that the chief end of the law of crime is to make the evil-doer an example and a warning to all that are like-minded with him.[20] But it is now generally acknowledged that the principal object of punishment ought to be not merely the prevention of offences but also the reformation of the offender.[21] 'The causing of merely retributive harm, whether by the community or individual, is itself a crime. Punishment is in itself an evil, justified only by its prevention of greater evil, ie, by its effect in deterring the offender from a repetition of the offence and in deterring others, by his example, from the commission of it. In each case it must obviously be the least that will produce both these effects.[22]296

In operating the sentencing system, law should adopt the corrective machinery or deterrence based on factual matrix. By deft modulation, sentencing process be made stern where it should be, and tempered with mercy where it warrants to be. The facts and given circumstances in each case, the nature of the crime, the manner in which it was planned and committed, the motive for commission of the crime, the conduct of the accused, the nature of weapons used and all other attending circumstances are relevant facts which would enter into the area of consideration.[23]

Punishment is Designed to Protect Society by Deterring Potential Offenders

In BC Goswami v Delhi Admn ,[24] their Lordships of the Supreme Court pointed out:

> The main purpose of the sentence, broadly stated, is that the accused must realise that he has committed an act which is not only harmful to the society of which he forms an integral part but is also harmful to his own future, both as an individual and as a member of the society.

Punishment is designed to protect society by deterring potential offenders as also by preventing the guilty party from repeating the offence; it is also designed to reform the offender and reclaim him as a law-abiding citizen for the good of the society as a whole. Reformatory, deterrent and punitive aspects of punishment thus play their due part in judicial thinking while determining this question. In modern civilized societies, however, reformatory aspect is being given somewhat greater importance. Too lenient as well as too harsh sentences both lose their efficaciousness. One does not deter and the other may frustrate making the offender a hardened criminal.

In Ram Narain v State of Uttar Pradesh ,[25] their Lordships of the Supreme Court, observed:

> The broad object of punishment of an accused found guilty in progressive civilized societies is to impress on the guilty party that the commission of crimes does not pay and that it is both against his individual interest and also against the larger interest of the society to which he belongs.

So, the main object of punishment is prevention of crime and every punishment is intended to have a double effect, namely, to prevent the person who has committed a crime from repeating the act and also to prevent others from committing similar crimes.[26]

A substantive sentence of imprisonment for a term and a sentence of imprisonment for a term in default of payment of fine are two different sentences. A sentence or imprisonment in default of fine is intended to operate in addition to a substantive sentence of imprisonment.[27]297

4. Quantum of Punishment

The policy of the law is, as regards most crimes, to fix a maximum penalty, which is intended only for the worst cases, and to leave to the discretion of the judge the determination of the extent to which in a particular case the punishment awarded should approach to or recede from the maximum limit.[28] The law indicates the gravity of the act by the maximum penalty provided for its punishment and the courts have to judge whether the act committed falls short of the maximum degree of gravity, and, if so, by how much.[29] While awarding sentence the Court must keep in mind the gravity of the crime, motive for the crime, nature of the offence and all other attendant circumstances. The Court has to take into consideration all aspects including social interest and consciousness of the society for award of appropriate sentence.[30]

There are no statutory guidelines to regulate punishment. Therefore, in practice, there is much variance in the matter of sentencing. In many countries, there are laws prescribing sentencing guidelines, but there is no statutory sentencing policy in India. The IPC, prescribes only the maximum punishment for offences and in some cases minimum punishment is also prescribed. The Judges exercise wide discretion within the statutory limits and the scope for deciding the amount of punishment is left to the judiciary to reach decision after hearing the parties. However, what factors which should be considered while sentencing is not specified under law in any great detail. A sentence is a compound of many factors, including the nature of the offence as well as the circumstances extenuating or aggravating the offence.[31]

The IPC has made different provisions for punishing different offences. With regard to some offences, the minimum sentence is provided for, but, in most of the remaining cases, the discretion is left to the court to award sentence of imprisonment which may extend to a particular period. The very nature of these provisions requires the judges, while awarding sentences, have to exercise their discretion and determine the quantum of sentence to be awarded on the basis of the facts of the case, the gravity of the offence, the instigating or extenuating circumstances of the case and other circumstances, which may justify the award of the lesser or the maximum sentence.[32] But when there has been considerable delay in the disposal of the case, the ends of justice would be met by awarding a sentence lesser than the minimum prescribed.[33] The accused if a first offender, is by itself, no reason for awarding sentence less than the prescribed minimum.[34]298

Meagre sentence imposed solely on account of lapse of time without considering the degree of the offence will be counter productive in the long run and against the interest of the society.[35]

As regards the punishments provided in the IPC, the authors of the Code themselves wrote:

> We entertain a confident hope that it will shortly be found practicable greatly to reduce the terms of imprisonment which we propose. Where a good system of prison discipline exists, where the criminal without being subject to any cruel severities, is strictly restrained, regularly employed in labour not of an attractive kind and deprived of every indulgence not necessary to his health, a year's confinement will generally prove as efficacious as confinement for two years in a goal where the superintendence is lax, where the work exacted is light and where the convicts find means of punishment is increased, its length may safely be diminished. As members of the Committee which is now employed in investigating the system followed in the goals of this country, we have had access to information which enables us to say with confidence that, in this department of the administration, extensive reforms are greatly needed and may easily be made. The researches of that community, may yet be a terror to the most hardened wrong-doers. Wherever such a Code shall come into operation, we conceive that it will be advisable greatly to shorten many of the terms of imprisonment which we have proposed.[36]

Limit of Sentence prescribed by Law does not mean Maximum Sentence in Every Case

The sections prescribing sentences give the limit to which a sentence can be passed, but that does not mean that the maximum sentence should be awarded in each case. The extent of the sentence has to be judged upon the circumstances of each case.[37] The maximum punishment prescribed by the law should not automatically follow upon a conviction. When the legislature has laid down a maximum punishment for an offence or a series of offences, it is the duty of the trial court to apportion punishment in each case after considering all the circumstances having a bearing upon it, and not to shirk its responsibility by imposing the maximum penalty upon every offender.[38] The determination of the right measure of punishment is often a point of great difficulty, and no hard and fast rule can be laid down, it being a matter of discretion which is to be guided by a variety of considerations, but the court has always to bear in mind the necessity of proportion between an offence and the penalty.[39] The law leaves the measures of punishment to the discretion of the court. Nevertheless, it insists that the discretion be used judiciously and not arbitrarily. This implies that it is the bounden duty of the court to apply its mind to the question and decide it after the due consideration of all relevant circumstances.[40] Although no hard and fast rule can be laid down for measuring what in a particular case would be a proper sentence, yet courts are expected to observe a desirable proportion between the gravity of the offence and the punishment for it.[41]299

The court, in fixing the punishment for any particular crime, will take into consideration the nature of the offence and the circumstances in which it was committed, the degree of deliberation shown by the offender, the provocation which he has received, if the crime is one of violence, the antecedents of the prisoner up to the time of sentence, his age and character. Moreover, among the factors which may be considered are particular circumstances such as the prevalence of a particular offence, or the abuse of a position in a public service, or the need to keep secure a particular public service, or that by the nature of legislation creating the offence it is apparent that heavy pecuniary penalties may be required. It is the practice of criminal courts generally to punish persistent offenders more severely than those who have not been previously convicted or have not committed other crimes, but it is not right to be guided merely by previous convictions, and it is a well recognised principle that a severe sentence for a trifling offence cannot be justified merely on the ground that the offender has had many previous convictions. On the other hand, a first offender may commit an offence of such malignity that a severe sentence is properly imposed. Previous convictions in another country may be taken into consideration in passing sentence.[42]

It is an elementary proposition in criminal jurisprudence that the sentence in each case should be proportionate to the nature and gravity of the crime,[43] irrespective of whether the sentence inflicted will involve a right of appeal or not. To say that the court ought to take into consideration the prayer of the petitioner in deciding what is the proper sentence is wholly wrong.[44]

Punishment to be as Moderate as is Consistent with the object Aimed at

It may generally be taken as a safe principle to follow, that punishments should be made as moderate as is consistent with the object aimed at. Punishment in excess is apt to defeat its own object, and to produce a reaction of popular feeling, as experience shows. To shut a man up in prison longer than is really necessary is not only bad for the man himself, but is a useless piece of cruelty, and economically wasteful and a source of loss to the community.[45] But where a dastardly attack was made on the assistant manager of a colliery by a labourer who happened to be an active member of the labour union, for the reason that he did not get the post he wanted, it was held that a deterrent sentence was called for in the case, as unless such acts were put down no colliery could work, particularly as such attacks might too often be made in the pits when absolutely no evidence would be available.[46] A breach of the peace, even if involving an assault on a public officer of a mild character, unless, there be some elements of criminality in it, should not ordinarily be punished by sentences of imprisonment. So far as possible the jails should be kept for the reception of persons who perform criminal acts of not merely a technical but of a criminal character.[47]300

The use of clubs in a petty quarrel cannot be checked by a lenient sentence.[48] Theft in a railway train is a heinous offence for which a deterrent sentence should be passed.[49]

5. Sentence to be as Low as is Commensurate with the Nature of Offence

The sentence should be as low as is commensurate with the nature of the offence and as the facts would justify, but at the same time it should not be so low as to encourage the commission of the crime.[50] The principle object of punishment is the prevention of crime and the measure of punishment must consequently vary from time to time, according to the prevalence of a particular form of crime and other circumstances. An amount of severity may be very appropriate at one time which would be quite uncalled for at another, and the converse of this holds equally good, namely, where at one time leniency may be appropriate, such would be quite uncalled for later. In determining the appropriate sentence it is also necessary to bear in mind the time, place and circumstances existing at or about the period during which the crime was committed. Previous convicts deserve to be punished more severely. Leniency to those, who are old enough to understand the nature and consequences of their acts, is indefensible.[51]

Law demands that the offender should be adequately punished for the crime, so that it can deter the offender and other persons from committing similar offences.[52]

Economic Offences require Severe Punishment

The offence of black-marketing is very generally prevalent in this country at the present moment and when it is brought home against a person, no leniency in the matter of sentence should be shown and a certain amount of severity may be very appropriate and even called for.[53]

No Leniency to be shown to Rich People

An offence like profiteering which is of highly anti-social character must be put down with a heavy hand. Usually a fine is imposed when the offence is the result of cupidity. When a person wants to make more money and to get rich and to amass a fortune at the cost of society and of its poor and needy members, the only way to deter others from following in his footsteps is to make it clear that crime is not easy and that he should not be permitted to enjoy his ill-gotten wealth. If the only sentence were the sentence of imprisonment and if the accused is permitted to come back after serving his sentence to enjoy the wealth which he has amassed by anti-social acts or by committing offences, it certainly would not deter others from following in his footsteps. Therefore, not only must a fine be imposed, but the fine must be of such a character and of such an amount as to be really deterrent in its character.[54]301

If rich or influential persons are too lightly dealt with though they are guilty, the respect for law and order will be seriously impaired.[55]

Sentences in Dacoity Case to be deterrent unless there are mitigating Circumstances

Unless there is satisfactory proof of the existence of mitigating circumstances, the sentence of a dacoit should invariably be heavy and deterrent. A reasonable circumstance in mitigation can be the extreme youth of an offender, for in his case it is arguable that he acted under the domination of the will of his seniors. There can also be, what for the sake of convenience might be termed, a 'technical dacoity', eg, where two parties in a village have a dispute over some agricultural land and one of them numbering five or more forcibly harvests the crop and removes it. Gang leaders and previous convicts deserve to be punished even more severely. Leniency to those who are old enough to understand the nature and consequences of their acts is indefensible, and in the interest of society it is imperative for criminals to be made to learn that dacoity will not pay.[56]

Sentence in case of Hurts

In awarding sentence in case of grievous hurt, the court should take into account the weapon used, the manner in which the offence was committed and the consequences that had ensued.[57]

Leniency in Certain Cases

A delinquent is sometimes driven to commit a crime not only by his evil and reckless disposition, or bad motives, but even by his social or sympathetic impulses. In such a case, although there should be no sympathy for the criminal who voluntarily places himself in active co-operation, the presence of such temptation in itself calls for severity of punishment. But compelling temptation, as pointed out by some of the text-writers on criminal jurisprudence as a disproof of the degraded disposition which usually accompanies wrongdoing, demands leniency.[58]

Persons responsible for maintenance of Law and Order to be dealt with Severely

If persons charged with the maintenance of law have themselves transgressed the law and had recourse to illegal means in order to obtain the credit of detecting crimes, they ought to be severely dealt with.[59]

6. Other Considerations in Awarding Sentence

It is desirable to avoid sending a first offender to prison for an offence which is not of a serious character, and thereby running the risk of turning him into a regular criminal. In applying the provisions of s 360 of the CrPC, it is better to err (if err one must) on the side of liberality. But where a man has shown from his past actions that he intends to adopt a criminal career, three things should be remembered: In the first place, it is necessary to pass a sentence which will make the criminal realise that a life of crime becomes increasingly hard, and does not pay. In the second place, the 302sentence should serve as a warning to others who may be thinking of adopting a criminal career. In the third place, the public must be protected against people who show that they are going to ignore the rules framed for the protection of society. One cannot, of course, determine sentences on old offenders by any thumb rule. One cannot say that so many past convictions justify such and such a sentence. In each case the circumstances have to be considered. The number of past convictions is one matter to be looked at; the interval of time which has elapsed between one conviction and another, and particularly since the last conviction and another, is important; and so, of course, the nature of the offences previously proved.[60]

7. Desirable Proportion between the Gravity of Offence and Sentence to be Observed

Law is good, but justice is better, although no hard and fast rule can be laid down for measuring what, in a particular case, would be a proper sentence, yet courts are expected to observe a desirable proportion between the gravity of the offence and the punishment for it.[61] The courts should, however, act judicially, and not arbitrarily. This implies that it is the bounden duty of the court to apply its mind to the question and decide it after due consideration of all relevant circumstances.[62] If the facts of the case so justify, the courts would be justified in imposing a sentence which is more than the minimum.[63] The sentence should commensurate with the nature of the offence.[64] It should neither be too lenient, nor disproportionately severe. The former loses its deterrent effect and the latter has a tendency to tempt the offender to commit a more serious offence if there is an opportunity to do so.[65] If the court thinks that leniency can be shown on the facts of a case, it may impose a lighter sentence. But the court should never be a party to a bargain by which money is recovered, for the complainant, through its agency.[66]

Subsequent Notoriety Not to be Considered

In order to judge the appropriateness of the sentence, a court cannot take into account the subsequent notoriety which the accused acquired.[67] Bentham says:[68]

> The same punishment for the same offence ought not to be inflicted upon all delinquents. It is necessary to pay some regard to the circumstances which affect sensibility, and...age, sex, rank, fortune and many other > circumstances ought to modify punishments inflicted for the same offence.303

He mentions the following circumstances in mitigation of punishment:

(i) absence of bad intention;
(ii) provocation;
(iii) self-preservation;
(iv) preservation of some near friend;
(v) transgression of the limits of self-defence;
(vi) submission to menaces;
(vii) submission to authority;
(viii) drunkenness; and
(ix) childhood.

In many cases in India, youth[69] and old age[70] have been held to be sufficient ground for passing a lesser sentence, though a contrary view has also been taken in some others.[71] In Bhagwan Swarup v State of Uttar Pradesh ,[72] the Supreme Court has, however, ruled that age alone cannot be taken as a sufficient ground for awarding lesser punishment though it may be taken into consideration in a mercy petition. The social position of the accused and the social degradation which a sentence of imprisonment will entail on him should be considered in passing sentence on him.[73] The Baluchi custom of killing for unchastity cannot be taken into consideration in the mitigation of sentence.[74]

Reconciliation between the parties may be a good guiding factor for the courts to reduce the sentence.[75] Women and aged persons should be awarded lesser punishment.[76] The fact, that the accused was on bail for a pretty long time, would be a relevant ground in exercising the discretion to impose a lesser sentence.[77] But the fact, that the accused is a legal practitioner, is by no means a circumstance which can be accepted in mitigation or extenuation.[78]

8. Summary

The principles deducible from the decided cases have been summarised in a case as follows:[79]

> The twin objects of punishment are to prevent a person who has committed a crime from repeating it and to prevent others from committing similar crimes. The sentence passed on the offender must be the least that will achieve both these objects. In deciding the measure of punishment the Court ought to take into consideration the nature of the offence, the circumstances in which it was committed, the degree of deliberation shown by the offender and his age, character and antecedents.304

> The prevalence of a particular crime in a particular area or during a particular period should also be taken into account. One's political, sentimental or religious pre-conceptions should be strictly disregarded. The Court must bear in mind the necessity of proportion between an offence and the penalty. The maximum penalty provided for any offence is meant for only the worst cases.

> No sentence should ever appear to be vindictive. An excessive sentence defeats its own object and tends to further undermine the respect for the law. The jails should be reserved for the reception of those who perform criminal acts of not merely a technical but of a criminal character. If the law permits a sentence of fine as an alternative, there is no need of the sentence of imprisonment, unless of course the gravity of the offence or the antecedents of the offender demand it.

First offenders or youthful offenders should invariably be treated leniently, and in applying provisions of law like the First Offender's Probation Act or section 360 of the CrPC, it would be better for the Court to err on the side of liberality. On the other hand, a person who has taken to a life of crime or who has refused to take a lesson form his previous convictions should be meted out severe punishment.

A deterrent sentence is wholly justifiable when the offence is the result of deliberation and pre-planning, is committed for the sake of personal gain at the expenses of the innocent, is a menace to the safety, health or moral well-being of the community or is difficult to detect or trace. Unlike those acts which are universally acknowledged to be of a criminal nature, an act which has only recently been made an offence or which is not unlawful in other parts of the country or State, or which is not essentially criminal in character, deserves leniency, except in the case of persistent offenders.

Criminal Responsibility of Deaf-Mutes

The law in England appears to be that though great caution and diligence are necessary in the trial of a deaf and dumb person, yet if it be shown that such person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act, he is liable to punishment.[80] The same is the law and practice in India.[81] But owing to the difficulty which he clearly would have in putting forward his defence, the safe course to pursue would be to convict him only of the least offence which the prosecution evidence proved.[82] To escape punishment, a deaf-mute to whom ss 82 - 83 of the IPC do not apply must, like his brother who can hear and speak, come within s 84, IPC, in other words, if his mind is sound, his inability to hear and speak will not excuse him. The law does not provide for a sane deaf-mute who has never been instructed, being exempted from punishment.[83] Although a presumption may be made in his case in favour of an absence of mind, it cannot always be taken as an irrebuttable presumption; every case must be judged on the evidence available in that particular case. The conduct of the accused immediately after the occurrence may be taken into 305consideration in determining whether he is incapable of understanding the nature of the Act.[84]

9. Suspension, Remission and Commutation of Sentences

Refer to ss 432 - 33 CrPC and ss 54 - 55 of the IPC .

1 Surendra Nath Banerjee v Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court at Fort William in Bengal 10 ILR Cal 109, p 129 (PC) .

2 Commentaries, Book 4, 5.

3 Holland, Jurisprudence, ch 13.

4 Austin, Jurisprudence, Lecture XVII.

5 Principles of Morals and Legislation, ch 12.

6 Refer to Mayne's Law and Custom, ch 6, pp 170-71.

7 Sitaram Kunbi v Emperor AIR 1928 Nag 188, p 189 .

8 King v Tustipada Mandal AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 291 .

9 Gayaram Vithoba v State of Bombay AIR 1956 SC 146, p 148-49 ; Queen-Empress v Waziruddeen 10 ILR All 58, p 67 .

10 Baba v Govind Singh AIR 1924 Nag 37, 24 Cr LJ 738 .

11 State v Govind Singh AIR 1962 MP 36, p 38 .

12 As quoted in VP Shrivastava v State of Madhya Pradesh (2000) Cr LJ 2681 (MP) .

13 Ibid.

14 As quoted in VP Shrivastava v State of Madhya Pradesh (2000) Cr LJ 2681 (MP) .

15 VP Shrivastava v State of Madhya Pradesh (2000) Cr LJ 2681 (MP) ; See also,State v Dina Nath* AIR 1956 Punj 85, p 87 .

16 VP Shrivastava v State of Madhya Pradesh (2000) Cr LJ 2681 (MP) ; See also,State of Uttar Pradesh v Dev Dutt Sharma* (1985) 1 Cr LC 80 (All) .

17 Nga Ku v Queen-Empress (1897-1901) 1 UBR 330.

18 Principles of Penal Laws, vol 1, collected edition, Pt 2, ch 3, p 396.

19 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 11, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, 1986, p 288.

20 Ruplal Mehra v Emperor AIR 1945 Lah 158, p 164 .

21 Emperor v Dukalha 34 Cr LJ 271, p 272 .

22 Nanhi Gond v Emperor AIR 1927 Nag 221 .

23 Jameel v State of UP 2010 Cr LJ 2106, p 2109 (SC), (2009) 13 Scale 578, 2010 AIR SCW 217 .

24 BC Goswami v Delhi Admn AIR 1973 SC 1457, p 1460, (1973) Cr LR 541 .

25 Ram Narain v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1973 SC 2200, (1973) Cr LJ 1187 ; Ram Chunder Rai v State of Bihar (1970) UJ (SC) 128, (1969) SCD 1091 ; Inder Singh v State (Delhi Admn) AIR 1978 SC 1091, p 1093, (1978) Cr LJ 766 ; Devakaran v State of Rajasthan 1977 Raj Cr C 76, p 77-78 ; Emperor v Dukalha 34 Cr LJ 272, 25 Nag LJ 46 ; Tek Chand v State (1976) All LJ 607 .

26 Raghunath Naik v Terezinha Pacheco Faria AIR 1967 Goa 95, (1967) Cr LJ 1005 ; RegistrarJC's Court v Transcisco AIR 1970 Goa 56, p 59 ; Adikanda Samal v Madhobananda (1973) Cr LJ 1735-37, (1973) Cut LT 679; Ruplal Mehra v Emperor AIR 1945 Lah 158, p 164 ; Nanhi Gond v Emperor AIR 1927 Nag 221, 28 Cr LJ 493 .

27 Aditya Ramkrishna v State of Gujarat (1974) Guj LR 670 .

28 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 11, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, 1986, p 287.

29 Nga Ka v Queen-Empress (1897-1901) 1 UBR 330.

30 Alister Anthony Pareira v State of Maharashtra AIR 2012 SC 3802, 2012 Cr LJ 1160 (SC), (2012) 2 SCC 648, 2012 (1) JT 100, 2012 (1) Scale 189 .

31 Mohd Arif v The Registrar, Supreme Court of India 2014 Cr LJ 4598, 4615 (SC), (2014) 9 SCC 737.

32 R Chakravarti v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1976 SC 392, p 393, (1976) Cr LJ 334 ; Ram Narain v State of Uttar Pradesh (1973) Cr LJ 1187, AIR 1973 SC 2200 ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Bablu (2014) 9 SCC 281, AIR 2015 SC 102 .

33 Vivian Rodrice v State of West Bengal AIR 1971 SC 1584, (1971) Cr LJ 1171 ; State of Maharashtra v Manglya Dhavu Kongil AIR 1972 SC 1797, (1972) Cr LJ 570 ; State of Punjab v Jagir Singh Baljit Singh AIR 1973 SC 2407, (1973) Cr LJ 1589 ; Jagdish Chander v State of Delhi (1973) Cr LJ 1393, p 1396, AIR 1973 SC 127 ; Ghisa v State of Rajasthan (1975) WLN 213 ; Municipal Committee,Ambala v Baisakhi Ram AIR 1963 Punj 175 .

34 Bisahulal v State of Madhya Pradesh (1969) MPLJ 649, (1969) Jab LJ 823 .

35 State of Punjab v Bawa Singh 2015 Cr LJ 1701, p 1706 (SC), (2015) 3 SCC 441, 2015 (1) JT 241, 2015 (1) Scale 420 .

36 Note A reprint p 95.

37 Jainarain Sah v Emperor AIR 1944 Pat 16 .

38 Kehr Singh v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 29, p 30 .

39 Adamji Umar Dalal v State of Bombay AIR 1952 SC 14, p 16 .

40 Dulla v State AIR 1958 All 198, p 200 .

41 State v Kapur Singh AIR 1953 Pepsu 118, p 119 .

42 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 11, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, 1986, p 289; See also,Chakravarti v State of Madhya Pradesh* AIR 1976 SC 392, p 393, (1976) Cr LJ 334 ; Ram Narain v State of Uttar Pradesh (1973) Cr LJ 1187, AIR 1973 SC 2200 .

43 Emperor v Maiku AIR 1930 All 279 .

44 Emperor v Yar Mahommad AIR 1931 Cal 448, p 450 .

45 Nga Ka v Queen-Empress (1897-1901) 1 UBR 330.

46 Gouranga Mohapatra v State AIR 1954 Ori 49 .

47 Ananda Parhi v Emperor AIR 1931 Pat 342, p 343 .

48 Emperor v Maya Din 12 Cr LJ 213(3).

49 Emperor v Anand Laxman Babaji 13 Cr LJ 531(1).

50 Raj Kishore v State AIR 1953 All 464 .

51 Om Prakash v Emperor AIR 1930 Lah 867 .

52 State Tr PS Lodhi Colony, New Delhi v Sanjeev Nanda 2012 Cr LJ 4174, p 4200 (SC), AIR 2012 SC 3104, [2012] 12 SCR 881, (2012) 8 SCC 450, 2012 (7) JT 251, 2012 (7) Scale 120 .

53 Adamji Umar v State of Bombay AIR 1952 SC 14 .

54 Mohan Lal Gokul Das v Emperor AIR 1948 Bom 358 .

55 State of Mysore v Basappa AIR 1953 Mys 75 .

56 Om Prakash v State AIR 1956 All 163 .

57 Bheru Singh v State AIR 1956 MB 269 .

58 Mahommad Kasim Razvi v State of Hyderabad AIR 1951 Hyd 97 .

59 Parmanand v Emperor AIR 1940 Nag 340 ; Jagdish Narain v Emperor AIR 1942 Oudh 163 .

60 Mahommad Hanif v Emperor AIR 1942 Bom 215 .

61 State v Kapur Singh AIR 1953 Pepsu 118, p 119, (1953) Cr LJ 1261 ; Gopal Khaitan v State AIR 1969 Cal 132, p 138, (1969) Cr LJ 382 ; Adamji Umar Dalal v State of Bombay AIR 1952 SC 14, (1953) Cr LJ 542, p 543 .

62 Dulla v State AIR 1958 All 198, p 200, (1958) Cr LJ 316 ; Ram Chander Rai v State of Bihar (1969) SCD 1091, (1970) UJ (SC) 128 ; Rati Ram v State of Uttar Pradesh (1970) SCD 52 ; Dharma Ram Bhagare v State of Maharashtra AIR 1973 SC 476, (1973) Cr LJ 680 .

63 State of Gujarat v Laxman Jivan (1976) Guj LR 321 ; State v Balchandraa Woman Pethe (1966) Cr LJ 400, p 405, AIR 1960 Bom 122 .

64 Raj Kishore v State AIR 1953 All 464 .

65 Ram Chander Rai v State of Bihar (1970) UJ (SC) 128, (1969) SCD 1091 ; Ram Narain v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1973 SC 2200, (1973) Cr LJ 1187 ; Emperor v Maiku AIR 1930 All 279, 31 Cr LJ 631 ; Emperor v Yar Mahommad AIR 1931 Cal 448, p 450, 32 Cr LJ 1181 .

66 Madanlal Ramchandra Daga v State of Maharashtra AIR 1968 SC 1267, (1968) Cr LJ 1469 .

67 Tahsildar Singh v State AIR 1958 All 214, p 234 .

68 Theory of Legislation, translated by R Hildreth, 1876, p 327.

69 Emperor v Jasha Bewa 6 Cr LJ 154 ; Muniandi v Emperor AIR 1915 Mad 542 ; Nga Tha Kin v Emperor 12 Cr LJ 448 ; Emperor v Kamal Dattatraya Sohoni AIR 1943 Bom 304 ; Raghubir Singh v State of Haryana AIR 1974 SC 689 ; Ediga Anagama v State of Andhra Pradesh (1974) Cr LJ 683, (1974) SCC 479 (Cr) .

70 Ediga Anagama v State of Andhra Pradesh (1974) Cr LJ 683, (1974) SCC 479 (Cr) .

71 Re *Kaltameedi Chena Reddi*AIR 1940 Mad 710 ; Re *Sannaya*AIR 1941 Mad 38 ; Re Muriappa 48 Cr LJ 89; Re *C Ramudu*AIR 1943 Mad 69, 44 Cr LJ 299 .

72 Bhagwan Swarup v State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 429, (1971) Cr LJ 413 .

73 Kewalanandgir v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 607 ; but see State of Mysore v Bassappa AIR 1953 Mys 75 .

74 Kaim Dilmurad v Emperor AIR 1935 Sind 44, p 46 ; Emperor v Rahim Khan 15 Cr LJ 501 .

75 Kartar Singh v State 1968 DLT 46 .

76 Matri v State of Punjab AIR 1964 SC 986, 1964 (2) Cr LJ 57 .

77 Durga Das v State of Himachal Pradesh AIR 1973 SC 1379, 1973 Cr LJ 1138 .

78 KV Dayanand v Eramma AIR 1962 AP 294, 1962 (2) Cr LJ 463 .

79 Dulla v State AIR 1958 All 198 ; refer to cases cited therein.

80 Russell on Crimes, vol I, p 62; Archbold's Criminal Practice, p 11; Rex v Steel (1787) 1 Leach CC 451 .

81 Queen v Bowka Hari (1874) 22 WR 35 (Cr) ; Queen-Empress v Bowka (1874) 22 WR 72 (Cr) ; Queen-Empress v Reubin Samuel (1894) Ratanlal 696 ; Emperor v A Deaf and Dumb AIR 1917 Bom 288 ; Re *Peethambaran*AIR 1959 Ker 165 .

82 Emperor v Kalimuthu Thevar (1934) Mad WN 924 .

83 Re *Peethambaran*AIR 1959 Ker 165 ; Emperor v Ulfat Singh AIR 1947 All 301 ; Re Ooami(1955) 1 Mad LJ 113; Re *Boya Polamma*AIR 1941 Mad 225 ; Emperor v Khashaba Tatyai Lawand AIR 1923 Bom 194(1) ; *Emperor v A Deaf and Dumb Accused*AIR 1917 Bom 288 ; Emperor v Nga San Myin 12 Cr LJ 786 ; following Queen v Bowka Hari 22 WR 35 ; Queen v Bowka 22 WR 72, 27 Cal 368 in preference to Dwarka Nath Haldar v Nodar Chand Kanta 22 WR 35 ; Aturam v Empress 34 PR 1885 ; Queen-Empress v Ghanu 37 PR 1889 .

84 King v Arakhit AIR 1953 Ori 30 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 53.

Punishments.--

The punishments to which offenders are liable under the provisions of this Code are--

First.	-- Death;
[85][Secondly.	-- Imprisonment for life;]
[86][]
Fourthly.	-- Imprisonment, which is of two descriptions, namely:--(1) Rigorous, that is, with hard labour;(2) Simple;
Fifthly.	-- Forfeiture of property.
Sixthly.	-- Fine. 306

Comments

1. Forms of Punishment

This section enumerates five forms of punishments, viz: (i) death, (ii) imprisonment for life, (iii) imprisonment which may be either--(a) rigorous, that is with hard labour, or (b) simple; (iv) forfeiture of property; and (v) fine. They are the only authorised forms of punishment to which offenders are liable under the IPC . A magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass a sentence, otherwise unlawful and unauthorised, merely because the accused asks for it.[87] An order of disqualification for holding a driving licence under the Motor Vehicles Act is not a punishment.[88] A contrary view was, however expressed by Bombay High Court in Mohammad Shabir v State of Maharashtra .[89]

An order or dismissal after a departmental enquiry, or removal of an advocate form the rolls cannot be called a punishment for an offence.[90]

2. Punishment and Penalty Distinguished

There is a gulf of difference between 'punishment' and 'penalty'. In s 53, IPC, various types of punishments have been prescribed, of which fine is one. It is doubtful if liability to pay fine makes an act or omission an offence. Imposition of fine may be treated as penalty, because penalty generally means payment of fine for breach of law, rule or contract; in sports it means a disadvantage imposed on competitor for breaking a rule, the essence of penalty is payment of money in terrorem by a party at fault.[91]

Transportation

Till sometime ago transportation was another form of punishment which was ranked next only to death. Transportation meant transportation beyond the seas. Transportation was always for the remaining life of a convicted person. Such convicts too could be granted remission. Transportation was a favorite method of putting rebels, revolutionaries, political offenders, etc out of the way. For many years, the only place where such convicts were sent was the Andaman Islands. In view of the provisions of s 368(2) of CrPC 1898, a court was not required to specify the place of transportation. The appropriate government was also under no obligation to provide any overseas place to receive such convicts after the passing of the 307Prisoners Act 1900. However, this was abolished by the CrPC (Amendment) Act 1955.[92]

Other forms of Punishment

The list of punishments enumerated in this section is not exhaustive. Other punishments beside them can be inflicted by criminal courts in certain cases, for eg, detention in a borstal institute, or a training school, an order under s 565 (now s 356) of the CrPC, etc.[93]Youthful offenders can also be dealt with under the Children Act 1960.

An order under s 360 of the CrPC directing release on probation is not a punishment.[94] The Allahabad and Rajasthan High Courts have also held that probation is not punishment.[95]

Whipping

Whipping was yet another form of punishment, which has now been abolished by s 3(a) of the Abolition of Whipping Act 1955.

Imposition of Hard Labour on Prisoners

It is lawful to employ prisoners sentenced to rigorous imprisonment to do hard labour whether he consents to do it or not. It is open to the jail officials to permit other prisoners also to do any work which they choose to do, provided such prisoners make a request for that purpose. It was also held by the Apex Court that the prisoners are entitled to equitable wages for work done and the state was directed to constitute a wage-fixation body.[96]

3. Plea Bargaining--Earlier Position

Earlier, the concept of 'plea bargaining' was not recognised and was considered against public policy under our criminal justice system. Section 320 , CrPC provides for compounding of certain offences with the permission of the court and certain others even without permission of the court. Except the above, the concept of negotiated settlement in criminal cases is not permissible. This method of short circuiting the hearing and deciding the criminal appeals or cases involving serious offences required no encouragement. Neither the State, the public prosecutor nor even the judge could bargain that evidence would not be led or appreciated in consideration of getting a fleabite sentence by pleading guilty.[97]

Concept of Plea Bargaining and its Present Position

By opting for plea bargaining an accused trades conviction and lesser sentence, for a long, expensive and torturous process of undergoing trial where he may be convicted. A plea bargain is an agreement reached in a criminal case to finally settle the case. 308The parties to the agreement are the accused, the investigating officer, prosecutor and the victim; all of them should agree to settle the criminal case in which the accused pleads guilty to the offence in exchange for lesser punishment. The concept of plea bargaining is has been accepted in Indian law recently. Section 265A to 265L were inserted in the CrPC in a separate ch no XXI-A by Act 2 of 2006, vide its s 4, wef 05 July 2006. The concept being at the infancy stage, the practical utility of the concept would unfold in due course of time. It will take sometime before judicial pronouncements by the High Courts and the Apex Courts would come to the domain of legal fraternity and, general public on the interpretation and efficiency of ch XXI-A of the CrPC .

4. Considerations for Awarding Punishments

The question of sentence has to be determined, not with reference to the volume or character of the evidence adduced by the prosecution in support of the prosecution case, but with reference to the fact whether there are any extenuating circumstances which can be said to mitigate the enormity of the crime.[1] If the court is satisfied that there are such mitigating circumstances, only then, it would be justified in imposing the lesser of the sentences provided by law. In other words, the nature of the proof has nothing to do with the character of the punishment.[2] Where the family history of the accused indicated that he probably suffered from an unbalanced mind and it appeared that in committing the offence he was actuated by jealously or by indignation which would tend further to disturb the balance of his mind, and he had, besides, been awaiting the execution of his death sentence for over a year, it was held by the federal court in appeal that the lesser sentence would be more appropriate than the sentence of death.[3] In the case of child offenders the sentence should not be too harsh.[4]

The court cannot ignore the social impact of crimes. Usually three approaches are made while awarding sentence:

(i) Punitive
(ii) Therapeutic
(iii) Preventive

Among the above, therapeutic approach seems to have been found more effective and acceptable. That satisfies the requirement of law and protects the society, but at the same time reforms the accused to a great extent. Therapeutic approach aims at treating the convict as a human being.[5]

There may be a number of circumstances which lead the court to take a lenient view against the accused to award imprisonment on a lesser side. These mitigating circumstances justify the award of lesser punishment on the facts and circumstances of the case, for instance, a person accused of committing rape marrying the prosecutrix during his trial for offence under s 376, IPC or an accused causing an accident taking the victim to the hospital and bearing all medical expenses.309

But with regard to punishment for the offence of rape, socio-economic status, religion, race, caste or creed of the accused or the victim are irrelevant considerations in sentencing policy. Protection of society and deterring the criminal is the avowed object of law and that is required to be achieved by imposing an appropriate sentence. The sentencing courts are expected to consider all relevant facts and circumstances bearing on the question of sentence and proceed to impose a sentence commensurate with the gravity of the offence. Courts must hear the loud cry for justice by the society in cases of the heinous crime of rape on innocent helpless girls of tender years, and respond by imposition of proper sentence. Public abhorrence of the crime needs reflection thorough imposition of appropriate sentence by the court.[6]

5. Imposition of Sentence - Relevant Factors

The Supreme Court held that these are some factors which are required to be taken into consideration before awarding appropriate sentence to the accused. These factors are only illustrative in character and not exhaustive. Each case has to be seen from its special perspective. The relevant factors are as under:

(a) Motive or previous enmity;
(b) Whether the incident had taken place on the spur of the moment;
(c) The intention/knowledge of the accused while inflicting the blow or injury;
(d) Whether the death ensued instantaneously or the victim died after several days;
(e) The gravity; dimension and nature of injury;
(f) The age and general healthy condition of the accused;
(g) Whether the injury was caused without pre-meditation in a sudden fight;
(h) The nature and size of weapon used for inflicting the injury and the force with which the blow was inflicted;

(i) The criminal background and adverse history of the accused;
(j) Whether the injury inflicted was not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death but the death was because of shock;
(k) Number of other criminal cases pending against the accused;
(l) Incident occurred within the family members or close relations;
(m) The conduct and behavior of the accused after the incident. Whether the accused had taken the injured/the deceased to the hospital immediately to ensure that he/she gets proper medical treatment?

These are some of the factors which can be taken into consideration while granting an appropriate sentence to the accused. The list of circumstances enumerated above is only illustrative and not exhaustive.[7]

Proper Sentence-Duty of Court

Proper and appropriate sentence to the accused is the bounded obligation and duty of the Court. The endeavour of the Court must be to ensure that the accused receives appropriate sentence, the sentence should be according to the gravity of the offence.[8]310

6. Totality of Factors to be Considered in Awarding Punishments

The quantum of punishment is entirely in the discretion of the judge. The law has fixed a maximum penalty which is meant only for the worst case.[9] Sentencing being the crucial strategy of criminal law in achieving social defence and delinquent rehabilitation, the courts must consider the totality of factors bearing on the offence and the offender and fix a punishment which will promote effectively the punitive objective of law-deterrence and rehabilitation.[10] In fixing the nature and quantum of sentence, the court can take into consideration the prolonged harassment and the expense suffered by the accused, which are the necessary concomitants of protracted criminal proceedings extending over a number of years.[11]

7. Proportion Between Crime and Punishment

Criminal law adheres in general to the principle of proportionality in prescribing liability according to the culpability of each kind of criminal conduct. It ordinarily allows some significant discretion to the judge in arriving at a sentence in each case, presumably to permit sentences that reflect more subtle considerations of culpability that are raised by the special facts of each case in essence affirm that punishment ought always to fit the crime; yet in practice, sentences are determined largely by other considerations. Sometimes it is the correctional needs of the perpetrator that are offered to justify a sentence; sometimes the desirability of keeping him out of circulation, and sometimes even the tragic results of his crime. Inevitably these considerations cause a departure from just dessert as the basis of punishment and create cases of apparent injustice that are serious and widespread.[12]

It is the duty of the court to impose proper punishment depending upon the degree of criminality and desirability to impose such punishment. As a measure of social necessity and also as a means of deterring other potential offenders, the sentence should be appropriate befitting the crime.[13]

Proportion between crime and punishment is a goal respected in principle, and in spite of errant notions, it remains a strong influence in the determination of sentences. The practice of punishing all serious crimes with equal severity is now unknown in civilised societies, but such a radical departure from the principle of proportionality has disappeared from the law only in recent times. Even now for a single grave infraction, drastic sentences are imposed. Anything less than a penalty of greatest severity for any serious crime is thought then to be a measure of toleration that is unwarranted and unwise. But in fact, quite apart from those considerations that make punishment unjustifiable when it is out of proportion to the crime, uniformly disproportionate punishment has some very undesirable practical consequences.[14]

After giving due consideration to the facts and circumstances of each case, for deciding just and appropriate sentence to be awarded for an offence, the aggravating 311and mitigating factors and circumstances in which a crime has been committed are to be delicately balanced on the basis of really relevant circumstances in a dispassionate manner by the court. Such act of balancing is indeed a difficult task. It has been very aptly indicated in Dennis Council Mc Gautha v California ,[15] that no formula of a foolproof nature is possible that would provide a reasonable criterion in determining a just and appropriate, punishment in the infinite variety of circumstances that may affect the gravity of the crime. In the absence of any foolproof formula which may provide any basis for reasonable criteria to correctly assess various circumstances germane to the consideration of gravity of crime, the discretionary judgment in the facts of each case, is the only way in which such judgment may be equitably distinguished.[16]

8. Consideration of effect of Punishment on Social Order

Imposition of sentence without considering its effect on the social order in many cases may be in reality a futile exercise. The social impact of the crime, for e.g. where it relates to offences against women, dacoity, kidnapping, misappropriation of public money, treason and other offences involving moral turpitude or moral delinquency which have great impact on social order, and public interest, cannot be lost sight of and per se require exemplary treatment. Any liberal attitude by imposing meagre sentences or taking too sympathetic view merely on account of lapse of time in respect of such offences will be result-wise counter-productive in the long run and against societal interests which need to be cared for and strengthened by string of deterrence inbuilt in the sentencing system.[17]

9. Clause (1)--'Death'

This is the severest form of punishment authorised by law. There is a growing volume of public opinion against this form of punishment and several countries have abolished capital punishment.[18] In India, this section recognises 'death' as a form of punishment, and the IPC prescribes it for the following offences:

(i) waging or attempting to wage war, or abetting waging of war, against the Government of India (s 121);
(ii) abetment of mutiny, if mutiny is committed in consequence thereof (s 132);
(iii) perjury resulting in an innocent person being convicted of a capital offence and executed (s 194);
(iv) murder (ss 302 - 03);
(v) abetment of suicide committed by a minor insane delirious person, an idiot, or a person intoxicated (s 305);
(vi) attempt by life-convict to murder, if hurt is caused (s 307);
(vii) murder in dacoity (s 396).

It may be noted that death is the only form of punishment without an alternative, for an offence under s 303 . Although the draftsmen of the IPC retained this form of punishment, they added that the death sentence should be very sparingly inflicted.[19] In Dalip Singh v State of Punjab ,[20] it was held by the Supreme Court:312

> In a case of murder of the death sentence ordinarily be imposed unless the trying Judge, for reasons which should normally be recorded, considers it proper to award the lesser penalty. But the discretion is his and, if he gives reason on which a judicial mind could properly found an appellate Court should not interfere.

After the above decision the provision of s 367(5) of the CrPC 1898, requiring the judge to state in the judgment, the reason why the sentence of death is not passed was repealed by s 66 of the CrPC (Amendment) Act 1955. The present CrPC which came into force with effect from 1 April 1974 made further drastic changes in the law relating to the death sentence. It can now be awarded only in exceptional cases and not as a rule.

In offence inviting extreme penalty of imprisonment for life or death, it is expected that every point urged would be dealt with the razor sharp precision and sound logical reasoning and not on the ipse dixit of a Judge.[21]

Special Reasons for awarding Death Sentence

Under s 367(5) of the repealed CrPC 1898, death sentence and sentence of imprisonment for life were alternative sentences. In the discretion of the trial judge either sentence could be given. On the recommendations of the Law Commission a complete change has been brought out in the corresponding s 354(3) of the CrPC 1973. This section provides that if an offence is punishable with death or with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of years, the court should give reasons for awarding the particular sentence and in the case of sentence of death the judgment shall state the special reasons for awarding such sentence (See also commentary under s 302, vol III).

'Special Reasons' mean Exceptional Circumstances

Special reasons mean exceptional circumstances necessitating the imposition of death sentence. Secondly, while awarding the death sentence, the court should take into consideration not only the crime committed but also the criminal who committed the crime. Since the legislature has given a discretion, it is not possible to lay down rigid standards as to when capital sentence can be, and when it cannot be, awarded. Under s 354(3) of the CrPC, life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence is an exception.[22] The case law as to the imposition of death sentence under the old Code of 1898 is now no longer good law (See also commentary under s 302, vol III).

Special Reasons when can exist

All murders are terrific and if the fact of murder being terrific is an adequate reason for imposing the death sentence then every murder shall have to be visited with that sentence. In that event, the death sentence will become the rule, not an exception and s 354(3) of the CrPC will become a dead letter.[23] The legislature, therefore, was right in leaving it to the discretion of the judicial decision as to what should be the sentence in the particular circumstances of a case. The legislature has, however put a 313rider that when the extreme penalty is inflicted it is necessary for the court to give special reasons thereof.[24] When culpability assumes the proportion of extreme depravity, 'special reasons' can legitimately be said to exist.[25]

'Special reasons' must indicate the sentence and so must be related as to why the murderer must be hanged and why life imprisonment will not suffice. The punishment is on the person though for the offence. The only correct approach is to read into s 302 and s 354(3) of the CrPC, the human rights and human trends in the Constitution.[26] The mere use of adjectives like 'cruel' and 'brutal' supplies the special reasons contemplated by s 354(3), CrPC .[27]

It is incumbent upon the prison authorities to facilitate and allow a final meeting between prisoner, his family and friends prior to his execution.[28]

Death Sentence in the Rarest of the Rare Cases

Reviewing the history of sentencing as well as the policy of the legislature and the legality and constitutionality of the death sentence the Supreme Court in Bachan Singh v State of Punjab ,[29] has held that under s 354(3), CrPC, life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence is an exception. Death sentence ought not to be given save in the rarest of rare cases when alternative option is unquestionably foreclosed. Luring small girls, gagging them and cutting their private parts and ruthlessly defiling the bodies in order to prevent identification of the victims, and mysterious motive for the murders call for but one sentence. Nothing short of death sentence can atone for such callous and calculated transgression of law. Morbid pity can have no place in the assessment of murders, which in any respects will remain unparalled in the annals of crime. Such cases are rarest of the rare cases.[30] The taking place of triple murder is no ground to award death sentence as it does not become a 'rarest of rare case'.[31]

The assassination case of the former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was also found to be the rarest of rare cases, in which the Supreme Court upheld the capital sentence awarded to not only the actual murderer but also to the conspirator.[32]

In Anjuman v State ,[33] three persons in a family were murdered together in a few minutes in one and the same place for which the accused no 1 played the main role. He attacked all the three with a vattukathi, one after the other and killed them on the spot. He acted as a butcher in a slaughter house. There was a dispute over the enjoyment of the well between the parties. The trial court did not award the death sentence to the accused but on appeal against conviction, the Madras High Court felt that the accused no 1 should not have resorted to such brutal violence and taken away the lives of three persons in a family and observed that in the circumstances, the session judge might not have been wrong if he had awarded the maximum penalty of 314death sentence to him. In the opinion of their Lordships it was one of the rarest of the rare cases, suitable for awarding death sentence (see also commentary under s 302, vol III).

The Court while considering the case for awarding capital punishment must understand that an exceptional authority must be exercised in most exceptional case, with utmost care, caution and only after arriving at the conclusion that no other punishment in any circumstance shall serve and satisfy the injury caused to the social order. The Indian society is a multilayer, multi dimensional, multi class, multi caste and multi cultural society with several virtues and several ills of every variant. An individual living in such society carries these virtues and ills with him. The courts cannot ignore all these factors while making necessary consideration for settling a severest sentence.[34]

Death Sentence and its Constitutional Validity

The history of capital punishment indicates a trend against the sentence of death and there is a shift from the sentence of death to a lesser sentence but, there is also a clear intention of maintaining this sentence to meet the ends of justice in appropriate cases.[35] Imposition of capital sentence under s 302, IPC, has been held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court.[36] The constitutionality of death sentence again came up to be examined before the Supreme Court in Bachan Singh v State of Punjab ,[37] and it was held that s 354(3), CrPC, is valid and does not violate arts 14, 19 or 21 of the Constitution .

In certain states, there are Acts which have done away with the sentence of death or imprisonment for life in the case of children below the age of 16.[38] The provisions of ss 360 - 61 of the CrPC further lay stress on releasing the offenders on probation of good conduct in specified types of cases and the courts are under an obligation to give special reasons, when they are not so released. These provisions are, therefore, to be given due consideration before awarding any punishment to an offender.

Aboriginals cannot be judged entirely by the standards which are applicable to more civilised races. Such people are liable to sudden accessions of rage, when they are not perhaps entirely responsible for their actions. Where a young aboriginal who was little more than a boy was convicted of murder on purely circumstantial evidence, and it could not be known what the reason for the murder was, and the court could not be sure that there was no grave provocation, it was held that it is would not be proper to impose the death sentence on him.[39]

In the case of brutal murder committed by a woman the existence of an extremely young baby born to her since the murder may perhaps be taken into consideration by 315the state government when she prefers an application for mercy, but would not be a ground for passing the 'lesser sentence'.[40]

Form of Death Sentence and its Validity

When any person is sentenced to death, the sentence shall direct that he be hanged by the neck till he is dead.[41]

Hanging in Public View not Permissible

Article 21 of our Constitution only interdicts execution of death sentence in a cruel, barbarous and degrading manner but does not ban the execution of death sentence. It is not unlawful in the abstract and in the absolute to execute a lawful order on the command of a judicial verdict. The method prescribed by s 353(5), CrPC for executing death sentence by hanging does not violate art 21 of the Constitution . The system of hanging is as painless as is possible in the circumstances; it causes no greater pain than any other known method of executing the death sentence and it involves no barbarity, torture or degradation.[42] Hanging in public view would, however, amount to violation of art 21 of the Constitution .[43]

Confirmation of Death Sentence

A sentence of death passed by a sessions judge or an additional sessions judge is subject to confirmation by the High Court. It shall not be executed unless it is conformed. As to submission of sentences for confirmation, refer to ch 28, ss 366 - 71, CrPC .

Undue Long Delay in Execution of Death Sentence

Delay in execution of death sentence is violation of Article 21 of the Constitution . Undue long delay in execution of sentence of death will entitle the condemned prisoner to approach the Supreme Court under Article 32 . However, the Supreme Court will only examine the circumstances surrounding the delay that has occurred and those that have ensued after sentence was finally confirmed by the judicial process. The Supreme Court would not reopen the conclusion already reached, however may consider the question of inordinate delay to decide whether the execution of sentence should be carried out or should be altered into imprisonment for life.[44]

10. Clause (2)--Imprisonment for Life

The words 'imprisonment for life' have been substituted for 'transportation for life', which meant transportation for the whole of the remaining period of the convict's natural life.[45] The imprisonment for life ordinarily means imprisonment for the whole of the remaining period of the convicted person's natural life.[46] But for certain 316purposes the sentence was assumed to be one for 20 years,[47] under the Prison Rules there is no indefeasible right of a prisoner to be unconditionally released on the expiry of 20 years imprisonment, including remissions. Therefore, solely on the basis of completion of a term in a jail serving imprisonment and remission earned under the relevant rules or law will not entitle an automatic release, but the appropriate government must pass a separate order remitting the unexpected portion of the sentence.[48]

Equally spending 13½ years in jail does not mean that the accused has undergone a sentence for life.[49] Awarding a sentence of life imprisonment means life and not a mere 14 years in jail.[50] In this case the Supreme Court held thus--

> It is conclusively settled by a catena of decisions that the punishment of imprisonment for life handed down by the Court means a sentence of imprisonment for the convict for the rest of his life.[51]

Imprisonment for life means rigorous imprisonment for life.[52]

Life imprisonment is not equivalent to imprisonment for fourteen years or for twenty years.[53]

The word "imprisonment" has not been defined either in the Code of Criminal Procedure or in the Indian Penal Code . A person sentenced to life imprisonment is bound to serve the remainder of his life in prison unless the sentence is commuted by the appropriate Government in terms of the ss 55, 433 and 433A of the Code of Criminal Procedure .[54]

Transportation was a common sentence in England; but transportation beyond the seas ceased as a punishment in 1854. But when framing the IPC the draftsmen undoubtedly intended the sentence of transportation as one whereby those on whom it was passed should be sent overseas. Section 58 of the CrPC 1898 (now repealed by Act 26 of 1955) however, provided that until transported the offender should be dealt with as if sentenced to rigorous imprisonment and should be held to have been undergoing his sentence of transportation during the time of the imprisonment. That section was intended by the authors of the IPC to provide only for temporary 317detention of prisoners awaiting transportation. The Prisoners Act 1900, as amended in 1903, effected a radical change and transportation become in truth, only a name given in India to a sentence for life and, in a few special cases for a lesser period. So a prisoner sentenced to transportation could be sent to the Andamans or be kept in one of the jails in India appointed for transportation prisoners where he could be dealt with in the same manner as a prisoner sentenced to rigorous imprisonment.[55] The fiction of transportation has now been given up by substituting 'imprisonment for life' for 'transportation'.

Without Formal Remission, Imprisonment of Life cannot be treated for a Definite Period

There is no provision of law whereunder a sentence for life imprisonment, without any formal remission by appropriate government, can be automatically treated as one for a definite period. Section 57 does not say that transportation for life shall be deemed to be transportation for 20 years for all purposes; nor does the amended section which substitutes the words 'imprisonment for life' for 'transportation for life' enable the drawing of any such all embracing fiction. A sentence of transportation for life or imprisonment for life must prima facie be treated as transportation or imprisonment for the whole of the remaining period of the convicted persons' natural life.[56]Section 57 simply provides that in calculating fractions of terms of punishment, imprisonment for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to imprisonment for 20 years. If a person is awarded imprisonment for life, the sentence would tenure till the life time of the accused.[57] In the absence of an order of commutation having been passed either under s 55 of the IPC or under s 433(b), CrPC, a life convict is not entitled to be released even if he has undergone a term of imprisonment exceeding 14 years' (inclusive of remission).[58]

Whereas 'imprisonment' can be for any period form 24 hours to 14 years in accordance with the period prescribed in the IPC, a sentence of 'imprisonment for life' can mean but one thing, namely, rigorous imprisonment for 20 years.[59]

Imprisonment for Life means Rigorous Imprisonment for Life[60]

Section 302, IPC, as amended by the Schedule to the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act 1955, only states that the alternative punishment for murder shall be 'imprisonment for life' and not rigorous imprisonment for life or simple imprisonment for life. It has been held that the court passing the sentence has to keep in view the provisions of s 60 of the IPC and choose one or the other form in view of all the circumstances.[61] But s 60 applies only to a case in which the offence is punishable with imprisonment of either description. It has no application to a case in which the offence is punishable with 'imprisonment for life', which is a class of punishment from imprisonment which is of two descriptions. Imprisonment for life 318means rigorous imprisonment for life. It can never mean simple 'imprisonment'. It is not, therefore, necessary for the court when imposing a sentence of imprisonment for life' to specify that it should be rigorous.[62] Whereas imprisonment simpliciter can be of two categories simple and rigorous but 'imprisonment for life' can only be rigorous and whereas 'imprisonment' can be for any period from 24 hours to 14 years in accordance with the period prescribed in the IPC, the sentence of 'imprisonment for life' can mean but one thing, namely, rigorous imprisonment for 20 years.[63] The life imprisonment is necessarily rigorous imprisonment.[64]Indian Penal Code does not recognize/permit award of simple imprisonment for life, if awarded, it is an error which can be rectified by the appellant court under s 386 IPC .[65]

The sentence of imprisonment for life is the maximum sentences reserved for offences under ss 121, 121A, 122, 124A, 125, 128, 130-32, 194-95, 225, 232, 238, 255, 302, 305, 307, 311, 313-14, 326, 329, 364, 371, 376-77, 388-89, 394-96, 400, 409, 412-13, 436, 438, 449, 459-60, 467, 472, 474, 477, 485, 489A, 489B, 589D of this Code.

11. Clause (4)--Imprisonment

The expression 'imprisonment' has not been defined by the IPC or the CrPC . According to the definition of imprisonment given by Tomlins 'imprisonment' means:

> The restraint of a man's liberty under the custody of another; this extends not only to gaol, but to a house, stocks, or where a man is held in the street, etc, for in all these cases the party so restrained is said to be a prisoner as long as he has not his liberty to go about his business as at other times.[66]

A division bench of the Allahabad High Court has observed that the very word 'imprisonment' means 'putting in prison'. Placing its reliance on s 418, CrPC the Bench further observed that the concept of 'imprisonment' implies 'putting into prison or other place of custody'.[67]

Neither this Code nor the CrPC directs where a sentence of imprisonment shall be served. It has, however, been held that punishment by imprisonment under the IPC means that the offender shall go to goal.[68] In fact the very word 'imprisonment' means 'putting in prison'. But in the well-known case of Bird v Jones ,[69] Coleridge J, quoted the dictum of Coke that, 'Every restraint of the liberty of a free man will be an imprisonment although he be not within the walls of any common prison', and Williams, J quoted Blackstone's statement that 'Every confinement of the person is an imprisonment whether it be in a common prison, or in a private house, or in the stocks, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public street'.[70]319

The definition of imprisonment to be gathered from these judgments was accepted by the Madras High Court in P Narasayya Pantulu v Capt RAC Stuart .[71] It was there stated that the retaining of a person in a particular place or compelling him to go in a particular direction by force of an exterior will overpowering or suppressing in any way his own voluntary action is an imprisonment on the part of the person who exercised that exterior will.

Confinement in the court premises till the court rises is imprisonment as, although the person sentenced is not confined in goal, his liberty is restricted.[72]

Every confinement of a person and every restraint of liberty of a free man is imprisonment. It includes undertrial detention also.[73]

Rigorous, Simple and in Default Imprisonment

The imprisonment referred to in cl (4) of s 53 may be (a) rigorous, that is with hard labour, or (b) simple. The court may award partly rigorous or partly simple imprisonment. With regard to this sentence the framers of the Code said:

> Of imprisonment we propose to institute two grades, rigorous imprisonment and simple imprisonment, but we do not think the Penal Code is the proper place for describing with minuteness, the nature of either kind of punishment. This has been left to gaol discipline.

But rigorous imprisonment is described as imprisonment with hard labour which may mean digging earth, cutting wood, grinding corn, drawing water and pressing oil. Hard labour does not mean harsh labour victimising a prisoner by forcing on him particularly harsh and degrading jobs, violates the law's mandate.[74] When nature of imprisonment is not disclosed the imprisonment will be simple.[75] Nature of imprisonment on the other hand in simple imprisonment is simple detention in gaol custody. If an offence is punishable with imprisonment and fine, some term of imprisonment must be awarded in addition to the fine.[76]

Imprisonment in default of payment of fine is a distinct sentence. It is awarded under s 64 of the IPC and not under this section. It can neither run concurrently with the substantive punishment awarded for the offence nor can the period of detention of the accused before conviction can be set off against such imprisonment.[77]

Lenient View in Awarding Punishment

There may be a number of circumstances which lead the court to take lenient view against the accused to award imprisonment on lesser side. These mitigating circumstances justify award of lesser punishment on the facts and circumstances of the case, for instance, a person/accused committing rape marrying the prosecutrix during his trial for offence under s 376 of the IPC or an accused causing an accident taking the victim to the hospital and bearing all medical expenses. 320

Term of Imprisonment

The authors of the IPC proposed to fix both minimum and maximum punishments but the select committee was of the opinion that, considering the general terms in which the offences had been defined and the presence of mitigating circumstances adherence to the prescribed minimum may become a matter of hardship and even injustice. It was, therefore, ultimately resolved to leave the minimum punishment for all offences except those of the gravest nature to the discretion of the judge who would have the means in each case, of forming an opinion as to the character of the offender and the circumstances, whether aggravating or mitigating under which the offence had been committed.[78] Only in the case of offences under ss 397 - 98 of the IPC, a minimum sentence of imprisonment for seven years has been fixed. In all other cases only the maximum punishment has been specified. The policy of law is to fix a maximum penalty which is intended only for the worst cases. Quantum of punishment has been left to the discretion of the court.[79] The minimum term of imprisonment prescribed under this Code is 24 hours for an offence punishable under s 510 . In the case of offences under s 194 or s 449, the punishment is to be only imprisonment for life or rigorous imprisonment. On the other hand, the following offences are punishable with simple imprisonment only, viz, offences under ss 168 - 69, 172-80, 188, 223, 225A(b), 228, 291, 341, 500-02, 509-10. However the offences under Pt 3 of s 176, Pt 2 of s 177 and Pt 3 of s 188 are punishable with imprisonment of either description like a number of other offences.

Solitary/Single Cell Confinement

The IPC recognises solitary confinement as a form of punishment. Sections 73 - 74 of the IPC deal with such punishments. But it is only a form of rigorous imprisonment and not distinct from it. Solitary confinement as a punishment is reserved for the most exceptional cases of unparalleled atrocity and brutality.[80]

Solitary or single cell confinement prior to rejection of the mercy petition by the President is unconstitutional. Almost all the Prison Manual of the States provide necessary rules governing the confinement of death convicts.[81] The rules should not be interpreted to run counter to the ruling in Sunil Batra v Delhi Administration [82] and violate art 21 of the Constitution .[83]

Imprisonment till the Rising of the Court

Unless the punishment section fixes a minimum, the court has full discretion to pass a sentence of imprisonment for any period less than the maximum, for instance, for five minutes if this would fit the offence.[84] Imprisonment literally means 'putting in prison' and so it has been held in some cases that punishment by imprisonment means that the offender should go to gaol and that a sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the court is not a sentence according to law.[85] The sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the court is unknown to law, for the sentence of imprisonment 321involves the suffering of it outside the custody of the court. On the date on which the case comes on for hearing, if the accused is taken into custody by the court, he would only be regarded as being in the custody of the court and that would not amount to the suffering of imprisonment. Section 420 , CrPC, requires that when the prisoner is to be confined in a jail, the warrant shall be lodged with the jailor. Since all these requirements are laid down for the execution of the sentence of imprisonment a sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the court is incapable of execution as provided by the CrPC and does not therefore amount to the suffering of imprisonment within the meaning of the Code.[86] In a Calcutta case, however, it has been held that rigorous imprisonment for one day, and detention till the rising of the court are not different punishments, that in the case of imprisonment for one day, as the day on which the sentence is passed counts as one day, the accused could not be detained in jail on a warrant issued for such a period. In other words, the accused must be taken to have suffered this imprisonment, and there should be no further trouble on the point.[87]

In Public Prosecutor v Kanniappan ,[88] a learned judge of the Madras High Court observed:

> When the statute says that for an offence the offender shall be imprisoned, it normally means that he should be sent to jail. To impose a sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the court, and I have no doubt about it at all. Is an evasion of the statutory provision and such an evasion would be justified only in very exceptional circumstances, as for instance, where the offence is found to be very severely technical or where there are extenuating circumstances possessing unusual force. It is difficult to understand how an evasion of a statutory provision can ever be justified.

It was held by a division bench of the Madras High Court that a direction by the court that a person shall be confined in the court premises till the court rises constitutes imprisonment within the meaning of the IPC and the CrPC .[89] In another case the Madras High Court held that sentence "till the rising of the Court" is not contemplated by s 53 IPC .[90] The same view was taken by the Punjab Chief Court in Baghel Singh v Emperor. [91] Refer to the undermentioned cases,[92] where the High Court passed a sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the court. According to the Gujarat High Court in a case of imprisonment only for one day, the prisoner has to be released on the very day, on which he was sentenced.[93] In this way the punishment of imprisonment till the rising of the court should be treated and reckoned as an imprisonment for one day and there can be no illegality in awarding such sentence in appropriate cases.

Discouragement of Sentence of Imprisonment for Short Term

After the passing of the present CrPC the policy of the law is to discourage short term imprisonment as a sentence for any offence. Sub-section (4) of s 354 provides:

> 322
>
> When the conviction is for an offence punishable with imprisonment for a term of one year or more, but the court imposes a sentence of imprisonment for a term of less than three months, it shall record its reasons for awarding such sentence, unless the sentence is one of imprisonment till the rising of the court or unless the case was tried summarily under the provisions of this Code.

Thus in cases when an offence is punishable with imprisonment for one year or more if the court does not find it to be a fit case for awarding a sentence of three months or more, the intention of the law is not to award imprisonment for a period of less than three months unless for the reasons to be recorded in the judgment the court finds it necessary to do so under the peculiar circumstances of the case because a short period of imprisonment increases the probability, that a casual offender may become the habitual offender.[1]

Probation--Whether Amounts to Punishment

In State of Uttar Pradesh v Dev Dutt Sharma ,[2] the Allahabad High Court has held that a direction to release an offender, after his conviction for a certain offence, on probation on furnishing the required security is not a punishment and is not covered by this section.

Commencement of Sentence

A sentence of imprisonment ought to commence from the time the sentence is passed, unless there is some lawful reason for ordering it to commence from some future period.[3] Although there is no direct provision in the IPC which lays down that the sentence passed against an accused should commence from the date of the judgment convicting him, a sentence of imprisonment must operate from the date of conviction and not from a date prior to the date on which the sentence is passed.[4] The day on which the sentence is passed counts as day one of imprisonment.[5] In calculating a sentence of imprisonment the day upon which the sentence is passed and the day of release ought both to be included and considered as days of imprisonment, eg a man sentenced on 1 January to one month's imprisonment should be released on 31 January, not on 1 February.[6]Section 427, CrPC provides for an exception to the general rule that sentences commence to run from the time of their being passed.[7] Sentences of imprisonment imposed upon the same person in separate trials on the same day take effect by the terms of this section one after the other, in the order in which they were passed and a magistrate need not, therefore, give any direction in his judgment in respect of the same.[8]

A person is 'undergoing' imprisonment within the meaning of this section from the moment the sentence is passed; consequently, when at the time of passing a second sentence the accused is 'undergoing imprisonment', though on bail, and the order 323does not make the second sentence run concurrently, the sentence will be treated as consecutive.[9]

Period of detention before Conviction to be Set Off against the Sentence of Imprisonment except Life Imprisonment and Imprisonment in default

Under s 428 of the CrPC, the period of detention, undergone by an accused in connection with any case before his conviction, is to be set off against the sentence of imprisonment imposed upon him in that case. The benefit of the said section is available even though the conviction was before the enforcement of the CrPC .[10] This benefit is available only when the accused has been sentenced to 'imprisonment for a term', and not where he has been sentenced to suffer imprisonment for life.[11]Section 428 provides only for a 'set off', it does not equate an 'under-trial detention or remand detention with imprisonment on conviction'.[12] The sentence of imprisonment in default of fine cannot be subjected to a set-off after the amendment in s 428, CrPC in 1978.[13]

Procedure to avail benefit of Set-off

The procedure to invoke the benefit of s 428, CrPC could be a miscellaneous application by the accused to the concerned court at any time while the sentence runs for passing an appropriate order for reducing the term of imprisonment which is the mandate of the section.[14]

12. Clause (5)--Forfeiture

The statutes 33 and 34, Vict c 23, 1870 abolished forfeiture and escheat in England (except when forfeiture is consequent upon outlawry) and provided for the appointment of an administrator to the property of the convict. In India total forfeiture was a part of the punishment for offences under ss 121 - 22 of this Code, till 1921. Sections 61 - 62 which provided for forfeiture of all the property of an offender were repealed by s 4 of the IPC (Amendment) Act 16 of 1921. But forfeiture of certain property is still a form of punishment[15] reserved for offences under ss 126 - 27 and 169 of the IPC . Section 263A provides for the forfeiture of seized fictitious stamps and the material used for making such stamps but this forfeiture is not a part of the sentence imposed on the accused. Forfeiture provided in s 13(3) of Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance 1944 in case of offences which involve the embezzlement, etc, of government money or property is really a speedier method of realising government property as compared to a suit which the government could bring for realising the money or the property and is not punishment or property within the meaning of art 20(1) of the Constitution of India . But the forfeiture by the 324district judge under s 13(3) cannot be equated to forfeiture of property which is provided in s 53 of IPC .[16]

13. Clause (6)--Fine

Advantages and Disadvantages of Fine as a Punishment

Fine, as a form of punishment is allied to forfeiture, the one relating to money and the other to property. One great advantage of fine as a punishment is that it affords the means for compensating the complainant and relieves the tax-payer by reducing the cost of prevention and punishment of crime. It is a peculiarly appropriate punishment for all offences in which men are prompted by cupidity, for it is a punishment which operates directly on the very feeling which impels men to such offences. But it has some disadvantages also. First, it affects the family and dependents of the offender who are innocent. Secondly, it is not exemplary as at its execution no spectacle is exhibited. Lastly, it is inappropriate for serious crimes. It even enables well-to-do persons to flout the provisions of law and avoid punishment in the real sense by offering to pay the fine the amount whereof does not make any material difference to him.

Fine is the only punishment for certain offences, and there too it is unlimited in the case of offences under ss 155 - 56 and 171, limited to Rs 1,000 in the cases of offences under ss 154 and 294A, limited to Rs 500 in the case of offences under ss 137, 171H, 171I, 278, and limited to Rs 200 in the case of offences under ss 263A, 283 and 290 . In other cases fine is an alternative or additional punishment.

14. When Fine is Permissible as an Alternative to Sentence, no Need of Imprisonment

The IPC sanctions either a term of imprisonment or a fine or both, and it is left to the discretion of the court whether to inflict a sentence of imprisonment or fine or both. But in practice, it can only be in very exceptional circumstances that it is suitable and appropriate to inflict a fine as well as a substantial term of imprisonment.[17] Jails should be reserved for the reception of those who perform criminal acts not merely of a technical but of a criminal character. If the law permits a sentence of fine as an alternative, there is no need of the sentence of imprisonment, unless of course the gravity of the offence or the antecedents of the offender demand it.[18]

In Turner Monism & Co v KN Tapuria ,[19] the accused was the director of the appellant company and had misappropriated a sum of Rs 7,00,000 in 1969. He was acquitted by the trial court but in appeal, the Bombay High Court finding him guilty under s 406 of the IPC, sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for two years and to pay a fine in the sum of Rs 70,00,000 (Rs seventy lacs) and in default to undergo further rigorous imprisonment for nine months within the consideration that since 1969 the rupees value was very much higher and the accused was benefited tremendously and the amount taken by the accused must have multiplied at least fifty-fold during the two decades. 325

15. Quantum of Fine

In imposing a fine it is necessary to have as much regard to the pecuniary circumstances of the accused persons as to the character and magnitude of the offence and where a substantial term of imprisonment is inflicted, an excessive fine should not accompany it except in exceptional cases.[20] It is quite unnecessary to impose fine on persons who have been sentenced to death or to substantive terms of punishment.[21] Where long terms of imprisonment are given to convicts, it is not desirable that in addition to imprisonment a sentence of fine should be passed upon them, for the sentence of fine will be a burden upon the family of the convicts and not the convicts themselves.[22] It is not proper, in the case of a poor peasant to add to a very long term of substantive imprisonment a fine which there is no reasonable prospect of the accused man paying and for default in paying which he will have to undergo a yet further term of imprisonment.[23] While deciding the question of the quantum of fine to be imposed, the courts should always bear in mind that there should be some sort of nexus between amount of the fine sought to be imposed and the potentiality of the accused to pay it. There is no point in imposing such an enormous amount as fine which is beyond the paying capacity of the accused.

Therefore, where the accused has been sentenced to life imprisonment under s 302 of the IPC, and who was a domestic servant, having hardly any means, she should not have been saddled with a fine of Rs 5,000 on each of the counts.[24] A sentence of fine in addition to imprisonment can only be suitable in cases where the court thinks that the justice of the case will be met by inflicting a substantial fine, and at the same time thinks that a short term of imprisonment in addition will serve as a salutary lesson to the accused, or in cases where it is desired to compensate the complainant or in cases where the accused has profited financially by his misdeed.[25]

Legality of Daily Fine or Fine Payable in Future

It is illegal to direct an accused to pay a fine in future[26] or for an indefinite future period.[27] It is also not permissible in law to enforce a daily fine for an indefinite future period.[28] Such imposition of fine is, however, provided and is permissible under some local or special laws such as Municipalities Act, Uttar Pradesh Roadside Land Control Act 1945, whereunder the court can award a daily fine till the removal of nuisance or encroachment from public property or road.

Sentence of Fine Payable Jointly or Severally--Not Legal

A sentence of fine must be specific as to each person fined. A sentence of fine payable jointly and severally is illegal.[29] When however, the payment of a fine or fee is ordered to be made jointly by several persons convicted together it may be 326recovered from all or any one of them, and if payment made by one is nullified by the reversal of the order as to him, the liability of all and each of the others revives, as what was done subject to appeal was but provisional or subject to a condition subsequent.[30] An appeal against the sentence of fine by an accused does not abate by the death of the accused pending the appeal. If the conviction of the deceased accused is allowed to stand in appeal, the fine imposed upon him can be realised from his legal representatives.[31]

Imprisonment in Default of Fine

Section 64 of the IPC may be referred to.

16. Undue Delay in Execution of Death Sentence

Exorbitant delay in disposal of mercy petition renders the process of execution of death sentence arbitrary, whimsical and capricious and, therefore, inexecutable. Furthermore, such imprisonment, occasioned by inordinate delay in disposal of mercy petitions, is beyond the sentence accorded by the court and to that extent is extralegal and excessive. Therefore, the apex constitutional authorities must exercise the power under art 72 / 161 within the bounds of constitutional discipline and should dispose of the mercy petitions filed before them in an expeditious manner.[32]

Acceptance of Admission, if Guilt Ground for Reduction of Sentence

Every court is bound to impose sentence commensurating with the crime committed by the accused. Mere acceptance or admission of the guilt, should not be a ground for reduction of sentence. Sentence should be imposed on the basis of the gravity of offences committed by the accused.[33]

85 Substituted by Act 26 of 1955, s 117, Sch for 'Secondary--Transportation' (wef 1-1-1956).

86 Clause 'Thirdly' omitted by Act 17 of 1949, s 2 (wef 6-4-1949).

87 Re Krishanand Bhuttacharjee 3 BLR App Cr 50.

88 Re *KV Subramani Ayyar*AIR 1945 Mad 27, 46 Cr LJ 300 .

89 Mohammad Shabir v State of Maharashtra (1977) Mah LJ 338, PP 341-42.

90 Venkataraman v Union of India AIR 1954 SC 375, (1954) Cr LJ 993 .

91 K Singh Deo v Jenson & Nicholson India Ltd (1985) Cr LJ 464 (Cal) .

92 Section 117 and the Schedule to Act 26 of 1955.

93 Garanand Singh v Emperor AIR 1933 Rang 329, 146 IC 454(2), 35 Cr LJ 116; but contraEmperor v Krishna* 27 IP(M) 198 and Fhugroo 9 Nag LR 88.

94 Baba v Emperor AIR 1924 Nag 37, 24 Cr LJ 738, 22 Nag LR 166 .

95 State of Uttar Pradesh v Dev Dutt Sharma (1985) 1 Cr LC 80 (All) ; Sultan Singh v State (1981) 2 Raj LR 505 .

96 State of Gujarat v Hon'ble High Court of Gujarat (1998) Cr LJ 4561 (SC) .

97 State of Uttar Pradesh v Chandrika (2000) Cr LJ 384 (SC) .

1 K Duraiswamy v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1982 SC 512 .

2 Vadivelu Thevar v State of Madras AIR 1957 SC 614 .

3 Paire Dusadh v Emperor AIR 1944 FC 1 .

4 Sheoji Ram v State of Rajasthan (1981) Cr LJ 1131, p 1133 .

5 Rijo v State of Kerala 2010 Cr LJ 1315, p 1335 (Ker) (DB) .

6 State of Karnataka v Krishnappa (2000) Cr LJ 1793 (SC) .

7 Gurmukh Singh v State of Haryana 2010 Cr LJ 450, p 454 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 2697, [2009] 13 SCR 548, (2009) 15 SCC 635 .

8 Gurmukh Singh v State of Haryana 2010 Cr LJ 450, p 454 (SC), (2009) 11 Scale 688, 2009 AIR SCW 6710, AIR 2009 SC 2697, [2009] 13 SCR 548, (2009) 15 SCC 635 .

9 Zulfiquar Ali v Ram Chander (1986) All Cr R 429 .

10 Ashok Kumar v State of Delhi Admn (1980) Cr LJ 444, p 445, AIR 1980 SC 636 .

11 Supdt and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v Anil Kumar Bunja AIR 1980 SC 52, p 57, (1979) Cr LJ 1390 .

12 Adu Ram v Mukna (2004) Cr LJ 4674 (SC) .

13 Mulla v State of UP 2010 Cr LJ 1440, p 1459 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 942, (2010) 3 SCC 508, 2010 AIR SCW 1194, 2010 (2) Scale 179 .

14 Ibid.

15 Dennis Council Mc Gautha v California 402 US 183, 28 LD 2d 711.

16 Adu Ram v Mukna (2004) Cr LJ 4674 (SC) .

17 Adu Ram v Mukna (2004) Cr LJ 4674 (SC) .

18 Ram Singh v State AIR 1960 All 748, p 751 ; section 5 of the Homicide Act 1957, 5 & 6 Eliy 2, C 11.

19 Note A, reprint, p 93.

20 Dalip Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1953 SC 364, p 367 ; Satya Vir v State AIR 1958 All 746 .

21 Gurucharan v State 2010 Cr LJ 3339, p 3346 (Del) (DB) .

22 Bachan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1980 SC 898, (1980) Cr LJ 636 ; Charles Sobraj v Supdt, Central Jail AIR 1979 SC 964 ; Rajendra Prasad v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1979 SC 916 overruled.

23 Maniappan v State of Tamil Nadu (1981) Mad LJ (Cr) 600 (SC) ; Babubahi Satyaamrai State of Gujarat(1986) Guj LR 771; State of Bihar v Yashoda Kanu (1987) BLJ 603, (1988) Cr LJ 470 (Pat) ; State of Gujarat v Anwar Hasan Subhania (1988) Cr LJ 1335 (Guj) .

24 Triveniben v State of Gujarat (1990) Cr LJ 1810, p 1819, AIR 1989 SC 1335 .

25 Bachan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1980 SC 898, (1980) Cr LJ 636, [1983] 1 SCR 145 .

26 Sheo Shankar Dubey v State of Uttar Pradesh (1979) SCC 750, p 751 (Cr), (1979) 3 SCC 646 .

27 Bishnu Deo Shaw v State of West Bengal (1979) SCC 817, p 829 (Cr), (1979) 3 SCC 714 .

28 Shatrughan Chauhan v Union of India 2014 Cr LJ 1327, 2014 AIR SCW 793, (2014) 3 SCC 1, 2014 (2) JT 106, 2014 (1) Scale 437 .

29 Bachan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1980 SC 898, (1980) Cr LJ 636 .

30 Dagu & Ors v State of Maharashtra (1977) Cr LJ 1206 (SC), AIR 1977 SC 1579, (1977) SCC 421 (Cr), (1977) 3 SCC 69 .

31 Babubahi Satyamarai v State (1986) 1 Guj LR 771 .

32 Kehar Singh v State (Delhi Admn) AIR 1988 SC 1883, (1989) Cr LJ 1 (SC) .

33 Anjuman v State (1993) Cr LJ 3113 .

34 State of Rajasthan v Devilal 2013 Cr LJ 1963, p 1968 (Raj) (DB) . (Accused husband committing triple murder of in-laws, aged 23 years. In view of age and the fact that the possibility of reformation could not be ruled out, death sentence modified into life imprisonment).

35 Triveniben v State of Gujarat AIR 1989 SC 1335, (1990) Cr LJ 1810, p 1818 .

36 Jagmohan Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1973 SC 947, (1973) Cr LJ 370 .

37 Bachan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1980 SC 898, (1980) Cr LJ 636 .

38 Bombay Act 71 of 1948; Central Provinces Act 1928, Bengal Act 2 of 1922 and Madras Act 4 of 1920.

39 Emperor v Remis Christian AIR 1947 Pat 152 .

40 Re *Thalappil Thithachumma*AIR 1941 Mad 27 .

41 Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, s 354(3) .

42 Amar Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1983) SCC 879 (Cr), (1983) 4 SCC 645 .

43 Attorney-General of India v Lachmea Devi AIR 1986 SC 467, (1986) Cr LJ 364, (1986) 1 SCJ 166, (1986) Cr LR 15 (SC) .

44 Shatrughan Chauhan v Union of India 2014 Cr LJ 1327 (SC), (2014) 2 SCC (Cr) 1, (2014) 3 SCC 1, 2014 (2) JT 106, 2014 (1) Scale 437 ; see alsoSridharan v Union of India* AIR 2014 SC 1368, 2014 Cr LJ 1681 (SC), (2014) 4 SCC 242, 2014 (3) JT 112, 2014 (2) Scale 505 .

45 Nga Tha Byit v Queen-Empress (1893-1900) LBR 13; PO Kun v King AIR 1939 Rang 124 .

46 Gopal Vinayak Godse v State of Maharashtra (1961) 3 SCR 440, AIR 1961 SC 600, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 736 (SC) .

47 Kishori Lal v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 64 .

48 Laxman Naskar v State of West Bengal (2000) Cr LJ 4017 (SC) .

49 Mohd Arif v The Registrar, Supreme Court of India 2014 Cr LJ 4598, p 4615 (SC), (2014) 9 SCC 737 .

50 Swamy Shraddananda (2) v State of Karnataka AIR 2008 SC 3040, (2008) 13 SCC 767 .

51 See Gopal Vinayak Godse v State of Maharashtra AIR 1961 SC 600, 1961 Cr LJ 736, (1961) 3 SCR440) (Constitution Bench); Dalbir Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1979 SC 1384, (1979) 3 SCC 745, 1979 Cr LJ 1058 ; Maru Ram v Union of India (Constitution Bench) AIR 1980 SC 2147, (1981) 1 SCC 107, 1980 Cr LJ 1440 ; Naib Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1983 SC 855, (1983) 2 SCC 454 1983 Cr LJ 1345; Ashok Kumar v Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1792, (1991) 3 SCC 498, 1991 Cr LJ 2483 ; Laxman Naskar v State of WB AIR 2000 SC 2762, 2000 Cr LJ 4017, JT 2000 (10) SC 29, 2000 (6) Scale 223, (2000) 7 SCC 626 ; Zaihid Hussein v State of WB AIR 2001 SC 1312, 2001 Cr LJ 1692, 2001 (2) Crimes 42 (SC), 2001 (2) Scale 479, (2001) 3 SCC 750 ; Kamalanantha v State of TN AIR 2005 SC 2132, (2005) 5 SCC 194, [2005] 3 SCR 182 ; Mohd Munna v Union of India AIR 2005 SC 3440, (2005) 7 SCC 417 and CA Pious v State of Kerala AIR 2007 SC 3221, 2007 Cr LJ 4697, JT 2007 (11) SC 344, 2007 (4) KLT 380 (SC), 2007 (11) Scale 123, (2007) 8 SCC 312 ; Swamy Shraddananda (2) v State of Karnataka AIR 2008 SC 3040 : (2008) 13 SCC 767 .

52 Md Munna v Union of India 2005 Cr LJ 4124, p 4128, AIR 2005 SC 3440, (2005) 7 SCC 417 .

53 Md Munna v Union of India 2005 Cr LJ 4124, p 4129, AIR 2005 SC 3440, (2005) 7 SCC 417 ; Goptal Vinayak Godse v State of Maharashtra AIR 1961 SC 600, 1961 (1) Cr LJ 736 .

54 Duryodhan Rout v State of Orissa 2014 Cr LJ 4172, p 4176, 4177 (SC), AIR 2041 SC 3345, 2014 (140) AIC 109 (SC), 2014 (86) ACC 574 .

55 Kishori Lal v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 64 .

56 Gopal Vinayak Godse v State of Maharashtra AIR 1961 SC 600, p 602-03 .

57 Ram Dayal v State of Uttar Pradesh 1982 Cr LJ 2180 (All) (DB) .

58 Naib Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1983 SC 855, (1983) SCC 536 (Cr), (1983) Cr LJ 1345 (SC), (1983) Cr AC 293 (SC) .

59 Sibbu Munnilal v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1968 MP 97 (FB), (1968) Cr LJ 631 (MP).

60 Naib Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1983 SC 855, (1983) Cr LJ 1345 (SC), (1983) Bih Cr Cas 144 (SC), (1983) SCC (Cr) 536, (1983) 2 SCC 454, (1983) Cr Cas 144 (SC) ; Satpal alias Sadhu v State of Haryana (1992) 3 Crimes 576 (SC) .

61 Mathammal Saraswathi v State of Kerala AIR 1957 Ker 102, p 103 .

62 Urlikia Median v State AIR 1964 Ori 149 dissenting from Mathammal Quaraswathi v State of Kerala AIR 1957 Ker 102 ; Naib Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1983 SC 855, (1983) SCC 536 (Cr) .

63 Sibbu Munnilal v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1968 MP 97 (FB), (1968) Cr LJ 631 (MP).

64 Sat Pal alias Sadhu v State of Haryana & Anor AIR 1993 SC 1218, (1993) Cr LJ 314 (SC) .

65 Balaji Gangaram Navghare v State of Maharashtra 2009 Crlj (NOC) 907 (Bom) (DB), 2009 All MR (Cr) 2558 (Bom) .

66 Aiyar's Judicial Dictionary, eleventh edn, p 586.

67 Ram Lakhan v State (1984) All Cr R 477, p 480 .

68 Kunhi Bava v Emperor AIR 1929 Mad 226 .

69 Bird v Jones (1845) 7 QB 742, 115 ER 668 .

70 3 Bl C 127.

71 P Narasayya Pantulu v Capt RAC Stuart (1864-65) 2 MHCR 396.

72 Re *Muthu Nadar*AIR 1945 Mad 313 .

73 Prahlad Dnyanober Gajbhiye v State of Maharashtra (1994) Cr LJ 2555 (Bom) .

74 Sunil Batra v Delhi Admn AIR 1980 SC 898, (1980) 3 SCC 488, (1980) Cr LJ 636 (SC) .

75 Shivaji Narayan Shinde v State of Maharashtra (1971) Bom LR 215, (1971) Mah LJ 864 .

76 R v Chanviora 1 Bom HC Rep 4; R v Ramabin Rabhaji 1 Bom HC 34 ; R v Menazoodin (1864) 2 WR Cr 33, s 64 of the Indian Penal Code 1860.

77 Sukamaran v State (1993) Cr LJ 3228, p 3229 (Ker) and s 428, Code of Criminal Procedure 1973.

78 PLC (1856), p 718.

79 Zulfiquar Ali v Ram Chander (1986) All Cr R 429 .

80 Re *Munuswamy*AIR 1947 Mad 386 .

81 Sunil Batra v Delhi Administration AIR 1978 SC 1675, (1978) 4 SCC 494 .

82 Sunil Batra v Delhi Administration AIR 1978 SC 1675 .

83 Shatrughan Chauhan v Union of India 2014 Cr LJ 1327, p 1377 (SC), (2014) 2 SCC (Cr) 1, (2014) 3 SCC 1, 2014 (2) JT 106, 2014 (1) Scale 437 .

84 Re *Muthu Nadar*AIR 1945 Mad 313 .

85 Re *Kunbi Bava*AIR 1929 Mad 226 ; Re *Thammana Ramalingayya*AIR 1942 Mad 723 .

86 Boddepalli Lakshminarayana v Suvvari Sanyasi Appa Rao AIR 1959 Andh Pra 530, p 534 .

87 Mulukchand Sheikh v King AIR 1949 Cal 104 .

88 Public Prosecutor v Kanniappan AIR 1955 Mad 424 .

89 Re *Muthu Nadar*AIR 1945 Mad 313 .

90 P Jebac Angel Martin v State 2008 Cr LJ 3147, p 3154 (Mad) .

91 Baghel Singh v Emperor 5 Cr LJ 217, 2 PWR (Cr) 21 .

92 Public Prosecutor, Madras v Pingali Mallikarjan Kota Paneswara Rao AIR 1946 Mad 173 .

93 Bhanuprasad Manishakar Ravel v State of Gujarat (1985) 2 Guj LR 759 .

1 Dayaram Jagannath v State of Madhya Pradesh 1992 MPLJ 784, p 785 ; Panchu Parida v State of Orissa (1993) Cr LJ 953 (Ori) .

2 State of Uttar Pradesh v Dev Dutt Sharma (1985) 1 Cr LC 80 .

3 Re Kishen Soonder Bhattacharjee(1869) 12 WR 47.

4 State v Jernelsingh (1954) 4 ILR Raj 438 .

5 Mulukchand Sheikh v King AIR 1949 Cal 104 .

6 Madras GO No 2411, dated 22 November 1881.

7 Re Krishnanad Bhatacharjee 3 BLR App Cr 50; Queen v Sabrai Gowallah 20 WR 70 .

8 Re Muthuswami Gounden 2 Weir 451; Bhajna v Supdt, Central Jail, Patiala AIR 1952 Pepsu 2 .

9 Gulzar Mahommad v Crown 59 Cr LJ 238 .

10 Boucher Pierre Andre v Supdt, Central Jail, Tihar AIR 1975 SC 194, (1975) Cr LJ 182 ; Suraj Bhan v Om Prakash AIR 1976 SC 648, (1976) Cr LJ 577 .

11 Rajahusein Gulamhusein Lakhani v State of Maharashtra (1976) Cr LJ 1294 (Bom) ; State of Rajasthan v Bhim 1976 WLN 563 .

12 Government of Andhra Pradesh v Anna Venkateswara Rao AIR 1977 SC 1096, (1977) Cr LJ 935 .

13 Re Chief Judicial Magistrate(1990) 1 KLT 762; Bagdaram v State of Rajasthan (1989) Cr LJ 414, (1988) 1 Raj LW 32 .

14 Suraj Bhan v Om Prakash AIR 1976 SC 648, p 650, (1976) Cr LJ 577 .

15 Lal Chand v Emperor AIR 1948 All 107 ; Aziz Khan v State AIR 1954 All 642 .

16 State of West Bengal v SK Ghosh AIR 1963 SC 255, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 252 (SC) .

17 Islam v Emperor (1931) Cal 710(2), 711.

18 Dulla v State AIR 1958 All 198, p 204 ; Re *Thammana Ramalinggaya*AIR 1942 Mad 723, p 724 .

19 Turner Monism & Co v KN Tapuria (1993) Cr LJ 3384 (Bom) .

20 Adamji Umar Dalal v State of Bombay AIR 1952 SC 14, p 16 .

21 Re *Shakaruppa*AIR 1958 AP 380 .

22 Singram Marak v State AIR 1953 Assam 201, p 202 .

23 Emperor v Mendi Ali AIR 1941 All 310, p 311 ; Jagpal v State AIR 1957 All 764, (1957) Cr LJ 1205 (DB) .

24 Philip Bhim Sant Aind v State of Maharashtra (1995) Cr LJ 1694 (Bom) (DB) .

25 Islam v Emperor AIR (1931) Cal 710(2), p 711 .

26 Aisha v Emperor AIR 1926 Cal 248 .

27 Nauhar Chand v Ved Prakash AIR 1953 Pepsu 73, p 74 .

28 Pancham Sao v Emperor AIR 1925 Pat 322, 25 Cr LJ 1357 ; Trilok Chand v CN Srivastava AIR 1961 All 88, (1961) Cr LJ 202 .

29 High Court Proceedings of 15 November 1869, 5 Mad HCR App 5; Nemkhoting v Kamkhogin AIR 1957 Assam 34 .

30 Re Ratnagiri Magistrate's letter No 205 Ratanlal 90.

31 Ramdhani Gope v Jagesher Mahto AIR 1941 Pat 526, p 527 ; Bhulan Lal v State AIR 1954 All 783 .

32 V Sriharan v Union of India 2014 Cr LJ 1681, p 1685, AIR 2014 SC 1368, (2014) 2 Scale 505, (2014) 4 SCC 242 .

33 P Jebac Angel Martin v State 2008 Cr LJ 3147, p 3155 (Mad) .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/3S. 53A.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

[34][S. 53A.

Construction of reference to transportation.--

(1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) and sub-section (3), any reference to "transportation for life" in any other law for the time being in force or in any instrument or order having effect by virtue of any such law or of any enactment repealed shall be construed as a reference to "imprisonment for life".

(2) In every case in which a sentence of transportation for a term has been passed before the commencement of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, [35][1955] (26 of 1955), the offender shall be dealt with in the same manner as if sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for the same term.

(3) Any reference to transportation for a term or to transportation for any shorter term (by whatever name called) in any other law for the time being in force shall be deemed to have been omitted.

(4) Any reference to "transportation" in any other law for the time being in force, shall,--

(a) if the expression means transportation for life, be construed as a reference to imprisonment for life;327

(b) if the expression means transportation for any shorter term, be deemed to have been omitted.]

Comments

1. Legislative Changes

This is a new section inserted by s 117 of the CrPC (Amendment) Act 26 of 1955, consequent on the abolition of transportation as a punishment under the Code.

2. Scope

The section is meant for the construction of the reference to transportation in any law other than the IPC . Under sub-s (1), a reference to 'transportation for life' is to be construed as a reference to 'imprisonment for life'. The effect of this is that a person transported for life or any other term before the enactment of the said section would be treated as a person sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for life or for the said term. Briefly stated the legal position is that before Act 26 of 1955 a sentence of transportation for life could be undergone by prisoner by way of rigorous imprisonment for life in a designated prison in India. After the said Act, such a convict shall be dealt with in the same manner as one sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for the same term. Unless the said sentence is commuted or remitted by appropriate authority under the relevant provisions of the IPC or the CrPC, a prisoner sentenced to life imprisonment is bound in law to serve the life term in prison. There can be no release from prison on the government's merely deemed commutation.[36] The rules framed under the Prisons Act enable such a prisoner to earn remissions ordinary, special and state and the said remissions will be given credit towards his term of imprisonment. For the purpose of working out the remissions, the sentence of transportation for life is ordinarily equated with a definite period, but it is only for that particular purpose. As the sentence of transportation for life or its prison equivalent, the life imprisonment is one of indefinite duration, the remissions so earned do not in practice help such a convict as it is not possible to predict the time of his death. The result is that even if some remissions are made by the appropriate government, the prisoner is not entitled to release, unless the entire sentence is remitted.[37]

Sub-section (3) of this section is not properly worded. If the words 'transportation for a term' mean 'transportation for a period shorter than life', the words which follow, ie, 'transportation for any shorter term become meaningless and superfluous. The language seems to be ungrammatical. If the question is asked, 'shorter than what term'?; we get no answer and find ourselves looking for help.

34 Inserted by Act 26 of 1955, s 117 and Schedule (wef 1-1-1956).

35 Substituted by Act 36 of 1957, s 3 and Sch II, for '1954'.

36 Satpal v State of Haryana (1992) 2 SCC 172 .

37 Gopal Vinayak Godse v State of Maharashtra AIR 1961 SC 600 ; Kishorilal v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 14 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 54.

Commutation of sentence of death.--

In every case in which sentence of death shall have been passed, [38][the appropriate Government] may, without the 328consent of the offender, commute the punishment for any other punishment provided by this Code.

Comments

1. Analogous Law

Section 433 of the CrPC empowers the appropriate government to commute sentences of one form for those of another form. Section 416 of the same Code empowers the High Court also to commute a sentence of death to imprisonment for life, in the case of a pregnant woman. The present section may, therefore, appear to be superfluous. But the power under this section is wider than that under s 433, CrPC, for under this section a sentence of death may be commuted to any other punishment provided by the IPC, whereas under s 433, CrPC, it can be commuted only to imprisonment for life.

2. Meaning of Commutation

The word 'commutation' means the change of a penalty or punishment from a greater to a less; or giving one thing in satisfaction of another as commuting titles into a rent-charge.[39] In this section the word 'commutation' has been used in the sense of its first meaning 'change of a penalty or punishment from a greater to a less'.

3. Principle of the Section

It is evidently fit that the government should be empowered to commute the sentence of death for any other punishment provided by the IPC . In proper cases, an inordinate delay in the execution of death sentence may be regarded as a sufficient ground by the government for commuting it.[40] Further, some offences are committed in peculiar circumstances, which are not correctly established before a law court and when the true facts come to the notice of the executive the government may be under an obligation to commute the death sentence awarded on altogether different grounds.

4. Grounds for Commutation of Death Sentence

In Nawab Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh ,[41] their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed:

> It is true that in proper cases an inordinate delay in the execution of the death sentence may be regarded as a ground for commuting it, but we desire to point out that this is no rule of law and is a matter primarily for consideration of the local Government. If the court has to exercise a discretion in such matter, the other facts of each case would have to be taken into consideration. In the case before us, we find that the murder was a cruel and a deliberate one and there was no extenuating circumstances whatsoever which would justify us in ordering a commutation of the death sentence.329

A temporary postponement in execution of death sentence supported by some reasons cannot entitle a condemned prisoner to seek alteration in the sentence. In this case the execution of the death sentence was postponed due to the sudden illness of the executioner a day earlier. It was not due to any deliberate or intentional default of jail authorities. It was held that the last minute physical disability of the executioner furnished a good cause for deferring the execution even when the stage had been set to carry out the same. The pain, agony and horror suffered by the prisoner after he was informed about the execution was inevitable, but could not be treated as the sole circumstance for substituting death sentence.[42]

5. Who can Move Appropriate Government for Commutation of Sentence

A careful study of the provisions of this section and s 433, CrPC, goes to show that the appropriate government may be moved by the condemned prisoner himself or by any of his well-wishers for commutation on the grounds that either under the peculiar facts or circumstances of the case the death sentence should not have been passed or it should not be executed. In either case the consent of the prisoner for commutation is not necessary.

Meaning of Appropriate Government

Section 55A of the IPC and the notes thereunder may be referred to.

38 Substituted by the AO 1950, for 'the Central Government or the Provincial Government of the Province within which the offender shall have been sentenced'. The words in italics were substituted by the AO 1937, for 'the Government of India or the Government of the place'.

39 Wharton's Law Lexicon, 1976, reprint, p 224.

40 Nawab Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1954 SC 278, p 279 .

41 Nawab Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1954 SC 278, p 279 .

42 Shiromani Akali Dal (Mann) v State of Jammu & Kashmir (1993) Cr LJ 927, p 937 (J&K).

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 55.

Commutation of sentence of imprisonment for life.--

In every case in which sentence of [43][imprisonment] for life shall have been passed, [44][the appropriate Government] may, without the consent of the offender, commute the punishment for imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

Comments

1. Scope

A sentence of imprisonment for life, if not commuted under this section or under s 433(b), CrPC, the prisoner is bound in law to serve the life term in prison,[45] and is not entitled to be released even if he has undergone a term of imprisonment exceeding 14 years (inclusive of remissions). There is no automatic release on deemed commutation unless a formal order in that behalf is passed.[46]330

2. Power of Court to Interfere with the Matter

The court cannot give any direction in the matter of commuting or remitting the sentence. It cannot compel the executive to exercise the power nor can prevent it from exercising such power.[47]

3. No Deemed Commutation under the Law

In Naib Singh v State of Punjab ,[48] the accused had remained in jail for more than 14 years (inclusive of remissions) while undergoing the sentence of imprisonment for life awarded to him by the court. It was contended on his behalf before the Supreme Court that the jail authorities were under a legal obligation to execute the sentence indirectly by way of commuting his sentence for imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding 14 years under this section or s 433(b), CrPC, and his further detention in jail was illegal. His contention was rejected and it was held that there can be no deemed commutation by the state government under s 55, IPC, or under s 433(b) of the CrPC without a final order in that behalf. This view has been followed in Satpal alias Sadhu v State of Haryana [49] by the Supreme Court.

43 Substituted by Act 26 of 1955, s 117 and Sch, for 'transportation' (wef 1-1-1956).

44 Substituted by the AO 1950, for 'the Provincial Government of the Province within which the offender shall have been sentenced'. The words in italics were substituted by the AO 1937, for 'the Government of India or the Government of the place'.

45 Gopal Vinayak Godse v State of Maharashtra AIR 1961 SC 600 .

46 Naib Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1983 SC 855, 1983 SCC (Cr) 536, (1983) 2 SCC 454, 1983 Cr LR 348 (SC), 1983 Cr LR (SC) 293, 1983 Cr LJ 1345 (SC), 1983 Bih Cr Cas 144 (SC), 1983 UP Cr Cas (SC) 144 ; Satpal alias Sadhu v State of Haryana 1992 (3) Crimes 576 (SC) .

47 Datta v Chimanrao v State (1986) 2 Guj LR 1044 (Guj) .

48 Naib Singh v State of Punjab 1983 Cr LJ 1345, (1983) 2 SCC 454 .

49 Satpal alias Sadhu v State of Haryana 1993 Cr LJ 314, AIR 1993 SC 1218 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

[50][S. 55A.

Definition of "appropriate Government".--

In sections 54 and 55 the expression "appropriate Government" means,--

(a) in cases where the sentence is a sentence of death or is for an offence against any law relating to a matter to which the executive power of the Union extends, the Central Government; and

(b) in cases where the sentence (whether of death or not) is for an offence against any law relating to a matter to which the executive power of the State extends, the Government of the State within which the offender is sentenced.]

Comments

1. Scope

This section defines the expression 'appropriate government' used in ss 54 and 55 . Similarly, 'appropriate government' has also been defined in sub-s (7) of s 432 of the CrPC as follows:

In this section and in section 433, the expression "appropriate Government" means,--

(a) in cases where the sentence is for an offence against, or the order referred to in sub-section (6) is passed under, any law relating to a matter to which the executive power of the Union extends, the Central Government;

(b) in other cases, the Government of the State within which the offender is sentenced or the said order is passed. 331

2. 'Matters to which the Executive Power of the Union Extends'

Article 73 of the Constitution of India provides that the executive power of the Union shall extend to the matters with respect to which Parliament has power to make laws, and art 246 specifies the matters with respect to which Parliament has power to make laws. For the sake of convenience the relevant extracts of these articles are reproduced below:

73. Extent of executive power of the Union.--(1) Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the executive power of the Union shall extend--

(a) to the matters with respect to which Parliament has power to make laws; and

(b) to the exercise of such rights, authority and jurisdiction as are exercisable by the Government of India by virtue of any treaty or agreement:

Provided that the executive power referred to in sub-clause (a) shall not, save as expressly provided in this Constitution or in any law made by Parliament, extend in any State to matters with respect to which the Legislature of the State has also power to make laws.

(2) ...

> 246.Subject-matter of laws made by Parliament and by the Legislatures of States.--(1) Notwithstanding anything in clauses (2) and (3) Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List I in the Seventh Schedule (in this Constitution referred to as the "Union List").
>
> (2) Notwithstanding anything in clause (3), Parliament, and, subject to clause (1), the Legislature of any State also, have power to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List III in the Seventh Schedule (in this Constitution referred to as the "Concurrent List").
>
> (3) Subject to clauses (1) and (2), the Legislature of any State has exclusive power to make laws for such State or any part thereof with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List II in the Seventh Schedule (in this Constitution referred to as the "State List").
>
> (4) Parliament has power to make laws with respect to any matter for any part of the territory of India not included in a State notwithstanding that such matter is a matter enumerated in the State List.

A combined reading of these articles will go to show that the Parliament has powers to make laws with respect to all matters enumerated in 'Union List' and 'Concurrent list' given in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution and the executive power of the Union extends to all such matters. The Central Government is, therefore, the appropriate government for the purposes of ss 54 and 55 of the IPC where the sentence is a sentence of death or is for an offence against any law relating to matters enumerated in 'Union List' and 'Concurrent List' aforesaid.

3. 'Matters to which the Executive Power of the State Extends'

Article 162 of the Constitution prescribes the extent of the executive power of the state. It runs as follows--

> 162. Extent of executive power of State.--Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the executive power of a State shall extend to the matters with respect to which the Legislature of the State has power to make laws:
>
> Provided that in any matter with respect to which the Legislature of a State and Parliament have power to make laws, the executive power of the State shall be subject 332to, and limited by, the executive power expressly conferred by this Constitution or by any law made by Parliament upon the Union or authorities thereof.

The provisions of this article read with art 246 of the Constitution make it clear that the legislature of a state has exclusive power to make laws with respect to all matters enumerated in the 'State List' and subject to the powers of the Union or its authorities, it also has power to make laws in respect of the matters enumerated in the 'Concurrent List' of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution and when a sentence is passed in respect of any such matter the government of the state within which the offender is sentenced is the 'appropriate Government' for the purpose of ss 54 and 55 of the IPC .

50 Substituted by the AO 1950, for s 55A which had been inserted by the AO 1937.

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/S. 56.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 56.

Sentence of Europeans and Americans to penal servitude. Proviso as to sentence for term exceeding ten years but not for life.--

[Rep. by the Criminal Law (Removal of Racial Discriminations) Act, 1949 (17 of 1949) (wef 6-4-1949).]

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/S. 57.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 57.

Fractions of terms of punishment.--

In calculating fractions of terms of punishment, [51][imprisonment] for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to [52][imprisonment] for twenty years.

Comments

1. Scope and Object

The IPC views certain offences very seriously as it has provided the same punishment even for an attempt to commit such offences. Waging or attempting to wage war against the Government of India and sedition or attempt to commit sedition punishable under ss 121 and 124A respectively may be cited as examples. This is not so in the case of murders. An attempt to commit murder has been distinctly made punishable under s 307, IPC . A similar provision has, however, not been made in the IPC by prescribing any punishment for attempting to commit many other offences. To cover the cases relating to such remaining offences provision has been made in s 511, which, though does not prescribe any specific punishment, provides that the offender in such cases shall be punished with imprisonment of either description provided for the principal offence for a term which may extend to one-half of the imprisonment for life, or, as the case may be, one-half of the longest term of imprisonment, provided for that offence. A proper punishment or sentence, therefore, cannot be awarded in the cases made punishable under s 511, IPC, or similar other provisions, in which the principal offence is punishable with imprisonment for life unless the term of life imprisonment is ascertainable in the number of years. To meet such situations, s 57 was enacted, which lays down that in calculating fractions of terms of punishment, imprisonment for life, shall be reckoned as equivalent to imprisonment for 20 years. For the purpose of calculation, the 'life imprisonment' can be reckoned as equivalent to 'imprisonment for twenty years'.[53] The scope of this 333section is, however, limited and it does not lay down that life imprisonment is equivalent to imprisonment for 20 years for all purposes.[54]

2. Imprisonment for Life means Imprisonment for the Remaining Natural Life

Under s 53A of the IPC a person transported for life or any other term before the enactment of the said section would be treated as a person sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for life or for the said term. There is no provision in the IPC or Crpc or the Prisoners Act, whereunder a sentence of life imprisonment, without any formal remission by the appropriate government under s 432, CrPC, can be automatically treated as one for a definite period. It was sometimes assumed that having regard to this section, 20 years imprisonment was equivalent to transportation (now imprisonment) for life.[55] Unless commuted or remitted a prisoner is bound to serve the life term in prison--a sentence of transportation for life (now imprisonment for life) means a sentence of transportation (now imprisonment) for the whole of the remaining period of the convicted person's natural life.[56] But in the case last cited, their Lordships of the Privy Council distinctly said that a life sentence must not in all cases be treated as one of not more than 20 years or that the convict is necessarily entitled to remission. It is only for calculating fractions of punishment as contemplated under ss 116 and 511 of the IPC that this section provides that transportation for life shall be regarded as equivalent to imprisonment for 20 years. It does not say that transportation for life shall be deemed to be transportation for 20 years for all purposes,[57] nor does the amended section which substitutes the words 'imprisonment for life' for 'transportation for life' enable the drawing of any such all embracing fiction.

Section 57IPC does not in any way limit the punishment of imprisonment for life to a term of twenty years. Section 57 is only for calculating fractions of terms of punishment and provides that imprisonment for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to imprisonment for twenty years. The punishment of imprisonment for life handed down by the court means a sentence of imprisonment for the convict for the rest of his life.[58]

A convict undergoing life imprisonment is expected to remain in custody till the end of his life, subject to any remission granted by the appropriate Government under s 432 of the CrPC which in turn is subject to the procedural checks mentioned in the said provision and further substantive check in s 433A of the CrPC .[59]334

Once a person is sentenced to undergo life imprisonment unless imprisonment for life is commuted by the competent authority, he has to undergo imprisonment for the whole of his life. Section 57 of the IPC does not, in any way, limit the punishment of imprisonment for life to a term of 20 years.[60]

3. Implication of Conditional Remission of Sentence

Solely on the basis of completion of term in jail serving imprisonment and remission earned under the relevant rules and law will not entitle an automatic release, but the appropriate government must pass a separate order remitting the unexpired portion of the sentence.[61] If the sentence of imprisonment for life passed on a person is conditionally remitted by the government under s 432 of the CrPC, and the person is released such person must still be deemed to be under sentence of imprisonment for life despite the fact that he is not actually under sentence. Where, therefore, such a person after his release on remission, breaks the conditions on which remission was granted and commits an offence of murder, his case falls under s 303 and such person must be sentenced to death.[62]

A sentence for life would tenure till the lifetime of the accused as it is not possible to fix a particular period of the prisoner's death; so, any remissions given under the rules, cannot be regarded as a substitute for a sentence of imprisonment for life. An accused, as already stated above, is not entitled to be released as of right, on completing the term of 20 years, including the remissions.[63]

51 Substituted by Act 26 of 1955, s 117 and Sch, for 'transportation' (wef 1-1-1956).

52 Ibid.

53 Syed Ghouse v State of Andhra Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ 311, p 315 (AP) (DB) .

54 Abdul Azad v State (1976) Cr LJ 315, p 316 ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Ratan Singh AIR 1976 SC 1552, (1976) Cr LJ 1192, (1976) SCC (Cr) 428, (1976) SC Cr R 353 .

55 Sumar Khamiso v Emperor AIR 1932 Sind 168 ; Kishorilal v Emperor AIR 1945 PC 64 ; Laxman Naskar v State of West Bengal (2000) Cr LJ (SC) 4017 .

56 Nga Tha Byit v Queen-Empress (1893-1900) LBR 13; KV Chacko v State of Kerala (2004) Cr LJ 481 (Ker) ; Gopal Vinayak Godse v State of Maharashtra AIR 1961 SC 600 ; Bag Ali, Ali Mohammed v State of Rajasthan AIR 1959 Raj 273 ; Subhash Chander v Kishanlal (2001) Cr LJ 1825 (SC) ; Lakkhi and etc v State of Rajasthan (1996) Cr LJ 2965 (Raj) (DB) ; Laxman Naskar v State of West Bengal (2000) Cr LJ 4017 (SC) ; Ram Dayal v State of Uttar Pradesh (1980) Cr LJ 2180 (All) (DB) .

57 Abdul Azad v State (1976) Cr LJ 315, p 316 (Cal) .

58 Swamy Shraddananda v State of Karnataka 2008 Cr LJ 3911, p 3927 (SC), AIR 2008 SC 3040, 2008 (10) Scale 669 .

59 Mohindr Singh v State of Punjab 2013 Cr LJ 1559, p 1565 (SC), 2013 AIR SCW 1120, (2013) 3 SCC 294, 2013 (2) Scale 24 .

60 Life Convict Bengal v BK Srivastava AIR 2013 SC 1163, 2013 Cr LJ 1446, p 1453, 1454 ; Sunil Damodar Gaikwad v State of Maharashtra 2013 AIR SCW 5836, (2014) 1 SCC 129, 2013 (12) JT 310, 2013 (11) Scale 232 .

61 Laxman Naskar v State of West Bengal (2000) Cr LJ 4017 (SC) .

62 Po Kun v King AIR 1939 Rang 124 .

63 State of Madhya Pradesh v Ratan Singh AIR 1976 SC 1552, (1976) Cr LJ 1192, (1976) SCC (Cr) 428 ; Bag Ali, Ali Mohammed v State of Rajasthan AIR 1959 Raj 273, (1959) Cr LJ 1365 ; Ram Dayal v State of Uttar Pradesh (1982) Cr LJ 2180 (All) (DB) ; Subhash Chandra v Kishan Lal (2001) Cr LJ 1825 (SC) ; Satpal alias Sadhu v State of Haryana (1992) 3 Crimes 576 (SC) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 58.

Offenders sentenced to transportation how dealt with until transported.--

[Rep. by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act 1955 (26 of 1955), sec 117 and Sch (wef 1-1-1956).]

The repealed section ran as follows:

In every case in which a sentence of transportation is passed, the offender, until he is transported, shall be dealt with in the same manner as if sentenced to rigorous imprisonment, and shall be held to have been undergoing his sentence of transportation during the term of his imprisonment.

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/S. 59.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 59.

Transportation instead of imprisonment.--

[Rep. by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1955 (26 of 1955), sec 117 and Sch (wef 1-1-1956).]

The repealed section ran as follows:--

In every case in which an offender is punishable with imprisonment for a term of seven years or upwards, it shall be competent to the court which sentences such offender, instead of awarding sentence of imprisonment, to sentence the offender to transportation 335for a term not less than seven years, and not exceeding the term for which by this Code such offender is liable to imprisonment.

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/S. 60.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 60.

Sentence may be (in certain cases of imprisonment) wholly or partly rigorous or simple.--

In every case in which an offender is punishable with imprisonment which may be of either description, it shall be competent to the court which sentences such offender to direct in the sentence that such imprisonment shall be wholly rigorous, or that such imprisonment shall be wholly simple, or that any part of such imprisonment shall be rigorous and the rest simple.

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

This section applies only to cases in which the offence is punishable with imprisonment of either description. It has no application to a case in which the offence is punishable with 'imprisonment for life' which is a class of punishment different from imprisonment which is of two descriptions. Imprisonment for life is imprisonment of only one description, ie, rigorous imprisonment.[64]

According to this section, the nature of imprisonment, to be undergone by an accused, must be specified in the judgment itself, and not in the warrant for the first time. The warrant has to be in conformity with the final orders, embodied in the judgment.[65] If by inadvertence or otherwise the nature of the imprisonment is not described in the judgment, the imprisonment has to be treated to be simple.[66]

Before the enforcement of the CrPC, a sentence of imprisonment for the period already passed in the lock-up was illegal,[67] which has been permitted now by inserting the provisions of s 428 regarding set off in the new CrPC, though the sentence awarded by the court may be rigorous. Thus in such cases the part of the imprisonment undergone or passed in the lock-up is simple (without hard work) and the period to be undergone after conviction is rigorous.

64 Urlikia Medina v State AIR 1964 Ori 149, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 685 ; Naib Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1983 SC 855, (1983) Cr LJ 1345, (1983) SCC (Cr) 536 .

65 Shivraj Narayan Shinde v State of Maharashtra (1971) Bom LR 215, (1971) Mah LJ 864 .

66 Ibid.

67 Baghel Singh v Emperor 5 Cr LJ 217 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 61.

Sentence of forfeiture of property.--

[Rep. by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act, 1921 (16 of 1921), sec 4.]

The repealed section ran as follows:

In every case in which a person is convicted of an offence for which he is liable to forfeiture of all his property, the offender shall be incapable of acquiring any property, except for the benefit of Government, until he shall have undergone the punishment awarded, or the punishment to which it shall have been commuted, or until he shall have been pardoned.

Illustration

A, being convicted of waging war against the Government of India, is liable to forfeiture of all his property. After the sentence, and whilst the same is in force, A's father dies, leaving an estate, which but for the forfeiture, would become the property of A. The estate becomes the property of Government. 336

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/S. 62.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 62.

Forfeiture of property in respect of offenders punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment.--

[Rep. by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act, 1921 (16 of 1921), sec 4.]

The repealed section ran as follows:

Forfeiture of property in respect of offenders punishable with death, transportation, or imprisonment.--Whenever any person is convicted of an offence punishable with death, the court may adjudge that all his property, movable and immovable, shall be forfeited to Government; and whenever any person shall be convicted of any offence for which he shall be transported, or sentenced to imprisonment for a term of seven years or upwards, the court may adjudge that the rents and profits of all his movable and immovable estate during the period of his transportation or imprisonment, shall be forfeited to Government, subject to such provision for his family and dependants as the Government may think fit to allow during such period.

Reintroduction of ss 61 - 62 was recommended by the Apex Court to combat the cancerous growth of corruption and to have a different effect on those who are bent upon accumulating wealth at the cost of the society by misusing their past or power.[68]

68 Shobha Suresh Jumani v Appellate Tribunal , Forfeited Property(2001) Cr LJ 2583 (SC).

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/S. 63.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 63.

Amount of fine.--

Where no sum is expressed to which a fine may extend, the amount of fine to which the offender is liable is unlimited, but shall not be excessive.

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

Sections 63 - 70 of the IPC deal with the punishment of fine as given in s 53 .

This section lays down a general rule as to the amount of fines. Sections 64 - 69 refer to imprisonment in default of fines. Section 70 deals with the means of levying fines.

Sections 63 - 70 apply to all fines imposed under any Act, Regulation, rule or byelaw, unless the Act etc, contains an express provision to the contrary,[69]eg, s 64 applies to a sentence of fine under the Police Act 1859, and the Town Nuisances Act, Madras Act 1889. These sections have been made applicable to fines imposed under several local Acts.[70] Under s 19 of the Madras General Clauses Act 1891, ss 63, 68 - 70 only of the IPC apply to fines imposed under any Madras Act.337

Under s 21 of the Cantonments Act 1889, all fines recovered from offenders against the Act, go to the Cantonment fund, subject to the deductions under s 357 of the CrPC, 1973.

As a rule, where the sum to which the fine may extend is not stated in the section prescribing the punishment for an offence, the rule laid down in this section may be taken, as the general rule as to the amount of fines. By its terms the section applies only to cases in which the amount of fine is not limited by law. Now, the power of a magistrate to fine is in all cases under the penal and criminal procedure codes, limited to Rs 5,000 and it is only the court of the chief judicial magistrate or of session or High Court that can inflict fines to an unlimited amount. So it has been held that it is doubtful whether the section has any application to fines inflicted by a magistrate.[71] A magistrate for an offence punishable under this Code cannot pass a sentence of fine exceeding the limit prescribed by s 29 of the CrPC .

2. Matters to be Considered in Sentence of Fine

No sentence of fine should be passed by a criminal court on an accused person without regard to his means to pay the fine.[72] Their Lordships of the Supreme Court have however, observed:

> In imposing a fine it is necessary to have as much regard to the pecuniary circumstances of the accused persons as to the character and magnitude of the offence, and where a substantial term of imprisonment is inflicted, an excessive fine should not accompany it except in exceptional cases.[73]

Fine should be Commensurate with the Offence

The fine imposed should be such as is commensurate with the offence, the character and conduct of the accused, the circumstances leading to the commission of the offence, the degree of mens rea, as well as with the financial circumstances of the accused. To impose a fine which the accused has no means to pay, really means to compel him to undergo imprisonment or subject himself to further legal process. The fine in no event should be either excessive or such as to make an accused feel, however, wrongly, that he is being persecuted instead of being prosecuted.[74] But if rich or influential persons are too lightly dealt with though they are guilty, the respect for law and order will be seriously impaired.[75] A fine of Rs 5,000 on a substantial military contractor was considered to be too light.[76] The imposition of an unduly heavy fine of Rs 15,000 on a commission agent was held to be not justified, even 338though it might be justified in the case of the principals.[77] On the other hand where no minimum is prescribed, the court has discretion to impose even a nominal fine of one rupee.[78]

Fine in the Case of Youths

In imposing a sentence of fine, the court should not ignore the youth of the offender, but even in the case of a youthful offender, a sentence of fine is not inappropriate. No doubt, the fine will probably have to be paid by the parent, but after all parents may reasonably be expected to restrain the activities of their children when those activities conflict with the law. The effect of imposing a fine is to give the parents the option of keeping the child out of jail by a moderate payment.[79]

3. Quantum of Fine

Commentary under same heading in s 53 may be referred to.

4. Fine alone may be Sufficient when Offence not Serious

Either an offence is serious, or it is not. If it is serious adequate imprisonment ought to be given and short-term imprisonment would be inappropriate--anything less than three months is short-term. If the offence is not serious, imprisonment should not be inflicted. Fine alone would be sufficient. The amount of fine should be such as would be within the means of the accused to pay, though he must be made to feel the pinch of it. Of course, imprisonment in default cannot be helped. Even that imprisonment should be long enough to induce the convict to pay his fine rather than suffer the imprisonment.[80] In a case of an offence of profiteering it was observed by the Bombay High Court:

> Usually a fine is imposed when the offence is the result of cupidity. When a person wants to make more money and to get rich and to amass a fortune at the cost of society and of its poor and needy members, the only way to deter others from following in his footsteps is to make it clear that crime is not easy and that he should not be permitted to enjoy his ill-gotten wealth. If the only sentence were the sentence of imprisonment and if the accused were permitted to come back after serving his sentence to enjoy the wealth which he has amassed by anti-social acts or by committing offences, then it certainly would not deter others from following in his footsteps. Therefore, not only must a fine be imposed, but the fine must be of such a character and of such an amount as to be really deterrent in its character.[81]

5. Sentence on Two or more Accused Jointly, Illegal

A sentence on two accused 'to pay a fine jointly' with imprisonment in default in case of each of them, is illegal as it is impossible to say whether either of the convicted persons should suffer the entire term of imprisonment and for what proportion of the default.[82]339

6. Payment of Daily Fine

An order for the payment of a daily fine is illegal inasmuch as it is an adjudication so far as the future is concerned in respect of an offence which has not been committed when the order is passed.[83] But where the statute[84] makes default on every subsequent day an offence for which a fine can be imposed, no fresh order is necessary to authorise the imposition of a daily fine.[85] Daily fine is permissible under s 13(1)(b) of the Uttar Pradesh Roadside Land Control Act 1945 in case of continuing contravention of law and under some other special or local laws.

7. Recovery of Fine

Section 421 of the CrPC prescribes the various modes of recovery of fine imposed in any case. Death of the offender does not discharge from liability the property left by him.[86]

8. Refund of Fine when Conviction Reversed

On reversal of conviction any fine levied must, as a matter of course, be refunded, even though the appellate judgment may be silent on the point.[87]

9. Payment of Compensation out of Fine

Sub-section (1) of s 357 of the CrPC provides that when a court imposes a sentence of fine, with or without imprisonment, it may order the whole or any part of the fine recovered to be applied:

(i) in the payment to any person of compensation for any loss or injury caused by the offence, when compensation is, recoverable by such person in a civil court;
(ii) in paying compensation to the persons who are, under the Fatal Accidents Act 1855, entitled to recover damages from the person for the loss resulting to them from death caused by him;
(iii) in compensating any bona fide purchaser of property, being the subject-matter of the offence, in certain specified circumstances.

Such direction has to be given while passing the judgment and cannot be given subsequently. An order to this effect may also be made by the courts of appeal or revision. When an appeal lies against the sentence imposing such fine the compensation can be paid only after the period for appeal has elapsed and in case the appeal is filed only after its decision.

10. Appropriation of Fines Paid

Where there are several sentences of fine against an offender and a certain sum is recovered from him, he is entitled to pray that it should be appropriated towards certain sentences.[88]340

69 General Clauses Act 1897, s 25 .

70 Bombay General Clauses Act 1904, s 26 ; Bengal General Clauses Act 1899, s 26 ; United Provinces General Clauses Act, s 25 ; Assam General Clauses Act 1915, s 28 ; Bihar and Orissa General Clauses Act, s 29 ; Madhya Pradesh General Clauses Act, s 26 ; Orissa General Clauses Act, s 27 ; Punjab General Clauses Act, s 23 ; Travancore and Cochin Interpretation and General Clauses Act, s 24 ; Rajasthan General Clauses Act, s 28 ; Mysore General Clauses Act, s 25 ; Hyderabad General Clauses Act, 3 of 1308F, s 20 ; Jammu and Kashmir General Clauses Act 1925, s 25 ; Frontier Crimes Regulation 1901, s 61 .

71 Re Abdoor Rahman 7 WR (Cr) 37 (2); Re Mohana 20 PR 1895; Re Subhan 18 PR 1878, per contra.

72 Abdulla v Emperor AIR 1924 Lah 81, 24 Cr LJ 278 ; Dip Chand v Emperor 27 Cr LJ 480, 27 Punj LR 199 .

73 Adamji Umar Dalal v State of Bombay AIR 1952 SC 14, (1959) Cr LJ 542 ; Narayan Singh v State (1968) Cr LJ 216, p 218, AIR 1968 Raj 46 ; see also commentary in s 53 under heading 'Quantum of fine'.

74 State of Hyderabad v Kaneez Fatima AIR 1953 Hyd 155, (1953) Cr LJ 827 .

75 State of Mysore v K Basappa AIR 1953 Mys 75, (1953) Cr LJ 1064 ; Emperor v Kesri Chand AIR 1945 All 207 .

76 Emperor v Kesri Chand AIR 1945 All 207, per Iqbal Ahmad CJ.

77 Adamji Umar Dalal v State of Bombay AIR 1952 SC 14 .

78 King v Tushtipada Mandal AIR 1951 Ori 284, 25 Cr LJ 837 .

79 Emperor v Kamal Dattaraya Sohoni AIR 1943 Bom 304 .

80 Jivan Trikam v Kutch Govt AIR 1950 Kutch 73 ; Lalbahadur v State AIR 1957 Assam 74, (1957) Cr LJ 502 .

81 Mohan Lal Gokuldas v Emperor AIR 1948 Bom 358 .

82 Safder Khan v Gaya Municipality AIR 1918 Pat 271, 19 PLT 748, 39 Cr LJ 531 .

83 Ram Krishna Biswas v Mohendra Nath Mozumdar 27 ILR Cal 565 ; Emperor v Wazir Ahmad 24 ILR All 309 ; Re Sagar Dutt, Queen v Justice of the Peace 1 BLR O Cr 41; Kristodhone Dutt v Chairman of the Municipal Commrs for the Suburbs of Calcutta 25 WR 6 ; Re Limbaji Tulsi Ram 22 ILR Bom 766.

84 Calcutta Municipal Act 1899, s 580 .

85 Nom Lal Sett v Corpn of Calcutta 7 CWN 853 .

86 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 70 .

87 MHC Cr Misc Pet No 45 of 1904.

88 Yacoob Jama Khan v Emperor AIR 1931 Sind 73, 32 Cr LJ 922 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 64.

Sentence of imprisonment for non-payment of fine.--[89]

[In every case of an offence punishable with imprisonment as well as fine, in which the offender is sentenced to a fine, whether with or without imprisonment, and in every case of an offence punishable [90][with imprisonment or fine, or] with fine only, in which the offender is sentenced to a fine,] it shall be competent to the Court which sentences such offender to direct by the sentence that, in default of payment of the fine, the offender shall suffer imprisonment for a certain term, in which imprisonment shall be in excess of any other imprisonment to which he may have been sentenced or to which he may be liable under a commutation of a sentence.

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

In Queen-Empress v Yakoob Sahib ,[91] Benson J, said:

> The wording of section 64, it must be admitted, is not happy, but I am of opinion that the Legislature intended by it to provide for the award of imprisonment in default of payment of fine in all cases in which fine can be imposed.

This section enables the court in every case in which an offender is sentenced to fine, to direct that in default of payment of the fine the offender shall suffer imprisonment.[92] Imprisonment in default of payment of fine may be awarded even where the statute creating the offence, (e.g., s 65 of the Bihar Waqfs Act 1948), provides only for fine and not for imprisonment in default.[93]Sections 65 and 67 of the IPC and ss 30 - 31 of the CrPC prescribe the norms as well as the limits for awarding the sentence of imprisonment in default of payments of fine. This section has, therefore to be read with ss 65 - 67 of the IPC and ss 30 - 31 of the CrPC .[94]

The provisions of this section are applicable to a sentence of fine imposed under ss 177 - 81 of the Motor Vehicles Act 1988.[95] But where a special law provides a 341definite mode of dealing with the sentence of fine, the provisions of this section would not apply.[1] This section would also not apply to an amount, such as compensation awarded under s 357(3), CrPC, which is not imposed as a sentence of fine.[2]

2. Meaning of Offence

In this section the word 'offence' means anything punishable under this Code or under any special or local law.[3]Thus a magistrate convicting under the Madras Act 1889, s 3 [which forms a part of the Police (Madras) Act 1859], can fine and pronounce a sentence of imprisonment in default thereof, under this section.[4]

3. Section not Applicable to cases under the Cattle Trespass Act 1871

No fine can be imposed under s 22, Cattle Trespass Act 1871, and a magistrate can only award compensation for illegal seizure of cattle. A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of compensation is illegal. A magistrate is not competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment under s 22, Cattle Trespass Act.[5]

4. 'Punishable with Imprisonment, as well as Fine', etc

At first sight the words 'as well as' appear to mean the same thing as 'and', and to be contrasted with the word 'or' in the second clause. Such a construction of the words 'as well as' is, however, negatived by the concluding words of the first clause, viz, 'with or without imprisonment' and as to 'imprisonment or fine', there is no offence under the Code so punishable, ie, without some qualification.

The punishments relating to imprisonment and fine have been expressed in the Code in one or the other of the following ways:

(1) Imprisonment of either description (Sometimes the words 'of either description' are omitted, and the word 'imprisonment' is prefixed by the word 'simple' or 'rigorous', as the case may be) for a term which may extend to...years, or with fine or with both.
(2) Imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to...years, and shall also be liable to fine.

(3) Imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to...years, with or without fine. (This is very rare form. Refer to sections 216, 221 and 222).

(4) Whoever...shall be punished with fine which may extend to...rupees.

The first is the most usual form, and gives the widest discretion, for under its terms, the punishment may be imprisonment, or fine, or imprisonment and fine.

Under the second and third, imprisonment and fine or imprisonment alone can be inflicted.342

Under the fourth fine only can be imposed.

It will thus be seen that under the first three forms the offence is 'punishable with imprisonment as well as fine', i.e., both punishments can be inflicted though both need not necessarily be inflicted. But offences under the first form are also punishable with 'imprisonment or fine'[6] (which is not the case with offences punishable under the second or third forms), though they are likewise punishable 'with imprisonment as well as fine'. Under the fourth form offences are punishable 'with fine only'.

The effect of s 64 thus is that wherever a fine is imposed, whether it is added to imprisonment, or it stands alone, then in default of the payment of the fine the offender shall suffer imprisonment for a certain term.

5. Award of Imprisonment in Default of Payment of Fine

The jurisdiction of the trial court to impose a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is merely permissive. It is not imperative to award a term of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine. Section 64 of the IPC only states that it shall be competent to the court to impose a sentence of imprisonment for non-payment of fine. Further, imprisonment in default of payment of fine does not liberate an accused person from his liability to pay the fine imposed on him.[7] Such imprisonment does not serve as a discharge or satisfaction of the fine, but is imposed as punishment for non-payment. The fine would remain alive for collection for six years after the passing of the sentence. Assuming the accused has no means now to pay the same, it can be recovered from any property acquired by him within the period specified.

Even his death will not discharge from the liability, any property which would, after his death, be legally liable for his debts (s 70 of the IPC).[8]

6. Term of Imprisonment in Default of Payment of Fine

Imprisonment in default of payment of fine should be long enough to induce the accused to pay the fine rather than suffer the imprisonment.[9]Section 65, however prescribes the limit to imprisonment for non-payment of fine and a court cannot award imprisonment longer than such limit.[10]

It is undesirable to impose a fine in addition to imprisonment where the term of imprisonment to be undergone in default will bring the aggregate sentence of imprisonment to more than the maximum term of imprisonment sanctioned by the particular section under which the accused is convicted.[11]

7. Sentence of Imprisonment in Default of Payment of Fine cannot be made to Run Concurrently

This section which authorises the court to award imprisonment in default of payment of the fine expressly enacts that such imprisonment shall be in excess of any other imprisonment to which the offender may have been sentenced, or to which he may be 343liable under a commutation of a sentence. Accordingly, the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine, must be in excess of, and not concurrent with, any other sentence of imprisonment to which an accused may have been sentenced.[12] The default sentence for non-payment of fine cannot be ordered to run concurrently.[13]

It is not competent for the court to direct that sentences of imprisonment imposed for default in payment of fines should run concurrently. Such an order, if passed, is illegal; such direction can only be given in respect of sentences of imprisonment.[14]

The provision in s 31, CrPC, for the passing of concurrent sentences refers to substantive sentence only and not to sentences of imprisonment in default of payment of fine.[15]

It is demonstrably clear from a reading of ss 53 and 64, IPC, that substantive sentence and in default of fine are two distinct sentences, and hence they cannot be made concurrent.[16] The Madhya Pradesh High Court has also held that there is no provision in law enabling a court to direct a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine to run concurrently with the sentence of imprisonment passed either at the same trial or at a different trial.[17]

8. Imprisonment in Default of Payment of Fine is a Penalty and not a Sentence

A sentence is something which must be undergone unless it is remitted in part or in whole, on appeal or otherwise. When however, a term of imprisonment is imposed in default of payment of fine, the accused may always avoid it, by paying the fine. In such a case of sentence of fine, the imprisonment in default is merely a penalty for non-payment of fine. The imprisonment awarded in the event of default of payment of fine, cannot be added up to the substantive sentence of imprisonment to negative the jurisdiction of the trial judge.[18]

9. Imprisonment in Default does not Discharge Liability for Fine

The undergoing of imprisonment awarded in default of payment of the fine does not operate as a discharge or satisfaction of the fine which may nevertheless be levied in 344the manner prescribed by s 386(1), CrPC 1898. Where the offender has undergone the whole of the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, the warrant for the levy or realisation of the fine will not be issued unless the court considers it necessary to do so for special reasons to be recorded in writing. Where no special reasons have been recorded by the magistrate for issuing the warrant and if in law and fact the accused has undergone the whole of the period of imprisonment imposed upon him in default of payment of the fine the issue of the warrant would be illegal as they are issued contrary to the provisions of the proviso to s 386(1) .[19]

10. Imprisonment in Default of Payment of Fine cannot be Remitted by State

The sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine is not punishment for the offence for which the offender has been convicted but is punishment for his failure to pay the fine imposed upon him by way of punishment for the offence. The sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, not being punishment for the offence for which the offender is convicted, cannot be remitted by the state government under s 401(1) of the CrPC 1898.[20]

11. Sentence in default of Payment of Compensation

While awarding compensation under s 357(3) CrPC, the Court is within its jurisdiction to add a default sentence of imprisonment.[21]

There is no reason why the court cannot impose a sentence in default of payment of compensation as it can be done in case of death in payment of fine under s 64 of the IPC .[22]

89 Substituted by Act 8 of 1882, s 2 for 'In every case in which an offender is sentenced to a fine'.

90 Inserted by Act 10 of 1886, s 21(2) .

91 Queen-Empress v Yakoob Sahib 22 ILR Mad 238, p 240 .

92 Empress v Darba 1 ILR All 461 (FB) ; Bashiruddin Ashraf v State of Bihar AIR 1957 SC 645, (1957) Cr LJ 1063 .

93 Bashiruddin Ashraf v State of Bihar AIR 1957 SC 645, (1957) Cr LJ 1023 ; Raj Kumar Chauhan v State (1967) Cr LJ 1063, AIR 1967 Tri 13 .

94 Empress v Darba 1 ILR All 461 (FB) ; Emperor v Mitho Maroo Machi AIR 1942 Sind 80 ; State v Krishna Pillai AIR 1953 Tr & Coch 233, (1953) Cr LJ 1265; Public Prosecutor v Balla Venkayya AIR 1944 Mad 448, 45 Cr LJ 770 .

95 Raj Kumar Chauhan v State (1967) Cr LJ 1063, p 1066, AIR 1967 Tri 13 (ss 112 and 123 of the Motor Vehicles Act 1939).

1 Dhoopo v State AIR 1966 Raj 238, (1966) Cr LJ 1329 .

2 M Kunju v State AIR 1960 Ker 86, (1959) KLJ 826 ; R v Rampal 20 ILR All 95 ; Ram Dularey v Manohar AIR 1930 Nag 149 .

3 Re Pillayya 7 Cr LJ 180, 12 UCCR 51; VK Mitra v Corpn of Calcutta AIR 1932 Cal 63 ; Ram Gopal v State 1974 All WR 231, (1974) All Cr R 152 ; s 40 and the notes of s 63 ante; but seeBasanta Kumari Devi v Corpn of Calcutta* 12 Cr LJ 375, 11 IC 1431, 15 CWN 906 .

4 R v Rappel 18 ILR Mad 490 ; R v Yakoob Sahib, 22 ILR Mad 238 .

5 Ramdularey v Manohar AIR 1930 Nag 149, 31 Cr LJ 278 .

6 Queen-Empress v Yakoob Sahib 22 ILR Mad 238 .

7 Gopal v Union of India AIR 1963 Bom 21, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 152 ; Paras Nath v State AIR 1969 All 116, 1969 Cr LJ 350 ; Kishan v State AIR 1967 All 276 .

8 State v Krishna Pillai Madhavan Pillai AIR 1953 Tr & Coch 233, p 234.

9 Jivan Trikam v Kutch Govt AIR 1950 Kutch 73 .

10 Refer to s 65, Indian Penal Code 1860.

11 Emperor v Mendi Ali AIR 1941 All 310, p 311 .

12 Bhedu Tatma v Hari Jha 1958 Cr LJ 80, AIR 1958 Pat 35, p 36 ; State v Krishna Pillai Madhavan Pillai AIR 1953 Tr & Coch 233, (1953) Cr LJ 1265; Aditya Ram Krishna v State of Gujarat 1974 Guj LR 670 ; Paras Nath v State AIR 1969 All 16, (1969) Cr LJ 350 ; Brahmananda Mohanty v State of Orissa (1969) Cut LT 1292 ; State of Mysore v Fakirappa (1968) Mad LJ 116 (Cr), (1968) 1 Mys LJ 210 ; Babu Lal Ambaram v State of Madhya Pradesh (1987) MPLJ 480 .

13 Donatus Tony Ikwanusi v Investigating Officer NCB 2013 Cr LJ 1938 (Mad) (FB) .

14 Re *Kanda Moopan*AIR 1937 Mad 406, 38 Cr LJ 796 ; Emperor v Subrao Sesharao AIR 1926 Bom 62, 27 Cr LJ 111 ; Emperor v Ghulam Ahmad AIR 1929 Sind 179, 30 Cr LJ 907 ; Emperor v Akidullah 13 Cr LJ 536 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Bati AIR 1950 All 625 ; Emperor v Chaman Singh AIR 1940 Lah 388 .

15 Mrithyunjay Bose v State of Bihar (1967) Cr LJ 1180, AIR 1967 Pat 286 ; State v Krishna Pillai Madhavan Pillai AIR 1953 Tr&Coch 233, 234; Emperor v Mitho Maroo Machi AIR 1942 Sind 80 ; Emperor v Ghulam Ahmed AIR 1929 Sind 179(1), 30 Cr LJ 907 ; Shidlingappa Gurulingappa v Emperor AIR 1926 Bom 416, 28 Bom LR 668, 27 Cr LJ 926, 96 IC 270 ; Re *Kanda Moopan*AIR 1937 Mad 406, (1937) ILR Mad 362, 38 Cr LJ 796, 169 IC 607, (1937) 1 Mad LJ 74, (1937) Mad WN 52, 45 Mad LW 87 ; Public Prosecutor v B Venkayya AIR 1944 Mad 448 ; Haji v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 209 .

16 Sukumaran v State (1933) Cr LJ 3228, p 3229 (Ker), (1993) 2 Crimes 892 ; State v Raman (1970) KLT 1018 .

17 Badu Lal Ambaram v State of Madhya Pradesh (1987) MPLJ 480 .

18 P Balaraman v State (1991) Cr LJ 166, p 176-77 (Mad) .

19 Paras Nath v State AIR 1969 All 116, (1969) Cr LJ 350 (SC) .

20 Ibid.

21 Vijayan v Sadanandan K 2009 Cr LJ 2957 (SC) ; Hari Singh v Sukhbir Singh 1989 Cr LJ 116, AIR 1988 SC 2127 ; *Ranga Laxmi Ammal*2008 Cr LJ 3359 (Ker).

22 R Mohan v AK Vijaya Kumar 2012 Cr LJ 3953 (SC), 2012 AIR SCW 4085, 2012 (6) Scale 113 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 65.

Limit to imprisonment for non-payment of fine, when imprisonment and fine awardable.--

The term for which the Court directs the offender to be imprisoned in default of payment of a fine shall not exceed one-fourth of the term of imprisonment which is the maximum fixed for the offence, if the offence be punishable with imprisonment as well as fine.

Comments

1. General

Two questions, namely: (a) the extent of the 'certain term' of imprisonment stated in s 64 ; and (b) the nature or description of such imprisonment have been dealt with in ss 65 - 67 of the IPC . This section prescribes the maximum limit of imprisonment that can be awarded in default of payment of fine. 345

2. Scope and Applicability

This section limits imprisonment in default of payment of fine to a maximum of one-fourth of the maximum term of imprisonment prescribed for the offence, if the offence is punishable with imprisonment as well as fine. The section does not apply to a case in which the sentence passed is fine only. Such a case is dealt with in s 67 .[23] As for the meaning of the expression 'punishable with imprisonment as well as fine', refer to synopsis notes under s 64 .

3. Section to be Read with section 30,Code of Criminal Procedure 1973

This section must be read with s 30 of the CrPC, for its application to the courts of magistrates as its proviso imposes certain further restrictions on the powers of the magistrates in awarding an imprisonment in default of payment of fine. The proviso to that section, does not extend the period of imprisonment which may be awarded under this section.[24] It only regulates the procedure of the magistrates whose powers are limited.[25]

4. Meaning of Offence

Commentary under s 64 may be referred to.

5. Imprisonment need not be Proportionate to Fine

Sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine need not, in all cases, be proportionate to the amount of fine imposed.[26]

Description of Imprisonment for Non-Payment of Fine

Section 66 may be referred to.

6. Maximum Term Permissive

Under this section the alternative term of imprisonment should not exceed one-fourth of the sentence of imprisonment permissible for the offence.[27]

The maximum sentence which can be imposed in default of payment of fine, in a case pertaining to s 325, IPC, which is punishable by imprisonment of seven years and also fine by magistrate, is not to exceed one-fourth of the maximum imprisonment, ie, seven years.[28]

The punishment provided for an offence under s 3, cl 10 of the Madras Act 1889 is a fine not exceeding Rs 50 or imprisonment of either description not exceeding eight days. Therefore, in default of payment of fine the maximum term of imprisonment that can be awarded under that section is two days.[29]346

In a case of assault, a sentence inflicting a fine of Rs 50 and awarding imprisonment for one month in default of payment of the fine is illegal, with reference to ss 65 and 352 of the IPC .[30] For the same reasons for an offence punishable with one year's imprisonment, the infliction of five months' imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not legal in view of s 65 .[31]

Where an accused was convicted under s 419, read with s 109, the order for two years' rigorous imprisonment, in default of payment of fine imposed, was held illegal because the maximum sentence, imposable under s 419, being three years, the maximum term of imprisonment, in default of payment of fine, could be only nine months, being one-fourth of the three years.[32]

Section 67 of this Code further prescribes the maximum limit of imprisonment for the offences punishable with fine only.

23 Re Chander Pershad Singh 10 WR 30 (Cr); R v Yakoob Shahib 22 ILR Mad 238 .

24 Gokul Chandra Nandi v Sribodh Chandra Banerji AIR 1941 Pat 48 ; Queen-Empress v Venkatesagadu 10 ILR Mad 166 (FB) .

25 Empress v Darba 1 ILR All 461 (FB) .

26 Queen-Empress v Nga Chin (1893-1900) LBR 483; Empress v Asghar Ali 6 ILR All 61 ; King v Po Htwa AIR 1940 Rang 171 ; Ghulam v Emperor AIR 1943 Sindh 124 .

27 Kunjali Meeran v State of Kerala AIR 1960 Ker 285, (1960) Cr LJ 1212 ; Ram Jas v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1974 SC 1811, (1974) Cr LJ 1261 ; Chhajulal v State of Rajasthan AIR 1972 SC 1809, (1972) Cr LJ 1184 ; Nanalal Harishankar v State AIR 1969 Guj 62, p 65, (1969) Cr LJ 38 .

28 Kuna Maharama v State (1996) Cr LJ 170 (Ori) .

29 R v Yakoob Sahib 22 ILR Mad 238, p 240, 1 Weir 32 .

30 Jehan Buksh v Babo Ashootosh Dhur 16 WR 42 (Cr) .

31 Nur-ud-Din v King-Emperor AIR 1925 Oudh 109(1) .

32 Ram Jas v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1974 SC 1811, (1974) Cr LJ 1261 ; Changanlal Aggarwal v State of Uttar Pradesh (1981) All LJ 196 ; Pratap Kuer v State of Punjab AIR 1976 Punj 818, (1975) 2 Cr LJ 150 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 66.

Description of imprisonment for non-payment of fine.--

The imprisonment which the Court imposes in default of payment of a fine may be of any description to which the offender might have been sentenced for the offence.

Comments

1. Scope

This section determines the nature or description of imprisonment that can be imposed in default of payment of fine and lays down that imprisonment may be of the same description to which the offender might have been sentenced for the offence. If the offence, of which the accused is found guilty, is punishable with imprisonment as well as fine, the imprisonment, which can be imposed in default of payment of fine, cannot be simple; it must, be rigorous imprisonment. It should, however, not be imprisonment for life.[33] But where the offence was punishable with imprisonment of either description and fine, such as an offence under s 332 of the IPC, the imprisonment in default may also be of either description.

This section prescribes the description of imprisonment imposed in default of payment of fine and states that such imprisonment may be of any description to which the offender might have been sentenced for the offence. To quote an example, an offence under s 166, IPC is punishable with simple imprisonment for one year, or fine, or both. The imprisonment that can be awarded to an offender for non-payment of fine under this section can, therefore, be simple only. Section 67 of the IPC further provides that if the offence be punishable with fine only the imprisonment in default of payment of fine shall be simple.[34]

33 Queen v Srimonto Kotal 7 WR (Cr) 31(2).

34 Refer to notes under ss 66 - 67, Indian Penal Code 1860.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 67.

Imprisonment for non-payment of fine, when offence punishable with fine only.--

If the offence be punishable with fine only, [35][the imprisonment which the Court imposes in default of payment of the fine shall be simple, and] 347the term for which the Court directs the offender to be imprisoned, in default of payment of fine, shall not exceed the following scale, that is to say, for any term not exceeding two months when the amount of the fine shall not exceed fifty rupees, and for any term not exceeding four months when the amount shall not exceed one hundred rupees, and for any term not exceeding six months in any other case.

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

This section deals with cases where only fine can be awarded. It has no reference to cases where the offence is punishable with imprisonment also.[36]

If the offence is one punishable with fine only, a sentence of imprisonment in default of fine must be simple and in accordance with the scale laid down in this section,[37] but in the case of magistrates the term imposed must not be in excess of their powers under s 29 of the CrPC .

The maximum term of imprisonment under this section cannot exceed six months.[38]

Where it is provided by a special or local law that the punishment is a fine or imprisonment in default thereof, the offence is one, punishable by fine only, and falls under s 67, and not under s 65 .[39]

The nature of the imprisonment inflicted under this section must be simple.[40] This section is not affected by s 262(2) of the CrPC .[41]

2. Scale

The scale mentioned in this section refers to the actual fine imposed and not to fines that are permissible under the section under which the accused is convicted or the court might have imposed if it had so pleased.[42]

3. Offences under Local Acts

The word 'offence' in ss 65 - 67 denotes a thing punishable under this Code or under any special or local law.[43]

Section 27 of the Bihar Prevention of Food Adulteration Act 1947, imposes for a first offence a fine only, as given in the table appended to the section. So in the case 348of first offence thereunder s 67, IPC, will apply and the imprisonment in default of the payment of fine can only be simple imprisonment.[44]

4. Imprisonment in Default of Fine in the Absence of any Provision in the Special or Local Acts

This section applies not merely to offences under the IPC, but also under the special law and the local law. So, a sentence of imprisonment can be awarded in default of the payment of fine even though no such imprisonment in default of the payment of fine is provided for by a local or special statute.[45]Section 65 of Bihar Wakfs Act 1948, does not provide for any imprisonment in default of payment of fine, but a sentence of 15 days' simple imprisonment in default of payment of fine of Rs 100 imposed thereunder was held valid under s 33 (now s 30) of the CrPC read with ss 40 and 67 of the IPC .[46]

35 Inserted by Act 8 of 1882, s 3 .

36 Queen-Empress v Yakoob Sahib 22 ILR Mad 238 .

37 State v Narhar Sakharam (1971) Mah LJ 494, (1971) Cr LJ 873 .

38 Ibid; Bashinuddin Ashraf v State of Bihar AIR 1957 SC 645, p 647 .

39 R v Chunder Pershand Singh 10 WR 30 (Cr) .

40 R v Santu 5 Bom HCR App Cas 45.

41 King v Po Hwa AIR 1940 Rang 171 ; Re Asghar Ali(1883) 6 All 61.

42 Re Karuppanna 43 Cr LJ 121, p 122, (1941) 2 Mad LJ 446.

43 Ram Gopal v State (1974) All Cr R 152, (1974) All WR 231 ; Kishanlal Sindhi v Executive Officer (1980) Cr LJ 365 (Ori) .

44 Devabrata Ganguli v State of Bihar AIR 1950 Pat 301, p 302 .

45 Kishanlal Sindhi v Executive Officer (1980) Cr LJ 365, p 366 .

46 Bashiruddin Ashraf v State of Bihar AIR 1957 SC 645, p 647, (1957) Cr LJ 1023, (1957) SCC 325, (1957) SCJ 714, (1957) 1 Mad LJ 680 (Cr) .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/S. 68.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 68.

Imprisonment to terminate on payment of fine.--

The imprisonment which is imposed in default of payment of a fine shall terminate whenever that fine is either paid or levied by process of law.

Comments

1. Levy of Fine

The word 'levy' in this section and s 69 of the IPC, means 'realise'.[47] The power of levying the fine is restricted to the court sentencing the offender, but the successor of a sessions judge may levy a fine imposed by his predecessor, and the same rule applies to other officers by whom fines are imposed.

[48] Where a warrant under cl (b) of s 421(1) of the CrPC is issued by the court to the collector of the district authorising him to realise the amount of fine as arrears of land revenue the fine can also be realised by the said collector.

The period to deposit the amount of fine cannot be extended by the High Court and the convict can avail the remedy or provisions of s 68 of IPC . The convict shall surrender before the court and if the fine amount is paid into the court, the mandate of law, as had been provided under s 68 IPC is to operate and the imprisonment, in default of payment of fine, has to terminate on the payment of the fine amount into the concerning court.[49]349

2. Expiry of Limitation does not affect the Liability to Imprisonment

The expiry of limitation to levy fine; imposed under s 70, IPC, would in no way affect the liability of the convict to undergo sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine under this section. His liability to undergo imprisonment in default of payment of fine will cease only after the fine imposed is paid or levied, irrespective of the expiry of limitation for its recovery.[50]

3. Punishment in Default is Co-terminous with Payment of Fine

Sentence imposed in default of payment of fine has not to be misconstrued and taken as an imprisonment for commission of the offence. It is only a punishment in default of depositing the fine imposed and this punishment/imprisonment is, therefore, coterminous with the payment of fine. Hence, there is no basis for inferring that since the time granted by the High Court has expired, the fine cannot be deposited. When the High Court grants time, it should not be mistaken that it is putting a bar for realising the fine after the particular date. The point of starting the realisation is deferred till the time is granted because the time to be granted by the court cannot take away otherwise the rights given to the accused under ss 68 / 69, IPC .[51] After the expiry of the period of depositing fine, if fine is deposited the imprisonment is to be terminated. As the convict petitioner had deposited the fine, he was released forthwith.[52]

4. Section 68 is Independent of Section 70

Commentary in s 70 with same heading may be referred to.

47 Ramaswamy Iyer Angellus Lawrence Goplan v Union of India AIR 1963 Bom 21, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 152 ; Keshav Datta v State AIR 1967 All 276, p 278 ; Mahtab Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1979 SC 1263, p 1265 .

48 Chunder Coomar Mitter v Modhoosoodun Dey 9 WR 50 (Cr) .

49 Prahlad Singh v State of MP 2009 Cr LJ 3161, p 3165 (MP) ; See also, Ram Lakhan v State 1986 Cr LJ 617 (All) .

50 Sham Singh v State of Punjab (1980) 82 Punj LR 353, p 354 .

51 Babulal v State 1989 R Cr C 259, p 260 ; Chimnaparaju v State (1992) 3 Crimes 185 (Mad) ; Kanha v State of Rajasthan 1991 RCC 569 .

52 Usman v State of Uttar Pradesh 2007 Cr LJ 3868, p 3869 (All) (DB) ; Ram Lakhan v State 1986 Cr LJ 617 (All), relied on.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 69.

Termination of imprisonment on payment of proportional part of fine.--

If, before the expiration of the term of imprisonment fixed in default of payment, such a proportion of the fine be paid or levied that the term of imprisonment suffered in default of payment is not less than proportional to the part of the fine still unpaid, the imprisonment shall terminate.

Illustration

A is sentenced to a fine of one hundred rupees and to four months' imprisonment in default of payment. Here, if seventy-five rupees of the fine be paid or levied before the expiration of one month of the imprisonment, A will be discharged as soon as the first month has expired. If seventy-five rupees be paid or levied at the time of the expiration of the first month, or at any later time while A continues in imprisonment, A will be immediately discharged. If fifty rupees of the fine be paid or levied before the expiration of two months of the imprisonment, A will be discharged as soon as the two months are completed. If fifty rupees be paid or levied at the time of the expiration of those two months, or at any later time while A continues in imprisonment, A will be immediately discharged. 350

Comments

1. No Refund of Fine even if Full Imprisonment Undergone

Where A was sentenced to a further term of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine, and he paid a portion of the fine, but the fact was not made known to the jailor, and he underwent the full term of imprisonment, it was held that the court had no power to order the fine to be refunded.[53] The convict may, however, apply to the appropriate government for refund.

2. 'Levy' of Fine

Text under s 68, may be referred to.

3. Punishment in Default is Co-terminous with Payment of Fine

Refer to matter under same heading in s 68 .

53 R v Natha Mula 4 Bom HCR CC 37.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 70.

Fine leviable within six years, or during imprisonment--Death not to discharge property from liability.--

The fine, or any part thereof which remains unpaid, may be levied at any time within six years after the passing of the sentence, and if, under the sentence, the offender be liable to imprisonment for a longer period than six years, then at any time previous to the expiration of that period; and the death of the offender does not discharge from the liability any property which would, after his death, be legally liable for his debts.

Comments

1. Scope

This section prescribes the period of limitation within which fine may be levied. Not only the magistrate or judge who sentenced the offenders but his successor may also levy the fine awarded.[54] The section applies even where the sentence of fine has been awarded by a court-martial, and a copy of it has been sent to a magistrate under s 174 of the Army Act for recovery of the fine,[55] or to cases where the fine is being realised by civil process.[56]351

2. This section Applicable to Fines Imposed by Nyaya Panchayats

This section can also apply to fines imposed by a panchayat adalat.[57] But the limitation prescribed by this section is no impediment in the recovery of fine imposed by the High Court for its contempt.[58] Likewise the execution of the warrant issued under s 421(1)(b) of the CrPC, is not controlled by this section.[59]

3. Procedure for Realisation of Fine

The section only speaks of the period of limitation within which the fine imposed has to be levied. The procedure relating to the realisation of fine is provided in ss 421 and 425 of the CrPC, and the rules framed thereunder.[60] According to s 421, CrPC, the court passing the sentence may take action for the recovery of fine in either or both of the following ways, that it to say; it may:

(a) issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by attachment and sale of any movable property belonging to the offender;
(b) issue a warrant to the collector of the district, authorising him to realise the amount as arrears of land revenue from the movable or immovable property, or both of the defaulter.

4. Section 68 is Independent of Section 70

Section 68 is independent of s 70 . The expiry of limitation for levy of fine imposed under s 70 would, therefore, in no way affect the liability of the convict to undergo imprisonment in default of payment of fine under s 68 .[61]

5. Written off Fine can also be Recovered

The fact of a magistrate having written off a fine as irrecoverable is no bar to the realisation thereof at any time within the period allowed by law, if subsequently it transpires that the person from whom the fine was due has acquired the means of paying it.[62]

6. No Time Limit for Completing Recovery Proceeding Prescribed

An application for realisation of fine presented after the prescribed period of six years from the date of the sentence is barred by this section.[63] It was held in one case that the word 'levying' meant actual realisation of the fine and, therefore, even if the application is made, but the fine is not realised, within the period, further proceedings cannot be taken against the offender.[64] But, dissenting from this view, the Bombay High Court has held that although the expression 'levy' has been used in ss 68 and 69 in the sense of realising, its meaning in this section is to seize for the purposes of collecting the fine or to enforce an execution for a certain sum, and, therefore, if an application for recovery of fine has been made and properties have been seized 352within the prescribed period, there is no bar to the magistrate dealing with the properties and proceeding to sell that property for the purpose of realisation of the fine. This is because there is no legislative provision which has prescribed any limit for completing the proceedings taken in court for the purposes of realisation of money through court. But, on the other hand, in every case the legislature has prescribed the period within which a party seeking aid of the court to recover money must move the court for the purposes of the recovery of the amount through court. It is difficult to accept that the legislature prescribed an outside limit within which the entire process, commencing from attachment of the property and ending with conversion thereof in cash by sale has to be completed. To hold so may result in tempting convicts to resort to questionable methods for preventing sale of their attached properties by protracting the proceedings.[65]

7. Unless Stayed, Limitation Runs from the Sentence Passed by Trial Court

Under this section, the proceedings for the realisation of fine, or any part thereof which remains unpaid, may be commenced at any time within six years of the passing of the sentence. If, however, the offender be liable to imprisonment for a longer period than six years, then the proceedings may be commenced at any time before the expiration of that period. The period of six years is to be counted from the date of conviction and sentence in the court of first instance unless the operation of the sentence has been stayed or suspended. During stay the fine ceases to be leviable.[66] Dissenting from the view of the Allahabad High Court in Keshav Datta Misra v State ,[67] the Patna High Court has held that where the sentence of fine has been modified by a superior court, the word 'sentence' in the expression 'within six years after passing the sentence' occurring in s 70, IPC, means the sentence of the superior court and not the sentence passed by the trial court and the period of six years has to be computed with reference to the date of the order of the superior court and not of the court of first instance.[68] This view appears to be more sound as when a sentence of fine passed by the trial court is modified in appeal or revision, the modified sentence for the first time came into existence on the date it was passed and the limitation for its realisation should come into operation only from the date of modification and not from the date of the order of the trial court. If the distress warrant has been issued within limitation, the proceedings for realisation of fine are not barred by limitation.[69]

8. Whether Imprisonment in Default Discharges Liability for Fine

The law before the passing of CrPC 1973, was that imprisonment in default of payment is intended as a punishment, and not as a satisfaction and discharge of the amount due, and the fine may be levied, although the full term of imprisonment in 353default has been undergone,[70] within six years, after which period the offender's property cannot be attached, though he remains liable to undergo the sentence of imprisonment awarded in default.[71]

9. Recovery only when Special Reasons Exist for it

The proviso to sub-s (1) of s 421, CrPC has made a material change in this respect as it provides that if the sentence directs that in default of payment of the fine, the offender shall be imprisoned, and if such offender has undergone the whole of such imprisonment in default, no court shall issue such warrant unless, for special reasons to be recorded in writing, it considers it necessary to do so, or unless it has made an order for the payment of expenses or compensation out of the fine under s 357, CrPC .

10. Death does not Discharge Liability

Section 70, IPC, later portion, clearly indicates that in spite of the death of the offender/convicted accused, the liability of paying fine by the deceased accused devolves upon the successors or the legal representatives and the fine levy proceedings can be initiated against the successors or the legal representatives.[72]Section 70IPC enables the State to recover the fine from any property which would, after death of the accused be legally liable for his debts.[73]

Appeal/Revision against Sentence of Fine does not Abate on Death of Convict

An appeal against the sentence of fine by an accused does not abate by the death of the accused pending the appeal. If the conviction of the deceased accused is allowed to stand in appeal, the fine imposed upon him can be realised from his legal representatives.[74] The same principle applies to revision also, so a revision against a sentence of fine would not abate by reason of the death of the applicant.[75]

Successor of Deceased Appellant Liable even if they do not Contest Appeal Against Fine

In view of the scheme under IPC for recovery of fines by initiating fine levy proceedings especially ss 66 to 70, even if the successors of the deceased do not contest the conviction or imposition of sentence of fine, they cannot escape the liability of paying the fine. If they come on record, it is well and good, the court would consider if arguments are advanced regarding the conviction as well as the adequacy or otherwise of the fine. If they do not come on record in order to avoid the payment of fine under the shelter of non-executability of the default sentence, the 354duty is cast upon the court to direct the successors to be brought on record and hear them accordingly and if the sentence is affirmed and in spite of such affirmation, the LRS, or successors do not pay fine, the court has to proceed with the fine levy, warrant as prescribed under the IPC as well as the procedure as per s 421 of the CrPC .[76]

11. Property Liable

Fines are enforced by the court passing the sentence by the issue of a warrant for the levy of the amount by the distress and sale of any movable property,[77] belonging to the offender or by issuing a warrant to the collector of the district, authorising him to realise the amount as arrears of land revenue from the movable or immovable property, or both, of the defaulter.[78] If in realisation of the fine the ancestral property of the convict is put to sale, what is transferred to the government, or rather to the purchaser through the government, are the personal rights of the convict in the property and nothing which he could not have assigned away.[79] If the offender is alive and has no present means to pay the fine, it can be recovered from any property acquired by him within the period specified.[80]

54 Chunder Coomar Mitter v Modhoosoodun Dey 9 WR 50 (Cr) .

55 Ramaswamy Iyer Angellus Lawrence Gopalan v Union of India AIR 1963 Bom 21, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 152 .

56 Mir Ahmad v Collector, Peshawar District AIR 1943 Pesh 56, p 57, 54 Cr LJ 650 ; Collector of Broach and Panch-Mahals v Ochhavlal Bhikalal AIR 1941 Bom 158, 42 Cr LJ 534 .

57 Palakdhari Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh (1962) 2 Cr LJ 256, AIR 1962 SC 1145 .

58 RL Kapur v State of Tamil Nadu AIR 1972 SC 858, (1972) SCC (Cr) 380 .

59 PV Muhammed v Collector of Palghat AIR 1967 Ker 254, p 256, (1967) Cr LJ 1519 .

60 Ramaswamy Iyer Agnellus Lawrence Gopalan v Union of India AIR 1963 Bom 21, p 23 ; Jadeja Gajasinghji Harishingji Lakadia v Kutch Govt AIR 1950 Kutch 20, 51 Cr LJ 643 .

61 Sham Singh v State of Punjab (1980) Cr LJ 1160 (P&H), (1980) 82 Punj LR 353, p 354 .

62 Latif-ul-Hasan v Mumtaz Ali Khan 4 Cr LJ 404 (All) .

63 Collector of Broach and Panch Mahals v Ochhavlal Bhikalal AIR 1941 Bom 158, 42 Cr LJ 534 .

64 Mir Ahmad v Collector, Peshawar District AIR 1943 Pesh 56, p 57 .

65 Ramaswamy Iyer Agnellus Lawrence Gopalan v Union of India AIR 1963 Bom 21, p 24-25, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 152 .

66 State of Uttar Pradesh v Kamal Kishore (1992) 1 SCC 148 ; Palakdhari Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1962 SC 1145, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 256 ; Mahtab Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1979 SC 1263, p 1265 ; Kamal Kishore Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh (1980) Cr LJ 217, p 219 (All), (1980) 17 All Cr C 131 ; Keshav Dutta Misra v State AIR 1967 All 276, (1967) Cr LJ 679 ; Brahmeshwar Prasad Sinha v State of Bihar (1983) Cr LJ 8, (1982) BLJ 529 ; Ramaswamy Iyer v Union of India AIR 1963 Bom 21, p 24-25, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 152 .

67 Keshav Datta Misra v State, (1967) Cr LJ 679, AIR 1967 All 276 .

68 Brahameshwar Prasad Sinha v State of Bihar (1983) Cr LJ 8, p 12, (1982) BLJ 529 (DB) .

69 Ibid.

70 R v Modhoosoodun 3 WR Cr 61 ; R v Sagwa 23 ILR All 497 ; Emperor v Digamber Kashinath 37 Bom LR 99 ; Collector of Broach and Panch Mahals v Ochhavlal Bhikalal AIR 1941 Bom 158, 24 Cr LJ 434 ; Vaman Sheoy v Collector of South Kanara AIR 1964 Mys 64 ; Re *Report by Dy Registrar*1978 Mah LJ 689, pp 691, 693-97; Nikantha Pal v Bisakha Pal AIR 1935 Cal 546 ; Siddappa v State of Mysore AIR 1957 Mys 52 ; Paras Nath v State AIR 1969 All 116 ; State v Krishna Pillai AIR 1953 Tr & Coch 233, (1953) Cr LJ 1265.

71 R v Gantu Sakharam BR 8 October 1884 ; Collector of Broach and Panch Mahals v Ochhavlal Bhikalal AIR 1941 Bom 158 ; State v Krishna Pillai Madhavan Pillai AIR 1953 Tr & Coch 233; Sham Singh v State of Punjab (1980) Cr LJ 1160 (P&H) .

72 PR Anjanappa v Yurej Agencies Pvt Ltd (2004) Cr LJ 2565 (Kar) ; State v Krishna Pillai Madhavan Pillai AIR 1953 Tr & Coch 233, p 234, (1953) Cr LJ 1265.

73 Ravendran v State of Kerala 2015 Cr LJ 1, p 5 (Ker) (DB), 2014 (4) KLT 382 .

74 Ramdhani Gope v Jagesher Mahto AIR 1941 Pat 526, p 527, 42 Cr LJ 653 ; Bhulan Lal v State AIR 1954 All 783, (1954) Cr LJ 1720 .

75 Sita Ram v Emperor AIR 1937 Oudh 320, 38 Cr LJ 509 .

76 PR Anjanappa v Yurej Agencies Pvt Ltd (2004) Cr LJ 2565 (Kant) .

77 Criminal Procedure Code 1898, ss 386 - 89 .

78 Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, s 421 .

79 4 Punj Re 1913 (FB) and 18 Punj Re 1908 (FB) followed inHamam Singh v Hira Singh* AIR 1955 Pepsu 170 .

80 State v Krishna Pillai Madhavan Pillai AIR 1953 Tr & Coch 233, p 234, (1953) Cr LJ 1265.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 71.

Limit of punishment of offence made up of several offences.--

Where anything which is an offence is made up of parts, any of which parts is itself an offence, the offender shall not be punished with the punishment of more than one of such his offences, unless it be so expressly provided.

[81][Where anything is an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished, or where several acts, of which one or more than one would by itself or themselves constitute an offence, constitute, when combined, a different offence, the offender shall not be punished with a more severe punishment than the court which tries him could award for any one of such offences.]

Illustrations

(a) A gives Z fifty strokes with a stick. Here A may have committed the offence of voluntarily causing hurt to Z by the whole beating, and also by each of the blows which make up the whole beating. If A were liable to punishment for every blow, he might be imprisoned for fifty years, one for each blow. But he is liable only to one punishment for the whole beating.

(b) But if, while A is beating Z, Y interferes, and A intentionally strikes Y, here, as the blow given to Y is no part of the act whereby A voluntarily causes hurt to Z, A is liable to one punishment for voluntarily causing hurt to Z, and to another for the blow given to Y. 355

Comments

1. Analogous Law

The provisions of this section are analogous to those of s 26 of the General Clauses Act 1897, and ss 31 and 220 of the CrPC .

Section 26 of the General Clauses Act runs as follows:

> Section 26 . Provision as to offences punishable under two or more enactments.--Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence.

Sections 31 and 220 of the CrPC, run as follows:

> Section 31 . Sentence in cases of conviction of several offences at one trial.--

(1) When a person is convicted at one trial of two or more offences, the court may, subject to the provisions of section 71 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860) sentence him for such offences, to the several punishments, prescribed therefor which such Court is competent to inflict; such punishments, when consisting of imprisonment to commence the one after the expiration of the other in such order as the court may direct, unless the Court directs that such punishments shall run concurrently.

(2) In the case of consecutive sentences, it shall not be necessary for the Court, by reason only of the aggregate punishment for the several offences being in excess of the 356punishment which it is competent to inflict on conviction of a single offence, to send the offender for trial before a higher court:

Provided that--

(a) in no case shall such person be sentenced to imprisonment for a longer period than fourteen years;

(b) the aggregate punishment shall not exceed twice the amount of punishment which the court is competent to inflict for a single offence;

(3) For the purpose of appeal by a convicted person, the aggregate of the consecutive sentences passed against him under this section shall be deemed to be a single sentence.

Section 220 . Trial for more than one offence.--

(1) If, in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, more offences than one are committed by the same person, he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, every such offence.

(2) When a person charged with one or more offences of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of property as provided in sub-section (2) of section 212 or in sub-section (1) of section 219, is accused of committing, for the purpose of facilitating or concealing the commission of that offence or those offences, one or more offences of falsification of accounts, he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, every such offence.

(3) If the acts alleged constitute an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished, the person accused of them may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, each of such offences.

(4) If several acts, of which one or more than one would by itself or themselves constitute an offence, constitute when combined a different offence, the person accused of them may be charged with, and tried at one trial for the offence constituted by such acts when combined, and for any offence constituted by any one, or more, of such acts.

(5) Nothing contained in this section shall affect section 71 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

Illustrations to sub-section (1)

(a) A rescues B, a person in lawful custody, and in so doing causes grievous hurt to C, a constable in whose custody B was. A may be charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 225 and 333 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(b) A commits house-breaking by day with intent to commit adultery, and commits, in the house so entered, adultery with B's wife. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 454 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(c) A entices B, the wife of C, away from C, with intent to commit adultery with B, and then commits adultery with her. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 498 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(d) A has in his possession several seals, knowing them to be counterfeit and intending to use them for the purpose of committing several forgeries punishable under section 466 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860). A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, the possession of each seal under section 473 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(e) With intent to cause injury to B, A institutes a criminal proceeding against him, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding, and also falsely accuses B of having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such charge. A may be separately charged with, and 357convicted of, two offences under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(f) A, with intent to cause injury to B, falsely accuses him of having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such charge. On the trial, A gives false evidence against B, intending thereby to cause B to be convicted of a capital offence. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under section 211 and 194 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(g) A, with six others, commits the offences of rioting, grievous hurt and assaulting a public servant endeavouring in the discharge of his duty as such to suppress the riot. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 147 , 325 and 152 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(h) A threatens B, C and D at the same time with injury to their persons with intent to cause alarm to them. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, each of the three offences under section 506 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

The separate charges referred to in Illustrations (a) to (h), respectively may be tried at the same time.

Illustrations to sub-section (3)

(i) A wrongfully strikes B with a cane. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 352 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(j) Several stolen sacks of corn are made over to A and B, who know they are stolen property, for the purpose of concealing them. A and B, thereupon voluntarily assist each other to conceal the sacks at the bottom of a grain-pit. A and B may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(k) A exposes her child with the knowledge that she is thereby likely to cause its death. The child dies in consequence of such exposure. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of offences under section 317 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

(l) A dishonestly uses a forged document as genuine evidence, in order to convict B, a public servant, of an offence under section 167 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860). A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 471 (read with section 466) and 196 of that Code.

Illustration to sub-section (4)

(m) A commits robbery on B, and in doing so voluntarily causes hurt to him. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 323 , 392 and 394 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

2. Scope of the Section

This section deals with the limit of punishment. The first part of the section deals with a continuous or continual series of similar acts each forming the same offence or offence of the same nature as the whole series; for instance, giving a man fifty strokes with a stick.[82] The intention, expressed in this part of the section, therefore, is that the court, in awarding punishment under it, should pass one sentence for one of the offences in question, and not a separate one for each offence.[83] The second part of the section makes a provision for a contingency when the same act constitutes more 358offences than one. The third part deals with a case where several acts, one or some of which by itself or themselves, constitute one offence and the totality of the acts constitute a different offence.

The first part of s 71, broadly speaking, provides or limits punishment for such offences as are triable under ss 219 and 220(1) of the CrPC, while the second provides for those cases which are triable under s 220(3) of the CrPC . The third part provides for the punishment of such offences as are triable under s 220(4) of the same Code.[84]

It will thus be evident that while there is no objection to several such offences being charged with and tried together, the Code limits the punishment to which the offender may be sentenced on conviction. It may, however, be noted that while s 220 of the CrPC speaks of the person accused being 'charged with and tried', the illustrations all refer to cases in which the person accused may not only be charged with and tried but also convicted of separate offences. The conflict, if any, must then be with these illustrations and the section. But s 71 of the IPC prohibits punishment for, and not conviction under, two offences. So the conflict is more apparent than real, are cases in which the legislature saw no objection to the separate conviction of the offender. These cases furnish an apt contrast to the two illustrations appended to this section.

Where the court convicts a person for two or more offences at one trial, it may exercise its discretion and direct that sentence for each offence may either run consecutively or concurrently subject to the provisions of s 71, IPC .[85]

3. Rule of Law Contained in the Section

The rule of law contained in this section is, that in such contingencies as stated above the offender is not to be punished with a more severe punishment than could be awarded to him for any one of such offences. The prohibition is against punishing a man more than once for the same act or the same combination of acts. In a case falling under the first part, the offender cannot be punished with the punishment of more than one of the offences committed. As the second and the third parts deal with offences differing from one another committed by an accused, the restriction is not that he can be punished with the punishment of only one of the offences, but that he should not be given a punishment exceeding the maximum that could be given for any of the offences.[86] The court is not expressly debarred from punishing him separately for the various offences committed by him, nor is it debarred from making the sentences for the various offences cumulative. There is only one restriction and it is that the punishment should not exceed the maximum provided for any of the offences.[87]359

The test to ascertain whether the two offences are the same is not identity of the allegations but the identity of the ingredients of the offence. Motive for committing offence cannot be termed as ingredients of offences to determine the issue.[88]

4. A Separate Sentence for each Conviction

So, where the accused is convicted for more offences than one, a separate sentence must be passed in respect of each such conviction subject to the provisions of this section.[89] The failure of the trial court to specify the sentences under each count may, however, be treated as an irregularity and the sentences passed may be treated as concurrent sentences under all the sections.[90]

An offence under s 279 is distinct from an offence under ss 337 or 338 and, therefore, a person convicted of an offence under s 337 or s 338 can also be convicted for an offence under s 279 . If, however, the two offences are committed in the same transaction, s 71 will govern the assessment of punishment.[91]

Where all the injuries were caused to the injured by the same person and one of them was a grievous hurt and the person is convicted of an offence under s 325 which is a graver offence, no separate conviction ought to be recorded for the offence under s 323, IPC .[92] So, where a person was convicted, under ss 379 and 429 of the IPC, for stealing a calf and killing it, it was held, dissenting from Emperor v Ramla Ratanji [93] and Hussain Buksh Mian v King-Emperor ,[94] that not only were the two offences distinct but both of them were covered by two separate definitions and a separate conviction and sentence for each was legal.[95] The word 'may' in the section not only confers a power, but also imposes a duty of putting it in use.[96] The Bombay High Court has, however, held that the word 'may' in this section does not mean 'must' and it is not necessary to pass separate sentences.[97]

Separable Offences

By a 'separable offence' it is meant, according to the section, one which includes in itself another or other offences. Thus, if A breaks into a house with intent to steal, and steals property therefrom, he commits an offence under s 380 . But part of his offence is, house-breaking with intent to commit theft (ss 454 or 457). A's offence is therefore separable, since it includes two offences. Where the accused commits distinct offences which, when combined, are not punishable under any single section of the IPC, s 71 does not apply.[98]360

Where cheques issued for separate purchase transaction are dishonoured, s 71 IPC would not apply.[1]

None of the parts of the offence defined in s 338 of the IPC are sufficient to constitute an offence under s 279, because under s 279, the ingredient of driving any vehicle or riding on a public way is essential which is not necessary under s 338 . The offence under s 338, IPC, need not be committed by driving a vehicle or riding on a public way and therefore s 71, cannot be applied to ss 338 and 279, IPC .[2]

5. Continuity of Time, Place, Person and Commodity

There has to be continuity of time, place, person and commodity in order to apply the provisions of this section,[3] Where an accused steals property, at night, belonging to different persons from the same room, he cannot be sentenced separately for different offences of theft, nor when he steals, at one time, from different parts of a house.[4] Where stolen property, belonging to different persons, is found in possession of the accused at the same time, he cannot be sentenced separately for receiving each property.[5] Likewise, making of any number of false statements in the course of the same deposition is only one offence.[6]

6. No Distinction between Sentence and Punishment

The section is limited to the question of punishment only, for where an offence comprises another or other offences, an accused person may be charged with, tried, and convicted of such offences, as provided by s 220 of the CrPC . The Bombay High Court,[7] took the view that this section relates not to sentences but to punishments; but, with respect, the better view is that, as the punishment is the sentence, no distinction can be drawn between the two.[8]

7. This Section and Section 26, General Clauses Act 1897

If the offences committed by the accused are distinct, there is no question of the rule as to double jeopardy as embodied in art 20(2) of the Constitution being applicable. Though s 26 of the General Clauses Act in its opening words refers to 'the act or omission constituting an offence under two or more enactments', the emphasis is not on the facts alleged in the two complaints but rather on the ingredients which constitute two offences with which a person is charged. This is made clear by the concluding portion of the section which refers to 'shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence'.

If the offences are not the same but are distinct, the ban imposed by this provision also cannot be invoked.[9] Section 26 of the General Clauses Act only applies when an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more different enactments. It has 361no application when the act or omission amounts to two or more different offences under the same enactment.[10] But this section contemplates separate punishments for an offence against the same law, and not under different laws.[11]

Where the accused has committed two offences under s 201, IPC, by the same act, the case is not covered either by s 71 of the IPC or by s 26 of General Clauses Act, and the punishment for the two offences cannot be limited under those sections.[12]

Section 26 of the General Clauses Act does not act as a bar to a trial or conviction. The only bar it creates is a bar to a second punishment.[13] Under this section the court is not expressly debarred from punishing the offender separately for the various offences committed by him nor is it debarred from making the sentences for the various offences cumulative. There is only one restriction and it is that the punishment should not exceed the maximum provided for any one of the offences.[14]

8. This Section and Section 31 of Code of Criminal Procedure 1973

A perusal of s 31, CrPC, makes it clear that the power of the court to sentence several offences at one trial is made subject to provisions of s 71, IPC . A combined reading of both these provisions shows that although guidelines have in law been provided to indicate the manner in which the courts should exercise the powers to sentence concurrently or consecutively as the same would necessarily involve the exercise of judicial discretion yet in cases where the offences committed by an accused are totally independent of one another, it may not be possible for the trial court to direct that the sentence imposed by it should run concurrently just as in cases where offences charged merely form part of a series of offences which are only aggravated form of one another, the court would be obliged in view of the provisions of s 71, IPC, to direct that the sentences imposed should run concurrently. The basic principle which may have to be borne in mind is that the accused should not yet an impression that he has on account of the court's order, been able to get away without being sentenced for an offence which was totally independent of the other offences for which he has been convicted and sentenced.[15]

9. This Section is to be Read with Sections 31 and 220, Code of Criminal Procedure 1973

This section is to be read with ss 31 and 220 of the CrPC . It has no bearing upon the question of convictions, and relates only to the measure of punishment for offences falling under its purview. Neither s 31, nor s 220 of the CrPC stands in the way of separate convictions and separate sentences for each offence of which the accused is found guilty in the same trial, though, as a matter of substantive law, this section affects the measure, or, rather the limit of punishment, while as a matter of adjective law, s 31 of the CrPC has a bearing upon the same question with reference to the powers of the court awarding the sentence, and with reference to the right of 362appeal.[16] The provisions of s 71 would prevail in case of conflict with ss 31 and 220 of the CrPC .[17] It may be noted that s 31 of the CrPC does not embrace the case of separate trials held on the same or subsequent days for separate offences committed by the same accused person, but covers only conviction, of the same accused, for two or more offences at one trial.[18] This section does not control sentences passed at different trials.[19] It may also be noted that the present s 31 of the CrPC does not contain the word 'distinct' which the previous s 31 did.[20] It may also be observed that, that s 31 is specifically made 'subject to the provisions of s 71 of the Indian Penal Code ', and s 220(5) of the CrPC lays down that 'nothing contained in this section shall affect s 71 of the Indian Penal Code '. This section (s 71), would, therefore, prevail in case of conflict with ss 31 and 220 of the CrPC . Cases occur in which the plurality of sentences, though legal under s 220 of the Cr PC, would be illegal under this section. But in such cases, the CrPC yields to the rule under the sections of the IPC, which is paramount wherever its principle collides with the former.

Indeed, the two Codes provide two different rules intended for two different purposes. As was observed by Muttuswamy Ayyar J, s 220 of the CrPC provides rules of criminal pleading only, the rules for assessing punishments being provided by s 71 of the IPC, supplemented by s 31 of the CrPC .[21] In other words, the combined effect of the three sections is that while it is legal under the CrPC that the accused should be tried for more than one offence whether they are parts of a greater or another offence or not, in awarding punishment the provisions of this section shall be observed. There is thus no conflict between the three sections, and cases which note a conflict are cases in which this difference has been overlooked.

Analysis of this Section and Section 220, Code of Criminal Procedure 1973

It is very easy to introduce confusion and difficulty by raising quibbles which are made possible by the infirmities of language. Section 220 must be interpreted in a broad and commonsense way; when reading the section with s 71, IPC, we get a four-fold result. First--a repetition in the same transaction of several criminal acts of exactly the same character may constitute one crime, e.g., a number of blows on one person, etc., that is a case covered by s 71 of the IPC . Secondly--a single transaction may give rise to either: (a) several offences of a different character each complete in itself and distinct from the other, e.g., criminal breach of trust accompanied by falsification of account; (b) several offences of the same character but affecting different person, e.g., a gunshot which injures two or more persons. Such cases come under the first sub-s 220. Separate sentences must follow.[22] Thirdly--The same series of acts may constitute different offences. A may be charged for all, but only on 363offence can be regarded as committed for the purpose of inflicting punishment, e.g., a person who sets fire to a warehouse commits offences under ss 435 - 36, IPC . This falls under s 220(3), CrPC and s 71, IPC . Fourthly--An act in itself an offence may become either an aggravated form of that offence, or a different offence when combined with some other acts innocent or criminal. Here we have a combined offence which as well as its component minor offence may be charged under s 220(4) and again s 71, IPC controls the punishment. These provisions of law must not be confused with the provisions laid down in s 31 .

10. First Paragraph

Separate Punishments Forbidden in Such Cases

The first paragraph of this section deals with a case where there are several parts of an offence, of which any of the parts may itself amount to an offence. In such a case, the offender cannot be punished with the punishment of more than one of such offences.[23] The obtaining of money for each bill supported by false inspection note, amounted to offence of cheating in pursuance of the conspiracy. All such individual offences, on the basis of various bills, were of the same kind as the single offence of obtaining the total amount as a result of the presentation of the various bills and in view of s 71 of the IPC, the accused could not be punished for more than one of such offences.[24] A repetition in the same transaction of several criminal acts, may constitute one crime of exactly the same character, eg, a number of blows on one person.[25] The provisions of this paragraph forbid the infliction of separate punishments for the two offences in a case to which these provisions apply.[26] Its application and that of sub-s (1) of s 220 of the CrPC is illustrated by the case in Nilmony Poddar v Queen-Empress ,[27] which approves of Empress v Ram Partap ,[28] and overrules Empress v Lokenath Sarkar .[29] The illustrations appended to s 220, CrPC furnished an apt contrast to the two illustrations appended to this section.[30]

Illustrative Cases

Theft of Property Belonging to Several Persons

Where an accused stole property at night belonging to two different persons from the same room, he cannot be sentenced separately as for two offences of theft,[31] nor where a person steals at one time from different parts of a house.[32]364

Where the accused was charged with theft of cattle stolen at one time, he should not be tried and convicted in two separate trials merely because the two bullocks found in his possession belonged to two separate owners.[33] Nor when a guard in charge of a train stole at one time articles from separate bags of two different persons in a truck.[34]

Possession of Stolen Property Belonging to Several Persons

Where stolen property belonging to two different persons is found in the possession of the accused at the same time, he cannot be sentenced separately for receiving each property, there being nothing to show that two distinct offences had been committed.[35]

False Statements in One Deposition

The making of any number of false statements in the course of the same deposition is only one offence.[36]

Causing Two Injuries of Different Nature

Where a person causes two injuries one grievous and another simple, he cannot be convicted for each separate blow separately having been dealt with on same person. He was accordingly convicted under s 324, IPC, for causing both the major and minor injuries.[37]

Where the accused was convicted under ss 307 and 325 for attempt to murder and causing grievous hurt, the injuries inflicted were the result of a one series of acts. On appeal, the Madhya Pradesh High Court held that the accused could commit only one offence and the punishment could be awarded under major offence as act of the accused did not fall within the meaning of para 3 of this section or under cl (3) of s 220 of the CrPC . The conviction only under s 307 of the IPC was accordingly affirmed and the conviction under s 325, IPC was not found legal under s 220, CrPC .[38] But where two murders of persons of one party were committed in a fight between the two parties and the trial court had passed only single sentence under ss 302 / 149, IPC though charged on double count despite verdict of guilt having been recorded on both these counts. On appeal the Madhya Pradesh High Court observed that this was clearly a legal error.[39]

Rule Regarding Punishment in Cases Falling in Second Paragraph

Where anything is an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished, the offender shall not be punished with a more severe punishment than the court which tries him could award for any one of such offences.[40] This section obviously contemplates separate punishment for an offence against the same law, and not under different laws.[41]365

Where a person is found guilty of a criminal act which is punishable under two different sections of the IPC, he may be convicted under both the sections, but should be punished only under that section which imposes the higher penalty.[42]

Where, however, there are two provisions, one specific and the other general, the specific provision ought to be applied in preference to the general one. So where the offence falls under s 171F and also under s 465 of the IPC, it must be treated as one under s 171F and not under s 465 .[43]

No Separate Punishment for Consequences or Different Offence in Certain Cases

Where an unlawful act is committed and certain consequences flow from it in the usual course and the person concerned is punished in respect of such consequences, he cannot be punished over again, i.e., additionally for the act which produced those consequences. So, under s 121, IPC, a person can be convicted for waging war against the government but he cannot be given an additional punishment, under s 122 for preparing to wage war.[44]

Where the act, constituting two different offences, forms part of the same transaction, the imposition of separate sentences is not justified.[45] Though offences under ss 347 and 384 of the IPC, come within two definitions, yet, if they form one transaction, they constitute one offence and it is improper to award two sentences for the same set of facts.[46] So also where acts constitute offences under ss 426 and 447, IPC .[47] As an offence under s 328 is a part of an offence under s 326, IPC, no separate sentence can be passed for it.[48]

But the second paragraph does not apply where under the same section two offences can be said to have been committed by the act of the accused. Where the accused has caused the evidence of the two offences under ss 330 and 348 of the IPC committed by the same act to disappear, commits by the same act two separate offences under s 201, the case is not covered either by s 71, IPC or s 26 of the General Clauses Act and the punishment for the two offences can not be limited under those sections. But, normally, no court should award two separate punishments for the same act constituting two offences under s 201 .[49]

11. Offence under this Code and under Special Law

Where an act is an offence under this Code and also under a special law, the accused cannot be punished twice.[50]

In Emperor v Sohanlal ,[51] where the accused was charged under ss 420 and 511 of this Code and s 29 of the Telegraph Act 1885, for sending a false telegram in 366furtherance of an attempt to cheat, the High Court on appeal passed sentences of three years under each charge to run concurrently.[52]

12. House-breaking to Commit Theft

Where a person commits house-breaking in order to commit theft he may be charged with, and convicted of, each of these offences. In awarding punishment under the provisions of this section, however, the court should pass one sentence for either of the offence in question and not a separate sentence for each offence.[53]

13. Criminal Trespass and Murder

Whereas a person commits house-trespass and attempts to murder an occupant of the house, he may be convicted of both these offences, but a separate sentence for each offence is not justified.[54]

14. Adultery and Enticing for Illicit Intercourse

A person convicted of adultery under s 497 of the IPC, need not be convicted also under s 498 ; far less where there is no taking or enticing away of the woman.[55]

15. Stealing and Killing an Animal

Where a person was convicted under ss 379 and 429, IPC, for stealing a calf and killing it, it was held, dissenting from Emperor v Ramla Ratanji ,[56] and Hussain Buksh Mian v King-Emperor ,[57] that not only were the two offences distinct, but both of them were covered by two separate definitions and a separate conviction and sentence for each was legal.[58]

16. Attempt and Abetment

A person cannot be punished for attempting as well as for abetting the same offence.[59]

17. Forgery and Fraudulent Destruction of Document

Where the act of the accused which constituted forgery and was the basis of his conviction under s 467, IPC, was the same as the act which amounted to fraudulent destruction or defacement and was the basis of his conviction under s 477, he could be separately sentenced under ss 471 and 477 of the IPC .[60]

18. Abetment of theft and Receiving Stolen Property

It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that it is irregular to convict and punish a person for abetment of a theft and at the same time to convict and punish him for 367receiving the stolen property.[61] The two offences are, however, quite distinct, based on quite distinct facts. The second offence being after the first one has been completed. There is no reason, therefore, why it should not be possible to punish the offender for both these offences.

19. Abduction with Intent to Ransom and putting a Person in Fear of Death in Order to Commit Extortion

Where a person is abducted in order that money may be extorted from his relatives, a conviction under s 365 of the IPC would be justifiable. And if, in order to compel the relatives of the abducted person to ransom him they are put in fear of death of the victim, the provisions of s 387 of the IPC would be applicable. But regard being had to the third paragraph of this section, separate sentences cannot be passed under both ss 365 and 387 of the Code.[62]

20. Assaulting Public Servants

Where a number of persons were tried on various charges consisting of rioting armed with deadly weapons (s 148, IPC), assaulting or obstructing a public servant when suppressing a riot (s 152 IPC), and voluntarily causing hurt and grievous hurt to deter a public servant from his duty (ss 332 - 33); it was held that resistance to the police was one of the component parts of the offence of rioting, of which the accused were convicted and sentenced to the maximum punishment provided by s 148, and having regard to the provisions of this section, the additional sentences under s 152 were illegal.[63]

The provisions of this section are applicable to the offences under ss 147 and 353, IPC, and therefore an accused cannot be punished with a more severe punishment than the court can award for any one of them.[64]

21. Third Paragraph: Acts Constituting Several Distinct Offences when Combined Constitute a Different Offence

Sometimes an act which is in itself an offence becomes either a different offence or an aggravated form of the same offence when combined with other facts either in themselves innocent or criminal.[65] In such cases, it is proper the frame charges and convict the accused for the several distinct offences as well as for the combined offence; but the question of punishment is to be determined with reference to this section and s 31 of the CrPC .[66]

22. Rioting and Hurt

Where the hurt caused by a member of an unlawful assembly did not by itself convert the unlawful assembly into rioting, it does not form part of the rioting within the meaning of this section, and separate sentences on the particular accused would, 368therefore, be proper.[67] But where the hurt caused by the individual member is itself the force which converts the assembly into rioting, it is a part of the rioting under this section, and separate sentences cannot be passed on the accused.[68]

The Madras High Court, however, took the view in a case that the accused may be punished separately for both hurt and rioting as the force necessary to constitute rioting might fall short of causing hurt and the excess force will constitute a different offence.[69]

Rioting and Hurt Caused by other Members

The entire case-law was exhaustively reviewed by Desai J, of the Allahabad High Court in Behari v State ,[70] as a result of which he came to the following conclusions:

(1) If only one blow is given by a member of an unlawful assembly, all the members can be separately punished under sections 143 and 323 without any restrictions, or under section 147 and 323 subject to the restriction imposed by the second or the third part of s 71 .
(2) The second and the third parts of section 71 bar not separate punishments for the various offences, but the aggregate punishment exceeding the punishment provided for any of them.
(3) When more than one blow is given, every member can be punished separately without any restriction under sections 147 and 323 . Section 71 will not apply.
(4) The law makes no distinction between the actual assailant and other members. If any member does one more criminal act than the others, it does not follow that the law must provide for him a severer punishment than that provided for the other members or that it must provide for a less severe punishment for the other members than that provided for him. The other members must not be liable to be punished more severely than the actual assailant but they can be made liable to be punished as severely as the actual assailant.
(5) If any member uses force or violence not amounting to an offence punishable under section 323 and then hurt is caused by any member, all are liable to be punished separately under sections 147 and 323 without any restriction and section 71 will not apply.

23. Rioting and Criminal Trespass-- Sections 147 and 447, Indian Penal Code 1860

Where the accused was found with several others to have criminally trespassed on another's land and caused hurt in prosecution of the common object, it was held he could not be convicted and sentenced under s 447, IPC, in addition to a conviction 369and sentence under s 147, IPC, the common object of the riot, and the intention in criminal trespass being substantially the same, but he might have been separately charged and convicted of mischief.[71]

24. Rioting and using Criminal Force-- Sections 147 and 353

Where the force which was used and formed one of the component elements of the offence of rioting was the criminal force used by public servants in the execution of their duty, to pass separate sentences under s 147 and under s 353, IPC, is in fact to punish an offender twice for the same offence. Similarly, to punish an offender for actually committing an assault and again for committing the offence constructively, is illegal.[72]

25. Dacoity and Murder

Offences under ss 147 and 395 read with s 149 are covered by the provisions of s 396 and it is unnecessary to pass separate sentences in respect of them.[73]

81 Added by Act 8 of 1882, s 4 .

82 Indian Penal Code 1860, illust (a) to s 71 .

83 R v Baradi 11 Cr LJ 415 ; R v Malu 23 ILR Bom 706 ; R v Fatehkhan 4 Cr LJ 450 .

84 Behari v State (1953) Cr LJ 1222, AIR 1953 All 510, p 512 ; Sunder Singh v State AIR 1955 All 232, p 238 (FB) .

85 Cherian v State of Kerala 2014 (4) KLT 678 (SC) .

86 Behari v State AIR 1953 All 510, p 512, (1953) Cr LJ 1222 ; Sunder Singh v State AIR 1955 All 232 (FB) ; Tiny v State AIR 1952 All 92, p 93 ; Dharam Deo Singh v Emperor AIR 1916 All 49, 17 Cr LJ 418 ; Virabhadrappa v State of Mysore AIR 1962 Mys 138, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 81 ; Surjit Singh v Karan Singh 1973 Mah LJ 371 .

87 Behari v State 1953 Cr LJ 1222, AIR 1953 All 510, p 512 ; Sunder Singh v State AIR 1955 All 232, 238 (FB) ; Tiny v State AIR 1952 All 92, p 93 ; Dharam Deo Singh v Emperor AIR 1916 All 40, 17 Cr LJ 418, 14 All LJ 738 .

88 Sangeetaben Mahendrsabhai Patel v State of Gujarat 2012 Cr LJ 2432, p 2439 (SC), AIR 2012 SC 2844, 2012 (4) Scale 549, (2012) 7 SCC 621 .

89 Emperor v Dharmdas Lilaram AIR 1933 Sind 9, 34 Cr LJ 143 ; But seePujamal v State of Bombay* AIR 1951 Bom 244, p 247 ; Roshanlal v State of Punjab AIR 1965 SC 1413, (1965) 2 Cr LJ 426 .

90 Zamir Hussain v Crown AIR 1950 Lah 97 .

91 Nanalal Harishanker v State of Gujarat AIR 1969 Guj 62 ; State v Gulam Meer AIR 1956 MB 141 (FB) .

92 Jayanthilal Vrajlal Barot v State of Gujarat AIR 1968 Guj 218, (1968) Cr LJ 1173, 9 Guj LR 886 .

93 Emperor v Ramla Ratanji 5 Bom LRD 640 .

94 Hussain Buksh Mian v King-Emperor 3 ILR Pat 804 .

95 Emperor v Bhawan Surji AIR 1936 Bom 172, 60 ILR Bom 627 ; Nga Pan Din v King AIR 1938 Rang 138, (1938) Rang LR 63 ; Empress v Sitaram Rai 3 ILR All 181 .

96 Emperor v Dharamdas Lilaram AIR 1933 Sind 9, 26 Sind LR 416, 34 CLJ 143 .

97 Pujamal v State of Bombay AIR 1951 Bom 244 and cases cited therein.

98 Queen-Empress v Sakhram Bhai 10 ILR Bom 493 ; Queen-Empress v Nirichan 12 ILR Mad 36 .

1 Nova Vision Electronics Pvt Ltd (M/s) v State 2011 Cr LJ 868 (Del) .

2 Babulal Chhotalal v State of Gujarat (1968) Cr LJ 1274, AIR 1968 Guj 240 .

3 Delhi Municipality v Motilal (1972) Cr LJ 1536, p 1539, 74 Punj LR 316 (FB) .

4 Emperor v Mahommad Hadi 7 UBR 1904, 1 Cr LJ 537 .

5 Kalu Singh v Empress 14 PR 1885 ; Nga Po E v Emperor AIR 1936 Rang 94, 37 Cr LJ 530 .

6 Emperor v Rakhal Chander Laha 36 ILR Cal 808 .

7 Queen-Empress v Bana Punja 17 ILR Bom 260 (FB) ; Emperor v Piru Rama AIR 1926 Bom 64, 49 ILR Bom 916, 27 Cr LJ 113 .

8 Haji v Emperor AIR 1943 Sind 212, followingNilmony Poddar v Queen-Empress* 16 ILR Cal 44 (FB) ; Kiamuddi Karikar v King-Emperor AIR 1924 Cal 771, 51 ILR Cal 79, 25 Cr LJ 945 ; Y AIR 1934 Mad 388, 57 ILR Mad 643, 35 Cr LJ 1226, 66 Mad LJ 572 .

9 State of Bombay v SL Apte & Anor AIR 1961 SC 578, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 725 (SC) .

10 State v Pandurang Baburao AIR 1955 Bom 451, p 452 (FB) ; KP Sinha v Aftabuddin AIR 1955 Pat 453 ; but seeK Jayaram Iyer v State of Hyderabad* AIR 1954 Hyd 56, per contra.

11 Sukhanandan Rai v Emperor AIR 1918 Pat 649 ; Rahamatulla v Emperor AIR 1916 Pat 86(1) ; Bhagat Singh v Emperor AIR 1930 Lah 266 ; Re *PS Ananth Narayanan*AIR 1933 Mad 337 .

12 Roshan Lal & Ors v State of Punjab AIR 1965 SC 1413, (1965) 2 Cr LJ 426 (SC) .

13 Russol v State of Mysore AIR 1959 Mys 136, p 139 ; Re *KB Prabhu*AIR 1944 Mad 369(2) ; Arsala Khan v Emperor AIR 1935 Pesh 18 .

14 Behari v State AIR 1953 All 510, p 512 .

15 Dinu v State of Haryana (2001) IV CCR 263 (P&H) .

16 Queen-Empress v Wazir Jan 10 ILR All 58, p 67-8 ; Behari v State AIR 1953 All 510, p 512, (1953) Cr LJ 1212 .

17 Queen-Empress v Narichan 12 ILR Mad 36 ; Kali Das Chakravarty v Emperor 38 ILR Cal 453 .

18 High Court Proceedings, 5 June 1879 extra No 13, 2 Weir 30 and High Court Proceedings, 7 December 1880, No 2506, 1 Weir 31; Emperor v Tukaram 4 Bom LR 876 ; Girdhari Lal v Emperor 12 Cr LJ 217, 146 PLR 1911 .

19 Queen v Puban 7 WR 1 ; Bahadur v Emperor 14 PR 1886 ; Re Dalatia 3 ILR All 305; Makbul Hussain v Emperor 11 All LJ 263, 14 Cr LJ 240 ; Harak Narain v Emperor 19 All LJ 310 ; Dulli v Emperor ILR 47 All 59 .

20 Emperor v Bhawan Surji AIR 1960 Bom 172, p 174, 37 Cr LJ 553, 60 ILR Bom 627, 16 IC 283, 38 Bom LR 164 ; Pujamal Awadayoppa v State of Bombay AIR 1951 Bom 244 .

21 Queen-Empress v Nirichan 12 ILR Mad 36 .

22 Kali Das Chukerbutty v Emperor 38 ILR Cal 453 .

23 Elyangbam Chandra Singh v Yansembanu Mainu Singh AIR 1962 Mani 23, p 24, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 618 .

24 Banwarilal v Union of India AIR 1963 SC 1620, (1963) Cr LJ 529 (SC) .

25 Indian Penal Code 1860, illust (a), s 71 .

26 Kiamuddi Karikar v King-Emperor AIR 1924 Cal 771, p 773, 57 ILR Cal 79, 25 Cr LJ 945, 81 IC 593, 28 CWN 347 .

27 Nilmony Poddar v Queen-Empress 16 ILR Cal 442 .

28 Empress v Ram Partap 6 ILR All 121 .

29 Empress v Lokenath Sarkar 11 ILR Cal 349 ; Sahadev Ahir v Emperor 8 CWN 344 ; Queen v Durzoola 9 WR 33 ; Queen v Dina Sheikh 10 WR 63 ; Queen v Wahed Ali 13 WR 42 ; Queen-Empress v Pershad 7 ILR All 414 (FB) ; Re Chandra Kant Bhattacharjee 12 ILR Cal 495; Queen-Empress v Croft 23 ILR Cal 174 ; Queen-Empress v Bana Punja 17 ILR Bom 260 ; Queen-Empress v Malu 23 ILR Bom 706 .

30 Commentary on ss 31 and 220 in Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure, twenty-first edn, Lexisnexis.

31 Queen v Sheikh Moneeak 11 WR 38 ; Queen-Empress v Kashinath Vamanlal , Ratanlal 927.

32 Emperor v Mahommad Hadi 7 UBR 1904, 1 Cr LJ 537 .

33 Nga Po E v Emperor AIR 1936 Rang 94, 37 Cr LJ 530 .

34 Har Dial v King-Emperor of India 58 PR 1905 .

35 Kaku Singh v Empress 14 PR 1885 .

36 Rakhee Chandra Laha v Emperor 36 C 808 following 6 Mad HCR App 26.

37 Choudhary v State of Bihar 1989 BBCJ 369 .

38 Sayad Ashgar v State of Madhya Pradesh (1990) Cr LR (MP) 120 (Notes) .

39 Akram v State of Madhya Pradesh (1993) Cr LJ 1630, p 1635 (MP) .

40 Puranmal Agarwala v State of Orissa AIR 1958 SC 935, p 937 .

41 Sukhnandan Rai v Emperor AIR 1918 Pat 649 ; Rahmatullah v Emperor AIR 1916 Pat 86(1) ; Bhagat Singh v Emperor AIR 1930 Lah 26 ; Re *Anantanarayanan*AIR 1933 Mad 337, 34 Cr LJ 277 .

42 Emperor v Lavji Mandan AIR 1939 Bom 452, p 453 .

43 Ram Nath v King-Emperor AIR 1925 All 230, p 232 ; Perianna Muthirian v M Vengu Ayyar AIR 1929 Mad 21 .

44 Re *Sahadevan*AIR 1955 Mad 548 .

45 Sheikh Idris v Emperor AIR 1939 Pat 349, 40 Cr LJ 751 .

46 Durga Charan Singh v Isamuddin AIR 1948 Cal 6, 48 Cr LJ 389 .

47 Muksud Ali v Sajan Ali AIR 1953 Tri 8, 1953 Cr LJ 1536 .

48 Emperor v Sheo Nandan AIR 1945 Oudh 48 .

49 Roshan Lal v State of Punjab AIR 1965 SC 1413, (1965) 2 Cr LJ 426 (SC) .

50 Queen v Hussun Ali 5 NWPHCR 49 .

51 Emperor v Sohanlal (1903) All WN 26 .

52 Refer also to the General Clauses Act 1897, s 26 .

53 Queen-Empress v Malu 23 ILR Bom 706, 1 Bom LR 142 (FB) .

54 Barkat v Emperor AIR 1920 Lah 312 .

55 Queen v Pochun Chung 2 WR (Cr) 35 .

56 Emperor v Ramla Ratanji 5 Bom LR 460 .

57 Hussain Buksh Mian v King-Emperor 3 ILR Pat 804 .

58 Emperor v Bhawan Surji AIR 1936 Bom 172, 60 Bom 627 ; Nga Paw Din v King AIR 1938 Rang 138, 1938 Rang LR 63

59 Emperor v Fateh Khan Bahadur Khan 8 Bom LR 855, 4 Cr LJ 450 .

60 Pirbhu Dial v Emperor 4 PR 1913 (Cr), 14 Cr LJ 183 .

61 Empress v Sita Ram Rai 3 ILR All 181 .

62 Po Lan v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 167 ; Queen-Empress v AWWA 1 LBR 33 .

63 Farasat v Queen-Empress 19 ILR Cal 105 ; Zarkhan Nurkhan v Emperor 1940 Pesh 10, 41 Cr LJ 543 .

64 Zarkhan Nurkhan v Emperor AIR 1940 Pesh 10 .

65 Refer to the Indian Penal Code 1860, s 7 ; and s 220(4), Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, and illust (m) thereto.

66 Re *Sahadevan*AIR 1955 Mad 548 .

67 Queen-Empress v Ram Sarup 7 ILR All 757 (FB) ; Queen-Empress v Pershad 7 ILR All 414 (FB) ; Queen-Empress v Dungar Singh 7 ILR All 29 ; Katwaru Rai v Emperor 39 ILR All 623, AIR 1917 All 11 ; Queen-Empress v Bana Punja 17 ILR Bom 260 ; Anath Nath Dey v Emperor 40 ILR Cal 511 ; Prokash Chander v Emperor ILR 41 Cal 836 ; Mathura Rai v Emperor AIR 1927 Pat 323 ; Ramnath Rai v Emperor AIR 1921 Pat 374 .

68 Loke Nath Sarkar v Queen-Empress 11 ILR Cal 349 ; Fearsat v Queen-Empress 19 ILR Cal 105 ; Ramdilal v Empress 3

Cal WN 174 ; Hazura Singh v Emperor AIR 1927 Lah 786 ; Manak Chand v Emperor AIR 1926 Lah 581 .

69 Sothavalam v Rama Kone AIR 1933 Mad 338, 56 ILR Mad 481 .

70 Behari v State AIR 1953 All 510, p 515 .

71 Bhup Singh v Emperor 8 Cal WN 305 .

72 Ramdial v Empress 3 CWN 174 .

73 Sharif v Emperor AIR 1944 Sind 113 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 72.

Punishment of person guilty of one of several offences, the judgment stating that it is doubtful of which.--

In all cases in which judgment is given that a person is guilty of one of several offences specified in the judgment, but that it is doubtful of which of these offences, he is guilty, the offender shall be punished for the offence for which the lowest punishment is provided if the same punishment is not provided for all.

Comments

1. Analogous Law

This section should be read along with ss 221(1) and 354(2) of the CrPC . They run as follows:

Section 221 . Where it is doubtful what offence has been committed.--

(1) If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences.

...

Illustrations

(a) A is accused of an act which may amount to theft, or receiving stolen property, or criminal breach of trust or cheating. He may be charged with theft, receiving stolen property, criminal breach of trust and cheating, or he may be charged 370with having committed theft, or receiving stolen property or criminal breach of trust or cheating.

(b) In the case mentioned, A is only charged with theft. It appears that he committed the offence of criminal breach of trust, or that of receiving stolen goods. He may be convicted of criminal breach of trust or of receiving stolen goods (as the case may be), though he was not charged with such offence.

(c) A states on oath before the magistrate that he saw B hit C with a club. Before the Sessions Court A states on oath that B never hit C. A may be charged in the alternative and convicted of intentionally giving false evidence, although it cannot be proved which of these contradictory statements was false.

Section 354 . Language and contents of judgment.--

...

(2) When the conviction is under the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860) and it is doubtful under which of two sections, or under which of two parts of the same section, of that Code the offence falls, the Court shall distinctly express the same, and pass judgment in the alternative.

...

2. Scope and Object

The scope and object of this section as observed by the authors of the Code may be stated here:

This provision is intended to prevent an offender, whose guilt is fully established, from eluding punishment on the ground that the evidence does not enable the tribunals to pronounce with certainty under what penal provision his case falls.

> Where the doubt is merely between an aggravated and mitigated form of the same offence, the difficulty will not be great. In such cases the offender ought always to be convicted of the minor offence, but the doubt may be between two offences, neither of which is a mitigated form of the other. The doubt, eg, may lie between murder and the aiding of murder. It may be certain, eg, that either A or B murdered Z, and that whoever was the murderer was aided by the other in the commission of the murder; but who committed the murder, and who aided the commission, it may be impossible to ascertain. To suffer both to go unpunished, though it is certain that both are guilty of capital crimes, merely because it is doubtful under what clause each of them is punishable, would be most unreasonable. It appears to us that a conviction in the alternative has this recommendation, that it is altogether free from fiction, that is exactly consonant with the truth of the facts. If the court finds both A and B guilty of murder, or of aiding murder, the court affirms that which is not literally true; and on all occasions, but especially in judicial proceedings, there is a strong presumption in favour of literal truth. If the court finds that A has either murdered Z or aided B to murder Z, and that B has either murdered Z or aided A to murder Z, the court finds that which is the literal truth; nor will there, under the rule which we have laid down, be the smallest difficulty in prescribing the punishment.

> It is chiefly in cases where property has been fraudulently appropriated that the necessity for such a provision as that which we are considering will be felt. It will often be certain that there has been a fraudulent appropriation of property; and the only doubt will be, whether this fraudulent appropriation was a theft or a criminal breach of trust. To allow the offender to escape unpunished on account of such a doubt would be absurd. To subject him to the punishment of theft, which is the higher of the two crimes, between which the doubt lies, would be grossly unjust. The punishment to which he ought to be liable is evidently that of criminal breach of trust; but that a court should convict an offender of a criminal breach of trust, when the opinion of the court perhaps is, that it is an even chance, or more than an even chance, that no trust was ever reposed 371in him, seems to us an objectionable mode of proceeding. We will not, in this stage of our labours, venture to lay it down as an unbending rule that the tribunals ought never to employ phrases which, though literally false, are conventionally true. Yet we are fully satisfied that the presumption is always strongly in favour of that form of expression which accurately sets forth the real state of the facts. In the cases which we have supposed, the real state of the fact is, that the offender has certainly committed either theft or criminal breach of trust, and that the court does not know which. This ought, therefore, in our opinion, to be the form of the judgment.[74]

3. Requisite Doubt

The doubt must be as to which offence has been committed, not as to whether either has been committed.[75] The section applies only to cases where the actual facts are established but there is a doubt as to the application of the law of the proved facts.[76] If there is doubt in the mind of the court as to whether the facts brought on record are not sufficient to prove are of the two offences charged alternatively against the accused, then the court has to acquit the accused of the offence regarding which there is doubt and has to convict the accused regarding which there is no doubt. The alternative conviction as contemplated under s 72 of the IPC and under s 354(2) of the CrPC cannot be awarded in case of doubt regarding facts.[77]

4. This Section, Sections 221(1) and 354(2), Code of Criminal Procedure 1973

The provisions of this section, and of ss 221(1) and 354(2) of the CrPC, apply only to cases where the actual facts are established, but there is doubt as to the application of the law to the proved facts.[78] An accused may be convicted in the alternative on separate and alternative charges framed, or which might have been framed under s 221(1) of the CrPC .[79]

5. Alternative Charge cannot be Framed in Respect of an Offence under the Penal Code and an offence under a Special Law

Both the provisions of the law as to judgment and punishment in the case of an alternative charge are limited to offences under the IPC . Section 354(2) of the CrPC contains an express limitation to that effect and this section is, by s 40, limited to offences under the IPC . The word 'offence' in s 221(1) of the CrPC includes offences under special laws and such offences may be charged cumulatively. But the limitations in s 354(2) aforesaid and this section seem to indicate that an alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of an offence under the IPC and an offence under a special law.[80]

6. Conviction for Doubtful Offences

In a case, where the court is in doubt as to the offence, the CrPC expressly provides that an alternative finding is perfectly legal and the offender is to be punished for the 372offence for which the lowest punishment is provided.[81] It may be open to the court to give judgment that a person is guilty of one of several offences specified in the judgment, but that it is doubtful of which of these offences he is guilty. Such a finding is in accordance with s 354(2) of the CrPC, and will have the consequence that under this section the offender is to be punished for the offence for which the lowest punishment is provided, the same punishment not being provided for all.[82] Thus where the doubt entertained was whether there was sufficient proof that the accused had in fact committed the murder of the deceased, or had merely been guilty of causing evidence of the commission of that murder to disappear, an alternative conviction of both offences is not contemplated by law and the judge is bound to acquit the prisoner of the more serious offence, once he found the evidence insufficient to support that charge.[83]

74 Note A, pp 105-06.

75 R v Jamurha 7 NWPA 137 ; Commissioner's Report, 1847, s 527 .

76 Partapa v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 14 .

77 Tatyarao v State of Maharashtra (2000) I CCR 484 (Bom) (DB) .

78 Emperor v Khan Mahommad 11 PR 1887 (Cr) ; Queen-Empress v Jamurha 7 NWPA 137 ; Wafadar Khan v Queen-Empress 21 ILR Cal 955, p 973 .

79 Maktaili v Emperor AIR 1945 Cal 421, p 422-23 .

80 Ganesh Krishna v Emperor 12 Cr LJ 224 .

81 Queen-Empress v Tarine Mytee 7 WR (Cr) 13(3).

82 Nebti Mandal v Emperor AIR 1940 Pat 289, p 290, ILR 19 Pat 369, 7 BR 59, 190 IC 457, 41 Cr LJ 910, 22 PLT 98 .

83 Partapa v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 664, 665, 21 IC 904 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 73.

Solitary confinement.--

Whenever any person is convicted of an offence for which under this Code the Court has power to sentence him to rigorous imprisonment, the Court may, by its sentence, order that the offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for any portion or portions of the imprisonment to which he is sentenced, not exceeding three months in the whole, according to the following scale, that is to say-- a time not exceeding one month if the term of imprisonment shall not exceed six months;

a time not exceeding two months if the term of imprisonment shall exceed six months and [84][shall not exceed one] year;

a time not exceeding three months if the term of imprisonment shall exceed one year.

Comments

1. Principle and Scope of the Section

This section deals with solitary confinement which means isolation of the prisoner from human intercourse and society. Although the imposition of the sentence of solitary confinement was legal under, the Larceny Act of 1861[85] the power was very rarely exercised by a criminal court. By the Law Revision Act 1893,[86] the provisions 373in the Larceny Act 1861 relating to solitary confinement, which had become obsolete for several decades by then, were formally repealed. A century of experience has thus led to its abandonment in the United Kingdom, and at the present day it stands condemned and has generally given place to work in association during the day and confinement in a cell for the night in cases where isolation at night is considered necessary for a brief time for particular prisoners, and exclusively for the maintenance of prison discipline. Although in the medieval times, under the influence of the Ecclesiastics it was considered that cellular confinement was a means of promoting reflection and penitence, it came since to be realised that this kind of treatment leads to a morbid state of mind and infrequently to mental derangement, and as a form of torture it fails in its effect on the public. This form of punishment is rarely imposed by the courts as it is thought to be out of time with modern thinking. It must, therefore, so long as it is part of the IPC, be administered, if ever, in the most exceptional cases of unparalleled atrocity or brutality.[87]

2. It is a Substantive Punishment

Solitary punishment is by itself a substantive punishment which can be imposed by a court of law.[88]

3. When can Solitary Confinement be Ordered

Solitary confinement should not be ordered unless there are special features appearing in the evidence, such as extreme violence or brutality in the commission of the offence. The mere fact that to the accused convicted under s 379, IPC, sanctity of home life has become a mockery and 'the desire to take what he wants regardless of ownership is not in him' cannot be a circumstance justifying the passing of an order of solitary confinement.[89] Although the fact of previous convictions is an element in determining the sentence, essential regard should be had to the facts of the case, the gravity of the offence and the circumstances in which it was committed in assessing the punishment, and the mere circumstances that there were previous convictions should not result in the infliction of a sentence that is far out of proportion to the merits of the main case.[90]

4. Distinction between Solitary Confinement under this Code and Separate and Cellular Confinement under Prisons Act

Solitary confinement is the extremely severe and is awardable only by the court. 'Separate confinement' envisaged under s 46(8) of the Prisons Act is of less severity than 'solitary confinement' and allows one hour's exercise per diem and to have meals in association with one or more other prisoners. 'Cellular confinement' contemplated under s 46(10) of the said Act is somewhat more strict than 'separate confinement' and in relation to this confinement there is no provision for allowing the prisoner to have one hour's exercise and also to have his meals in association with one or more other prisoner's. Both these 'separate confinement' and 'cellular confinement' are punishments contemplated under s 46 for offences committed under 374 s 45 of the Prisons Act 1894, and the superintendent of prison is invested with the power of awarding such punishment.[91]

Where the petitioner, an undertrial prisoner, who was arrested in connection with assassination of the late Prime Minister was put in a separate cell only as a disciplinary measure, in order to avoid his mingling with other criminals and remand prisoners in central prison and to ensure proper security to petitioner, himself in exercise of powers under r 215 of the Tamil Nadu Prison Manual, the keeping of petitioner in separate cell was held to not amount to either solitary confinement or separate or cellular confinement. More so, when the liberty of petitioner is in no way curtailed, he is allowed to remain outside cell for not less than six hours a day and when he is outside the cell, he is allowed to communicate with other prisoners and is also allowed as an ordinary remand prisoner all the concessions admissible to the 'B' class prisoner.[92]

5. Summary Trial and Solitary Confinement

It is not illegal to impose solitary confinement as a part of the sentence in a case tried summarily. There is nothing in the terms of s 262 of the CrPC, to make it illegal to impose solitary confinement as part of the sentence in summary trials. The effect of s 262, CrPC, is only to limit the imprisonment to a term of three months; it does not interfere with a court's powers under this section to order solitary imprisonment with the similar powers given by s 29(1) of the CrPC .[93]

Solitary Confinement for Offences under Special or Local Laws

Solitary confinement cannot be awarded for offences under special or local Acts, for, solitary confinement can be awarded, under this section, only for offences under the IPC .[94]

Solitary Confinement in Default of Furnishing Security for Good Behaviour

The power to impose confinement conferred by this section applies only where a person has been convicted of an offence under the IPC and is not applicable to convictions under other laws, unless expressly made so, and therefore an order for solitary confinement for failure to furnish security under s 110 of the CrPC, is without jurisdiction.[95] Those who have been called on to provide security and have failed to do so, and have been confined in jail in consequence, are not to be kept in solitary confinement unless they have been liable to it for some infringement of the jail rules.[96]

Solitary Confinement in Case of Imprisonment in Lieu of Fine

The section provides that solitary confinement must be a portion of the substantial sentence of rigorous imprisonment; and where rigorous imprisonment is not part of the substantive sentence, solitary confinement cannot be awarded.[97] It is, therefore, 375illegal to award solitary confinement in a case in which the offender has been sentenced to imprisonment in default of payment of fine.[1]

Duration of Solitary Confinement

Solitary confinement is a sentence, where an accused is sentenced to rigorous imprisonment or in a case where rigorous imprisonment is the sentence provided by the IPC . In such a case, this section empowers the court to direct that a portion of the imprisonment, not exceeding three months, shall be suffered in solitary confinement. In the case of simultaneous convictions, the award of separate terms of solitary confinement exceeding three months in the aggregate is legal.[2] The separate sentences of solitary confinement are not illegal, but as a matter of practice, a sentence of more than three months' solitary confinement should not be passed on a person convicted at one trial of more than one offence.[3] Cumulative sentences of solitary confinement are contrary to the intention of this section.[4] Solitary confinement must be a portion of the substantial sentence of rigorous imprisonment, and if the substantial sentences are to be consecutive, the periods of solitary confinement cannot possibly be concurrent.[5]

84 Substituted by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act 1882, s 5, for 'be less than a'.

85 24 of 25 Vic C 96.

86 56 of 57 Vic C 54 on 22 September 1893.

87 Re *Munuswamy*AIR 1947 Mad 386, (1947) 1 Mad LJ 336, 60 Mad LW 333, 1947 Mad WN 609, ILR 1948 Mad 359 ; *Re Ramanjulu Naidu*AIR 1947 Mad 381 .

88 Sunil Batra v Delhi Admn AIR 1978 SC 1675, 1699, 1978 Cr LJ 1741 .

89 Re *Ramanjulu Naidu*AIR 1947 Mad 381(1) .

90 Re *Munuswamy*AIR 1947 Mad 386(1) .

91 K Valamlal v Govt of Tamil Nadu (1981) LW (Cr) 58, (1981) Mad LJ (Cr) 218 .

92 Perrari Valan v Emperor General of Prisons, Madras (1992) Cr LJ 3125 (Mad) .

93 Empress v Annu Khan 6 ILR All 83, 3 All WN (1883) 224.

94 Empress v Gurdil Singh (1889) 17 PR 1889 (Cr) ; Harnarain v Crown (1870) 20 PR 1870 (Cr) ; Crown v Munawar (1875) 4 PR 1875 (Cr) ; Empress v Mukh Ram (1879) 24 PR 1879 (Cr) ; King-Emperor v Nazir Singh AIR 1924 Lah 667 ((1)), 25 Cr LJ 120, 76 IC 184 .

95 King-Emperor v Phakkar AIR 1927 All 472, p 473, 28 Cr LJ 534, 103 IC 342 .

96 Sundar Lal v Emperor AIR 1933 All 676, p 678, 35 Cr LJ 218, 146 IC 900, (1933) All LJ 777 .

97 Crown v Umar Singh (1869) PR No 20 ; Bunsi v Emperor (1882) PR No 9 .

1 Crown v Jita (1873) PR No 26 ; Emperor v Jamdad (1887) PR No 53 .

2 Nihala(1877) PR No 4 of 1877; Khushal(1877) PR No 13 of 1877.

3 Ibrahim v Queen-Empress (1897) 7 PR 1897 (Cr) ; Abdulla Jan v Emperor 2 Cr LJ 707, (1905) PR No 37 ; Queen-Empress v Nga Po Thaing (1897) PLJR 596 ; Queen-Empress v Nga Kaing (1897-1901) 1 UBR 247; Ratiram, 5 CPLR 23; Dangar Khan v Emperor AIR 1923 Lah 104, 68 IC 817, 5 Lah LJ 224 .

4 Queen-Empress v Po Thaing (1897) PJLB 596 ; Queen-Empress v Nga Kaing (1897-1901) 1 UBR 247; Emperor v Nga Sein Po AIR 1923 Rang 197, 1 ILR Rang 306, 2 Bur LJ 92, 25 Cr LJ 85, 76 IC 21 .

5 King-Emperor v Nga Sein Po AIR 1923 Rang 197, p 198, 1 ILR Rang 306, 2 Bur LJ 92, 25 Cr LJ 85, 76 IC 21 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

S. 74.

Limit of solitary confinement.--

In executing a sentence of solitary confinement, such confinement shall in no case exceed fourteen days at a time, with intervals between the periods of solitary confinement of not less duration than such periods; and when the imprisonment awarded shall exceed three months, the solitary confinement shall not exceed seven days in any one month of the whole imprisonment awarded, with intervals between the periods of solitary confinement of not less duration than such periods.

Comments

1. Scope

This section, which deals with the mode of executing a sentence of solitary confinement and not with the legality of such a sentence,[6] has been enacted on medical grounds. Continuous solitary confinement, instead of reforming the prisoner, results in the deterioration rather than improvement of mental faculties. Therefore, it has been decided that it shall be at least regularly intermittent.

Where a prisoner was sentenced to imprisonment for one year and a day, including three months solitary confinement, the Madras High Court reduced the solitary confinement to 84 days.[7] Solitary confinement must never be imposed for the whole period of imprisonment, although not exceeding 14 days.[8]376

6 Fatta (1878) PR No 7.

7 1 Weir 35.

8 Nyan v Suk Mether 3 BLRA (Cr) 49 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter III Of Punishments/S. 75.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter III

Of Punishments

[9][S. 75.

Enhanced punishment for certain offences under Chapter XII or Chapter XVII after previous conviction.--

Whoever, having been convicted,--

(a) by a court in [10][India], of an offence punishable under Chapter XII or Chapter XVII of this Code with imprisonment of either description for a term of three years or upwards, [11][* * *]

[12][(b) * * *]

shall be guilty of any offence punishable under either of those Chapters with like imprisonment for the like term, shall be subject for every such subsequent offence to [13][imprisonment for life], or to imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years.]

Comments

1. Object and Principle underlying the Section

The object of the section being to provide for an additional sentence on subsequent conviction, recourse should not be had to the section if the punishment for the offence committed is itself sufficient, and even then the CrPC requires that the prisoner should be first convicted of that offence.[14] The sole object of proving a previous conviction is not to eke out weak evidence against the accused but to help 377the court to determine the measure of punishment.[15] Offenders committing economic offences have a tendency to repeal such offences. More stringent provisions of law are, therefore, required to deal with such offenders. This section is a step towards that direction. According to the social and economic conditions prevailing in the country at the time, when this Code was enacted the offences relating to coins and government stamps and offences against property dealt with in chs 12 or 17 respectively of this Code, were considered to be of a class for which a special provisions of enhanced punishment had been made in this section. Similar provisions have been incorporated in various special acts enacted thereafter to discourage the repetition of particular types of offences by habitual criminals.

Section 75 of the IPC provides enhanced punishment for persons who commit offences against property, coins and government stamps more than once. It thus attempts to deal with the problem of habitual offenders, as, in their case the previous sentence fails in its object of deterring them from committing the crime. The law, as a measure of last resort, concentrates on protecting the society from such offenders by sending them to jail for a longer term than before. Based on this policy of protecting the public, this section enhances the powers of the courts for awarding sentence on the second and subsequent conviction for certain specified category of cases. The principle, underlying this section, therefore, is that, if the previous sentence, borne by the accused, had no effect on him, a more severe sentence should be awarded. But it does not follow, as a rigid and inflexible rule, that in all cases of previous convictions, an enhanced sentence has to be awarded.[16] While the sentences, imposed on criminals should be adequate to the offence, they should not be excessive. The circumstances of each case have to be taken into account in inflicting punishment.[17]

2. Scope

Previous convictions are not relevant except in cases where the application of this section is sought by the prosecution.[18] Ordinarily, the fact of previous convictions is not to be taken into account either in judging the guilt or in fixing the punishment. This section is an exception to this general rule. It empowers the court to inflict a greater measure of punishment for the repetition of the crime.[19] It provides that persons previously convicted of certain offences will be liable to higher punishment than what they otherwise would be. The section only provides for a special maximum sentence. It does not provide for a minimum. It is not necessary in every case that in assessing the punishment, the previous conviction should be taken into consideration.[20] The section only enables a court to pass a sentence commensurate with the nature of the offence on the accused person; it does not empower it to pass a sentence disproportionate to the nature of the actual offence.[21] The proper application 378of this section is to cases where it is intended to pass sentences more severe than those provided in the IPC for the particular offences charged. But that does not involve a complete exclusion from consideration of previous convictions in cases where it is not intended or possible to exceed the limit fixed by the IPC . Proof of a previous conviction in cases not contemplated by the section may be adduced provided the previous conviction is relevant under the Evidence Act. There is no reason why previous conviction should not be used by the court in exercising its discretion in regard to the quantum of the sentence even in cases where it is not intended or possible to exceed the limits fixed by the IPC .[22]

3. Consideration for Applicability

This section applies in cases of convictions prior to the conviction of the offence for the enhanced punishment of which it is to be invoked.[23] The section does not apply to an accused who commits a second offence after the date of the first offence, but before his conviction for the latter.[24] The section is not to be applied mechanically in a case where the previous convictions for petty offences are 10 years old and the subsequent one is also for a very similar offence. The interval of time that may have since elapsed, the age and character of the accused during this interval and the necessity of enhanced sentence should all be considered.

Section 75 does not state that the accused should have been sentenced with imprisonment of either description for period of three years or upwards; it only lays down that the accused should be convicted for an offence, punishable, under ch 17, with imprisonment of either description for a period of three years or upwards. Thus, it is not necessary that the accused should have been sentenced previously for a term of three years or upwards; the only requirement is that he should be convicted of an offence punishable with imprisonment of either description for a term of three years or upwards.[25]

The previous offence must have been committed since the IPC came into force,[26] and the subsequent offence since the offender's release from prison.[27] The section cannot be applied where the offences were committed at one and the same time.[28] The fact, date, and place of the previous conviction should be entered in the charge.[29]

Section 39 of the Madras Children's Act does not prohibit the taking into account of previous convictions under s 75, IPC .[30]379

Section Not to be Applied to Enhance Heinousness of Petty Offences

The section is not to be applied mechanically to enhance enormously the heinousness of petty offences.[31] To justify enhanced punishment under s 75, the conviction must be of offences punishable under the IPC and committed after it came into force, and as such the section is not retrospective.[32] It does not impose any disqualification on persons with previous convictions. It only makes permissible a sentence which exceeds the normal sentence for an offence. The section applies only when a person is sought to be punished with imprisonment exceeding the maximum imprisonment provided for the offence. So long as the maximum punishment provided for the offence is not to be exceeded there is no need to resort to its provisions, and any reference to them would be irrelevant.[33] Even if there is no limitation against the applicability of the section, still, as a matter of judicial discretion, the court is loathe to take up an old conviction only for the purpose of awarding enhanced sentence.[34] One previous conviction does not reasonably mean that the convict is a habitual criminal, though a subsequent offence, shortly upon release from jail, is certainly a matter which enables the trial court to impose a more severe sentence than would be the case if there has been no other conviction.[35] Although the fact of previous conviction is an element in determining the sentence, regard should be had in assessing the same to the facts of the case, the gravity of the offence and the circumstances in which it was committed, and the mere circumstances that there were previous convictions should not result in the infliction of a sentence which is out of proportion to the merits of the main case.[36]

No Separate Offence is Created

No separate offence is created hereby, the section merely imposes a liability to enhance punishment.[37]

Three Essentials

Three things are necessary to bring an offence within the terms of this section:

(i) The offence must be one under either ch 12 or 17 of this Code.380
(i) The previous conviction must have been for an offence therein punishable with imprisonment for not less than three years.
(iii) The subsequent offence must also be so punishable.[38]

4. Provisions of the Section are only Permissive and not Obligatory

The age and antecedents of the offender, the number of previous convictions earned by him as also the interval during which the same were earned, the nature and gravity of the offence for which the punishment is to be awarded and the circumstances in which the same was committed are some of the factors which need to be taken into consideration while determining the quantum of punishment. Simply because the provisions of s 75 of the IPC are attracted in a particular case, is no ground for inflicting the extreme punishment provided in that section. The provisions of this section are only permissive and not obligatory. They do confer jurisdiction on the courts to inflict enhanced punishment but that jurisdiction is to be exercised in a judicial manner after taking into consideration the circumstances and the factors narrated above.[39]

It may be an excellent thumb rule, but in imposing sentences such a rule cannot be safely followed in the interests of the proper administration of criminal justice. While the sentences imposed on criminals should be adequate to the offence, there is every reason why they should not be excessive. Apart from the injustice to the offender which an excessive sentence entails, such a sentence tends to undermine public confidence in the administration of criminal justice. The circumstances of each case should therefore, be taken into account in inflicting punishment.[40]

5. Requirement of Enhanced Punishment--Limitation of Court

Enhanced punishment' must be taken to mean not merely more and above the sentence, provided for a particular offence, but also a deterrent sentence even within the range of the maximum sentence that the court is competent to impose.[41] It is only when an offender, after having been punished with imprisonment for a crime under ch 12 or 17, again, after his release from prison, commits a crime of a similar description or a crime punishable under the same chapter, he would be liable, under this section, to enhanced punishment on the ground that the sentence already borne has had no effect in preventing a repetition of his crime and has therefore, been insufficient as warning.[42] The previous conviction must be in operation on the date of the subsequent conviction. If the previous conviction is, in the meanwhile, set aside, the accused would not be liable to enhanced sentence because, on the date of the subsequent judgment, it cannot be said that the accused has a previous conviction.[43]

6. 'Having been Convicted'--Conviction must be under Penal Code

This section declares that if any person having been convicted of any offence punishable under certain parts (viz, ch 12 or 17) of the IPC, is again guilty of any offence punishable under these parts of the Code, he shall for every such subsequent 381offence be liable to the penalties therein declared. The section then prescribes enhanced punishment for the particular offences committed after a previous conviction for any one of such offences and not merely on a second conviction.[44] The word 'offence' in this section means anything punishable under the IPC or under any special or local law.[45] The section cannot be invoked where the offenders were committed at one and the same time.[46] It is only when an offender, after having been punished with imprisonment for a crime under ch 17, again, after his release from prison, commits a crime of a similar description or a crime punishable under the same chapter, he would be liable under this section to enhanced punishment on the ground that the sentence already borne has had no effect in preventing a repetition of his crime and has been, therefore, insufficient as a warning. The previous conviction must be in operation on the date of the subsequent conviction. If the previous conviction is in the meantime, set aside the accused would not be liable to an enhanced sentence, because on the date of judgment it cannot be said that the accused has a previous conviction.[47] Where the prisoner's conviction had taken place a very short time before, and where no imprisonment under it has yet been undergone, and no time has been given for reformation, it cannot be said that a prisoner has had any opportunity of showing what the effect of the first sentence would have been upon him, and it would not be just to punish him as though he were an incorrigible offender where no comparatively light punishment could wear from evil causes.[48] An order under s 110 of the CrPC, cannot be correctly described as a conviction and as such it cannot be used in order to bring an offender within the ambit of this section.[49]

7. 'By a Court in India'

The previous conviction must be by a court in India.[50] A conviction in a foreign state cannot be taken into consideration for awarding enhanced sentence under this section.[51] Since a conviction outside India cannot be made the basis of any charge under this section, evidence of these convictions can be admissible only as evidence of bad character and there is no provision of law which compels a magistrate to consider the antecedents of the accused before determining the sentence to be imposed upon him.[52]

Previous Conviction in a Foreign State

Where the accused was previously convicted in a Feudatory State, under a law identical in terms with the IPC, such previous conviction might be taken into account by a magistrate in India when awarding punishment under the IPC . But the sentence passed must not exceed the ordinary limits imposed by the particular section of the IPC under which the accused is convicted, and by s 32 or (new s 29) or s 34 (no 382corresponding section in the CrPC, as the case may be. In such a case, it would be illegal to apply this section or s 4 of the Whipping Act 1864 (now repealed) or s 565 (now s 356) of the CrPC .[53]

8. Conviction by Court-martial

The word 'punishable' used in this section should be read as if it was followed by the words 'by a court administering the Indian Penal Code '. For the purpose of this section, it has been held that previous conviction before a court-martial cannot be taken into consideration with a view to enhancement of punishment under this section, even if the conviction was in respect of an offence falling under ch XII or XVII of the Code.[54]

Previous Conviction under Local Laws

It has been held that a conviction under a local law like the Frontier Crimes Regulation does not come under the purview of this section and its provisions cannot be applied with reference to such a conviction.[55]

Convictions under Other Laws

This section deals only with previous convictions under two specified chapters (chs 12 and 17) of the Code and a conviction under some other law cannot attract its operation.[56]

9. Previous Conviction must be for Offences under Chapter XII or XVII

This section declares that if any person having been convicted of any offence punishable under certain parts, viz, ch XII, which deals with offences relating to coin and government stamps (ss 230 - 63A) and ch XVII, which deals with offences against property (ss 378 - 462) of the IPC, shall be guilty of any offence punishable under these parts of the Code, he shall for every such subsequent offence be liable to the penalties therein declared. The section then prescribes enhanced punishment for particular offences committed after conviction of any one of such offences and not merely on a second conviction.[57] The section is not applicable to offences comprised in other chapters, for instance, s 369,[58] or s 511 .[59] It refers only to offences committed and made punishable, under ch XII or XVII of the Code, with imprisonment for three years or upwards. Penal statutes must be strictly construed and it would not be right 383to include ch XXIII (which deals with attempts to commit offences) within the purview of this section when that section only mentions other chapters of the Code, and not the one relating to attempts.[60] But though this section does not apply to an offence punishable under s 511 of the IPC, the fact that the accused had previous convictions can be taken into account and a much higher sentence imposed than would be proper if there had been no previous conviction.[61] The court can take the previous convictions into consideration when considering the sentence to be imposed under the ordinary provisions of the law even where this section is not applicable.[62]

10. Summary Trial

Trial in a summary way though not illegal, is not an appropriate procedure, when s 75 is to be applied. In Emperor v Shiv Bux Amro ,[63] Davis CJ, observed:

> So far as the application of section 260 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is concerned, we are of the opinion that while the circumstances of a case where section 75, Penal Code, can be applied make it desirable that the offence should not be tried in a summary way and that in such cases, if the trial has started in a summary way the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 260Criminal Procedure Code, should be followed, nevertheless we do not think it can be said that a trial in which a charge under section 75, Penal Code, could be framed is necessarily bad in law because the offence is tried summarily. It is, therefore, clear that trial in a summary way is not an appropriate procedure when section 75,Penal Code, is to be applied. Nor, indeed would it appear an appropriate procedure when section 75Penal Code, is not to be applied but previous convictions are to be taken into account in determining what punishment within his ordinary powers a magistrate should impose because of the limited nature of the sentence which may be passed under section 262 of the Criminal Procedure Code .

11. Magistrate's Duties and Powers

It is not obligatory on the magistrate to commit the accused to sessions in all cases governed by s 75 and under all circumstances without any regard to the nature and the gravity of the offence. In fact, s 324 of the CrPC, directs him to send the accused for trial to the chief judicial magistrate or commit him to sessions only if he himself is not competent to try the case. Whenever he feels and is of opinion that he can pass an adequate sentence if the accused is convicted, there is no need to send the accused to the chief judicial magistrate or commit him to session. In such cases the magistrate is duty bound to try the case himself and there is no other option with him.384

The Andhra Pradesh and Madras Criminal Rules of practice require that the magistrate and judges should append to their judgments a list of previous convictions.[64]

Facts about previous convictions have to be mentioned in the charge only when it is intended to punish the accused with imprisonment exceeding the maximum punishment provided for the offence, by invoking the provisions of this section. If the magistrate or sessions judge trying the case does not want to use that provision, ie, does not intend to inflict punishment more than the maximum provided for the offence, he is not required to state the particulars of the previous convictions in the charge.[65]In order to support a charge of a previous conviction, there should be on the record a copy of judgment or extract from a judgment or some other documentary evidence of the fact of such previous conviction, as is required by s 91 of the Evidence Act or s 298 of the CrPC . Examination by a magistrate of the accused in respect of such previous conviction is without legal warrant or jurisdiction.

[66] The previous convictions must, for the purpose of this section be proved in accordance with law.[67]

12. Procedure for Enhanced Punishment

The provisions of ss 211(7), 248(3), 236, 324 and 356 of the CrPC should be read as supplementing the law set out in this section.[68] These statutory provisions show that three elements are necessary to prove a previous conviction against an accused:

(i) It must form the subject-matter of a charge.
(ii) It must be proved.
(iii) The enhanced sentence must be within the jurisdiction of the magistrate.

In Emperor v Dalip Singh ,[69] Blacker J, observed:

> When it is proposed to charge an accused person with previous convictions under section 75 no evidence on the point should be led before the charge is framed. The accused should not be questioned about his previous convictions when examined under section 342 (new section 313) as clearly that is only for the purpose of enabling him to explain matters appearing in evidence against him at this stage.

> When, however, the learned magistrate considers it fit to prove a charge under section 254 [new section 246(1)] in respect of the substantive offence, he should then have recourse to section 221(7) [new section 211(7)] and in that charge should include the previous convictions. He should then ask the accused to plead to that charge making it clear to him that he is pleading to the previous convictions. He should then ask the accused to plead to that charge making it clear to him that he is pleading to the previous conviction distinctly from the original offence. Then comes section 255A [new section 248(3)] and it seems to us that under section if the accused admits his previous conviction or convictions, they do not have to be proved separately and the magistrate 385can take them into consideration in convicting and sentencing him for the main offence. If, however, the accused does not admit his previous convictions, the magistrate has to proceed to judgment on the substantive charge and if that is a judgment of conviction, he has then to take evidence according to law, ie, under section 511 (new section 298) of the Criminal Procedure Code as to the previous convictions and then come to a separate finding upon them, after which he will pass the proper sentence under the substantive section read with section 75,Penal Code.

Section 310 (s 236) CrPC, modifies the procedure in the case of a trial before the court of session in respect of the previous convictions. The sessions judge should include the previous convictions in his charge under this section and get the accused to plead to them, and should then set them out in a tabular form at the end of his judgment.[70] But this procedure has to be followed only where the provisions of this section are brought into action. They are not to be brought into action where the sentence intended to be awarded is within the competence of the court to award under the ordinary provisions of the Code, and in such a case the fact that the previous convictions were not stated in the charge does not render the conviction illegal.[71]

13. Form of Charge

Refer to Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, Sch II Form No 32 (iii), for the form of charge for theft after previous conviction. In all other cases the charges may be in the following form:

> I (name and office of the Magistrate/Judge) do hereby charge you (name of accused person) as follows:

That you, on or about the.....day of....., at.....committed.....and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section..... (or section.....where charge is in the alternative) of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And you the said (name of accused) stand further charged that you, before the committing of the said offence, had been convicted on the .....day of.....of an offence punishable under Chapter XII (or Chapter XVII) of the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment for a term of.....years, that is to say, the offence of....., which conviction is still in full force and effect, and that you are thereby liable to enhanced punishment under s 75 of the Indian Penal Code .

And I hereby direct that you be tried by this Court on the said charge.

Particulars of Charge

If a prisoner is to be tried under this section, a separate charge under that section must be framed and recorded.[72] There must be a specific charge under s 75, IPC .[73] In order to prove the previous convictions standing against an accused person for the purpose of this section, it is necessary that the provisions of law as contained in s 298 of the CrPC be observed. Before a charge can be framed there must be some evidence of the previous convictions on the record to justify their inclusion in the charge.[74] It is not correct to say that additional charge under s 75, IPC, should be 386framed after recording conviction of the accused. The additional charge under s 75, IPC, has to be framed with the main charge. What is required is that evidence in proof of previous conviction be had only after a judgment recording conviction is pronounced.[75]

Section 211(7) of the CrPC provides that if it is intended to prove a previous conviction for the purpose of awarding enhanced punishment the fact, date and place of the previous conviction should be stated in the charge.[76] If such a statement is omitted, the court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.[77] The effect of ss 211(7) and 248(3) of the CrPC read together is that the accused is to be charged with the previous convictions at the same time when he is charged with the subsequent offence, and if he is found guilty of that offence, he will be tried on the charge of previous convictions, by reason which he is liable to enhanced punishment.[78] A mere allegation that at the time when the prisoner committed the offence (no offence whatever being mentioned in the charge), he has been previously convicted of offences punishable under the IPC,[79] or that he 'is an old offender', does not satisfy the requirements of this section, as that does not bring home to the accused person the particular offence or class of offences which renders him liable to a more severe sentence than would otherwise be imposed.

A previous conviction which it is intended to prove for the purpose of affecting the punishment should be entered in the charge and the accused should be called on to plead thereto. But where one accused does not plead guilty to the charge the previous convictions must be proved in accordance with law.[80] His mere admission that he had been to jail once is insufficient to show that he pleaded guilty to a previous conviction.[81] It has, however, been held that a mere omission to set out the previous convictions in the charge is no ground for interfering with the sentence unless it has caused a failure of justice.[82] An order under s 356 is not such a punishment as is meant by the words in s 211(7) .[83]

14. Effect of Omission to State Previous Conviction

The Madhya Pradesh High Court has held that a formal charge under s 75, IPC, has to be framed only when the trying magistrate feels that he himself is incompetent to award adequate sentence which goes beyond the maximum sentence awardable under the section. In that event, he has to commit the accused to the court competent to pass the adequate sentence. If, on the other hand the magistrate finds that he himself is competent to pass the adequate sentence and that sentence does not exceed the maximum awardable under the section the recourse to frame a charge under s 75, IPC, is not necessary.[84] Mere omission to set out the previous conviction is not 387sufficient reason for interfering in appeal or revision with the sentence passed unless there has been a failure of justice caused by such omission.[85]

But where the previous conviction did not form part of the charge, the enhanced sentence was set aside and the sessions judge was directed to re-open the trial, with the same set of jurors, on that charge giving the accused an opportunity of making a fresh defence to it.[86]

In Empress v Rughib Ali ,[87] the accused was held not prejudiced by the omission as he was then actually undergoing the sentence imposed on the previous conviction.[88]

Sub-section (7) of s 211 of the CrPC, however, provides that if it is intended to prove previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment for the subsequent offence, the fact, date and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge, and if such statement is omitted, the court may add it at any time before the sentence is passed. The repealed Code of 1898 also contained a similar provision in s 221(7) and as such the case-law under the old Code will still hold good.

15. Sentence on Charge of Previous Conviction not to be Separate

Where previous conviction is proved for the purpose of this section, the prisoner cannot be dealt with under s 31, CrPC, as if he had been convicted of two offences.[89]

16. Charge of Previous Conviction may be Added at any Time before Sentence

The previous conviction, if not stated in the charge, cannot be used for the purpose of enhancing the punishment. If it is omitted, it may be added at any time before the sentence is passed, and not afterwards.[90]

Proof of Previous Convictions

Section 211 (7) of the CrPC lays down that 'the fact, date and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge', but it is not thereby intended that the principles governing the trial of an accused person on a charge under this section should differ from the principles governing the trial of an accused person on a charge under this section should differ from the principles governing the trial of an accused person on any other charge. Rather the contrary is the case. Consequently, before the accused is committed on a charge under this section, there should be on record, before committal, evidence, on which, if unrebutted, he could be convicted. He cannot properly be convicted on a mere conviction slip or a mere record of his previous crimes kept by the authorities on a mere history-sheet as it may be called. Such a conviction slip greatly facilitates proof, but is not proof itself of previous convictions, nor can an accused be convicted on its basis without further proof.[91] A previous conviction may be charged and proved in the ordinary manner in a case in which the magistrate, while not thinking it necessary that increased punishment 388should be imposed, nevertheless desires to obtain information as to the accused's antecedents for the purpose of determining the duration of the sentence.[92] In order to determine the proper sentence, it is necessary for the magistrate to know all the previous convictions of the accused.[93] It is primarily the duty of the prosecutor to see that matters, such as the existence of previous convictions, are brought definitely to the notice of the court at the proper time.[94] Records of previous conviction should not be put in until the prisoner has been convicted in the case then under trial. They are of use only in determining the amount of punishment to be inflicted, and are no evidence in the case.[95] To warrant a sentence awarding additional punishment under s 75 of the IPC as on a second conviction, the evidence that there was a previous conviction against the accused under the IPC must be clear and precise.[96]Section 298 of the CrPC runs as follows:

> S. 298 .--Previous conviction or acquittal how proved.--In any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code a previous conviction or acquittal may be proved, in addition to any other mode provided by any law for the time being in force,-
>
> (a) by an extract certified under the hand of the officer having the custody of the records of the Court in which such conviction or acquittal was held, to be a copy of the sentence or order, or
>
> (b) in case of a conviction either by a certificate signed by the officer-in-charge of the jail in which the punishment or any part thereof was undergone or by production of the warrant of commitment under which the punishment was suffered, > together with, in each of such cases, evidence as to the identity of the accused person with the person so convicted or acquitted.
>

The provisions of this section are extremely wide. It provides for modes proof 'in addition to any other mode provided by any law for the time being in force...'. The fact of previous conviction can be proved in the simple way the section provides, or in any other way any other law provides. The identity of the accused can be proved by a comparison by an expert of the thumb-impressions of the accused taken in court and the thumb-impression on the record. But the previous convictions, or the identity of the accused, cannot be proved by the mere production of a conviction slip which is nothing but the criminal record of the convicts kept by the authorities. Where the records of previous conviction have been destroyed they can be proved by secondary evidence under s 65(c), Evidence Act.[97] Previous convictions must be proved strictly and in accordance with law. Unless they are so proved no court can properly take such previous convictions into consideration against an accused person.[98]

Under s 298 of the CrPC a certified copy of the record of the court or of the sentence or order is sufficient; but a kaifiyat (note) from the record office is not sufficient to prove a former conviction. There should be sworn testimony to the fact, 389and also to the identification of the prisoner with the person previously convicted.[1] To sum up, the proper way to prove the previous conviction is either: (a) by an extract certified under the hand of the officer in whose custody are the records of the court which convicted; or (b) by a certificate under the hand of the officer in charge of the jail in which the punishment or any part thereof was undergone or else by production of the actual warrant of commitment under which the punishment was suffered. In every case there must be evidence as to the identity of the accused person with the person so convicted.[2]

17. Section 54, Evidence Act does not Bar Proof of Previous Convictions

The imposing of sentence is, within the wide limits allowed by the law, a matter of discretion; it is not a matter of proof. That is, it is a matter within the sphere, not of evidence, but of penology. Section 54, Evidence Act, is a part of the law of evidence, not a part of the penal law. It regulates what is relevant for the purpose of proof at the inquiry or trial, not what is relevant for the purpose of deciding whether a long or a short sentence should be imposed. That section is, therefore, no bar to proof of previous convictions for the purposes of enhanced punishment under s 75 of the IPC .[3]

18. Jurisdiction-- Section 29 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1973 and Section 75 of the Indian Penal Code 1860

Punishment in Excess of his Powers Cannot be Awarded by the Magistrate

Section 75, IPC, does not authorise a magistrate to pass a sentence in excess of his power under s 29, CrPC .[4] The difference should be noted between a case of previous convictions where under s 75, IPC, enhanced punishment is to be imposed and a case, where previous convictions are only to be taken into account for the purpose of necessary punishment imposed by a magistrate within the limits of the maximum punishment with which the offence is ordinarily punishable.[5]

19. Deserving Cases may be Committed to the Court of Session

Enhanced punishment, within the view of this section is a sentence of more than three years imprisonment or imprisonment for life for offence ordinarily punishable under ch 12 or 17, IPC, with imprisonment of either description for a term of three years or upwards, after previous conviction of an offence similarly punishable. It is obvious that no magistrate under the magisterial powers conferred by s 29, CrPC, can pass a sentence enhanced under this section. But magistrates who pass a severe sentence within their magisterial powers under this section because of a previous conviction, frequently err in citing s 75, IPC, as authority for passing a sentence within their powers under s 29, CrPC .[6] Where an offence appears to be deserving of a 390greater punishment than the magistrate trying it can award, the best course for him to adopt is to commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session.[7]

20. Automatic Enhanced Punishment not Allowed

The imposing of enhanced sentence is, within the wide limits allowed by the law, a matter of discretion.[8] But this section and s 211 of the CrPC, were not intended for the purpose of automatically enhancing by a kind of geometrical progression the sentence to be passed after a previous conviction. The reason for passing a mere severe sentence in the case of a criminal with a previous conviction is primarily to protect society from the predations and offences committed by a habitual rogue, who has shown no signs of repentance. But there are a large number of men who commit offences more than once but do not seek to live by crime. They stand on a different footing from the professional criminal. On the other hand, a man may have few, if any, previous convictions and may yet be a dangerous criminal whose powers of mischief need curtailment by a long sentence. A magistrate or judge should make some inquiry into the repute and antecedent behaviour of men whom he proposes to sentence severely, and regard should be had to their career and to the term that has elapsed between the convictions passed upon them.[9] Although the fact of previous convictions is an element in determining the sentence, essential regard should be had to the facts of the case, the gravity of the offence, and the circumstances in which it was committed, in assessing the punishment, and the mere circumstances that there were previous conviction should not result in the infliction of a sentence that is far out of proportion to the merits of the main case.[10]

21. A mere Conviction not Sufficient for Heavy Punishment

The mere fact that a man has been convicted many times is not in itself sufficient reason for passing a heavy sentence on him for an offence which is trivial in itself.[11] When an accused person has had a certain number of previous convictions against him, it is not in accordance with enlightened ideas of the administration of criminal justice to sentence him to imprisonment for life for the commission of a subsequent offence, which is trivial. The previous record of the prisoner is of course an element which the court should take into consideration in substantially increasing the punishment for a subsequent offence, but when the subsequent offence is in itself of a trivial nature, this section should not be applied for the purpose of imposing a sentence of imprisonment for life.[12] There is no minimum imprisonment prescribed for a previous convict. A previous convict can be given imprisonment prescribed for a term of one year or less.[13] A sessions judge cannot, under this section or otherwise, by amalgamating a sentence, which he is competent to pass upon a prisoner, with a 391sentence under which such prisoner is already undergoing imprisonment, and commuting the latter sentence, condemn such prisoner to a larger period of imprisonment than he is liable to suffer for the crime of which he has last been convicted.[14]

22. Effect of Section on Compoundable Offences

Where an offence is compoundable, permission under s 320 of the CrPC to compound the offence cannot be refused on the ground that the accused is a previous convict and is liable to enhanced punishment under s 75, IPC . Section 75 is invoked for enhancement of the sentence only at the time when the sentence is to be imposed. Section 75 does not give a different colour to the offence.[15]392

9 Substituted by Act 3 of 1910, s 2, for the original section.

10 The words 'British India' have successively been substituted by the AO 1948, the AO 1950 and Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule to read as above.

11 The word 'or' at the end of cl (a) and cl (b) omitted by Act 3 of 1951, s 3 and Schedule.

12 Ibid.

13 Substituted by Act 26 of 1955, s 117 and Schedule for 'transportation for life' (wef 1-1-1956).

14 Sheikh Chamman v Emperor AIR 1920 Pat 526, 21 Cr LJ 113, 54 IC 623, 1 PLT 11 ; Sheo Saran Tato v Emperor 9 ILR Cal 877 .

15 Queen-Empress v Gulab (1894) Ratanlal Un Cr C 688, 6 MHCR (App) 2, 1 Weir 36, p 37 .

16 Public Prosecutor v Palapati Ramakrishnaiah AIR 1955 Andh Pra 190, 56 Cr LJ 1235 .

17 Re *Abdul Gani Sahib*AIR 1937 Mad 231, 37 Cr LJ 1150 ; Re Nattayan(1970) Mad LJ 833 (Cr), (1970) 2 Mad LJ 668; Re *Munuswamy*AIR 1947 Mad 836(1), (1947) 1 Mad LJ 336 .

18 Re *Kattima Bai*1955 NUC 932, (1954) Mad WN 318, (1954) 2 Mad LJ 190.

19 Re Narayana Panicker(1968) Cr LJ 410, p 411, (1967) Ker LT 298.

20 Haramohan Deb Nath v Jaha Baksha Patwari AIR 1943 Cal 25, p 26, 44 Cr LJ 66, 203 IC 265, 46 Cal WN 846 ; State of Kerala v Krishna Kutty (1966) Mad LJ 296, p 297 (Cr), (1965) Ker LJ 841 ; Re Narayana Panicker(1967) KLT 298, (1968) Cr LJ 410.

21 Sheikh Chamman v Emperor AIR 1920 Pat 526, p 527, 54 IC 623, 1 PLT 11, 21 Cr LJ 113 ; Tato v Empress 9 ILR Cal 877 ; Re Narayana Panicker(1967) KLT 298, (1968) Cr LJ 410.

22 Subhan Saheb v Emperor AIR 1929 Mad 306, p 307, 56 Mad LJ 595, 52 ILR Mad 358, (1929) Mad WN 393, 115 IC 483, 30 Cr LJ 471 ; Emperor v Ismail Ali Bhai AIR 1914 Bom 216, 39 ILR Bom 326, 26 IC 995, 16 Bom LR 934 .

23 Emperor v Chuttal Imambaksh AIR 1941 Sind 207 .

24 Sayed Abdul Sayid Imam v Emperor AIR 1926 Bom 305, 27 Cr LJ 726 ; R v Sakya Valad Kamiji (1868) 5 BMC (Cr) 38 .

25 Paras alias Paras Ram v State of Rajasthan 1984 Cr LR 262 (Raj) .

26 R v Hurpaul 4 WR (Cr) 9 ; R v Moluck 3 WR (Cr) 17 ; R v Kushya 4 Bom HC (Cr) 11; Budhun v R 10 CLR 392 .

27 R v Sakya 5 Bom HCR 36 (Cr) ; R v Megha 1 ILR All 637 .

28 Jhoomuck Chamar v Emperor 6 WR 90 (Cr) .

29 Re Abbulu 11 Cr LJ 217, 7 Mad LT 77; Dungri v Emperor 12 Cr LJ 233 .

30 Public Prosecutor v Rajam Ammal AIR 1942 Mad 674, 43 Cr LJ 924 .

31 Kasim Ali v Emperor 7 Cr LJ 293 ; Jahavahir Singh v Emperor AIR 1914 Lah 476, 4 PLR 1914, 22 IC 759, 15 Cr LJ 183 ; Re Shamjee Nashyo(1878) 1 CLR 481; Re Guhi Jana 12 Cal WN 83; Dayal Ram v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 768, 30 Cr LJ 1082 ; Maulu v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 787, 121 IC 419, 11 ILR Lah 115, 31 PLR 217, 31 Cr LJ 264 ; R v Olvier Tayler 18 Cr App Rep 143; Harnam Das 31 PLR 333; Ujagar Singh v Emperor AIR 1933 Lah 147, 145 IC 1002, 34 PLR 903, 34 Cr LJ 1153 .

32 Queen v Moluck Chand Khalifa 3 WR 17 ; Queen v Harpaul 4 WR 9 ; Queen v Puban 5 WR 66 (Cr) ; R v Kushiya 4 Bom HCR 11 .

33 Mahommad v State (1957) Cr LJ 275, p 276, (1956) All LJ 611 ; State v TM Picha AIR 1970 Ker 251 ((252)) ; Re *Nattayan*1970 LW (Cr) 194, (1970) 2 Mad LJ 668.

34 Nga Lu Gyi v Queen-Empress (1884) SJLB 291 ; Isar Singh v Emperor AIR 1926 Lah 617, 27 Cr LJ 944, 96 IC 400 ; Alladin 20 PLR 59; (Sami) Karuppa Tevan v Emperor AIR 1929 Mad 841(2), 57 Mad LJ 743, 53 ILR Mad 80 ; Murido v Emperor AIR 1930 Sind 58, 31 Cr LJ 763, 125 IC 46 ; Ishar Singh v Shama Dusudh AIR 1937 Pat 131, 17 PLT 627, 1936 PWN 561, 167 IC 881, 38 Cr LJ 412 ; Jumo Idris v Emperor AIR 1934 Sind 195, 28 Sind LR 199, 153 IC 316 ; Kunj Lal v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 278, 30 PLR 52, 30 Cr LJ 376, 114 IC 719 ; Khusdil v Emperor AIR 1927 Lah 647(1), 28 Cr LJ 160, 29 IC 416 .

35 Sabha Singh v Crown AIR 1926 Lah 336, p 337 .

36 Re *Munuswamy*AIR 1947 Mad 386(1) .

37 4 Mad HCR App III, 1 Weir 87; State v TM Picha AIR 1970 Ker 251, (1970) Cr LJ 1498 .

38 1 Weir 38; Chandaria v Emperor 12 Cr LJ 439 .

39 Daulat Singh v State of Himachal Pradesh (1981) Cr LJ 1347 (HP), (1981) Cr LT 147 (HP) ; Re *Munuswamy*AIR 1947 Mad 386(1) .

40 Re *Abdul Gani Sahib*AIR 1937 Mad 231, 37 Cr LJ 1150, 59 ILR Mad 995, 165 IC 387, 1936 Mad WN 985 (FB) ; followed in Public Prosecutor, Andhra Pradesh v Palapati Rama Krishnaiah AIR 1955 Andh Pra 190 ; Re *Munuswamy*AIR 1947 Mad 386(1) .

41 Re Nattayam(1970) LW (Cr) 194, (1970) Mad LJ 833 (Cr).

42 Queen v Pubon 6 WR (Cr) 66, p 67 .

43 Dilip Kumar Sharma v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) Cr LR 624 (SC), AIR 1976 SC 133 .

44 Empress of India v Magha 1 ILR All 637 ; Sayad Abdul Sayad Iman v Emperor AIR 1926 Bom 305, 27 Cr LJ 726, 95 IC 54, 28 Bom LR 484 ; R v Sakya Vala Kanji (1868) 5 BHC (Cr) 36 ; Emperor v Chuttal Imambaksh AIR 1941 Sind 207, 43 Cr LJ 122, 197 IC 135, (1941) ILR Ker 450 .

45 Aman(1875) 1 Weir 39.

46 Jhoomuck Chamar v Emperor 6 WR (Cr) 90 .

47 Dilip Kumar Sharma v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) Cr LR 624 (SC), AIR 1976 SC 133 .

48 Queen v Puban 6 WR 66, p 67 .

49 Jumo Idris v Emperor AIR 1934 Sind 195, p 196 ; Po So v Emperor AIR 1918 LB 121 .

50 Crown Prosecutor v Muthuswamy AIR 1935 Mad 198, 36 Cr LJ 793, 58 ILR Mad 707, 155 IC 438, 68 Mad LJ 176, 41 Mad LW 184, (1934) Mad WN 1355 ; Emperor v TBAV John AIR 1933 Pesh 6, 141 IC 445 .

51 Bahawal v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 527, 20 IC 1007 .

52 Crown Prosecutor v Muthuswamy AIR 1935 Mad 198 .

53 Ghasia Teli v Emperor 1 Nag LR 137 ; Empress v Lal Singh 7 CPBR 24 ; Empress v Methia 4 PR 1881 .

54 Emperor v (Private) TBAW Johnson AIR 1933 Pesh 6, p 9 .

55 King-Emperor v Khan Mahommad 1 Cr LJ 1061 .

56 Emperor v Chottan Hashmat Ali AIR 1935 Bom 188, p 189, 37 Bom LR 182, 59 ILR Bom 514, 36 Cr LJ 1376, 158 IC 378 ; Queen v Muluck Chand Khalifa 3 WR 17 ; Queen v Harpaul 4 WR 9 ; Emperor v (Private) TBAW Johnson AIR 1933 Pesh 6 ;

Contra*Mazar Attamahommad v Emperor* AIR 1917 Sind 17, 42 IC 141, 11 Sind LR 46, 18 Cr LJ 909 .

57 Empress of India v Megha 1 ILR All 637 ; Sayad Abdul v Emperor AIR 1926 Bom 305, 27 Cr LJ 726 ; Paras alias Paras Ram v State of Rajasthan 1984 Cr LR 262 (Raj) .

58 Fathu alias Badra v Crown AIR 1923 Lah 286(1), 75 IC 368, 6 Lah LJ 110, 29 Cr LJ 944 .

59 Brij Behari Lal v Emperor AIR 1926 All 44, 23 All LJ 926, 25 Cr LJ 1204, 88 IC 724 ; King-Emperor v Banne AIR 1921 Oudh 156 ((1)), 22 Cr LJ 750, 64 IC 142 ; Queen-Empress v Bharosa 17 ILR All 123 ; Re *Duraiswamy Mudali*AIR 1942 Mad 521, 55 Mad LW 297, (1942) 1 Mad LJ 591, (1942) Mad WN 376, (1942) M Cr C 98 ; Emperor v Yasin AIR 1943 Sind 172, 210 IC 115 ; Emperor v Ramzan Ghulam Hyder AIR 1939 Sind 207, 188 IC 602, 40 Cr LJ 816, (1939) ILR Ker 676 ; Emperor v Kashia Antoo 10 Bom LR 26, 7 Cr LJ 32 ; Mahommad Hasim v Emperor 29 Cr LJ 4 ; Cheddi v Emperor AIR 1942 All 337, 43 Cr LJ 858 ; Re *Tamalampudi Veeranna*AIR 1942 Mad 440, 43 Cr LJ 715, 200 IC 740, (1942) Mad WN 297, 55 LW 229, (1942) 1 Mad LJ 455 .

60 Queen v Daru Haree 21 WR 35 ; Queen-Empress v Sricharan Bansi 14 ILR Cal 357 ; Empress v Nama Rahim 5 ILR Bom 140 ; Queen-Empress v Ajudhia 17 ILR All 120, (1895) 15 All WN 21 ; Empress of India v Ram Dayal 3 ILR All 773 ; Jhamman Lal v Emperor 5 Cr LJ 85, 12 PLR 1907, 15 PWR 1907 ; Emperor v Kashiya Antoo 7 Cr LJ 32, 10 Bom LR 26 ; King-Emperor v Banar AIR 1921 Oudh 156(1) ; Harnam 29 Cr LJ 4, 106 IC 340; Brij Behari Lal v Emperor AIR 1926 All 44 ; Chhedi v Emperor AIR 1942 All 337, 43 Cr LJ 858, 202 IC 569, (1942) All LJ 324 ; Nandan v Emperor AIR 1933 Lah 433(1), 34 Cr LJ 1181, 146 IC 20 ; Re *Tamalampudi Veeranna*AIR 1942 Mad 440 ; Chandria v Emperor 12 Cr LJ 439, 11 IC 623 .

61 Re *Duraiswamy Mudali*AIR 1942 Mad 521, 55 LW 297, (1942) Mad LJ 591, (1942) Mad WN 376, (1942) Mad LJ 98 .

62 Emperor v Yasin AIR 1943 Sind 172, 173 ; Emperor v Ramzan Ghulam Hyder AIR 1939 Sind 207, 40 Cr LJ 816, 183 IC 602, (1939) ILR Kant 676 ; Emperor v Kashia Antoo 10 Bom LR 26, 7 Cr LJ 32 ; Emperor v Shivbux Amro AIR 1941 Sind 107, (1941) ILR Kant 305, 194 IC 819, 42 Cr LJ 627 .

63 Emperor v Shiv Bux Amro AIR 1941 Sind 107, 108, (1941) ILR Kant 305, 194 IC 819, 42 Cr LJ 627 .

64 Re *Pasupuleti Venkata Subbayya*AIR 1943 Mad 418, (1956) ILR Ker 10, (1943) Mad WN 126, (1943) 1 Mad LJ 192, 207 IC 238, 44 Cr LJ 585 ; Public Prosecutor, Andhra Pradesh v Palapati Rama Krishnaiah AIR 1955 Andh Pra 190, (1956) Cr LJ 1235 .

65 Mahommad v State (1957) Cr LJ 275, p 276, (1956) All LJ 611 .

66 Yasin v King-Emperor 28 ILR Cal 689, 5 CWN 670 ; Basanta Kumar Ghattack v Queen-Empress 26 ILR Cal 49 ; Sardar Ahmad v Emperor AIR 1934 Lah 693, 35 PLR 697, [1934] AC 1008 ; State v Govinddas (1957) Cr LJ 448 .

67 State v Govinddas (1957) Cr LJ 448 .

68 For details read the commentary on these provisions in Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure.

69 Emperor v Dalip Singh AIR 1944 Lah 25, p 26, 45 Cr LJ 369, 211 IC 283, 25 PLR 414, (1943) ILR Lah 477 (FB) .

70 Re *Pasupuuleti Venkata Subbayya*AIR 1943 Mad 418, 419, 56 LW 107, 1943 Mad WN 126, (1943) 1 Mad LJ 192, 207 IC 238, 44 Cr LJ 585 .

71 Abdul Karim v Emperor AIR 1933 Nag 315, 316, 146 IC 15, 29 Nag LR 309, 34 Cr LJ 1166, (1933) Cr C 1313 ; Mohammadi v State (1957) Cr LJ 275 .

72 Empress v Doraisami 9 ILR Mad 284 .

73 Re *Kanya*AIR 1960 AP 490, p 491, (1960) Cr LJ 1302 .

74 Said Ali v Emperor 35 Cr LJ 1387, p 1388, 151 Cr LJ 749 .

75 Khanmamad v State AIR 1953 Kutch 1 .

76 Y11 Cr LJ 217, 7 Mad LT 77, 5 IC 743; Empress v Haider 1883 All WN 32 ; Pokar Churamal v Emperor AIR 1941 Sind 173 .

77 Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, s 221(7) .

78 State of Bombay v Govind Masu AIR 1951 Bom 332 .

79 Queen v Sheikh Fakir 21 WR 39 .

80 State of Uttar Pradesh v Asha (1971) All Cr R 25 ; State v Govinddas (1957) Cr LJ 448, (1956) MBLJ 434 .

81 King-Emperor v Govind 4 Bom LR 177 ; State of Bombay v Govind Masu AIR 1951 Bom 332 .

82 Re Abbulu 11 Cr LJ 217(1).

83 Emperor v Jhagroo 14 Cr LJ 390 .

84 Prakash v State of Madhya Pradesh (1983) Jab LJ 448 (MP) .

85 Re Abbulu 11 Cr LJ 217.

86 Queen v Esan Chunder Dey 21 WR 40 .

87 Empress v Rughib Ali 1881 All WN 32 .

88 Ismail Alibhai v Emperor 39 ILR Bom 326 ; Re Subramanian 17 Cr LJ 288; Khanmamad v State AIR 1953 Kutch 1 .

89 Queen-Empress v Khalak 11 ILR All 393 .

90 Queen v Rajcoomar Bose 19 WR 41 .

91 Pokar Chuharmal v Emperor AIR 1941 Sind 173 .

92 High Court Proceedings, 3 February 1874, 2 Weir 265.

93 Re *Duraiswamy Madali*AIR 1942 Mad 521, 44 Cr LJ 501 .

94 Emperor v Prem AIR 1929 All 290, 30 Cr LJ 529, 115 IC 868, 1929 All LJ 39 .

95 Queen v Jehan Mullick 5 WR 67, p 68 ; Queen v Shiboo Mundle 3 WR 38 ; Kishto Behari Day 21 CLR 555; Behim Behari 13 CLR 110.

96 Queen v Naimuddi Sheikh alias Abbas Sheikh 14 WR 7 ; Emperor v Abdul Malik AIR 1929 Mad 744, 52 ILR Mad 795, 30 Mad LW 180, 57 Mad LJ 470, 121 IC 76, 2 MCR 201 .

97 Pokarmal Chuharmal v Emperor AIR 1941 Sind 173, p 174 .

98 Emperor v Sheikh Abdul AIR 1916 Cal 344, p 345, 17 Cr LJ 185, 20 CWN 725, 43 ILR Cal 1128, 33 IC 825 .

1 Queen v Sheikh Ramzan 15 WR 53 .

2 Feroze Khan v Emperor AIR 1928 Lah 107, 28 Cr LJ 961, 105 IC 673, 26 PLR 843 .

3 Ismail Alibhai v Emperor AIR 1914 Bom 216 ; Subhan Sahib v Emperor AIR 1929 Mad 306 ; Emperor v Nga Ba Shein AIR 1928 Rang 200, 29 Cr LJ 809 (FB) .

4 Ratanlal and Dhirajlal's the Indian Penal Code, p 638; Queen-Empress v Nga Tum Tha (1893-1900) LBR 78.

5 Pokar Chunharmal v Emperor AIR 1941 Sind 173, p 176 ; King-Emperor v Govind Sukharam 4 Bom LR 117 .

6 Emperor v David Narsu 1 Bom LR 548 .

7 Queen-Empress v Khalak 11 ILR All 393, p 394 .

8 Ismail Alibhai v Emperor AIR 1914 Bom 216, 39 ILR Bom 326, 26 IC 995, 16 Cr LJ 83, 16 Bom LR 934 .

9 Po Nyein v Emperor AIR 1918 LB 60, p 61, 145 IC 847, (1918) 19 Cr LJ 655 .

10 Re *Munuswamy*AIR 1947 Mad 386(1), (1947) 1 Mad LJ 336, 60 Mad LW 333, 1947 Mad WN 609, (1948) ILR Mad 359 .

11 R v Olivier Taylor 18 Cr App Rep 143; Maulu v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 787, 121 IC 419, (1929) ILR 11 Lah 115, 31 PLR 217, 31 Cr LJ 264 ; Harnam Das v Emperor AIR 1930 Pat 100(1), 31 PLR 333 ; Nga Po Hnyin v Emperor 12 Cr LJ 243(2), 10 IC 772, 4; Ujagar Singh v Emperor AIR 1933 Lah 147, 1933 Cr C 269, 145 IC 1002 34 Cr LJ 1153 ; Jawahir Singh v Emperor AIR Cr C 269 476, 4 PLR 1914.

12 Daya Ram v Emperor AIR WR 1914 (Cr), 15 Cr LJ 183.

13 Mohammadi v State 1957 Cr 30 PLR 530, 30 Cr LJ 1082.

14 R v Sakya 5 Bom HCR 36 .

15 Mohmmadi v State (1957) Cr LJ 275, p 276 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

Comments

1. Topical Introduction

The chapter has been framed in order to obviate the necessity of repeating in every penal clause a considerable number of limitations. Some limitations relate only to a single provision, or to a very small class of provision. Every such exception evidently ought to be appended to the rule which it is intended to modify. But there are other exceptions which are common to all the penal clauses of the Code, or to a great variety of clauses dispersed over many chapters. Such are the exceptions in favour of infants, lunatics, idiots, persons under the influence of delirium, the exceptions in favour of acts done by the direction of the law, of acts done in the exercise of the right of self-defense, of acts done by the consent of the party harmed by them. It would obviously be inconvenient to repeat these exceptions several times in every page. We have, therefore, placed them in a separate chapter, and we have provided that every definition of an offence, every penal provision, and every illustration of a definition or penal provision, shall be construed subject to the provisions contained in that chapter.[1]393

2. General Exceptions are Applicable to Special or Local Law

The 'General Exceptions' set out in this chapter apply to every offence, penal provision, and every illustration thereof contained in the Code.[2] The General Exceptions are applicable not only to offences under the Code, but also to offences under special or local laws.[3]

3. Two Parts of Substantive Criminal Law

The substantive code of criminal law, as distinguished from the adjective Code, or CrPC, is divided into two important parts, (i) the law relating to the definition of crimes, and (ii) the law regarding criminal responsibility. The second body of law is indeed the real foundation of the substantive Code, and its maxim is actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea, i.e., an act is not criminal unless the mind too is criminal.[4] In other words, in all crimes there is an outward physical element, and an inward mental element, which must be criminal and co-operate with the first.[5] This general rule is sometimes expressly displaced by statute when creating particular offences.[6] Thus, a mere criminal intention never amounts to an offence, with the possible exception of conspiracy, under Explanation to s 121A, IPC . For example, the mere possession of salt water with the intention of manufacturing salt is not an offence under the Salt Act.[7] A mere intention to dedicate a daughter to a goddess, and therefore to a life of prostitution, does not constitute an offence.[8]Moreover, the physical act involved must form a part of the offence itself and not merely an act of preparation.

Mere intention not followed by any act cannot constitute an offence, and an indirect preparation, which does not amount to an act which amounts to a commencement of the offence, does not constitute either a principal offence, or attempt of abetment of the same.[9]

4. Chapter IV Deals with Mental Element in Crimes

In every 'exception', the physical element in the prima facie crime, is present and the chapter deals with the general mental conditions of criminal responsibility by enumerating the circumstances under which either the mental element is for various reasons wanting, or, if present, is not criminal, the result being that some acts which prima facie appear to be crimes are not crimes. Some examination of the grounds for these important exceptions will now be made, and it will be seen that what at first appears as a heterogeneous class of exemptions are in reality founded on the application of principles which, once understood, will reveal clearly the rationale of the law comprised in this chapter.

5. Events of More Injurious Character and Connected with Human Agency become Subject of Criminal Investigation

Events of a more or less injurious character, which are of everyday occurrence in all communities, are either the consequences of human agency or not. If they are394 connected with human agency, then it is the duty of the state to enquire into them, directly or indirectly, should the event be one of very limited consequences, the state indirectly interferes by allowing the sufferer to apply for compensation from the author of the injury, and such is the rule in the case of civil injuries. Should the consequences of the event be more far-reaching, then the state will, as explained in the introduction, interfere directly, proceeding against the person in question i.e., the event becomes the subject of criminal investigation.

Human Agency not Physical Compulsion

To constitute human agency there must be conduct, positive or negative; a voluntary act or omission on the part of some human being. Thus, if one person's body is used by another as a means of inflicting an injury on a third person, the second person is the agent and not the first. It has been thought worthwhile to say that if A, by pushing B against C, pushes C over a precipice, A and not B is guilty of pushing C over a precipice.[10]

The victim of physical compulsion can never be the agent of the resulting consequence.

Human Agency not Pure Accident or Instinctive Acts

Pure accident does not constitute voluntary conduct and human agency. There are two species of accidents, viz, pure accident, i.e., when the act itself is accidental, being purely involuntary, and accidental consequences, i.e., the involuntary consequences of a voluntary act. 'A man who stumbles forward to save himself from falling acts mechanically, and cannot be called a voluntary agent in doing so',[11]e.g. A and B are on the brink of a precipice. A slips and clutches at B to save himself from falling. A saves himself, but B falls over the precipice and is killed, A's act is not voluntary but instinctive, and A is not criminally responsible for *B's*death. The other species of accident is, of course, much more common, as it may arise as a consequence of any act. Accident in this sense really means 'accidental consequences'. In this kind of accident, unlike pure accident, the act itself is voluntary; it is of the consequences that the agent is unconscious when he acts, and for which he is, therefore, held blameless.[12]

The Problem for Solution

Thus, an event occurs in connection with the conduct of an individual, and of sufficiently injurious character to call for the direct intervention of the state. On enquiry the individual in question is found to be A. The problem then is whether A is liable for event or not. The answer depends in the first place upon whether the event was a consequence of A's conduct or not.

6. First Step--Was the Event the Consequence of Given Conduct

In order that a given event should be a consequence of a given conduct, it is necessary that the first should be connected with the second in some appreciable degree, though in what degree is uncertain, being dependent upon the circumstances395 of each case. But the connection must, at any rate, be direct and distinct, and it must not be too remote. Thus, A repairs a gun with lead instead of proper material, in a dangerous manner. Being fired in an ordinary way, it explodes and kills B.[13]A substitutes poison for medicine, which is subsequently innocently given to B by C. B dies of poisoning.[14] In both these cases the death of B is a consequence of A's conduct, and A has, therefore, killed B. On the other hand, where A carries on the manufacture of fireworks in a house unlicensed for the purpose, and a rocket explodes and sets fire to the next house whereby B is killed,[15] or where A and B, road trustees under an Act of Parliament, neglect to procure the execution of necessary repairs to a road, and C passing along is killed,[16] in neither case, although the death of B is connected with A's conduct in the first case and the death of C is connected with A and B's conduct in the second case, can the death be said to be in consequence of his or their conduct, respectively, the connection being too remote. A practical test of whether an event is a consequence of given conduct is to be found in the answer to the question 'was it likely to happen'.[17]

7. Second Step--Can the Conduct be Justified or Excused

When it is shown that for the injurious event in question in consequence of A's conduct, he is prima facie liable for it, and his conduct, plus its more immediate consequences from his offence, it does not, however, necessarily follow that he is really liable, for his prima facie liability may be rebutted, and he may be freed from all blame, for certain special reasons. These reasons are comprised under the heads of justification or excuse.

(a) Where A is bound by law to act as he did (s 76).
(b) Where A is a judge acting judicially (s 77).
(c) Where A acted under a judgment or order of a court of justice (s 78).
(d) Where A is justified by law in acting as he did (s 79).
(e) Where A through a bona fide mistake believes his conduct to be justified under point nos (a), (b), (c) or (d) (ss 76 - 79).
(f) Choice of evils--Where A acts as he does in order to avoid other harm to person or property (s 81).
(g) Where the harm (other than death or grievous hurt) was inflicted by A with the consent of the sufferer (ss 87 - 92).
(h) Where the harm was caused by a communication made in good faith by A for the benefit of the sufferer (s 93).
(i) Where the harm was so slight that nobody of ordinary sense or temper would complain of it (s 95).
(j) Where an act is done in private defence of person or property (s 96 - 106).
(k) Where A acts under compulsion by threats (s 94).
(l) Where A, owing to insanity or intoxication, is incapable of knowing that his act is wrong or illegal (ss 84 - 86).396

Ground of Non-liability is Absence of Mens Rea

The plea of justification or excuse forms the first application of the doctrine of the maxim quoted above, and it amounts to this, that, though an injurious event is the consequence of an individual's conduct, yet that conduct is not criminal because the mind was innocent. Employing the wording of the maxim, the plea of innocence may be thus put. 'Actus' and 'mens' did combine, but the 'mens' was not 'rea', and therefore the 'actus' was not 'reum'.

8. Third Step--Was the Accused Unconscious at the Time

An injurious event having been shown to be a consequence of A's conduct, and A being unable to rebut his prima facie liability on the plea of either justification or excuse, his innocence may still be established on the ground of 'unconsciousness'.

9. Ground of Non-liability--Mental Element Wanting no Mens, Therefore no Mens Rea

In 'unconsciousness', the mental element in A's conduct is wholly wanting, and therefore his conduct, according to the doctrine of the maxim, cannot be criminal, i.e., there being no mens in the case, there obviously can be no mens rea, and hence there can be no crime. This defence in popular language, amounts to plea that 'A did not know what he was doing', in other words, that his conduct was involuntary, i.e., that he neither intended the effect that was produced by what he did, nor did he know, nor had he reason to believe that it was likely (s 39).

10. Unconsciousness is Actual or Virtual

The unconsciousness in involuntary conduct may exist in respect to the act itself or to its consequences. In the first case, the agent is unconscious of what he is doing; in the second case, he is aware of what he is doing, but is unaware of the effect which will be caused thereby. The first obviously includes the second, which may exist, however apart from the first. The first is actual unconsciousness, the second is virtual.

Unconsciousness, actual or virtual, exists in the following conditions: Sleep and somnambulism, infancy and childhood, accident (accidental consequences), insanity and intoxication.

11. Sleep and Somnambulism

The IPC nowhere refers to crimes committed by a person in his sleep, or in walking in his sleep. The Law of England is similarly silent on this matter, but it cannot be doubted that on principle, the prima facie criminality of an act committed by a person in a state of somnambulism could be successfully rebutted on the ground of unconsciousness. Sir JF Stephen states that he 'does not know that it has ever been suggested that a person who in his sleep set fire to a house or caused the death of another would be guilty of arson or murder'. Of course the practical danger in such a case is the case with which sleep may be feigned.[18]

12. Infancy and Childhood (Sections 82 - 83)

In the case of infants and very young children, many of their movements are actually unconscious, like those of a person asleep. This actual unconsciousness of infancy is397 presumed law in the case of children up to seven years of age, who are treated as being virtually unconscious of their conducts, e.g., a child who has never seen or heard of a gun before cannot be said to 'know what he is doing' (consciousness) when he pulls the trigger. This presumption is conclusive in the eye of the law, and consequently the non-liability of children under seven is absolute.[19]

However, in the case of children over seven but under 12 years of age, under the IPC this presumption not only ceases, but, following the general rule[20] becomes a contrary one, consciousness, and maturity of understanding being presumed; but nevertheless unconsciousness and immaturity of understanding if established is a ground of exemption in such cases under s 83 .

13. Accident or Accidental Consequences (Section 80)

Accident in the usual sense of the term has already been distinguished from pure accident, or an accidental act.

In the illustration to s 80, A voluntarily struck B with the hatchet in the cause of his work. There was nothing accidental about his act. But he did not intend to hurt any one thereby, and unless he was working incautiously, he was not likely, to his knowledge in ordinary belief, to injure B. Thus, the effect or consequences of A's voluntary act were not voluntarily caused by him, as he did not know of their probability.

14. Insanity or Unsoundness of Mind (Section 84)

Insanity is a ground of exemption if it causes an incapacity of 'knowing the nature of the act'. An 'act in its strict sense denotes a bodily movement consequent upon determination of the will', and in its wider and popular sense, as used in the Code, such a movement coupled with the more immediate consequences. A person by reasons of mental disease may be so insane as to be unaware of what he is actually doing ('act', in strict sense) or though aware of what he is doing, unaware of the consequences thereof. In either case he is ignorant of the 'nature of the act'.

Illustrations

(i) A kills B under an insane delusion that he is breaking a jar.[21]
(ii) A sets fire to valuable ricks of straw belonging to B in order to enjoy the blaze.[22]

In the first illustration, A is unaware of the act in its strict sense, viz, that he is killing a man; in the second he is unaware of the consequence, viz, the pecuniary loss to B.

15. Intoxication (Sections 85 - 86)

Whilst voluntary intoxication (Intoxication resulting from a man's voluntary act in drinking alcohol or partaking of poisonous drugs) is no ground of exemption from an act committed under its influence (s 85), though it may alter the nature of the offence committed thereby (s 86), involuntary intoxication and disease caused by voluntary398 intoxication constitute temporary insanity and are subject to the same rules as that disease (s 85).

Illustrations

(i) A under the influence of a drug fraudulently administered to him (involuntary intoxication) shoots B dead, not knowing what he does. A's act is not a crime.[23]
(ii) A in a fit of delirium tremens shoots B dead, thinking him to be a python about to attack him. A's act is not a crime.[24]

16. Analysis

The above statement of the grounds upon which the law holds certain classes of persons or persons under certain circumstances exempted from criminal liability, may be thus briefly stated.

Given an event connected with human agency, and sufficiently injurious to be the subject of criminal investigation.

(i) On finding who is the agent concerned (say A), prove that the connection between the given event and the conduct of A is sufficient to render the event a consequence of A's conduct.

A is prima facie liable for the event, and his conduct plus its consequences form his offence.

(ii) Mens but not rea. This prima facie liability can be removed by showing that the mental element (mens) in the alleged offence was not criminal (mens rea) and that therefore there was no offence.

This is the plea of justification or excuse.

(a) Acts of a person bound by law to act as he did (s 76).
(b) Acts of a judge acting judicially (s 77).
(c) Acts done under judgment or order of a court of justice (s 78).
(d) Acts of a person justified by law in acting as he did (s 79).
(e) Acts of a person who through mistake believes his acts to be under (a), (b), (c) or (d) above.
(f) Choice of evils (s 81).
(g) Acts done with consent of injured party (ss 87 - 92).
(h) Communication in good faith (s 93).
(i) Acts causing slight harm (s 95).
(j) Private defence (ss 96 - 106).
(k) Compulsion by threats (s 94).
(l) Incapacity of knowledge arising from insanity (including intoxication) of the wrongfulness or illegality of an act (ss 84 - 86).

(iii) No mens. Where the prima facie liability cannot be removed on the ground that the mental element in the conduct was not criminal, it may be rebutted on proof that there was no mental element involved, and hence no mens rea, there being no mens; in other words that the act was done in a state of unconsciousness, and was, therefore, involuntary.399

(a) Sleep and somnambulism (implied on principle).
(b) Infancy and childhood (ss 82 - 83).
(c) Accident and accidental consequences (s 80).
(d) Insanity (s 84).
(e) Intoxication (ss 85 - 86).

17. Evidence--Burden of Proof

Under the English law, there is a distinction between the burden on the prosecution and the burden on the accused. As pointed out by Phipson:[25]

> Where the burden of the issue is on the prosecution, the cause must, as we have seen, be proved beyond a reasonable doubt; though a prima facie case made by the prosecution and not rebutted by the accused may often amount to this and sufficient for conviction.[26]

When, however, the burden of an issue is upon the accused, he is not, in general, called on to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt or in default to incur a verdict of guilty; it is sufficient if he succeeds in proving a prima facie case, for then the burden is shifted to the prosecution, which has still to discharge its original onus, that never shifts, i.e., that of establishing, on the whole case, guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[27]

Explaining the position under the English law, Lord Goddard CJ, speaking for the court of criminal appeal in Regina v Lobell ,[28] said:

> It must, however, be understood that maintaining the rule that the onus always remains on the prosecution does not mean that the Crown must give evidence-in-chief to rebut a suggestion of self-defense before that issue is raised, or indeed need give any evidence on the subject at all. If an issue relating to self-defense is to be left to the jury there must be some evidence from which a jury would be entitled to find that issue in favour of the accused, and ordinarily no doubt such evidence would be given by the defence. But there is a difference between leading evidence which would enable a jury to find an issue in favour of a defendant and in putting the onus upon him. The truth is that the jury must come to a verdict on the whole of the evidence that has been laid before them. If on a consideration of all the evidence the jury is left in doubt whether the killing or wounding may not have been in self-defense the proper verdict would be not guilty.[29]

An exception is made in the cases of insanity[30] and bigamy. As regards these[31] it has been pointed out that 'A defence of insanity must, however, be proved beyond a reasonable doubt'.[32]

In India, there is no conflict between the general burden, which is always on the prosecution which never shifts and the special burden that rests on the accused to400 make out his defence of insanity.[33] The burden of proof that the mental condition of the accused was, at the crucial point of time such as described by s 84, IPC, lies on the accused who claims the benefit of this exemption.[34] Where plea of insanity is involved it is for the accused to establish that fact though burden of proving offence lies on the prosecution.[35]

18. Burden to Prove the Existence of General Exception is on the Accused

In India, s 105 of the Indian Evidence Act lays down that where a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions in the IPC, or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, is upon him, and the court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. Most of the High Courts, however, follow the English decisions cited above. The view taken by them is that although this section casts the burden of proving an exception on the accused, there is a subtle but fundamental distinction between the degree of certainty required in cases where the burden of proving a fact is on the prosecution and those where the burden of proof is on the accused. When the burden of the issue is on the prosecution the case must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Where, however, the burden of an issue is on the accused, he is not required to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt or in default to incur a verdict of guilty; it is sufficient if he succeeds in proving a prima facie case, for then the burden of proving such issue is shifted to the prosecution which has still to discharge its original and major onus that never shifts, i.e., that of establishing, on the whole case, guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. If upon a review of all the evidence the court is left in doubt whether the circumstances bringing the case of the accused within a general exception exists or not, the accused is entitled to acquittal. The test is not whether the accused has proved beyond all reasonable doubt that he comes within the exception but whether a reasonable doubt is thrown on the guilt of the accused.[36]

But as pointed out by Ahmad J, in Kamal Singh v State :[37]

> Section 105, Evidence Act, in my opinion, in substance lays down three propositions; firstly, that the > prosecution case shall be judged on the presumption that no exception existed; secondly, that presumption is rebuttable, and thirdly, that the facts, if any, sufficient to rebut that presumption has to be proved by the defence. That being so, the moment that presumption is rebutted by the defence and the court is brought to a point where it becomes doubtful of the fact or when it cannot positively hold that the prisoner was then not of unsound mind and that he was capable of knowing the nature of the act alleged against him, the onus under section 105, in my opinion, has to be taken as401 discharged: for by reason of the neutralisation of the force of presumption, the prosecution is thrown back to its original position where it has to discharge its onus beyond reasonable doubt.

19. Onus can be Discharged in two Ways

On a review of the entire evidence, if the court entertains a reasonable doubt about the guilt of the accused, he is entitled to an acquittal, on the cardinal principle of criminal justice which has not been affected by the special provisions of s 105 of the Indian Evidence Act .[38] The onus can be discharged in two ways: It can be discharged by affirmatively establishing the plea taken up by an accused person, by eliciting such circumstances which would create a doubt in the mind of the court that the reasonable probability of the accused acting within the protection of the exception pleaded is not eliminated. This can be done also by producing evidence in defence or by relying upon the facts alleged by the prosecution itself. Where on consideration of the entire evidence the court is left in doubt, the benefit of the exception cannot be denied to the accused.[39]

20. Burden of Proving Insanity and Unsoundness of Mind

Refer to notes under s 84 .

21. Motive

Refer to commentary under s 81 .

22. Doctrine of mens rea

Refer to commentary under s 81 .

23.Mens Rea and Negligence

Refer to commentary under s 81 .

1 Note B, reprint, p 106.

2 Vide s 6 .

3 King v Tustipad Mandal AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 288 .

4 Chisholm v Doulton LR 22 QBD 736 ; R v Tolson 23 QBD 168 .

5 Notes to s 39 .

6 Notes to ss 76 and 79 .

7 R v Dabhai Kabhai 23 ILR Bom 788 .

8 R v Baku 24 ILR Bom 287 .

9 Ibid, p 291.

10 SHCLE II, 100; Hale, PC 434.

11 SHCLE II, 101.

12 For 'accidental consequences' refer post and s 80 .

13 R v Carr 8 C&P 163 .

14 Donellan's case, SHCLE, III, 372 et seq.

15 R v Bennett Bell Vol l CCI.

16 R v Pocock 17 QB, 34; SD art 240 .

17 For consequences refer further to the notes to s 299, vol 3.

18 Maudsley, Responsibility in Mental Diseases, pp 250-251.

19 An exception has, however, been expressly created by s 130 of the Railways Act 1890. Refer to synopsis notes under s 82 .

20 Indian Evidence Act 1872, s 105 .

21 SD Art 28 III (1) .

22 R v Davies 1 F&F 69 .

23 SD Art 30 III (2) .

24 Ibid (3).

25 Phipson Evidence, fourteenth edn, p 73.

26 R v Lovett 1 Cr App R 111; R v Schama 84 LJKB 396 ; R v Fuschillo (1940) 2 All ER 489 ; R v Aves (1950) 2 All ER 830 .

27 Mancini v DPP (1942) AC 1 ; Woolmington v DPP (1935) AC 462 ; R v Stoddart 25 TLR 612 ; R v Schamn 84 LJKB 396 ; R v Ward (1915) 3 KB 696 ; Rex v Curr-Briant (1943) KB 607 .

28 Regina v Lobell (1957) 1 QB 547, p 551 .

29 HM Advocate v Doharty (1954) SLT 169, (1954) SCJ 1 ; Chan Kau v Queen (1955) AC 206, [1955] All ER 206 .

30 Chan Kau v Queen (1955) AC 206 .

31 Phipson, Evidence, fourteenth edn, p 62.

32 R v Jefferson Times, 20 July 1908, per Ligham J, reversed on other grounds, 1 Cr App R 95; Cf R v Wilson 55 LJ 157 ; Sademan v R (1936) 2 All ER 1138 (PC), where the burden was stated as not being higher than in civil proceedings; but seeAttorney-General v Fennell* (No 1), (1940) Ir R 445, 450, where the decision in Sodeman v R , which is not binding in England, was severely criticised.

33 Dahyabhai Chhaganbhai Thakkar v State of Gujarat AIR 1964 SC 1563, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 422 (SC) .

34 State of Madhya Pradesh v Ahmadulla AIR 1961 SC 998, (1961) 2 Cr LJ 43 (SC) .

35 Bhikari v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1966 SC 1, (1966) Cr LJ 63 (SC) .

36 Emperor v U Damapala AIR 1937 Rang 83, 14 ILR Rang 666, 168 IC 193, 38 Cr LJ 254 (FB) ; Prabhoo v Emperor AIR 1941 All 402 (FB), (1941) ILR All 843, 197 IC 525, (1941) All LJ 619, (1941) All WR 320 (FB) (HC), per majority of four against three; Ambika Singh v State AIR 1961 All 38 ; Bala Prasad Dhansukh v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1961 MP 241 ; Basappa Bhimappa Doddamani v State AIR 1961 Mys 21, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 120 ; Dahyabhai Chhaganbhai Thakkar v State of Gujarat AIR 1964 SC 1563, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 422 (SC) ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Ahmadulla AIR 1961 SC 998, (1961) 2 Cr LJ 43 (SC) ; Bhikari v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1966 SC 1 ; Shrikant Anandrao Bhosale v State of Maharashtra (2002) VIII AD (SC) 500 .

37 Kamal Singh v State, AIR 1955 Pat 209, p 213, 56 Cr LJ 825 .

38 Nitai Naik v State AIR 1957 Ori 168 .

39 Babu Lal v State AIR 1960 All 223, p 225, (1960) Cr LJ 437 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 76.

Act done by a person bound, or by mistake of fact believing himself bound, by law.--

Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is, or who by reason of a mistake of fact and not by reason of a mistake of law in good faith believes himself to be, bound by law to do it.

Illustrations

(a) A, a soldier, fires on a mob by the order of his superior officer, in conformity with the commands of the law. A has committed no offence.
(b) A, an officer of a court of Justice, being ordered by that court to arrest Y, and, after due enquiry, believing Z to be Y, arrests Z. A has committed no offence.402

Comments

1. Relative Scope of Sections 76 - 79

Sections 76 - 79 are at first sight somewhat confusing, owing to the fact that each section deals with two distinct questions, since in each is included acts done under a bona fide mistake.

The sections provide for eight states of things:

(i) Acts done by a person who is bound by law to do them (s 76).
(ii) Acts done by a person who is justified by law in so doing them (s 79).
(iii) Acts done by a judge acting judicially (s 77).
(iv) Acts done by a person in pursuance of a judgment or order of court (s 78).
(v) Acts done by a person who, owing to a mistake of fact, believes himself bound to do such acts (s 76).
(vi) Acts done by a person who by reason of mistake of fact believes himself to be justified in so doing (s 79).
(vii) Acts done by a judge under a mistake as to his powers (s 77), and by a person in pursuance of the order of a Court which, owing to a mistake, he believes to have jurisdiction in the matter (s 78).
(viii) Acts of a person done in pursuance of an order of a court, which, owing to a mistake, he believes, had jurisdiction to make the order (s 78).

2. Sections 76, 79, 80 and Legislative Intent in General Exceptions

Sections 76 and 79, IPC provide that nothing is an offence if an action is taken by any person, who has taken action believing that he is justified in taking action by law. Section 80 of the IPC provides that nothing is an offence if it is done by accident of misfortune and without any criminal intention or knowledge in doing a lawful act in a lawful manner by lawful actions and with proper care and caution.

Therefore, the general exceptions provided under ch IV of the IPC make it clear that the intention of the legislature was to keep such actions which are provided in the category of general403 exceptions out of the sweep of various offences which are made as punishable under the IPC .[40]

3. Special Importance for Military and Police Acting under Commands

The section is of special importance in regard to the military and police acting under their officers' commands and in respect of private persons assisting the police. This deals with the circumstances which, when proved, make the act, complained of, not an offence.[41]

4. Like Civilians, Soldiers are Subject to Ordinary Law

Members of the armed forces of the state are essentially subject to military law. Is therefore the military law to be applied in their case and can a soldier who is guilty of a *prima facie*crime avoid liability on the ground that he was bound by the military law to act as he did? According to English law:

> A soldier stands in a two-fold relation: the one is his relation towards his fellow-citizens outside the army; the other is his relation towards the members of the army, and especially towards his Military superiors; any man, in short, subject to Military law, has duties and rights as a citizen as well as duties and rights as a soldier.[42]

As the latter, he incurs special obligations, but he is not exempted from the ordinary liabilities of citizenship. Accordingly, the law to be applied in the case of crime committed by soldiers is the ordinary law of the land, a soldier being subject to the same criminal liability as a civilian,[43] and, this being so, obedience to superior orders, i.e., obedience called for and enforced by military law, is of itself no defence to a charge of crime. The position of a soldier both in theory and practice is therefore, a difficult one. 'He may', as it has been well said, 'be liable to be shot by a court martial if he disobeys an order, and hanged by a Judge and Jury if he obeys it'.[44] Nevertheless, it is an incontrovertible principle of English Law that the facts of a person being a soldier and of his acting strictly under orders, does not of itself exempt him from criminal liability for acts which would be crimes if done by a civilian. Thus, A, a sentinel, on board a man-of-war when she was laying off, had orders, to keep off boats from coming alongside the ship, and had ammunition for his musket given to him. B in a boat persisted, in spite of repeated warnings from A, in approaching the ship. A fired and killed B. It was held that A was guilty of murder.[45]

5. Legal Position of a Soldier when Military and Civil Laws Conflict

So long, of course, as military and civil law agree no difficulty can arise from this double status of the soldier. Thus, where, as in illust (a) to s 76, a superior officer gives a command, which is legal in the eye of the ordinary law, the soldier is exempted from all liability. But a command may be given which is not lawful according to civil law. The soldier in question may know it to be illegal, in which case his obligation to obey the command under the military law is no answer to his404 responsibility under the ordinary law. He cannot avoid liability on the ground of obedience to superior orders for an act which a man of ordinary sense must have known to be a crime. On the other hand, he may not know the command to be illegal. In such a case he would be held as justified in obeying the order, if it were one which the soldier might fairly suppose his officer to have good reasons for giving.[46] In other words, he might be exempted from liability on the ground of a bona fide mistake of fact.

6. Indemnity under Indian Law-- CrPC, Sections 129 - 32

The employment of military force for the dispersal of unlawful assemblies in India is regulated by the CrPC 1973, ss 129 - 132 .[47]No act purporting to be done by an officer or soldier, sailor or airman under those sections can form the subject of criminal proceedings except with the sanction of the Central Government. Moreover no executive magistrate or police officer, or of armed forces acting in good faith under those sections 'shall be deemed to have thereby committed an offence'.[48] and 'no person or member of the armed forces doing any act in obedience to any order which he was bound to obey shall be deemed thereby to have committed an offence'.

7. Private Persons Assisting the Police and Magistrate

Under s 37 of the CrPC private persons are bound to assist a magistrate or police officer reasonably demanding their aid, in: (a) making an authorised (i.e., lawful) arrest, or preventing the escape of any person; or (b) in the prevention or suppression of a breach of peace or (c) in the prevention of any injury attempted to be committed to any railway, canal, telegraph or public property. A refusal is punishable under s 187 of the IPC, but proof of the unreasonableness of the demand would be a good defence. Acts of a person committed in the course of, and for the purpose of, so aiding or preventing would be justified under s 76 .

Also by s 132(2)(b) of the CrPC, no person doing any act in good faith, in compliance with a requisition under s 129 or s 130 shall be deemed thereby to have committed an offence.

[I] PERSONS ACTING UNDER SECTIONS 76 -79 THROUGH MISTAKE ACTS OF A PERSON UNDER MISTAKE

8. Essentials of Mistake

The primary essentials regarding mistake under the four sections are these:

(i) Mistake is no ground for exemption unless it is bona fide, i.e., 'good faith' is essential under each section.

(ii) In general, i.e., under ss 76 and 79, IPC, the mistake must be one of fact and not of law,[49] and this rule is expressly stated therein. In the particular cases of a judge (s 77, IPC) and of a person bound by an order of court of justice (s 78, IPC) the mistake need not necessarily be a mistake of fact,405 (indeed in such cases it will usually be a mistake of law), and neither section contains a proviso confining mistake to one of fact.

9. Mistake as a Defence under Sections 76 and 79

When Mistake can be Admitted as Defence

The defence of mistake is a special privilege allowed by law to a person accused of crime, the rule nowadays being that where a man, in his course of conduct which resulted in the unlawful harm which is being charged against him, had gone on the belief that the facts of his situation were different from that it has now been established that they really were, then his trial should proceed on the legal fiction that the facts were as he supposed them to be, and not on the true facts. That is to say, the tribunal is to come to its decision on the basis of a pretended set of facts which the prosecution is not allowed to deny. This means that for the purposes of this trial the facts are taken to have been what the accused person mistakenly imagined them to be.[50]

More often, however, the defence of mistake relates to the absence of mens rea, that is to say, the mistake negatives the existence of the particular intent, or of that foresight of the consequences which the law requires to render the prisoner guilty. Mistake can be admitted as a defence provided (a) the state of things believed to exist would, if true, have justified the act done;[51] (b) the mistake is reasonable; and (c) the mistake relates to fact and not to law.

10. Reasonable Mistake

Reasonable mistake means the mistake committed by a reasonable person. If the facts upon which the accused relies are such that they would not have misled an ordinary 'reasonable' man to think what the prisoner alleges they misled him to think, then the court may well refuse to believe that he was misled and will decide that he is telling a lie when he now alleges that he did the act under a mistake.

11. Mistake of Law

Sections 76 and 79 apply to mistakes of fact and not to mistakes of law.[52] Mistake of law ordinarily means mistake as to existence or otherwise of any law on a relevant subject as well as mistake as to what the law is.[53]

12. Presumption that Every one Knows the Law

Sections 77 - 78, IPC provide an exception to the general rule that mistake of law is no ground of defence. Every person of capacity to understand is presumed to know the law.[54]A, a foreigner, kills B in a duel in England. He believes dueling to be406 lawful in England. A is guilty of murder.[55]A certain act is for the first time made an offence by statute. A commits the act. He proves that he was at sea at the time the statute was passed, and could not possibly have known of it. This is no bar to conviction.[56] The rule ignorantia juris non excusat is really a rule of evidence and the reason for the rule is, in the words of Austin:

> If ignorance of law were admitted as a ground of exemption, the courts would be involved in questions which it were scarcely possible to solve, and which would render the administration of justice next to impracticable. If ignorance of law were admitted as the ground of exemption, ignorance of law would always be alleged by the party, and the court in every case, would be bound to decide the point.[57]

Hence, there is a presumption juris et de jure, a conclusive presumption of law, that everyone knows the law, ignorance of which therefore cannot be pleaded in defence.

In England, the view has unanimously been taken that if the accused is misled into the error of fact on account of an error of law, his mistake shall be treated as a mistake of fact rather than of law.[58] This sort of conclusion appears to be more a matter of policy of criminal jurisprudence rather than of strict logical deduction.[59] There may arise circumstances neutralising the presumption of knowledge of law in every individual. Such circumstances make out an exception to the general rule that ignorance of law is no excuse.[60]

Ignorance of Law

Ignorance of law although no defense per se, may be evidence of some mental condition which negatives the guilty knowledge which is essential in some offences e.g., under s 170 .[61] In holding a citizen guilty of any offence, the existence of *mens rea*in him is fundamental. It is only when the mind is at fault, that a man can be held guilty of an offence. It is fundamental, too, that whenever and wherever there is a mistake of fact on which is founded a belief in good faith of justification by law of an act, the requisite state of mind that would make the author of the act guilty is absent. Considered in this aspect, there is hardly any difference between mistake of fact and mistake of law, but it has been the policy of criminal jurisprudence of civilized countries that every individual shall be presumed to know the law and shall be debarred from pleading ignorance of law as an excuse.[62]

13. Mistake as to Criminal and Civil Law are Treated Differently

A mistake as to criminal law only will not give rise to claim of right; an error as to civil law may do so.[63]407

14. Bona Fide Mistake of Law Entitles Accused the Lower Sentence

Yet even in those cases in which a bona fide mistake (whether of law or of fact) happens not to be admissible as a defence to the criminal charge it may nonetheless afford a good reason for the infliction of a mitigated or even nominal punishment.[64] Ignorance of the law is ordinarily very much of an excuse, as it leads to a reduction of the sentence though it cannot lead to an acquittal.[65]

15. Mistake of Fact

The question whether the accused believed in good faith on account of a mistake of fact that he was bound by law to do the act, which is alleged to constitute an offence, would arise only if the order or command of the superior officer is not justified or is otherwise unlawful. Where the situation prevailing at the scene of offence was such as to justify the order given by the deputy commissioner of police, to open fire, the accused can seek the protection of that order and plead in defence that they acted in obedience to that order and, therefore, they cannot be held guilty of the offence of which they are charged.[66]

Sometimes persons, intending to do one thing, do, by existential error, something else. Such a mistake may be a ground for defence.[67]

Mistake has a recognised place in civil law and means that parties intending to do one thing have by unintentional error done something else.[68] It may[69] or may not, be due to forgetfulness, ignorance, imperfect information or faulty ratiocination. It may be due to chance, negligence, stupidity or even superstition, but it must not be due to design, pre-arrangement or pre-concert.[70] Thus, where a man assaults and kills a human being believing in good faith that the object of the assault was not a human being at all but a ghost,[71] or a tiger[72] there is a mistake of fact which affords a good defence to a charge under ss 302, 304 or 304A, IPC . Whether a man is or is not a proclaimed offender is a question of fact within the meaning of ss 76 and 79, IPC .[73]

Arrest of a person in the bona fide belief that he committed a non-bailable offence, which as a matter of fact had not been committed, is a mistake of fact.[74] But believing an offence to be non-bailable or cognizable, when, in fact, it is bailable or non-cognizable according to law, is not a mistake of fact; it is an erroneous view of the law.[75]408

Where a police commissioner acted under what purported to be a lawful order, but it was subsequently discovered that the order was invalid; it was held that the commissioner was protected by the provisions of ss 76 and 79, as he laboured under a mistake of fact.[76]

A bailiff endorsed a warrant of arrest for service to the process server. The process server made the arrest and returned the warrant to the bailiff without any endorsement on it. The bailiff returned the warrant to him for endorsement, but the process server re-executed the warrant and rearrested the complainant. It was held that the re-arrest was illegal, but the process server would be protected under s 79, as he made a genuine mistake of fact and thought that the process was returned to him for re-execution and not actuated by malice.[77]

Where the object of the Students Federation of India was to wrongfully restrain the Minister and the accused police officials, on the command given by their superiors lathi charged the students, the action of the accused police officials was fully protected by s 76, IPC .[78]

16. Two Essential Conditions for Sections 76 and 79

For a mistake to be a good defence under this section and s 79, two conditions must exist:[79] (a) the mistake must be a mistake of fact, and not a mistake of law; and (b) the mistake must have been committed in 'good faith', as contemplated in s 52 of the IPC .

17. Mixed Question of Law and Fact

An error on a mixed question of law and fact is treated as a mistake of fact.[80]

In civil causes, it would seem that if law and fact are blended as a mixed question, or if one's ignorance of fact is produced by ignorance of law, the whole may be regarded as ignorance of fact, of which the party is at liberty to take advantage. So, in criminal jurisprudence if the guilt or innocence of the prisoner depends on the fact, to be found by the jury, of his having been or not, when he did the act in some precise mental condition, which mental condition is the gist of the offence, the jury, in determining this question of mental condition, may take into consideration his ignorance or misinformation in a matter of law. Thus, to constitute larceny, there must be an intent to steal, which involves the knowledge that the property taken belongs not to the latter. Yet if all the facts concerning the title are known to the accused, and the question is merely one of law whether the property is his or not, still he may show, and the showing will be a defence to him against criminal process, that he honestly believed it his, through a misapprehension of law. A mere pretence of claim set up by one who does not himself believe it to be valid does not prevent the act of taking from being larceny.[81]409

18. Superstitious and Quasi-religious Beliefs

In many cases unusual superstitions and other quasi-religious beliefs have been regarded as examples of mistake, but that defence has been rejected on the ancient doctrine that the mistake must be reasonable. It is hardly necessary to point out that such a doctrine, based purely on an objective test, is out of keeping with the modern principle that the mens rea required by the common law is a subjective element.

It would, therefore, be an advantage if cases of strange beliefs[82] could be taken as turning upon the evidence in each instance, so as to settle first whether or not the accused really did hold that belief, and then, if that point be decided in his favour, the case could be approached to see if it comes within the established Macnaughten answer:[83] (a) as to knowledge of what is right or wrong,[84] and (b) insane delusions.[85]

19. 'Good Faith'

Mistake without good faith is no ground of exemption. Where an offence is committed by reason of a mistake of fact in good faith the accused is entitled to the benefit of ss 76 and 79 .[86] To get the protection of these sections, it is sufficient if the accused can show that he, in good faith, believed that an offence was going to be committed: it is immaterial that their suspicion may ultimately prove to be false.[87] 'Nothing is said to be done in good faith which is done or believed without due care and attention'.[88] Hence, if a person has acted without due care and attention, the mistake, under which he acts, will not exonerate him from blame. Mistake is no ground of exemption from criminal liability unless it exists along with good faith, i.e., due care and attention with which the mistaken person has acted. Due care and attention is thus always the test as to whether or not a mistake is a good ground of defence. If they are absent the mistake exists in consequence of willful or negligent conduct.[89] Good faith requires due care and attention,[90] but there can be no general standard of care and attention applicable to all persons and under all circumstances.[91] As pointed out in Emperor v Abdool Wadood Ahmad :[92]

> The standard of care and caution must be judged according to the capacity and intelligence of the person whose conduct is in question. It is only to be expected that the honest conclusion of a calm and philosophical mind may differ very largely from the honest conclusions of a person excited by sectarian zeal untrained to the habits of reasoning.

The question of good faith must be considered with reference to the position of the accused and the circumstances under which he acts. The law does not expect the410 same standard of care and attention from all persons regardless of the position they occupy,[1] and under all the circumstances.[2] What is due care and attention depends on the position in which a man finds himself and varies in different cases.[3]

20. Conduct must be Lawful under the Supposed State of Things

From the foregoing it is clear that for mistake to be a good defence under either of the ss 76 and 79, two conditions must be fulfilled:[4]

There must be good faith, i.e., due care and attention, and the mistake must be a mistake of fact and not of law. Thus in illust (b) to s 76, A makes 'due enquiry' first, (hence he acts in good faith) and thinks Z to be Yi.e., he acts under a mistake of fact. So in the illustration to s 79, he thinks Z is committing murder, whilst as a fact he was acting in self-defence, but A exercised his judgment in the matter in good faith.

But a third condition of non-liability is also necessary, viz, that under the supposed state of things the conduct of the accused would have been lawful, for otherwise he could not contend that he believed himself to be 'bound or justified by law' in acting as he did.[5] Thus, in the above illustrations, A believed a certain state of facts to exist, under which, if they had existed, he was bound to act or was justified in acting as he did, and therefore he is exempted from liability. If the facts upon which he relies are such that, in the opinion of the court they would not have misled an ordinary 'reasonable' man to think what the prisoner alleges they misled him to think, then the court may well refuse to believe that he was misled and will decide that he is telling a lie when he now alleges that he did act under a mistake.[6]

21. 'Bound by Law'

In a prosecution for defamation in respect of a defamatory statement made by the accused as a witness in a case it was held that s 76 did not apply as the accused person was not bound by law to go into the witness box and make the statement at all.[7]

No instructions from his client can justify an advocate in writing a letter to a magistrate demanding the return of money alleged to have been paid to him as a bribe for the purpose of hushing up the matter and threatening the magistrate, if the demand is not met, with the consequences of his act. In writing the letter the advocate makes himself a party to an attempt to compound an uncompoundable offence, and he cannot set up the alleged instructions of his client in justification of his action. Sections 76 and 79 cannot apply to his case.[8]

Where an overseer, in compliance of the orders of the chief officer of the municipal council, demolished the constructions of the complainant and removed the material thereof to the municipal premises, it was held that the overseer was legally411 bound to obey the orders of the chief officer and, therefore, protected by the provisions of this section.[9]

Acting in strict accordance with the order of a superior is a part of discipline in police force. Where an order to fire was given by the superior officer in charge of the force, it was expected that they would obey it promptly, as was their duty, if the order was not on the face of it illegal. In such circumstances, the police officers acting under him were bound by r 25 of the Police Regulations, to carry out the order. As such, if the accused actually fired leading to the unfortunate death of two persons are fully protected by the order passed by the superior officer and cannot be deemed to have committed any offence.[10]

But obedience of an unlawful order of a superior officer does not exonerate or excuse the person who commits an offence as a consequence of the order. Even when a soldier obeys the orders of a superior officer it has been held that if the order is obviously improper or illegal, the soldier is not excused even though he may be put in the awkward predicament of choosing whether he will risk being shot by order of a court martial for not obeying the order, or being hanged by the criminal court for murder for obeying it. Obedience to an illegal order can only be used in mitigation of punishment.[11]

22. Wrongs Rendered Crimes by Reason of Some Independent Fact

Under some definition of 'crime', certain conduct does not amount to the crime defined unless some particular independent fact co-exists with it. Thus, in case of the offence of 'abduction'[12] the girl abducted must be under the age of 16 years under the English law.[13] Suppose that A takes away B, a girl, about whose age he has made a mistake i.e., whom he believes to be 17 years of age. Will this mistake of fact excuse him? The point was fully considered in R v Prince .[14] The jury had found that A honestly believed on good grounds that B was 17 years old, but the court held that the legislature intended persons abducting young girls to act at their peril, and therefore to take the risk of a belief about the girl's age being wrong. The mistake was, therefore, held to be no defence. The same principle was applied in the case for R v Bishop .[15] No person may receive into a house two or more lunatics, unless the house is duly licensed as an 'asylum'.[16] The defendant did receive more than two lunatics, in her private house, but she honestly, on reasonable grounds, believed them not to be lunatics. The court held that the legislature intended persons keeping such establishments to receive patients at their peril, and that her mistake of fact was no defence.[17] In the case also of R v Fischer [18] it was held, applying the same principle,412 that a person who is not authorised under the Indian Christian Marriage Act 1872, to solemnise a marriage in the absence of a marriage registrar, knowingly solemnises a marriage in the absence of such registrar, is guilty of an offence under s 68 of the Act.[19]If the accused did not know that such an act was forbidden by law, his mistake or ignorance of law cannot avail him.[20] Such mistake cannot be a bona fide one since it is due to his negligence in not satisfying himself as to the provisions of the law on the question.[21]

23. Intention of the Legislature to be Decided by the Court in Each Case

But no rule or rules as to 'mistake' applicable to the case of all offences may be deduced from the case-law discussed earlier, for it is a question for the court to decide in each case whether it was the intention of the legislature that the person doing the forbidden act should do it at his peril, as where there is an absolute prohibition, and knowledge is therefore immaterial[22] or that his ignorance of the independent fact or his honest belief in its non-existence should excuse him.[23] In other words, mens rea is an essential ingredient in every offence, but this general rule may be displaced either by the words of the statute creating the offence, or by the subject-matter with which it deals, and both must be considered.[24]

24. Master and Servant

While some statutes impose an absolute prohibition, as a result of which masters are criminally responsible for the acts of their servants in the course of their employment, even though such acts were not authorised by the masters, or even expressly forbidden by him, others leave the question of criminal responsibility of the general rule of mens rea.

The question of a master's criminal liability for the acts of his servant, therefore, turns upon what is the true construction to be placed upon the state in question.[25]Speaking generally, the object of an Act cannot be allowed to be defeated by employing a servant to do that which is forbidden to the master. Qui per alium facit, per seipsam facere videtur, i.e. he who does an act through the medium of another party is in law considered as doing it himself.[26]

25. Act Done by Subordinate under Instructions of Higher Authority

If order of the superior is justified and is therefore lawful, no further question can arise as to whether the subordinate servants who acted in obedience to that order believed or did not believe that order to be lawful. Such an enquiry becomes necessary only when the order of the superior officer which is pleaded as a defence, is found not to be in conformity with the commands of the law. Indeed, in the413 aforesaid eventuality no occasion arises for applying the provisions of s 76, IPC . Thus, where on receiving of injuries by one of the members of the police force on patrol duty in Calcutta in the early 70's as a result of the mob violence, the deputy commissioner ordered the police force to open fire and in the firing resorted to in pursuance of that order, some persons in the mob were killed. The order to open fire was justified by the situation that prevailed in the city during the period in question, and members of police who opened fire could seek the protection of the order in question and plead in defence that they acted in obedience to that order and therefore they could not be held guilty of the offence of murder with which they were charged.[27]

Where a raid was conducted by custom officials on a jewellery shop and the customs party was manhandled by the shop owner before they resorted to violence, the complaint was filed by the shop owner for prosecution of the raiding officials for offences under ss 307, 452, 504, 342 and 148 read with s 149, IPC, alleged to be committed during raid. The complaint was quashed by the High Court by giving custom officials the benefit of s 108, Gold (Control) Act. The Apex Court held that the case did not call for any interference under art 136 of the Constitution, even though further evidence might have been necessary before the order quashing the complaint could be held to be fully justified.[28] Where, at about the period certain parts of the State of West Bengal including the city of Calcutta passed through turbulence caused by what was known as the 'Naxal Movement'; the locality in which the incident took place was particularly a troublesome area in which several policemen had been attacked on 11 November 1970, a police party on patrol duty came to the locality. Some sort of skirmish took place in which a policeman was injured. The deputy commissioner of police, who headed the party, considered it necessary to give an order to fire. On these facts it was held that after such orders the members of the police force were not expected to hold a discussion among themselves as to whether the order was legal and whether they should carry it out. They were expected to obey it promptly as it was their duty, and the order was on the face of it not illegal. As such, if the police actually fired leading to unfortunate deaths, they were fully protected by the superior order and they could not be deemed to have committed any offence. The defence of acting under superior orders has an important bearing on the moral and discipline of police force which undoubtedly plays a vital role in maintenance of law and order in any state. Acting in strict accordance with the order of a superior is part of discipline.[29]

26. Commission of Suicide by Subordinate on Departmental Action by Higher Authority

If complaint is received of serious misconduct against any employee, the higher officer normally can be expected to take departmental action. The things, which are otherwise than normal, would be contrary on account of abnormal circumstances. If on account of any abnormal reaction, the employee has committed suicide, the conduct of the complainant or of higher officer of taking departmental action by way of resorting to legal remedy or enforcement of law, cannot be termed as leaving no option to the delinquent employee but to commit suicide and, therefore, cannot be414 said as abetment or incitement to suicide under such circumstances. In any case any action for resorting to legal remedy for grievances or for enforcement of law in exercise of powers or purported exercise of power, cannot be said to contain any element of criminality unless such action is ex facie without any competence, authority or jurisdiction.[30]

The action of filing complaint by the contractor against the deceased, the action of suspension, the inaction for revocation of suspension, after representation made by the deceased or recommendations by the Vigilance Commission or after the recommendations by the Commission for Minorities or the action of issuing charge-sheet for contemplating to hold departmental inquiry, cannot be said as not falling under any categories of general exceptions as provided under ss 76, 79 and 80 of the IPC . Even if the allegations of conspiracy is considered, the same is for harassment and is not for leaving the deceased with no option but to commit suicide and, therefore, the action of suicide can be said as misfortune which may, in any case, fall under the exceptions provided in s 80 of the IPC .[31]

27. Mistake as Defence to be Determined According to Provisions of the Code

With regard to offences under the IPC, it should be carefully borne in mind that the question of mistake as a defence must in all cases be determined by reference to the definition of the offence in question, and the provisions of ss 76 - 79, as the case may be, which apply to the definitions of all offences in the IPC .[32]

28. Rules Regarding Justification of Offence due to Mistake

The following five invaluable rules were laid down by 15 judges, in the case of R v Prince ,[33] which has been the guiding star in England and elsewhere whenever the question of justification of an offence either due to mistake of fact or mistake of law has arisen:

(i) When an act is, in itself plainly criminal, more severely punishable if certain circumstances co-exist, ignorance of the existence of such circumstances is no answer to a charge for the aggravated offence.

(ii) Where an act is prima facie innocent and proper, unless certain circumstances co-exist, ignorance of such circumstances is an answer to the charge.

(iii) The state of the defendant's mind must amount to absolute ignorance of the existence of the circumstances which alters the character of the act, or to a belief in its non-existence.

(iv) An act which is in itself wrong is, under certain circumstance, criminal; a person who does the wrong act cannot set up as a defence that he was ignorant of the facts which turned the wrong into a crime.

(v) Where a statute makes it penal to do an act under certain circumstances, it is a question upon the wording and object of the particular statute, whether415 the responsibility of ascertaining that the circumstances exist is thrown upon the person who does the act or not. In the former case his knowledge is immaterial.[34]

40 AK Chaudhary v State of Gujarat (2006) Cr LJ 726 (Guj) .

41 Nagraj v State of Mysore AIR 1964 SC 269, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 161, p 166 .

42 Dicey's Law of the Constitution, third edn, p 276.

43 Dicey's Law of the Constitution, third edn, p 276.

44 Ibid.

45 R v Thomas 4 MS 441 . He was however, pardoned, on the recommendation of his judges.

46 Stephen's History of Criminal Law of England, vol 1, pp 205-06.

47 For details refer to Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure, twenty-first edn Lexisnexis.

48 Code of Criminal Procedure, s 132(2) .

49 Maung Pu v R 8 Cr LJ 68, 4 LBR 253 .

50 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 77, referring to the Mcnaughten Rules and R v Tolson (1889) 23 QBD 168, p 181 .

51 Archbold, Pleading, Evidence and Practice in Criminal Cases, thirty third edn, p 23.

52 Karimullah v Ghulam Rassulshah AIR 1936 Sind 153, p 154 ; Emperor v Nanak Chand AIR 1943 Lah 208, 209 ; Emperor v Kassim Isubsab 13 Cr LJ 530 .

53 King v Tustipada Mandal AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 289 .

54 R v Fischer 14 ILR Mad 342, p 354 ; King v Tustipada Mandal AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 289, 52 Cr LJ 837 (DB) ; Ramalinga Nadar v Gandhi 1969 LW 103(Cr); State v Siddhanath Gangaram AIR 1956 MB 241, p 243, (1956) Cr LJ 1327 .

55 Ex p Barronel, 1 E&B, I.

56 R v Bailey Russ & Ry 1.

57 Austin's Jurisprudence, vol 1, p 499.

58 Vide R v Reed C&M 306, 174 ER 519; R v Hall 3 C&P 409 .

59 King v Tustipada Mandal & Anor AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 290 .

60 Ibid, p 289; Bums v Newell (1880) 6 QBD 444, 49 LJQB 488 .

61 1 Weir 40, p 74.

62 King v Tustipada Mandal & Anor AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 290 .

63 Pappu v Damodaran AIR 1968 Ker 126, (1968) Cr LJ 625 .

64 R v Esop (1836) 7 C&P 450 ; R v Wheat and Stocks (1921) 2 KB 119, p 125 .

65 Sitaram Kunbi v Emperor AIR 1928 Nag 188 ; State of Maharashtra v MH George AIR 1965 SC 722, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 641 .

66 State of West Bengal v Shew Mangal Singh AIR 1981 SC 1917, [1982] 1 SCR 360, (1981) 4 SCC 2, (1982) Cr LR 501 (SC), (1981) SCC 782 (Cr), (1981) Cr LJ 1683 .

67 Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhari v Haridasi Debi AIR 1914 PC 67, p 71 ; Chiranji v State AIR 1952 Nag 282, 53 Cr LJ 1212 ; Chaitan Bhujan v State of Orissa (1978) Cr LJ 1303 .

68 Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhari v Haridasi Debi AIR 1914 PC 67, p 71 .

69 Kelly v Soldari 9 M&W 54 ; Brownlie v Campbell 5 AC 952 ; Barrow v Issae & Sons (1891) 1 QB 417, p 425 .

70 Sandford v Bede (1894) 65 LJQB 73, p 74, 73 LT 406 .

71 Waryam Singh v Emperor AIR 1926 Lah 554, 28 Cr LJ 39 ; Bonda Kui v Emperor AIR 1943 Pat 64 .

72 Chiranji v State AIR 1952 Nag 282 .

73 AIR 1937 Sind 254, p 257; Pramatha Nath v PC Lahiri AIR 1920 Cal 725, 47 ILR Cal 818, 22 Cr LJ 5 .

74 Raghunath Dass v Emperor AIR 1920 Pat 502 .

75 State of Mysore v Parappa Yalappa (1965) 2 Mys LJ 263, p 269 .

76 Pramatha Nath v PC Lahiri AIR 1920 Cal 725, 22 Cr LJ 5 .

77 Maung Htwe v Ba Thant AIR 1940 Rang 112 .

78 NP Prathap Kumar v Ramadas 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 991 (Ker) .

79 Baistab Charan v R 30 ILR Cal 95 ; Emperor v Po Chon 1 Cr LJ 1118 ; R v Sunku Seethiah 34 ILR Mad 92 ; R v Kassim Isubsab 13 Cr LJ 530, p 531, 14 Bom LR 365 .

80 King v Tustiapada Mandal & Anor AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 290, 52 Cr LJ 837 .

81 Bisho's Criminal Law, third edn, s 378 .

82 See for example R v Machekequonabe (1897) Ont Rep 309 ; R v Senior (1879) 1 QB 283 .

83 Refer to notes under s 84, post.

84 Answers 2 and 3; R v Codere (1916) 12 Cr App R 21 .

85 Answer 4. This answer deals with the case of a man who 'labours under such partial delusion only and is not in other respects insane'.

86 Kallan Beg v Emperor AIR 1936 All 306 ; Bondu Kuin v Emperor AIR 1943 Pat 64 ; Bahadur Khan v Emperor AIR 1944 Pesh 30 ; King v Tustipada Mandal & Anor AIR 1951 Ori 284 ; Pryag v State AIR 1963 All 121 .

87 Kesho Sahu v Slaigram (1977) Cr LJ 1725, p 1728, (1977) Cut LR 166 (Cr) .

88 Refer to s 52, ante.

89 R v Fischer 14 ILR Mad 312 pp 351, 354; R v Rajammal 12 Cr LJ 566 ; Jwala Prasad v Emperor AIR 1934 All 331 .

90 Indian Penal Code 1986, s 52 .

91 State of Orissa v Ram Bahadur AIR 1963 Ori 161, p 163 .

92 Emperor v Abdool Wadood Ahma d 31 ILR Bom 293.

1 Bhawoo Jiwaji v Mulji Dayal 12 ILR Bom 377 .

2 State of Orissa v Ram Bahadur AIR 1960 Ori 161, p 163, (1960) Cr LJ 1349 (DB) .

3 Po Mye v King 1940 Rang LR 109, p 118, AIR 1940 Rang 129, p 132 .

4 Baistab Charan v R 30 ILR Cal 95 ; Emperor v Po Chon 1 Cr LJ 1118, 2 LBR 311 ; R v Sunku Seethiah 34 ILR Mad 92 ; R v Kassim Isub Sab 13 Cr LJ 530 .

5 Indian Penal Code, ss 76 and 79 .

6 Russell on Crimes, eleventh edn, p 80.

7 Bhagwan Singh v Arjun Dutt AIR 1920 All 232(2), 21 Cr LJ 564 .

8 U San Win v U Hla AIR 1931 Rang 83, p 85, 32 Cr LJ 934 .

9 Shriram Damodar v Thakurdas 1977 Mah LJ 581, p 596 ; Mahommad Biloo v Kirti Nath Gogoi (1986) 1 Gau LR 141 .

10 Shew Mangal Singh v State (1981) Cr LJ 84 (Cal) .

11 Niamat Khan v Emperor 17 PR (Cr) 1833 ; Charan Das Narain Singh v State AIR 1950 EP 321 ; Chaman Lal v Emperor AIR 1940 Lah 210 . Refer also to commentary under heading 'Legally bound to do' under s 43 .

12 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 361 .

13 24 and 25 Vic c 100, s 55, under s 361 of the Indian Penal Code 1860, the age of the girl should now be 18 years.

14 R v Prince LR 2 CCR 154, for this case refer further to the note of s 361 .

15 R v Bishop LR 5 QBD 259 .

16 8 and 9 Vic c 100, s 44 .

17 This case belongs to a class of acts which are not criminal in any real sense, but are acts which in the public interest are prohibited under a penalty. Refer to similar cases collected in Sherras v De Rutzen (1895) LR 1 QB 918, p 922 .

18 R v Fischer 14 ILR Mad 342, 1 Weir 802 .

19 14 ILR Mad 342, p 355.

20 Ibid, p 354.

21 Ibid, pp 351, 354.

22 Emary v Nolloth (1903) 1 KB 264, p 269 ; Brooks v Mason (1902) 2 KB 743 ; Cawasji v GIP Railway 26 ILR Bom 609, p 614 .

23 *Stephen's Digest,*art 35.

24 Sherras v De Rutzen (1895) 1 QB 918, p 921, per Wright J; Provincial Motor Cab Co v Dunning (1909) 2 KB 599, p 603 .

25 R v Jeevanji 31 ILR Bom 611, p 627 .

26 Ibid, pp 627-28.

27 State of West Bengal v Shew Mangal Singh & Ors AIR 1981 SC 1917, (1981) Cr LJ 1683 (SC) .

28 Bhappa Singh v Rampal Singh & Ors AIR 1982 SC 779, (1982) Cr LJ 627 (SC) .

29 Shew Mangal Singh & Ors v State (1981) Cr LJ 84 (Cal) (DB) .

30 AK Chaudhary v State of Gujarat (2006) Cr LJ 726 (Guj) .

31 Ibid

32 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 6 .

33 R v Prince (1683) 2 Ch D 15 .

34 King v Tustipada Mandal & Anor AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 290 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 77.

Act of Judge when acting judicially.--

Nothing is an offence which is done by a Judge when acting judicially in the exercise of any power which is, or which in good faith he believes to be, given to him by law.

Comments

1. Scope

This and the next section protect judicial officers and their ministerial officers from criminal process just as the Judicial Officers' Protection Act 1850, protects them from civil liability.[35] In Chunder Narain Singh Roy Bahadur v Brojobullub Gooie ,[36] Markby J, observed:

> Now, as a general rule, every magistrate does act judicially in discharge of his judicial duty whenever he performs any of the duties which are imposed upon him by the law. The duties which he usually performs are of such a nature as to render it absolutely necessary for their sure performance that he should have that protection. He has generally either to punish an offender or to vindicate the rights of a private individual; an if he were hampered by fear of the consequences which might arise from a mistaken conclusion, he could not have that independence of mind which is essential to the discharge of such functions as these.

> This protection is not confined to persons holding and exercising a regular judicial office, but it extends to any person whose duty it is to adjudicate upon the rights, or punish the misconduct of any given person, whatever form their proceedings may take, or however informal they may be. This has been so held in England[37] and I do not see any reason to doubt that the same would be held here.

2. Protection Extends to Even Oral Remarks

Section 77, IPC, is not the only section which is concerned with the protection of judges and magistrates in the exercise of their office. There are also the exceptions to s 499 to be considered and their very existence indicates that the provisions of s 77 cannot by themselves cover the case of remarks made by a judge or magistrate in the course of his office, so as to exempt him from any liability under s 500, IPC .[38] For the purposes of the protection afforded by this section no distinction can be made between a written judgment and the remarks made in the course of a judgment delivered orally.[39] So, whenever a plea under this section is raised, the court has to go416 into the question to find out whether the plea of the accused under this section was available to him and, for this purpose, to his conduct.[40]

3. Judge

Synopsis notes under s 19, ante, may be referred to.

4. Mistake may be one of Law

Mistake under ss 77 and 78, IPC differs from that under ss 76 and 79, IPC in that it may be a mistake of law or a mistake of fact. The particular status of the person concerned (judges and officers of a court) and the nature of their duties make this necessary. A judge may act wrongly owing to a bona fide mistake of fact, and s 77 declares that he shall not be liable for so doing. Where a judge took certain proceedings against a European, which were irregular because he was a European, he was exempted on the ground that he was ignorant of the fact, and had no such information as made it incumbent upon him to ascertain the fact.[41]Again, a judge may act wrongly through a mistake of law. The questions to be answered in such a case would be: (a) Did he believe he was acting legally? (b) Was such belief under all the circumstances reasonable or so irrational as to impute malice or corruption?[42]

5. 'Acting Judicially'

A judge is protected by this section only when he is acting judicially and not ministerially.[43] 'Acting judicially' means professionally acting as a judge. Thus, a collector merely arranging a revenue question, or a magistrate removing an obstruction[44] or an officer in command of a cantonment who arrests and confines a supposed lunatic,[45] are not, when so employed, 'acting judicially'.

6. Within Jurisdiction

Again, the judge must be acting actually, within his jurisdiction. The acts that are protected under this section are acts done within their jurisdiction, though erroneously or irregularly done.[46] Thus, a judge would not be protected for doing things wholly without jurisdiction. Although he will be protected if he has a bona fide belief that he is acting under a lawful power (see below), yet a mistaken belief on his part that he has jurisdiction, when as a fact he has none, will not protect him unless (probably) his want of jurisdiction is due only to some formal defect.[47]

7. Nature of the Acts Protected

All acts of a judicial nature, not merely acts in court are protected.[48]417

8. Civil Immunity

As to the civil immunity of 'Judges, magistrates, justice of the peace, collectors, and other persons acting judicially', and of persons bound to execute their lawful warrants and orders, refer to the Judicial Officers Protection Act 1850.

9. Good Faith

Under s 77, if a judge exercising the power given to him by law does any act as a judge, such as delivering a judgment when acting judicially, same will not be treated as an offence. Here, the words 'good faith' are in respect of exercise of any power which he believes to be given to him by law. Similarly, protection is given to a Judge under the Judges (Protection) Act 1985. Initially, the Judicial Officers' Protection Act 1850 gave protection to Judges while they were discharging duties as Judicial Officers in deciding civil suits. However, the Act was repealed and under the Judges (Protection) Act 1985 the Judge is also granted protection from being prosecuted in a criminal case as per the provisions of s 3(1) .[49] A Regional Fund Commissioner, when passing an order under s 7A of the Employees' Provident Funds and Miscellaneous Provision Act (19 of 1952) is a Judge, and is protected by s 77, IPC .[50]

Commentary under s 52, ante may be referred.

35 S Pande v SC Gupta AIR 1966 Pat 194 .

36 Chunder Narain Singh Roy Bahadur v Brojobullub Gooie 21 WR 126, p 127, affirmed in 21 WR 391 (FB).

37 Tozer v Child 7 E&B 377 .

38 Kamla Patel v Bhagwandas AIR 1934 Nag 123, p 124 .

39 Ibid.

40 State of Maharashtra v YP Sawant (1977) Cr LJ 1477, p 1485 (Bom) .

41 *Y*2 MIA 293, p 306; Herman v Seneschal 32 LJCP 43 ; Roberts v Orchard 33 LJ Ex 65 .

42 Seshaiyangar v Ranganatha 5 Mad HCR 345 ; King v Daya Shankar 1 Cr LJ 146, 13 Ker LR 332 .

43 R v Loggen (1718) 1 Str 74 .

44 Chunder Narain v Brijo 14 Bom LR 254 .

45 Sinclair v Broughton 9 MIA 152 .

46 *Y*2 MIA 293; Pedley v Davis 30 LJCP 374 ; Kempt v Evil 31 LJCP 158 .

47 Stephen's Digest, art 218, and of language of s 77 .

48 Calder v Halket 2 MIA 293 .

49 ES Sanjeeva Rao v Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI), Mumbai 2012 Cr LJ 4053, p 4061 (Bom) (DB), 2013 (1) RCR (Criminal) 284 .

50 ES Sanjeeva Rao v Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI), Mumbai 2012 Cr LJ 4053, p 4081 (Bom) (DB), 2013 (1) RCR (Criminal) 284 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 78.

Act done pursuant to the judgment or order of Court.--

Nothing which is done in pursuance of, or which is warranted by the judgment or order of, a Court of Justice; if done whilst such judgment or order remains in force, is an offence, notwithstanding the Court may have had no jurisdiction to pass such judgment or order, provided the person doing the act in good faith believes that the Court had such jurisdiction.

Comments

1. Scope

This section which is a corollary to s 77, IPC, protects the acts of a person acting under the judgment or order of a court.[51]

The protection given to an officer under this section, is wider than that given to a judge, under s 77, inasmuch as the officer under this section is protected in carrying out an order of a court, having, as a fact, no jurisdiction at all while, under s 77, the judge must be acting within his jurisdiction to be protected by the section.418

2. Mistake may be one of Law

Notes under s 77 may be referred to.

3. 'Court of Justice'

Section 20 of the IPC may be referred to.

4. 'Judgment or Order'

'Judgment' means the statement given by the judge on the grounds of a decree or 'order' and 'order' means the formal expression of any decision of a civil court which is not a 'decree'.[52] The words 'judgment' and 'order' have not been defined by the IPC or the Crpc . Section 354 , CrPC, however, deals with the requirements of a judgment to be delivered by a judge or magistrate in a criminal case. It provides that: (a) every judgment shall be in writing; (b) it shall contain the point or points for determination, decision thereon and the reasons for the decision; (c) it shall specify offence (with section and Act) under which the accused is convicted and the punishment to which he is sentenced and; (d) in case of acquittal, the judgment shall state the offence of which the accused is acquitted and the direction to set him at liberty. 'Order' may be defined as the formal expression of any decision of a criminal court, which is not a judgment. An order must therefore be in the form prescribed by law and must be in writing.[53] An order given by a judge to a court bailiff to keep a person arrested by him in custody is not an 'order', and the bailiff in obeying such a direction is not protected by s 78 .[54]

5. 'No Jurisdiction'

The protection given to an officer under s 78 is wider than that given to a judge under s 77, inasmuch as the officer under s 78 is protected in carrying out an order of a court having as a fact no jurisdiction at all, while under s 77, the judge must be acting within his jurisdiction to be protected by the section.

6. Execution of Lawful Order may become Unlawful

Though an order may have been lawfully given, its execution may become in the interim period illegal, and the officer executing it will, in that case, not be protected by this section. Thus, an order is given to arrest A under a civil process. The officer on meeting A is given notice by A that he is on his way to a court to give evidence in some case. As a witness A is privileged from such arrest. The officer is not justified under this section in then arresting A.[55] Again, the order must be executed in a lawful manner, e.g.., a bailiff in executing a process against movable property of a judgment-debtor, must not break open a gate. He will not be protected by this section in doing so.[56]

7. Good Faith

Refer to commentary under s 52, *ante.*419

8. Sanction for Prosecution, when Necessary

Where a person was appointed as a receiver of certain collieries by the court; it was held that for any offence allegedly committed by him while acting under that order (as a receiver) he can be prosecuted only after receiving sanction from the court appointing him receiver. Prosecution without obtaining sanction is liable to be quashed.[57] This rule should apply to all persons executing any process or order in pursuance of a judgment or other order of the court.

51 Kapoor Chand v State (1976) 3 Cr LT 370 (HP) ; Muta Mehto v State of Bihar (1990) 1 BLJ 122, p 124 (Pat) .

52 Code of Civil Procedure 1908, ss 2(9) and (14) .

53 Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, s 142 .

54 Maung Pu v R 8 Cr LJ 68, 4 LBR 253 .

55 5 RJ and 43; Thakoordoss v Shunkur 3 WR (Cr) 53 .

56 John Amderson v J Mcqueen 7 WR (Cr) 12 .

57 Ramabadan Choubey v State 86 CWN 984, (1982) 1 CHN 470 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 79.

Act done by a person justified, or by mistake of fact believing himself justified, by law.--

Nothing is an offence which is done by any person who is justified by law, or who by reason of a mistake of fact and not by reason of a mistake of law in good faith, believes himself to be justified by law, in doing it.

Illustration

A sees Z commit what appears to A to be a murder. A, in the exercise, to the best of his judgment exerted in good faith, of the power which the law gives to all persons of apprehending murderers in the fact, seizes Z, in order to bring Z before the proper authorities. A has committed no offence, though it may turn out that Z was acting in self-defense.

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

This section which is complementary to s 76, is in two parts. According to the first part, an act, which a person is justified, by law, in doing, is not an offence. According to its second part, an act, which the person, doing it, believed, in good faith, by reason of a mistake of fact, and not by reason of a mistake of law, to be justified, by law, in doing, is not an offence. The section, therefore, deals with cases in which a person acts in the belief that he is justified by law to so act, as s 76 deals with cases in which a person acts in the belief that he is bound by law to so act. In other respects, the two sections are identical. Mistake of law is not justification under this section also. The IPC does not exempt an act done under a mistake of law from the operation of the penal law.420

If a person accepts the decision of a full Bench of the High Court in the state (from which no appeal has been preferred to the Supreme Court) as a guide to his conduct, he commits nothing more than a technical offence, if that view is later not accepted as laying down the correct law.[58]Section 79 of the IPC makes an offence a non-offence only when the offending act is actually justified by law or is bona fide believed by mistake of fact to be so justified. If the petitioner acting in good faith collected land revenue depositing the same in the government treasury, received paujotra and attested certain documents he does enter the statutory harbour and is protected from the prosecution under s 170 of the IPC because s 79 exonerates him at least in view of his bona fide belief that the identification card issued to him by the Revenue Authorities was justificatory.[59]

This section is not exhaustive. There are cases in which intention and knowledge are ingredients of the offence and have to be established either by evidence or legal inference which do not necessarily come within the ambit of this section.[60]

In view of s 79, IPC, nothing would constitute an offence under the IPC if the act done is:

(i) justified in law
(ii) done by a person who by reason of mistake of fact in good faith believes himself to be justified by law in doing so Sushil Ansal v State .[61]

Relative Scope of Sections 76 and 79

Under both these sections there must be a bona fide intention to *advance the law,*manifested by the circumstances attending the act which is the subject of charge; and the party accused cannot allege generally that he had a good motive; he must specifically allege that he believed in good faith that he was bound by law (s 76) to do as he did, or that, being empowered by law (s 79) to act in the matter, he had acted to the best of his judgment exerted in good faith.[62]

For detailed discussion, notes under s 76 may be referred to.

2. Sections 76, 79, 80 and Legislative Intent in General Exceptions

Commentary in synopsis s 76, ante, may be referred to.

3. Relative Scope of this Section and Section 132, Code of Criminal Procedure 1973--the two Provisions are not Identical

Under s 132(2)(b), CrPC, no person doing any act in good faith in compliance with a requisition under s 129 or s 130 of that Code shall be deemed to have thereby committed an offence. But the protection afforded by s 132, CrPC, is different from that afforded by this section. This s 79 can only be applied when all the facts are known, i.e., when the trial is over while s 132, CrPC can operate only before the trial begins. Protection given by this section is a protection against conviction, while the421 protection given by s 132, CrPC, is a protection against trial. Thus these provisions are not identical.[63]

Section 79, IPC, deals with circumstances, which when proved makes the act complained of not an offence. The circumstances to be established to get the protection of s 132, CrPC are not circumstances which make the acts complained of 'no offence' but are circumstances which require sanction of the government in taking of cognizance of a complaint with respect to the offences alleged to have been committed by the accused.[64]

If the act complained of is wholly justified by law, it would not amount to an offence at all in view of the provisions of s 79, IPC . Many cases may, however, arise where in acting under the provisions of the Police Act, or other law conferring powers on the police, the police officer or some other person may go beyond what is strictly justified in law. Though s 79 of the IPC will have no application to such cases, s 53 of Madras District Police Act will apply. But s 53 applies to only limited class of persons.[65]

If the circumstances to be established for seeking the protection of s 132, CrPC were to make the alleged conduct 'no offence', there could be no question of prosecution with the sanction of the state government.[66]

4. Applicability of this Section to Offences under Special or Local Laws

In Emperor v Kassim Esub Sah [67] the Bombay High Court held that this section applied to offences under s 32(a) and (b) of the Forest Act 1878. Dissenting from this view the Madras High Court wrongly held that this section cannot apply to offences created by the Forest Act as the definition of 'offence' in s 40 covers only a thing made punishable by the IPC, except when the word is used in certain sections which do not include s 79 .[68] As pointed out in Abdul Aziz v Emperor ,[69] the learned judges who decided the latter case appear to have misread s 40, which states that in ch IV, IPC, the word 'offence' denotes a thing punishable under the Code or under a special or local law. Section 79 , IPC, comes within ch IV and, therefore, an offence to which s 79, IPC, refers includes an offence under a local or special law. Not only this section but the principles underlying all the 'general exceptions' in ch IV of the IPC are applicable to offences under a special or local law.[70]This section has been applied to local laws like the Punjab Pure Food Act 1929,[71] and the Burma Land Revenue Act 1876.[72]

Where the obscene scene was totally unconnected with the English film 'Girl' and the obscene film had been connected to the film 'Girl' and shown as part of the film just prior to 'intermission' it was held that it cannot at all be stated that the offending act of exhibition of the blue film containing the obscene scene, which is totally422 unconnected with the censored film 'Girl' is actually justified by law or is bona fide believed by mistake of fact to be justified.[73]

For the exhibition of the film 'Andha Qanoon' an 'A' certificate was granted under s 5A of the Cinematograph Act 1952. It was alleged that the film scandalises courts and the actor etc. were guilty of contempt of court. The Allahabad High Court held that contempt of court was not committed in view of the exemption under this section.[74]

5. Mistake of Fact

Synopsis notes under s 76, ante, may be referred to.

6. Mistake of Law

Synopsis notes under s 76, ante, may be referred to.

7. 'Good Faith'

Synopsis notes under s 76 under the same heading may be referred to.

8. Mistake as a Defence Under Sections 76 and 79

Commentary under same heading in s 76, ante, may be referred to.

9. Two Essential Conditions for Sections 76 and 79

Commentary under same heading in s 76, ante, may be referred to

10. Acts Justified by Law

If the act complained of is wholly justified by law, it would not amount to an offence at all in view of s 79 of the IPC . Many cases may, however, arise where in acting under the provision of the Police Act or other law conferring powers on the police, the police officer may go beyond what is strictly justified in law. Though s 79 of the IPC will have no application to such cases, s 53 of the Madras District Police Act will apply.[75] It is one of the 'General Exceptions' recognised by the IPC that when a person is justified by law in doing an act, the commission of that act cannot amount to an offence. Thus, a person is entitled to cut off those portions of a tree growing on his neighbour's land which overhang his land. As he is justified by law in doing such an act it does not, by virtue of this section, amount to an offence of mischief punishable under s 427 .[76] Likewise, where a person kills his servant bona fide thinking him to be a burglar he commits no offence and he is protected under this section.[77]

By ss 72 - 73 of the CrPC, private persons may under certain circumstances have warrants granted to them for the arrest of offenders, and under s 38, CrPC a private423 person may (it is optional) assist the person acting under the warrant, and his conduct in so doing would be justified under this section. Again under s 43, CrPC a private individual may (it is optional) arrest a person without a warrant who in his presence commits a non-bailable cognizable offence, or who is a proclaimed offender. His act in so doing is justified and protected by this section.

11. Acts not Justified by Law

Where the appellants formed an unlawful assembly and in prosecution of the common object to eliminate the deceased under the belief that he was practising witchcraft and was an undesirable person, committed his brutal murder. The appellants knew that the deceased was very much a living person with a family, yet they killed him in cold blood. It was held that there was neither any good faith nor any mistake of fact or law by which the appellants could be protected by s 79, IPC . If to a case of this nature the exception extended by s 79, IPC, is made applicable, there shall be murders unlimited.[78]

Under s 79, although an act may not be justified by law, yet if it is done under a mistake of fact, in the belief in good faith that it is justified by law, it will not be an offence. The question of good faith must be considered with reference to the position of the accused and the circumstances under which he acted. 'Good faith' requires not logical infallibility but due care and attention. The question of good faith is always a question of fact to be determined in accordance with the proved facts and circumstances of each case. It may be laid down as a general rule that an alleged offender is deemed to have acted under that state of things which be in good faith and on reasonable grounds believed to exist when he did the act alleged to be an offence. Under the facts and circumstances of this case it was held that the respondent was entitled to the protection under this section and was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.[79]

12. Breach of Obligations

Breach of obligations is not frustrated by law. The duty to take care for the safety of the patrons is cast upon the occupier of cinema, both in common law as also in terms of statutory provisions on the subject. Where in Uphaar Cinema building in New Delhi, the building caught fire causing death of 59 persons, accused AI and A2, owners of the cinema building had not taken sufficient safety measures, which led to the tragedy, the accused were not exonerated of the charges simply because license to exhibit films had been granted and was renewed from time to time in favour of the occupier/licensee of the cinema house.[80]

13. Normal and Abnormal Law

The law considered above is the usual or municipal law, but a person may also be excused from what is a *prima facie*crime, because he was bound to act or justified in acting as he did, owing to some abnormal or exceptional law, which is opposed to the ordinary law of the country.424

Acts of War

Numerous as have been the wars in which Great Britain has participated, there has never been a prosecution for anything done as a military measure.

The essence of war is, of course, that each side shall do as much harm to the other as it can, extreme cases of cruelty being guarded against by the restrictions imposed by international law. No court of law would enquire into the conduct of individuals of whatever rank in the Army or Navy engaged in hostilities within or without its ordinary territorial jurisdiction. An act being an act of war, there is an end of the question of liability under the ordinary law of the country. The state adopts the acts of its citizens engaged in war as its own.

Conquest in the Course of War

Foreign conquest suspends the ordinary law of the conquered country, the inhabitants being compelled to submit to the laws imposed by the conquering power. So long as a state can protect its citizens, its sovereignty lasts, but no longer. Even in the case of civil war, where one side at first must necessarily be guilty of rebellion or treason, persons assisting or obeying a king de facto, i.e., the head of the rebellious side, which is the stronger at the time, is freed from penalty.[81] The abnormal law imposed upon him by the rebels thus excuses him.

Acts of State

These are acts done by the State in its sovereign character, for some State purpose, and avowedly upon grounds higher than municipal law. Such acts are final, and can only be called into question by war or by an appeal to the justice of the State itself, for 'even if a wrong has been done, it is a wrong for which no municipal court of justice can afford a remedy'.[82]

Acts of State may take place either by express direction of the government, or by subsequent ratification.[83]

There are two important points to be noted in regard to acts of State. First, the doctrine only applies to acts which affect foreigners. 'As between the sovereign and his subjects there can be no such thing as an act of State. Courts of law are established for the express purpose of limiting public authority in its conduct towards individuals...but as between British subjects and foreigners, the orders of the Crown justify what they command, so far as British Court of Justice are concerned'.[84]

Thus in the case of Musgrave v Pulido ,[85] where the Governor of Jamaica committed certain acts (affecting those under his charge, i.e., British subjects) beyond his authority as governor, and pleaded that they were acts of State, the Privy Council held that in such cases the municipal courts should determine the true character of the acts done. 'Though it may be that when it is established that the particular act in question is really an act of State policy, done under the authority of425 the Crown, the defence is complete, and the courts can take no further cognizance of it'.[86] And so, in the case of Walker v Baird ,[87] where the captain of an Englishman-of-war, under general instructions from the Admiralty, seized a lobster factory belonging to a British subject, on the ground that the establishment of such on the particular part of the Newfoundland coast, was prohibited by the terms of a treaty concluded between Her Majesty and the French government, the Privy Council held that it was a question as to whether the Crown had the power otherwise than by the legislature to compel its subjects to obey the provisions of a treaty made by the Crown, but that it was no defence merely to plead that the matter was an act of State and therefore could not be enquired into by the court.

Secondly, an act of State must avowedly be done under the sanction of sovereign power, and not under colour of the municipal law, for if it be done under a claim of right given by municipal law, it is not an act of State but an act done by the State, and its legality depends upon the doctrine of the ordinary law.[88]

14.Martial Law--Justification of Acts Done During Time of War

According to English constitutional law, where a state of war, or an insurrection amounting to war, exists, it is competent for the Crown, in the exercise of its prerogative, to place the country affected under martial law.[89] The existence of martial law places all citizens in the area to which it extends under the unfettered control of the military authorities, whose acts are not justiciable by the civil courts.[90] As Malgavkan J observed in Chanappa Shatirappa v Emperor :[91]

> The justification for the acts of the military lies not merely in their bona fides but in the existence of necessity, i.e., in the proof of such a state of war, insurrection or armed resistance, as to justify the cessation of the ordinary law and its replacement by military force pure and simple. The question of necessity or whether the proved facts amount to necessity is a question of fact for the courts. If necessity is proved, then the acts of the military are not justiciable by the ordinary courts. Unless it is proved, they are so justiciable.

The courts have, at any rate in time of peace, jurisdiction in respect of acts which have been done by military authorities and others during a state of war.[92]

The protection of military men and others against actions or prosecutions in respect of unlawful acts done during a time of war, bona fide, and in the service of the country, is an act of indemnity.[93]

An act of indemnity is a statute the object of which is to make legal transactions which, when they took place, were illegal, or to free individuals to whom the statute applies from liability for having broken the law.[94]

This doctrine of immunity is however open to the very strongest objections.[95]426

15.Commission of Suicide by Subordinate on Departmental Action by Higher Authority

Commentary under same heading in s 76, ante, may be referred to.

58 State v Krishna Murari AIR 1955 All 397, p 399 .

59 Jarnial Singh v Dilbagh Singh (1993) 3 Crimes 314, p 316 (P&H).

60 Emperor v Nanak Chand AIR 1943 Lah 208, p 209 .

61 Sushil Ansal v State (2014) 6 SCC 173, p 277, 2014 AIR SCW 2689, 2014 (3) Scale 174 .

62 First Report, s 114, p 219.

63 MN Schamnad v MN Rama Rao AIR 1933 Mad 268, p 269, 34 Cr LJ 528 .

64 Nagraj v State of Mysore AIR 1964 SC 269, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 161 (SC) .

65 State of Andhra Pradesh v Venugopal & Ors AIR 1964 SC 33, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 161 (SC) .

66 Nagaraj v State of Mysore AIR 1964 SC 269, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 161 (SC) .

67 Emperor v Kassim Esub Sah 13 Cr LJ 530(1), 14 Bom LR 365.

68 Re *KR Lewis*AIR 1914 Mad 277, 38 ILR Mad 773, 15 Cr LJ 171 following Re Penchul Reddy Kottur 12 Cr LJ 99.

69 Abdul Aziz v Emperor AIR 1943 Pesh 72, p 73 .

70 King v Tustipada Mandal & Anor AIR 1951 Ori 284, p 288 .

71 Abdul Aziz v Emperor AIR 1943 Pesh 72 .

72 Bux Soo Meah Chowdry v King AIR 1938 Rang 350 .

73 Mahommad Raffi v State (1992) Mad LJ 599, p 601 (Cr) (Mad) .

74 Nurul Huda v Amitabh Bachchan (1985) 1 Cr LC 135 (All) .

75 State of Andhra Pradesh v N Venugopal & Ors AIR 1964 SC 33, (1964) (1) Cr LJ 16 (SC) .

76 Ouseph Thommen v Joseph Antony (1957) Cr LJ 166 (Tr & Coch); Mahommad Ali v Ramaswaroop AIR 1965 All 161, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 413 ; Ramalinga Nadar v Gandhi (1969) Mad LW 103 (Cr) .

77 Raising Mohmia v State AIR 1962 Guj 203, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 717 ; Surinder Kaur v Mohinder Singh (1978) Punj LR 12, p 16 .

78 B Somnath Patra v State (1988) 1 Crimes 794 (Ori) .

79 State of Orissa v Bhagaban Barik (1987) 2 SCC 498, AIR 1987 SC 1265, (1987) Cr LJ 1115, (1987) 2 Cr LC 329, (1987) 3 JT (SC) 96, (1987) 2 SCJ 188, (1987) 2 Cur LJ 97 (Civ & Cr).

80 Sushil Ansal v State 2014 AIR SCW 2689, (2014) 6 SCC 173, 2014 (3) Scale 174 .

81 Statute 11 Hen VII, c I.

82 Secy of State for India v Kamachee Boye Sahiba 7 MIA 476, 13 Moo PCC 22, 86; Salaman v Secy of State for India 1906 1 KB 613 ; Cook v Sprigg (1899) AC 572 ; For examples of such acts see in addition EI Co v Syed Ally 7 MIA 555 ; Jijoyamba v Bayi Saiba 3 Mad HCR 424 ; Raja Saligram v Secy of State for India 12 Bom LR 167 .

83 Secy of State for India v Kamachee Boye Sahiba 13 Moo PCC 22 .

84 SHCLE, vol 11, 65.

85 Musgrave v Pulido 1879 5 AC 102, [1879] 5 App Cas 102 .

86 Ibid.

87 Walker v Baird (1892) AC 491 .

88 Forester v Secy of State 12 Bom LR 128 (PC) ; Secy of State v Hari Bhanji 5 ILR Mad 273 .

89 Chanappa Shatirappa v Emperor AIR 1931 Bom 57, p 58 .

90 Chanappa Shatirappa v Emperor AIR 1931 Bom 57, p 67 ; Ex p DF Marais[1902] AC 109; Attorney-General for the Cape of Good Hope v Van Reenen (1904) AC 114 .

91 Chanappa Shatirappa v Emperor AIR 1931 Bom 57, p 65 .

92 Dicey's Law of the Constitution, fifth edn, p 545.

93 Ibid, p 547.

94 Ibid.

95 Ibid, p 551.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 80.

Accident in doing a lawful act.--

Nothing is an offence which is done by accident or misfortune, and without any criminal intention or knowledge in the doing of a lawful act in a lawful manner by lawful means and with proper care and caution.

Illustration

A is at work with a hatchet; the head flies off and kills a man who is standing by. Here, if there was no want of proper caution on the part of A, his act is excusable and not an offence.

Comments

1. Scope

Section 80, IPC is a part of ch IV, IPC, dealing with 'General Exceptions'. The 'general exceptions' contained in ss 76 to 106 make an offence a non-offence. The 'general exceptions' enacted by the IPC are of universal application and for the sake of brevity of expression, instead of repeating in every section that the definition is to be taken subject to the exceptions, the legislature, by s 6, IPC enacted that all the definitions must be regarded as subject to the general exceptions. Therefore, general exceptions are part of definition of every offence contained in the IPC but the burden to prove their existence lies on the accused.[1]The section exempts the doer of an innocent or lawful act in an innocent and lawful manner from any unforeseen result that may ensue from accident or misfortune. If either of these elements is wanting, the act will not be excused on the ground of accident.[2]

Accident and misfortune afford a good defence in certain cases and in certain circumstances.[3]The defence of accident or 'inadvertence without culpability' is available in all those cases in which a particular intent or state of mind is of the essence of the offence. A person who is accused of such an offence may excuse himself by showing that, although he did the act or made the omission which is the subject of the charge, he did it while he was acting lawfully and through inadvertence427 and without culpable negligence.[4] If he kills a man under the bona fide belief that he is shooting at a bear or ghost, he is protected by the provisions of this section.[5]

This section is applicable to some lawful act done in a lawful manner by lawful means with proper care and caution.[6]

2. Ingredients

To claim the benefit of the provisions of s 80, it has to be shown: (1) that the act in question was without any criminal intention or knowledge; (2) that the act was being done in lawful manner and by lawful means; (3) that the act was being done with proper care and caution.[7]

3. Sections 76, 79, 80 and Legislative Intent in General Exceptions

Commentary in synopsis under s 76, ante, may be referred to.

4. Primordial Requirement

Section 80, IPC protects an act done by accident or misfortune and without any criminal intention or knowledge in the doing of a lawful act in a lawful manner by lawful means and with proper care and caution. The primordial requirement of s 80 is that the act which killed the other person must have been done 'with proper care and caution'. In Bhupendrasinh A Chaudasama v State of Gujarat ,[8]it was held that where the accused shot his own colleague at close range without knowing the identity of his target, the act smacked of utter dearth of any care and caution.

The amount of care and circumspection taken by an accused must be one taken by a prudent and reasonable man in the circumstances of a particular case. Where the act of the accused is itself criminal in nature, the protection under s 80 is not available. If the accused pleads exception within the meaning of s 80 there is a presumption against him and the burden to rebut the presumption lies on him.[9] Where the evidence on record as substantiated by the testimony of two witnesses of the prosecution showed that the accused picked up the gun, unlocked it, loaded it with cartridges and shot the gun from a close range of about 4/5 ft, aimed at his chest, certainly, in view of unimpeachable evidence of the said two witnesses, s 80 has no application.[10]

5. Accident or Misfortune

An accident is not the same as an occurrence, but something that happens out of the normal or ordinary course of things. An effect is said to be accidental when the act is not done with the intention of causing it, and its occurrence as a consequence of such428 act is not so probable that a person of ordinary prudence ought, under the circumstances in which it is done to take reasonable precautions against it. The idea of something fortuitous and unexpected is involved in the word 'accident'.[11] 'Misfortune' means an unfortunate incident, mishap or disaster. On the other hand, an 'accident' is something that happens unexpectedly or is done unintentionally.[12] An injury is said to be caused accidentally when it is not caused willfully or negligently.[13] When steering wheel of offending vehicle was broken all of sudden, which resulted into accident causing death of a person, it can be said that the incident was merely an accident.[14]

The accused and the deceased were friends and were fond of wrestling. The accused invited the deceased for a wrestling bout. They went to an akhara and wrestled there. Whilst wrestling, the deceased was thrown and his head came in contact accidentally with the hard edge of the adjoining chabutra, which resulted in the fracture of his skull and death. It was held that there was a clear absence of intention on the part of the accused to cause the death of the deceased, that the injury was sustained by the deceased accidentally and that the accused was protected by this section.[15]

6. Elements of Non-liability under Section 80

The purely accidental consequences of a man's voluntary conduct will not be imputed to him, if: (a) he had no criminal intention or knowledge; (b) his conduct is lawful; and (c) the consequences are purely accidental.[16]

7. 'Without any Criminal Intention or Knowledge'

To constitute a crime, the act must, except in the case of certain statutory crimes, be accompanied by a criminal intent or by such negligence or indifference to duty or to consequences as is regarded by the law, as equivalent to a criminal intent. Intention, however, is not capable of positive proof; it can only be implied from overt acts. As a general rule, every sane man is presumed to intend the necessary or the natural and probable consequences of his acts and this presumption of law will prevail unless, from a consideration of all the evidence, the court entertains a reasonable doubt whether such intention existed. This presumption, however, is not conclusive, nor alone sufficient, to justify a conviction and should be supplemented by other testimony.[17]

The accused and deceased, both brothers, were in a state of sleep. The accused in his dream felt someone was throttling him. He took the dao and dealt a blow, resulting in the death of the deceased. It was held that due to semi-sleep it could not be said that the accused had criminal intention and motive in killing the deceased. In view of the involuntary act, therefore, in absence of motive or malice, the accused was entitled to benefit of doubt.[18]429

Where the accused labourer was digging the earth with a spade and the deceased came near him to collect the earth dug by him thereby suffering a spade injury at the hands of the accused, the act of the accused was held neither within s 302 nor within s 304 nor under s 80, IPC but constituted criminal negligence and case came under s 304A .[19]

When the accused was aiming lathi blow at the aggressor in lawful exercise of his right of private defence of body, unfortunately, the deceased came in between and the lathi blow, meant for the aggressor, landed on the deceased's head causing him fatal injury. There was nothing on record to show that the accused caused injury to the deceased with any criminal intent or knowledge or to show that there was absence of proper care and caution on the part of accused. In such a case, the case of the accused would clearly fall within the purview of s 80, IPC .[20] The primordial requirement of the exception under s 80, IPC, is that the act by which the offence is committed should have been done 'with proper care and caution'.[21]

8. The Consequences must be Purely Accidental--Plea of Accident is Negatived by Negligence

The consequences of a man's conduct are not purely accidental if he has acted with any degree of negligence, i.e., without due care and caution, in which case he will be liable for the consequences. 'Negligence' is to be distinguished from 'rashness'. Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so, that it may cause injury, but without intention to cause injury, or knowledge that it will probably be caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequences. Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted.[22]

> Culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow but with the hope that they will not, and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precautions to prevent their happening. The imputability arises from acting despite the consciousness. Culpable negligence is acting without the consciousness that the illegal and mischievous effect will follow, but in circumstances which show that the actor has not exercised the caution incumbent upon him, and that, if he had, he would have the consciousness. The imputability arises from the neglect of the civic duty of circumspection.[23]

These interpretations were approved in HW Smith v Emperor ,[24] by a division Bench which also referred to the following dictum of Alderson B, in Blyth v Brimingham Water Works Co :[25]430

> Each case must be judged in reference to the precautions, which, in respect to it, the ordinary experience of men has found to be sufficient, though the use of special or extraordinary precautions might have prevented the particular accident which happened.

Justice Mukerji, in the division Bench case then pointed out that the question whether the accused's conduct amounted to culpable rashness or negligence depended directly on the question as to what was the amount of care and circumspection which a prudent and reasonable man would consider to be sufficient upon all the circumstances of the case.

9. Care and Caution

The primordial requirement of the exception under s 80, IPC, is that the act which killed the other person should have been done 'with proper care and caution'. The very fact that accused shot his own colleague at close range without knowing the identity of his target shows utter dearth of any care and caution.[26] The amount of caution to be used is not the utmost possible, but reasonable precaution, having regard to the facts of the case[27](see illusts 4 and 5 above). The man, pleading accident in terms of s 80 must act as a man of ordinary prudence. He should exercise that care and exercise those precautions which as a reasonable and prudent man, he should exercise or take.[28]

10. Burden of Proof

Where the accused puts forward a substantive defence of accident, it is incumbent upon him to prove it. The court is entitled to a full and, so far as possible, detailed account of what happened.[29]

If an accused pleads an exception within the meaning of s 80, IPC, there is a presumption against him and the burden to rebut that presumption lies on him.[30] But the accused is not required to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt; it is sufficient if he succeeds in proving a preponderance of probability.[31] The Calcutta High Court has also taken a similar view and it was held that the meaning of s 105 of the Evidence Act 1872, is that it is not for the prosecution to examine all possible defences which might be put forward on behalf of the accused and to prove that none of them applies. The onus that lies on the accused, is, however, not that rigid as on the prosecution to prove their case. The test is not whether the accused has proved beyond all reasonable doubt that he comes within any exception, but whether in setting up the defence, he has established a reasonable doubt in the case for the prosecution and thereby earned his right of acquittal. But this does not mean that he must lead evidence. If it is apparent from the evidence on record furnished by the prosecution that a general exception would apply, then the presumption is removed and it is open to the court to consider whether the evidence proves to the satisfaction of the court that the accused comes within the exception.[32]431

Even where the evidence raised a possibility of accident, the accused is entitled to benefit of doubt.[33] Likewise, where the accused has failed to substantiate the plea of accident, the accused is still entitled to acquittal if from the prosecution evidence, the case otherwise fails.[34]

11. Medical Negligence

When a patient agrees to go for medical treatment or surgical operation, every careless act of the medical man cannot be termed as 'criminal'. It can be termed 'criminal' only when the medical man exhibits a gross lack of competence or inaction and wanton indifference to his patient's safety and which is found to have arisen from gross ignorance or gross negligence. Where a patient's death results merely from error of judgment or an accident, no criminal liability should be attached to it. Mere inadvertence or some degree of want of adequate care and caution might create civil liability but would not suffice to hold him criminally liable.[35]

12. Contributory Negligence

It is well-established that the doctrine of contributory negligence is so well known in the law of tort that it has, as such, fortunately, no place in criminal law. The question is purely one of causation and the facts of each case would be examined in the light of the principles suggested above. It may, in some cases, then, appear that it was the sufferers' own conduct which can alone be regarded as the cause of his misfortune.[36] But where this is not so the victim's carelessness or folly does not per se limit the liability of one who has in fact caused him harm.[37] Refer to synopsis notes under s 304A .

13. Commission of Suicide by Subordinate on Departmental Action by Higher Authority

Commentary under same heading in s 76, ante, may be referred to.

14. Singapore Law

In Ismail Bin Abdul Rahman v Public Prosecutor it was observed, 'A firearm is, as we all know, a very lethal weapon, and when fired, it can cause death or injury even to innocent bystanders in the vicinity, whatever the intention of the accused may be. Therefore, arms and firearms must be distinguished from other weapons like knives, parangs and so on.'[38]

In a case from Singapore, the accused appellant, a former CISCO officer, known to the deceased on the date of the incident had discharged three bullets from a revolver at the deceased, a CISCO officer on duty. At trial, the accused appellant took plea432 that it was a case of accidental fire. The appellant pointed the revolver at the deceased and pulled the trigger thrice, thinking that it was not loaded. It was loaded and two rounds hit the deceased. The appellant accidentally pulled the trigger a third time and another shot hit the deceased. Held, the appellant had fired the three shots with intention to cause death of the deceased. It was not a case of accidental fire. The death sentence awarded to the appellant was held proper.[39]

1 Shankar Narayan Bhadolkar v State of Maharashtra (2004) Cr LJ 1778 (SC) .

2 Sukhdev Singh v Delhi State (Govt of NCT of Delhi) AIR 2003 SC 3716, (2003) Cr LJ 4315 (SC) .

3 Halsbury's Laws of England, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, 1976, pp 23-24, para 22.

4 Batting v Bristol & Exeter Rail Co (1860) 3 LT 665 ; R v Noakes (1866) 4 F&F 920 ; R v Finney (1874) 12 Cox CC 625 .

5 State of Orissa v Khora Ghasi (1978) 45 Cut LT 593, p 596 (DB) ; Bonda Kui v Emperor (1942) 43 Cr LJ 787 (Pat) .

6 Ramesh Chandra v State of Uttar Pradesh (1994) 31 ACC 673 (DB) .

7 Sukhdev Singh v Delhi State (Govt of NCT of Delhi) AIR 2003 SC 3716, (2003) Cr LJ 4315 (SC) .

8 Bhupendrasinh A Chaudasama v State of Gujarat AIR 1997 SC 3790, (1998) 2 SCC 603, (1998) Cr LJ 57 .

9 See KM Nanavati v State of Maharashtra AIR 1962 SC 605, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 521 .

10 Shankar Narayan Bhadolkar v State of Maharashtra (2004) Cr LJ 1778 (SC) .

11 Sukhdev Singhg v Delhi State (Govt of NCT of Delhi) AIR 2003 SC 3716, (2003) Cr LJ 4315 (SC) .

12 Webster's Dictionary.

13 10th Par Rep 16.

14 Mahadev v State of Madhya Pradesh (2006) Cr LJ 4246 (MP) .

15 Tunda v Rex AIR 1950 All 95 .

16 R v Murray 5 Cox CC 509 .

17 Ismail v Emperor AIR 1947 Lah 220, p 221 ; Mohan Singh v State AIR 1965 Punj 291, (1965) 2 Cr LJ 127 .

18 Pateswar Basumatary v State of Assam (1989) Cr LJ 196 (Gau) .

19 Sita Ram v State of Rajasthan (1998) Cr LJ 287 (DB) .

20 Hori Lal v State of Uttar Pradesh (1983) Cr LR 473 (UP), (1983) All LJ 1316, (1983) All Cr R 516, (1984) 1 Crimes 64 (All), (1984) All Cr C 112 .

21 Bhupendrasingh A Chudasama v State of Gujarat AIR 1997 SC 3790, (1998) Cr LJ 57 (SC) .

22 Empress v Idu Beg 3 ILR All 776, per Straight J; Bhalchandra v State of Maharashtra AIR 1968 SC 1319, (1968) Cr LJ 1501 ; State v Narhari AIR 1969 Goa 87, (1969) Cr LJ 977 .

23 R v Nidamarti 7 Mad HCR 119, per Halloway J.

24 HW Smith v Emperor, AIR 1926 Cal 300, 27 Cr LJ 153, 53 ILR Cal 333 .

25 Blyth v Brimingham Water Works Co (1856) 11 Ex 781, p 784 .

26 Bhupendrasinh A Chudasama v State of Gujarat AIR 1997 SC 3790, (1998) Cr LJ 57 (SC) .

27 Alison's Criminal Law, p 143.

28 Ram Das v State (1967) All Cr R 445, (1967) All WR 710 (HC) ; Horilal v State of Uttar Pradesh (1984) 1 Crimes 64 (All), (1983) All LJ 1316, (1984) 1 Cr LC 44 (All), (1984) All Cr C 112 .

29 Emperor v Dwijendra Chandra Mukherjee AIR 1916 Cal 633 .

30 KM Nanavati v State of Maharashtra AIR 1962 SC 605, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 521, p 534 ; Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1966 SC 97, p 102, (1967) ILR Ker 640 (DB) .

31 Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1966 SC 97, p 102, (1967) ILR Ker 640, p 678 (DB) .

32 Karali Bauri v Subhas Das Musib (1983) Cr LJ 1474, (1983) 87 CWN 844 (Cal) (DB).

33 Mohd Saddiq v Crown 50 Cr LJ 397, AIR 1949 Lah 85 .

34 Dahyabhai v State of Gujarat AIR 1964 SC 1563, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 472 ; Harbhajan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1966 SC 97, (1967) ILR Ker 640 .

35 Katcherla Venkata Sunil v Vanguri Seshumamba 2008 Cr LJ 853, p 857 (AP) .

36 R v Dalloway (1847) 3 Cox 273, 478 ; post p 478.

37 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 33, citing R v Walker (1824) l C&P 320, post p 478; R v Swindall and Osbome (1846) 2 C&K 230, post p 473.

38 Ismail Bin Abdul Rahman v Public Prosecutor (2004) SGCA 7, (2004) 2 SLR 74, 3 March 2004 .

39 Ismail Bin Abdul Rahman v Public Prosecutor (2004) 2 SLR 74 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 81.

Act likely to cause harm, but done without criminal intent, and to prevent other harm.--

Nothing is an offence merely by reason of its being done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause harm, if it be done without any criminal intention to cause harm, and in good faith for the purpose of preventing or avoiding other harm to person or property.

Explanation.--It is a question of fact in such a case whether the harm to be prevented or avoided was of such a nature and so imminent as to justify or excuse the risk of doing the act with the knowledge that it was likely to cause harm.

Illustrations

(a) A, the captain of a steam vessel, suddenly and without any fault or negligence on his part, finds himself in such a position that, before he can stop his vessel, he must inevitably run down a boat B, with twenty or thirty passengers on board, unless he changes the course of his vessel, and that, by changing his course, he must incur risk of running down a boat C with only two passengers on board, which he may possibly clear. Here, if A alters his course without any intention to run down the boat C and in good faith for the purpose of avoiding the danger to the passengers in the boat B, he is not guilty of an offence, though he may run down the boat C by doing an act which he knew was likely to cause that effect, if it be found as a matter of fact that the danger which he intended to avoid was such as to excuse him in incurring the risk of running down the boat C.

(b) A, in a great fire, pulls down houses in order to prevent the conflagration from spreading. He does this with the intention in good faith of saving human life or property. Here if it be found that the harm to be prevented was of such a nature and so imminent as to excuse A's act, A is not guilty of the offence.433

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

This section comes into play when the person, causing harm, say by confining another, has a genuine and reasonable apprehension that to allow the other to remain at large will endanger the person and property of others. So, in order to attract this section, it should be shown that the act, complained of, was done in good faith in order to prevent, or avoid, harm to the person or property of others.[40] If a person threatens to commit an assault, he can be disarmed and, if necessary, put under restraint to prevent harm to persons or to property. A private person is justified in doing an act which would prevent any harm, happening to himself or another person, provided he does that act bona fide and without unnecessary force or violence.[41] So it is no offence to pull down houses to prevent a fire from spreading or to enter a person's house to put out a fire.[42] But where some persons dug the road to avoid their field being flooded, it was held that there was no question of there being a more likelihood of causing damage to public property and, therefore, no protection under this section could be taken.[43]

Under the section, the other harm to be prevented must be of such nature, and so imminent, as to justify causing the harm inflicted; and this is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case.[44]

2. Choice of Evils, or Compulsion by Necessity

This section deals with what is known, in English law, as 'compulsion by necessity', i.e., where a person confronted with two evils, one of which is inevitable, chooses the lesser rather than the greater, the law justifies his doing so, and does not render him responsible for the consequences of his action. The ground for his non-liability is justification or excuse, by reason of the absence of mens rea.[45]

The same principle is recognised in the civil law, for there is some old authority for saying that in certain cases a man can justify the commission of a tort on the ground of necessity, e.g., a trespass on property for the purpose of saving life, or extinguishing a fire.[46]

Sir JF Stephen says:

> Compulsion by necessity is one of the curiosities of law, 'on which the law of England is so vague that if cases raising the question should ever occur, the Judges would practically be able to lay down any rule which they considered expedient.[47]434

The first framers of the Code, recognising the difficulties involved, preferred not to lay down any exception at all, but to leave the whole matter to the executive discretion of government, 'which in the exercise of its clemency, will doubtless be guided in great measure by the advice of the courts'.[48]

3. Motive as a Justification of Harm

Motive may sometime justify the infliction of harm, viz, where it is to prevent other and greater harm. Harm may thus be caused to prevent harm. But the harm caused must not be an offence intentionally committed, i.e., a man may not intentionally commit a crime to prevent other harm.

The harm may be caused intentionally, or the risk of causing it may be run.

4. The Three Essentials of the Section

The application of the section thus depends upon:

(i) the presence of the particular motive specified;
(ii) the existence of good faith; and
(iii) the absence of intention to commit crime, i.e., criminal intention.[49]

5. Motive 'for the Purpose of Preventing or Avoiding other Harm to Person or Property'

This section comes into play when the person causing harm, say by confining another, has a genuine and reasonable apprehension that to allow the other to remain at large will endanger the person and property of others. So, in order to attract this section it should be shown that the act complained of was done in good faith in order to prevent or avoid, harm to the person or property of others.[50]If a person threatens to commit an assault, he can be disarmed and, if necessary, put under restraint to prevent harm to persons or to property. A private person is justified in doing an act which would prevent any harm happening to himself or to another person provided he does that act, bona fide and without unnecessary force or violence.[51]

In an Allahabad case the complainant having molested a chamar girl, about 200 chamars of the village collected together. They were determined to punish the complainant, and caught hold of him. Some villagers intervened and called a panchayat to settle the dispute. With a view to avoid harm to the complainant, and in his interest and for his benefit, the panchayat decided to blacken his face and that he should be beaten with shoes. The decision having been carried out, the accused who formed the panchayat were prosecuted for offences punishable under ss 323 and 506 read with s 114, IPC . It was held that the accused acted in good faith, without any criminal intent, in order to save the complainant from serious consequences resulting from his own indecent behaviour, and were entitled to the benefit of the exception contained in this section.[52]435

Under the section the other harm to be prevented must be of such a nature, and so imminent as to justify causing the harm inflicted; and this is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case.[53]

6. Knowledge and Intention

Knowledge as contrasted with intention would properly signify a state of mental realisation in which the mind is a passive recipient of certain ideas and impressions arising in it or passing before it. It would refer to a bare state of conscious awareness of certain facts in which the human mind might itself be supine or inactive, on the other hand, intention connotes a conscious state in which mental faculties are aroused into activity and summoned into action for the deliberate purpose of being directed towards a particular and specified end which the human mind conceives and perceives before itself.

Mental faculties which might be dispersed in the case of knowledge are in the case of intention concentrated and converged on a particular point and projected in a set direction. The difference between the shades of meaning of the two words is fine but clear and the use of the one in place of the other by the legislature cannot be without purpose. A distinction must be made between motive, intention and knowledge. Motive is something which prompts a man to form an intention and knowledge is an awareness of the consequences of the act. In many cases intention and knowledge merge into each other and mean the same thing more or less and intention can be presumed from knowledge.[54]

7. Demarcating Line is thin Between Knowledge and Intention

Motive is not to be confused with intention. If a man knows that a certain consequence will follow from his act, it must be presumed in law that he intended that consequence to take place, although he may have had some different ulterior motive for performing the act.[55] While intention is a state of mind consisting of a desire that certain consequences shall follow from the party's physical act or omission,[56]motive is an ulterior intention, the intention with which an intentional act is done (or more clearly the intention with which an intentional consequence is brought about).

Intention, when distinguished from motive, relates to the means, motive to the end.[57] In Basdev v State of Pepsu ,[58] their Lordships of the Supreme Court pointed out the distinction between motive, intention and knowledge as:

> Motive is something which prompts a man to form an intention, and knowledge is an awareness of the consequences of the act. In many cases intention and knowledge merge into each other and mean the same thing more or less, and intention can be presumed from knowledge. The demarcating line between knowledge and intention is no doubt thin, but it is not difficult to perceive that they connote different things.436

It may be remarked that the word 'intention' is wrongly employed in illust (b), which affords an example of the not common confusion in popular language between 'intention' and 'motive' or 'purpose'.[59] A's real intention in the illustration is to destroy the houses; his purpose or motive in so doing is to save human life or property.

8. Desire and Intention

There is a distinction between a desire to do a thing and an intention to do it. A man, for instance, may intentionally carry out an unpleasant duty although he may much prefer not to carry it out, or he may, much against his immediate desires intentionally undergo a painful operation with the ultimate object of recovering his health.[60]

9. Proof of Motive

There are both Indian and English authorities which make it perfectly clear that it is not at all necessary for the prosecution, in order to establish a charge of crime, to prove a motive for it, much less the adequacy of that motive.[61] Indeed, for the purpose of proving the offence or the incident itself, when there is direct evidence, motive pales into insignificance.[62] Where there is clear proof of motive for the crime, it lends additional support to the finding of the court that the accused was guilty, but its absence does not necessarily lead to a contrary conclusion.[63] Merely because it is not possible to find out the exact motive, direct evidence relating to the crime cannot be disbelieved, if it is reliable.[64] But while the prosecution is not bound to prove the motive of an occurrence, it is necessary for the court to consider the matter carefully when, in fact, the prosecution suggests a motive.[65] Though evidence of motive is not necessary for convicting an accused, the evidence about motive throws considerable light on the actions of those who are involved in the case. In the absence of such evidence, the setting is not proper, and the test of arriving at the truth is rendered somewhat difficult. It may be that in certain cases the motive cannot be ascertained, yet an effort should be made by the prosecution to find it.[66]

Since the application of this section depends upon the presence of the particular motive specified, it is submitted that an accused pleading the exception must prove the motive.

10. 'Good Faith'

The act must be done with 'due care and attention',[67] i.e., so as to avoid or minimise, as the case may be, the contemplated harm, if possible.437

11. 'Without any Criminal Intention'

If harm is intended, the intention must not be 'criminal'.[68] A harm or injury accompanied by a criminal intention (mens rea) constitutes a crime. Hence, a man may not intentionally commit a crime in order to avoid another harm, though he may intend a harm or injury, or run the risk thereof for that purpose. In illust (a) the intentional running down of boat C would constitute culpable homicide, if one of the persons therein is killed in consequence,[69] and hence A alters his course 'without any intention to run down the boat C'. Nor does A intend harm, for he 'may possibly clear', though he may run down the boat C. He thus merely risks causing harm. In illust (b) A runs no risk, he intentionally demolishes houses and causes harm thereby to their owners. But since he has no mens rea in so doing the section protects him from criminal liability for causing such harm.[70]

Again in the case of an offence under s 328, causing hurt by means of poison, etc., the criminal intention is to cause hurt. Where A, in order to detect an unknown thief, placed juice of the milk bush in his toddy pots, and the toddy was drunk by some soldiers, who suffered hurt thereby, it was held that this section afforded no defence.[71] The offences of 'theft' and 'murder' may now be considered, in this connection.

12. Theft

The criminal intent in theft is the intent 'to take dishonestly'[72] and a person does a thing 'dishonestly' when he does it with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another[73] and wrongful gain or loss is caused by unlawful means.[74] Can a prima facie thief of a loaf of bread exempt himself under s 81 from liability on the plea that although he took the loaf, thereby injuring the baker, he took it for the purpose of avoiding other harm, e.g., starvation to himself and his family? He intends to take and takes by unlawful means, causing thereby a wrongful loss. He, therefore, takes 'dishonestly', and his case would be excluded from the section by reason of his dishonest and criminal intention. This is accordance with the English law under which necessity from the want of food or clothing can never excuse the sufferer from committing theft, though it may go in mitigation of punishment.[75]

13. Murder

If an individual may not steal in order to avoid starvation, it would seem conclusive that under no circumstances in the absence of express provision of the law to the contrary, may intentionally take the life of another in order to preserve his own. There is no doubt that such is the law, though 'casuists have for centuries amused themselves, and may amuse themselves for centuries to come, by speculating as to438 the moral duty of two persons in the water struggling for the possession of a plank capable of supporting only one'.[76] Thus, it has been said that if A and B get hold of a plank in the sea after a shipwreck which is not large enough to support both, and A pushes B off, this is no crime.[77] This dictum of Bacon was considered in the case of R v Dudley ,[78] the only case on the point under consideration which has come before an English Court. The facts of the case as found by the jury were: A, B and C, three seamen, were, together with D, a boy, cast away on the high seas in an open boat. After the 18th day, when they had seen seven days without food and five days without water, and were about 1,000 miles from land, A killed D, and the three fed on his body for four days being then rescued by a passing vessel. Without so doing, A, B and C would probably not have survived, and the boy being very weak was likely to have died before them.

The judges were all of opinion that no question of manslaughter, (i.e., culpable homicide not amounting to murder) arose. This would be the case also under the IPC . No intentional killing can be merely 'culpable homicide', unless it falls within one or other of the exceptions to s 300 . An intention to kill is the criminal intention in murder, and such intention is expressly excluded by the terms of this section. No intentional killing therefore can ever be exempted under it.[79] Thus Coleridge LC J, remarked in R v Dudley ,[80]

> If Lord Bacon meant to lay down (by the dictum quoted above) the broad proposition that a man may, say save his life by killing, if necessary, an innocent and unoffending neighbour, it certainly is not law at the present day. Consequently, a man who, in order to escape death by starvation, kills another for the purpose of eating his flesh is guilty of murder.

It is undoubtedly an inflexible rule of law that the 'necessity' arising from temptation, however terrible, is never exempted from criminal liability. The starving man who steals, the castaway who kills a companion to sustain life by eating his flesh, the woman who during a great famine, kills a child for the sake of its ornaments to sell for food, are all guilty. Their respective temptations afford no justification, however, much they may mitigate the punishments.[81]

14. Doctrine of mens rea

It is an almost immemorial commonplace of English judges to state that there can be no conviction on a criminal charge unless the prisoner has a mens rea, or guilty mind. The maxim which lays down this doctrine (Actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea/Non est reus nisi mens sit rea) has been traced by Sir James Stephen backwards through Lord Coke to the laws of Henry I,[82] Lord Kenyon CJ, long ago declared: 'It is a principle of natural justice and of our law that actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea the intent and the act must both concur to constitute the crime.'[83] Tracing the evolution of this principle, Russell[84] says:

> The new conception that merely to bring about a prohibited crime should not involve a man in liability to punishment unless in addition he could be regarded as morally439 blameworthy came to be enshrined in the well-known maxim, actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. This ancient maxim has remained unchallenged as a declaration of principle at common law throughout the centuries up to the present day. So long, therefore, as it remains unchallenged, no man should be convicted of crime at common law unless the two requirements which it envisages are satisfied, namely, that there must be both a physical element and a mental element in every crime.

Mens Rea in the Case of Statutory Offences

But the above maxim has not so wide an application as it is sometimes considered to be. It has undergone a modification owing to the greater precision of modern statutes. It is impossible to apply it generally to all statutes, and the substance of all reported cases is that it is necessary to look at the object of each Act that is under consideration, to see whether and how far knowledge is of the essence of the offence created. Crimes are at the present day much more accurately defined by statutes or otherwise than they formerly were.[85]Mens rea is an essential ingredient of a criminal offence. Doubtless a statute may exclude the element of mens rea, but it is a sound rule of construction adopted in England and also accepted in India to construe a statutory provision creating an offence in conformity with the common law rather than against it unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication excluded mens rea. The mere fact that the object of the statute is to promote welfare activities or to eradicate a grave social evil is by itself not decisive of the question whether the element of guilty mind is excluded from the ingredients of an offence. Mensrea by necessary implication may be excluded from a statute only where it is absolutely clear that the implementation of the object of the statute would otherwise be defeated. The nature of mens rea that would be implied in a statute creating an offence depends on the object of the Act and the provisions thereof.[86] The presumption that mens rea, intention or a knowledge of the wrongfulness of the act, is an essential ingredient in every offence is liable to be displaced either by the words of the statute creating the offence, or by the subject-matter with which it deals, and both must be considered.[87]

Mens rea in the sense of actual knowledge that the act done is contrary to law is not an essential ingredient of the offence under s 8(1) read with s 23(1A) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act 1947.[88] Similarly, requirement of mens rea is not a necessary ingredient of s 35(1) of Bombay Public Trusts Act 1950.[89]

Now, though it is true that *actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea*is a cardinal doctrine of criminal law, the legislature can create an offence which consists solely in doing an act, whatever the intention or state of mind of the person acting may be. Whether mens rea is a constituent part of a crime or not must in every case depend upon the wording of the particular enactment.[90] As Goddard J, held in Evans v Dell :[91]

> With the complexity of modern legislation one knows that there are times when the court is constrained to find that, by reason of the clear terms of an Act of Parliament, mens rea or the absence, of *mens rea*becomes immaterial and that if a certain act is done, an offence is committed whether the person charged knew or did not know of the Act.440

In Brend v Wood ,[1] Lord Goddard CJ said:

> It is of the utmost importance for the liberty of the subject that a court should always bear in mind that unless a statute either clearly or by necessary implication rules out mens rea as a constituent part of a crime, the court should not find a man guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has a guilty mind.

So far as statutory offences are concerned the law relating to mens rea in England is thus summed up in Halsbury's Laws of England:[2]

> A statutory crime may or may not contain an express definition of the necessary state of mind. A statute may require a specific intention, malice, knowledge, willfulness or recklessness. On the other hand, it may be silent as to any requirement of mens rea, and in such a case, in order to determine whether or not mens rea is an essential element of the offence, it is necessary to look at the objects and terms of the statute. In some cases the courts have concluded that, despite the absence of express language, the intention of the legislature was that mens rea was a necessary ingredient of the offence. In others, the statute has been interpreted as creating a strict liability irrespective of mens rea. Instances of this strict liability have arisen on the legislation concerning food, and drugs, liquor licensing, and many other matters.

In India also the law is the same with respect to offences under statutes other than the IPC . In the case of an offence under the Defence of India Rules 1939, their Lordships of the Privy Council agreed with the view expressed by the Lord Chief Justice of England in Brend v Wood ,[3] quoted above.[4] In a case, their Lordships of the Supreme Court dealing with an offence under the Motor Spirit Rationing Order 1941 observed that the view of the law as propounded by the Privy Council in the above case was the correct view.[5] The same principles have been applied or reiterated in a number of other cases.[6] The position is thus summed up in the case of State v Ismail Shakur Morani: [7]441

> Thus, there is a judicial agreement that in order to find whether *mens rea*is or is not a constituent element of an offence created by a statute we must turn to the words of the statute and see what the intention of the legislature was when it created the offence, by enacting the statute. Did the legislature intend that the doing of an act per se, without anything more, should constitute an offence or did it intend that the doing of it with a certain state of mind should amount to an offence? If the essence of an offence lay solely in the doing of an act and nothing more was required, the question of mens rea would not arise and the state of mind, knowledge or intention of the doer would be irrelevant. On the other hand, if the legislature intended that the state of mind of the doer should be a constituent of the offence, the prosecution would fail without the proof of mens rea.

Statutory Offences may be Classified under Three Heads

Now, statutory offences may be classified under three heads for purposes of consideration of the aforesaid principle. In one class the offences are so worded as to indicate clearly that mens rea is an essential ingredient of the same. This is usually done by the use of such words as 'knowingly', 'willfully', 'fraudulently', etc. There are others offences, called offences of strict or absolute liability, where the maxim of mens rea is excluded expressly or by necessary implication. There is a third class of cases, where the language used is such that it neither expressly includes nor avowedly excludes the ingredient of mens rea. In such a case the presumption that mens rea is an essential ingredient of the offences not having been displaced by the wording of the statute, there can be no conviction without proof of mens rea. The absence of the words 'knowingly' or 'willfully' cannot lead to the inference that the presumption of mens rea was impliedly excluded by the statute.[8]

Three Classes of Exceptions to Mens Rea

The principal classes of exceptions to *mens rea*may perhaps be reduced to three. One is a class of acts which are not criminal in any real sense, but are acts which in the public interest are prohibited under a penalty. Another class comprehends some, and perhaps all, public nuisance. Lastly, there may be cases in which, although the proceeding is criminal in form, it is really only a summary mode of enforcing a civil right. But, except in such cases as these, there must in general be guilty knowledge on the part of the defendant, or of someone whom he has put in his place to act for him, generally, or in the particular matter, in order to constitute an offence.[9]

Mens Rea in Case of Offences under the Indian Penal Code 1860

Under the IPC, the maxim relating to mens rea is wholly out of place. Every offence is defined, and the definition states not only what the accused must have done, but even the state of his mind with regard to the act when he was doing it. It must have been done, knowingly, voluntarily, fraudulently, dishonestly, or the like. And when it is stated that the act must be done with a particular knowledge or intention, the definition goes on to state what he must have known, or what he must have442 intended.[10] If the legislature has omitted to prescribe a particular mental condition, the presumption is that the omission is intentional, and in such a case the doctrine of mens rea is not applicable.[11] 'Criminal law connotes only the quality or such acts of omissions as are prohibited under appropriate penal provisions by authority of the state. The criminal quality of an act cannot be discerned by intuition; nor can it be discovered by reference to any standard but one: Is the Act prohibited with penal consequences? Morality and criminality are far from co-extensive; nor is the sphere of criminality necessarily part of a more extensive field covered by morality...unless the moral code necessarily disapproves acts prohibited by the State, in which case the argument moves in a circle. It appears to their Lordships to be of little value to seek to confine crimes to a category of acts which by their very nature belong to the domain of 'criminal jurisprudence'; for the domain of 'criminal jurisprudence' can only be ascertained by examining what acts at any particular period are declared by the State to be crimes, and the only common nature they will be found to possess that they are prohibited by the State and that those who commit them are punished.[12]

Proof of Mens Rea

In the Indian penal statutes, where the doctrine of mens rea is intended to come into operation and a guilty mind is deemed essential for the proof of an offence, the statute itself uses the words like 'knowingly', 'willingly', 'fraudulently', 'negligently' and so on. Such knowledge or intention or negligence can always be brought home by adducing circumstantial evidence, in fact as pointed by Dr Kenney,[13]mens rea must necessarily be proved by circumstantial evidence alone (except where the accused actually confesses and what is more in India sticks to it and which is highly problematical). It may also be useful to recall that, in establishing such guilty knowledge, actual or direct, knowledge is not absolutely essential, there being no doubt that a person who deliberately shuts his eye to an obvious means of knowledge is equally liable. In the large class of penal Acts, the state as well as Central Acts which are really not criminal but which are prohibited by the levy of a penalty in the interests of the public, unless qualifying words are used, the prosecution need only prove the prohibited act and then must the defendant bring himself within the statutory defence. The absence of qualifying words connotes that the offence is intended to be one of absolute prohibition.

On the other hand, if qualifying words like 'knowingly', 'wilfully', 'fraudulently' and 'negligently' are used, the prosecution must bring home to the offender either by direct or circumstantial evidence the precise and particular elements connoted by these terms, i.e., showing liability of a guilty mind based in the form of actual knowledge or connivance. Where the offence is intended to be dependent upon a blameworthy mind in the form of knowledge of the facts constituting the offence, the term wilfully is used to denote this requirement. It denotes the necessity for proving that the accused had a guilty mind. If qualifying words like 'permitting', 'suffering', 'causing' or 'allowing' are used, it would be enough if the evidence makes out blameful inadvertence on the part of the offender, i.e., first the accused must be shown under this third group to have had guilty knowledge that the forbidden event443 is happening, and secondly that the accused, with such knowledge and being in a position to prevent the event happening, does nothing about it.[14]

Intention can be Implied from Overt Acts

To constitute a crime the act must, except in the case of certain statutory crimes, be accompanied by a criminal intent or by such negligence or indifference to duty or to consequences as is regarded by the law as equivalent to a criminal intent. Intention, however, is not capable of positive proof; it can only be implied from overt acts. As a general rule, every sane man is presumed to intend the necessary or the natural and probable consequences of his acts, and this presumption of law will prevail unless from a consideration of all the evidence, the court entertains a reasonable doubt whether such intention existed. This presumption, however, is not conclusive or alone sufficient to justify a conviction and should be supplemented by other testimony.[15] The purpose or intention with which a crime is committed is a matter to be deduced from the facts and circumstances of each case. Where no offence is actually committed, and the purpose of the accused has to be judged by reference to the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the accused, the proper test would be that the circumstances sought to be relied upon must be consistent with the one and the only purpose or intention set out in the charge.[16]

Mens Rea* and Negligence

Negligence, in the sense of blameful inadvertence, describes the state of mind of a person who ought to have known, and is obviously not so reprehensible as the state of mind of a person who willfully shuts his eyes to the obvious. Hitherto, strong objection has been voiced to basing criminal liability upon mere inadvertence. But where the phrase mens rea is used to denote a state of mind, it is possible to argue that the only state of mind which is pertinent is the positive form known as advertence, i.e., realisation on foresight of consequences, in which event the ambit of mens rea is restricted to intention and subjective recklessness. Conversely, it is possible to argue that although inadvertence involves the negative form of absence of realisation or foresight of consequences, it too can justifiably be termed a state of mind and, therefore, as forming, in certain conditions, part of the doctrine of mens rea. Negligence or blameful inadvertence or failure to supervise may properly be designated as mens rea.[17]

If directors, who are responsible for the management of a company and who presumably know the duties imposed upon them by law, make no attempt to see that those duties are carried out, they may be held guilty for non-compliance with the provisions of the Indian Companies Act.[18]

15. Explanation

Explanation to s 81, IPC says that it would be a question of fact, whether the harm to be prevented or avoided was of such a nature and so imminent so as to justify the risk of doing the act with the knowledge that it was likely to cause harm. This exception444 is a question of fact and that may help the buyer and not the seller for consideration. In the present case, accused A38 had supplied food and fuel to a ship in distress on payment. If accused A38 had ventured to supply food and fuel free of cost to the ship in distress, the question of application of s 81, IPC could be considered. On facts, accused A38 was not protected by s 81, IPC .[19]

40 Dendati Sannibabu v Varadapureddi Sannibabu AIR 1959 AP 102, p 103, (1959) Cr LJ 167 ; State of Mysore v P Yallappa Mali (1965) Mad LJ (Cr) 868, p 871, (1965) Mys LJ 263 .

41 Gopal Naidu v Emperor AIR 1923 Mad 523(2), 24 Cr LJ 599 (FB) ; Re Ramaswamy Ayyar 44 ILR Mad 913, 22 Cr LJ 412; Denidati Sannibabu v Varadarpureddi Sannibabu AIR 1959 AP 102, (1959) Cr LJ 167 .

42 Dr Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law, nineteenth edn, p 72, para 47; Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 11, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, 1976, p 26, para 26; R v Bostan Valad Futtekhan 17 ILR Bom 626 .

43 Prayag Dass v State (1967) All WR 572 ; R v Maganlal 14 ILR Bom 115, p 146 ; State of Mysore v P Yallappa Moti (1965) Mad LJ 868 (Cr), (1965) Mys LJ 263 .

44 R v Stration 21 St Tr 1045 .

45 Gope v Sharpe (1910) 1 KB 168 ; R v Moganlal 14 ILR Bom 115, p 146 .

46 Gope v Sharpe (1910) 1 KB 168, [1911] 2 KB 837 .

47 SHCLE, vol II, p 108.

48 Note B to Macaulary's Works (edited by Lady Trevelyan, 1875).

49 State of Mysore v P Yallappa Malli (1965) Mad LJ 868, p 871, (1965) Mys LJ 263 .

50 Dendati Sannibabu v Varadapureddi Sannibabu AIR 1959 AP 102, p 103 .

51 Gopal Naidu v Emperor AIR 1923 Mad 523 (2), p 531 (FB), 46 ILR Mad 605, 24 Cr LJ 599 ; Re Ramaswamy Ayyar 44 ILR Mad 913, 22 Cr LJ 412; Dendati Sannibabu v Varadapureddi Sannibabu AIR 1959 AP 102 .

52 Bishamber v Roomal AIR 1951 All 500, 52 Cr LJ 179 .

53 R v Stratton 21 St Tr 1045, SD Art 33 ; SHCLE, vol 11, p 109.

54 Re *Kuttayam alias Nambi Thevar*AIR 1960 Mad 9 (DB), (1960) Cr LJ 85 (DB).

55 Mir Chittan v Emperor AIR 1937 All 13, p 14 .

56 Mark on Elements of Law, fourth edn, p 220.

57 Glanville Williams, Criminal Law, p 41, s 15 ; cited in Kunju Moideen Methararu v Kandan AIR 1959 Ker 146, p 148 .

58 Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, p 490 .

59 Vide the first paragraph of the section.

60 Emperor v Ram Sukh AIR 1933 Oudh 436 ; Emperor v Jagmohan Das AIR 1924 Oudh 297 ; Ram Saran v Emperor 4 Cr LJ 293 .

61 Chandu v Emperor AIR 1928 Lah 657, p 659 .

62 Nitai Naik v State AIR 1957 Ori 168, p 170 ; Ratan Lal v Emperor AIR 1933 Oudh 333 ; Hazaratgul Khan v Emperor AIR 1938 Cal 430 ; Arjun Raghu Patil v State AIR 1956 Bom 183 ; State v Durgacharan Barik AIR 1963 Ori 33, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 213 .

63 Atley v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1955 SC 807, p 810 ; Satya Vir v State AIR 1958 All 746 .

64 Ghansa Singh v State AIR 1958 Raj 226, p 232 .

65 Hari Bag v State AIR 1958 Cal 118, p 120 ; Hans Raj v Emperor 30 Cr LJ 478 .

66 Ram Lal Singh v State AIR 1958 MP 380, p 387 .

67 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 52 .

68 State of Mysore v P Yallappa Mali (1965) Mad LJ 868, p 871, (1965) Mys LJ 263 .

69 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 299 .

70 R v Dhania 5 Bom HCR 59 .

71 Ibid.

72 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 378 .

73 Ibid, s 24 .

74 Ibid, s 23 .

75 1 Hale 54, 2 East PC 698; per curiam in R v Dudley 14 QBD 273 and Note A to the Draft Code of the English Criminal Code Commissioners in 1879.

76 Note A, Draft (English) Criminal Code, 1879.

77 Bacon's Maxims, No 5.

78 R v Dudley 1884 14 QBD 273 .

79 Compare the words 'without any intention to run down the boat C' in illust (a).

80 R v Dudley 1884 14 QBD 273 .

81 The remarks of Scott J, in R v Manganlal 14 ILR Bom 115, p 146 .

82 2 Stephens Criminal Law 94.

83 Fowler v Padget (1798) 7 TLR 509, p 514 .

84 Russell on Crime, vol I, eleventh edn, p 23.

85 R v Tolson (1889) 23 QBD 168 .

86 Nathulal v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1966 SC 43, (1966) Cr LJ 71 .

87 Sherras v De Rutzen (1895) 1 QB 918, 921, 64 LJMC 218, per Wright J.

88 State of Maharashtra v Mayer Hans George AIR 1965 SC 722, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 641 (SC) .

89 State of Gujarat v Acharya Shri Devendra Prasadji Pande & Ors AIR 1971 SC 866, (1971) Cr LJ 760 .

90 State v Ismail Shakur Morani AIR 1958 Bom 103, p 109 .

91 Evans v Dell (1937) 53 TLR 310, p 313 .

1 Brend v Wood (1946) 110 CP 317, p 318, 62 TLR 462, p 463, 175 LT 306 .

2 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 10, third edn, Butterworths, London, s 58, pp 273-74.

3 Brend v Wood (1946) 110 JP 317, p 318 .

4 Srinivas Mall v King-Emperor AIR 1947 PC 135, p 139 .

5 Hari Prasad Rao v State AIR 1951 SC 204, p 206 .

6 State v Sheo Prasad Jaiswal AIR 1956 All 610, (1956) Cr LJ 1156, (neither cl 13 of the VP Oilseeds and Oilseed Products Control Order nor s 7 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act 1946, necessarily excluded mens rea); State Govt of Madhya Pradesh v Maganbhai Desaibhai AIR 1954 Nag 41 (DB), (1953) ILR Nag 501, 1953 Nag LJ 514, 1954 Cr LJ 89 ; Re Ramchandra Gupta(1957) 1 Andh WR 279 (offences under the Defence of Indian Rules are not of a minor character so as to rule out mens rea as an integral part of the offence); State v BD Meattle AIR 1957 Punj 74, (1957) Cr LJ 472 (no offence is committed under s 29 of the Industrial Disputes (Appellate Tribunal) Act, if there was no mens rea); State v SP Bhadani AIR 1959 Pat 9 (barring sub-s (1) of s 14 of the Employee's Provident Funds Act 19 of 1952, the legislature deliberately avoided making *mens rea*a constituent part of the offence under the Act or the scheme); Isak Soloman Macmull v Emperor AIR 1948 Bom 364 (mens rea is an essential ingredient of an offence against the provisions of the Motor Spirit Rationing Order 1941); State v Ismail Shakur AIR 1958 Bom 103, (1957) ILR Bom 437, 59 Bom LR 491, (1958) Cr LJ 352 ; AP Misra v State (1958) Cr LJ 1386, AIR 1953 Cal 612 (absence of mens rea in the case under the Calcutta Wheat (Movement Control) Order 1956, absolves the accused from liability); Shrinath v Municipality, Gwailor AIR 1957 MP 247, (1957) Jab LJ 11, (1957) MPLJ 89 ; (in the absence of reference to mens rea in s 139 of the Madhya Bharat Municipal Act 1954, the section does not attract the doctrine of mens rea); State of Coorg v PK Assu AIR 1956 Mys 31 [*mens rea*not necessary in the case of offence under s 7 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act 1946].

7 State v Ismail Shakur Morani AIR 1958 Bom 103, p 109-10 .

8 Lalit v State AIR 1957 All 636, p 637-38 ; the case-law discussed therein.

9 Sherras v De Rutzen (1895) 1 QB 918 ; State of Gujarat & Anor v Acharya Shri Devendra Prosadji Pande & Ors AIR 1971 SC 866, (1971) Cr LJ 760 (SC) .

10 Mayne's Criminal Law of India, second edn, p 243, para 9.

11 Legal Remembrancer, Bengal v Ambika Charan Dulal (1946) 2 ILR Cal 127 .

12 Proprietary Articles Trade Assn v Attorney-General of Canada AIR 1931 PC 94, p 99 .

13 Outline of Criminal Law, fourteenth edn, p 396.

14 Re *Arcot Citizen Bank Ltd, Arcot*AIR 1957 Mad 675, p 677-78 .

15 Ismail v Emperor AIR 1947 Lah 220, p 221 ; Emperor v Ram Chandra Raoji Guzin AIR 1938 Bom 87 .

16 Rishipal v State AIR 1962 All 13, p 17 .

17 Re *Arcot Citizen Bank Ltd, Arcot*AIR 1957 Mad 675, p 677 .

18 Ibid; Bhagirath v Emperor AIR 1948 Cal 42, 48 Cr LJ 236 .

19 Mariya Anton Vijay v State 2015 Cr LJ 107, p 125 (Mad) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 82.

Act of a child under seven years of age.--

Nothing is an offence which is done by a child under seven years of age.

Comments

1. Privilege of Infancy

In English law there is a presumptio juris et de jurei.e., a conclusive presumption which admits of no contradiction, that children under seven cannot commit a crime,[20] the ground of the doctrine being that children of such, immature years are actually or virtually unconscious of what they do. The same rule is embodied in this section. The terms of this section are equally conclusive. On proof of age the exemption must apply.[21]

2. Applicability of Section to Offences under Special or Local Law

Section 40, IPC, governs this section, being in ch 4, and according to s 40 the word 'offence' denotes a thing punishable under this Code, or under any special or local law. Section 82, therefore, applies even to offences under special or local laws.[22]From a bare reference to various provisions of the Bihar Childrens Act 1982 and the Juvenile Justice Act 1986[23], it is apparent that an extraordinary procedure has been prescribed for enquiring into the offence alleged to have been committed by a child/juvenile and punishment thereof. The basic approach appears to be curative instead of punitive. Even the IPC, which was framed more than a century ago, had taken note of the age factor in respect of persons committing offences which is evident from ss 82 - 83 of the IPC .[24]

A boy, aged seven years of age, found a disc of gold (treasure). He did not report the same to the collector as required to do so under the provisions of the Indian Treasure-Trove Act 1878. It was held that he was not liable in view of the protection granted by this section.[25]445

3. Exception to the Rule

By s 168 of the Indian Railways Act 1989 a minor under the age of 12 who commits any act or omission specified in ss 150 - 154 of the Act is deemed to have committed an offence despite the provisions of this section and s 83 of the IPC .

Where boys under the age of 7 and 12 years throw stones at a railway train, their act would ordinarily be protected under ss 82 - 83, IPC, and would not be punishable as an offence under s 152, Railways Act or under any provision of the IPC . But such act would be deemed to be an offence under the special provisions of s 168, Railways Act, and punishable under that section.[26]

4. Master Liable when Agent is Below Seven

Though a child below seven years of age is incapable of committing an offence, an adult may employ the child as an agent to commit a crime. In such a case, the adult will be liable as an abettor.[27]

5. Consequences of the Arrest of Child

Since the child below the age of seven years is not criminally liable for any act done by him, his arrest is also unlawful.[28]

20 Marsh v Loader 14 CBNS 535, 2 WR 784 (Eng) .

21 Re Lukhmi Agradrmini(1874) 22 WR (Cr) 27.

22 King v Ba Ba Sein AIR 1938 Rang 400, 40 Cr LJ 80 ; Uttam Chand v Emperor AIR 1945 Lah 238, 47 Cr LJ 516 (FB) ; Shyam Bahadur v State AIR 1967 Pat 312, (1969) Cr LJ 1360 .

23 Now repealed by the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act 2000 (56 of 2000).

24 Krishna Bhagwan v State of Bihar AIR 1989 Pat 217 (FB), (1989) Cr LJ 1283 (Pat) (FB).

25 Shyam Bahadur v State AIR 1967 Pat 315, (1969) Cr LJ 1360 .

26 Emperor v Wali Mahommad AIR 1936 Sind 185 .

27 Section 108 , expln 3, illusts (a) and (b) of the IPC .

28 Marsh v Loader (1863) 14 CBNS 535 ; Walters v Lunt (1951) 2 All ER 645 ; Re Santa Cruj Morais 16 Cr LJ 602, p 603, AIR 1916 Mad 642(1) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 83.

Act of a child above seven and under twelve of immature understanding.--

Nothing is an offence which is done by a child above seven years of age and under twelve, who has not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his conduct on that occasion.

Comments

1. Scope--Qualified Privilege of Children Above Seven and under Twelve

A child under seven years of age is absolutely immune from criminal liability.[29]But a child above seven years and under 12, has only a qualified privilege. He may or may not be liable according to his individual maturity of understanding. He is immune from liability only if he has not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge the nature and consequences of his act. Full criminal responsibility commences after the age of 12, though civil liability does not commence till a person attains the age of majority, i.e., 18 years in India. So even if a person is a minor, he446 can be held guilty so long as his case is not covered by ss 82 - 83 of the IPC . A child between 7-12 years of age is still presumed to be doli incapax; but the presumption is no longer conclusive and it may be rebutted by evidence.[30] The IPC provides no protection from culpable liability on ground of tender age to one who is aged 12 years or more. In a child's life the period between 7-12 years of age is rather a twilight period of transition to a minimal workable level of understanding of things in the firmament of worldly affairs, and that is why the IPC and the Oaths' Act have made special provision for children below 12 years in respect of matters dependent on a minimal power of understanding.[31] Any offence punishable under the IPC, including an offence punishable under s 408, can be committed by a person, more than 12 years of age. Criminal liability is quite distinct from civil liability. A person may be criminally liable even though he may not be civilly liable.[32]

2. Applicability of Section to Special or Local Laws

Commentary under s 82 may be referred to.

3. Evidence Regarding Age

It is generally desirable that, when it is procurable, there should be some reliable evidence as to the age of the accused, though a court is competent to find the age from the appearance of the accused.[33]

It is not possible for the appellate court to determine the age of an accused on the date of the commission of offence because that has to be determined on the basis of evidence to be adduced and other materials in support thereof being produced. This determination should not be based merely on written opinion of the doctors produced before the appellate court. Prosecution has a right to cross-examine such medical or forensic experts who have given their opinion about the age of the accused in order to demonstrate that the accused was not a juvenile on the date of commission of offence. This is necessary because by the time the plea is taken before the appellate court in almost all the cases, the accused concerned must have ceased to be a juvenile due to lapse of time making it more difficult for the appellate court as well as the juvenile court to determine as to what was his age at the time of the commission of the offence. In such a situation, the courts, including juvenile courts, should get the accused held guilty of serious offences, examined by a medical board and should determine the age of such accused on the basis of the materials on the record, including the opinion of the medical board.[34]

4. Maturity of Understanding to Judge the Nature and Consequences of his Conduct

A child between 7-12 years of age cannot be convicted of any offence unless it is expressly found that he has attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge the nature and consequences of the act done.[35] The capacity of doing that which is wrong447 is not so much to be measured by year as by the strength of the prisoner's understanding and judgment.[36] The 'consequences of his conduct' mentioned in the section are apparently not the penal consequences of the offence but the natural consequences which flow from a voluntary act, such as for instance, when fire is applied to an inflammable substance, it will burn, or that a heavy blow with an axe or a sword will cause death or grievous hurt.[37] What this section contemplates is that, to escape liability, the child should not know the natural and physical consequences of his conduct.[38]

5. No Presumption as to Capacity to Commit Rape

The presumption of English law against the possibility of the commission of the offence of rape by a boy under the age of 14 years has no application in this country. The law on the subject of infancy in connection with criminal liability is laid down in ss 82 - 83 of the IPC and nowhere else. It is a question of fact as to whether in the course of the assault perpetrated by the accused on the person of a girl; such penetration had been effected as is required by law to constitute the offence of rape.[39] A person physically incapable of committing the offence of rape, i.e., a boy of 12 years, can yet be held guilty of an attempt to commit it,[40] in certain circumstances.

6. Burden of Proof as to Maturity of Understanding

If the accused is child under seven years of age, the proof of that fact would be *ipso facto*an answer to the prosecution. But where the accused is above seven years and under 12, the incapacity to commit an offence only arises where the child has not attained sufficient maturity. Such non-attainment should be specially pleaded and proved, like the incapacity of a person who, at the time of doing an act charged as an offence, is alleged to have been of unsound mind.[41]

The English law presumes that owing to immaturity of understanding, children between 7-14 years of age cannot be a judge of the nature and consequences of the conduct. Nothing however is said in the IPC as to the presumption to be drawn on the latter question but by s 105 of the Indian Evidence Act 1872, the burden of proof of the circumstances establishing 'any of the General Exceptions in the IPC is on the accused and the court 'shall presume' the absence of such circumstances'.[42] Owing to the silence of the IPC, 'it would seem that maturity of understanding is to be presumed'. It is, therefore, clear that in India the rule on presumptions in these cases is contrary to the English rule, and consequently in India, the court will presume maturity of understanding, and the onus of proving immaturity thereof is on the defence. A child between 7-12 years, of age cannot be convicted of any offence unless it is expressly found that the child has attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge the nature and consequences of the acts done.[43] The IPC provides no protection from culpable liability on ground of tender age to one who is aged 12 years or more. In a child's life the period between 7-12 years of age is rather448 like a twilight period of transition to a minimal workable level of understanding of things in the firmament of worldly affairs, and that is why both the IPC and the Oaths Act have made special provisions for children below 12 years in respect of matters dependant on a minimal power of understanding.[44] But it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove, by positive evidence to show that the accused person, below 12 years of age had arrived up to sufficient maturity of understanding within the meaning of this section. It would be permissible to arrive at the finding even on a consideration of the circumstances of the particular case.[45]Nature of act, preparation, previous and subsequent conduct, manner and means of committing the offence may help the court in this respect.

29 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 82 .

30 Hiralal v State of Bihar AIR 1977 SC 2236, (1977) Cr LJ 1921 .

31 Santosh Roy v State of West Bengal (1992) Cr LJ 2493 (Cal)(FB).

32 Kalka Prasad v State AIR 1959 All 698, p 699 .

33 Queen-Empress v Makimuddin 27 ILR Cal 133 ; R v Marimuthu 9 Cr LJ 392 ; Hiralal v State of Bihar AIR 1977 SC 2236, (1977) Cr LJ 1921 .

34 Krishna Bhagwan v State of Bihar AIR 1989 Pat 217 (FB), (1989) Cr LJ 1283 (Pat)(FB).

35 Queen-Empress v Makimuddin 27 ILR Cal 193 ; Re Marimuthu 9 Cr LJ 392; Rakesh Kumar v State 1977 FAJ 97, (1977) 1

FAC 95 (All) .

36 Queen v Aimona 1 WR 43, p 44 .

37 Queen v Lukhini Agradanini 22 WR 27, p 28 .

38 Ulla Mahapatra v King AIR 1950 Ori 261, 16 Cut LT 102 .

39 Emperor v Paras Ram Dube AIR 1915 All 134 .

40 Emperor v Naga Tun King AIR 1918 LB 96(1) .

41 Queen v Lukhini Agradanini 22 WR 27, p 28 .

42 Compare The Commissioner's Report 1847, s 117 .

43 Queen-Empress v Makimuddin 27 ILR Cal 133 ; Re Marimuthu 9 Cr LJ 392 (Mad).

44 Santosh Roy v State of West Bengal (1992) Cr LJ 2493 (Cal) (FB) .

45 Abdul Sultan v Crown AIR 1949 Lah 51, 50 Cr LJ 336, p 337 ; Queen v Begarayi Krishna Saranu 6 ILR Mad 373 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 84.

Act of a person of unsound mind.--

Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who, at the time of doing it, by reason of unsoundness of mind, is incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law.449

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

This section embodies the fundamental maxim of criminal law, i.e., actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea(an act does not constitute guilt unless done with a guilty intention). In order to constitute an offence, the intent and the act must concur; but in the case of insane persons no culpability is fastened on them as they have no free will--furiosi nulla voluntas est.[46]If a person, by reason of unsoundness of mind, is incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law, he cannot be guilty of any criminal intent. Such a person lacks the450 requisite mens rea and is entitled to an acquittal.[47] He is best punished by his own madness.[48] The insanity contemplated under s 84, IPC, to be recognised as an exception to criminal liability must be such as to disable an accused person from knowing the character of the act he was committing when he commits a criminal act. If at the time of commission of the offence, the accused knew the nature of the act he was committing, he cannot be absolved of the responsibility for the offence.[49]Insanity or unsoundness of mind are the stages when a person is incapable of knowing the nature of the act or unable to understand what it wrong or right and must relate to the period in which the offence has been committed.[50] It is only the unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculty of the mind that can form a ground for exemption from criminal liability under s 84, IPC .[51] Protection under s 84, IPC is restricted to cases where cognitive faculties of the accused are completely impaired and not cases where insanity affects only emotion and will.[52]

Under this section, a person is legally insane when he is incapable of knowing:

(i) the nature of the act, i.e., the physical act, which is done; or
(ii) that he is doing wrong; or
(iii) that he is doing what is contrary to law.

The first one refers to the offender's consciousness of the bearing of his act on those, who are affected by it, and second and third to his consciousness of its relation to himself.[53]

Principles for the Application of the Section

The following principles are to be kept in mind in applying this section:

(a) every type of insanity is not legal insanity; the cognitive faculty must be destroyed as to render one incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that what he is doing is wrong or contrary to law;
(b) the court shall presume the absence of such insanity;
(c) the burden of proof of legal insanity is on the accused, though it is not as heavy as the prosecution;
(d) the court must consider whether the accused suffered from legal insanity at the time when the offence was committed;
(e) in reaching such a conclusion, the circumstances which preceded, attended or followed the crime are relevant consideration; and451
(f) the prosecution in discharging its burden in the face of the plea of legal insanity has merely to prove the basic fact and rely upon the normal presumption of law that everyone knows the law and the natural consequences of his act.[54]

In dealing with insanity, following principles have to be borne in mind:

(a) Unsoundness of mind as contemplated by s 84, IPC, is legal insanity which requires that cognitive faculties of the accused are such that he does not know what he has done or what will follow from his act.
(b) The court shall presume absence of insanity.
(c) To get the benefit of s 84, IPC, the accused must establish any one of the three elements, necessary under the section, incapability of knowing--(1) the nature of the act, or (2) that the act was contrary to law or (3) that it was wrong.[55]

Ingredients of the Section

A dichotomy of s 84, IPC, reveals the following ingredients of this section, namely:

(i) the accused was of unsound mind;

(ii) he was of unsound mind at the time he did the act and not merely before or after the act; and
(iii) as a result of unsoundness of mind he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law.[56]

When a plea of insanity is raised by way of defence, the court has essentially to look for evidence on these points.[57]

To bring a crime under the exception of s 84, IPC, the following essential ingredients of s 84, IPC, are to be fulfilled:

(a) The act must be done by a person who is incapable of knowing--(i) the nature of the act, or (ii) that what he is doing is either wrong or contrary to law.
(b) Such incapacity must arise by reason of unsoundness of mind.
(c) Such incapacity must exist at the time of doing the act.[58]452

Elements

To establish that an act done cannot be said to be an offence as covered by s 84, IPC, the following elements must be present:

(i) the accused was of unsound mind at the time of commission of the act; and
(ii) by reason of unsoundness of mind, the accused was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law.[59]

Every kind of Unsoundness of Mind does not Exempt from Responsibility

The IPC does not define 'unsoundness of mind'. But to exempt a man from criminal liability, unsoundness of mind, must reach that degree which is described in the later part of this exception. It is not every person suffering from mental disease that can avoid responsibility for a crime by invoking the plea of insanity.[60]

An idiot or a lunatic, even if he is conscious of his act, has no capacity to know its nature and quality, he is not responsible. Madmen, especially those under the influence of some delusion, may have capacity enough to know the nature of the act, but unless they also know that they are doing 'what is either wrong or contrary to law' they are not responsible. A common stance is where a man fully believes that the act he is doing, e.g.., killing another man, is done by the immediate command of God.[61]

According to s 84, IPC, unsoundness of mind, to exempt a person from criminal responsibility, must reach that degree which is described in the latter part of the section. It is not every kind of unsoundness of mind that would exempt a person from responsibility for a crime by invoking the section; but it is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind that can form a ground of exemption from criminal responsibility; the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind required be such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law. Section 84 limits the exemption from liability to those cases where the cognitive features are completely impaired and not to cases where the insanity affects only emotion and will. Under the section it is not insanity of every description that will be a defence to a criminal charge. From the medical point of view there are many states of mind which may amount to insanity. But this section draws a distinction between medical insanity and legal insanity. 'Unsoundness of mind', which may amount to insanity from the medical point of view, will not necessarily be legal insanity for the purpose of this section so as to confer immunity for the insane person from criminal liability for any act done by him while he is in that state of mind. Mere unsoundness of mind is not ipso facto a ground of defence under s 84, IPC, unless, in consequence of such unsoundness, the accused was incapable at the time of his committing the alleged offence, of knowing either the nature of his act or that the act was either wrong or contrary to law.[62]

Insanity of a Particular Kind Provides Exemption

In order to succeed in a plea of defence of insanity, it is not enough to prove that the accused person was having certain abnormal personality traits or imbalances in his453 behaviour or that he was a maladjusted person. He might have been suffering from bouts of depression or exhibiting neurotic behaviour and may be a maladjusted individual. It is not every imbalance in behaviour or mal-adjustment in the personality that will entitle him to claim exemption under s 84, IPC, from the penal consequences of his acts. The language and message of s 84 is clear and definite as to the requirements of law. At the time of committing the offence charged, the accused, by reason of unsoundness of mind, must be incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law. In other words, the unsoundness of mind should be of such a nature which will cloud or affect the perception of facts by the accused person so that he does not know the nature of the act he is doing or such that he does not know that he is doing something wrong or contrary to law. To express in more abstract language, his cognitive faculties must be affected by the unsoundness of mind so that he does not know the nature of the act he is doing or such that he does not know that he is doing something wrong or contrary to law. This has to be arrived at by the court from the medical evidence in the case and the other evidence adduced.[63]

2. Defence of Insanity in England

English law, even in its harshest days, recognised insanity as a possible defence. On the other hand it has never held (as a popular error imagines it to hold) that the mere existence of any insanity whatever will suffice to exempt the insane person from criminal responsibility. Only insanity of a particular and appropriate kind will produce exemption. For lunatics are usually capable of being influenced by ordinary motives, such as the prospect of punishment; hence they usually plan their crimes with care, and take means to avoid detection. English criminal law, therefore, divides insane persons into two classes:

(a) those over whom the threats and prohibition of the criminal law would exercise no control, and on whom therefore it would be gratuitous cruelty to inflict its punishment; and
(b) those whose form of insanity is only such that to use Lord Bramwell's apt test 'they would not have yielded to their insanity if a policemen had been at their elbow'.

But the very difficult question as to where the line of demarcation should be drawn, is one upon which the law has undergone grave though gradual, changes. Two centuries ago, a view prevailed that no lunatic ought to escape punishment unless he were so totally deprived of understanding and memory as to be as ignorant of what he was doing as a wild beast. But ever since the epoch-making speech of Erskine in defence of Hadfield, a more rational view has prevailed, which bases the test upon the presence or absence of the faculty of distinguishing right from wrong in the crime committed. This modern view has acquired a degree of authoritative precision unusual for any common law doctrine, through its formulation in an abstract shape, in 1843, by a set of answers delivered by the judges in reply to questions propounded to them by the House of Lords.

Stand of Judges in the Mcnaughten Case

One Daniel Mcnaughten had aroused public excitement by the murder of one Drummond, the private secretary of Sir Robert Peel, who had been mistaken for that454 statesman. The acquittal of Mcnaughten on the ground of insanity provoked such widespread dissatisfaction that it became the subject of debate in the House of Lords (though the case never came before the House in its judicial capacity). In consequence of the debate, the Lords submitted to the judges certain abstract questions respecting persons afflicted with insane delusions. The replies given by the judges may be summed up thus:

(i) Every man is presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to the satisfaction of a jury.

(ii) To establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly shown that, at the time of committing the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or (if he did know this) not to know that what he was doing was wrong morally.

(iii) As to his knowledge of the wrongfulness of the act, the judges say: 'If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do and if that act was at the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable'. Thus the test is the power of distinguishing between right and wrong, not, as was once supposed, in the abstract, but in regard to the particular act committed.

(iv) Where a criminal act is committed by a man under some insane delusion as to the surrounding facts, which conceals from him the true nature of the act he is doing, he will be under the same degree of responsibility as if the facts had been as he imagined them to be. He may, for instance, kill under the imagination either that he is an executioner lawfully carrying out a judicial sentence, or on the other hand, merely that the person killed had once cheated him at cards.

In over a hundred years which have passed since the Mcnaughten, rules were formulated they have been subjected to criticism from both medical and legal quarters.[64]

In 1916, the Mcnaughten rules were considered by the court of criminal appeal in the case of R v Codere .[65]In that case the court expressed the opinion that in using the language 'nature and quality' the judges in their answers to the Mcnaughten questions were only dealing with the physical character of the act, and were not intending to distinguish between the physical and moral aspects of the act. As to the second branch of the test laid down in the Mcnaughten rules, namely, 'if the prisoner knew the physical nature of the act did he know that he was doing what was wrong', the court of criminal appeal has thus made it plain: (a) that in this connection a moral test to be applied must be objective, 'the ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men'; (b) that if (at any rate in indictable crimes) an act done is punishable by law, then it must be regarded as wrong according to the ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men; and (c) that if the prisoner was aware that the act was wrong in law,455 he was thereby 'conscious that the act was one that he ought not to do', and thus can be held to 'know he was doing what was wrong'; (d) that the words 'nature and quality' have nothing to do with the moral aspect of the case at all, and refer solely to the physical character of the act. The objective moral test was applied in the case of R v Windle [66] in 1952. Following the principles to be extracted from R v Codere ,[67] Lord Goddard CJ, said:[68]

> A man may be suffering from a defect of reason, but, if he knew that what he is doing is wrong--and by wrong is meant contrary to law--he is responsible...Courts of law can only distinguish between that which is in accordance with law and that which is contrary to law.[69]

The English law on the subject is thus: Where it can be shown that a person at the time of his committing or omitting an act, the commission or omission of which would otherwise be criminal, was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act or omission,[70] or as not to know that what he was doing was wrong,[71] then such a person is not in law responsible for his act.

'The defence of insanity is not available to a person who retains the power of reasoning, but who in a moment of confusion or absentmindedness fails to use that power to the full'.[72]

'The criminal law is not concerned with the origin of the disease but with its effect; it matters not whether the defect of reason is due to a degeneration of the brain cells, or to some other form of mental derangement, or to a physical disorder, such as arteriosclerosis, which, by cutting off the supply of blood to the brain, impairs the reasoning process; nor does it matter whether the disease is curable or incurable, temporary or permanent'.[73]

'Where an underlying mental condition which would not otherwise produce a disease of the mind sufficient to satisfy the other parts of the M'Naghten Rules is aggravated by external factors so that the defendant has a defect of reason such that he does not know the nature and quality of his act (or that it is wrong), this does not bring the M'Naghten Rules into play'.[74]456

3. Defence of insanity in Canada

In circumstances where the accused did not have voluntary control over conduct that would otherwise be an offence, the defence of automatism may be available.[75]

4. Defence of Insanity in America

In regard to defence of insanity in the United States of America, Underhill's Criminal Evidence[76] states the following:

> Insanity is everywhere a defence to a charge of crime, for without a sound mind there can be no criminal intent. The existence, character and extent of insanity are ordinarily questions of fact for the jury, and a defendant who has offered proof of his insanity is entitled to an instruction that he may be found not guilty by reason of insanity.

The authorities are not agreed on the legal test for determining insanity. Most of the states have adopted the right and wrong test, as set forth by the House of Lords in the leading case of Mcnaughten in 1843. The Mcnaughten opinion states:

> To establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or, if he did not know it, that he did not know what he was doing was wrong.

The right and wrong test is the exclusive test today in 29 states. The test has been much criticised. An additional test is the irresistible impulses test, which holds that the right and wrong test is not sufficient in all cases and that a person who knew that the act he was committing was both morally and legally wrong may still not be held responsible if he lacked the power to resist the impulse to commit it. The irresistible impulse test has been adopted in at least 14 states. It is an additional test to the right and wrong test, i.e., an accused in a state which has adopted the irresistible impulse test should be acquitted if he meets either that test or the right and wrong test.

Under the irresistible impulse test, the impulse must be the product of mental disease rather than the uncontrollable passion or fury of a sane man. Similarly, moral and emotional insanity are not considered as defences, whether the courts do or do not admit irresistible impulses as a defence.[77]

In regard to burden of proof the American law is the same as in England and in India. The law presumes that everyone charged with crime is sane, and thus supplies in the first instance the required proof of capacity to commit crime. It authorises the jury[78] to assume at the outset that the accused is criminally responsible for his acts. The presumption, which is rebuttable, is justified by the general experience of mankind as well as by considerations of public safety. All courts adhere to it.[79]457

5. Position of Defence of Insanity in India

In India the law on the subject is laid down in s 84 of the IPC, the provisions of which are in substance the same as those laid down by the House of Lords in Daniel Mcnaughten's case.[80]

In the answer to the second and third questions put to them in that case, the learned judges laid down that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that, at the time of committing the act the accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. Section 84 , IPC, borrowed this definition of unsoundness of mind which alone is recognised by law as a good defence to a crime.[81]

This section has received strict interpretation, and is held as governing only those cases where the cognitive faculties of the accused are completely impaired.[82] According to medical and legal authorities who have considered the subject of responsibility in mental disease,[83] insanity affects not only the cognitive faculties of the mind which guide our actions, but also our emotions which prompt our actions, and the will by which our actions are performed. But our law, like the law of England, limits non-liability only to those cases in which insanity affects the cognitive faculties; because it is thought that those are the cases to which the exemption rightly applies, and the cases, in which insanity affects only the emotions and the will, subjecting the offender to impulses, whilst it leaves the cognitive faculties unimpaired, have been left outside the exception, because it has been thought that the object of criminal law is to make people control their sane as well as their insane impulses, or to use the words of Bramwell LJ in R v Hamphreys ,[84] 'to guard against mischievous propensities and homicidal impulses'.[85]The section lays down the legal test of responsibility in cases of alleged unsoundness of mind, and it is by that test, as distinguished from the medical test, that the criminality of an act is to be determined.[86]

The defence of insanity is raised mostly in cases where the accused has been charged with offences under s 302 or s 304, IPC . Insane individuals seem to display a marked propensity for the commission of atrocious crimes. Their objects of attack have usually been those whom they had loved and cherished.[87]

6. Ground of Exemption

Insane persons are exempted from criminal responsibility because imposition of any penalty for their criminal acts militates against the fundamental maxim, actus non458 facit reum nisi mens sit rea (an act does not constitute guilt unless done with a guilty intention). In order to constitute crime, the intent and act must concur, but in the case of insane persons, no culpability is fastened on them, as they have no free will (furiosi nulla voluntas est).[88] The law treats a mad man as an absent person (furiosus absentis loco est), i.e., his presence is of no effect. In the case of a mad man a blameworthy condition of mind which is an essential ingredient in a criminal offence cannot be justly imputed to him.[89] Every person of the age of discretion is, unless the contrary is proved, presumed by law to be sane, and to be accountable for his actions.[90] But if there is an incapacity, or defect of the understanding, as there can be no consent of the will, the act is not punishable as a crime.[91] Insanity or unsoundness of mind is per se no ground of exemption from criminal responsibility,[92] whatever ground it may afford for mitigation of punishment by the court;[93] or for the exercise of the prerogative of pardon by the state. As a ground of exemption insanity must be coupled with an incapacity of knowledge caused thereby, viz, an incapacity of knowing:

(i) the nature of the act; or
(ii) the wrongfulness of the act; or
(iii) the illegality of the act.

The ground of exemption, therefore, is incapacity of knowledge. A person of unsound mind is not merely on that account excused, but he is exempted by reason of his want of knowledge of either of the three things stated, which is a result of the unsoundness of mind. Thus, if the unsoundness of mind deposed to is not such as to render the accused incapable of such knowledge, it is sufficient to exonerate him from criminal responsibility on the ground of insanity.[94]

> The Penal Code contemplates, as grounds of exemption from criminal responsibility, two completely different mental conditions arising from unsoundness of mind, viz, an incapacity: (1) to know the nature of the act; (2) to know that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law. Of these the first seems to refer to the offender's consciousness of the bearing of his act on those who are affected by it; the second, on his consciousness of its relation to himself. Each species of consciousness is ordinarily present to the mind of a normally sane person. Either, or both, or neither may be absent from the mind of one who is mentally diseased. The absence of both, or either, relieves the offender from liability to punishment.[95]459

Underlying principle of this section is that the act contemplated therein lacks basic ingredient of an offence which is mens rea or criminal intention.[1] If the evidence adduced by the prosecution and by the defence raises a reasonable doubt in the mind of the court that the accused might have been insane when he/she committed the offence, the accused is entitled to the benefit of s 84 of the IPC .[2]

In the instant case, the appellant accused had committed the murder of her daughter. The report of Thane Mental Hospital indicated that the appellant was under treatment for mental illness or insanity. It was noted in the medical papers that her behavior was abnormal; she got excited and engaged herself in irrelevant talks. It was stated that she had auditory hallucinations and was suspicious about her neighbours. So was also the evidence of mother of the appellant. Accused appellant was aquitted on the ground of insanity.[3]

7. 'At the Time of Doing it'--Crucial Point of Time

The crucial point of time at which unsoundness of mind should be established is the time, when the crime was actually, committed.[4] In order to get the benefit of this section, it must be shown that the accused suffered from unsoundness of mind, as defined in the section, when the offence was committed. That is the crucial point of time.[5] In absence of medical certificate and treatment papers with regard to unsoundness of mind of the accused, mere oral statements of the prosecution witnesses cannot give rise to an inference that the accused was of unsound mind at the time of commission of the offence.[6] The mere fact that on former occasions he had been occasionally subject to insane delusions or had suffered from derangement of mind and subsequently he had behaved like a mentally deficient person is per se insufficient to bring his case within the exemption. The antecedent and subsequent conduct of the man is relevant only to show what the state of his mind was at the time when the act was committed.[7] In other words, so far as s 84 is concerned, the460 court is only concerned with the state of mind of the accused at the time of the act.[8] Where the evidence adduced in the case did not indicate the unsoundness of mind of the accused soon before the alleged incident, held the accused was not entitled to the protection of s 84, IPC .[9] When there is nothing to show that the cognitive faculties of the accused have been impaired so that he could not judge the consequence of what he was doing, s 84 of IPC is inapplicable.[10]

The fact that the accused was not in a sound state of mind after the incident does not mean that he was of unsound mind at the time of the incident. In any case, totality of circumstances has to be taken into account. Immediately after assaulting his wife with an axe, the appellant ran away from the house and disappeared, act of running away immediately after the incident shows that the appellant knew the nature and consequences of the act. The accused appellant was found not entitled to the benefit of s 84, IPC, and was convicted on the charge of murder.[11] In Re Henny Perry,[12] the defence was that the accused had been prone to have fits of epileptic insanity. During the course of the argument Reading CJ, observed:

> The crux of the whole question is whether this man was suffering from epilepsy at the time he committed the crime. Otherwise, it would be a most dangerous doctrine if a man could say. 'I once had an epileptic fit, and everything that happens hereafter must be put down to that'.

In dismissing the appeal his Lordship said:

> It must be shown that the man was suffering from an epileptic seizure at the time when he committed the murders; and that has not been proved.[13]

In order that benefit may be given to an accused under this section, it is not sufficient to show that he was of unsound mind before the commission of the crime or that he became so afterwards. It must be established by the defence that, first, he was incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law and secondly that such unsoundness of mind existed 'at the time of doing' the act. If either of these two elements is not positively proved, no benefit can be given under this section.[14] In the absence of any evidence of the accused's state of mind at the actual time of the commission of the acts in question, the presumption of sanity remains unweakened by any evidence of earlier insanity.[15] There was no evidence to show that the accused appellant was suffering from mental insanity at the time of the commission of the offence. The relations between the461 accused appellant and the deceased were strained, thus, the accused had motive to commit the murder of the deceased, and the accused was held not protected by s 84, IPC . He was convicted on the charge of murder.[16]

In order to get the benefit under s 84, IPC onus is on the defence to prove that at the time of occurrence, the accused was mentally sick. The accused appellant had severed the head of his grand-daughter by axe. Neither the son nor the wife of the accused, examined in the case, deposed that the accused was mentally sick. During his statement recorded under s 313, CrPC, the accused stated that he had become mentally weak on account of his illness and he explained that it had happened after his stay in jail. Held, the accused was not mentally sick at the time of occurrence and, therefore, was not entitled to benefit under s 84, IPC .[17]

The appellant accused had pushed the deceased and inflicted five blows of axe on the deceased causing death, and while the eye-witnesses account inspired confidence, evidence on the record did not reveal that the appellant at the time of the commission of offence was incapable of knowing the nature of his act and was of unsound mind, thus, plea of unsoundness of mind was rejected, and he was convicted under s 302, IPC .[18]

The allegation was that the accused assaulted his wife and the parents of the child with stone slab at midnight as he suspected illicit relations between his wife and father of the child. The child witness was the most natural witness, and his evidence was found reliable. There was no reason for false implication. Confessional statement recorded by the Special Executive Magistrate also implicated the accused. Conviction of the accused for offence under s 302, IPC was upheld.[19]

The physical and mental condition of the person concerned at the time of commission of offence is paramount for bringing the case within the purview of s 84 . Medical certificate filed in the case did not relate to the period when the offence was committed. Accused appellant was held not entitled to protection of s 84, IPC .[20]

8. No Rule that once Insane Always Insane

The mere fact, that on some former occasions, the accused had been occasionally subject to insane delusions or had suffered from derangement of the mind, or that subsequently behaved like a mentally deficient person, is per se insufficient to bring his case within the exemption. Not every person suffering from mental disease can avoid responsibility for a crime by invoking the plea of insanity. It is only legal insanity which furnishes a ground for exemption and there can be no legal insanity unless the cognitive faculties of the accused are, as a result of derangement or unsoundness, completely impaired. The unsoundness must be such as to make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that what he is doing is wrong or contrary to law.[21]462

There is no rule that 'once insane always insane' or that now insane the accused must have been insane before.[22]Past conduct cannot lead to any inference that the accused was incapable of understanding the nature of his act at the time when the act in question was committed.[23] Conduct remote in time is however not relevant.[24]

9. Different Effects of Insanity at the Time of Offence and at the Time of Trial

It is not always realised that there is distinction having a widely differing effect, between incapacity at the time of doing the act charged and incapacity at the time of trial. While both are induced by unsoundness of mind the former is substantive which excuses the offence under s 84 of the IPC, the latter affects procedure and merely postpones the trial under s 329, Crpc.[25]

10. Insanity is not per se a Defence

Insanity is not per se a defence under s 84, IPC, which embodies the fundamental maxim of criminal law that an act does not constitute guilt unless done with a guilty intention. The section provides that nothing is an offence which is done by a person who, at the time of doing it, by reason of unsoundness of mind, is incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law. To establish that the act done is not an offence, it must clearly be proved that at the time of commission of the act, the accused was suffering from legal insanity as defined in the section. Under the section, a person is legally insane when he is incapable of knowing the nature of the act, i.e., the physical act, which is done, or that he is doing wrong or that he is doing what is contrary to law. There can be no legal insanity unless the faculties of the mind are, as a result of unsoundness of the mind, at the crucial time, so materially impaired that he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. For purposes of criminal law, the emphasis is, therefore, on unsoundness of mind which incapacitates the person from knowing the nature of the act or that what he does is either wrong or contrary to law. The fact, that the accused caused the death of a child over a trifling matter would not warrant the conclusion that he was of unsound mind. The crucial point of time at which unsoundness of mind should be established is the time when the crime is actually committed, and the burden of proving this lies on the accused. The defence of insanity cannot be admitted upon arguments merely derived from the character of crime. The absence of motive or the attachment of accused with the victim, or the ghastly nature of the crime is not relevant consideration, in the absence of positive proof that the mental faculties of the appellant were materially impaired at the crucial time by reason of unsoundness463 of mind. Manifestations evidencing derangement of mental function by themselves do not offer relief from criminal responsibility.[26]

The Bombay High Court has also held that epileptic insanity must exist at the time of commission of the act. Ordinary stresses and disappointments of life do not constitute defence. Where a minor quarrel took place between brothers on cultivation and the accused came the next morning with an axe and hit the sleeping brother on the neck, pre-meditation was writ large on conduct of accused, no benefit of s 84 could be given.[27]

Mere Abnormality of Mind, Partial Delusion, Irresistible Impulse or Compulsive Behaviour Not Enough

The Supreme Court in Sheralliwalli Mohammed v State of Maharashtra ,[28]held that the mere fact that no motive has been proved why the accused murdered his wife and child or the act that he made no attempt to run away when the door was broken open would not indicate that he was insane or that he did not have the necessary mens rea for the offence. Mere abnormality of mind or partial delusion, irresistible impulse or compulsive behaviour of a psychopath affords no protection under s 84, IPC as the law contained in that section is still squarely based on the outdated Mcnaughten rules of 19th century England. The provisions of s 84 are, in substance, the same as that laid down in the answers of the judges to the questions put to them by the House of Lords, in McNaughten's case.[29]

Mere abnormality/partial delusion affords no protection

Mere abnormality of mind or partial delusion affords no protection under s 84, IPC .[30]

Retarded Mind

Accused appellant assaulted his brother deceased by wooden plank over the head causing his death. One of the PWS admitted in cross-examination that the mental position of the appellant was not normal, and he was under treatment. But the appellant accused did not adduce any evidence, oral or medical, to show that he was of unsound mind at the time of the commission of the offence. The evidence showed that the accused was not of unsound mind but a man of retarded mind. Plea of unsoundness of mind available under s 84, IPC was repelled.[31]

Queer Behavior, Epileptic Fits

The standard to be applied is whether according to the ordinary standard, adopted by reasonable men, the act was right or wrong. The mere fact that an accused is conceited, odd, irascible and his brain is not quite all right, or that the physical and464 mental ailments from which he suffered had rendered his intellect weak and had affected his emotions and will, or that he had committed certain unusual acts in the past or that he was liable to recurring fits of insanity at short intervals, or that he was subject to getting epileptic fits but there was nothing abnormal in his behavior, or that his behavior was queer, cannot be sufficient to attract the application of this section. The plea of unsoundness of mind taken by the accused was rejected, and conviction of the accused appellant under ss 302 / 201, IPC was held proper.[32]

11. Material Circumstances to draw Inference Regarding Mental Condition

The circumstances from which inference can be drawn regarding mental condition of the accused at the time of commission of the act are:

(i) motive;
(ii) deliberation and preparation;
(iii) desire for concealment;
(iv) conduct after commission of the crime showing consciousness of guilt and effort to avoid detention;
(v) offer of excuse of making statements which are false; and
(vi) conduct before, at the time and after the commission of offence.

Keeping in mind the aforesaid principles, the plea of insanity is to be judged.[33]

12. What is Unsoundness of Mind

The IPC does not define 'unsoundness of mind'. But to exempt a man from criminal liability, unsoundness of mind, must reach that degree which is described in the later part of this exception. It is not every person suffering from mental disease that can avoid responsibility for a crime by invoking the plea of insanity.

An idiot or a lunatic, even if he is conscious of his act, has no capacity to know its nature and quality, he is not responsible. Madmen, especially those under the influence of some delusion, may have capacity enough to know the nature of the act, but unless they also know that they are doing 'what is either wrong or contrary to law', they are not responsible. A common stance is, where a man fully believes that the act he is doing, for e.g., killing another man, is done by the immediate command of God.[34]

It is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind that can form a ground of exemption from criminal responsibility, the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind required being such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law.[35] Unsoundness of mind as contemplated by s 84, IPC, is legal insanity which requires that cognitive faculties of the accused be such that he does not know what he has done or what will follow from his act.[36]465

The IPC does not define 'unsoundness of mind'. The courts have treated this expression as equivalent to insanity. There are four kinds of persons who may be said to be non compos mentis (not of sound mind), i.e.: (a) an idiot; (b) one made non compos by illness; (c) a lunatic or a madman; and (d) one who is drunk. An idiot is one who is of non-sane memory from his birth, by a perpetual infirmity, without lucid intervals; and those are said to be idiots who cannot count 20, or tell the days of the week, or who do not know their father or mother, or the like.[37] A person made non compos mentis by illness is excused in criminal cases from such acts as are committed while under the influence of this disorder.[38] A lunatic is one who is afflicted by mental disorder only at certain periods and vicissitudes, having intervals of reason.[39] Madness is permanent; lunacy and madness are spoken of as acquired insanity, and idiocy as natural insanity.[40] The term 'insanity' itself has no precise definition. It is a term used to describe varying degrees of mental disorder, ranging from a mild delusional state to extreme cases of paranoia or schizophrenia. Mental deficiency, which the law recognises, must be of a character so as to incapacitate the person afflicted, from forming an intent, or from distinguishing between right and wrong, and in that case alone, the disturbed and diseased state of his mind will be a defence.[41] In all cases of real insanity, the intellect is more or less affected--hence the term 'intellectual insanity'. In the medical sense this implies a deviation of the mental faculties from an assumed normal or healthy standard. In an insane person there may be no bodily disease, but his language and habits are changed, the reasoning power which he may have enjoyed in common with others is lost or perverted, and he is no longer fit to discharge those duties which his social position demands. Further, from perversion of reason, he may show a disposition to commit acts which may endanger his own life or the lives of those around him. It is at this point that the law interferes for his own protection, and for that of society.[42]

Where there was no medical evidence to prove insanity of the accused, and accused had caused grievous injuries, the acquittal of the accused by the trial court on the mere ground that the accused was unable to look after his own interest was not proper.[43]

No Precise Definition of Insanity Applies to All Cases

Unsoundness of mind, as understood in medical science, would admit of a variety of conditions of varying degrees of severity manifesting far too many characteristics to justify any precise definition applicable to all cases. It is for this reason that we find that in law the expression 'unsoundness of mind' of a person has been given different content according to the nature and degree of the protection it is intended to give him. For example, in the Indian Contract Act 1872 (Contract Act), when defining a 'sound mind' the emphasis is on the capability of understanding and on the person's capacity to form a rational judgment as to the effects of the contract on his interest (s 12 of the Contract Act). In probable cases, the test usually employed is 'was the testator of a sound disposing mind, i.e., was he able to understand the nature of the466act and its effect, the extent of the property which he was disposing and the claims he ought to give effect to'? In s 65(2) of the Indian Lunacy Act 1912, the law is concerned with 'whether the person is not unsound mind so as to be incapable of managing his affairs'.[44] In the Mcnaughten Rules the words used were 'labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the fact', etc. Referring to these words in R v Kemp ,[45] Dalvin J, said:

> The law is not concerned with the brain but with the mind in the sense that 'mind' is ordinarily used, the mental faculties of reason, memory and understanding...In this statement the adjective 'mental' must refer either (a) to the mind or (b) to the brain. Now if, it refers to (a) the mind then the statement is meaningless for it amounts to the proposition 'mind--the faculties of the mind'. It must therefore refer (b) to the brain, and thus the statement must mean 'the sense in which the word 'mind' is ordinarily used is the brain's faculties of reason, etc.'. But these words 'reason, memory and understanding' are abstractions denoting functions of the brain which is the visible tangible content of the cranium. Just as, for example, a gas engine operates to produce power, so also does the human brain operate to produce reason, memory and understanding, none of which can exist if the material engine, the brain, is destroyed, and any of which may be impaired if the brain is crippled by disease. But it is not easy to see how these functions can themselves be diseased, a puzzle which is not solved by groping them together under the single word 'mind'. In my judgment the condition of the brain is irrelevant and so is the question of whether the condition of the mind is curable or incurable, transitory or permanent...in the Mcnaughten Rules...the primary thing that has to be looked for is the defect of reason...In my judgment the words 'from disease of the mind'...were put in for the purpose of limiting the effect of the words 'defects of reason'...The words ensure that the defect is due to a diseased mind and not simply to an untrained one...Hardening of the arteries is a disease which is...capable of affecting the mind. Here the word 'mind' seems to be used as synonymous with 'brain', since his Lordship speaks of 'its reasoning understanding, and so on' in such a way as to cause a defect, temporarily or permanently, of its reasoning, understanding and so on, and so is in my judgment a disease of the mind which comes within the meaning of the Rules. In R v Charleston ,[46] the pressure on the brain caused by the assumed tumor prevented the prisoner from knowing what he was doing; and in R v Kemp the lack of a proper blood supply to the brain caused by the proved arteriosclerosis had the same effect upon the prisoner. It is extremely difficult to see any real difference between the two sets of facts. If a tumor, which by its presence on the brain impairs its functions, is not a 'disease of the mind', how can the interference with the flow of blood in the brain caused by hardening of the arteries be a 'disease of the mind'?[47]

In Murthy v State [48] the Madras High Court has dealt with this matter thus:

> The term 'insanity' is not clearly defined either in the medical or in the legal literature, and sanity is said to exist when the brain and the nervous system are in their conditions and the mental functions of feeling and knowing can be performed in their usual manner. Insanity is an abnormal state when one or more of the above said mental functions is not performed in the normal way or not performed at all due to some defect or disease of the mind. Instead of furnishing a clear and workable definition of insanity, authoritative medical books give only descriptions of various states of mind such as total insanity, partial insanity, moral insanity, impulsive insanity, pyromania and kleptomania and cases of insanity are numerous. But, what we are concerned in a case467 wherein insanity is set up as a defence is whether the accused, at the time of committing the offence, was labouring under such defect of reason from disease of mind viz, insanity, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong.[49]

The unsoundness of mind referred to in s 84, IPC, is a disease of the brain, and not merely a disorder of the senses. The unsoundness is an inherent and organic affliction.[50] The mere fact, that the crime was attended with some giddiness, or that the accused was not feeling well for the last one month, or that he was running after the village children or the cattle-heads does not establish that he was a person who would be called non compos mentis.

Insanity implies the existence of either or both of the mental conditions namely, an incapacity: (a) to know the nature of the act; and (b) to know that the act is wrong or contrary to law. 'The disordered mind in insanity may be subject of delusions or hallucinations. A delusion is a pervasion of judgment whereby the individual accepts as real an erroneous perception or conception which has no real existence'. Thus it can be said that the insanity is the disorder of the conduct in that the process of adjusting the self to the circumstances is deranged.[51]

13. Lucid Intervals

A lucid interval of an insane person is not merely a cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder, but a restoration of the faculties of mind sufficiently to enable the person soundly to judge the act.[52] But the expression does not necessarily mean complete or perfect restoration of the mental faculties to their original condition. So, if there is such a restoration, the person concerned can do the act with such reason, memory and judgment as to make it a legal act; but merely a cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder is not sufficient.[53]

Difficult to Locate Lucid Intervals

Even in extreme case of insanity, there may be lucid intervals. If the act is committed during lucid intervals, the culprit would not be entitled to the benefit under s 84 of the IPC . It is sometimes very difficult to exactly locate the moment when an insane person has the lucid intervals. In such cases, the surrounding circumstances assume importance.[54]

Law Presumes the Offence to have been Committed in Lucid Interval

In cases where a person, subject to attacks of insanity, has lucid intervals, the law presumes the offence of such person to have been committed in a lucid interval unless it appears to have been committed in the time of his distemper. It lies, in such468 a case, on the accused person to prove that he was insane at the time of the commission of the offence so as not to be liable to punishment as a sane person.[55]

14. Mere Eccentricity does not Amount to Insanity

To establish a defence on the grounds of insanity under s 84, IPC in a case, it must clearly be proved that at time of committing an act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or, if he did know it, that he did not know that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. It is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind and that can form a ground of exception from criminal responsibility, the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind required being such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law. Only a person who by reason of mental disease is prevented from controlling his own conduct or a person who is deprived, by mental affliction of the power to rationalising on the moral conduct of the act, would be entitled to the benefit of this section. Mere eccentricity or strange behaviour or a mental set up not amounting to insanity as known to the law, could not absolve a person of the consequences of his acts.[56]

15. Homicidal Tendency, if Sign of Insanity

Homicidal tendency in a person, accused of an offence, is no sign of insanity. It is not necessary that every insane person should have homicidal tendencies.[57]

16. Intoxication must be Distinguished from Unsoundness of Mind

Intoxication resembling a temporary form of insanity resulting from drinking or ganja smoking, which is of such a temporary nature as to pass off a few hours after the consumption of the liquor or drug must be distinguished from unsoundness of mind, even temporary unsoundness of mind, coming under this section. Such intoxication should be dealt with under ss 85 - 86 .[58]

17. Legal Test of Insanity

Before the McNaughten case,[59] the defence of insanity was very narrowly restricted. In the case of Edward Arnold,[60] Tracy J, observed that it is not every kind of frantic humour or something unaccountable in a man's actions that points him out to be such a madman as is to be exempted from punishment; it must be a man that is totally deprived of his understanding and memory and doth not known what he is doing, no more than an infant, than a brute or a wild beast. This view has been followed in India in Tola Ram v Emperor ,[61] and Baswant Rao Baji Rao v Emperor .[62] At the same469 time, the incapacity of understanding was related to morality, for in Arnold's case, the jury were directed to consider 'whether the condition this man was in, as it is represented to you on one side, or the other, doth show a man, who knew what he was doing, and was able to distinguish whether he was doing good or evil, and understood what he did...'.[63] But the rules laid down in the McNaughten's case did not recognises any ground of excuse based upon innate weakness of will power, upon moral insanity, nor upon disease of the emotional system; moreover they have been held not to admit that irresistible impulse, due to mental disease, could be a defence.[64] The test of legal insanity laid down in the rules is: 'To establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of committing the act, the accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did not know he was doing what was wrong'.

Considering this test, the court of criminal appeal in R v Codere ,[65] made it plain that the words 'nature and quality' have nothing to do with the moral aspect of the case at all, that a moral test to be applied must be objective, i.e., 'the ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men', and that if the prisoner knew that his act was wrong in law, then he was doing an act which he was conscious he ought not to do, and as it was against the law, it was punishable by law. Following these principles, in a latter case,[66] Lord Goddard CJ, said:

> A man may be suffering from a defect of reason, but, if he knew that what he is doing is wrong--and by wrong is meant contrary to law--he is responsible...courts of law can only distinguish between that which is in accordance with law and that which is contrary to law.

18. Concern for Trial Court and Duty of Investigating Agency

The court in Kamla Bhuniya v State of West Bengal [67] in case of like nature has occasion to consider the plea of insanity threadbare and summed up the legal position in the following way:

(i) It would be a concern for the trial court whether the accused was insane at the time of commission of the offence and whether the accused was incapable of understanding the impact of wrongful act committed by him or her at the time of commission of the offence.

(ii) The investigating agency is duty bound to ascertain at the initial stage whether there is any indication about the mental condition of the accused.[68] He shall have accused examined by a psychiatrist at the earliest470 opportunity to ascertain whether he was acting under unsoundness of mind at the time of occurrence, without knowing nature of acts, etc.[69]

Indian Courts have Adhered to Views Expressed by English Courts

The courts in India have adhered to the view expressed by the courts in England as to the narrow and restricted nature of the plea of insanity. The test that law insists upon is the 'right and wrong test' of Mcnaughten Rules as recognised in this section and has been accepted in India as a correct guide for determining the guilt or innocence of the person who pleads insanity as a defence.[70]The burden lies on the defence to show that the accused, at the time of committing the offence, was, 'by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law'. Nothing short of this particular degree of insanity would bring the case within the exception.[71] It must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act, the accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it, which he did not know that what he was doing was wrong. If he was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do and if that act was at the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable. The standard to be applied is whether according to the ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men, the act was right or wrong.[72]A very common way of applying the test under this section is to ask, in the circumstances, whether the man would have committed the act if a policeman had been at his elbow.[73]

19. Different Kinds of Insanity

Unsoundness of mind may be congenital or accidental. Mental incapacity arising from post-natal causes, such as illness (fever or palsy), or accident, injury, or shock to the brain, which makes the person suffering from it not criminally responsible for acts done by him while it continues, is described by the older writers as dementia accidentalis vel adventitia, and is separately regarded as total or partial, or temporary or permanent. Persons afflicted by the mental disorder only at certain periods and vicissitudes, having intervals of reason are described as lunatics. Such persons during their frenzy are criminally as irresponsible as those whose disorder is fixed and permanent.[74]

Idiocy is congenital imbecility or unsoundness of mind. A person has been deemed an idiot who cannot count up to 20, tell the days of the week, does not know his father or mother, his own age, etc., but these are mentioned as instances only, for whether idiot or not is a question of fact for the jury or court. A person deaf and dumb from birth is in presumption of law an idiot; but if it appears that he has the use of understanding, he is criminally responsible, and may be tried and convicted, though great caution should be used in such a proceeding. This form of mental incapacity has been described as dementia naturalis.[75]471

Under s 1 of the Mental Deficiency Act 1913, persons who are mentally defective are classified as follows:

(1) The following classes of persons who are mentally defective shall be deemed to be defective within the meaning of this Act:

(a) Idiots, that is to say, persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness of such a degree that they are unable to guard themselves against common physical dangers;
(b) Imbeciles, that is to say, persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness which, though not amounting to idiocy, is yet so pronounced that they are incapable of managing themselves or their affairs or, in the case of children, of being taught to do so;
(c) Feeble-minded persons, that is to say, persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness which, though not amounting to imbecility, is yet so pronounced that they require care, supervision and control for their own protection or for the protection of others or, in the case of children, involves disability of mind of such a nature and extent as to make them for the purposes of s 57 of the Education Act 1944, incapable of receiving education at school;

(d) Moral defectives, that is to say, persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness coupled with strongly vicious or criminal propensities and who require care, supervision and control for the protection of others.[76]

Every Form of Insanity Not Recognised by Law

It is trite that the legal conception of insanity differs considerably from the medical conception. It is not every form of insanity or madness that is recognised by law as a sufficient excuse. All minor aberrations of mind which are recognised by the medical science as amounting to madness are excluded in the eye of law. Even eccentricity or unsoundness of mind of a very minor type is not sufficient. It is not every kind of idle and frantic humour of a man or something unaccountable in his actions, which will show him to be such a madman as is to be exempted from punishment.[77]

Legal and Not Medical Insanity Matters--Distinction Needs to be Made

An accused who seeks exoneration from liability of an act done under s 84, IPC is to prove legal insanity and not medical insanity. Every person who is suffering from mental disease is not ipso facto exempted from criminal liability. The mere fact that the accused is conceited, odd, irascible and his brain is not quite all right, or that the physical and mental ailments from which he suffered had rendered his intellect weak and affected his emotions or indulges in certain unusual acts, or had fits of insanity at short intervals or that he was subject to epileptic fits and there was abnormal behaviour or the behaviour is queer are not sufficient to attract the application of s 84 of IPC .[78]

It is not every person, mentally diseased, who is exempted from criminal responsibility under s 84, IPC . Such exemption can be claimed only when the insane472 person is incapable of knowing the nature of the act or he is doing either wrong or contrary to law. It is by this test, as distinguished from the medical test, that the criminality of the act is to be determined. Even assuming that there is some material to indicate that there is medical insanity, unless it is established that the accused was suffering from legal insanity, s 84, IPC, cannot be invoked. There is a good deal of difference between 'medical insanity' and 'legal insanity' and courts are concerned only with the legal and not the medical aspect of the matter. In other words, it is not every kind of frantic humour or something unaccountable in a man's action that points him out to be a madman, to be exempted from punishment. It is not mere eccentricity or singularity of manner that would suffice the plea of insanity. Abnormality of mind is not by itself sufficient to show that the accused must have acted while of unsound mind. These are all the principles, laid down by various courts, including the Supreme Court.[79]

It is settled law that a distinction is to be made between legal insanity and medical insanity[80] as a court is concerned with legal insanity, and not with medical insanity.[81] According to medical science, insanity is another name for mental abnormality due to various causes and existing in various degrees. Even an uncontrollable impulse driving a man to kill or wound comes within its scope. But a man whom medical science would pronounce as insane does not necessarily take leave of his emotions and feelings. Hope, ambition, revenge, etc., may still govern his mind. Fear may exercise its influence over him, and threats may have a deterrent effect. Such persons, though insane, would refrain from committing any acts of violence or mischief if more powerful men are present.[82] It is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind that can form a ground of exemption from criminal responsibility, the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind required being such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law. The test of insanity, as viewed from a legal point, does not coincide with the medical idea, and in many cases a man who is in the opinion of the medical experts of unsound mind, cannot claim the benefit of this section.[83]

Courts Concerned only with Legal Insanity

In order to earn immunity from criminal liability, the disease, disorder or disturbance of the mind must be of a degree, which should obliterate perceptual or volitional capacity. A person may be a fit subject for confinement in a mental hospital, but that fact alone will not permit him to enjoy exemption from punishment. Crotchetiness, cranks, feeble mindedness, any mental irresponsibility, mere frenzy, emotional imbalance, heat of passion, uncontrollable anger or jealousy, fits of insensate hatred or revenge, moral depravity, dethroning reason, incurable perversions, hypersensitive473 excitability, ungovernable fits of temper, stupidity, obtuseness, lack of self-control, gross eccentricity and idiosyncrasy and other similar manifestations, evidencing derangement of mental functions, by themselves, do not offer relief from criminal responsibility. These are forms of mental deficiency which will not excuse the commission of the crime. Such persons, in the words of Lord Barnwell 'would not have yielded to their insanity if a policeman had been at their elbow'. The presence of these disorders of the mind is not in law equivalent to want of capacity, so as to prevent the punitive effect of the criminal act.[84]

For the purposes of criminal law, therefore, the emphasis appears to be on unsoundness of mind which incapacitates the person from knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law. In this phrase, the word 'mind' has been used as the term is generally understood in the sense of mental faculties of reason, memory and understanding, and consequently it is sometimes said that it is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs its cognitive faculties that can form the ground of exemption from criminal 'responsibility', the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind required being such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law.[85] In this view, insanity affecting the will and the emotions has been left outside the exception, though it is difficult to say that those disturbances can have no connection with the unsoundness of mind.[86] There is thus a clear distinction between medical and legal insanity, and the courts are concerned only with the legal and not the medical view of the question. A man may be suffering from some form of insanity in the sense in which the term is used by medical men, but may not have that unsoundness of mind which is described in this section. If the facts show that the accused knew that he had done something wrong, it did not matter how, though he might be insane from the medical point of view, he will not be exonerated under this section.[87]

As already pointed out the courts are concerned with legal insanity and not with the medical aspect of it. The fact that the mind was partially deranged or that he was subject to some uncontrollable impulse due to insanity is not a valid defence. A person conscious of the nature of his act is presumed to have been conscious of its criminality. Absence of motive or secrecy, multiplicity of murders, want of pre-arrangement and want of accomplices are insufficient to support inference of unsoundness of mind.[88]

Epileptic Insanity

Modi'sMedical Jurisprudence and Toxicology,[89] describes the nature of epileptic insanity thus:474

> The disease is generally characterized by short transitory fits of uncontrollable mania followed by complete recovery. The attacks, however, become more and more frequent. Lastly, there is general impairment of the mental faculties with loss of memory and self-control. At the same time, hallucinations of sight and hearing occur and are followed by delusions of a persecuting nature. Epileptic insane persons are deprived of all moral sensibility, are given to the lowest forms of vice and sexual excesses, and are sometime dangerous to themselves as well as to others. In many long-standing cases there is usually feeble-mindedness leading to progressive dementia of the most degraded character. True epileptic insanity is that which is associated with epileptic fits. This may occur before or after the fits, or may replace them, and is known as pre-epileptic insanity, post-epileptic insanity and masked or psychic insanity.

Pre-epileptic insanity is very common and may replace the epileptic aura, lasting in some cases for hours or even days. It is characterised by violent fits of maniacal excitement or by depression, fussiness, suspiciousness and general malaise. Hallucinations of various kinds are experienced and, owing to delusions, the patient may commit violent assaults, or may bring false charges against innocent persons. Sometimes, the patient may refuse to take any food.

Mere physical weakness, which made the accused moody and silent, and at times affected his mind, is not sufficient to bring his case within the provisions of this section. It would be dangerous to hold that, because a monstrous crime like murder is committed for no apparent reason and for no proved motive, the offender must have been insane at the time; and that without any proof whatsoever of prior insanity.[90] A person can be exempted under this section only if it is shown that he was suffering from epilepcy at the time he committed the crime. "It would be a most dangerous doctrine if a man could say, 'I once had an epileptic fit, and everything that happened hereafter must be put down to that"'.[91] In one case, the accused was subject to periodic epileptic fits from his childhood and symptoms of an impending epileptic seizure were seen on the day he killed his aged mother. It was held that the complete absence of motive or provocation, the nature and multiplicity of the weapons used, the duration of attack, the maniacal fury with which the attack was delivered and his subsequent conduct were all indications that the accused was acting under some insane impulse, and therefore his act was saved by this section from constituting the offence.[92]

In a case from Canada the accused was charged with dangerous driving causing death. The Crown alleged that the accused driving at a high speed of 80-100 km/hr caused the accident resulting in the death of the pedestrian. There was no dispute that the accused was going 80-100 km/hr in a 50 km/hr zone. The defence argued that the accused had experienced an epileptic seizure and the Crown had not established mens rea. It was contended that the accused had a pre-existing epileptic condition, but had been seizure-free for several years and his driver's license had been reinstated. While acquitting the accused it was held that the Crown failed to establish mens rea and it failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that it was unreasonable for the accused to be driving a car knowing he had a pre-existing epileptic condition. Prior to the accident his epilepsy appeared to be under control, his medication was working and he had not had a seizure for almost three years and as such he was legally permitted475 under provincial law to drive a car. In the alternative, the accused was acquitted on the defence of automatism. An epileptic seizure could not be characterized as a disease of the mind, and the defence ought to be described as non-mental disorder automatism. The defence had overwhelmingly proved that the accused had an epileptic seizure at the time of the accident, given the high rate of speed involved, the absence of skid-marks, the absence of evidence of braking or steering, and the combined evidence of the witnesses that the accused was not impaired but was still acting inappropriately. Everything that happened as described by the witnesses and analyzed by the neurologist was wholly consistent with an epileptic 'partial complex' seizure. The defence of non-mental disorder automatism had been established on a balance of probabilities. The accused was acquitted.[1]

The occurrence had taken place on 11 August 2000. Medical prescriptions of the years 1987 and 1998 of the accused showed that he was a psychiatric patient with paranoid features. The allegation against the accused was that he had shot the deceased from a point blank range. It was further alleged that the accused, after shooting, threatened his driver with dire consequences and ran away from the place of occurrence. He threw the pistol in the well in order to conceal himself from the crime. Held, the accused knew that as a consequence of his act he was not entitled to protection of s 84, IPC . His conviction under s 302, IPC was proper.[2]

Mental Imbalance, Abnormal Behaviour or Mental Aberrations

Mere mental imbalance or abnormal behaviour of a person does not reduce the seriousness of the offence which he has committed.[3] Insanity, in order to absolve a person from all criminal responsibility, must affect his cognitive faculties. If the insanity merely affects his emotions or will, leaving his cognitive faculties substantially unimpaired he cannot plead exemption though it may be a case of extenuation. Any mental aberration, short of complete damage to the cognitive faculties, will not constitute an excuse under the IPC .[4]

Psychotic Disorder

The only evidence placed on record was that the accused appellant had been treated in a Psychiatric Hospital for 13 days in the year 1985. Even at that time the doctor had diagnosed the disease as psychotic disorder. The record did not indicate that the patient was suffering from such mental disability which incapacitated him to know the nature of the act that he had committed. There was no evidence to indicate that the appellant suffered from mental illness post 1985. The evidence showed that the accused appellant was capable of knowing the nature of the act and the consequences thereof on the date of the alleged incident. Whilst he had brutally and callously committed the murder of his wife, he did not cause any hurt or discomfort to the child. Rather, he made up his mind to insure that the child be put into proper care and custody after the murder. The conduct of the accused appellant before and after the incident was sufficient to negate any notion that he was mentally insane, so as not to be possessed of the necessary mens rea, for committing the murder of his wife.[5]476

Meaning of Hallucination

Hallucination has been described as a trick of the senses, as when one, in a delirium, sees serpents, spiders or other things, where there are no such things.[6] The primary meaning of 'hallucination', is a blunder, an error, a fallacy, a mistake, an error of eye sight, hearing, and the like, as where the patient imagines that he sees an object, where there is none, or hears a voice, where no sound strikes his ear.[7] The mere fact, that so many injuries have been caused to an unarmed and undefended victim, does not show that the accused was under some hallucination.[8] Similarly, the mere fact that the accused was under some hallucination, does not attract s 84, IPC .[9]

Puerperal Insanity

Puerperium, pregnancy, lactation, and other affections of the female generative organs are known occasionally to produce a mental condition in which a mother may not be responsible for her acts; puerperal mania is frequently associated with homicidal violence inflicted on a child. The killing of the child is usually either the result of a sudden fit of delirium or a sudden impulse, with a full knowledge of the wickedness and illegality of the act. The legal test of responsibility can be applied to such cases only on the assumption that insanity already exists. Women have been known to ask that the child may be removed, but afterwards seized an opportunity for killing it. Such cases are distinguished from deliberate child-murder by the fact that there is no motive, no attempt at concealment, and no denial of the crime. In this connection the merciful provisions of the Infanticide Act should be borne in mind.[10]

Lactational Insanity

Lactational insanity comprises all cases which occur from six weeks after confinement. It occurs most frequently in cases in which lactation has been unduly prolonged, and is usually of a depressed deconfusional type with ideas of unworthiness and delusions affecting the husband and child. Suicide or infanticide may occur as a result of these conditions.[11]

Dipsomania or Drunkenness

Insanity, whether produced by drunkenness or otherwise, is a defence to the crime charged.[12] Under this section unsoundness of mind producing incapacity to know the nature of the act committed or that it is wrong or contrary to law is a defence to a criminal charge, but such incapacity is no defence, if produced by voluntary drunkenness. If, however, voluntary drunkenness causes a disease which produces such incapacity, then this section would apply, though the disease may be of a temporary nature.[13] There is a distinction, however, between the defence of insanity477 in the true sense caused by excessive drunkenness and the defence of drunkenness which produces a condition such that the drunken man's mind becomes incapable of forming a specific intention. If actual insanity in fact supervenes as the result of alcoholic excess it furnishes as complete an answer to a criminal charge as insanity induced by any other cause.[14]

Somnambulism

Somnambulism (or walking in sleep) is an abnormal condition allied to epilepsy and the artificially induced state of mesmerism or hypnotism.[15] This is a species of mental unsoundness connected with sleep.[16] In this condition the mental faculties are partially active and are so concentrated on one particular train of ideas that a somnambulist is capable of performing most remarkable and incredible pieces of work, which would have baffled his intelligence during his waking hours. A somnambulist may thus solve a very difficult problem or may commit theft or murder. A person who is the victim of a somnambulistic habit has generally no recollection of the events occurring during the fit after he awakes. In some cases, he remembers the events of one fit in subsequent fits and follows them with exact precision though he forgets them in the normal state. Somnambulism, constitutes unsoundness of mind and forms a very good plea of defence for exemption from criminal liability, if it can be proved that the accused committed the offence during such fit.[17]

Schizophrenia

Schizophrenia is a mental disorder involving a breakdown in the relation between thought, emotion, and behaviour, leading to faulty perception, inappropriate actions and feelings, and withdrawal from reality into fantasy and delusion. Therefore, it is a temporary disorder and it can be cured.[18] Schizophrenia indicates a splitting of the mind. It was also known as dementia praecox. Persons suffering from schizophrenia may commit serious criminal acts. Indecent exposures or outrageous sexual proposals or attacks, brutal assaultiveness, gross destructiveness, threats, murder, etc. may be carried out with reckless abandon by such persons.[19] It is one form of insanity. The accused was suffering from schizophrenia. Doctor examining the accused a little before as also a little after the occurrence found him insane. Detailed reasons were given by the doctors corroborating each other's conclusions about the accused's insanity. In such a case, accused was found entitled to the benefit of provisions of s 84, IPC .[20]

When an accused took his eight year old daughter to visit a deity. On the way he cut her head with the sickle and carried her head in one hand and sickle in another hand. There was no struggle or resistance on his part when apprehended. He had also made no attempt to conceal himself and had no reason for committing this crime. He478 was diagnosed as a case of schizophrenia and its symptom were of aggravated form. It was held that the accused did not know the nature of his act and was entitled to get protection under s 84, IPC .[21] The accused appellant had cut his son, aged about 11½ years, to death and was intercepted by his wife while he was preparing to bury the dead body by digging pit. Medical evidence proved that the accused appellant was suffering from schizophrenia. He was acquitted of the charge under s 302, IPC .[22]

Where accused alleged to have killed his stepfather by an axe but there was no ill-will or any animosity in the mind of the accused against deceased, testimony of witnesses was that the accused was a lunatic and living with the deceased for treatment, the medical evidence was that the accused was suffering from a schizophrenic form of psychosis, the accused was also confined in lunatic jail, on these facts the case was held falling under s 84 of IPC .[23] Where the accused was suffering from schizophrenia and the behaviour of the accused was found to be strange before and after the incident, the prosecution was unable to prove requisite mens rea when the accused stabbed the deceased, it was held that the accused was entitled to the benefit of s 84, IPC, and for acquittal under s 302 .[24]

The law presumes every person to be sane. In order to establish the defence of insanity, the accused must satisfy the test prescribed by s 84, IPC . The medical evidence adduced in the case did not establish that the accused in fact was suffering from schizophrenia. The conduct of the appellant during the relevant period would show that the appellant searched for the axe and launched murderous assault on his wife while all others were asleep. Even after inmates of the house awoke, when appellant heard groaning of his wife, he tried to inflict another blow, in presence of all the relatives, saying that he is determined to end her life. This conduct of the appellant at the time of the commission of the offence would show that he was in full control of his cognitive faculties. The appellant accused was held not entitled to the protection of s 84 . His conviction under s 302, IPC was held proper.[25]

Temporary Insanity

The behaviour of a human being has continuity, there is marked day-to-day consistency of action and attitude in the individual. There are changes and modifications, but these are usually gradual. Psychosis is characterised by a marked change in personality. The change is gradual and progressive, extending over periods of weeks and months or more. True, the onset of psychosis is more rapid in some cases than in others, but even when we speak of a sudden onset, we are thinking in terms of days and weeks. 'Sudden' here means relatively rapid, but not abrupt, without warning, overnight. Once the psychotic act has been precipitated, recovery is a matter of gradual progressive building up, reintegration, re-organization. The person neither is sane one day and psychotic the next, nor is he psychotic one day and sane the next. Temporary insanity may be within the realm of theoretical possibility but not of probability. If no increasing signs of abnormality are to be found in the defendant's life, no history of instability and increasing tension leading up to the alleged psychotic incident, and if, after the incident, there are no psychotic479 hangovers, no persisting symptoms of abnormality, then a plea of temporary insanity is suspect indeed.[26]

Where the accused attempted to end her life by jumping into a well alongwith her female child in her lap, life of the female child lost in the incident and mental condition of the accused at the time of the incident was not normal as she was suffering from an old illness of tuberculosis coupled with serious and continuous stomach pain but the accused was in full senses when she was brought out of the well and had narrated to witnesses the reason justifying her act, the case was not found to be a fit case which could be covered for purposes of a plea of insanity under s 84 .[27]

Irresistible Impulse

This is a peculiar form of insanity, a mania which may co-exist with perfect sanity (apparently) in other respects. Its commonest form is impulsive homicidal mania. Cases of this kind are very numerous;[28] their chief characteristic being an entire absence of motive. The victims are usually those who are nearest and dearest to the person who is assailed with this violent temptation to slay, who, in many cases, knows that the temptation is coming on, and begs those around him to have him confined until the impulse has passed away. An impulse to be irresistible must be one which cannot be resisted: not merely one which is not resisted. A person has no choice about feeling an insane impulse, but this is not the same thing as an impulse which cannot be resisted. Innumerable cases have occurred of persons feeling insane impulses, who have successfully resisted them, and if this be possible, it is of course the legal duty of the persons assailed to resist them.[29]

To get the protection under s 84, IPC, it is necessary that the person concerned by reason of unsoundness was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law. The mental impulse which had led to the commission of the crime has to be irresistible and not only unresisted, to regard the same as 'impulsive insanity'. The mere fact, that it was committed on a sudden impulse, is not sufficient.

Upon principle, it might seem that a person committing a crime under irresistible impulse should be exempted from criminal responsibility by reason of constraint, or compulsion, i.e., he cannot help himself, being deprived of the power of self-control, and thus at the mercy of the temptation. The power of self-control means:

> A power to attend to distant motives and general principles of conduct, and to connect them rationally with the particular act under consideration, and a disease of the brain which so weakens the sufferer's powers, as to prevent his attending or referring to such considerations, or from connecting the general theory which the particular fact deprives him with the power of self-control.[30]

Sir JE Stephen[31] has opined that a person cannot be said to know that his conduct is wrong, when, through loss of self-control, he is unable to make that comparison and480 application upon which knowledge that a thing is wrong depends. But the doctrine of irresistible impulse as a ground of exemption has been rejected by the courts both in England,[32] as well as in India,[33] where it has been held that a crime committed under such an impulse does not fall within the scope of s 84 . The Orissa High Court has, however, taken a contrary view and it has been held that on a plain reading of s 84, IPC, it is found that 'irresistible impulse' seems to be a defence which on account of such impulse the accused is incapable of knowing the nature of the act he is doing and what he is doing is either wrong or contrary to law. Such impulse or abnormal urge to perform certain activity due to mental disease might be covered by s 84, IPC .[34] Probably the practical difficulty of determining whether an impulse was irresistible or merely unresisted, and the fact that no available restraint in such cases should be withdrawn (for religion, conscience and law afford such restraints),[35] have determined the legal doctrine on this subject. Though case-law and the general trend of legal discussions have finally rejected Sir Stephen's interpretation, the courts have developed in practice an elasticity of the sort he was seeking. Where it is clear that the prisoner is insane, the Mcnaughten Rules have often been so construed or so avoided as to dispose satisfactorily the cases which come before the courts.[36]

But whatever modification of practice there may have been, the law has remained in substance unchanged since the Mcnaughten Rules were laid down.

Fear, complex excitement or irresistible impulses with loss of self-control, even if such be taken as proved in the case, affords no defence to a crime under the Indian law and is therefore irrelevant except for a mitigation of the offence from murder to culpable homicide in certain circumstances.[37]

Major Depression

Merely because the accused at time of the commission of offence was under major depression, same would not entitle him to the benefit of unsoundness of mind. The observation report of the Institute of Mental Health showed that the accused was suffering from major depression and nothing more. The fact that after stabbing the child, the accused appellant attempted to slit his throat and commit suicide, belied the contention that he was not in a mentally fit condition when he committed the murder of his child. In this case, the accused had not produced any credible evidence to show481 that he suffered from legal insanity and had failed to discharge the burden cast on him by s 105 of the Evidence Act . The conviction of the accused under ss 302 and 309, IPC was confirmed.[38]

20. Crime Pattern of Homicidal Monomaniac vis-à-vis that of Ordinary Criminal

The circumstances under which the homicidal act is perpetrated furnishes strong grounds for believing that they depend on mental alienation in some form or the other; so different are these circumstances from those which attend the commission of crime. In homicidal insanity, murder is without any motive strictly deserving the name; or at most, with one totally inadequate to produce the act in a sane mind. On the contrary, murder is never criminally committed without some motive adequate to the purpose in the mind that is actuated by it and with obvious reference to the ill-fated victim.

Thus, the motive may be theft, or the advancement of any personal interest, in which case it will be found that the victim had or was supposed to have property, or was an obstacle to the designs or expectations of another, or it may be revenge, and then the injury, will be found to have been received by the murderer from the object of his wrath. In short, with the criminal, murder is always a means for accomplishing some selfish object, and is frequently accompanied by some other crime; whereas, with the homicidal monomaniac, murder is the only object in view, and is never accompanied by any other improper act.

The homicidal monomaniac, after gratifying his bloody desires, testifies neither to remorse, not to repentance, nor to satisfaction, and if judicially condemned, perhaps acknowledges the justice of the sentence. The criminal either denies or confesses his guilt; if the latter, he either humbly sues for mercy or glories in his crimes, and leaves the world cursing his judges and with his last breath exclaiming against the injustice of his fate.

The criminal never sheds more blood than is necessary for the attainment of his object; the homicidal monomaniac often sacrifices all within his reach to the cravings of his crimes, and leaves the world cursing his judges with murderous propensity.

The criminal lays plans for the execution of his design; time, place and weapons are all suited to his purpose; and, when successful, he either flees from the scene of his enormities, or makes every effort to avoid discovery. The homicidal monomaniac on the contrary, for the most part, consults none of the usual conveniences of crime; he falls upon the object of his fury, oftentimes without the most proper means for accomplishing his purpose; and perhaps in the presence of a multitude, as if expressly for court observation; and then voluntarily surrenders himself to the constituted authorities. When, as is sometimes the case, he does prepare the means, and calmly and deliberately executes his project, his subsequent conduct is still the same as in the former instance.

The criminal often has accomplices and always vicious association; the homicidal monomaniac has neither. The acts of homicidal insanity are generally, perhaps always, preceded by some striking peculiarities in the conduct or character of the482 individual, strongly contrasting with his natural manifestations; while those of the criminal are in correspondence with the tenor of his past history or character.

In homicidal insanity, a man murders his wife, children, or others to whom he is tenderly attached; this the criminal never does, unless to gratify some evil passion, or gain some other selfish end, too obvious to be overlooked in the slightest investigation.[39]

21. Wrong

The word 'wrong', in s 84, IPC must mean morally wrong, otherwise it will be redundant and will serve no useful purpose.[40]

It is, necessary for the court to reach the conclusion that at the time the offending act was committed the accused was deprived of his cognitive faculties to such extent that he was not capable of distinguishing between the right and the wrong or the legal and the illegal so that he could not be held responsible for his own actions. The onus to prove such a mental state is on the person charged with the crime. A person who has the judgment to weigh his own actions and being conscious of their illegality, is able to offer an exculpatory explanation can certainly not be said to be suffering from any legal insanity so as to keep such actions outside the purview of penal provisions.[41]

'Incapable of Knowing'

A Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court observed:

> The significant word in the above section is 'incapable'. The fallacy of the above view lies in the fact that it ignores that what s 84 lays down is not that the accused claiming protection under it should not know an act to be right or wrong, but that the accused should be 'incapable' of knowing whether the act done by him is right or wrong. The capacity to know a thing is quite different from what a person knows. The former is a potentiality, the latter is the result of it. If a person possesses the former, he cannot be protected in law, whatever might be the result of his potentiality. In other words, what is protected is an inherent or organic incapacity and not a wrong or erroneous belief which might be the result of a perverted potentiality. It was further observed: 'What the law protects is the case of a man in whom the guiding light that enables a man to distinguish between right and wrong and between legality and illegality is completely extinguished. Where such light is found to be still flickering, a man cannot be heard to plead that he should be protected because he was misled by his own misguided intuition or by any fancied delusion which had been haunting him and which he mistook to be a reality. Our beliefs are primarily the offsprings of the faculty of intuition. On the other hand, the content of our knowledge and our realisation of its nature is born out of the faculties of cognition and reason. If cognition and > reason are found to be still alive and gleaming, it will not avail a man to say that at the crucial moment he had been befogged by an overhanging cloud of intuition which had been casting its deep and dark shadows over them.[42]483

The Penal Code contemplates, as grounds of exemption from criminal responsibility, two completely different mental conditions arising from unsoundness of mind, viz, an incapacity: (1) to know the nature of the act; (2) to know that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law. Of these, the first seems to refer to the offender's consciousness of the bearing of his act on those who are affected by it; the second, on his consciousness of its relation to himself. Each species of consciousness is ordinarily present to the mind of a normally sane person. Either, or both, or neither may be absent from the mind of one who is mentally diseased. The absence of both, or either, relieves the offender from liability to punishment.[43]

In R v Layton ,[44] Rolfe B, said: 'Perhaps it would be going too far to say that a party was responsible in every case, where he had a glimmering knowledge of what was right and wrong'. Says Mayne:

> When we talk of a man knowing that murder is wrong and contrary to law, we mean that the knowledge forms an essential part of the stock of principles which govern every moment of his life. That whenever he is tempted to commit a murder, his mind must necessarily at the same time contemplate the fact, that if he does commit it, he will probably be hung, and in any case his life will become a burden to him, from the constant chance of his being found out. There is no ordinary murderer of whom this, at least, may not be stated with certainty. But can it be said of all lunatics? Of many, no doubt, it can, but certainly not of all. When we say of a lunatic that 'his mind is unhinged', we use a phrase which seems to me to embody a very important truth. His mind is still there, but it is dislocated. The facts which make up his knowledge are still there, but they have ceased to be in connection with, or to bear upon, each other. They have passed from being principles of conduct to being barren pieces of information such as the statement that we may each drop down dead at any moment which everyone believes, and by which no one is influenced.[45]

Following this, in a case,[46] where the accused killed his wife and child without any motive and, at the commencement of his trial, admitted his guilt and prayed to be hanged, a Division Bench of the Madhya Pradesh High Court held that in a vague way the accused knew that he had killed human beings and that he ought to be hanged, but that, applying the test laid down by Lord Kenyon CJ, in R v Hadfield ,[47] the accused could not be said to be 'under the guidance of reason so that we can reasonably infer that he was of unsound mind at the time he committed the act'. Referring to the observations of Mayne quoted above, their Lordships of the Madhya Pradesh High Court observed:

> Every criminal when he commits a crime has an instinctive dread of the consequences. To a normal man, the sanction provided by the criminal law acts as a deterrent, 'influencing, guiding and controlling his conduct'. But in the instant case we find that though the accused had a 'glimmering knowledge' that his act was contrary to law, the facts which made up 'his knowledge' had ceased to be in connection with each other or to bear upon each other. They had passed from being principles of conduct to being barren pieces of information which were absolutely incapable of influencing, guiding or controlling his conduct.484

22. Two Different Conditions of Capability of Knowing Illustrated

A prisoner may be capable of knowing the nature of the act but not that the act was wrong or contrary to law.[48] Two illustrations commonly cited to distinguish the two different conditions of mind may here be set out. A person strikes another and in consequence of an insane delusion believes that he is striking a bird. In such a case, he does not know the nature of his act. In the other case, he may kill a child under an insane delusion that he is saving him from sin and sending him to heaven. Here he is incapable of knowing, by reason of his insanity, that he is doing what is morally wrong, though he is aware of the nature of the act.[49]

23. 'Incapable of Knowing the Nature of the Act'--Meaning

As Mayne points out:

> The words 'incapable of knowing the nature of the act' may refer to two different states of mind, which are distinguished in the answers of the Judges in the McNaughten case,[50] and in the English Draft Code of 1879, by the words 'nature and quality'. A man is properly said to be ignorant of the nature of his act when he is ignorant of the properties and operation of the external agencies which he brings into play. As if, for instance, an idiot should fire a gun at a person looking upon it as a harmless firework. He is ignorant of the quality of his act if he knows the result which will follow, but is incapable of appreciating the elementary principles which make up the heinous and shocking nature of that result; as if, for instance, an idiot was unable to perceive the difference between shooting a man and shooting an ape. Both the states of mind are no doubt intended by the authors of the Penal Code to be included under the words they have used. This ground of exemption will hardly ever be found to exist, except in the case of idiots, or of lunatics whose insanity is so complete as to sweep away substantially all the reasoning power which distinguishes a man from a beast. But it seems to me most important to point out, that a person in this condition might have that consciousness, which is equally possessed by the lower animals, that the act which he intended to do so was wrong in the sense of being forbidden, and one for which he might be punished. This, however, would not render him liable under the words of the second clause if he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act which he really did, and for which alone he could be indicated. A good illustration is to be found in the case mentioned by Sir Jame Stephen, of the idiot who cut off the head of a man whom he found sleeping, because, as he explained it would be such fun to watch him looking about for his head when he awoke. It is probable that the idiot was quite aware that the man was entitled to the possession of his head, and expected that, if he was detected, he would be well cuffed by the man, and very probably taken up by the police. It is quite certain he had no idea that his fun would be lost, because the man would never awake.[51]

This has been held to be a correct statement of the law.[52]

24. Three Grounds for Exemption from Criminal Liability

On general form of the questions is improbable, implies that the effect of insanity upon the emotions and will is not to be taken into account in deciding whether the act of an insane person is a crime or not.485

On general principles underlying exemptions from criminal liability, there are three grounds upon one or other of which an insane person may be exempted from criminal responsibility for his conduct:

(i) Unconsciousness of what he was doing, i.e., of the nature of his physical act: A kills B under an insane delusion that he is breaking a jar.[53]

(ii) Unconsciousness of the consequences of his physical act: A sets fire to valuable ricks of straw belonging to B, knowing that he is doing so, and in order to enjoy the blaze, but his mind is so imbecilic that he does not know that he will injure B by so doing.[54]

(iii) Ignorance that his conduct is either morally or legally wrong: A, believing that he has received a divine command to kill B, and to undergo capital punishment for so doing, kills B. Here A believes his act to be morally right, though he knows it to be legally wrong.[55]

Incapacity or Unconsciousness to know the Nature of the Physical Act--Head (1)

Unconsciousness of the nature of a physical act denotes extreme insanity, and is not common.

Illustrative Cases

(1) A, a married woman, killed B, her husband, immediately after an apparent recovery from a brain disease which caused insane delusions, which were renewed at the time of the homicide. It was held, that she did not know the nature of the act.[56]

(2) A, a man of absurd extravagance and eccentricity of conduct, of excessive intemperate habits, and who suffered occasionally from delirium tremens, whilst not so suffering killed B under circumstances showing deliberation and sense. It was held that he did know the nature of the act.[57]

(3) A, a habitual consumer of ganja, killed his wife and two children, on provoking words being uttered by the former, and then attempted to commit suicide. It was held that he did know the nature of the act.[58]

(4) A, who had been suffering from fever which caused him paroxysms, and being in consequence very irritable and sensitive to sound, on a sudden impulse killed his two children, on hearing them cry. It was held that he knew the nature of his act.[59]

Incapacity or Unconsciousness to Know the Nature of the Acts--Head (2)

Unconsciousness of the consequences of a physical act denotes a less degree of insanity than that under Head (1) and is therefore more common. It is the state of mind commonly known as idiocy.486

In ordinary language, the word 'act' is used as including the more immediate consequences of the act pure and simple (i.e., the bodily movements of the agent). Thus, the words 'nature of the act' in this section include both the nature of the physical act [Head (1)] and the nature of its more immediate consequences [Head (2)]. In illust (2), A was quite aware of the nature of his physical act, the setting fire to the straw, but he was too imbecilic to realise the mischievous nature of the act, the consequential loss caused to B.[60]

Incapacity or Unconsciousness to Know that he is Doing what is Either Wrong, or Contrary to Law--Head (3)

The next ground of exemption is the most important, as it is generally the test in the very numerous cases, where mental disease has only partially extinguished reason. One familiar instance of such partial extinguishment is the case of delusions, which apparently leave the mind unaltered outside the special ideas which they affect. The questions put by the House of Lords to the judges (in the McNaughten's case) seem to have been specially addressed to this form of insanity. Their answers are perfectly clear, and are embodied in the following clause of the Draft Code of 1879, which puts the law in the most satisfactory manner.

A person labouring under specific delusions, but in other respects sane, shall not be acquitted on the ground of insanity, unless the delusions caused him to believe in the existence of some state of things which, if it existed, would justify or excuse his act. Provided that insanity before or after the time he committed the act, and insane delusions, though only partial, may be evidence that the offender was, at the time, when he committed the act, in such a condition of mind as to entitle him to be acquitted on the ground of insanity.[61]

Where a person, otherwise sane but labouring under the influence of an insane delusion, commits an act of revenge for some supposed grievance or injury, he is nevertheless punishable according to the nature of the crime committed, if at the time he understood that he was committing a wrong and unlawful act. In other words, he must be considered in the same situation as to responsibility as a sane person would be, if the facts with regard to which the delusion exists were true.[62]To be within this exemption an accused person must be, by reason of his unsoundness of mind, unconscious at the time he committed the act that was a crime.[63]

If an individual is not sane, and by reason of his insanity, he is incapable of knowing, that a given conduct is either legally or morally wrong, for e.g.., he believes that something which he knows to be contrary to law to be right in a particular instance, then he will not be responsible for doing the forbidden act, by reason of his unconsciousness of wrong, consequent upon his insanity. Usually this ignorance of the wrongfulness of certain conduct, this belief is its rightfulness, is accompanied by delusions, into which the supernatural delusion frequently enters, e.g., the conviction of fanatics or madmen. It was so in the case of Hadfield,[64] who, believing that he was called upon by the voice of Heaven to sacrifice himself for the487 salvation of the world, proceeded to the theatre in order to shoot the king (George the third) who was there, so that he might be executed for the crime, and there shot at him. Here the moral perversion coupled with the delusion outweighed his knowledge of the criminality of the act, and was held as evidence of his insanity, and consequently he was exempted from punishment.

Illustrative Cases

An accused, who was a disciple of a Pir, on being told by the Pir's mistress, whom he respected as mother that he would go to heaven if he offered a human head in sacrifice on the auspicious first day of Ramzan, cut off the heads of two persons including that of his own daughter and offered the same to the Pir. It was held that the accused did not know that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law and was therefore entitled to the protection of s 84, IPC .[65]

The accused killed his wife under a delusion that she was unchaste, but it could not be said that he was incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law, it was held that he was not entitled to the benefit of s 84 .[66] The accused appellant, suspecting illicit relation between his wife PW and the deceased, on the day of occurrence, repeatedly assaulted the deceased with wooden plank. The wife PW, son of the accused appellant and one more witness PW whose presence on the spot could not be doubted, deposed about the assault. The plea of insanity was rejected and the accused was convicted on charge of murder under s 302, IPC .[67]

The incident happened on the 18 February 1996 and even before the challan had been filed on the 26 April 1996, the accused had been sent to the Medical Hospital, for treatment and she had remained admitted in the hospital for treatment till 12 October 1999. When she had been produced before the concerned court, on that day it was found that she was still behaving in an abnormal manner, and she was again sent to the Medical Hospital where she remained under treatment from 12 October 1999 till 20 November 2001. The accused was suffering from insanity and therefore, was acquitted.[68]

Appellant accused had hit his wife on the head with a spade and caused death. Evidence brought on the record showed that the accused appellant was suffering from insanity which had incapacitated him from knowing the nature of his act. Held, the appellant accused was entitled to the benefit of s 84 and was acquitted of the charge under s 302, IPC .[69]

There was evidence that the accused was found standing naked by a road side with a hasua stained with blood. The investigating officer did not have the accused medically examined whether the accused was of a sound/unsound mind at the time of the commission of the offence. The appellant accused was held entitled to the protection of s 84, IPC .[70]488

Accused appellant had committed murder of 11 persons including eight children of his family. In the fardbeyan (FIR) itself the informant stated that the appellant was behaving like an insane person since the last 2-3 years and was living in loneliness. He occasionally used to go away from the house and he did not respond to the call of any person and he was undergoing treatment but since last month when his voice started trembling he stopped taking medicine. The medical report of Medical Board, consisting of three experts, showed that the appellant was suffering from Paranoid Schizophrenia even at the time of the commission of the alleged offence of murder and, therefore, it could very well be inferred from the facts and circumstances that at the time of alleged commission of crime the appellant was suffering from Paranoid Schizophrenia, which is one of the kinds of insanity and unsoundness of mind. The appellant accused was acquitted of the charge of murder.[71]

The appellant, with her two children, jumped into a well. When a rope was lowered in the well, the appellant caught hold of the rope then she was taken out. On questioning as to why she had jumped into the well the appellant answered that her husband did not provide food to her and beat her and so she jumped into the well. Her conduct in coming out of the well and her answer suggest that she was not insane and she knew the consequences of her act. In such a case, the plea of insanity by the appellant cannot be said to be true and sustainable.[72]

The fact that the accused was treated for sometime for some kind of mental disorder over two and a half years prior to the incident or a year after incident, is no indication of his mental disorder at the relevant time. Facts that the accused after using a dagger tried to suppress evidence by washing off blood from his face and weapon and remained absconding over a year show that he was well aware and fully conscious of what he was doing.[73]

Where the plea of insanity of the accused was not taken at any stage of the trial, no questions were put to the PWS about the insanity of the accused, and documents relating to treatment of the accused were not filed in the court, held the accused appellant was not entitled to the protection of s 84, IPC .[74]

When it is not a case of clear insanity, but is just a case of some aberration in the mind of the accused that had resulted in abnormal behaviour leading to the assault on his wife, children and others who came to their rescue. The evidence otherwise indicates that the man was a normal human being, who was not remiss in the matter of providing his wife and children with shelter and food. There may have been some circumstances, some kind of stress and strain resulting in a momentary imbalance robbing him of rational thinking so on and so forth. Many reasons may be spelled out for his act and conduct, but none of them would suffice to hold that he was totally insane in which event alone he could be bailed out by the court taking resort to s 84, IPC . Only to save the accused from the throes of punishment, one should not brand a person a madman or call him insane.[75]

The investigating officer was never told about the alleged insanity of the appellant accused. The appellant accused was also not medically examined in the case. When489 the burden was on the appellant, the defence should have discharged it by quoting instances and by bringing on record the earlier medical evidence etc. No efforts were made even during the entire period of trial to get the appellant medically examined so that an opinion may have been obtained regarding alleged unsoundness of mind which defence the appellant had half-heartedly taken at the trial. There was no observation of the Sessions Court in this regard. Even in the statement of the appellant, recorded under s 313, CrPC, nothing was observed nor the answers to the questions put to him were given in such a manner on which the court may have proceed in that line. The plea of insanity was repelled.[76]

When the accused obviously and completely knew everything that he was doing as also consequences of his acts, in these circumstances, the defence of insanity cannot avail him. The evidence in this case indicated that the accused put the young girl on a bicycle and took her to a lonely place, this is in keeping with the conduct of a sane person and one who was planning an offence of this type rather than a madman who in a fit of insanity would attack a woman or child. Secondly, after committing the offence and after sexually assaulting the young child the accused not only ran away but he took the precaution of lifting the body and throwing it into the canal with obvious reason of screening of the evidence or the consequences of his act. This is a carefully thought out and manipulated action and certainly not the act of an insane human being. Tested from these angles therefore, the defence of insanity requires to be rejected.[77]

Where it was established that the accused killed his son by stabbing him with knife in the fields, on account of the unsoundness of the mind he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that what he was doing is either wrong or contrary to law; it was held that he was entitled to acquittal on the ground.[78] Where the evidence on record showed (a) that father of the appellant was a madman and his brother was half mad; (b) that for about four or five years the appellant was found moving like a madman and he was not particular about his food, and after moving around throughout the day, he used to return home in the evening; (c) that the appellant killed his wife without any rational motive; (d) that he made no effort to escape from the scene or to conceal anything; (e) that he showed no feeling of remorse or repentance for what he had done; (f) that after killing his wife, he remained completely unmindful of what had happened, meaning thereby that he did not exhibit any feeling or reaction whatsoever; and (g) that he inflicted injuries on his own person and attempted to cut his own penis; it was held that the said circumstances are indicative of the fact that at the time when the appellant killed his wife, he was mentally incapable of knowing what he was doing.[79]

Where the appellant husband killed his wife by dao, the prosecution witnesses deposed that the accused was suffering from mental disorder and insanity for a long period, the appellant was held protected by s 84, IPC and acquitted of the charge of murder.[80] Appellant accused had inflicted sickle blow on his wife and killed her. The appellant accused after commission of murder ran away from the spot and the dead body of the deceased was cremated before the arrival of the police. Record of mental Hospital showed that on psycho diagnosis, the appellant was not seen to have any490 gross psycho-pathology findings. Plea of insanity was rejected, and appellant accused was convicted on the charge of murder.[81]

The appellant-accused had an altercation with the deceased in her house, followed her to the house of PW3 where PW3, PW4 and PW5 were watching TV. He took out a kulhari, severed her head, threw it in the courtyard and told PW3 'take it'. Events showed that the appellant had taken a conscious decision to kill the deceased. Appellant soon after the incident was examined by doctor, when he was found conscious, co-operative and oriented to time and place. Appellant was not protected by s 84, IPC .[82]

In an undernoted identical case before the Gujarat High Court the accused imagining himself to be 'Arjun' killed his wife and his elder son and disclosed this fact before the Sarpanch of the village addressing the Sarpanch of the village as 'Bhishma Pitamaha'. The Gujarat High Court, considering the totality of the circumstances of the said case, came to the conclusion that the accused was suffering from a delusion or a hallucination that he was a pure blooded 'Suryabanshi and Arjun of the Mahabharat'. There was absence of provocation for the accused to commit the brutal act of killing his wife and his elder son and after killing them, he openly told the Sarpanch that he has killed his wife and son. There was no attempt on his part to conceal what he had done or conceal the incriminating pieces of evidence, i.e. the weapon of offence and his blood-stained clothes. There was no repentance on his part. On the above grounds, benefit of s 84, IPC was extended to the accused in the said case.[83]

25. Insanity is a Question of Fact

The question, whether the accused was mad at the time of occurrence so as to attract the application of this section, is a question of fact to be decided on merits in each case on the facts of that case.[84]

26. To Claim Benefit of Section Specific Plea and Evidence Necessary

It must be borne in mind that to claim the benefit of the provisions of s 84 of the IPC, there must be specific plea at the time of trial and the evidence must indicate that, by reason of unsoundness of mind the accused did not know the nature of the act he did. No such material had been placed before the trial Court and no such plea had been taken. This abnormal behaviour of the accused in attempting to cut the penis of his nephew aged about five years and leaving his wife in his parent's house, at the most indicates a sexual deficiency in the accused expressed into a positive act of cutting the penis of some other person. That indicates a medical imbalance of the accused, which has to be treated and it does not reduce the culpability of the accused.[85]

27. Burden of Proof

From the plain reading of the said provision, it is clear that in order to claim the benefit under the section, the defence has to show that at the time of occurrence of the incident, he was of unsound mind.[86]491

The burden to prove that the accused was of unsound mind and as a result thereof he was incapable of knowing the nature and consequences of his acts is on the accused.[1]

In case of defense taken under s 84 of IPC, burden lies on the accused to prove that the accused was incapable of knowing the nature of the act at the time of commission of crime.[2]

The rules of burden of proof in the context of the plea of insanity are:

(i) that the prosecution must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the offence was committed by the accused that the requisite mens rea and the burden continues from the beginning till the end of the trial;
(ii) that it is a rebuttable presumption that the prisoner was not insane when he committed an offence in the sense set forth in s 84, IPC ;
(iii) that the accused may rebut the presumption of sanity at the relevant time bringing the case within s 84, IPC, by producing oral, documentary, circumstantial and other materials and he may discharge the burden by establishing a reasonable probable case. The accused is not called upon to establish the element of s 84, IPC, by producing evidence beyond reasonable doubt and;
(iv) that even the accused fails to establish affirmatively or conclusively, that he was of unsound mind and committed the act under the circumstances set out in s 84, IPC, but raises a reasonable doubt in the mind of the court as regards presence of essential ingredients of the offence, which of course includes, mens rea the requisite criminal intention, the court would be entitled to acquit the accused on the ground that the general burden of proof resting on the prosecution was not discharged.[3]

The onus of proving unsoundness of mind is on the accused. But where during the investigation previous history of insanity is revealed, it is the duty of an honest investigator to subject the accused to a medical examination and place that evidence before the court and if this is not done, it creates serious infirmity in the prosecution case and the benefit of doubt has to be given to the accused. The onus, however, has to be discharged by producing evidence as to the conduct of the accused shortly prior to the offence and his conduct at the time or immediately afterwards, also by evidence of his mental condition and other relevant factors. Every person is presumed to know the natural consequences of his act. Similarly, every person is also presumed to know the law.[4]

It lies on the accused to prove that he was insane at the time of the commission of an offence, so as not to be liable to punishment as a sane person.[5] The burden of492 proof to prove that the mental condition of the accused at the crucial point of time was such as is described by s 84 of the IPC, lies on the accused who claims the benefit of this exemption.[6] The only question is as to the nature and extent of the burden of proof that lies on the accused. The law on the subject with regard to the general exception in the Code has been discussed in the general note on this chapter. The leading case on the subject is Woolmington v Director of Public Prosecutions [7] which has been generally followed in India. But the law bearing on the question of insanity stands on a different footing. The rule in Woolmington's case is not with reference to a case in which the plea of insanity was set up.[8] Viscount Sankey LC, who delivered the judgment of the House in Woolmington's case[9] observed:

> McNaughten's case stands by itself. It is the famous pronouncement on the law bearing on the question of insanity in cases of murder. It is quite exceptional and has nothing to do with the present circumstances. In McNaughten's case the onus is definitely and exceptionally placed upon the accused to establish such a defence...where it is stated that the only general rule that can be laid down as to the evidence in such a case is that insanity, if relied upon as a defence, must be established by the defendant...It is not necessary to refer to McNaughten's case again in this judgment, for it has nothing to do with it.

According to the Mcnaughten's rules, every man possesses a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crime, until the contrary is proved to the satisfaction of the jury; that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of committing the act, the accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong.[10]

Where accused is found to be man of sound mind during trial by the court below, it is the duty of the accused to prove his case to be falling under any of the exception including under s 84 of IPC to avoid his conviction and sentence. Appellant accused, a security guard of the bank, entered the bank and fired shots at the deceased who died. Evidence showed that the behavior of the accused before and after the incident was normal. Plea of insanity was rejected.[11]

Where accused killed his own son aged three years for no apparent reason and was detained in a mental hospital for about two years and was thus not a normal man at the time when he committed alleged crime. No evidence was led by prosecution to show his state of mind during custody, the accused took plea of insanity and it was held that the accused rebutted presumption of sanity and was entitled to acquittal.[12]493 Where the evidence as to the state of mind pleaded is conflicting, he should be convicted as on him lies the burden of proving his defence, which in the case of conflicting evidence cannot be said to be sufficiently discharged.[13]

The accused appellant threw petrol over his nephew deceased causing death. His father took plea that the accused was insane, however, he was not examined. The medical evidence did not prove that the accused appellant was of unsound mind. He was held not entitled to protection of s 84, IPC .[14]

In order to get the benefit of s 84, IPC, the onus is on the appellant accused to prove that the act was done by him while he was insane or of unsound mind. The appellant did not adduce any evidence to prove that he was insane at the time of occurrence. On the other hand, the evidence of PWS showed that the appellant was not insane. The benefit of s 84, IPC was not extended to the appellant.[15]

The evidence ought to be sufficient for a categorical finding that at the time when the accused committed the act he was of unsound mind to such an extent that he was incapable of knowing that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law.[16] Where there is a mere possibility that the accused may have been insane at the time of commission of the act of murder, then in the absence of proof in the affirmative of the kind of insanity referred to in this section the presumption is that the accused is responsible for his act.[17] But when the accused was not feigning insanity nor could it be said with any certainty or definitively that the accused was absolutely sane on the date and at the time when he assaulted the deceased with a knife, the burden on the accused is not to prove his defence beyond a shadow of doubt, as in the case of prosecution, but he has only to establish it with preponderance of probability. When the doctor also could not categorically state that the accused had or did not have capacity to understand the nature of his act at the time of the alleged incident or that the accused was suffering from this mental abnormality prior to or at the time of the incident, it was held that the benefit under s 84 must go to the accused.[18]

Mere taking treatment in the mental hospital, itself is not sufficient proof of total insanity of person.[19]

If the evidence on record vis-à-vis the mental state of the accused casts a doubt with regard to the mental capability of his, to that extent, it has to be inevitably held that the prosecution has failed to prove the charge of murder against him. This is permissible even if the accused/appellant has not been able to prove beyond doubt that at the relevant point of time he was of unsound mind. He is relieved of that burdensome responsibility.[20]

In the instant case, there was no evidence led by the defence with regard to the insanity of the appellant at all. PWS 1 and 2, the mother and wife of the appellant, merely stated that during the relevant time of occurrence the appellant was behaving erratically and was moving with tangi in a furious mood. On the contrary, the494 evidence of PWS 5 and 9 showed that the accused was of sound mind and never behaved erratically like a mad man. There was no evidence worth-the-name that the accused was ever suffering from unsoundness of mind or at any point of time, during or prior to the occurrence. There was neither any evidence of his madness nor any family history of unsoundness of mind. He had never been treated for madness. The evidence on record rather showed that soon after assaulting the deceased girl and other injured girls, he ran away from the spot with the tangi. The appellant accused was held not protected by s 84, IPC, thus, he was convicted under ss 302 and 326, IPC .[21]

Doctrine of Burden of Proof in Context of Plea of Insanity

Doctrine of burden of proof in the context of plea of insanity may be stated in the following words:

(1) The prosecution must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had committed the offence with the requisite mens rea; and the burden of proving that always rests on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial.
(2) There is a rebuttable presumption that the accused was not insane, when he committed the crime, in the sense laid down by s 84 of the IPC ; the accused may rebut it by placing before the court all the relevant evidence oral, documentary or circumstantial, but the burden of proof upon him is no higher than that rests upon a party to civil proceedings.
(3) Even if the accused was not able to establish conclusively that he was insane at the time he committed the offence, the evidence placed before the court may raise a reasonable doubt in the mind of the court as regards one or more of the ingredients of the offence, including mens rea of the accused and in that case the court would be entitled to acquit the accused on the ground that the general burden of proof resting on the prosecution was not discharged.[22]

The doctrine of the burden of proof and the nature of evidence necessary to discharge this burden in cases where the accused claims the benefit of the general exceptions in the IPC or of any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code or in any other law can be stated as below:

(1) The case shall fall in one of the three categories depending upon the wording of the enactment;
    (i) The statute places the burden of proof of all or some of the ingredients of the offence on the accused himself;
    (ii) The special burden placed on the accused does not touch the ingredients of the offence but only the protection given on the assumption of the proof of the said ingredients; and
    (iii) The special burden relates to an exception to some of the many circumstances required to attract the exception, which if proved, affects the proof of all or some of the ingredients of the offence.

(2) In the first two categories the onus lies upon the accused to discharge the special burden and on failure he can be convicted of the offence provided495 that the prosecution has succeeded to discharge its general burden of proof that is to establish the case beyond any reasonable doubt.
(3) In cases falling under the third category inability to discharge the burden of proof shall not, in each and every case automatically result in the conviction of the accused. The court shall still have to see how the facts proved affect the proof of the ingredients of the offence. In other words, if on consideration of the total evidence on record a reasonable doubt exists in the mind of the court as regards one or more of the ingredients of the offence including mens rea of the accused he shall be acquitted of the main offence even though he had not been in a position to prove the circumstances to bring his case within the exception. This shall be on the ground that the general burden of proof resting on the prosecution was not discharged.

(4) The burden of proof on the prosecution to establish its case rests from the beginning to the end of the trial and it must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had committed the offence with the requisite mens rea.

(5) The burden placed on the accused is not so onerous as on the prosecution. The prosecution has to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt but in determining whether the accused has been successful in discharging the onus, the court shall look into the preponderance of probabilities in the same manner as in a civil proceeding. In other words, the court shall have to see whether a prudent man would, in the circumstances of the case, act on the supposition that the case falls within the exception or proviso as pleaded by the accused.

(6) In a case in which any General Exception in the IPC, or any special exception or proviso contained in another part of the same Code or in any law defining the offence is pleaded or raised by an accused person and the evidence led in support of such plea, judged by the test of the preponderance of probability, as in a civil proceeding, falls to displace the presumption arising from s 105 of the Evidence Act, in other words, to disprove the absence of circumstances bringing the case within the said exception, but upon a consideration of the evidence as a whole, including the evidence given in support of the plea based on the said exception or proviso, a reasonable doubt is created in the mind of the court, as regards one or more of the ingredients of the offence, the accused person shall be entitled to the benefit of the reasonable doubt as to his guilt and hence to acquittal of the said offence.[23]

Prosecution Not Required to Prove Insanity of Accused

When an accused raises a plea falling under s 84, IPC, it being in the nature of an exception the burden of proof is on him to establish the same as per s 105 of the Evidence Act . Every person is presumed to know the law, and the natural consequence of his act; and as per s 105 of the Evidence Act, court shall presume the absence of the exception. In such circumstances in discharging its burden, the prosecution need probe only the basic facts and can rely upon the normal presumption; prosecution is not bound to show that the accused at the relevant time was not insane.[24]496

Burden to Prove Insanity is Heavy-- Section 105, Indian Evidence Act 1872

The case law as far as defences in support of the plea of insanity are concerned is well crystallised that the onus of establishing that the accused is covered by an exception, namely, the fact that he is of unsound mind shifts essentially to the defence. Furthermore, the case law is very clear with regard to the fact that it must be established that the gravity of the mental illness or ailment is so serious and of such a nature as to disqualify the accused person from being aware of what exactly he is doing and that it must also be demonstrated that he is incapable of being able to distinguish between right and wrong. This burden is a heavy one and unless the burden is fully discharged merely because it is demonstrated that the accused is given to wayward habits or that he has demonstrated peculiarities in his behaviour, the law will not take cognizance of such facts nor will he qualify for being declared legally insane.[25]The burden of proving that the mental condition of the accused was not proper at the time when the said offence was committed lies on the accused in view of s 105 of the Evidence Act . It is a settled position in law that every man is presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his acts unless the contrary is proved.[26]

In India it has been held in some cases that the burden placed on the accused by s 105 of the Evidence Act should be discharged by clear and cogent evidence. The accused is not entitled to any benefit of doubt as to his insanity because the burden is on him to prove strictly that he committed the act while being in a state of unsound mind, in terms of s 84, IPC . The burden of proof that the mental condition of the accused was at the crucial point of time, such as described in s 84 of the IPC lies on the accused who claims the benefit of the exemption. In a trial court the accused leads satisfactory evidence in the case as to his insane condition before the incident of the offence and condition after the incident of the offence and all circumstances preceding the act, at the time of act and subsequent to the act of alleged crime are shown to be clear pointers to the insane mental condition of the accused. The presumption of sanity stands rebutted by the accused and the case of the accused stands proved as falling within scope of s 84 of the IPC and he is entitled to an acquittal.[27]This view is claimed to be based on what is said to be the plain meaning of s 105 of the Evidence Act, read with the definition of the word 'proved' as found in s 3 of the same Act which says that a fact is said to be 'proved when after considering the matters before it, the court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists. It is said that the burden placed on the accused is not substantially different from the burden placed on the prosecution to establish its case.

Burden of Proof of Insanity can be Discharged as in Civil Cases

The onus of proving insanity of the accused as pointed out by the Privy Council in Sodeman v Rex ,[28] is not higher than the burden which rests upon a plaintiff, and has received a strict interpretation, and is held as governing only those cases or defendant497 in civil proceedings. In the case R v Dunbar ,[29] Lord Goddard CJ, who delivered the judgment of the court of criminal appeal said:

> That case, R v Carr-Briant ,[30] which is binding on us, decided that where, either by statute or at Common Law, some matter is presumed against an accused person, unless the contrary is proved the jury should be directed that it is for them to decide that the contrary is proved, and that the burden of proof required is less than that required at the hands of the prosecution in proving the case beyond a reasonable doubt and that this burden may be discharged by evidence satisfying the jury of the probability of that which the accused is called on to establish. This is often cited as showing that where an onus is placed on an accused person it may be discharged by proving what would be enough to support a verdict in a civil action, and that to use the words of Willes J, in Cooper v Slade ,[31] 'in civil cases the preponderance of probability may constitute sufficient ground for a verdict'.

It is clear, therefore, that the English Courts have not departed from the Mcnaughten's rules excepting that the more recent cases have clarified the nature and the extent of the burden placed on the accused in establishing his plea of insanity. It has been held that the burden placed on the accused will be discharged if he shows preponderance of probability in favour of the plea taken by him.[32]

Burden of Proving Offence Never Shifts

The question of burden of proof in such cases has been dealt with by the Kerala High Court thus:

> The burden of proving an offence is always on the prosecution and it never shifts. The state of mind of a person can ordinarily only be inferred from circumstances. Section 84 of the IPC can be invoked by a person for nullifying the evidence adduced by the prosecution. When a plea of legal insanity is set up, the court has to consider whether at the time of commission of the offence the accused by reason of unsoundness of mind was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. This is a matter of inference from proved circumstances. In order to decide question of burden of proof the court has to examine the available material such as oral and documentary evidence and should have due regard to admissions, presumptions and even the prosecution evidence. The burden which rests on the accused is, however, not higher than that which rests upon a party in civil litigation. The crucial point of time at which unsoundness of mind should be established is the time when the crime was actually committed. For this purpose, the state of his mind, both before and after the commission of the act, is also relevant. The court has to pay due regard to the circumstances which preceded, attended and followed the act.[33]

Burden to Prove Sanity--When Shifts on Prosecution

Burden to establish that at the time of committing the crime the accused was not of unsound mind shifts on the prosecution once it is found that the accused had a previous history of lunacy. Even if the plea of the accused, that he was not of sound mind at the time of committing the crime, is not affirmatively established and a reasonable doubt is created in the mind of the court, then too the accused is entitled498 to be acquitted.[34] Where the conduct of the accused demonstrates abnormality, the prosecution should place before the court some evidence to indicate that the accused was in a proper state of mind at the time of commission of the offence. Where the accused cut the neck of his mother with axe without quarrel or dispute and after putting down the axe started weeping and did not flee from scene, nor did he conceal the weapon, in such a case the prosecution cannot ask for conviction without discharging that burden. In judging insanity, all cumulative circumstances are to be taken into account.[35]

28. Mode of Proof

Although the onus of proving circumstances which give the benefit of the exception to an accused person lies on him and in the absence of evidence the presumption is against him, this does not mean that the accused must lead evidence. If it is apparent from the evidence on the record whether produced by the prosecution or the defence, that the general exception would apply, the presumption is removed and it is open to the court to consider whether the evidence proves to the satisfaction of the court that the accused comes within the exception.[36]

29. Standard of Proof

The standard to be applied is whether according to the ordinary standard, adopted by reasonable man, the act was right or wrong. The mere fact that an accused is conceited, odd, irascible and his brain is not quite all right, or that the physical and mental ailments from which he suffered had rendered his intellect weak and had affected his emotions and will, or that he had committed certain unusual acts in the past or that he was liable to recurring fits of insanity at short intervals, or that he was subject to getting epileptic fits but there was nothing abnormal in his behavior, cannot be sufficient to attract the application of this section.[37]

30. Closer and Stricter Scrutiny of Evidence Required

Though as already pointed out it is not necessary that the accused must, in all cases where such a plea is taken, adduce evidence of an affirmative nature to bring the case within the meaning of the exception provided for in s 84, IPC . However, the mode of proving a plea of self-defence stands on a somewhat different footing from a plea of legal insanity so as to exempt the person committing the act from any criminal liability whatsoever. In the case of self-defence, the accused acts in defence against aggression upon him and in such a situation, it is easier for the defence to establish the existence of circumstances upon the prosecution evidence itself or on other materials on record. In the case of a plea of insanity, the case, stands on a different footing in the sense that here the plea is taken by a person who is alleged to have taken the role of the aggressor himself and necessarily the question whether the499 burden is discharged or not would call for a closer and stricter scrutiny than in the case of a person taking a plea of self-defence against aggression.[38]

It is the relations who are likely to remain in intimate contact of the accused and, therefore, competent to state whether he was, or was not, sane at the time of commission of the crime. If, apart from the evidence of relative witnesses, there are independent witnesses who have come forward to state the insanity of the accused, it is difficult to say that the defence has not proved the insanity of the accused at the crucial time of the commission of the offence.[39]

The Karnataka High Court has gone a step ahead in this connection and its observations made with regard to the duties of the prosecution and investigation agency may be usefully quoted here:

> Prosecution must negative lunacy at the time of committing the offence if there is previous history of the accused suffering from lunacy. Though there is no burden cast on the prosecution to establish negatively that the accused was not of unsound mind when he committed the acts of violence resulting in the death of the person or persons murdered, yet where the accused has a previous history of mental disease or lunacy and it is revealed during the course of investigation that the accused had such previous history of mental disease or lunacy, fairness in investigation does require probing into this aspect with an unbiased approach, particularly when the accused himself cannot, in the very nature of things, assist in unravelling the necessary facts, being in custody and may be being mentally unbalanced. Therefore, it becomes obligatory on the part of the investigating agency, particularly when the accused is apprehended at about the time of commission of the offence or shortly thereafter, to subject the accused to medical examination, at least to ensure itself that the accused was in fact a person of ordinary state of mind. If that is done, it necessarily rules out the possibility of the accused having committed the acts of violence attributed to him on account of mental disease or lunacy.[40]

31. Evidence of Insanity--two Points for Consideration

The burden of proving the plea of insanity rests on the accused and that onus can be discharged by producing evidence as to his conduct at the time or immediately afterwards, and by evidence of his mental condition and other relevant facts. In adjudging on such a plea the court has to consider two points, first whether the accused has established that at the time of committing the act he was of unsound mind and, second, if he succeeds in proving it, then whether he has established that the unsoundness of mind was of such a degree and nature that by reason thereof he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or of knowing that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law.[41] The non-exhibition of feelings and the absence of secrecy on the part of the accused are only some of the relevant circumstances which have to be considered along with the other circumstances of the case, and by themselves, they do not make out sanity or insanity.[42]500

Facts and Conduct not Sufficient to Establish Unsoundness

The fact that the accused did not try to run away from the scene of the crime is not indicative of insanity.[43] Where accused husband gave two blows with pestle on head of the deceased--his wife--and set fire to her by pouring kerosene, and the plea of insanity of the accused was not supported by evidence showing that he was of unsound mind at the time of committing murder and the accused ran away from the spot after the incident, which cannot be expected from a person of unsound mind and the weapon used for the offence was recovered at the instance of the accused, it was held that the accused was not entitled to benefit under s 84 and his conviction under s 302, IPC, was proper.[44] The fact, that the accused was not mentally normal at the relevant time, would also not amount to establishing the plea of insanity.[45] Where the accused was charged with murder and he took the plea that he was suffering from paranoia but the facts established on record proved that he understood the implications of his acts at the time he committed the offence, the accused was held not entitled to the benefit of s 84, IPC .[46] Where the accused killed his wife by causing multiple injuries and lodged an FIR himself immediately after occurrence and death of the deceased occurred while in custody of the accused when she was asleep and the statement of accused was that he had decided to kill her since she had spurned him and looked at him with hatred prior to the incident, the police officer did not notice any abnormality in the behaviour of the accused, there was no clear medical evidence as to insanity of the accused and from the conduct of the accused before and after the incident no mental disorder was demonstrated, it was held that the plea of insanity set up by the accused was not maintainable.[47] Where the involvement and complicity of the accused in the murder was proved by the eyewitnesses, medical evidence supported the prosecution case, motive for the murder also existed and was established, the evidence showed that at the time of occurrence before and thereafter, conduct of accused was not abnormal and plea of unsoundness was only an afterthought. It was held that the accused was rightly convicted under s 302, IPC and he was not entitled to benefit under s 84, IPC .[48] Where the accused killed his wife after bolting the door of the house from the inside, evidence of witnesses showed that accused opened the door of his house and attempted to escape which proves his conduct after occurrence, so a plea that the accused was mentally unstable was held not tenable and conviction of the accused was found proper.[49] The accused's refusal to take food or taking insufficient food after great persuasion, whether in itself or combined with other circumstances, is not sufficient to establish unsoundness of mind.[50] But the legal insanity of the accused is negatived by the following circumstances:

(a) He entered into the place of incident concealing the axe under his clothes and after inflicting injury on the head of victim, he fled away.
(b) The second circumstance was that after his arrest he disclosed that he had hidden the axe under the soil near the hill and on the basis of his disclosure501 statement the axe was recovered from the said place by the investigating officer.
(c) The third circumstance was that in his explanation under s 313, CrPC, he stated that he was falsely implicated in the case because of group rivalry and the prosecution witnesses deposed against him as his relations with them were inimical. All the questions put to the appellant were properly answered by him.

All these circumstances show that the appellant was not insane, his cognitive faculties were not lost and he was not incapable of knowing the nature of his act.[51]

Facts and Conduct Sufficient to Establish Unsoundness

The act of the accused coming to the house of the deceased mother without any preparation for the crime including not bringing any weapon, sitting quietly along with prosecution witness and others and while the deceased was serving him tea, suddenly picking up a sickle lying nearby and giving a blow coupled with the fact of his mental disturbance earlier and during trial, as evidenced from the record indicates that this was not an act of a sane person out of any malice or ill-will towards the deceased.[52] The facts and conduct was found sufficient to establish insanity of accused where the circumstances that stand proved: (a) the accused had a family history, his father was suffering from psychiatric illness; (b) cause of ailment not known, but heredity plays a part; (c) accused was being treated for unsoundness of mind since 1992, diagnosed as suffering from paranoid schizophrenia. Within a short span, soon after the incident from 27 June 1994 to 5 December 1994, he had to be taken for treatment of ailment 25 times to hospital. (d) The accused was under regular treatment for the mental ailment; (e) the motive of killing of wife was weak being that she was opposing the idea of resigning from the job of a police constable; (f) killing one's wife in day light, and no attempt made to hide or run away.[53]

32.Inferences from the Conduct of Accused and Attending Circumstances

If on the evidence, it is found that the accused had a guilty conscience the plea of insanity has to be rejected.[54] The attempt to run away on the part of the accused after the commission of the crime would indicate that he was conscious of the crime which he had committed.[55] Where the charge against the accused was that he inflicted blows with an axe on deceased thereby causing his death and evidence of eyewitnesses was that the accused was of unsound mind prior to date of occurrence, the conduct of the accused at the time of assaulting the deceased in broad daylight within sight of his relatives and leaving the blood stained axe on the spot demonstrate abnormality and the circumstances of the case show that the accused at the time of performing the act of assault, by reason of unsoundness of mind was incapable of knowing the nature of the act. So, the accused was held entitled to benefit of doubt.[56]502

The premises, the manner, in which the occurrence took place the nature of the injuries inflicted by the accused the duration of the attack, maniacal fury, with which the attack was delivered, considered along with the evidence of unsoundness of the accused's mind, just prior to the occurrence, his subsequent conduct and his mental condition at the beginning of the trial, coupled with the absence of any motive or provocation to commit such an offence, are all indications that the accused was acting under some insane impulse at the time when he committed the offence.[57] Where the members of the family of the accused shifted to another house and did not dare to live with the accused and the accused, after committing the murder, did not run away, though he had sufficient and convenient opportunity to do so, and pointed out the dead body, it was held that the accused was of unsound mind and was protected by this section.[58]

33. Accused not Fleeing from Spot--No Indication of Insanity

The conduct of the accused of not fleeing from the spot would not in itself show that the accused was insane at the time of the commission of the offence.[59]

The accused killed his own brother by using 'Latth'. When the complainant brother of the accused reached on the spot, the accused who was standing with a 'Latth' in his hand, threatened to kill his brother. No medical evidence was adduced to prove that the accused was suffering from insanity or unsoundness of mind. The plea of insanity was rejected.[60]

34. Pre-planned and Calculated Murder

Where the offence was pre-planned and committed in a calculated manner, the plea of unsoundness of mind of the appellant accused was repelled.[61] Where the accused in a well-planned manner set the victim on fire, and ran away from the spot after commission of the offence, the plea of insanity was rejected.[62]

35.Plea of Insanity can be Raised Even in Confirmation Proceedings on Reliable Evidence

If, even in confirmation proceedings, some reliable evidence about the incapacity of the accused to defend himself is placed before the court, and the accused moves an application for a medical examination, the application is not to be rejected merely because the trial court after applying its mind to the same material has concluded against the accused.[63]

Prior, Present and Subsequent Conduct--When Relevant

Under the law, the crucial point of time for ascertaining the state of mind of the accused is the time when the offence was committed. The question whether the503 accused was in such state of mind as to be entitled to the benefit of s 84, IPC, can only be established and determined from the circumstances which preceded, attended and followed the crime.[64] It is settled law that whether an accused was in such a state of mind as to entitle him to the benefit of s 84, IPC, it can only be established from the circumstances which preceded, attended and followed the crime. Where conduct of the accused did not show any abnormality prior to, and at the time of the occurrence, and the only evidence on record was that the accused did not do any household work, remained loitering in the village, and used to quarrel with his mother, it was held that from such behaviour, it could not be concluded that the accused had developed insanity prior to the occurrence.[65] The crucial point of time for deciding whether the benefit of this section should be given or not, is the material time when the offence takes place. In coming to that conclusion, the relevant circumstances are to be taken into consideration, and it would be dangerous to admit the defence of insanity upon arguments derived merely from the character of the crime. It is only unsoundness of mind which naturally impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind that can form a ground of exemption from criminal responsibility.[66]

But where the fact that the accused killed his wife was not disputed, the testimony of witnesses showed that the accused's mind was affected about 10 days prior to the incident and was intended to be treated by a sorcerer, conduct of the accused prior to, at the time of and subsequent to the commission of offence showing that he was not in a fit state of mind, the case of accused was held falling within the purview of s 84 and the accused was entitled to benefit of doubt.[67]

The proof of insanity of accused at the nick of time is highly improbable. As such, behaviour antecedent, attendant and subsequent to the commission of offence is relevant and must be taken into consideration in finding the mental condition of the accused at the time of commission of the offence.[68] If the accused ran away from the place after committing murder of his wife, it bears testimony of his guilty mind. Had he been suffering from unsoundness of mind, he would not have disappeared from the scene of occurrence.[69] But if after the murderous attack on the deceased the accused did not make any attempt to escape from there and soon after the incident the accused was seen lying down on the muddy ground and he remained motionless and unperturbed even after a bucket of cold water was poured over him, and he laid there for hours till the police came and took him into custody, these circumstances are amongst the circumstances which raise inference that accused was of unsound mind at the relevant time.[70]

Where in a case, there were several circumstances, namely that the accused was sitting near the dead body without running away, that he also put the cut lemon, turmeric and sindur near the dead body and curiously, he was also treated for unsoundness of mind coupled with the evidence of a defence witness, who deposed504 that at the time of commission of the offence, there is every possibility of the accused being ill. Therefore, it was found to be a case where the accused should be given the benefit of s 84 of the IPC .[71]

The accused appellant disappeared from the place of occurrence after the commission of the murder. His conduct in disappearing from the spot after the occurrence indicated that he understood the nature of his act and therefore, in order to save himself, he escaped and fled away. In the absence of medical evidence showing that the appellant was suffering from unsoundness of mind, the appellant was held not entitled to the benefit of s 84, IPC .[72]

In the present case, the respondent husband had committed the murder of his wife. In the FIR itself reference was made about the mental illness of the accused. There was no motive, there was no preparation for the commission of the offence. The accused was granted protection of s 84, IPC and acquitted of the charge of murder.[73]

Where there was no record of any abnormality of mind prior to commission of offence and there was only a possibility of mere loss of balance of mind after the incident, it was held that the accused is not entitled to benefit of s 84 .[74] Where in view of the conduct of the accused before and after the incident, it was impossible to hold that the accused demonstrated any mental disorder, the plea of insanity taken by the accused was held not maintainable.[75] In view of the conduct of the accused in threatening the deceased a day prior to the occurrence and on the next day trespassing into the house of the deceased and thereafter deliberately striking deceased with a deadly weapon on her head resulting into her death, it could be said that the accused had the intention to cause the death of deceased.[76]

Where complicity of the accused in the murder was proved by eyewitnesses, medical evidence supported the prosecution case, motive for the murder also existed and was established and the evidence showed that the conduct of the accused before, at the time of occurrence and thereafter was not abnormal and plea of unsoundness was only an afterthought, it was held that the accused was rightly convicted under s 302 and not entitled to the benefit under s 84, IPC .[77]

The accused appellant on the date of the incident killed his brother's wife, daughter, son and a neighbour's son aged 4 years. There was absolutely no motive for committing the ghastly murder of four persons. He neither ran away from the spot nor concealed the axe i.e. the weapon used. Held, the accused appellant did not know the implication of his act. He was protected by s 84, IPC and acquitted of all the charges.[78]

36. Family Antecedents

The onus that lies on the accused may be discharged by producing evidence as to the offence and his conduct at the time or immediately afterwards, also by evidence of505 his mental condition, his family history, and so forth.[79] Family antecedents were taken into consideration in the case of Anandi v Emperor .[80]

37. Relevancy of Absence of Motive or Atrocity of Crime

The mere fact that an act or omission is without apparent motive is not by itself sufficient to establish insanity, but if there is other evidence of insanity, such a fact may be of importance as helping to prove insanity.[81] The various circumstances disclosed by the evidence taken along with the absence of any motive may establish the plea of insanity. Absence of motive is only a factor which may be worthwhile to consider, but, however, by itself would never be conclusive of the fact.[82] It would be dangerous to hold that, because a monstrous crime like murder is committed for no apparent reason and for a non proved motive, the offender must have been insane at the time, and that without any proof whatsoever of prior insanity.[83] In a case where a plea of insanity has been taken in connection with a murder of a close relation of the accused, motive always assumes much importance and if there is no evidence indicating motive of murder, a conclusion will certainly follow in favour of the plea of insanity.[84]

The plea of unsoundness of mind was not taken by way of cross-examination or suggestion to any witness or by way of defence evidence or during arguments before the trial court, and the answers given by the accused appellant in examination under s 313, CrPC showed that the accused was intelligent. The accused was held not protected by s 84, IPC .[85]

Absence of motive is not by itself proof of insanity on the part of the accused.[86] The atrocity of the crime and absence of motive are not the criterion to constitute unsoundness of mind and are only some of the features ordinarily associated with it.[87] In Reg v Haynes ,[88] Bramwell B, in summing up to the jury, said:

> As to the defence of insanity, it has been urged for the prisoner that you should acquit him on the ground that, it being impossible to assign any motive for the perpetration of the offence, he must have been acting under what is called a powerful and irresistible influence, or homicidal tendency. But I must remark as to that that the circumstances of an act being apparently motiveless is not a ground from which you can safely infer the existence of such an influence. Motives exist unknown and innumerable which might prompt the act. A morbid and restless (but resistible) thirst for blood would itself be a motive urging to such a deed for its own relief. But if an influence be so powerful as to506 be termed irresistible, so much more the reason is there why we should not withdraw any of the safeguards tending to counteract it.[1]

Inadequacy of motive standing by itself is no proof of insanity.[2] So also absence of motive.[3] The absence of a strong motive cannot be conclusive.[4]

For the purposes of proving the offence of the incident itself, when there is direct evidence, motive pales into insignificance; but in the matter of the plea of insanity, absence of motive is a great circumstance which is always taken into consideration.[5] The absence of all motive for a crime, when corroborated by independent evidence of the prisoner's previous insanity, is not without weight.[6]

Accused appellant holding a bhujali indiscriminately assaulted five persons, as a result of which three of them died and two were severely injured. The appellant had no enmity with the deceased persons nor did he have any motive to commit their murders. The evidence of the witnesses showed that the appellant was suffering from insanity since 1990 and had spells of insanity. Held, the appellant accused was entitled to the benefit of insanity, and being protected by s 84, IPC, was acquitted of the charge of murder.[7]

Mere absence of motive for a crime however, atrocious, cannot in the absence of proof of legal insanity, bring the case within ambit of s 84, IPC .[8]

A medical expert's evidence in case of a ghastly murder, where the plea of insanity is taken by the accused, should be such which would assist court in coming to the correct conclusion.[9]

38.Insanity is to be Proved by Medical Evidence or Undisputed Surrounding Circumstances

It is an undisputed position of fact that whether a person suffers from mental illness is not a lay man's guess work, but it is to be established by cogent medical evidence and it is also undisputed fact that where there is no such medical evidence, the court is to draw such conclusion from the surrounding circumstances which were not disputed from the record.[10]

If plea of insanity is raised by the accused, it is the duty of the prosecution to subject the accused to a medical examination immediately. This is important, because if it is revealed during the course of investigation that the accused was suffering from mental disease, the prosecution is further duty bound to place before the court all the evidence that could be available to show that the accused was in a proper state of507 mind when he committed the alleged offence. This is to rule out the plea of mental disease or insanity that may likely to be raised at the trial. The failure of the prosecution to do so creates serious infirmity in the prosecution case of murder. In case of failure on the part of the prosecution, it may entitle the accused to seek benefit of doubt.[11]

39. Evidence of Medical Expert

It is usual, but not essential, in a question of insanity to call a medical witnesses or lunacy experts.[12]The Supreme Court has, however, observed that evidence of insanity should be dependably given by experts with regard to the period of time prior to occurrence, at the time of occurrence and immediately following the occurrence. Observation if any made by the court regarding demeanour, conduct, appearance, is relevant. Evidence must be of total loss of cognitive faculty and incapacity to understand nature and consequences of the act alleged.[13]

Mere oral statements of witnesses would not prove insanity.[14] Where the accused did not produce any evidence on record in support of his plea of insanity except bare words, the plea of insanity was rejected. Accused was convicted under ss 302 and 324, IPC .[15]

Where the medical evidence clearly shows that the accused was not suffering from insanity, the plea of insanity would not be available to him under s 84, IPC .[16] The evidence of the doctors showed that the accused was a person of normal mind and was not suffering from any mental ailment. Section 84 was not attracted in the case; the accused appellant was not entitled to benefit of s 84, IPC . Accused was convicted on the charge of murder.[17] Where the accused was not feigning insanity nor could it be said with any certainty or definiteness that the accused was absolutely sane on the date and at the time when he assaulted the deceased with a knife, and the doctor could not categorically state that the accused had capacity to or not to understand the nature of his act at the time of the alleged incident or that the accused was suffering from this mental abnormality prior to or at the time of the incident, it was held that the benefit of s 84 must go to the accused.[18]

Where medical evidence adduced was not sufficient to show that the accused was mentally unsound, he was held not entitled to the protection of s 84, IPC .[19]

No medical evidence was adduced to show that the accused was of unsound mind at the time of the commission of the offence. In examination under s 313, CrPC the court did not observe any sign of insanity. Mere oral statement that the accused was508 suffering from mental disorder at the time of the commission of offence was held not sufficient. Plea of insanity was not accepted.[20]

It is the duty of the medical expert who is called to prove insanity of the prisoner at the time of the commission of the offence, but who is sane at the time of the trial, to offer to keep the prisoner under his observation. He cannot base his opinion on the summary of evidence at the trial, supplied to him. It was held that a medical man, conversant with the disease of insanity, who has never seen the prisoner before the trial but who is present at the whole trial, cannot in strictness be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the crime or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious, at the time of doing the act, that he was acting contrary to law or whether he was labouring under a delusion at the time or whether by reason of any disease affecting the mind, the accused was incapable or prevented from controlling his conduct. These questions are no more questions upon a matter of science.[21]

There is a distinction between appreciation of facts and an expression of opinion on questions of science. The opinion of a medical man on the state of the mind of the accused at the time of the commission of the murder is merely relevant as being helpful. It is for the judge or the judge and the jury, as the case may be, to give a decision on these matters, and the function of the medical witness is to assist, not to supersede the judge.[22]

In R v Holme ,[23] however, it was held that a doctor may be asked, and may answer, whether in his opinion the accused's conduct immediately after the murder (described by another witness) would indicate that he knew: (a) the nature of the act which he was committing or; (b) that his act was contrary to law. On this Russell remarks:

> Since it is arguable that a man's behaviour after the deed does not necessarily prove what his attitude and state of mind were immediately before and at the moment of the deed (which is the crucial moment) this case would seem to establish a fortiori that the same questions would be permissible when the accused person's behaviour immediately before the deed has been described.[24]

Where no clear medical evidence as to insanity of accused was made out and in view of the conduct of the accused before and after the incident, no mental disorder was demonstrated, the plea of the accused regarding insanity was held not maintainable.[25]

The accused appellant killed his minor child and also caused injuries to his wife and mother, and did not allow his wife and mother to go outside the house throughout the night. The accused neither had any history of insanity, nor did the medical evidence adduced in the case establish the same. The plea of unsoundness taken by the accused appellant was rejected. Accused was convicted under s 304, Pt II, IPC, and sentence of ten years RI was imposed.[26]509

Value of Medical Expert and Section 45 of the Indian Evidence Act 1872

Under s 45, Evidence Act 1872, the opinion of an expert is relevant where a question of science is involved. The questions, whether the accused was of unsound mind at the time of the commission of the act, or by reason thereof he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law, are questions of fact which in England are decided by a jury and in India by the judge. But in arriving at a finding the opinion of an expert in mental diseases is relevant.[27]

40. Evidence of Medical man and Mcnaughten's Case

In McNaughten's case,[28] question 5 and its answer were as follows:

> Q 5--Can a medical man, conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial, and the examination of the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any, and what, delusion at the time.
>
> A 5--We think the medical man, under the circumstances supposed, cannot, in strictness, be asked his opinion in the terms above stated, because, each of those questions involves the determination of the truth of the facts deposed to, which it is for the jury to decide, and the questions are not questions upon a mere matter of science, in which case such evidence is admissible. But where the facts are admitted, or not disputed, and the question becomes substantially one of science only, it may be convenient to allow the question to be put in that general form, though the same cannot be insisted on as a matter of right.

In R v Francis ,[29]where the defence to an indictment for murder was that the prisoner was insane at the time he committed the act, and witnesses were called to prove that insanity had existed in many members of the prisoner's family and that he had been insane for three years, a physician, who had been in court during the whole trial, was asked by the counsel for the prosecution 'whether from all the evidence he had heard, both for the prosecution and defence, he was of the opinion that the prisoner, at the time he did the act, was of unsound mind', and the opinion of the judges in answer to the fifth question in McNaughten's case was cited in support of the question, Alderson B and Cresswell J, held that the question ought not to be put. The proper mode is to ask what are the symptoms of insanity, or to take particular facts, and assuming them to be true, to ask whether they indicate insanity. To take the course suggested is really to substitute the witness for the jury, and allow him to decide upon the whole case. The jury have the facts before them, and they alone must interpret them by the general opinions of scientific men. So also in R v Rivett [30] it was laid down that it is for the jury, and not for medical men of whatever eminence, to determine the issue of insanity.510

41.Evidence of Relations of the Accused Regarding his Insanity

The evidence of the witnesses of the accused should not be discarded because they are the relations of the accused as it is the relations who are likely to remain in intimate contact of the accused.[31]

42. Duty of Court

There is no doubt, that to extend benefit of s 84, the court must be satisfied that at the time of commission of the offence the appellant was suffering from mental illness or she was in such a state of insanity that she was not capable of understanding the consequence of her wrongful act.[32]Section 84, IPC, casts the burden on accused to adduce evidence and prove that at the time of occurrence, his mental condition was such that he did not know what he was doing. In such a case, a duty is also cast on the court itself to find out from the materials on record, viz, conduct of the accused, as to whether any doubt arises in the mind of court that at the time of occurrence, the accused was not in a fit mental condition to have the requisite mens rea for the commission of offence and that he did not have the element of mens rea required under s 299 of the IPC .[33] The court, while considering the defence of insanity must look at and consider the totality of the emerging situation and position in the light of facts and circumstances relating to the mental condition of accused preceding the occurrence, at about the time of the occurrence as also after the occurrence.[34] Failure of the accused to raise the plea of insanity as a defence does not preclude him from setting up such a plea if, it is borne out by the evidence on record. It is the duty of the court to take the plea into consideration if the circumstances of the case and the evidence adduced by the prosecution justify such a plea.[35] In proper cases, it is also the duty of the court in the interest of justice, to get the accused medically examined.[36]

A man who pleads insanity and who, according to the prosecution witnesses, had shown abnormality of mind on previous occasions, and the medical evidence tends in the same direction, cannot be expected to look after his defence as an accused in an ordinary case. It is the duty of the court to watch his interest with unusual degree of care and circumspection.[37] Where the counsel for the accused did not make any suggestion as to the insanity of the accused, but the sessions judge trying the case put certain questions to a witness as to the behaviour of the accused prior to the offence as the judge thought that it was necessary to explore that possibility, it was held by the High Court:

> The learned judge was no doubt justified in eliciting the information, and, whether the plea was taken by the accused or not, the fact does remain that if the evidence discloses the insanity of the accused at the material time, then it has to be considered in weighing the criminality of the accused and in adjudging whether he was responsible for the crime or not.[38]511

43. Court not Competent to Hold Insanity Established on the Basis of its own Observations

In an appeal against acquittal the Karnataka High Court held:

> Although the learned trial Judge may not have erred in taking upon himself the responsibility of raising an issue touching the insanity of the accused, but had certainly erred in holding the same to be established merely on the basis of his own observations of the accused and impressions he gained during the trial of the accused. It seems that the learned Judge has allowed himself to be overwhelmed by the physical condition of the accused during the trial and the circumstances that each and everyone of the witnesses tended to lavish sympathy on him, that the wife and daughter of the accused who were brought into the court but not examined, had burst out in deep grief at the plight of the accused imploring the court to restore the accused back to the fold of the family. It has been both on human and compassionate grounds that the learned Judge reacted in his Judgment.[39]

It was further observed:

> The Judge may be entitled to resolve an issue of insanity all by himself although not pleaded by the accused, but before reaching any conclusion in that behalf he must necessarily have a set of facts produced in evidence by appropriate medical sources which could only be through doctors competent to testify in that behalf. In the absence of such evidence, the Judge in this case could not have proceeded to acquit the accused on grounds of insanity on his own.[40]

Explaining the probable cause of abnormal conduct of the accused in court, the High Court further observed:

> The trial Judge was wrong in branding the accused a lunatic and a totally insane person by merely observing his physical condition and his conduct in court which to a large extent could possibly be traced to the solemn atmosphere in the court and circumstances that the accused was before a Judge who could sentence him either to death or imprisonment for life. All these possibly could have not merely unnerved him, but also depicting him as a person not in normal state of mind.[41]

44. Trial on Issue of Unsoundness of Mind

When a magistrate holding an inquiry or if at the trial before a magistrate or a court of session, it appears to such magistrate or court that the person against whom the enquiry is being held or standing trial, is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the magistrate or the court of session, shall first inquire into the fact of such unsoundness of mind after recording such evidence as may be found necessary and other evidence, and if satisfied that the accused is of unsound mind, postpone further proceedings in the case.[42]

Where the medical evidence was that the accused was of unsound mind at the time when offences were committed and the said evidence was found reliable, the accused was held not to be detained in prison but to be admitted to a mental hospital and the authorities were further directed to follow the procedure as laid down in s 335 of the CrPC and the plea of unsoundness of mind of the accused was accepted.[43]512

45. Postponement and Resumption, etc, of Trial of Person of Unsound Mind

See ss 328 to 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1973.[44]

46 Ambi v State of Kerala (1960) Ker LJ 1375, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 135, p 140, (1961) Mad LJ 356 (Cr) ; Digendra Nath Roy v State (1970) Cr LJ 529, p 531, (1969-70) 74 CWN 231; Shiv Raj Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) Cr LJ 1458 (MP) ; Ajoya Mahakud v State (1993) Cr LJ 1201, p 1204 (Ori) (MP) ; Lok Bahadur Dahal v State of Sikkim 2013 (128) AIC 367 (Sikk) .

47 Jai Lal v Delhi Admn AIR 1969 SC 15, p 17, (1969) Cr LJ 259 .

48 Digendra Nath Roy v State (1970) Cr LJ 529, p 531, (1969-70) 74 CWN 221.

49 Tola Ram v State of Rajasthan (1996) Cr LJ 8 (Raj) (DB) ; Kishore Kumar v State of Chhattisgarh 2013 (131) AIC 844 (Chh) .

50 Mariappan v State of Tamil Nadu 2013 Cr LJ 2334, p 2337 (SC), 2013 AIR SCW 2415, 2013 (6) Scale 185 .

51 State of Orissa v Duleswar Barik 2008 Cr LJ 1065, p 1070 (Ori) (DB) .

52 State of Goa v Sameer Shetya, 2015 (1) Crimes 75 (Bom) (Murder of wife, protection of s 84 IPC refused); Sudhakaran v State of Kerala 2010 10 SCC 582, 2010 AIR SCW 6688, AIR 2011 SC 265 .

53 Shiv Raj Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) Cr LJ 1458, p 1460, (1975) MPLJ 98 .

54 SSunil Sandeep v State of Karnataka (1993) Cr LJ 2554 (Kant) ; StateofJharkhand v Lakhan Rai and Ors(2007) Cr LJ 2410, p 2414 (Jhar); Atrup v State of Rajasthan (2003) Cr LJ 4031 (Raj) (DB) ; Vidhya Devi v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2332 (Raj) (DB) .

55 Rajendra v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2458 (Raj) (DB) .

56 Jai Lal v Delhi Admn AIR 1969 SC 15, (1969) Cr LJ 259 ; Re Navier Marolla(1970) LW 149 (Cr), (1970) Mad LJ 718 (Cr); Re Thangavelu(1971) 1 Mad LJ 484, (1971) Mad LW 54 (Cr); Ambi v State of Kerala (1962) 2 Cr LJ 135, 140, (1960) Ker LJ 1375, (1960) Ker LT 1116 ; Ram Bharose v State of Madhya Pradesh (1974) Jab LJ 348, (1974) MPLJ 406 ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Godhe (1974) MPLJ 203, (1974) Jab LJ 348 ; Charan Singh v State of Punjab (1973) 75 Punj LR 734 ; Sukru Sa v State of Orissa (1973) Cr LJ 1323, p 1324, 39 Cut LT 322 (DB), (1974) 1 Cr LJ 494, (1974) Punj LJ 364 (Cr) ; Kasheoroa v State of Maharashtra (1979) Cr LJ 403, p 404 (Bom) ; Madga & Lusu alias Chandramohan Majhi v State (1979) 47 Cut LT 197 ; Sankaran v State of Kerala (1993) 2 KLT 852, p 855 (DB) .

57 AG Bhagat (Dr) v Union Territory of Chandigarh (1989) Cr LJ 214, p 219 (P&H).

58 State of Jharkhand v Lakhan Rai and Ors (2007) Cr LJ 2410 (Jhar) (DB) .

59 Vidhya Devi v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2332 (Raj) (DB) .

60 Vidhya Devi v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2332 (Raj) (DB) .

61 Ibid.

62 Murthy v State (1988) 1 Crimes 326 (Mad) .

63 Venugopalan Venu v State of Kerala (1996) Cr LJ 3363 (Ker)(DB).

64 Stephen, History of Criminal Law of England, vol 2, p 156 et seq; Report of the Royal Commission, 1953 CMD 8932, paras 227, p 228; Stallybrass, 'Comparison of Criminal Law, etc' in Modern Approach to Criminal Law, ch 20, p 415 et seq; Maudsley, Responsibility in Mental Diseases; Sullivan, Crime and insanity; Hall, 'Mental Disease and Crime', Columbia Law Review, no 45, 1945, p 679; Meredith, 'Insanity as a Criminal Defence', Canadian Bar Review, no 25, 1947, p 251.

65 R v Codere (1916) 12 Cr App R 21 .

66 R v Windle 1952 2 QB 826 .

67 R v Codere, (1916) 12 Cr App R 21 .

68 [1956] 2 QB, 832, p 833.

69 103 LJ 148; Wrong in the Mcnaughten Rules; The High Court of Australia has refused to follow the doctrine of R v Windle (1952) 2 QB 826, [1952] 2 All ER 1 ; Stapleton v Queen (1952) 86 Commonwealth LR 358, in which full reasons are given for the court's repudiation of the views of the English CCA; (1954) Crime LR 276, 16 Mad LR 435.

70 The words 'nature and quality of the act in the text refer only to the physical character of the act and are not intended to distinguish between its physical and moral aspects; R v Codere (1916) 12 Cr App R 21 .

71 'Wrong' means. 'contrary to law'; R v Windle (1952) 2 QB 826, [1952] 2 All ER 1, R v Holmes (1953) 2 All ER 324, compare the answers of the judges to second and third, question put to them in McNaughten's case(1843) 10 Cl & Fin 200 (HL), compare R v Codere (1916) 12 Cr App Rep 21, p 27, per Lord Reading CJ (where the proposition seems to be enunciated that 'wrong' means wrong by the standard of ordinary reasonable men, which must include acts known by the accused to be contrary to law).

72 R v Clarke (1972) 1 All ER 219, 56 Cr App Rep 225, CA.

73 Regina v Kemp (1957) 1 QB 399, 40 Cr App Rep 121.

74 A-G for Northern Ireland v Gallagher (1963) AC 349, 45 Cr App Rep 316.

75 R v Taylor 2008 OJ No 946 [videHalsbury's Laws of Canada].

76 Underhill's Criminal Evidence, vol 2, fifth edn, Bobbs-Merrill Co Ins Publishers, Indianapolis, ch 34, p 1128.

77 Davis v United States (1895) 160 US 469, 40 Law Ed 499 .

78 In India, the jury system has since been abolished.

79 Lee v United State (1937) 32 US 745, 82 Law Ed 576 ; McDonald v Hydspeth 109 Fed 843 (2nd); Asley v Pessor 147 Fed (2nd) 318; Tatum v United States 88 App DC 386, 190 Fed 612 (2nd); Holloway v United States 148 Fed 665 (2nd); Queenan v Oklahama (1903) 190 US 548, 47 Law Ed 1175 ; Matheson v United States (1913) 227 US 540 .

80 Daniel Mcnaughten's case. (1948) 10 CL&Fin 200, 8 ER 718.

81 Kalicharan v Emperor AIR 1948 Nag 20(2) ; Deorao v Emperor AIR 1946 Nag 321, p 329 ; Pancha v Emperor AIR 1932 All 233 ; State v Durga Charan AIR 1963 Ori 33 ; Kanbi Kurji Duba v State AIR 1960 Guj 1 ; State v Chhotelal Gangadin Gadriya AIR 1959 MP 203 ; Re *Pappathi Ammal*AIR 1959 Mad 239 .

82 Kalicharan v Emperor AIR 1948 Nag 20 (2) ; Queen-Empress v Lakshman Dagdu 10 ILR Bom 512 ; Queen-Empress v Venkataswami 12 ILR Mad 459 ; Queen-Empress v Razai Mia 22 ILR Cal 817 .

83 Maudsley, Responsibility in Mental Disease, ch 3; Bucknill and Tuke, Psychological Medicine, p 269; Stephen, History of the Criminal Law of England, vol 2, ch 19.

84 R v Hamphreys 10 C&F 200 ; Taylor's Manual of Medical Jurisprudence, tenth edn, p 745.

85 Queen-Empress v Kadar Nasyer Shah 23 ILR Cal 604, p 608, the cases cited therein.

86 Kanbi Kurji Duba v State AIR 1960 Guj 1(2) .

87 Re *Puppathi Ammal*AIR 1959 Mad 239, p 244 .

88 Ambi v State of Kerala (1960) Ker LJ 1375, (1962) 2 Cr LJ 135, p 140, (1961) Mad LJ 356 (Cr) ; Digendra Nath Roy v State (1970) Cr LJ 529, p 531, (1969-70) 74 CWN 231; Shivraj Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) Cr LJ 1458 (MP) .

89 Hazara Singh v State AIR 1958 Punj 104, p 107-08, per Tek Chand J.

90 R v Oxford 4 St Tr 497(NS); 9 C&P 525; R v Stokes 3 C&K 185 ; R v Layton 4 Cox 149 .

91 Archbold, Pleading, Evidence and Practice in Criminal Cases, thirty third edn, pp 15-16.

92 R v Katay Kisan 1 Cr LJ 854, 17 CPLR 105 .

93 R v Harka 4 Cr LJ 88, 26 AWN 193 .

94 R v Razai Mia 22 ILR Cal 817 ; Ghatu Pramanik v King-Emperor 28 ILR Cal 613 ; Chajju Mal v R 11 Cr LJ 105, 94 PLR 1909 ; R v Smith 26 TLR 614 ; Emperor v Nag San Myin 12 Cr LJ 386 ; Mahommad Husain v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 81 ; Lachhman v Emperor AIR 1924 All 413 .

95 Mayne's Criminal Law of India, fourth edn, Pt 2, p 172 cited with approval in State v Chhotelal Gangadin Gadariya AIR 1959 MP 203, p 207 ; Rajkumar v State of Madhya Pradesh (2006) Cr LJ 2472 (Chattisgarh) .

1 Leena Balkrishna Nair v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 3292, p 3294 (Bom) (DB) .

2 Leena Balkrishna Nair v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 3292, p 3294 (Bom) (DB) .

3 Leena Balkrishna Nair v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 3292 (Bom) (DB) .

4 Kuttappana v State of Kerala (1986) Cr LJ 271(Ker), (1986) KLT 364, (1986) 1 Crimes 155; Rajan v State of Kerala (1984) Cr LJ 874, (1984) KLT 367 (Ker), (1984) Ker LJ 225 ; Autar Singh v State of Himachal Pradesh (1984) 1 Crimes 636 (HP) ; Rajkumar v State of Madhya Pradesh (2006) Cr LJ 2472 (Chattisgarh) ; Bihari Lal v State of Himachal Pradesh (2006) Cr LJ 3832 (HP) ; Narayan Chandra Dey v State 1988 Cr LJ 387(Cal); Brushabha Digal v State (1993) Cr LJ 3149, p 3150 (Ori)(DB); Ajaya Mahakud v State (1993) Cr LJ 1201, p 1204 ; Vidhya Devi v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2332 (Raj) (DB) ; Dhaneswar Pradhani v State of Assam (2003) Cr LJ 733 (Gau) (DB) ; Dipam Hazarika v State of Assam 2013 (129) AIC 807 (Gauh) ; Ramanand Singh v State of Bihar 2013 (124) AIC 666 (Pat) .

5 State of Madhya Pradesh v Ahmadulla AIR 1961 SC 998 ; Re *Govindswami Padayachi*AIR 1952 Mad 174 ; Bagga v Emperor AIR 1931 Lah 276 ; Narain Shah v Emperor AIR 1947 Pat 222 ; Chajju Mal v Emperor 11 Cr LJ 105 ; Golla Chinna Venkadu v Emperor 15 Cr LJ 161 ; DC Thakkar v State of Gujarat AIR 1964 SC 1563, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 472 ; Bhikai v State AIR 1966 SC 1, (1966) Mad LJ 561 (Cr) ; Ratan Lal v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1971 SC 778, (1971) Cr LJ 654 ; Oyami Ayatu v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1974 SC 216, p 217, (1974) Cr LJ 305 ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Godhe Faguwa (1974) MPLJ 203, (1974) Jablj 302 ; State of Orissa v Bagh Syama (1976) Cut LT 958, p 961 ; Tarseem Singh v State AIR 1979 J&K 53, p 58 ; Chaggan v State (1975) WLN 479, (1975) Raj LW 360 .

6 Kirtanram Mansai Uranv v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr J 4658, p 4661 (Chh) (DB) (Case law referred) .

7 Jai Lal v Delhi Admn AIR 1969 SC 15, (1968) 2 SCWR 455, (1968) 70 Punj LR 377 (D), (1969) Cr LJ 259 ; Vidhya Devi v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2332 (Raj) (DB) .

8 Kunbi Kurji Duba v State AIR 1960 Guj 1, p 3, (1960) Cr LJ 1200 ; Rajan v State of Kerala (1984) Cr LJ 874, (1984) Ker LT 367, (1984) 2 Ker ILR 340, (1984) Ker LJ 225 ; Re Parvathi Ammal(1960) 1 Mad LJ 332; Thangal Kunkikoya v State of Kerala (1963) 1 Ker LR 47 ; Hiranya Kumar v State (1969) All WR 339, (1969) All Cr R 215 ; Sukru Sa v State of Orissa (1973) Cr LJ 1323, p 1324 ; Kesheorao v State of Maharashtra (1979) Cr LJ 403, p 406 (Bom)(DB); Re Jinnappa(1961) 2 Cr LJ 250, 39 Mys LJ 288.

9 Rajendra Yeshwant Kadam v State of Maharashtra 2008 (4) Mah LJ (Cri) 36 (Bom) .

10 Sitaram Hiraman Jopale v State of Maharashtra 2013 Cr LJ 3588, p 3591, 2013 (4) ABR 1102, 2013 ALL MR (Cri) 3237, 2013 (4) Bom CR (Cri) 530 (Bom) (DB).

11 Sitaram Hiraman Jopale v State of Maharashtra 2013 Cr LJ 3588, p 3591, 2013 (4) ABR 1102, 2013 ALL MR (Cri) 3237, 2013 (4) Bom CR (Cri) 530 (Bom) (DB).

12 Re Henny Perry 14 Cr App R 48.

13 Re *Raju Shetty*AIR 1960 Mys 48 .

14 Barelal v State AIR 1960 MP 102, p 104 ; Re *Kandasami Maduli*AIR 1960 Mad 316 .

15 State of Kerala v Madhavan Pillai AIR 1958 Ker 80, p 81 .

16 Lok Bahadur Dahal v State of Sikkim 2012 Cr LJ 4996 (Sikk) (DB) .

17 State of Orissa v Rajesh Hembrum 2011 Cr LJ 1824, p 1830 (Ori) (DB) .

18 Gopal Prasad Kabre v State of Madhya Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 16 (MP) (DB), Ganesh v State of MP 2004 Cr LJ 2327, 2004 (1) MPLJ 387, distinguished.

19 Rajkumar s/o Hansraj Verma v State of Maharashtra 2014 Cr LJ (NOC) 97 (Bom) (DB).

20 Mariappan v State of Tamil Nadu 2013 Cr LJ 2334, p 2338 (SC), (2013) 12 SCC 270, 2013 (8) JT 522, 2013 (6) Scale 185 .

21 Lala SK v State (1983) Cr LJ 1675, (1983) 2 Crimes 166 (Cal)(DB); Raghu Pradhan v State of Orissa (1993) Cr LJ 1159 (Ori) .

22 Re *Kandasami Mudali*AIR 1960 Mad 316, p 317 ; Rajan v State of Kerala (1984) Cr LJ 874, (1984) KLT 367 (Ker), (1984) 2 ILR Ker 340, (1984) Ker LJ 225 ; Re Parvathi Ammal(1960) 1 Mad LJ 332; Thangal Kunhikoya v State of Kerala (1963) 1 Ker LR 47 ; Hiranya Kumar v State (1969) All WR 339(HC), (1969) All Cr R 215; Sukru Sa v State of Orissa (1973) Cr LJ 1323, p 1324 ; Kesheorao v State of Maharashtra (1979) Cr LJ 403, p 406 (Bom) (DB) ; Re Jinnappa(1961) 2 Cr LJ 250, 39 Mys LJ 288.

23 Chandgi v Emperor AIR 1932 Lah 260 ; Md Islam v Emperor AIR 1931 Oudh 77 .

24 Nago Atmaramji v State of Maharashtra (1977) Mad LJ 163 ; Kesheorao v State of Maharashtra (1979) Cr LJ 403, p 406 (Bom) ; Kanna Kunummal Ammad Koya v State of Kerala (1966) Mad LJ 807 (Cr) .

25 Rajendra v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2458 (Raj) (DB) .

26 Rajan v State of Kerala (1984) Cr LJ 874, (1984) KLT 367 (Ker), (1984) 2 ILR Ker 340, (1984) Ker LJ 225 ; Autar Singh v State of Himachal Pradesh (1984) 1 Crimes 636 (HP) .

27 Buddha Dattu Unavane v State of Maharashtra (1985) Cr LJ 844 (Bom), (1985) Mah LR 548, (1985) 1 Bom CR 508, (1984) Cr LR 187 (Mah) .

28 Sheralliwalli Mohammed v State of Maharashtra AIR 1972 SC 2443, (1972) Cr LJ 1523 (SC) ; Marimathu v State 2009 Cr LJ 3633 (Mad) (DB) .

29 McNaughten's case (1843) 4 St TR 847 (NS).

30 Marimuthu v State 2009 Cr LJ 3633, p 3637 (Mad) (DB) .

31 Vijay Kumar Dhruv v State of Chhattisgarh 2013 Cr LJ 1786, p 1789 (Chh) (DB) ; Babu alias Gajraj Singh v State of Rajasthan (2007) 8 SCC 66, 2007 AIR SCW 3808 .

32 Hari Singh Gond v State of MP 2009 Cr LJ 346, p 350 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 6882, AIR 2009 SC 31, [2008] 12 SCR 949, (2008) 16 SCC 109 .

33 Raghu Pradhan v State of Orissa (1993) Cr LJ 1159, p 1161-62 (Ori) (DB) .

34 Vidhya Devi v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2332 (Raj) (DB) .

35 Ibid.

36 Atrup v State of Rajasthan (2003) Cr LJ 4031 (Raj) (DB) .

37 Archbold, Criminal Pleadings, Evidence and Practice, thirty fifth edn, pp 31-32; Russell on Crimes and Misdemeanours, vol 1, twelfth edn, p 105; 1 Hale PC 34.

38 1 Hale PC 30.

39 Russell on Crimes and Misdemeanours, vol 1, twelfth edn, p 103; 1 Hale PC 31.

40 Ajaya Mahakud v State (1993) Cr LJ 1201, p 1203-04 (Ori) (DB) .

41 Hazara Singh v State AIR 1958 Punj 104, p 108 .

42 Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, fourth edn, p 474.

43 State of HP v Rajender Kumar 2012 (119) AIC 574 (HP) (DB).

44 State v Chotelal Gangadin Gadariya AIR 1959 MP 203, p 206 .

45 R v Kemp, [1957] 1 QB 399 .

46 R v Charleston, [1955] 1 All ER 859, 39 Cr App R 37.

47 Russell on Crimes, eleventh edn, p 122.

48 Murthy v State (1988) 1 Crimes 326 (Mad) .

49 Vide Kanna Kunummal Ammad Koya v State of Kerala (1966) Mad LJ 807 (Cr), (1967) Cr LJ 494 ; Nago Atmaramji v State of Maharashtra (1977) Mad LJ 163 ; Kesheo Rao v State of Maharashtra (1978) Cr LJ 403, p 406 (Bom) ; State of Kerala v Madhavan Pillai AIR 1958 Ker 80 .

50 Mangla Ram v State of Rajasthan (1984) Cr LR 174 (Raj), (1984) Raj Cr C 138 (Raj) .

51 Sankaran v State of Kerala (1993) 2 KLT 852, p 857 (DB) .

52 Re Miller 85 All 803, pp 811-12, 26 Del 477.

53 SC Team v Brayant 51 SE 148, p 150, 71 SC 331 ; Ricketts v Jallif 62 Min 440, p 448 ; 44 Corpus Juris Secondum, p 36.

54 Nagili v State of Rajasthan (1982) Raj Cr C 331, (1982) Raj LW 226 .

55 State v Chhoteylal Gangadin Gadariya AIR 1959 MP 203, p 205, (1959) Cr LJ 718 ; Channabasappa v State AIR 1959 Mys 68, (1959) Cr LJ 985 ; State v Kartik Chandra AIR 1959 Assam 79, p 82 ; Deorao v Emperor AIR 1946 Nag 321, p 330, 47 Cr LJ 918 ; Re Thomas(1973) 1 Mad LJ 179, p 185; State of Orissa v Bagh Shyama 1976 Cut LT 958, p 961 .

56 Narayan Chandra Dey v State (1988) Cr LJ 387 (Cal) .

57 Ratan Lal v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1971 SC 778, (1971) Cr LJ 654, p 657 .

58 Withoo v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 164 .

59 McNaughten case (1843) 4 St Tr (No 5) 897, 10 CL&F 200, 8 ER 718.

60 Edward Arnold(1724) 16 St Tr 695, p 750.

61 Tola Ram v Emperor AIR 1927 Lah 674, p 677 .

62 Baswant Rao Baji Rao v Emperor AIR 1944 Nag 66, p 71 ; State v Durgacharan Barik AIR 1963 Ori 33 .

63 Hadfield(1800) 27 St Tr 1281; Bowler(1812) 1 Collinson Lunacy 673; Billingham, Old Bontey, 15 May 1812. The 'Times' May 16, all noticed in Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, pp 114-15.

64 Although Sir James Stephen so interpreted them, History of the Criminal Law of England, vol 2, p 167; see the observations of Cockburn CJ, in R v Burton (1863) 3 F&F 772, on p 15 of his letter of 12 June 1879, to the Attorney-General containing 'Comments and suggestions in Relation to the Criminal Code (Indicatable Offences) Bill 1879', Accounts and Papers 18, 1878-79, pp 59 233, 247.

66 R v Windle (1952) 2 QB 826 .

67 Kamla Bhuniya v State of West Bengal (2006) 1 CHN 439, (2006) Cr LJ 998 .

68 Sahadeb Mondeal v State of West Bengal (2007) Cr LJ 1728 (Cal) ; Shibu v State of Kerala 2013 (4), KLT 323 (Ker).

69 Shibu v State of Kerala 2013 (4) KLT 323 (Ker) .

70 Hazara Singh v State AIR 1959 Punj 104, p 110 .

71 Paneha v Emperor AIR 1932 All 233, p 286 .

72 Bazlur Rahman v Emperor AIR 1929 Cal 1, p 7 .

73 Karma Urang v Emperor AIR 1928 Cal 238, p 240 ; Panchu v Emperor AIR 1932 All 233, p 235 ; Hazara Singh v State AIR 1958 Punj 104 ; State v Durga Charan Barik AIR 1963 Ori 33 .

74 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 110.

75 Ibid, pp 111-112.

76 Archbold's Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice, thirty third edn, p 249.

77 Bharat Kumar v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 1958 (Raj) (DB) .

78 Surendra Mishra v State of Jharkhand 2011 Cr LJ 1161, AIR 2011 SC 627, 2011 AIR SCW 458, 2011 (1) Scale 124 .

79 Govindaraj v State (2005) Cr LJ 4676 (Mad) (DB) .

80 Barelal v State AIR 1960 MP 102, p 104 ; DN Roy v State of Mysore (1970) Cr LJ 529, p 532 (Cal), 74 CWN 231 ; Ambi v State of Kerala (1962) 2 Cr LJ 135, (1960) Ker LJ 1375 ; Kunbi Kunji Duba v State AIR 1960 Guj 1, p 3, (1960) Cr LJ 1200 .

81 Jinappa v State of Mysore (1961) 2 Cr LJ 250, (1961) Mys LJ 288 ; Ambi v State of Kerala (1962) 2 Cr LJ 135 (Ker) ; Sukru Sa v State of Orissa (1973) Cr LJ 1323, (1973) Cut LT 322 ; Sarka Gundusa v State AIR 1969 Ori 102, (1969) Cr LJ 623 ; Re Thomas(1973) 1 Mad LJ 179; Tubu Chetia v State of Assam (1976) Cr LJ 1416 (Gau) ; State of Kerala v Ravi (1978) KLT 177, p 181 ; Kesheorao v State of Maharashtra (1979) Cr LJ 403, p 406 (Bom) .

82 Pancha v Emperor AIR 1932 All 233, p 235 .

83 Chhajju Mal v Emperor 11 Cr LJ 105 .

84 Hazara Singh v State AIR 1958 Punj 104, p 108 ; Surendra Mishra v State of Jharkhand 2011 Cr LJ 1161, AIR 2011 SC 627, (2011) 11 SCC 495, 2011 (1) JT 83, 2011 (1) Scale 124 .

85 Channabasappa v State of Mysore AIR 1957 Mys 63 ; Baswantrao Bajirao v Emperor AIR 1949 Nag 66 ; Narain Sahi v Emperor AIR 1947 Pat 222 ; Ramzan v Emperor AIR 1919 Lah 478 ; Queen-Empress v Kadar Nasyer Shah 23 ILR Cal 604 ; Mantajali v Emperor AIR 1920 Cal 39 ; Chhaju Mal v Emperor 11 Cr LJ 105 ; Ramzan v Emperor AIR 1919 Lah 470 ; Kalicharan v Emperor AIR 1948 Nag 20(2) ; State v Koli Jeram Duda AIR 1955 Sau 105 ; Tola Ram v Emperor AIR 1927 Lah 674 .

86 State v Chhotelal AIR 1959 MP 203, p 205 .

87 Re *Pappathi Ammal*AIR 1959 Mad 239, p 245 ; Sankaran v State (1994) Cr LJ 1173 (Ker) .

88 Venkataraj v State (1985) Mad LJ 394 (Cr) .

89 Modi'sMedical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, eleventh edn, pp 372-73.

90 State of Kerala v Madhavan Pillai AIR 1958 Ker 80 .

91 Re Henry Perry 14 Cr App Rep 48; quoted with approval in State of Madhya Pradesh v Ahmudullah AIR 1961 SC 998, p 1001 .

92 Unniri Kannan v State AIR 1960 Ker 24 .

1 R v Taylor (2008) OJ No 946 .

2 Surendera Mishra v State of Jharkhand 2011 Cr LJ 1161, AIR 2011 SC 627, 2011 AIR SCW 458, 2011 (1) Scale 124 .

3 Sadashivu Balappa Samagar v State of Karnataka (2006) Cr LJ 899 (Kant) (DB) .

4 Re Thomans(1973) 1 Mad LJ 179, p 186.

5 Sudhakaran v State of Kerala 2011 Cr LJ 292 (SC), 2011 AIR SCW 6688, (2010) 10 SCC 582 .

6 Mo-Schoenhoff v Hearning 38 SW 2d 1011-15, 327.

7 Vt Foster v Dickerson 24A 253, p 257, 64 Vt 233; Ny People v Krist 60 NE 1057, p 1060, 168 NY 19 .

8 Dahyabhai v State of Gujarat AIR 1964 SC 1563, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 472, p 481 ; Keshto Rao v State of Maharashtra (1979) Cr LJ 403, p 407 (Bom) ; State v Dhanna Ram (1973) WLN 463, (1973) Raj LW 535 ; State v Dharona Ram (1974) Cr LJ 1123, p 1129 (Raj) .

9 Jalal v Emperor 30 Cr LJ 1024, p 1025 (Lah) (DB) ; Re *Manick Ram*AIR 1950 Mad 576, 51 Cr LJ 1329, p 1330 ; Mani Ram Badhi v State of Mahrashtra (1963) Mah LJ (Notes) 24 (DB) .

10 Taylor's Principles and Practice of Medical Jurisprudence, vol 1, eleventh edn, p 585.

11 Sydney Smith and Fiddes, Forensic Medicine, tenth edn, p 391.

12 Director of Public Prosecutions v Beard (1920) AC 470 .

13 Emperor v Bheleka Aham 29 ILR Cal 493, p 495 .

14 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 86, quoted with approval in Basdeo v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, 491; Prubhunath v State AIR 1957 All 667, p 670 .

15 MA Kamath, Medical Jurisprudence, fifth edn, Madras Law Journal publication, p 375.

16 Kyn-Fain v Commonwealth 78 Ky 123, p 136, 187, 39 Am R 213, 32 CJP 626 [Notes 32(a)].

17 Modi's Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, twelfth edn, p 399; Re *Pappathi Ammal*AIR 1959 Mad 239 (DB), (1959) Cr LJ 724, p 727.

18 MalukuMohamed v State (2006) Cr LJ 3339 (Mad) (DB) .

19 Gaylord P Coon, P Psychiatry for the Lawyer, The Principal Psychoses, 31 Corn LQ 327, p 335.

20 State of Punjab v Mohinder Singh (1983) SCC 402 (Cr), (1983) 2 SCC 274, (1983) Cr LR 187 (SC), (1983) 1 Crimes 735 (SC), (1983) Cr AR 164 (SC) .

21 Pundalik Laxman Chavan v State of Maharashtra (1994) 3 Crimes 298 (Bom) (DB).

22 Debeswar Bhuyan v State of Assam 2012 Cr LJ 274 (Gauh) (DB) .

23 Khuraijam Samer Singh v State of Manipur (1997) Cr LJ 1461 (Gau) (DB) .

24 Govind Ramchandra Jadav v State of Maharashtra (1996) Cr LJ 4186 (Bom) (DB) .

25 Babasaheb Thombre v State of Maharashtra 2008 Cr LJ 2935 (Bom) (DB) .

26 Cohen, Murder, Madness and the Law, p 152 cited in Ramdulare Ramahin Sunar v State AIR 1959 MP 259, p 263 .

27 Baijanti Bai v State of Madhya Pradesh (2000) Cr LJ 3253 (MP) (DB) .

28 William, Unsoundness of Mind, p 109, et seq Maudseley's Responsibility in Mental Disease, p 133, et seq. For a striking example see Clouson's Mental Diseases, p 351, cited in Watson's Principles of the Indian Criminal Law, pp 30-32.

29 Dove's case, Stephen's History of the Criminal Law of England, vol 2, p 426, et seq.

30 Stephen's History of the Criminal Law of England, vol 2, p 170.

31 Ibid, pp 170-71.

32 R v Stokes 3 C&K 185 ; R v Bargon 3 Cox CC 275 ; R v Burton 3 F&F 772 ; Sodeman v R (1936) 2 All ER 1138 ; R v Flavell 19 Cr App R 141; R v Kopsch 19 Cr App R 50.

33 R v Kadar Nasyer Shah 23 ILR Cal 604, p 609 ; Ghatu Pramanik v R 28 ILR Cal 613, 618; Chajju Mal v R 11 Cr LJ 105, 94 PLR 1909 ; Maung Gyi v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 427 ; Sardara v Emperor 24 Cr LJ 827 ; Pancha v Emperor AIR 1932 All 233 ; Hazar Singh v State AIR 1958 Punj 104 ; State v Durgacharan Barik AIR 1963 Ori 33, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 213 ; Hiranya Kumar v State (1969) All WR 339(HC), (1969) All Cr C 215, p 219; Ganesh Sharwan v State (1970) Mah LJ 75 ; Kannakunnummal, Ammed Koya v State AIR 1967 Ker 92, (1967) Cr LJ 694 ; State of Kerala v Ravi (1978) KLT 177, p 183 ; Brijkishore v State of Uttar Pradesh (1970) 1 SCWR 359, (1970) UJ (SC) 323 .

34 Basanta Kumar Naik v State of Orissa (1986) 61 Cut LT 143 .

35 R v Haynas 1 F&F 166 ; 1 Cr LJ 854, 17 CPLR 113 .

36 Re *Pappathi Ammal*AIR 1959 Mad 239, p 242 ; see also, Unniri Kannan v State AIR 1960 Ker 24 .

37 Brij Kishore Pandey v State of Uttar Pradesh (1970) 1 SCWR 359, (1970) UJ (SC) 323, (1970) SC Cr R 489 ; State v Dhanna Ram (1974) Cr LJ 1123, p 1130, (1973) Raj LW 535 ; State of Kerala v Ravi (1978) Ker LJ 177, p 183 ; Paily v State of Kerala (1959) Ker LR 1345, p 1352-53 ; Vaghumal Kheragmal v State AIR 1955 Sau 13 (Nervousness), (1955) Cr LJ 63, p 65; Mani Ram Radhi v State of Maharashtra (1963) Mah LJ (Notes) 24 ; State of Maharashtra v Gauri Shankar AIR 1966 Bom 179, p 183 (1966) Cr LJ 875; Ganesh Sharwan v State (1970) Mah LJ 75, p 79, 71 Bom LR 643 .

38 Madesh v State 2014 Cr LJ 96, p 101 (Mad) (DB), 2013 AIR SCW 2415 ; Surendra Mishra v State of Jharkhand 2011 AIR SCW 458, AIR 2011 SC 627, 2011 Cr LJ 1161, 2011 (1) Crimes 192 (SC), 2011 (1) Scale 124, (2011) 11 SCC 495, followed.

39 Issae Ray, Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity, Pt II, fourth edn, p 182 quoted with approval in Ramdulare Ramadhin Sunar v State AIR 1959 MP 259, 261 .

40 Ram Bharose v State of Madhya Pradesh (1974) Jab LJ 348, p 359, (1974) MPLJ 406 ; Shivraj Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) MPLJ 98, p 100 ; Jailal v Delhi Admn AIR (1969) SC 15, (1969) Cr LJ 259 ; Ashiruddin Ahmad v King AIR 1949 Cal 182, 50 Cr LJ 255 ; SW Mahommad v State of Maharashtra AIR 1972 SC 2443, p 2445, (1972) Cr LJ 1523 .

41 Basanti v State (1989) Cr LJ 415, p 419-420 (Ori) .

42 Lakshmi v State AIR 1959 All 534, p 536 .

43 Mayne's Criminal Law of India, fourth edn, para 184.

44 R v Layton (1849) 2 Cox CC 149 .

45 Mayne's Criminal Law of India, fourth edn, para 188.

46 State v Chhotelal Gangadin Gadariya AIR 1959 MP 203, p 208 .

47 R v Hadfield (1800) 27 St Tr 1281 .

48 Kamla Singh v State AIR 1955 Pat 209, p 215 .

49 Kanbi Kurji Duba v State AIR 1960 Guj 1, p 4 .

50 See the commentary under head note 1.

51 Mayne's Criminal Law of India, fourth edn, para 185.

52 Baswantrao Bajirao v Emperor AIR 1949 Nag 66, p 72 .

53 SD art 28 (1) .

54 R v Dav ies 1 F&F 69; R v Vyse 3 F&F 247, per Crompton J.

55 R v Hadfield 27 St Trs 1281 .

56 R v Law 2 F&F 836 .

57 R v Leigh 4 F&F 915 .

58 R v Sakhram Rumji 14 ILR Bom 564 ; Nga Pyan v R 13 Cr LJ 49 ; Vithoo v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 164 .

59 R v Lakshman Dagdu 10 ILR Bom 512 .

60 Re *Muthuswami Agsri*AIR 1919 Mad 128 .

61 Mayne's Criminal Law of India, fourth edn, para 186.

62 Ghinua Uraon v Emperor AIR 1918 Pat 179 (FB), 19 Cr LJ 135, p 138 .

63 R v Oxford 9 C&P 925 ; R v Townley 3 F&F 839 ; R v Somir Baba 27 ILR Cal 368 ; Shibo Koeri v R 3 Cr LJ 469, 10 CWN 725 .

64 Hadfield 27 St Tr 1281.

65 Geron Ali v Emperor AIR 1941 Cal 129 .

66 Hazara Singh v State AIR 1958 Punj 104 .

67 Gelsing Pida Pawar v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 4097, p 4100 (Bom) (DB), 2010 (3) Bom CR (Cr) 78 .

68 State of Rajasthan v Vidhya Devi 2012 Cr LJ 3398 (SC), 2012 AIR SCW 3556, (2011) 15 SCC 228 .

69 Rintu Das v State of Assam 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 779 (Gauh) (DB).

70 Sahadeb Mondal v State of West Bengal 2007 Cr LJ 1728, p 1733 (Cal) (DB) .

71 State of Jharkhand v Lakhan Rai 2007 Cr LJ 2410 (Jhar) (DB) .

72 Surjali v State of Rajasthan (1982) Cr LR 405 (Raj)(DB).

73 Mahommad v State of Kerala (1985) KLT 937 ; Dahyabhai Chhaganbha Thakkar v State of Gujarat AIR 1964 SC 1563 ; Oyami Ayatu v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1974 SC 216 reliedon.

74 Anjan Das v State of Assam 2007 Cr LJ (NOC) 802, 2007 (55) AIC 805 (All) (DB).

75 State of Karnataka v Jatti (1993) 1 Crimes 73, p 83 (Kant)(DB).

76 Ramdayal Pando v State of Chhattisgarh 2009 Cr LJ 3893, p 3895 (Chh) (DB) .

77 State of Maharashtra v Umesh Krishna Pawar (1994) Cr LJ 774, p 776-77(Bom) .

78 Elkari Shankari v State of Andhra Pradesh (1989) 2 Andh LT 571, p 573-74 .

79 Sunder Bairagi v State (1984) Cr LJ 124 (Ori) .

80 Kancha Munda v State of Assam 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 470 (Gauh) (DB).

81 Pratap v State of Rajasthan 2007 Cr LJ 4357 (Raj) .

82 Budhis Rai v State of Sikkim 2015 (147) AIC 752 (Sikk) (DB).

83 Kanji Kurbi Duba v State AIR 1960 Guj 1, 1960 Cr LJ 1200 .

84 Re *P Suryanarayan*AIR 1965 Mad 28, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 138, p 141 ; Jailal v Delhi Admn AIR 1969 SC 15, (1969) Cr LJ 259 ; Makra Singh v State (1973) 39 Cut LT 1289 .

85 Sadashivu Balappa Samagar v State of Karnataka (2006) Cr LJ 899 (Kant) (DB) .

86 Madhukar G Nigade v State of Maharashtra (2006) Cr LJ 1305 (Bom) (DB) .

1 Tikaram Krishnalal Pandey v State of Maharashtra 2013 Cr LJ 2410, p 2413 (Bom) (DB) .

2 Gelding Pida Pawar v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 4097, p 4100 (Bom) (DB) ; 2010 (3) Bom CR (Cri) 78 ; Dhyabhai Chhaganbhai Thakker v State of Gujarat AIR 1964 SC 1563 ; Shrikant Anandrao Bhosale v State of Maharashtra AIR 2002 SC 3399, 2002 Cr LJ 4356, (2002) 7 SCC 748 ; Ravindra Govind Gawas v State of Maharashtra 2013 Cr LJ (NOC) 566 (Bom) (DB).

3 Khraijam Somoi Singh v State of Manipur (1997) Cr LJ 1461 (Gau) (DB) .

4 Siddhapal Kamala Yadav v State of Maharashtra 2009 Cr LJ 372, p 374, 375 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 6984, AIR 2009 SC 97, [2008] 14 SCR 320, (2009) 1 SCC 124, 2008 (13) Scale 452 .

5 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 109; Bhattacharya's Insanity and Criminal Law, p 54; Mayne's Criminal Law of India, Pt II, fourth edn, p 179; State of Madhya Pradesh v Ahmadulluh AIR 1961SC 998 ; Dulal Nayek v State (1987) 2 Crimes 342 (Cal) ; Mangla Rai v State of Rajasthan (1984) Cr LR 174 (Raj), (1984) Raj Cr Cas 138 (Raj) ; Narain v State (1990) 27 All Cr C 269, p 274 (All) (DB) ; State of Maharashtra v Umesh Krishna Pawar (1994) 1 Bom CR 575, (1994) Cr LJ 774 ; Bihari Lal v State of Himachal Pradesh (2006) Cr LJ 3832 (HP) ; Ramdayal Pando v State of Chhattisgarh 2009 Cr LJ 3893 (Chh) DB) .

6 Tola Ram v State of Rajasthan (1996) Cr LJ 8 (Raj)(DB); Madhukar G Nigade v State of Maharashtra (2006) Cr LJ 1305 (Bom) (DB) ; N Lakshmaiah v State of Karnataka (2002) 1 SCC 219 ; Ganga Singh Kali Ram v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ (NOC) 191 (Uttranchal) .

7 Woolmington v Director of Public Prosecutions (1935) AC 462 .

8 Chan Kan v Queen (1955) AC 206, [1955] 1 All ER 266 .

9 Woolmington v Director of Public Prosecutions (1935) AC 462 .

10 Answers of the 15 judges in McNaughten's case, (1843) 10 Cl & F 200, 8 ER 718.

11 Mahendra Singh v State of Rajasthan 2008 Cr LJ 3850 (Raj) (DB) .

12 Ram Swaroop Thakur v State of Bihar (2000) Cr LJ 426 (Pat) .

13 Baswantrao Bajirao v Emperor AIR 1949 Nag 66 ; Chaadu Lal v Crown AIR 1924 All 186 (2) ; Harprasad Ghasiram Gupta v State AIR 1932 Bom 184 ; Bare Lal v State AIR 1960 MP 102 .

14 Madhusudan v State of Karnataka 2011 Cr LJ 215 (Kant) (DB) .

15 Sarat Chandra Sahoo v State of Orissa 2010 Cr LJ 3084, p 3086 (Ori) (DB) .

16 State v Durgacharan Parik AIR 1963 Ori 33, p 35 .

17 Emperor v Gedka Goala AIR 1937 Pat 363, 38 Cr LJ 846 ; Hemu Bechar v State AIR 1951 Sau 19 .

18 Govind Ramchandra Jadhav v State of Maharashtra (1996) Cr LJ 4186 (Bom)(DB).

19 Nand Lal v State of Rajasthan 2011 Cr LJ 3686, p 3689 (Raj) (DB) .

20 C v State of Assam 2012 Cr LJ 274, p 282 (Gauh) (DB) .

21 Laxman Gagarai v State of Orissa 2012 Cr LJ 44, p 48 (Ori) (DB) .

22 Dahyabhai v State of Gujarat (1964) 7 SCR 361 ; Rajkumar v State of Madhya Pradesh (2006) Cr LJ 2472 (Chattisgarh) ; Rajendra v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2458 (Raj) (DB) .

23 Vidhya Devi v State of Rajasthan (2004) Cr LJ 2332 (Raj) (DB) .

24 Kuzhiyaramadiyil Madhavan v State (1994) Cr LJ 450, p 453 (Ker)(DB); Subbiah v State (1994) 1 LW 198(Cr).

25 State of Maharashtra v Umesh Krishna Pawar (1994) 1 Bom CR 575, p 577(DB).

26 TN Lakshmaiah v State of Karnataka (2002) 1 SCC 219 ; Madhukar G Nigade v State of Maharashtra (2006) Cr LJ 1305 (Bom) (DB) .

27 Tukappa Tamanna Lingardi v State of Maharashtra (1990) Bom LR 441 .

28 Sodeman v Rex (1936) 2 All ER 1138 ; Dahyabhai v State of Gujarat (1964) 7 SCR 361 .

29 R v Dunbar (1957) 3 WLR 330, p 334 .

30 R v Carr-Briant (1943) KB 607 .

31 Cooper v Slade (1858) 6 HLC 746, p 772 .

32 Re *Raja Shetty*AIR 1960 Mys 48, p 52-53 .

33 Aboobacker v State (1987) Ker LJ 567 .

34 Dharam Pal v State of Uttar Pradesh (1984) 2 Crimes 788, (1984) All Cr R 533, (1984) All WC 947 .

35 Machi Parvaiah v State of Andhra Pradesh (1985) Cr LJ 1824, (1985) 2 APLJ 388, (1985) 2 Cr LC 591 .

36 Anandi v Emperor AIR 1923 All 327(2), 328.

37 Babu alias Gajraj Singh v State of Rajasthan 2007 (8) SCC 66, p 74, 2007 AIR SCW 3808 .

38 Lala Sk v State (1983) Cr LJ 1675, (1993) 2 Crimes 166 (Cal)(DB); Bhikari v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1966 SC 1, (1966) 1 Cr LJ 63 ; Kusnu Murari v State (1971) Cr LJ 869 (Assam) ; Satwant Singh v State of Punjab (1975) Cr LJ 1605 (Punj) .

39 Ganpat v State of Rajasthan (1984) Cr LR (Raj) 411 .

40 Sanna Eranna v State of Karnataka (1983) Cr LJ 619, (1983) 2 Cr L 279, (1983) 1 Kant LJ 115, (1983) 1 Kant LC 39 .

41 State v Koli Jeram Duda AIR 1955 Sau 105, p 107 ; Luvana Vaghumal Kherajmal v State AIR 1955 Sau 13 ; Hemu Bechar v State AIR 1951 Sau 19 ; Re *Govindaswami*AIR 1952 Mad 174 .

42 Re *Govindaswami*AIR 1952 Mad 174 ; Emperor v Bahadur AIR 1928 Lah 795 ; Velayudhan v State of Kerala (1967) KLT 19(SN).

43 Re *Subromaniam*AIR 1964 Mad 526, (1964) Cr LJ 683 (684) ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Ahmadullah AIR 1961 SC 998, (1961) 2 Cr LJ 43 .

44 Sheik Ahmed v State of Andhra Pradesh (1996) Cr LJ 2582 (AP)(DB).

45 Chetram v State (1971) Cr LJ 1246, (1971) Del LT 19 .

46 SK Nair v State of Punjab (1997) Cr LJ 772 (SC) .

47 Laxmandas Mangaldas Manikpuri v State of Maharashtra (1997) Cr LJ 950 (Bom)(DB).

48 Nathu Bapu Mhaskar v State of Maharashtra (1996) Cr LJ 2120 (Bom)(DB).

49 Tola Ram v State of Rajasthan (1996) Cr LJ 8 (Raj)(DB).

50 Ganesh Sharwan v State (1970) Mah LJ 75, (1969) 71 Bom LR 643 .

51 Atrup v State of Rajasthan (2003) Cr LJ 4031 (Raj) (DB) .

52 Sannatamma v State of Karnataka (2004) Cr LJ 2257 (Kant) (DB) .

53 Shrikant Anandrao Bhosale v State of Maharashtra AIR 2002 SC 3399, (2002) Cr LJ 4356 (SC) .

54 Parmananda Patra v State (1969) Cut LT 261 .

55 Netrananda Behara v State AIR 1968 Ori 223, (1968) Cr LJ 1626 ; Re Navier Marolle(1970) LW 149(Cr), (1970) Mad LJ 718(Cr); Savitri Devi v State (1973) Cut LT 1156 ; Surendera Mishra v State of Jharkhand 2011 Cr LJ 1161, AIR 2011 SC 627 .

56 Gulab Manik Surwase v State of Maharashtra (2001) Cr LJ 4302 (Bom)(DB).

57 Makra Singh v State (1973) Cut LT 1289 .

58 Surju Maraudi v State of Bihar (1978) BLJR 267, p 273 (HC) ; State v Dhannaram (1973) WLN 463, (1973) Raj LW 535 .

59 Elavarasan v State 2011 Cr LJ 4329, p 4337 (SC), AIR 2011 SC 2816 ; see alsoPrabhu Ram v State of Rajasthan* 2014 Cr LJ 4264 (Raj) (DP) .

60 Prabhu Ram v State of Rajasthan 2014 Cr LJ 4264 (Raj) (DB) .

61 CT Raveenran v State of Kerala 2011 Cr LJ 1408 (Ker) (DB) .

62 Hitendra Shrikrishna Patil v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 114 (Bom), 2010 (1) Bom CR (Cri) 730 .

63 State v Sindhi Dalwai (1970) 72 Bom LR 396 .

64 Bihari Lal v State of Himachal Pradesh (2006) Cr LJ 3832 (HP) (DB) ; Siddhapal Kamala Yadav v State of Maharashtra 2009 Cr LJ 372, 2008 AIR SCW 6984 (SC) .

65 Nandeswar Kalia v State of Assam (1983) Cr LJ 1515 (Gau)(DB).

66 Siddhapal Kamala Yadav v State of Maharashtra 2009 Cr LJ 372, p 374, 375 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 6984 .

67 Raval Mohanbhai Laxmanbhai v State of Gujarat (1998) Cr LJ 4325 (Guj)(DB).

68 Mangla Ram v State of Rajasthan (1984) Cr LR 174 (Raj), (1984) Raj Cr Cas 138 (Raj) ; Narayan Chandra Dey v State (1988) Cr LJ 387 (Cal) ; Kuzhiyaramadihil Madhavan v State (1994) Cr LJ 450 (Ker) .

69 Chandra Bhan v State (2005) Cr LJ 351 (All) (DB) .

70 Hussain v State of Kerala (2005) Cr LJ 3916 (Ker) (DB) .

71 Sudaboina Malliah v State (1990) 1 Crimes 608, p 609(AP)(DB).

72 Kodulal v State of MP 2010 Cr LJ 2145, p 2148 (MP) (DB) .

73 State of Maharashtra v Govind Mhatarba Shinde 2010 Cr LJ 3586 (Bom) (DB) .

74 Valusamy v State (1985) Cr LJ 981 (Mad), (1985) Mad LW 260 (Cr), (1970) Mad LJ 718 (Cr) ; Re Kandasami Mudali(1960) Cr LJ 930 (Mad) distinguished.

75 Laximandas Mangaldas Manikpuri v State of Maharashtra (1997) Cr LJ 950 (Bom)(DB).

76 Mariappan v State (2007) Cr LJ (NOC) 330 (Mad) (DB).

77 Nathu Bapu Bhaskar v State of Maharashtra (1996) Cr LJ 2120 (Bom)(DB).

78 Sita Ram v State 2011 Cr LJ 1082 (All) (DB) ; see alsoVirendra Kumar v State of Chhattisgarh* 2011 Cr LJ (NOC) 94 (Chh) (DB) (Accused appellant acquitted).

79 Emperor v Bahadur AIR 1928 Lah 796, p 797 .

80 Anandi v Emperor AIR 1923 All 327(2) .

81 Dulal Nayak v State (1987) 2 Crimes 342 (Cal) ; Ramhitram Ramadhar Dube v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1956 Nag 187, p 191 ; State v Koli Jeram Duda AIR 1955 Dau 105 ; Unniri Kumar v State AIR 1960 Ker 241 ; Pancha v Emperor AIR 1932 All 233 ; Dearao v Emperor AIR 1946 Nag 321 .

82 Basanti alias Anti Dei v State (1988) 2 Crimes 424 (Ori) ; Brushabha Digel v State (1993) 2 Crimes 948, p 950(Ori); Kamala Bhuniya v State of West Bengal (2006) Cr LJ 998 (Cal) (DB) .

83 State of Kerala v Madhewan Pillai AIR 1958 Ker 80, p 81 ; Re *Rajagopala Ayyanager*AIR 1952 Mad 289 ; Dulal Nayek v State (1987) 2 Crimes 342 (Cal) .

84 Kamala Bhuniya v State of West Bengal (2006) Cr LJ 998 (Cal) (DB) .

85 Turam Sundi v State of Jharkhand 2011 Cr LJ 1872, p 1874 (Jhar) (DB) .

86 State of Goa v Sameer Shatya 2015 (1) Crimes 75 (Bom) .

87 Channabasappa v State of Mysore AIR 1957 Mys 68, p 70 ; Dulal Nayek v State (1987) 2 Crimes 342 (Cal) ; Mangla Ram v State of Rajasthan (1984) Cr LR 174 (Raj), (1984) Raj Cr Cas 138 (Raj) ; Narain v State (1990) 27 All Cr C 269 .

88 Reg v Haynes (1859) 1 F&F 666, 175 ER 898.

1 Quoted with approval in Baswantrao Bajirao v Emperor AIR 1949 Nag 66, p 76 .

2 Re *Kundasami Mudali*AIR 1960 Mad 316, p 318 ; Re *Pappathi Ammal*AIR 1959 Mad 239, p 245 ; Mangla Ram v State of Rajasthan (1984) Cr LR 174 (Raj), (1984) Raj Cr C 138 (Raj) ; State of Goa v Sameer Shatya 2015 (1) Crimes 75 (Bom) .

3 Mani Ram v Emperor AIR 1927 Lah 52 ; Srinivasan Chettiar v Arunachalam Chettiar AIR 1952 Mad 288 ; Re *Sankappa Shetty*AIR 1941 Mad 326 .

4 Pancha v Emperor AIR 1932 All 283 .

5 Nitai Naik v State AIR 1957 Ori 168, p 170 .

6 Queen v Sheikh Mustafa 1 WR Cr 10 ; Nga Pigam v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 49 .

7 State of Orissa v Kalia 2008 Cr LJ 3107 (Ori) (DB) .

8 Brushabha Digel v State (1993) 2 Crimes 948, p 950 (Ori)(DB).

9 Shaik Ahmed v State of Andhra Pradesh (1996) Cr LJ 2582 (AP)(DB).

10 Kamala Bhuniya v State of West Bengal (2006) Cr LJ 998 (Cal) (DB) ; Kirtanram Mansai Uranu v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 4658 (Chh) (DB) .

11 State of Maharashtra v Govind Mhatarba Shinde 2010 Cr LJ 3586, p 3590 (Bom) (DB) .

12 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 127.

13 Nimdhari Singh v State (1985) l Crimes 425 (Cal) ; Bhikari v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1966 SC l; Surka Junduses v State (1969) Cr LJ 75 referred .

14 Kirtanram Mansai Uranv v State of Madhya Pradesh 2011 Cr LJ 4658 (Chh) (DB) ; Kapilnath Sahu v State of Chhattisgarh 2013 Cr LJ (NOC) 162 (Chh) (DB).

15 Gelsing Pida Pawar v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 4097, p 4100 (Bom) (DB), 2010 (3) Bom CR (Cri) 78 .

16 Venugopalan Venu v State of Kerala (1996) Cr LJ 3363 (Ker)(DB).

17 Siddhapal Kamala Yadav v State of Maharashtra 2009 Cr LJ 372, p 374, 375 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 97, 2008 AIR SCW 6984 .

19 Madhusudan v State of Karnataka 2011 Cr LJ 215 (Kant) (DB) .

20 Kapilnath Sahu v State of Chhattisgarh 2013 Cr LJ (NOC) 162 (Chh) (DB).

21 Baswant Rao Bajirao v Emperor AIR 1949 Nag 66, p 75 .

22 State v Koli Jeram Duda AIR 1955 Sau 105, 110 .

23 R v Holme (1953) 1 WLR 686, 37 Cr App R 61.

24 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 129, footnote 73.

25 Laxmandas Mangaldas Manikpuri v State of Maharashtra (1997) Cr LJ 950 (Bom)(DB); Kodulal v State of MP 2010 Cr LJ 2145 (MP) (DB) . (There was no medical evidence about the unsoundness of mind of the accused, and he fled away after commission of murder. Benefit of s 84, IPC was not given).

26 Elavarasan v State 2011 Cr LJ 4329, p 4337 (SC), AIR 2011 SC 2816 .

27 Deo Rao v Emperor AIR 1946 Nag 321, p 335 .

28 McNaughten's case, (1843) 10 Cl&F 200, 8 ER 718.

29 R v Francis (1849) 4 Cox 157 .

30 R v Rivett (1950) 34 Cr App R 87 .

31 Ratan Lal v State of Madhya Pradesh (1971) Cr LJ 654, AIR 1971 SC 778 .

32 Kamala Bhuniya v State of West Bengal (2006) Cr LJ 998 (Cal) (DB) .

33 Khageswar Pujari v State of Orissa (1984) Cr LJ 1108 (Ori), (1984) 57 Cut LT 58, (1984) All Cr LR 390, (1984) 1 Orissa LR 142 .

34 Balu Ganpat Koshire v State of Maharashtra (1983) Cr LJ 1769, (1983) 2 Bom CR 321 (Bom) .

35 Mangla Ram v State of Rajasthan (1984) Cr LR 174 (Raj), (1984) Raj Cr Cas 138 (Raj) .

36 Mohan Ram v State of Rajasthan (1983) Cr LR 503 (Raj) .

37 Pancha v Emperor AIR 1932 All 233, p 238, per Niamatullah J.

38 State v Koli Jeram Duda AIR 1955 Sau 105, p 106 .

39 State of Karnataka v Jatti (1992) 2 Kant LJ 505, p 510 (DB), (1933) 1 Crimes 73 .

40 Ibid; Queen-Empress v Kedar Nasyer Shah 23 ILR Cal 604 reld on.

41 State of Karnataka v Jatti (1993) 1 Crimes 73, p 83 (Kant)(DB).

42 State of Maharashtra v Umesh Krishna Pawar (1994) 1 Bom CR 575, (1994) Cr LJ 774 ; Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, ss 328 - 29 .

43 Chandrashekhar v State of Karnataka (1998) Cr LJ 2237 (Kant)(DB).

44 For details, see commentary on these sections from Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure, twenty-first edn, Lexisnexis.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 85.

Act of a person incapable of judgment by reason of intoxication caused against his will.--

Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who, at the time of doing it, is, by reason of intoxication, incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is either wrong, or contrary to law; provided that the thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge or against his will.

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

Sections 85 - 86 crystallise in a tabloid form the law relating to intoxication or drunkenness as a defence or plea in mitigation of a criminal offence. Section 85 gives the same protection to a person as s 84, IPC does to a person of unsound mind, who is by reason of intoxication 'incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that the thing which intoxicated him was administered without his knowledge or against his will'.[45] For the applicability of this section, it must be shown that the accused was in the state of intoxication, when he committed the crime and not otherwise.[46] This section applies only to involuntary and not voluntary drunkenness.[47] In order to get its benefit the intoxication should not have been incurred voluntarily.

Another essential requisite of the section is that the drunkenness must be such that the offender was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law.[48] Hence, the correct test is whether by reason of involuntary drunkenness, the accused was incapable of forming an intention of committing the offence.[49] Evidence of involuntary drunkenness, falling short of a proved incapacity in the accused to form the necessary intent to constitute the crime but merely establishing that his mind was affected by drink so that he more readily gave way to some violent passion, would not, however, rebut the presumption that a513 man intends the natural consequences of his act.[50] This section deals with the question of the knowledge possessed by an accused person at the time he commits the offence and leaves quite open the question of intention.[51]A person, who gets into a state of intoxication voluntarily, is presumed to have the same knowledge he would have had if he had not been intoxicated. When the state of intoxication is such as to make him incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law, he can only be punished on the basis of knowledge and not of a particular intention.[52]

Voluntary drunkenness/intoxication cannot itself excuse the commission of a crime; and it is not a defence to prove that a man's mind was so affected by drink that he more readily gave way to passion, or that he would not have acted as he did had he been sober, nor will drunkenness be a defence in case of strict liability, since, if an honest and reasonable mistake by a sober person cannot afford a defence, a mistake while drunk cannot do so. The appellant accused attacked the deceased resulting in as many as seven grievous injuries which suggested that the appellant was quite conscious of the consequences of his act. The appellant, as was apparent from the evidence, had control over his senses and tried to make good his escape after the incident in a calculated manner. The evidence of PW9 showed that immediately after the incident, the appellant accused tried to conceal his wearing apparel and the weapon of offence. It was not a case of involuntary intoxication. Appellant accused was convicted under s 302, IPC .[53]

The accused appellant committed the murder of his wife, three daughters and one son. The plea of drunkenness can never be an excuse for the brutal, diabolic acts of the accused. The accused was convicted under s 302, IPC and death sentence was confirmed.[54]

2. English Law

Involuntary intoxication refers to the case where intoxication is produced by others, as where a defendant's drink was 'laced' with alcohol without his knowledge. Evidence of such intoxication may be taken into account in deciding whether the defendant had the necessary mens rea for the offence (whether or not a specific intent is required); if it does not prevent the defendant having that mens rea, it is irrelevant to liability, but may well be a substantial mitigating factor.[55]

3. Canadian Law

There are three legally relevant degrees of intoxication. First, there is 'mild' intoxication. This is where there is alcohol-induced relaxation of both inhibitions and socially acceptable behaviour. This has never been accepted as a factor or excuse in determining whether the accused possessed the requisite mens rea. Second, there is 'advanced' intoxication. This occurs where there is intoxication to the point where514 the accused lacks specific intent, to the extent of an impairment of the accused's foresight of the consequences of his or her act sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt about the requisite mens rea. This will most often be the degree of intoxication the jury will grapple with in murder trials. A defence based on this level of intoxication applies only to 'specific intent offences'. Before a trial judge is required by law to charge the jury on intoxication, he or she must be satisfied that the effect of the intoxication was such that it might have impaired the accused's foresight of consequences sufficiently to raise a reasonable doubt. This is the threshold for instructing juries on advanced drunkenness. The third and final degree of legally relevant intoxication is 'extreme intoxication akin to automatism', which negates voluntariness and thus is a complete defence to criminal responsibility. Such a defence would be extremely rare, and by operation of s 33 .1 of the Criminal Code, limited to non-violent types of offences.[56]

The defence of extreme intoxication requires that the defendant establish his absence of basic intent on a balance of probabilities and further, that he present expert evidence in support.[57]

The distinction between specific and general intent is often difficult to discern and is not necessarily apparent from a reading of the offence in the Criminal Code. Its application to a particular offence is equally fraught with challenges. However, the serious ramifications of this determination demands that courts distinguish between them in a principled and transparent manner. In Canada, the law is clear that evidence of voluntary or self-induced drunkenness may only be put to the jury to determine whether the Crown has proved beyond a reasonable doubt the mens rea required where the offence is categorized as one of 'specific' intent rather than 'general' or 'basic' intent. Although not properly a defence, for ease of reference, the law frequently is stated to allow the defence of drunkenness only to offences of specific intent. For offences of general intent, only extreme drunkenness akin to insanity or automatism may be considered.[58]

4. Three Prepositions Regarding Scope and Ambit

The defence of drunkenness can be availed of only when intoxication produces such a condition as the accused loses the requisite intention for the offence. The onus of proof about reason of intoxication due to which the accused had become incapable of having particular knowledge in forming the particular intention is on the accused. Basically, three propositions as regards the scope and ambit of s 85 of the IPC are as follows:

(i) The insanity whether produced by drunkenness or otherwise is a defence to the crime charged;
(ii) Evidence of drunkenness which renders the accused incapable of forming the specific intent essential to constitute the crime should be taken into account with the other facts proved in order to determine whether or not he had this intent; and
(iii) The evidence of drunkenness falling short of a proved incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime and merely515 establishing that his mind is affected by drink so that he more readily give to some violent passion, does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his acts.[59]

5. 'Against his will' and 'Without his Knowledge'

Section 85, IPC, deals with act of a person incapable of judgment by reason of intoxication caused against his will. As the heading of the provision itself shows, intoxication must have been against his will and/or the thing which he intoxicated was administered to him without his knowledge. The expression 'without his knowledge' simply means an ignorance of the fact that what is being administered to him is or contains or is mixed with an intoxicant.[60]

6. Involuntary Drunkenness

Drunkenness (intoxication) is either voluntary or involuntary; it is involuntary when the person suffering from it has had the intoxication administered to him either: (a) by force (against his will); or (b) by fraud (without his knowledge). The protection can only be claimed by a person who had been made drunk through stratagem or the fraud of another or through ignorance, or coercion practised by his friend or foe, as if a person is drugged by his enemies or given to eat or drink such a thing as causes frenzy, or his unskillful physician gives him to drink an intoxicant, in all of which cases the person intoxicated may be said not to have been a free agent and, therefore, not responsible for the consequences of his act.[61] In order to bring a case within this section, the thing, which intoxicated the person, should have been administered to him 'without his knowledge' or 'against his will'. The expression 'without his knowledge' means ignorance of the fact that what is being administered to him is or contains or is mixed with an intoxicant. Consequently, where the intoxicant is administered to the accused by stratagem or fraud of another, as when mixed with his food or drink, and given to him in confidence, he is excused. The connotation of the expression 'against his will' is equally clear, as a little reflection shall show. 'Will' is the faculty of our minds which guides or controls our actions. So where the mind goes with the act it can be said that a person had acted in accordance with his will. An act which is against the 'will' must be an act which the performer performed not out of his own conscious volition but on compulsion by some outside agency by overpowering or paralysing his will by overt physical acts. Moral persuasion, acting as an incentive, has never been considered as an adequate excuse, nor imposition on young, experienced or weak minds his calculating adults of superior strength of mind or will. On this view if friends or relatives persuaded a person to drink a little more than he can reasonably digest, he cannot complain that he was made to drink against his will.

Where the accused drank liquor at the persuasion of his father to alleviate his pain it was held that the drinking of the liquor by the accused could not be said to be administration of liquor to him against his will.[62]516

Where a boy of 16 was admitted to a gaming house, where the proprietor plied him with whiskey in order to cheat him in the game, and the boy, drunk to the point of extreme intoxication admitted 'temporary insanity', and in a fight killed the calloused operator, it was held that involuntary intoxication is a very rare thing and can never exist where the person intoxicated knows what he is drinking, and drinks the intoxicant voluntarily, and without being made to do so by force or coercion.[63]

Where a person took liquor presented by a physician (presumably with the knowledge that it was liquor), the court in Johnson v Commonwealth ,[64] was unwilling to entertain the plea that the accused drank to obtain relief from an acute pain.[65]

Involuntary Drunkenness as a Defence

A person under intoxication can be excused if he had committed any offence provided the intoxicating material was given to him without his knowledge and consent.[66] Involuntary drunkenness as a ground of exemption is treated in just the same way as insanity under s 84 .[67] Disease of the mind, caused by voluntary drunkenness (e.g., delirium tremens), which produces mental incapacity, constitutes insanity and an offence, committed thereunder, would fall under s 84, although the disease may be of a temporary nature, and not under this section.[68] Thus involuntary drunkenness per se is no ground of exemption. It would be no ground of excuse for crime merely to plead involuntary drunkenness. To be a ground of exemption, the involuntary drunkenness must answer one of the three tests given in the section. The accused must show that he was so drunk that he did not know either: (a) 'the nature of the act'; or (b) that it was 'wrong'; or (c) that it was 'contrary to law'.[69]

Thus, A, under the influence of a drug, fraudulently administered him, shoots B dead, not knowing what he does. A's act is not a crime.[70]

7. Voluntary Drunkenness no Excuse for Crime

Voluntary drunkenness, according to the well-known rule of English law, and under the terms of this section is no excuse for crime. The incapacity specified in the section is no defence if produced by voluntary drunkenness,[71] though it may go towards mitigation of punishment.[72] A person cannot become himself drunk with liquor and commit an offence and then come and say that he had consumed the liquor and, therefore, the benefit of s 85, IPC, should be given to him.[73] Thus, A, in a state517 of voluntary drunkenness, shoots B dead, not knowing what he does. A is guilty of causing B's death: for whether he was drunk or sober, the law presumes that he intended to kill B.[74] When death is caused under a state of voluntary intoxication, offence committed is one under s 302 and is not reduced to one under s 304, Pt II. Exceptions under ss 85 - 86 are not applicable.[75]Drunkenness does not in the eye of the law make an offence more heinous, though it is no excuse; and an act, which if committed by a sober man, is an offence, is equally an offence if committed by one when drunk, if the intoxication was voluntarily caused.[76] Where the accused after consuming liquor quarrelled with his wife and then poured kerosene on her and set fire to her, the wife died due to burn injuries after giving a dying declaration showing that the accused after consuming liquor quarrelled with his wife and then poured kerosene on her and set fire, it was held that offence did not fall under s 85, IPC .[77]

Where evidence was lacking to show that the accused under the influence of intoxication committeed rape on the prosecutrix and was incapable of knowing the nature of his act, he was held not entitled to the benefit of s 85, IPC .[78]

Temporary Insanity Caused by Voluntary Drunkenness Falls under Section 84

But disease of the mind caused by voluntary drunkenness, (e.g., delirium tremens) which produces mental incapacity constitutes insanity, and an offence committed thereunder would fall under s 84, although the disease may be of a temporary nature, and not under this section.[79] If the mental faculties are not completely dominated by intoxication, this section would not apply.[80] There is a distinction, however, between the defence of insanity in the true sense caused by excessive drunkenness and the defence of drunkenness which produces a condition such that the drunken man's mind becomes incapable of forming a specific intention. If actual insanity in fact supervenes as a result of alcoholic excess, it furnishes as complete an answer to a criminal charge as insanity induced by any other cause.[81]

A, addicted to the excessive use of opium, met B in a field and killed him with a single stroke of his dao as he passed. The killing was unpremeditated, and there was no quarrel or dispute. It was held that A was not guilty of murder, the case falling under s 84 .[82]

45 Re *Macherla Balaswamy of Guntur*AIR 1953 Mad 827, p 828, (1953) Cr LJ 1587 .

46 Sohan Maghi v State AIR 1970 Pat 303, (1970) Cr LJ 1245, p 1246 .

47 Samman Singh v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 454, p 457, 43 Cr LJ 332 ; Prabhunath v State AIR 1957 All 667, (1957) All LJ 572 ; Kanji v State AIR 1953 Raj 40, (1953) Cr LJ 434 ; Chet Ram v State (1971) Cr LJ 1246, p 1250, (1971) Sim LJ 153 ; R v Howell (1974) 2 All ER 806, p 810 .

48 Re *Balaswami*AIR 1953 Mad 827, (1953) Cr LJ 1587 ; Re *Suruttayyam*AIR 1954 Mad 523, (1954) Cr LJ 672 ; Warayam Singh v Emperor AIR 1926 Lah 428, 27 Cr LJ 764 .

49 Muthu Goundan v Emperor (1931) Mad WN 113 ; Samman Singh v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 454, 43 Cr LJ 332 .

50 Nga Sein Gale v Emperor AIR 1934 Rang 361, 12 Rang 445 ; State of Orissa v Lachmi Mushli (1978) 46 Cut LT 122, p 128 (DB) .

51 Prabhunath v State AIR 1957 All 667, p 670, (1957) All LJ 572, (1957) Cr LJ 1056 .

52 Re *Macherla Balaswamy of Guntur*AIR 1953 Mad 827, p 828 .

53 Shankar Jaiswara v State of West Bengal 2007 Cr LJ 3271, p 3280 (SC), (2007) 9 SCC 360, (2007) 56 AIC 164 .

54 Bablu Hussain v State of Rajasthan 2007 Cr LJ 1160 (SC), AIR 2007 SC 697 .

55 Halsbury's Laws of England.

56 R v Daley (2007) SCJ No 53 .

57 R v Cedeno (2005) OJ No 1174 .

58 R v SJB 2002 AJ No 726*[Halsbury's Laws of Canada]*.

59 Bablu alias Mubarik Hussain v State of Rajasthan (2007) Cr LJ 1160 (1167) (SC), AIR 2007 SC 697, (2006) 13 SCC (Cri) 590, (2007) 50 AIC 89 (SC) .

60 Ibid.

61 1 Hale PC 32.

62 Jethuram Sukhra Nagbanshi v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1960 MP 242 ; Prabhunath v State AIR 1957 All 667, p 670, (1957) All LJ 572, (1957) Cr LJ 1956 .

63 Perryam v State 12 Okla Cr A 500.

64 Johnson v Commonwealth 115 SE 673 .

65 Harvard Law Review, 57, p 1055.

66 Venkappa Kannappa Chowdhari v State of Karnataka (1996) Cr LJ 15 (Kant)(DB).

67 Re *Macherla Balaswamy*AIR 1953 Mad 527, p 528 ; Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, 57 Cr LJ 919(2).

68 Sammon Singh v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 454 ; R v Bhelakha Aham 29 ILR Cal 493 ; R v Sakharam 14 ILR Bom 564, p 570 ; Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, 57 Cr LJ 919(2).

69 Waris Ali v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 167 .

70 Ct Hale PC 32-33.

71 R v Bheleka Aham 24 ILR Cal 493 ; Karim Khan v R 9 Cr LJ 156, 4 PWR Cr 5 ; Queen v Bodhee Khan 5 WR 79(Cr); Nga Chit So v King AIR 1937 Rang 467 ; Prabhunath v State AIR 1957 All 86 ; Shankar Jaiswara v State of West Bengal 2007 Cr LJ 3271, (2007) 9 SCC 360 .

72 Nga Sein Ge v Emperor AIR 1934 Rang 10 ; Nga Chit v King AIR 1937 Rang 467 ; R v Mavji Talshi 1 Cr LJ 495, 14 Ker LR 30 ; Waris Ali v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 167 ; Kunji v State (1953) Cr LJ 434 ; Summan Singh v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 545 .

73 Venkappa Kannappa Chowdhari v State of Karnataka (1996) Cr LJ 15 (Kant)(DB).

74 Pearson's case 2 Lewin CC 144.

75 Ramsing Prahladsing Chauhan v State of Gujarat (1985) 1 Guj LR 40 ; [Re Mancherla Balaswamy of Guntur(1952) 1 Mad LJ 772; Re Suru Hayyam alias Vayyapuri Goundan(1954) Cr LJ 672relied on; Basdev v State of Pepsu (1956) SCR 363followed].

76 Queen v Joolfkar Khan 16 WR 36(Cr).

77 Venkappa Kannappa Chowdhari v State of Karnataka (1996) Cr LJ 15 (Kant)(DB).

78 Prem Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh 2007 Cr LJ (NOC) 245 (Utr) .

79 Samman Singh v Emperor (1941) ILR Lah 454 ; R v Bheleka Aham 29 ILR Cal 493 ; R v Sakharam 14 ILR Bom 564, p 570, 1 Hale PC 32-33; Director of Public Prosecutions v Beard (1920) AC 479, 500(HL), per Lord Birkenhead IC; R v Davis (1881) 14 Cox CC 563 ; Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, 57 Cr LJ 919 (2), [1956] SCR 363.

80 Mavari Surya Satyanarayan v State of Andhra Pradesh (1995) Cr LJ 689 (AP) .

81 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 86 cited with approval in Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, 57 Cr LJ 919(2).

82 R v Bheleka Aham 29 ILR Cal 493 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 86.

Offence requiring a particular intent or knowledge committed by one who is intoxicated.--

In cases where an act done is not an offence unless done with a particular knowledge or intent, a person who does the act in a state of518 intoxication shall be liable to be dealt with as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated, unless the thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge or against his will.

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

The IPC does not require any particular knowledge or intent to be shown in connection with some acts in order to constitute them offences, but in the majority of offences, it requires that the act in order to constitute an offence must have been done with some specified knowledge or intent, which may be taken to be synonymous with 'specified' knowledge or intent in order to constitute it an offence.[83]Although neither voluntary nor involuntary drunkenness, which does not involve one or the other of the three states of mind mentioned in s 85, is an excuse for a crime committed under its influence, the fact of drunkenness may alter the nature of the legal offence committed, though it is no excuse for the act. The reason for it is that in many crimes some particular knowledge or intention is necessary, in order to render, the accompanying act the crime in question; in such cases it is for the court to take into account the fact of drunkenness in order to determine whether the accused had that particular and essential knowledge or intention.[84]

This section deals with such cases. The opening words of the section 'in cases where an act done is not an offence unless done with a particular knowledge or intent' govern the whole section. On first thought, they may appear to limit the application of the section to a small number of cases, for usually most acts charged as offences speak for themselves, and the idea of there not being an offence at all unless done with a particular knowledge or intent scarcely strikes the mind. The main part of the section lays down that in such cases a person who does the act in a state of intoxication shall be liable to be dealt with as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated.

2. Intoxication is Essential Ingredient of Section

If on perusal of the medical report of the appellant, who was examined on the same day at 4.45 pm, i.e., within two hours of the crime, does not show or record any signs of drunkenness or alcohol having been consumed, the benefit of s 86 is not available to the appellant.[85]519

Section Applies only to Voluntary Intoxication

The last part of the section shows that what is said in the main part of the section does not apply to a case of involuntary drunkenness. It applies only to a case of voluntary drunkenness. Voluntary intoxication is not a plea which is recognised in law, as an exception to criminal liability.[86]A person claiming benefit under s 86 has to prove that thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge or against his will.[87] The accused appellant, had himself taken liquor and under influence of liquor beat his wife, threw burning lamp on her causing death. It was not the case of the accused appellant that somebody administered or forced him to consume the liquor. Held, he was not entitled to protection of s 86, IPC .[88]If a man has voluntarily drunk, then, even if he, by reason of intoxication, is, in fact, incapable of knowing the nature of his act, or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law, he is liable to be dealt with as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated. His incapacity, which arose by his own act, will not excuse him.[89]If there is evidence on record to show that the liquor was administered to the accused without his knowledge or against his will, the Court must attribute, to the accused, the same knowledge of the consequences of his act as if he were quite sober.[90] If the thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge or against his will, he need not be dealt with as if he were sober, and his drunkenness, may be taken into consideration in determining whether he had the knowledge and intent necessary to constitute the offence.[91]

3. 'State of Intoxication'

There may be varying degrees of intoxication, but the section does not refer to any particular degree as s 85, IPC does. The man who has by his own act made himself so drunk as to be incapable of knowing what he is doing or whether what he is doing is wrong or contrary to law, is left in the same position as the man who has made himself only slightly intoxicated. That position is that he is liable to be dealt with as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated. If he is a voluntary drunkard, then though by reason of his intoxication he is as a fact incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that it is wrong or contrary to law, such incapacity so arising will not excuse him.[92] A contrary view has been taken by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Macherla Balaswamy,[93] and by Chandra Reddy J, of the same court in a Division Bench case of Re Rurtlayan,[94] where it was held that the words 'state of intoxication' in this section can only mean intoxication, which renders a person incapable of knowing the nature520 of the act in question or that he is doing something which is either wrong or contrary to law, when he commits it. In the latter case, Chandra Reddy J, observed:

> In order to get the benefit of this section, the intoxication should not have been incurred voluntarily. Another essential requisite of the section is that the drunkenness must be such that the offender was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law. I do not think that the state of intoxication envisaged in section 86 is in any way different from that contemplated in the preceding section. In my opinion, the absence of qualifying words in section 86 cannot lead to the inference that even if the insobriety is not such as to impair the reason of the offender the requisite intent cannot be presumed. It is an ordinary rule that every man is presumed to intend the consequences of his acts but this presumption can be rebutted by showing that the person concerned could not have formed the intent by reason of his drunkenness. To be a sufficient answer to a charge of a crime case involving a specific intent, it should be established not merely that the offender had consumed liquor but as a result of it, his mind at the time in question was so obscure that he was incapable of forming the requisite intention. It is not unusual for people committing grave crimes of violence to prime themselves with liquor.

It is submitted, however, with respect, that the test applicable to a case under this section is the capacity to have the requisite knowledge and form the requisite intent, and not the capacity to know the nature of the act, or to know what is being done is wrong or contrary to law. It is wrong to apply the test applicable to cases falling under s 85, IPC to a case falling under s 86, IPC .

4. Defence of Drunkenness

It is only in cases where it is proved that the accused was in such a condition of drunkenness that his reason was 'dethroned' and was incapable of forming any intention that the defence of drunkenness would be available.[1]

In R v Beard ,[2] the jury were directed that if the accused had satisfied them by evidence that he was so absolutely drunk at the time that he did not know what he was doing or did not know that he was doing wrong, then the defence of drunkenness succeeds to the extent, that it reduces the crime from murder to manslaughter'. On a further appeal to the House of Lords,[3] it was held that the direction of the judge at the trial was unsatisfactory in that it wrongly applied the test applicable to cases of insanity to a case of drunkenness which did not amount to insanity, and that the relevant considerations in defence of insanity and drunkenness were not the same.[4]

5. 'Shall be Liable to be Dealt With'

In Offences Requiring Specified Intention Drunkenness is an Excuse

With regard to the 'particular knowledge or intent', s 86, IPC lays down in effect, that the drunken offender, not exempted under the conditions, laid down in s 85, 'is liable to be dealt with as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had, had he not been intoxicated'. The section does not say 'shall be dealt with', but imposes a521 liability only. Knowledge, on the part of the drunkard, is not to be presumed. He is only to be dealt with in the same way as if he had that knowledge. But from actual knowledge it is possible to presume intent; from a knowledge that had by law to be presumed, it might have been argued that intention must also be presumed in law. The legislature was, therefore, careful not to say that a voluntary drunkard should be presumed to have the same knowledge as he would have had, had he been sober, but stated that he should be dealt with as if he had that knowledge which ex hypothesi he did not have; and lastly as it intended that drunkenness should be an excuse for certain offences, it used an indeterminate term 'shall be liable to be dealt with'. In cases, therefore, when a specified intention is an essential ingredient of the offence, as for example in all cases of theft, robbery, dacoity and wherever an act in order to be an offence must be done dishonestly as defined in the IPC, drunkenness is an excuse, provided the drunkard proves that he had not, as a fact, the knowledge which would enable the requisite intention to be inferred.[5]

> IllustrationA knows that he has a counterfeit rupee in his pocket along with other genuine rupees. A gets drunk and passes the bad rupee. His intoxication will not prevent an assumption of his knowledge of what he was doing, but evidence of his intoxication will be admissible for the purpose of showing that A in consequences thereof did not know that he was offering the bad coin.[6]

6. Presumption Regarding Intention

The mere fact of intoxication of the accused does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his act.[7]Under this section, the court has to gather, from the attending general circumstances of the case, the intention paying due regard to the degree of intoxication. If the man was beside his mind altogether for the time being, it would not be possible to fix him with the requisite intention. But if he had not gone so deep in drinking and, from the facts, it can be found that he knew what he was about to do, the rule, that a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act or acts, will apply.[8] Simply because the mind of the accused was so affected by drink that he more readily gave way to some violent passion would not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his act.[9]Ordinarily, drunkenness makes no difference to the knowledge, with which a man is credited, and if an accused knows what the natural consequences of his acts were, he must be presumed to have intended to cause them. Intention, in many cases, is an inference from knowledge, but there may be cases in which a person, by reason of intoxication, may, under certain circumstances, be incapable of knowing the nature of a particular act, which he commits, or that it is either wrong or contrary to522 law although his state of intoxication may not be such as to render him incapable of knowing the nature of his acts. In such cases, in determining the quality of the offence, evidence may be necessary of a specific state of mind which must be found as a fact, and not assumed.[10]

7. Reason for Omitting Intention

The wording of the section is not perhaps as clear as it might have been. The first part of the section refers to offences involving a particular 'knowledge or intent' as an ingredient while the latter part refers only to knowledge. The omission of an express provision in the section regarding the intention to be attributed to a drunk man doing an act which is an offence when done with a particular knowledge or intent raises a doubt as to the interpretation of the section. If in voluntary drunkenness knowledge is to be presumed can intent be placed on the same footing and, if so, why has the section omitted intent in the latter part of it. The question has been discussed at length in many decisions in India.[11] In Basdev v State of Pepsu ,[12] their Lordships of the Supreme Court summarised the result of the decisions as follows:

> So far as knowledge is concerned, we must attribute to the intoxicated man the same knowledge as if he was quite sober. But so far as intent or intention is concerned, we must gather it from the attending general circumstances of the case paying due regard to the degree of intoxication. Was the man beside his mind altogether for the time being?

If so, it would not be possible to fix him with the requisite intention. But if he had not gone so deep in drinking, and from the facts it could be found that he knew what he was about, we can apply the rule that a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act or acts.

Even in some English decisions, motive, intention and knowledge are sometimes used interchangeably and this has led to a certain amount of confusion. Their Lordships, therefore, further pointed out:

> We have to distinguish between motive, intention and knowledge. Motive is something which prompts a man to form an intention and knowledge is an awareness of the consequences of the act. In many cases intention and knowledge merge into each other and mean the same thing more or less, and intention can be presumed from knowledge. The demarcating line between knowledge and intention is no doubt thin, but it is not difficult to perceive that they connote different things.

8. Drunkenness Causing Insanity and Falling Short of Incapacity

Russell[13] has stated:

> There is a distinction, however, between the defence of insanity in the true sense caused by excessive drunkenness and the defence of drunkenness which produces a condition such that the drunken man's mind becomes incapable of forming a specific intention. If523 actual insanity in fact supervenes as the result of alcoholic excess, it furnishes as complete an answer to a criminal charge as insanity induced by any other cause. But in cases falling short of insanity evidence of drunkenness which renders the accused incapable of forming the specific intent essential to constitute the crime should be taken into consideration with the other facts proved in order to determine whether or not he had this intent, but evidence of drunkenness which falls short of proving such incapacity and merely establishes that the mind of the accused was so affected by drink that he more readily gave way to some violent passion does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his act.

The law is the same in India.[14]

9. Illustrative Cases

(i) The accused shot and killed another and it was found that at the time of the killing, the accused was in state of voluntary drunkenness, but was not so much under the influence of the drink as to be incapable of forming the intention necessary for an offence under s 302, IPC . It was held that he must be presumed to have intended the natural consequences of his act and that the offence was not reduced from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder under the second part of s 304 .[15]

(ii) A is indicted for inflicting on B a dangerous injury with intent to murder. The fact that A was drunk at the time is no excuse for the infliction of the dangerous injury, but it must be taken into account, in determining whether he intended to murder B.[16]

(iii) A, being so drunk as not know what she is doing, attempts to drown herself. A has not attempted to commit suicide.[17]

(iv) A, in a state of intoxication, is provoked by a blow he received from B, A kills B with a weapon he happens to have in his hand. A's drunkenness must be considered on the question whether he acted in passion or from malice, i.e., the intention necessary to make the killing murder.[18]

(v) A, when drunk, passes a forged bank note, or passes off a counterfeit rupee. The criminal intent must be proved from the surrounding circumstances, of which his state of intoxication is an important one.[19]

(vi) A, a volunteer having his rifle with him (for the purpose of joining in the firing of a salute on New Year's day) got very intoxicated on the previous evening and on his way home at about 2.00 am broke into various small shops, and obtained by means of exhibiting his gun various small sums of money from different persons therein. Prima facieA committed robbery by extortion (ss 383 and 390). But since the delivery of property in extortion must be 'dishonestly' induced, i.e., with an intention to cause a wrongful-gain or loss of property (s 24) it was held that A was not guilty, there being no evidence of such intention, he having 'acted under the unreflecting524 influence of intoxication'. But it was held that A was guilty of house-breaking by night with intent to commit the offence of criminal intimidation (ss 457 and 506).[20]

10. Knowledge and Intent in Case of Involuntary Drunkenness

Section 85, IPC protects an accused who can substantiate that, when he committed the act charged against him, he was in such a state of intoxication, in consequence of something administered to him without his knowledge or against his will, that he was incapable of knowing the nature of his act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law. Further, if an accused can show that he was intoxicated at the time he committed the act and that the thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge or against his will, he is not liable under s 86, IPC to be dealt with as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated. The case of the man-made drunk by another or others without his knowledge or against his will is not free from difficulty, but such a case rarely occurs.[21] It would appear that the state of his intoxication has to be considered along with other evidence without any presumption or assumption in determining whether he had the knowledge and intention necessary to constitute the offence.

11. Burden of Proof

The 'state of intoxication', as envisaged in this section, must be such as would render the accused incapable of forming the specific intent essential to constitute the crime. The mere proof of drinking some liquor would not be proof of intoxication because each man has his own level of intoxication. To substantiate the plea based on s 86, IPC, the onus is squarely on the shoulder of the accused. The normal presumption is that a man intends the natural consequences of his act. It is, therefore, for the accused to lead evidence of his drunkenness and prove the degree of intoxication to show that his mind was so affected by drink that he was not in a position to form any intent essential to constitute the crime in question.[22] This he can do either by leading independent evidence or by bringing out, in cross-examination, from prosecution evidence.[23]

83 Nga Tun Baw v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 864, p 866 (FB) .

84 R v Gamlen 1 F and F 90; Nga Tun Baw v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 864 (FB) .

85 Sheikh Falsar v State (2006) Cr LJ 1105 (Delhi) (DB) .

86 Chetram v State (1971) Cr LJ 1246, p 1250, (1971) Sim LJ 153 ; Re *Balaswamy*AIR 1953 Mad 827, p 823, (1953) Cr LJ 1587 (DB) ; Re *Rurtlayan*AIR 1954 Mad 523, p 526, (1954) Cr LJ 672 (DB) .

87 Gautam Bhila Ahire v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 4073 (Bom) (DB), 2010 (2) Bom Cr (Cri) 741 .

88 Gautam Bhila Ahire v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ 4073 (Bom) (DB), 2010 (2) Bom Cr (Cri) 741 .

89 Naga Tun Ban v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 864, p 866-73 (Rang) (FB) ; Sarthi v State of Madhya Pradesh (1976) Jab LJ 66, (1975) MPLJ 847 ; State of Orissa v Buda Muduli (1978) 45 Cut LT 576, (1978) Cr LJ (NOC) 239 ; Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, (1956) Cr LJ 919 ; Prabhunath v State AIR 1957 All 667, p 670, (1957) Cr LJ 1056 ; Ajmer Singh v State AIR 1955 Punj 13, (1955) Cr LJ 305 ; Sadhu Kumbhar v King AIR 1951 Ori 354, 52 Cr LJ 1136 .

90 Sarthi v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) MPLJ 847, (1976) Jab LJ 66 .

91 Ibid; Nga Tun Baw v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 864, p 866 (Rang)(FB).

92 Nga Tun Baw v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 864, p 866, 873 (FB) .

93 *Macherla Balaswamy,*AIR 1953 Mad 827, p 828, (1953) Cr LJ 1587, p 1589 .

94 Re Rurtlayan, AIR 1954 Mad 523, p 526, (1954) Cr LJ 672 (DB) .

1 Re *Suruttayyam*AIR 1954 Mad 523, p 526, (1954) Cr LJ 672 (DB) ; Sheru v Emperor AIR 1926 Lah 232, 27 Cr LJ 630 ; Waryam Singh v Emperor AIR 1926 Lah 428, 27 Cr LJ 764 ; Nga Sein Gale v Emperor AIR 1934 Rang 361 ; Re *Balaswamy*AIR 1953 Mad 827, (1953) Cr LJ 1587 (DB) ; Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, (1956) Cr LJ 919 ; Russel on Crime, twelfth edn, 1964, pp 83-84.

2 R v Beard (1919) 14 Cr App R 110 .

3 [1920] AC 479.

4 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 89.

5 Nga Tun Baw v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 864, p 874 (FB), per Young J; Krushna Singh v State of Orissa (1971) Cr LJ 1497, 37 Cut LT 321 .

6 Bishop, 499, No 3.

7 Harihar Dehury v State (1984) 1 Crimes 955, (1984) 57 Cut LT 533 (Ori) .

8 Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, p 490, (1956) Cr LJ 919 ; State of Orissa v Mutuka Barik (1978) Cut LT 604, p 608 (DB) ; Balkari v State of Rajasthan (1975) WLN 812, p 820, (1975) Raj LW 435 (DB) ; Enrique F Rio v State (1975) Cr LJ 1337, p 1338-39(Goa) ; Narayanan v State of Kerala (1959) Ker LJ 623, p 625, (1959) KLT 634 ; Prabhunath v State AIR 1957 All 667, (1957) Cr LJ 1056 ; Sarthi v State of Madhya Pradesh (1975) MPLJ 847, (1976) Jab LJ 66 ; Ajmer Singh v State AIR 1955 Punj 13, (1955) Cr LJ 305 ; Sadhu Kumubhar v King AIR 1951 Ori 354, 52 Cr LJ 1136 ; Samman Singh v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 454, 43 Cr LJ 332 .

9 Balkari v State of Rajasthan 1975 WLN 812, p 820, (1975) Raj LW 435 (DB) .

10 State of Orissa v Mutuka Balkavi (1978) 45 Cut LT 604, p 608 (DB) .

11 JM v Emperor 11 Cr LJ 659 ; Nga Tun Baw v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 864 (FB) ; Re *Mandru Gadala*AIR 1916 Mad 489 ; Public Prosecutor v Budipiti Devasikamani AIR 1928 Mad 196 ; Bishen Singh v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 637 ; Samman Singh v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 454 ; Nga Sein Gale v Emperor AIR 1934 Rang 361 ; Sadhu Kumbhar v King AIR 1951 Ori 354 ; Basdev v State AIR 1955 Pepsu 165 ; Nga Hpeik v King AIR 1938 Rang 219 ; Oil Mahommad v Emperor AIR 1941 Pat 420 .

12 Basdev v State of Pepsu, AIR 1956 SC 488, p 490 on appeal from AIR 1955 Pepsu 165 .

13 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, pp 86-87.

14 Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488 ; Prabhunath v State AIR 1957 All 667 .

15 Ibid; Ajmer Singh v State AIR 1955 Punj 13, (1955) Cr LJ 305 ; Suddu Kumbhar v King AIR 1951 Ori 354 ; Samman Singh v Emperor AIR 1941 Lah 454 .

16 R v Cruse 8 C&P 546 ; R v Zulfukar Khan 8 BLR AC 21 ; R v Ramasahoy Bhur (1864) WR (Cr) 24 ; R v Meakin 7 C&P 297 .

17 R v Moore 3 C&K 319 .

18 R v Thomas 7 C&P 817 .

19 Bishop, p 499, No 3.

20 FM v R 11 Cr LJ 659, 1 UBR 17 .

21 Nga Tun Baw v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 864, p 866 (FB) .

22 Basdev v State of Pepsu AIR 1956 SC 488, (1956) Cr LJ 919 ; Dasa Kandha v State (1976) 42 Cut LT 499, (1976) Cut LR 41 (Cr), (1976) Cr LJ 2010, p 2013-14 (DB) ; State of Orissa v Mutuka Barik (1978) 45 Cut LT 604, p 609 (DB) ; Manmath Singh v State of Orissa (1989) 1 Crimes 17 (Ori) .

23 Dasa Kandha v State (1976) 42 Cut LT 499 (DB) ; State of Orissa v Mutuka Barik (1978) 45 Cut LT 604, p 609 (DB) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 87.

Act not intended and not known to be likely to cause death or grievous hurt, done by consent.--

Nothing which is not intended to cause death, or grievous hurt, and which is not known by the doer to be likely to cause death or grievous hurt, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause, to any person, above eighteen years of age, who has given consent, whether express or implied, to suffer that harm; or by reason of any harm which it may be known by the doer to be likely to cause to any such person who has consented to take the risk of that harm.525

Illustration

A and Z agrees to fence with each other for amusement. This agreement implies the consent of each to suffer any harm which, in the course of such fencing, may be caused without foul play; and if A, while playing fairly, hurts Z, A commits no offence.

Comments

1. Scope

This section proceeds upon the maxim volenti non fit injuria(he, who consents, suffers no injury). This maxim is founded upon two very simple propositions: (a) every person is the best judge of his own interest; and (b) no man will consent to what he thinks hurtful to himself. The mere consent of a person above 18 years of age will justify, under this section, any harm, resulting from an act which is not intended by the doer to cause and which is not known to the doer to be likely to cause death or grievous hurt. The protection, under the section, thus, extends even to injuries which actually cause death or grievous hurt, provided it was not intended, for instance, if an eye is put out in fencing, or one is killed by a cricket ball. It is essential, however, that the act consented to, though not intended to cause death or grievous hurt, should be one which, from its nature, is not likely to have such result.[24] Ordinarily, games, such as fencing single sticks, boxing, football and the like, are protected by this section.

As a general rule, if consent is freely given by a rational and sober person, knowing the nature of the act, it is an answer to an indictment for assault unless the consent is to do bodily injury amounting to mayhem or to acts likely or intended to do bodily harm or to an injury constituting a breach of the public peace.[25] With respect to this section, the authors of the IPC said:

> We conceive the general rule to be that nothing ought to be an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause to a person of ripe age who, undeceived, has given a free and intelligent consent to suffer that harm or to take the risk of that harm. The restrictions by which the rule is limited affect only cases where human life is concerned.[26]

The object of this section is the protection from liability of persons who cause harm to one another in the course of innocent sports or games in which both are taking part.

2. Sections 87 - 93 refer only to Personal Injuries

Consent plays a very important part not only in offences relating to injury to the person but also in offences relating to property, such as theft and sexual relations,526 such as rape. But the general exceptions in these sections refer only to the operation of consent on physical injuries.[27]

3. Legal Nature of Injuries

Sections 87 - 93 of the IPC refer to four kinds of injuries:

(i) Death-- ss 87 - 89, 92-93 (Illustration), i.e., death of human being (s 46).
(ii) Grievous hurt-- ss 87, 89(3), 92(2) and 93 . As to what constitutes grievous hurt, see s 320 .
(iii) Hurt-- ss 92(3) and 93, i.e., 'bodily pain, disease or infirmity' (s 319).
(iv) Harm-- ss 87 - 89, 92-93. Harm may be caused to a person in respect to his body, mind, reputation or property (s 44). But harm to the body if it amounts to death, grievous hurt or hurt, is so designated; consequently, harm denotes injury to the person other than the kinds mentioned above, e.g., cutting or disfigurement of the hair, or injury to the mind, reputation or property.

4. Consent as a Defence

Under the civil law no suit can be brought in consequence of anything done, or arising of what is done, with the consent of the person complaining of it--volenti non fit injuria.[28] Consent is a complete answer in such suits, because the court is only concerned with the wrong asserted to have been done to the complainant. In criminal law it is different. Acts are punished as crimes, because it is for the interest of society that they should be prevented. The consent of the immediate sufferer is immaterial if the injury to society remains.[29]

Prima facie, the person who causes injury to another is liable therefor. Sections 87 - 93 lay down the rules for determining when the claims of society are satisfied by the consent of the individual. They deal with the special circumstances under which: (a) consent, express or implied, to incur or run the risk of injury, may be given (ss 87 - 91); and (b) where, owing to certain urgent reasons, consent in fact is altogether dispensed with, but is given by construction of law; the result in either case being that the person causing the injury is exempted from all liability (ss 92 and 93).

Sections 87 - 91 deal with express or implied consent, and ss 92 and 93 with constructive consent. Sections 88, 89 and 92 cover all cases of surgical operation.

5. Consenting Party must be above 18 Years of Age

Anyone may inflict the harm on anybody above 18 years of age, who has consented. Thus, in an Allahabad case, the complainant having molested a chamar girl, about 200 chamars, who were enraged and armed with lathis, collected together determined to punish the complainant, and caught hold of him. The accused intervened and tried to bring about a settlement. They constituted a panchayat, and with a view to avoid other harm to the complainant and with his consent, the panchayat decided in the interest and for the benefit of the complainant, to blacken his face and beat him with shoes. The decision having been carried out, the members527 of panchayat were prosecuted for offences under ss 323 and 506 read with s 114, IPC . It was held that the accused were entitled to the benefit of this section and it was further observed:

> It is true that if an act is unlawful in the sense of being in itself a criminal act, it cannot be rendered lawful because the person to whose detriment it is done consents to it; but there are many acts, the commission of which in the circumstances mentioned in the section, may not amount to an offence.[30]

6. Consent

Consent contemplated in this section and ss 88 - 91 of the IPC, may be express or implied.[31]

7. Death or Grievous Hurt Cannot be Consented to

The mere consent of a person above 18 years of age will justify under this section any harm resulting from an act which is not intended to cause, and which is not known by the doer to be likely to cause death or grievous hurt. The protection thus extends even to injuries which actually cause death or grievous hurt, provided it was not intended, for instance, if an eye is put out in fencing, or one is killed by a cricket ball. It is essential, however, that the act consented to though not intended to cause death or grievous hurt, should be one which from its nature is not likely to have such a result.[32] But no consent will authorise any act which is intended to cause death or grievous hurt. No amount of consent would protect a person who entered into a fencing match, however friendly, which was conducted with naked swords.[33]

A person cannot consent to suffer death, or to run the risk of death, under this section; but to cause death with such a consent, though an offence, will not amount to murder, but only to culpable homicide.[34] The section does not permit a man to give his consent to anything intended or known to be likely to cause his own death or grievous hurt. It only justifies any harm short of grievous hurt. The question of benefit to the person harmed is immaterial under this section.

The person, causing harm, other than death or grievous hurt, with consent, may either intend to cause it or know that he is likely to cause it. The person, consenting, agrees to suffer the harm in the former case; in the latter case, he agrees to run the risk.

Illustrations

(i) A and B agree to fight a duel together with swords, if either is killed or wounded his consent is immaterial.[35]

(ii) A gets B to shoot off his thumb, in order that he may be discharged from the army. A and B are guilty of causing grievous hurt.[36]528

(iii) A and B engage in a prize fight. A breaks B's nose, or knocks out a tooth. A is guilty of causing grievous hurt.[37]

(iv) During a game of football, A losing his temper deliberately causes an injury to B, from the effect of which B dies. A is guilty of culpable homicide.[38]

(v) The deceased, a middle-aged man, believed to have rendered himself da-proof by charms, asked the accused to try a da on his right arm. The accused believed in the pretence of the deceased and inflicted a blow with a da with moderate force, with the result that the arteries were cut and the deceased bled to death. It was held that the case was governed by this section as the accused had no intention of causing death or grievous hurt and he might not even have known that his act was likely to have any such result.[39]

8. Duelling

By the law of England, duelling, i.e., fighting with deadly weapons by common consent, has always been held illegal, and 'no consent can make so dangerous a diversion as fighting with naked swords lawful'.[40]

9. Prize Fight

The law seems equally clear now on the subject of prize fights. 'The fists of trained pugilists are dangerous weapons of this kind which they are not at liberty to use against each other'.[41] 'Every fight in which the object and intent of the combatants is to subdue the other by violent blows is, or has, a direct tendency to a breach of the peace'.[42] Wherever two persons go out to strike each other, and do so, each is guilty of an assault,[43] and, therefore, no agreement to fight can render the contest lawful.[44] Under English law then, prize fights are illegal on the grounds that they are breaches of the peace and assaults.

Under the terms of this section it seems clear that such contests are not protected, for each of the combatants must know that it is likely at least that he will break his opponent's nose, knock one or more of his teeth down his throat, or cause him by reason of his injuries to be unable to follow his ordinary pursuits for a space of 20 days. Such injuries as these, constitute 'grievous hurt' (s 320, IPC), which cannot be consented to under s 87, IPC .

10. Athletic Games

The sort of contests which are protected by s 87, IPC are those 'where life and limb are exposed to no serious danger in the common course of things...as in wrestling, single stick, sparring with gloves, football and the like.[45] It must be remembered that by the terms of s 87, which exclude 'death' or 'grievous hurt', the only harm that can be consented to is simple 'hurt' (refer to s 319), i.e., bodily pain. Thus, in the case of a boxing match with gloves, if the gloves are merely a sham, and the contest is in529 consequence really a fight, and not a friendly sparring match, then the combatants are not protected from liability. The distinction between a friendly match and a prize fight fought with or without gloves is well recognised by law.[46]

A person cannot consent to suffer death, or to run the risk of death, under the provisions of this section; but to cause death with such a consent though an offence, will not amount to murder, but only to culpable homicide.[47]

11. The Word 'Harm' and its Meaning

The expression 'harm' connotes hurt, injury, damage, impairment, moral wrong or evil. In ss 81, 87 - 89, 91-92, 100, 104 and 106 of the IPC, it means physical injury; in s 93, an injurious mental reaction; in s 415, injury to a person in body, mind, reputation or property; in ss 469 and 499, harm to reputation of the aggrieved party. In s 95, the expression has a wide connotation and includes physical injury.[48]

12. Hurt or Harm other than Death, or Grievous Hurt, may be Intended or Known to be Likely

The person causing harm other than death or grievous hurt with consent may either intend to cause it, or known that he is likely to cause it. The person consenting agrees to suffer the harm in the former case, and in the latter he agrees to run the risk.

24 Mayne's Criminal Law of India, fourth edn, para 203.

25 R v Donovan (1934) 2 KB 498, where the law is reviewed.

26 Note B, p 106.

27 Durga Charan v State of Orissa AIR 1966 SC 1775, (1966) Cr LJ 1489 .

28 Thomas v Quartermine 18 QBD 685 ; Membery v Great Western Rly 14 AC 179 .

29 Maynes' Criminal Law of India, fourth edn, para 202.

30 Bishambher v Roomal AIR 1951 All 500, 52 Cr LJ 179 ; Nagwa Shwe Kin v Emperor (1915) LB 101, 16 Cr LJ 581 .

31 Ibid; s 90 and the commentary thereunder.

32 Maynes' Criminal Law of India, fourth edn, para 203.

33 Hale PC 473, 1 Hawk PC 86; R v Denoven (1934) 2 KB 498 .

34 Indian Penal Code, s 300, explanation 5.

35 R v Barronet Dear 51.

36 SD art 28 .

37 YLR 8 QBD 549; R v Billingham 2 C&P 234 .

38 R v Moore 14 LTR 229 .

39 Nagwa Shawe Kin v Emperor AIR 1915 LB 101 .

40 Hawk, PCL 484.

41 R v Coney LR 8 QBD 534, p 547, per Mathew J.

42 Ibid.

43 R v Lewis IC&K 419, per Coleridge J; R v Coney LR 8 QBD, 534, p 539, Cave J.

44 Boulter v Clark Bulter NP 16, per Parker CB.

45 R v Coney 8 QBD 534, p 539, per Stephen J .

46 R v Orton 39 LTR 293 ; Foster, Crown Law, p 219.

47 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 300, exception 5.

48 Veeda Menezes v Yusuf Khan & Anr AIR 1966 SC 1773 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 88 . Act not intended to cause death, done by consent in good faith for person's benefit.--

Nothing which is not intended to cause death, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause, or be known by the doer to be likely to cause, to any person for whose benefit it is done in good faith, and who has given a consent, whether express or implied, to suffer that harm, or to take the risk of that harm.

Illustration

A, a surgeon, knowing that a particular operation is likely to cause the death of Z, who suffers under a painful complaint, but not intending to cause Z's death and intending in good faith, Z's benefit, performs that operation on Z, with Z's consent. A has committed no offence.

Comments

1. Scope

Under this section, any harm, except the intentional death, may be caused if the act (i.e., harm) is done, by the doer, in good faith and for the benefit of the consenting530 person who must, by virtue of the second clause of s 90, IPC, be, at least, of 12 years of age. The act, consented to, may be done either: (a) with a knowledge that death is likely (though death must not be intended); or (b) with intention to cause 'grievous hurt', or 'hurt' or other harm; or (c) with a knowledge that either of these three kinds of harm is likely. Where the accused, in good faith and for the benefit of his patient and in accordance with the recognised Indian method of treatment for cataract, operated upon her for cataract with the result that she lost the sight of her left eye, it was held that the act of the accused was not an offence under this Code.[49]

When a patient agrees to go for medical treatment or surgical operation, every careless act of the medical man cannot be termed as 'criminal'. It can be termed 'criminal' only when the medical man exhibits a gross lack of competence or inaction and wanton indifference to his patient's safety and which is found to have arisen from gross ignorance or gross negligence. Where a patient's death results merely from error of judgment or an accident, no criminal liability should be attached to it. Mere inadvertence or some degree of want of adequate care and caution might create civil liability but would not suffice to hold him criminally liable.[50]

But the section does not excuse dangerous operations performed by unqualified persons.[51]

2. Distinction between Sections 87 and 88

This section differs from s 87 of the IPC in the following ways:

(i) Any harm may be inflicted, except the intentional causing of death under this section, while besides death even grievous hurt cannot be consented to under s 87 .

(ii) There is no provision as to the age of the consenting person in this section; but s 90, cl (2) provides that the consent of a child under 12 years of age is not such a consent as is intended by the IPC . The effect of this is therefore that the consenting party under this section must be at least 12 years of age. The consenting party must be above 18 years of age under s 87 .

(iii) Under this section the act must be done for the benefit of the person consenting thereto. There is no such condition for the act done under s 87 .

(iv) It must be done in good faith to bring any act under this section. For seeking the benefit of s 87 it is not a pre-requisite.

3. Any Harm Except Intentional Causing of Death

The act consented to, may be done either: (i) with a knowledge that death is likely (though death must not be intended); or (ii) with intention to cause 'grievous hurt', 'hurt' or other harm, or; (iii) with a knowledge that either of these three kinds of harm is likely.

Illustration of (i)

Illustration to s 88, IPC may be referred to. In one other case the accused operated upon a patient for cataract with the result that the patient lost the sight of her left eye.531 The operation was performed with the consent of the patient, and in good faith and for her benefit, and in accordance with the recognised Indian method of treatment for cataract. It was held that the act of the accused was not an offence under the IPC .[52]

Illustration of (ii) and (iii)

(i) A pulls a diseased tooth out of B's jaw, with B's consent. A is not liable for causing 'grievous hurt' to B.
(ii) A vaccinates B with his consent. A is not liable for causing 'hurt' to B.
(iii) A in setting B's dislocated ankle has to cut off B's boot. A is not liable for the 'harm' done to the boot.

4. Right of Private Defence is Subject to Restrictions of this Section

The Supreme Court in a catena of cases has held that a right of private defence given by the IPC is essentially one of defence or self protection and not a right of reprisal or punishment. It is subject to the restrictions indicated in s 88 which are so important as the right itself.[53]

5. 'Consent'

Consent of children under 12 years, under this section, by virtue of the second clause of s 90, IPC is no true consent. Where A performs a surgical operation of a dangerous or painful nature on B with his consent, B being a child of 10 years of age, who is living with his parents, whose consent could have been obtained, A is liable for the consequences.

But where an operation of cataract was done by qualified doctor with the patient's (major) consent, operation resulted in loss of sight, the doctor was held not guilty under s 338 by reason of s 88 .[54] Where the allegations were that due to negligence of doctor, the right ovary of the patient was lost while performing surgery, surgery of ovary was done by gynecologist when it was diagnosed that the right ovary had been covered by a cystic mass, the fact that the consent of the complainant for such a surgery was duly obtained was suppressed in the complaint, reports of the medical college hospital show that removal of right ovary was necessary and done for, safety of patient, on these facts it was held that allegations against the doctor were baseless and the complaint was liable to be quashed.[55]

The consent may be express or implied.[56] Thus, when a child over 12 years of age goes to a school, it may be assumed that the child gives an implied consent to subject itself to the discipline and control of the school authorities and to receiving such reasonable and moderate corporal punishment as may be necessary for its correction or for maintaining school discipline. Under the IPC, a valid consent to suffer harm may be given by a person over 12 years of age. Hence A, a teacher administering corporal punishment to a pupil is not guilty of any offence under the Code.[57]532

But where a teacher exceeds the authority and inflicts such harm to the pupil as may be considered to be unreasonable and immoderate, he would lose the benefit of this section. Whether he is entitled to the benefit of this section or not, in a given case, will depend upon the particular nature, extent and severity of the punishment inflicted.[58]

6. Corporal Punishment to Child/Student by Teacher, Parents

When a child is sent to a *Madrassa*or a school, the parents of the said child give an implied authority to the master or the class teacher or headmaster/headmistress to enforce discipline and correct the students who commit errors in front of him or her or in the classes if a corporal punishment is given by any of them. In the process of maintaining such discipline, and also to make him/her adhere to the prescribed standards of the school, which are necessary for the upliftment and development of the child including the development of his character and conduct in and outside the school, so that he is trained to be aware of the good qualities of a citizen, it cannot be said to be an act intended to injure the student. In such a situation, if no intentional injury is caused, considering the age of the student, it cannot be said that the said school teacher has inflicted injury to harm him. But again, the act of the teacher on the student, in imposing corporal punishment, depends upon the circumstances of each case. If a teacher, out of fury and excitement, inflicts injuries which is harmful to the health of a tender aged student, it cannot be accepted as a right conferred on such a teacher to inflict such punishment, because of the express or implied authority granted by the parents of that student. Therefore, there cannot be any generalised pattern of principle in such situations. The acts of a teacher has to be appreciated and assessed depending upon the circumstances that are placed before the court, in each case. It is the duty of the teachers to have a restrained and controlled imposition of punishments on the pupils under their care and charge. Unwieldy, uncontrolled and emotional attacks or actions on their part cannot be accepted.[59]

Child has human rights. Now it is a recognized social principle that even parents of the child are made to understand the basic human rights of the child and instead of corporal punishment, correctional methods are recognized in law. It is universally felt that children can be corrected by correctional measures rather than physical punishment.[60]

Where the accused supervisor in a School had slapped the deceased student who was found sitting on the scooter of the accused, his conviction under s 323, IPC was held justified, and he was held not entitled to the protection of ss 88 and 89, IPC .[61]

7. Intended

Something is intentionally done, if it is done deliberately or purposely.[62]533

8. Harm

Synopsis notes under s 87 may be referred to.

9. 'Benefit'

Synopsis notes on this heading under s 92 may be referred to.

10. 'Good Faith'

Sections 52 and 92, and commentary thereunder, may be referred to.

11. Operation by Unqualified Doctors

This section will not excuse dangerous operations performed by unqualified persons.

The Law Commissioners observed in this connection:

> We apprehend that 'an unqualified and ignorant quack' could hardly be excused, for it is not to be conceived that such a one could obtain the free and intelligent consent of any person to his performing upon him an operation dangerous to life, but by misrepresentation; and such a one could hardly satisfy a court of justice that he had undertaken the operation in good faith under clause 72 (this section), for good faith must surely be construed here to mean a conscientious belief that he had skill to perform the operation and by it to benefit the party, while the supposition is that he was unskilled and ignorant.[63]

A kobiraj operated on a man for internal piles by cutting them out with an ordinary knife. The man died from haemorrhage. The kobiraj was charged under s 304A of the IPC, with causing death by doing a rash and negligent act. It was held that as the accused was admittedly uneducated in matters of surgery, and having regard to the meaning of 'good faith' as defined in s 52 of the IPC, he was not entitled to the benefit of s 88 . It was further held that s 88 did not apply to the case, as it was not shown by the accused, on whom the burden of proving that fact lay, that the deceased knew the risk he was running in consenting to the operation, and he could not, therefore, be said to have accepted the risk.[64]

49 Emperor v Surajbali 7 Cr LJ 306, 5 All LJ 155 .

50 Katcherla Venkata Sunil v Vanguri Seshumamba 2008 Cr LJ 853, p 857 (AP) .

51 Juggankhan Jamshankhan v State AIR 1963 MP 102, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 296 ; Sukaroo v Emperor 14 ILR Cal 566, p 568 .

52 Emperor v Surajbali 7 Cr LJ 306, 5 All LJ 155 .

53 Bathusingh v State of Madhya Pradesh (2004) Cr LJ 4850 (SC) .

54 RP Dhanda (Dr) v Bhurelal & Anr (1987) Cr LJ 1316 (MP) (Indore Bench).

55 Gopinatha Pillai TM (Dr) v State of Kerala & Anr (2000) Cr LJ 3682 (Ker) .

56 Bishamber v Roomal AIR 1951 All 500, 52 Cr LJ 179, s 90 and commentary thereunder.

57 GB Ghatge v Emperor AIR 1949 Bom 226, 50 Cr LJ 789 ; Natesan v State of Madras AIR 1962 Mad 216, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 727 ; Ganesh Chandra Saha v Jiw Raj Somani AIR 1965 Cal 32, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 24 ; Sankunni v Venkataramani AIR 1922 Mad 200, 42 Mad LJ 460 .

58 Natesan v State of Madras AIR 1962 Mad 216, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 727 .

59 KA Abdul Vahid v State of Kerala (2005) Cr LJ 2054 (Ker) (see commentary on s 89 post).

60 Hasmukhbhai Gokaldas Shah v State of Gujarat 2009 Cr LJ 2919 (2919) (Guj) (DB) (Case law referred).

61 Hasmukhbhai Gokaldas Shah v State of Gujarat 2009 Cr LJ 2919 (Guj) (DB) ; Ganesh Chandra Saha v Jiw Raj Somani 1965 (1) Cr LJ 24 (Cal), and M Natesan v State of Madras AIR 1962 Mad 216, dissented from.

62 SSKVK Kara v State AIR 1970 Ker 98, (1970) Cr LJ 688, p 693 .

63 First Report, s 123, p 221.

64 Sukaroo Kobiraj v Empress 14 ILR Cal 566, p 568 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 89.

Act done in good faith for benefit of child or insane person, by or by consent of guardian.--

Nothing which is done in good faith for the benefit of a person under twelve years of age, or of unsound mind, by or by consent, either express or implied, of the guardian or other person having lawful charge of that person, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause or be known by the doer to be likely to cause to that person:

Provisos.--Provided--

First.	--	That this exception shall not extend to the intentional causing of death, or to the attempting to cause death;
Secondly.	--	That this exception shall not extend to the doing of anything which the person doing it knows to be likely to cause death,534 for any purpose other than the preventing of death or grievous hurt, or the curing of any grievous disease or infirmity;
Thirdly.	--	That this exception shall not extend to the voluntary causing of grievous hurt, or to the attempting to cause grievous hurt, unless it be for the purpose of preventing death or grievous hurt, or the curing of any grievous disease or infirmity;
Fourthly.	--	That this exception shall not extend to the abetment of any offence, to the committing of which offence it would not extend.

Illustration

A, in good faith, for his child's benefit without his child's consent, has his child cut for the stone by a surgeon, knowing it to be likely that the operation will cause the child's death, but not intending to cause the child's death. A is within the exception in as much as his object was the cure of the child.

Comments

1. Scope

This section protects harm caused to a person below 12 years of age or of unsound mind by his guardian himself or by another with his consent in good faith for the benefit of the said child or the person of unsound mind. With regard to this section, which was cl 71, the authors of the IPC said:

> A lunatic may be in a state which makes it proper that he should be put into a strait waistcoat. A child may meet with an accident which may render the amputation of a limb necessary. But to put a strait waistcoat on a > man without his consent is, under our definition, to commit an assault. To amputate a limb is, by our definition, voluntarily to cause grievous hurt, and, as sharp instruments are used, is a very highly penal offence. We have, therefore, provided, by clause 71 (this section), that the consent of the guardian of a sufferer who is an infant or who is of unsound mind shall, to a great extent, have the effect which the consent of the sufferer himself would have, if the sufferer were of ripe age and sound mind.[65]

They appended the following illustrations to the clause:

(i) A, a parent, whips his child moderately, for the child's benefit. A has committed no offence.
(ii) A confines his child, for the child's benefit, A has committed no offence.535
(iii) A, in good faith, for his daughter's benefit intentionally kills her to prevent her from falling into the hands of pindarries. A is not within the exception.
(iv) A, in good faith, for his child's benefit without his child's consent, has his child cut for the stone by a surgeon, knowing it to be likely that the operation will cause the child's death, but not intending to cause the child's death. A has committed no offence, inasmuch as his object was the preventing of death or grievous hurt to the child.
(v) A, in good faith, for his child's pecuniary benefit, emasculates his child. Here, inasmuch as A has caused grievous hurt to the child for a purpose other than the preventing of death or grievous hurt to the child, A is not within the exception.
(vi) A, intending in good faith the pecuniary benefit of Z, his daughter, a child under 12 years of age, abets a rape committed by B on Z. Neither A nor B is within the exception.

Of these, illust (iv) has been enacted with slight modification as an illustration to this section. The rest have been omitted. But these are covered by the provisos to the section.

2. Provisions of the Section when can be Invoked

The consent may be express or implied. A person, above 12 years of age, is considered to be capable of giving his consent under s 88 of this IPC . Only the guardian, or the person having lawful charge of the person, upon whom the harm is to be inflicted, or the person, acting with the consent of either a guardian or person having charge, as the case may be, can inflict the harm. The person, upon whom the harm is to be inflicted, must be either a child under 12 years of age or a person of unsound mind because the consent of such a person is implied in that of his guardian.

To invoke the provisions of this section, it is necessary to show that the act done was for the benefit of the person under 12 years of age or of unsound mind.[66] But the principle, underlying this section, would be available even to a case of child above the age of 12 years.[67]

3. Difference between this Section and Sections 87 and 88

The section differs from both ss 87 and 88, IPC in that:

(i) The people who may inflict the harm are confined to one or other of three classes, viz, guardians, or persons having lawful charge of the person upon whom the harm is inflicted; or persons acting with the consent of either a guardian or person having charge, as the case may be.
(ii) The person so caused to suffer must be either (a) a child under 12 years of age, or (b) a person of unsound mind. Their consent is implied in that of their guardians.

4. Difference between Sections 88 and 89

Section 89 differs from s 88, IPC in that no act be done if the person doing it (one of the abovementioned classes) knows that it is likely to cause death, or intends536 thereby to cause grievous hurt or knows that such is likely, except for special reasons mentioned in s 89, in addition to his acting in good faith, etc., which provision is common to both sections.

5. Nature of Harm that may be Inflicted and Justifying Circumstances

Under s 89, the following kinds of harm may be inflicted on the child or lunatic:

Hurt or harm intentional or known to be likely, grievous hurt intentional or known to be likely.	To prevent death or grievous hurt. or To prevent death or grievous hurt or to cure grievous disease or infirmity.	If (1) inflicted in to be likely. 'good faith' and (2) for the benefit of the sufferer.

But the infliction of death must never be intended or attempted.

Illustrations

(i) A, a schoolmaster, by way of punishment, gives, B, a pupil under 12, four strokes on the hand with a cane, in a judicious manner. A has not committed 'hurt' nor is he guilty of an 'assault'.68

(ii) A, a surgeon, with the consent of B, C's guardian, performs a dangerous operation on C, who is suffering from cancer, C dies. A is not liable.

(iii) A, a child of two years of age, is suffering from a disease and is in awful pain, B, C and D, physicians, agree that death is inevitable. They administer several grains of acetate of morphia in order to cause a painless death, doing this with the consent of A's parents. A dies, B, C and D and A's parents are liable for A's death.[69]

6. Acts ' Per Se' Offences not Exempted

Sections 87, 88 and 89, IPC have no application to acts which are offences, i.e., punishable under the IPC, or under any special or local law (refer to ss 41 - 42) independently of any harm that they may cause. Each of these sections is by its terms limited to acts which are offences 'by reason of any harm' (refer to s 91).

7. Abetment of an Offence not Exempted

Under the last proviso to this section the exemption does not extend to the 'abetment' of any offence to the committing of which offence it would not extend. Thus:

A, a woman, believing herself to be with child, but not being with child, conspires with B and C to administer drugs to herself, in order to procure a miscarriage. A is liable for abetting the offence of criminal conspiracy.[70]

8. 'Benefit'

Mere pecuniary benefit is not a benefit within the meaning of this section and ss 88 and 92 .[71] Infliction of chastisement by way of parental discipline by parent or537 guardian, or moderate punishment, inflicted by a schoolmaster, for maintaining school discipline, would come within the ambit of this section.[72]

9. 'Harm'

Notes on this heading under s 87, ante, may be referred to.

10. Delegation of Parental Authority for Corporal Punishment by Schoolmaster and its Extent

The infliction of chastisement by way of parental discipline by the parent or guardian as stated above, would come within the scope of this section, provided it was inflicted in good faith for the benefit of the child. And, when a child is sent by its parent or guardian to a school, the parent or guardian must be held to have given an implied consent to the infliction of such reasonable punishment as may be necessary for the purposes of school discipline.[73] As regards the extent to which the right of the schoolmaster to punish his pupils, in Cleary v Booth ,[74] Collins J said:

> It is clear that the relation of master and pupil carries with it the right of reasonable corporal chastisement. As a matter of commonsense, how far is this power delegated by the parent to the schoolmaster? Is it limited to the time during which the boy is within the four walls of the school, or does it extend in any sense beyond that limit? In my opinion the purpose with which the parental authority is delegated to the schoolmaster, who is entrusted with the bringing up and discipline of the child, must to some extent include an authority over the child while he is outside the four walls.

Lawrence J, said:

> It is difficult to express in words the extent of the schoolmaster's authority in respect of the punishment of his pupils; but in my opinion the authority extends not only to acts done in school, but also to cases where a complaint of acts done out of school at any rate while going to and from school, is made to the schoolmaster.

(See also commentary in heading 'Corporal punishment to child/student by teacher, parents' in s 88, ante).

Where the accused supervisor in a school had slapped the deceased student who was found sitting on scooter of the accused, his conviction under s 323, IPC was held justified, and he was held not entitled to the protection of ss 88 and 89, IPC .[75]

Questions to be Considered in Punishment by School Master to Discipline Student

If the offence of which the boy had been found guilty had been committed in school, there would be no difficulty. Nor would there be any difficulty if it were committed538 whilst the boy was on the way to or from school. In other cases of acts committed out of school, the authority of the schoolmaster to inflict punishment would depend largely on the facts of each case. The questions for decision would be: 'In the circumstances of the case is it a reasonable inference that the boy was at the time the offence was committed under the authority of the schoolmaster and was the punishment bona fide, reasonably considered necessary for the purpose of school discipline?' If the school was closed for any length of time for a period of regular holidays, the boy would have to be held to have returned to the charge of his parents and the authority of the schoolmaster would cease. But if the school were closed only for two days and a boy of the school assaulted another boy of the school while he was on his way to visit his master, it would be a reasonable inference that the implied consent of the parents of the boy to his being under the discipline and control of the schoolmaster extended to the alleged offence for which the schoolmaster found it necessary to punish him, and that the boy must be held at the time to have been under the authority of the schoolmaster.[76]

65 Note B, p 109.

66 Nanku v Emperor AIR 1935 All 916, 37 Cr LJ 35 .

67 Natesan v State of Madras AIR 1962 Mad 216, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 727 .

68 Gardner v Bygrave (1889) 63 JP 743 .

69 For a discussion on such cases, see the New York Medico-Legal Society's Journal, December, 1888.

70 R v Whitchurch (1890) 24 QBD 420 .

71 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 92, expln.

72 Sankunni v Venkataramani AIR 1922 Mad 200, 42 Mad LJ 460 ; Emperor v Maunga Ba Thaung AIR 1926 Rang 107, p 108, 27 Cr LJ 636 ; GB Ghatge v Emperor AIR 1949 Bom 226, 50 Cr LJ 789 ; Natesan v State of Madras AIR 1962 Mad 216, p 218, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 727 ; Ganesh Chandra Saha v Jiw Raj Somani AIR 1965 Cal 32, (1965) 1 Cr LJ 24 .

73 Emperor v Manug Ba Thaung AIR 1926 Rang 107, 108 relying onR v Hopely* 2 F&F 202 ; Clearly v Booth (1893) 1 QB 465, 41 WR 391 ; Fitzgerald v Northcote (1865) 4 F&F 656 ; Mansell v Griffin (1908) 1 KB 160 .

74 Cleary v Booth (1893) 1 QB 465 .

75 Hasmukhbhai Gokaldas Shah v State of Gujarat 2009 Cr LJ 2919 (Guj) (DB) ; Ganesh Chandra Saha v Jiw Raj Somani 1965 (1) Cr LJ 24 (Cal), and M Natesan v State of Madras AIR 1962 Mad 216, dissented from.

76 Emperor v Maung Ba Thaung AIR 1926 Rang 107, p 108-09 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 90.

Consent known to be given under fear or misconception.--

A consent is not such a consent as is intended by any section of this Code, if the consent is given by a person under fear of injury, or under a misconception of fact, and if the person doing the act knows, or has reason to believe, that the consent was given in consequence of such fear or misconception; or Consent of insane person.--if the consent is given by a person who, from unsoundness of mind, or intoxication, is unable to understand the nature and consequence of that to which he gives his consent; or Consent of child.--unless the contrary appears from the context, if the consent is given by a person who is under twelve years of age.

Comments

1. Scope and Object

This section does not define 'consent' but describes the nature of 'consent' as the term is used in the IPC . 'Two or more persons are said to consent when they agree539 upon the same thing in the same sense'.[77] Sir James Stephen defined consent in criminal law to mean 'a consent freely given by a rational and sober person so situated as to be able to form a rational opinion upon the matter to which he consents'. And he goes on to add that 'consent is said to be given freely when it is not procured by force, fraud or threats of whatever nature'.[78] The object and effect of this section obviously is not to lay down that a child under 12 years of age is in fact incapable of expressing or withholding his or her consent to an act, but to provide that where the consent of a person may afford a defence to a criminal charge such consent must be a real consent, not vitiated by immaturity, fear or fraud. Further, in the IPC a distinction is drawn between an act which is done 'against the will' and an act done 'without the consent' of a person.[79] Every act done 'against the will' of a person, no doubt, is done 'without his consent', but an act done 'without the consent' of a person is not necessarily 'against his will', which expression, imports that the act is done in spite of the opposition of the person to the doing of it.[80] Where a husband being in sore distress, desired to commit suicide, his wife asked him to first kill her and then to kill himself. He accordingly killed her, but was caught before he killed himself, it was held that the consent of the wife was a consent within the meaning of exception 5 to s 300, IPC .[81] Though given under peculiar circumstances it did not fall under any of the exceptions provided by this section and is a valid consent under the section.

Scheme of s 90, IPC is couched in negative terminology. Consent is different from submission. Consent given under fear/coercion or misconception/mistake of fact is not consent at all.[82]

2. Factors in First and Second Part from Point of View of Victim and Accused Respectively

The factors, set out in the first part of s 90, IPC, namely, that the consent given by a person under fear of injury or under misconception of fact is not consent, are from the point of view of the victim; whereas the factors, set out in the second part of s 90, namely, that the person doing the act knows, or has reason to believe, that consent was given in consequence of such fear or misconception are corresponding provisions from the point of view of the accused.[83]

Two Conditions

Two conditions must be fulfilled for the application of s 90, IPC . First, it must be shown that the consent was given under a misconception of fact. Secondly, it must be proved that the person who obtained the consent knew, or had reason to believe that the consent was given in consequence of such misconception.[84]

3. Twin Requirement of Section should be Cumulatively Satisfied

The second part of s 90 lays emphasis on the knowledge or reasonable belief of the person, who obtains consent, that the consent given by the victim is in consequence540 of fear of injury or misconception of fact. What is, however, of paramount importance to note is that the existence of the twin requirements of s 90 must be cumulatively satisfied in order to enable a court to hold that no consent in law existed at the relevant time. In other words, when these two conditions precedent are co-existent in a case, it can be safely held that no consent, as envisaged under the IPC, existed. Such a finding can be reached by examining as to whether the person, giving consent had given the same under fear of injury or misconception of fact and, further, whether the offender knew, or had reason to believe, that but for fear or misconception of fact, 'consent' would not have been given.[1]

4. Consent

According Stroud's Judicial Dictionary,[2]'Consent is an act of reason, accompanied with deliberation, the mind weighing, as in a balance, the good and evil on each side'.[3] Consent always means free will or voluntary act.[4]

Consent and Submission

However subtle may be, there is, indeed, a firm and fine distinction between 'consent' and 'submission'. Every 'consent' involves 'submission', but 'submission' is not 'consent'.[5]Submission of her body under the influence of fear or terror is not consent. There is a difference between consent and submission. Every consent involves a submission but the converse does now follow and a mere act of submission does not involve consent.[6] Mere absence of dissent or submission would not amount to consent.[7]

'Harm'

The word 'harm' is not synonymous with the word injury as defined by s 44 of the IPC . 'Harm' in this section is confined to physical injury only.[8]

Circumstances which Render a Consent Invalid

A 'consent' given under either of the following circumstances is not a true or valid contract under this section:

1. Under fear of injury or Under a misconception of fact.	and the person doing the act knows and has reason to believe that the consent was given under such fear or misconception.
2. By a person of unsound mind or a drunken person.	if he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of that to which he 'consents'.541
3. By a person under 12 years of age unless the contrary appears from the content.

Fear of Injury

The word 'injury' denotes any harm whatever, illegally caused to any person in body, mind, reputation or property.[9] For the meaning of 'illegal' see s 43 of the IPC . 'Fear or injury' means fear of an injury other than that which, it is supposed, will be the result of the proposed course of action. A proposes to engage in a boxing match with B, B refused. A threatens to flog B with a stick, for being a coward, if he will not consent, B consents. In the course of the match A gives B a blow which causes him a 'black eye'. 'B's consent' not being a true one, A is not exempted from having caused B 'hurt'. The offence of rape may be committed, though the woman at last yielded to the violence, if her consent was forced by fear of death or by duress.[10] If non-resistance on the part of a prosecutrix proceeds merely from her being overpowered by actual force, or from her not being able, for want of strength, to resist any longer, or from the number of persons attacking her, she considered resistance dangerous and absolutely useless, the crime is complete.[11]

'Misconception of Fact'

Consent given under a misconception of fact is no consent.[12] In order to come within the meaning of misconception of fact, the fact must have an immediate relevance. If a girl allows a person to have sexual intercourse with her on his promise that he would marry her, and, subsequently, he fails to keep his promise, it cannot be said that she consented for sexual intercourse under a misconception of fact. The matter would have been different if her consent was obtained by creating a belief in her that they are already married. In such a case, the consent can be said to result from a misconception of fact.[13] Where consent to remove timber was given on the understanding that the timber to be removed is timber covered by a licence when in fact it was not covered by a licence at all, there is no consent as is meant by s 378, IPC, and the removal of the timber is theft.[14] Where the accused, a snake-charmer, persuaded the deceased to allow themselves to be bitten by a poisonous snake inducing them to believe that he had power to protect them from harm, the consent having been founded on a misconception of fact, and the accused knowing that the consent was given in consequence of such misconception, the accused was not protected by it.[15]Even if the consent was given under a misconception of fact, if the doer of the act did not know, or had a reason to believe, that the consent was given in consequence of the misconception, the consent would be valid and protect the doer of the act. When a full grown girl consented to sexual intercourse on a promise of542 marriage and continued to indulge in such act till pregnancy, it was held that consent on the part of the girl was not induced under misconception of fact.[16]

A promise to marry without anything more will not give rise to misconception of fact within the meaning of s 90 .[17]

In a Burma case, the deceased, a middle-aged man, believed himself to have been rendered da-proof by charms and asked the accused to try a da on his arm. The accused believed in the pretence of the deceased and inflicted a blow with a da with a moderate force with the result that the arteries were cut and the deceased bled to death. Here the deceased gave his consent to be cut under a misconception of fact erroneously believing that he was immune to da cuts. But it could not be said that the accused knew of the misconception or had reason to believe that the deceased was mistaken in thinking himself invulnerable. It was held that he was protected by ss 87 and 90 of the IPC .[18]

Sexual Intercourse with False Promise of Marriage and Misconception of Fact

It appears that the consensus of judicial opinion is in favour of the view that the consent given by the prosecutrix to sexual intercourse with a person with whom she is deeply in love on a promise that he would marry her on a later date, cannot be said to be given under a misconception of fact. A false promise is not a fact within the meaning of the IPC . But there is no straitjacket formula for determining whether consent given by the prosecutrix to sexual intercourse is voluntary, or whether it is given under a misconception of fact. In the ultimate analysis, the tests laid down by the courts provide at best guidance to the judicial mind while considering a question of consent, but the court must, in each case, consider the evidence before it and the surrounding circumstances, before reaching a conclusion, because each case has its own peculiar facts which may have a bearing on the question whether the consent was voluntary, or was given under a misconception of fact. It must also weigh the evidence keeping in view the fact that the burden is on the prosecution to prove each and every ingredient of the offence, absence of consent being one of them.[19] Accused appellant was alleged to have had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix on the false promise to marry. This continued for a long period of six months. Accused held entitled to benefit of doubt and acquitted of charge under s 376, IPC .[20] If a woman, believing in the promise of marriage made by a man, consents to the promisor having sexual intercourse with her, the promisor would be liable for the offence of rape if the court finds, on examination of the materials on record, that the promise of marriage made by the promisor was really a hoax to obtain consent of the woman, for, such a consent given by the woman would not, in the light of the provisions of s 90, IPC, amount to consent in law and the sexual intercourse by such a promisor with a woman, so induced, would constitute an offence of rape.[21]

The accused must know at very inception itself that representation made by him is false and he also knows that the victim yielded believing that representation to be true.[22]543

The 'failure to keep a promise made with respect to a future uncertain date, due to reasons that are not very clear from the evidence available, does not always amount to misconception of fact. In order to come within the meaning of the term 'misconception of fact', the fact must have an immediate relevance.' Section 90 , IPC cannot be called into aid in such a situation to pardon the act of a girl in entirety, and fasten criminal liability on the other, unless the court is assured of the fact that from the very beginning, the accused had never really intended to marry her.[23]

Obtaining consent by exercising deceit cannot be legitimate defence to exculpate an accused.[24]

In the instant case, there was no evidence that bad act was committed by the appellant on the prosecutrix against her consent or will or after promise for marriage. The prosecutrix remained in the company of the appellant and moved from one village to another village and from one town to another town for about one month and did not make any complaint against the appellant to anybody. She nowhere stated that she submitted herself because of promise made by the appellant to marry her and she was having full belief and faith upon the appellant that he will marry her. Held, it could not be said that the consent of the prosecutrix was obtained on misconception of fact. Appellant accused was acquitted of the charge under s 376, IPC .[25]

Fraudulent consent cannot be said to be a consent so as to condone the offence of the accused.[26] Promise to marry without anything more will not give rise to misconception of fact within the meaning of s 90 . A representation deliberately made by the accused with a view to elicit the assent of the victim without having the intention or inclination to marry her will vitiate the consent.[27]

In the instant case, the prosecutrix came from lower rung of the society. Her father was a day labourer. She had read upto Class VI only. The appellant accused exploited the position by making her believe that he would marry her. Pinning faith on such repeated assurance, the prosecutrix consented to her having physical relationship with the accused. It was not a case of simple allurement or mere promise to marry. The accused hailing from a well to do family made her believe that their physical relationship would culminate in marriage. Plea of consent was rejected, and appellant accused was convicted under s 376, IPC .[28]

Misrepresentation as to Facts and Intention

It has been held that the expression 'under a misconception of fact' is broad enough to include all cases where the consent is obtained by misrepresentation leading to a misconception of the facts with reference to which the consent is given, and that a consent given on a misrepresentation of a fact, is not useful as a consent under the IPC .[29] A misrepresentation as to the intention of a person (in stating the purpose for which the consent is asked) is a misrepresentation of a 'fact' within the meaning of 544 s 3 of the Evidence Act .[30] But it is difficult to say that any misrepresentation of fact inducing consent would result in that consent not being a consent within the meaning of s 378, IPC, for in that case it is difficult to see what distinction can be drawn between the offence of theft and claiming property dishonestly by means of cheating.[31] If consent is given by the prosecutrix under a misconception of fact, it is not voluntary consent, and it is vitiated. Conviction of the accused under s 376, IPC was upheld.[32]

Accused was prosecuted on allegations that he threatened the prosecutrix, promised to marry her and committed rape on her. The prosecutrix was major, knew that the accused was already married and so the accused husband could not marry her. She also became pregnant. The court held that the consent of the prosecutrix was not under misconception of fact. The acquittal of the accused on charge under ss 376 and 417, IPC recorded by court below was proper.[33]

Where the prosecutrix and the accused continued sex for a long period, and she never resisted the overtures of the accused appellant for a long time, she freely exercised a choice between resistance and assent. Further, the evidence showed that the prosecutrix was well aware that the accused was already married and had children. Furthermore, no marks of violence were found on her person. Thus, held that there was no misconception of fact/misrepresentation by the accused, and since it was a case of consensual sex, accused could not be convicted on the charge of rape under s 376, IPC .[34]

Consent Obtained by Fraud

A consent obtained by fraud, or threats, or violence, is no answer to proceedings for assault. Where the defendants told the mother of a newborn infant that it was to be taken to a nursery or institution to be brought up, and they put the child in a bag and hung it upon some park-poles at the side of a footpath, and it was likely that the putting a child of so tender an age into a bag and hanging the bag on the poles would cause its death, Tindal CJ held that the defendants were guilty of an assault, for the mother gave consent in reliance on the pretence that the child was to be taken to some institution, and as that pretence was false, it was no consent at all.[35] Obtaining consent by exercising deceit does not exculpate an accused of the charge of rape.[36]

A has connection with B, a married woman who permits the act, because owing to A's fraud she believes him to be her husband. This misconception of fact prevents B's consent being a valid one, and A is guilty of rape (refer to s 375 'fourthly').[37] 'A man who induces a married woman to have sexual intercourse with him by impersonating her husband commits rape'.[38]545

Submission to an act of carnal intercourse by a quack doctor on the faith of his statement that he was performing a surgical operation was held not to amount to consent, and he was convicted of rape.[39]

Consent must be with Full Knowledge of Risk

Consent under the IPC is not valid if obtained by either misrepresentation or concealment, and implies not only a knowledge of the risk but a judgment in regard to it, a deliberate free act of the mind. In other words, before exception 5 to s 300 can be applied, it must be found that the person killed, with a full knowledge of the facts, determined to suffer death or take the risk of death, and this determination continued up to and existed at, the moment of his death.[40] Where the accused alleged to have promised the victim to marry her and thereafter consent was given by her to have sexual intercourse with him, the fact that at the time of occurrence the victim was an adult, was not disputed, evidence on record showed that accused sincerely wanted to marry victim but his parents were against it, it could be said that accused never practised any deception upon the complainant nor did he make any attempt to create some false conception of facts in mind of the complainant. On these facts it was held that accused neither committed the offence of rape nor any offence of cheating as defined in s 375 and 420, IPC respectively.[41] An accused pleading consent as a defence must show that the person consenting did know what risk he was undertaking. A patient can hardly be said to accept a risk of which he is not aware. A doctor pleading consent to an operation that might prove fatal must show that the patient did accept the risk and that, consequently, he was aware of it.[42]

Consent of Persons of Unsound Mind and Under Intoxication

An idiot is a person who from birth has never had any reason, is obviously unable to understand the nature and consequences of his conduct. Thus A has connection with B, an idiot, who by reason of her idiocy submits to the act. A is guilty of rape.[43] In the case of surgical operations, and the like, the consent of the guardian or person having lawful charge of a lunatic or drunken person, should, if possible, be obtained.[44] Persons should not run the risk of acting upon a 'consent' given by such sufferers under s 88, IPC ; for though such a consent might be good, it might turn out to be bad, on the ground that the nature and consequences of the act 'consented' to were not as a fact understood.

Consent of Children under 12 Years of Age

The consent of children under 12 years of age is quite immaterial. It is to be borne in mind that under this section, the legislature did not purport to enact that a child under 12 years of age could not in fact consent to an act or a course of conduct, but provided that in sections of the IPC in which reference is made to consent, the consent of a child under 12 years of age, unless the contrary appears from the context, is not such a consent as should afford a defence to a criminal charge.[45]546

'Unless the Contrary Appears From the Context'

As explained by s 6 of the IPC, every definition or penal provision contained in this Code is to be understood subject to the exceptions contained in ch 4, as a measure of abundant precaution the expression 'unless the contrary appears from the context' has been used in the last para of this section to denote that unless a different age is provided by any other provision of the Code, the consent given by a person who is under 12 years of age is not a valid consent. Originally the age of 10 years was considered sufficient and provided in clause 'fifthly' of s 375 to consent for sexual indulgence. It was raised to 12 years by s 1 of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 10 of 1891; to 14 years by s 2 of the Amendment Act 29 of 1925, and to 16 years by s 3 of Amendment Act 42 of 1949. The exception provided by s 90 is thus now no more applicable to the offence of rape after the amendment of 1949 as in view of the sixth clause of s 375 a girl above 12 years and below 16 years of age cannot give a valid consent for having sex.

The expression 'unless the contrary appears from the context' applies only to the provisions of para 3 of the section relating to the age of the child and has nothing to do with the other provisions of this section.

77 Indian Contract Act 1872, s 13 .

78 Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, art 224 .

79 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 375 ; R v Fletcher (1859) 8 Cox CC 131, 7 WR 20 .

80 Khallilur Rahman v Emepror AIR 1933 Rang 98, p 101 (FB) .

81 Dasrath Paswan v State of Bihar AIR 1958 Pat 190 ; Queen v Anunto Rumagat 6 WR (Cr) 57 .

82 Satpal Singh v State of Haryana 2010 Cr LJ 4283, p 4289 (SC), 2010 AIR SCW 4951, (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 1081, 2010 (7) Scale 322 .

83 Md Jakir Ali v State of Assam (2007) Cr LJ 1615 (Gau)

84 Uday v State of Karnataka AIR 2003 SC 1639, (2003) Cr LJ 1539 (SC) .

1 Md Jakir Ali v State of Assam (2007) Cr LJ 1615 (Gau) ; See alsoJose Thettayil v Station House Officer* 2013 (3) KLT 552 (Ker) .

2 Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, fifth edn, p 510.

3 Uday v State of Karnataka AIR 2003 SC 1639, (2003) Cr LJ 1539 (SC) .

4 Ibid.

5 Md Jakir Ali v State of Assam (2007) Cr LJ 1615 (Gau) ; Laddoo Singh v State of Punjab 2008 Cr LJ 2885 (P&H) (DB) ; Rao Harnarani Singh v Sheoji Singh AIR 1958 Punj 123, 1958 Cr LJ 563 .

6 Rao Harnarain Singh v State AIR 1958 Punj 123, (1958) Cr LJ 563 ; Uday v State of Karnataka AIR 2003 SC 1639, (2003) Cr LJ 1539 (SC) .

7 Jose Thettayil v Station House Officer 2013 (3) KLT 552, 2013 (3) KLJ 646 .

8 Durga Charan v State of Orissa AIR 1966 SC 1775, (1966) Cr LJ 1491 .

9 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 44 .

10 1 Hawk C 41, s 6 ; 1 East PC 444; Bhimrao Harnooji Wanjari v State of Maharashtra (1975) Mah LJ 660 (DB) .

11 R v Hallett (1941) 9 C&P 748 ; R v Jones (1861) 4 LT 154 (NS) .

12 Purshottam Mahadev v State of Maharashtra AIR 1963 Bom 74, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 573 ; Sat Pal Singh v State of Haryana 2010 Cr LJ 4283, (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 1081, (2010) 8 SCC 714, 2010 (7) JT 500, 2010 (7) Scale 322 .

13 Jayanti Rani Panda v State (1984) Cr LJ 1535 (Cal), (1983) 2 Cal WN 290 (Cal) .

14 Maung Ba Chit v Emperor AIR 1930 Rang 114, p 121 .

15 Queen v Poonai Fattemah 12 WR (Cr) 7 .

16 Sukumar Ghosh v State (1985) 2 Crimes 377 (Cal) .

17 Pradeep Kumar Verma v State of Bihar 2007 Cr LJ 4333, p 4337 (SC), AIR 2007 SC 3059, (2007) 7 SCC 413 .

18 Nga Shew Kin v Emperor AIR 1930 Rang 114, p 120 .

19 Uday v State of Karnataka AIR 2003 SC 1639, (2003) Cr LJ 1539 (SC) .

20 Sandeep Kaniram Rathod v State of Maharashtra 2011 Cr LJ (NOC) 196 (Bom) .

21 Bipul Medhi v State of Assam 2008 Cr LJ 1099, p 1108 (Gauh) (DB) .

22 Jose Thettayil v Station House Officer 2013 (3) KLT 552, 2013 (3) KLJ 646 .

23 Deepak Gulati v State of Haryana AIR 2013 SC 2071, 2013 Cr LJ 2990, p 2996 (SC), 2013 (7) Scale 383 .

24 Karthi v State 2013 Cr LJ 3765, 2013 AIR SCW 4315 (SC) (Offence of rape).

25 Vinod Mangilal v State of Madhya Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ 1204, p 1206, 1207 (MP) .

26 Yedly Srinivasa Rao v State of UP 2007 (1) SCC (Cr) 557, 2006 (Supp-6) SCR 760, (2006) 11 SCC 615, 2006 (9) Scale 692 .

27 Pradeep Kumar Verma v State of Bihar 2007 Cr LJ 4333, AIR 2007 SC 3059, (2007) 7 SCC 413 .

28 Swapan Chatterjee v State of West Bengal 2009 Cr LJ 16, p 19 (Cal) (DB) .

29 Re *N Jaladu*AIR 1941 Mad 49, p 50, 15 Cr LJ 24 ; R v Hanmanta (1877) 1 ILR Bom 610 ; Purshottam Mahadev v State AIR 1963 Bom 74, (1963) 1 Cr LJ 573, p 575 .

30 Re *N Jaladu*AIR 1914 Mad 49, p 50, 36 ILR Mad 453, p 456 ; followed in Emperor v Soma AIR 1916 Lah 414 .

31 Maung Ba Chit v Emperor AIR 1930 Rang 114, p 120 .

32 State of UP v Naushad AIR 2014 SC 384, (2014) 6 SCC (Cri) 364, (2014) 1 All LJ 450, 2014 Cr LJ 540 .

33 State v Muniyappa 2012 Cr LJ (NOC) 183 (Kar) (DB); Uday v State of Karnataka AIR 2003 SC 1639, 2003 Cr LJ 1539, 2003 (2) Scale 329, (2003) 4 SCC 46relied on.

34 Babu v State of Kerala 2013 Cr J 4286, p 4298 (Ker) (DB) .

35 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, pp 754-55, relying onR v March* (1844) 1 C&K 496 ; R v Sandas (1938) 8 C&P 265 ; R v Williams (1858) C&P 286 .

36 Karthi v State 2013 Cr LJ 3765, 2013 AIR SCW 4315 (SC), AIR 2013 SC 2645, (2013) 12 SCC 710 .

37 R v Barrow LR 1 CCR 156 ; under English law before 1885, A would only have been guilty of an indecent assault. But by 48 and 49 Vict c 69, s 4, such an act is made rape.

38 Section 1(2) of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 (4 and 5 Eliz 2) C 69.

39 R v Flattery 1877 2 QBD 414 ; R v Williams 1923 1 KB 340, overrulingR v O'Shay* (1898) 19 Cox 76, and affirmingR v Flattery* to be still good law.

40 Queen-Empress v Nayamuddin 18 ILR Cal 484, p 492 (FB), per O'Kinealy J.

41 Abhoy Pradhan v State of West Bengal (1999) Cr LJ 3534 (Cal)(DB).

42 Sukaroo Kobiraj v Empress 14 ILR Cal 566, p 568 .

43 R v Barratt LR 2 CCR 81 ; R v N Fletcher Bell CC 63, 28 LJ (MC) 85 ; R v Camplin 1 Den CC 89 .

44 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 89 .

45 Khalilur Rahman v Emperor AIR 1933 Rang 98, p 101 (FB), 34 Cr LJ 696 (FB) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 91.

Exclusion of acts which are offences independently of harm caused.--

The exceptions in sections 87, 88 and 89 do not extend to acts which are offences independently of any harm which they may cause, or be intended to cause, or be known to be likely to cause, to the person giving the consent, or on whose behalf the consent is given.

Illustration

Causing miscarriage (unless caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the woman) is an offence independently of any harm which it may cause or be intended to cause to the woman. Therefore, it is not an offence 'by reason of such harm'; and the consent of the woman or of her guardian to the causing of such miscarriage does not justify the act.

Comments

1. Scope

This section is a sort of exception to the exceptions contained in ss 87 - 89, IPC . These sections have no application of acts which are offences (i.e., punishable under the IPC, or under any special or local law) independently of any harm that they may cause. Each of these sections is by its terms limited to acts which are offences 'by reason of any harm'. This section has now to be read with the provisions of the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act 1971.547

2. 'Harm'

The word 'harm' is not synonymous with the word injury as defined by s 44 of the IPC . 'Harm' in this section is confined to physical injury only.[46]

3. Overriding Effect of the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act 1971

Section 3 of the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act 1971, permits the causing of miscarriage or termination of pregnancy by registered medical practitioners under the conditions and circumstances enumerated in sub-s (2) of that section. The provisions of that Act have overriding effect. The illustration to this section and the provisions of ss 312 - 316 of the IPC, therefore stand modified to the extent contrary provisions have been made in Act 34 of 1971. The relevant extract of ss 3(1) and 5(2) of the said Act are reproduced below:

> 3. When pregnancies may be terminated by registered medical practitioner.--(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860), a registered medical practitioner shall not be guilty of any offence under that Code or under any other law for the time being in force, if any pregnancy is terminated by him in accordance with the provisions of this Act.
>
> ...
>
> 5. (2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860), the termination of pregnancy by a person who is not a registered medical practitioner shall be an offence punishable with rigorous imprisonment for a term which shall not be less than two years but which may extend to seven years under that Code, and that Code shall, to this extent, stand modified.

...

46 Durga Charan v State of Orissa AIR 1966 SC 1775, (1966) Cr LJ 1491 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 92.

Act done in good faith for benefit of a person without consent.--

Nothing is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause to a person for whose benefit it is done in good faith, even without that person's consent, if the circumstances are such that it is impossible for that person to signify consent, or if that person is incapable of giving consent, and has no guardian or other person in lawful charge of him from whom it is possible to obtain consent in time for the thing to be done with benefit:

Provisos--Provided--

First.	--	That this exception shall not extend to the intentional causing of death, or the attempting to cause death;
Secondly.	--	hat this exception shall not extend to the doing of anything which the person doing it knows to be likely to cause death, for any purpose other than the preventing of death or grievous hurt, or the curing of any grievous disease or infirmity;548
Thirdly.	--	That this exception shall not extend to the voluntary causing of hurt, or to the attempting to cause hurt, for any purpose other than the pre-venting of death or hurt;
Fourthly.	--	That this exception shall not extend to the abetment of any offence, to the committing of which offence it would not extend.

Illustrations

(a) Z is thrown from his horse, and is insensible. A, a surgeon, finds that Z requires to be trepanned. A, not intending Z's death but in good faith, for Z's benefit, performs the trepan before Z recovers his power of judging for himself. A has committed no offence.

(b) Z is carried off by a tiger. A fires at the tiger knowing it to be likely that the shot may kill Z, but not intending to kill Z, and in good faith intending Z's benefit. A's ball gives Z a mortal wound. A has committed no offence.

(c) A, a surgeon, sees a child suffer an accident which is likely to prove fatal unless an operation be immediately performed. There is no time to apply to the child's guardian. A performs the operation in spite of the entreaties of the child, intending, in good faith, the child's benefit. A has committed no offence.

(d) A is in a house which is on fire, with Z, a child. People below hold out a blanket. A drops the child from the house-top, knowing it to be likely that the fall may kill the child, but not intending to kill the child, and intending, in good faith, the child's benefit. Here even if the child is killed by the fall, A has committed no offence.

Explanation.--Mere pecuniary benefit is not benefit within the meaning of sections 88, 89 and 92 .

Comments

1. Scope

Sections 92 and 93 deal with cases of what may be termed constructive consent, i.e., cases where, owing to certain urgent reasons, consent, in fact, is altogether dispensed with, but is given by construction of law, the result being that the person causing the harm is exempted from liability.

The essence of s 92 is that if it is impossible for a person to give consent under s 88, or, being an incapable person, under s 89, it is impossible to obtain in time the consent of his lawful custodian under that section, then, the person, desiring to act, bona fide for his benefit, may proceed to do so without obtaining consent.

Illustrations (a) and (b) are illustrations of cases where an ordinary person is unable to consent, i.e., consent is impossible. Illustrations (c) and (d) illustrate cases where persons are legally incapable of giving consent and have no custodian at hand to do so.549

The most familiar illustration of this section is that of the surgical operation [refer to illust (c) to the section]. Consent to a surgical operation frees the operator from criminal responsibility for assault, when freely given with knowledge of the purpose of the operation and when the purpose is lawful and the operation is performed with professional skill. And the trend of legal opinion is in favour of the proposition that no criminal responsibility should be incurred by a surgeon who, with proper care and skill, and for the physical benefit of a sick person, performs on him a surgical operation even without his consent. By the English Draft Code of 1880, cl 68:

> Everyone is protected from criminal responsibility for performing with reasonable care and skill any surgical operation upon any person for his benefit: provided that performing the operation was reasonable, having regard to the patient's state at the time and to all the circumstances of the case.

The proposition contains no direct reference to the consent or dissent of the patient. It was accepted as the law by Sir JF Stephen.[47] It corresponds to part of this section, and has been embodied in the Criminal Code of Canada,[48] New Zealand,[49] Queensland,[50] Western Australia,[51] and Northern

Nigeria.[52]

2. Object

The object underlying this section and ss 88 and 89, is to provide protection to the medical practitioners in the larger interest of the society. Under the terms of these sections life may be risked for the purpose of saving life, and pain inflicted for the purpose of relieving pain.

3. Difference between Sections 89 and 92

The terms of s 92, IPC are almost identical with those of s 89, IPC ; but they differ in one aspect. Section 89 ('thirdly') speaks of 'grievous hurt' while ' s 92 ' ('thirdly') speaks of 'hurt'. The effect is that whereas under s 89 grievous 'hurt' may be caused, so long as the doer is acting in good faith for the benefit of the child and lunatic, under s 92 he can only cause 'hurt' (and a fortiori 'grievous hurt' if, in addition, he does so in order to prevent death or hurt) thus, a schoolmaster chastising a pupil would not be justified under this section, but under s 89 .

4. 'Harm'

Commentary on this heading under s 87, ante, may be referred to.

5. 'Benefit'

As indicated by the illustrations, the benefit, contemplated in ss 88, 89 and 92 is something physical, and not merely a fancied intangible one, such as the attainment550 of greater spiritual excellence. It does not include pecuniary benefit.[53] The real object of these three sections is the protection of medical practitioners; under the terms thereof life may be risked for the purpose of saving life, and pain inflicted for the purpose of relieving pain.

6. 'Good Faith'

Commentary under s 52, ante, may be referred to.

7. Two Rules as to Knowledge and Skill of Medical Practitioner

Two rules should be remembered in connection with this topic:

(i) The skill required is not the highest possible skill, but a fair, reasonable and competent degree of skill,[54] but grossly unskillful or incautious use of remedies which result in death render the practitioner guilty of manslaughter or culpable homicide.[55] The want of competent skill of a nature less serious than this renders the practitioner liable in damages.[56]

(ii) The fact of a practitioner not being duly qualified as a doctor makes no difference as regards his liability;[57] though the advantage of a recognised diploma is that a court would naturally consider it strong prima facie evidence of sufficient skill. The question is one for a court to decide.[58]

47 Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, sixth edn, art 226 .

48 Rev Statt Can, 1906, C 146, s 65 .

49 1893, No 56, s 69 .

50 1899, No 9, s 282 .

51 1901, No 14, s 257 .

52 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 756.

53 R v Baboolun Hizrat 5 WR (Cr) 7 .

54 R v Spiller 5 C&P 333 .

55 Lanphier v Phipos 8 C&P 475 ; Rich v Pierpont 3 F&F 35 .

56 R v Spilling 2 M&Rob 107 ; R v Webb 1 M&Rob 405 ; 2 Lewin, CC 196; R v Markuss 4 F&F 356 ; R v Croik 1 F&F 521 ; R v Crick 1 F&F 519 ; R v Williamson 3 C&P 635 . As to criminal negligence in a medical man generally; Commonwealth v Pierce 138 Mass 165, 52 Am R 264, 42 Am R 5 .

57 R v Van Butcheel 3 C&P 629 .

58 I Hale PC 429; R v Crick 1 F&F 519 ; Ruddock v Lowe 4 F&F 519 ; Jones v Fay 4 F&F 525 ; R v Spiller 5 C&P 333 ; R v Simpson Lewin CC 172; R v Ferguson 1 Lewin CC 181 ; Sukaroo v R 14 ILR Cal 566 ; R v Van Butchell 3 C&P 629 ; R v St John Long 4 C&P 398 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 93.

Communication made in good faith.--

No communication made in good faith is an offence by reason of any harm to the person to whom it is made, if it is made for the benefit of that person.

Illustration

A, a surgeon, in good faith, communicates to a patient his opinion that he cannot live. The patient dies in consequence of the shock. A has committed no offence, though he knew it to be likely that the communication might cause the patient's death.

Comments

1. Pre-requisites

The essentials of non-liability under this section are 'good faith', i.e., 'due care and attention'[59] and 'benefit'. It is not easy what meaning the latter word bears in this551 section. The illustration shows that the benefit need not be a physical one. There is nothing to confine the exemption under this section to medical practitioners. The communication may be of any kind. For the meaning of the word 'harm', synopsis under s 87 may be referred to.

59 Indian Penal Code 1860, s 52 .

R A Nelson's Indian Penal Code, 11e 2015/R A Nelson's INDIAN PENAL CODE/Volume 1/Chapter IV General Exceptions/S. 94.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 94.

Act to which a person is compelled by threats.--

Except murder and offences against the State punishable with death, nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is compelled to do it by threats, which, at the time of doing it, reasonably cause the apprehension that instant death to that person will otherwise be the consequence: Provided the person doing the act did not of his own accord, or from a reasonable apprehension of harm to himself short of instant death, place himself in the situation by which he became subject to such constraint.

Explanation 1.--A person who, of his own accord, or by reason of a threat of being beaten, joins a gang of dacoits, knowing their character, is not entitled to the benefit of this exception, on the ground of his having been compelled by his associates to do anything that is an offence by law.

Explanation 2.--A person seized by a gang of dacoits, and forced, by threat of instant death, to do a thing which is an offence by law; for example, a smith compelled to take his tools and to force the door of a house for the dacoits to enter and plunder it, is entitled to the benefit of this exception.

Comments

1. Scope

This section deals with compulsion and necessity as a defence, and is based on the law of England.[60]Compulsion is of two sorts, it either arises from the act of an authority which, rightly or wrongly, has for the time being superseded the government of the country, or from the acts of private persons, who, without any show of legality, proceed in open defiance of law. Section 94 appears to refer exclusively to this latter class of cases.[61]

A person may be compelled to do an act by physical force or by threats or moral force. A person compelled by physical force to do an act which, if voluntarily done,552 would be a crime, is free from criminal responsibility, but the person compelling him is criminally liable.[62] Thus, A, by overpowering force takes the hand of B in which is a weapon, and therewith kills C. B is not criminally liable, because it was not his act, but was the act of A. In modern law the defence would be based on the absence of the mental element of free will.[63] This section does not deal with such a case. It deals only with compulsion by threats or moral force.

With regard to acts done under compulsion by threats, Sir James Stephen said:

> Criminal law is itself a system of compulsion on the widest scale. It is a collection of threats of injury to life, liberty, and property if people do commit crimes. Are such threats to be withdrawn as soon as they are encountered by opposing threats? The law says to a man intending to commit murder: 'If you do it, I will hang you'. Is the law to withdraw its threats if some one else says: 'If you do not do it, I will shoot you?
>
> Surely, it is at the moment when temptation to crime is strongest that the law should speak most clearly and emphatically to the contrary. It is, of course, a misfortune for a man that he should be placed between two fires, but it would be much greater misfortune for society at large if criminals could confer impunity upon their agents by threatening them with death or violence if they refused to execute their commands. If impunity could be so secured, a wide door would be opened to collusion and, encouragement would be given to associations of malefactors, secret or otherwise. Not doubt the moral guilt of a person who commits a crime under compulsion is less than that of a person who commits it freely, but any effect which is thought proper may be given to this circumstance by a proportional mitigation of the offender's punishment.
>
> These reasons lead me to think that compulsion by threats ought in no case whatever to be admitted as an excuse for crime, though it may and ought to operate in mitigation of punishment in most, though not in all, cases. If a man chooses to expose, and still more if he chooses to submit, himself to illegal compulsion, it may not operate even in mitigation of punishment. It would surely be monstrous to mitigate the punishment of a murderer on the ground that he was a member of a secret society by which he would have been assassinated if he had not committed the murder.[64]

But under this section compulsion by threats is a good defence in the cases covered by it. For compulsion to be a defence under this section: (a) the fear induced must be reasonable; (b) it must be fear of instant death, and (c) to the person himself.

2. Canadian Law

The common law defence of necessity by extraneous circumstances is not available where its role would be to legitimise conduct which is contrary to the clear legislative policy and scheme adopted in relation to controlled drugs.[65]553

The defence of necessity is narrow and of limited application in criminal law. The accused must establish the existence of the three elements of the defence. First, there is the requirement of imminent peril or danger. Second, the accused must have had no reasonable legal alternative to the course of action he or she undertook. Third, there must be proportionality between the harm inflicted and the harm avoided.[66]

3. English Law

Legislative scheme did not permit defence of necessity in circumstances of child abduction.[67] The defence of necessity is not available to the offences of complicity in another's suicide or murder in the form of euthanasia.[68]

4. Murder Excepted

No duress excuses the taking of an innocent life.[69] In the case of murder, compulsion by threats is no defence at all, and it is not even an extenuating circumstance.[70] Even marital duress is no defence to a charge of murder against a wife. 'On a charge against a wife for any offence other than treason or murder, it is a good defence to prove that the offence was committed in the presence of, and under the coercion, of the husband'.[71] But the word 'murder' in s 94 does not include abetment of murder punishable under s 109, IPC .[72] Thus, where a person abets murder by holding the legs of the deceased under threat of being himself killed if he refused to do so, he commits no offence in view of the provisions of this section.[73]

5. Offences Against State Punishable with Death also Excepted

Waging or attempting to wage war, or abetting waging war, against the Government is, under s 121, IPC, an offence against the State punishable with death. Under s 94, therefore, compulsion is no defence to a charge under s 121 .[74]

In this respect the law in India as laid down in this section differs from the rule laid down in the English case of R v Mc Growther .[75] In that case the prisoner was accused of high treason, and raised the defence of duress in that he had been forced to join the rebel forces under threats of burning his house and laying waste all that554 belonged to him. Chief Justice Lee, in summing up, observed that the fear of having houses burnt, or goods spoiled, is no excuse in the eye of the law for joining and marching with rebels.

> The only force that doth excuse, is a force upon the person, and present fear of death; and this force and fear must continue all the time the party remains with the rebels. It is incumbent on every man, who makes force his defence, to show an actual force, and that he quitted the service as soon as he could. Mc Growther was convicted but not executed.[76]

But in India, although compulsion cannot be pleaded by way of defence to a charge under s 121, IPC, the same may be considered in determining the punishment that ought to be inflicted.[77]

Threat Must Reasonably Cause Apprehension of Instant Death

To obtain the benefit of the exception allowed by this section, it must be shown that the prisoners were compelled to act, as they did from apprehension that their instant death would be the consequence of a refusal.[78] In less serious cases coercion can only be pleaded in mitigation of punishment.[79]

Justification of Act in Fear of Instant Death Explained

With regard to the general rule taken from the English law and enacted as s 94, that no fear, except of instant death, justifies a criminal, in note B to the First Draft of the Penal Code, Macaulay says:

> We cannot count on the fear which a man may entertain of being brought to the gallows at some distant time as sufficient to overcome the fear of instant death. But the fear of remote punishment may often overcome the motives which induce a man to league himself with lawless companions in whose society no person who shrinks from any atrocity that they may command can be certain of his life. Nothing is more usual than for pirates, gang-robbers and rioters to excuse their crimes by declaring that they were in dread of their associates, and durst not act otherwise. Nor is it by any means improbable that this may often be true. Nay, it is not improbable that crews of pirates and gangs of robbers may have committed crimes which everyone among them was unwilling to commit, under the influence of mutual fear. But we think it clear that this circumstances ought not to exempt them from the full severity of the law.

> A man has no right to declare temptation to be an excuse, though he might himself have yielded to it, nor allow compassion for the criminal to change or weaken in any manner the legal definition of the crime.[80]555

Fear to Continue till Offence Committed

The fear must continue until the offence is completed. Thus, where in a case under s 201, IPC, the accused pleaded that they took away the body of a murdered man to the jungle and threw it in a ravine as a sub-inspector of police threatened to shoot them if they refused, but they admitted that the sub-inspector accompanied them only for a short distance and then left them, it was held that the accused were not protected by s 94, IPC, as the offence under s 201 was not completed till they had disposed of the body in a place where it was not likely to be discovered soon, and the apprehension of death ceased long before that, when the sub-inspector left them.[81]

Fear Must be to the Person Himself

The fear of instant death must be to the person himself and not to another. A and B are taken prisoners by brigands. A is informed that unless he joins them in a contemplated robbery, his companion B (who is ill and unable to move) will be shot. A joins in the robbery. His act is a crime.

6. Necessity

Necessity, in the sense of compulsion arising from hunger or from imminent danger to a person's own life or property, is no excuse for crime.[82] In R v Dudley and Stephens ,[83] the defence of necessity was rejected on the ground of the difficulties and danger of framing and accepting a general defence of necessity in such a situation as this. Stephen[84] said, 'It is just possible to imagine cases in which the expediency of breaking the law is so overwhelmingly great that people may be justified in breaking it; but these cases cannot be defined beforehand'.

Limits of Application of Doctrine of Necessity

The limits of the application of the doctrine of necessity as an excuse for an act otherwise criminal are those prescribed in this section.[85] The apprehension must be of instant death. Fear of injury to house or goods, or apprehension of personal violence, short of death, is no excuse whatever.[86] Mere threats of 'burning his house and laying waste of all that belonged to him' are not sufficient.[87]

A was charged with giving false evidence. His plea that he was coerced into doing so by a police inspector was not accepted.[88]556

Certain witnesses, in order to avoid apprehended pecuniary injury and personal molestation, offered or gave bribes to a public servant. It was held that they were abettors of the offence of taking illegal gratification and that their fears were no defence.[1]

The fear must be of instant death. A, a member of a secret society, is instructed to throw an explosive bomb at a high official whilst driving in a street. By the rules of the society any member failing to obey its orders is liable to be, and is invariably put to death. A throws the bomb. A's act is a crime.

A, in the last illustration, is accompanied by some members of the society who threaten to immediately assassinate him if he does not throw the bomb as directed. A throws it. His act is not a crime. But if he voluntarily joined the society, the case would fall under the proviso to the section and his act would be a crime.

7. Proviso

If a man voluntarily joins a society in which he is subsequently the victim of coercion, he cannot plead s 94 in defence.[2] Where an accused did, of his own accord, place himself in the situation by which he became subject to the threats of another owing to which he alleged that he committed the offence of robbery, the provisions of this section can avail him nothing.[3]

8. Burden of Proof

Where a person is accused of an offence, the burden of proving the existence of the circumstances, bringing the case within any of the general exceptions, provided in this Code, or within any special exception or proviso, contained in any part of the Code, or in any other law defining the offence, is upon him and the court shall presume the absence of such circumstances.[4] The same applies to the defence of compulsion, contemplated in this section where it is sought to rely on compulsion as a defence, the accused must show a proper foundation for the same. But once it is done, it is for the prosecution to establish, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defence is not made out.[5]

60 Queen-Empress v Magan Lal and Motilal 14 ILR Bom 115 .

61 Mayne's Criminal Law of India, para 210.

62 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 10, third edn, Butterworths, London, p 290 citing 1 Hale PC 434 and R v Bourne (1952) 36 Cr App Rep 125, p 128 .

63 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, pp 92-93.

64 Stephen's History of Criminal Law, vol 2, p 107 cited with approval in Aung Hla v Emperor AIR 1931 Rang 235, p 241 (SB) in the case of an offence under s 121, Indian Penal Code 1860.

65 R v Quayle , A-G's Reference (No 2 of 2004) 2005 EWCA Crim 1415. [Halsbury's Laws of Canada].

66 R v Latimer 2001 SCJ No 1 [Halsbury's Laws of Canada].

67 R v S(C) 2012 EWCA Crim 389, 2012 1 WLR 3081, 2012 All ER (D) 06 (Mar) .

68 R (on the application of Nicklinson) v Ministry of Justice; R (on the application of AM) v DPP 2013 EWCA Civ 961, 2014 2 All ER 32(affirmed in part), 2014 UKSC 38, 2014 3 All ER 843. [Halsbury's Laws of England]

69 1 Hale PC 434; R v Bourne (1952) 36 Cr App Rep 125, p 128 .

70 Emperor v Itwa Munda AIR 1938 Pat 258 ; Killikyatara Boma v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 207, 1912 MWN 1108 .

71 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 10, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, 1976, p 292.

72 Umadasi v Emperor AIR 1924 Cal 1031, 26 Cr LJ 11 ; Karu Masukh Gond v Emperor AIR 1937 Nag 254 ; Bachchan Lal v State AIR 1957 All 184, (1957) Cr LJ 344 .

73 Umadasi v Emperor AIR 1924 Cal 1031, 26 Cr LJ 11 .

74 Aung Hla v Emperor AIR 1931 Rang 235, p 241 (SB), 33 Cr LJ 205 .

75 R v Mc Growther Special Comuriss 1746; Foster 13, 18 St Trials 391.

76 Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, p 97.

77 Aung Hla v Emperor AIR 1931 Rang 235, p 241 (SB), 33 Cr LJ 205 .

78 Queen v Sonoo 10 Wr Cr 48 ; Queen-Empress v Magan Lal 14 ILR Bom 115 ; Queen-Empress v Latif Khan 20 ILR Bom 394 .

79 Queen-Empress v Latif Khan 20 ILR Bom 394, p 403, per Renade J.

80 Queen v Dudley & Stephens 14 QBD 273, p 288, per Lord Coleridge CJ.

81 Mirza Zahid Beg v Emperor AIR 1938 All 91, 93; R v Mcgrowther 18 St Tr 391 .

82 Halsbury's Laws of England, fourth edn, p 291; Butterworths, London, 1976; Russell on Crime, eleventh edn, pp 98-100.

83 R v Dudley and Stephens (1884) 14 QB 273 .

84 History of Criminal Law, vol 2, p 109.

85 Queen-Empress v Maganlal and Motilal 14 ILR Bom 115 .

86 1 Russ, 19; R v Tyler 8 C&P 620 .

87 R v Mc Growther 18 St Tr 391 ; Foster 13.

88 R v Sonoo 10 WR (Cr) 48 ; R v Gonowri 22 WR (Cr) 2 .

1 R v Maganlal 14 ILR Bom 115 .

2 R v Ismail Hasan 1 Cr LJ 282 .

3 Sanalydo v Emperor AIR 1933 Rang 204 .

4 Section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act 1872.

5 Halsbury's Laws of England, vol 11, fourth edn, Butterworths, London, 1976, p 25, para 24; Emperor v Autai AIR 1925 All 315, 26 Cr LJ 676, p 677 (accused held entitled to benefit of doubt) .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 95.

Act causing slight harm.--

Nothing is an offence by reason that it causes, or that it is intended to cause, or that it is known to be likely to cause, any harm, if that harm is so slight that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of such harm.557

Comments

1. Scope

One of the first principles of law is de minimis non curat lex(law does not take account of trifles). This has found expression in this section, which lays down that an act which causes only a slight harm is not an offence.[6] This provision is unknown to the English law, under which such cases are left to the discretion of the court. In India, however, the section is useful owing to the extreme fondness of the people for setting the criminal law in motion against one another on the most trivial occasions. In practice the largest fees seem sometimes to be paid in the most trumpery prosecutions. Trifling acts may also sometimes wound susceptibilities which have their origin in religion and in caste.[7]

As stated above this section is founded on the maxim of de minimis non curat lex (the law does not take account of trifles). The reason is that intercourse in civilised society will come to an end if for certain for such trifle offence a person is exposed to criminal prosecution. The section is intended to provide for those cases which though, from the imperfections of language, they fall within the letter of the penal law, are yet not within its spirit, and are all over the world considered by the public, and for the most part dealt with by the tribunals, as innocent. According to this maxim the courts of justice generally do not take trifling and immaterial matters into account except under peculiar circumstances. Courts will not, for instance, take notice of fraction of a day except in cases where there are conflicting rights, for the determination of which it is necessary that they should do so. There are some injuries of so little consideration in the law that no action will lie for them.[8]

2. Object

The object of this section is 'to exclude, from the operation of the Penal Code, those cases which, from the imperfection of language, may fall within the letter of the law, but are not within its spirit'.[9] This section is intended to exempt, from criminality, offences, which from their triviality, do not deserve the name of crimes558 even though, in one sense, they are crimes because they fall within the definition of crimes, and, but for this section, the said crimes are punishable.[10] Where the allegations, in the complaint, amount, at the most, to some technical offence, the matter would be covered by this section.[11] Even intentional causing of harm, specified in the section, is excused if it is a trivial one.[12]If the harm, caused by an act, is so small that no man of ordinary sense and temper would complain of it, the act does not amount to an offence.

With regard to this section, which was cl 73, the authors of the Code observed:

> Clause 73 is intended to provide for those cases which, though, from the imperfections of language, they fall within the letter of the penal law, are yet not within its spirit, and are all over the world considered by the public, and for the most part dealt with by the tribunals, as innocent. As our definitions are framed, it is theft to dip a pen in another man's ink, mischief to crumble one of his wafers, an assault to cover him with a cloud of dust by riding past him, hurt to incommode him by pressing against him in getting into a carriage. There are innumerable acts without performing which men cannot live together in society, act which all men constantly do and suffer in turn, yet which differ only in degree from crimes. That these acts ought not to be treated as crimes is evident, and we think it far better expressly to except them from the penal clauses of the Code than to leave it to the judges to except them in practice; for if the Code is silent on the subject, the judges can except these cases only by resorting to one of two practices which we consider as most pernicious, by making law, or by wresting the language of the law from its plain meaning.[13]

3. Section not Applicable Unless Act is Otherwise an Offence

This section would not apply unless the act, complained of, amounts to an offence either under this Code,[14] or under any special or local law,[15] but for the operation of this section.

'Offence' means act punishable under this Code or under any special or local law (s 40).

4. 'By Reason that it Causes any Harm'

Some acts are made offences independently of any harm that they may cause mala prohibita, e.g., being intoxicated in a railway or railway station[16] or the abetment of559 an offence, though no offence is, in fact, committed.[17] To such offences this section has no application.[18] Other acts are offences on account of the harm caused thereby mala in se, and, to such offences, this section applies.

There is no doubt that if the harm is so light that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of it, is only excluded by s 95 of the IPC . A case where a poisonous drug like copper sulphate was administered to a child of about 15 years which caused severe vomiting and diarrhoea will certainly come under the definition of hurt under s 319 of the IPC : 'It was the grace of God, that the condition of the complainant did not deteriorate further and he was saved. But it cannot be said that this is such a harm which can be ignored...'.[19]

5. 'Harm'

The expression 'harm' has not been defined in this Code. In its dictionary meaning, it connotes hurt, injury, damage, impairment, moral wrong or evil. This expression is used in many sections of the IPC . In ss 81, 87 - 89, 91, 92, 100, 104 and 106, this expression means physical injury. In s 93, it means an injurious mental action. In s 469 and 499, 'harm', it is plain from the context, means to cause damage to the reputation of the aggrieved party. There is nothing in this section which warrants a restricted meaning of 'harm'. This section is a general exception and if the expression has, in many other sections, dealing with general exceptions, a wide connotation, including physical injury, there is no reason to suppose that the legislature intended to use the expression 'harm' in this section, in a restricted sense.[20]

6. Slight Harm

This section, as already mentioned above is intended to prevent penalisation of negligible wrongs or offences of trivial character. Whether an act, which amounts to an offence, is trivial, would undoubtedly depend upon the nature of the injury, the position of the parties, the knowledge or intention with which the offending act is done and other related circumstances.[21]There can be no absolute standard or degree of harm which may be regarded as so slight that a person of ordinary sense and temper would not complain of the harm. It cannot be judged solely by the measures of physical or other injury which the act causes.[22] Where the complaint itself contains560 allegations of a petty nature, of which hardly any cognisance can be taken, no criminal proceedings should be taken.[23]

It is an offence under the Arms Act to have an empty cartridge case in one's possession, but, in the normal course, where it is not suspected that the empty cartridge case is to be reloaded or to be used in future as ammunition, the matter would be of such slight importance that it would be ignored under the provisions of this section, or under the maxim, di minimis non curat lex.[24]

In Abdul Rashid v Harish Chandra ,[25] it was held that the charge of obstructing peons of a municipality is very slight, so slight that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of such harm, and where the municipality has not been active in proving the other offences of gravity, namely, evasion of octroi duty and causing hurt to peons, the complaint against the accused should be dismissed, and this section may be applied. This case, however, appears to be of doubtful authority.

The taking of pods worth about three pies off a tree on government waste land[26] has been held under this section not to be theft, but it would probably have been otherwise if the owner of the tree had been a very poor private person. The pain from a blow of an umbrella on the chest is not such a slight harm as the section contemplates.[27]

In course of the quarrel, the appellants A, P and D (since deceased) caused S to fall down, the appellant M threw down a heavy stone on the head of S, the deceased, who sustained head injury and died on the spot. Held, the act of the appellant A in causing the deceased to fall down formed part of the joint yet a murderous assault on the deceased, an old man, and was not covered by exception contemplated in s 95, IPC .[28]

Instances of Slight Harm

Where in a case of cheating, the person deceived merely suffered, owing to deception, a momentary annoyance and nothing else, the case held to be covered by this section.[29]561

Where a person kills a goat by the jhatka process and exposes its flesh for sale in the presence of

Mahommadans, even if it were intended to cause harm and insult to some Mahommadans by so doing, that harm is so slight that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of it and this section applies.[30]

Using abuse[31] or indecent language by a person towards another has become a part of present behaviour and, therefore, this act is protected by this section.[32]

Where the accused pushed aside the complainant, lifted the barrier and drove away, he was held protected under this section.[33]

Where there had been hot altercation between the accused and the complainant, even abuses were hurled and accused gave two slaps to the complainant, it was held that the matter was a trivial one and the offence of the accused was covered by this section.[34]

Where the complainant and the accused petitioner both were advocates and the alleged offensive words were uttered by the petitioner when they were on their legs in criminal proceedings before a court and the petitioner apparently lost his temper while defending his client. The offensive utterance were trivial in nature and held to be covered by provision of s 95, IPC .[35]

Where the allegation was that the accused kicked on the head of his follower complainant when the latter tried to touch the feet of the accused and no physical injury was caused; held, harm caused was slight, thus, no action was called for in view of the provisions of s 95, IPC .[36]

Where the objectionable words were uttered on provocation by the lady complainant in the heat of the moment without intention to cause harm to the complainant's reputation though the relations between the complainant and accused were otherwise cordial, s 95 was held applicable.[37]

Temporary embezzlement

Temporary embezzlement by the accused clerk employed in the office of Deputy Superintendent of Police of a paltry sum viz. Rs. 1839/- for a period of 21 days was held covered by s 95, IPC . The accused was granted benefit of s 95, IPC, and acquitted of charges under ss 409, 471, 477, IPC .[38]562

Harm which are not Slight--Instances

A criminal complaint of defamation based upon a mere trivial remark no harm being suffered by the complainant by the remark, should not be entertained as the matter is one falling properly within s 95 .[39]

Among Hindus it would cause the gravest harm to allege that one was out of caste. Such an imputation is defamatory and would not be covered by this section.[40]

But, the offence of misbranding is a serious one and the offender should not be given the benefit of this section.[41]

Where the accused pulled the dhoti of a businessman to drag him from his shop and used abusive language, it was held that the harm was not trivial and the accused was not protected by this section.[42]

Where the accused, an advocate, used filthy language in the cross-examination of a witness, it was held that the accused was not protected by this section.[43]

But where the alleged act of a topmost official of the state police in slapping a senior lady officer on her posterior in the presence of a gathering of the elite of society amounted to an outraging of modesty of the lady officer and nothing in the FIR showed that the alleged act was committed accidentally or by mistake, or it was a slip, the offences attracted ss 354 and 509, IPC relating to modesty of women not being trivial, s 95, IPC was held not attracted and quashing of FIR and complaint by High Court under s 482, CrPC, was held illegal.[44]

Removal of hose pipe could bring a train to a halt. Its removal does not cause a slight harm as contemplated under s 95, IPC . The petitioner was not found entitled to benefit of s 95, IPC as prayed by him.[45]

In a case where the complainant and the accused were related to each other and the ingredients of s 342, IPC, were established it was held that as minimal harm was caused to appellant. The case was clearly covered by s 95, IPC . His appeal was accordingly dismissed.[46]563

Putting the garland of shoes around the neck of a person by the accused is not a trivial matter which can fall within the scope of this section.[47]

Where one woman was dragged by her hair by another woman in an aggressive manner in the course of an attack, it was held that this section could not apply to the case.[48]

7. 'Person of Ordinary Sense and Temper'

General law does not take notice of abnormal persons, there being special provisions for such persons. Taking the common sense view a 'person of ordinary sense and temper' must mean a person, who is not unduly touchy and devoid of reasonable tolerance and sense of humour. The words 'persons of ordinary sense and temper', in this section, must be taken to mean a person taken from the class to which the complainant belongs.

8. Applicability to Offences under Special or Local Acts

The various High Courts are not unanimous on the applicability of the provisions of this section to offences under the special or local Acts. The Gauhati High Court has held that s 95 applies to offences under the IPC and it will not apply to offences under special or local Acts unless so made applicable by those Acts.[49] A similar view has been expressed by the Orissa High Court in Razak Rice & Oil Mills v Bharat Narayan Patnaik, Food Inspector ,[50] and the Mysore High Court in Union of India v Yesudoss .[51]Contrary view has, however, been taken by the Madhya Pradesh High Court in a case under the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act and it has been held that s 95 of the IPC occurs in ch IV of the Code and under s 40, IPC, the offence in that chapter includes an offence under any special or local Act.[52] However, a contrary view seems to have been taken by the Apex Court in a case and it was held that if a person is charged with an offence, however trivial it may be, then unless there is some provision for composition of it, the law must take its course and the charge enquired into, resulting either in conviction or acquittal. If composition of an offence was permissible under the law, the effect of such composition would depend on what the law provided for. If the effect of composition is to amount to an acquittal, then it may be said that no stigma should attach to the character of the person, but unless that is expressly provided for, the mere rendering of compensation would not amount to the vindication of the character of the person charged with the offence.[53]564

6 Sadnand Jash v Shibakali Hazara AIR 1954 Cal 288, (1954) Cr LJ 800 ; Abdul Qudar Jan v Emperor AIR 1935 Lah 225 ; Emperor v Bhopal Singh AIR 1936 All 392 ; KG Sukumaran Nair v State of Kerala 1961 Ker LT 110 ; Selvaraj v State of Tamil Nadu (1991) 1 Cr LC 916, p 918 (Mad) .

7 Watson's Principles of the Indian Criminal Law, p 49.

8 District Food Inspector v Kedarnath Chirnaia (1981) Cr LJ 904 (Gau), (1981) FAJ 543 (Gau) .

9 Veeda Menzes v Yusuf Khan AIR 1966 SC 1773, (1966) Cr LJ 1489, p 1490 ; Queen-Empress v Ramaswami 12 ILR Mad 148 .

10 Devendrappa v State of Mysore (1970) Cr LJ 1188, p 1190, (1970) 2 Mys LJ 260 ; Mohendra Singh v State of Bihar (1986)

BLJ 740, (1986) BBCJ 752 ; Kurmanai Kulu v DME, SE Rly AIR 1964 Ori 253 (acceptance of eight annas (50 paise) as bakshish no offence).

11 KG Sukumaran Nair v State of Kerala (1961) Ker LT 110 .

12 Veeda Menzes v Yusuf Khan AIR 1966 SC 1773, (1966) Cr LJ 1489, p 1490 ; Devendrappa v State of Mysore (1970) Cr LJ 1188, p 1190, (1970) Mad LJ 263 (Cr) .

13 Note B, pp 109-10.

14 Emperor v Preo Nath Chowdhry 29 ILR Cal 489, p 490 ; State Govt, Madhya Pradesh v Amrit Lal Amanlal AIR 1953 Nag 141, (1953) Cr LJ 801 ; Union of India v Yesudoss (1973) 1 Mys LJ 350, p 351 .

15 Amritsar Municipality v Arjun Singh (1973) Cr LJ 721, p 723 (Punj) ; BK Varma v Corpn of Madras AIR 1971 Mad 40, p 41 ; Public Prosecutor v K Satyanarayana (1975) Cr LJ 1127 (AP) ; Bichitrananda v State of Orissa (1978) Cr LJ 1050, p 1052, 45 Cut LT 369 ; State of Madhya Pradesh v Mahadeo (1972) Cr LJ 1097, p 1098, (1972) MPLJ 44 .

16 Indian Railway Act 1989, s 145 .

17 Indian Penal Code 1860, ss 115 - 16, e.g., s 122 .

18 Refer to s 91 ; R v John Scott 2 Cr LJ 751, 1 NLR 139 .

19 Manzoor Ahmed v State (1984) 2 Crimes 542, (1984) All Cr R 488, (1984) All Cr Cas 406 (All) .

20 Veeda Menzes v Yusuf Khan AIR 1966 SC 1773, (1966) Cr LJ 1489 ; Devendrappa v State of Mysore (1970) Cr LJ 1188, (1970) Mad LJ (Cr) 263 .

21 Neelam Mahajan Singh v Commr of Police (1994) 53 Del LT 389, p 399 (FB) .

22 Veeda Menzes v Yusuf Khan AIR 1966 SC 1773, (1966) Cr LJ 1489 ; Bindeswari Prasad Singh v Kali Singh AIR 1977 SC 2432, (1978) Cr LJ 187 .

23 Bindeswari Prasad Singh v Kali Singh AIR 1977 SC 2432, (1978) Cr LJ 187 ; Sharif Ahmed v Qabul Singh 43 ILR All 497, 22 Cr LJ 715 ; Jas Raj Jagga v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 234, 30 Cr LJ 379 ; Empress v Vansiltart 1883 AWN 46 ; Empress v Amir Hasan 1883 AWN 167 ; Bhagirathi v Saiyed Ali Hamid Sahib AIR 1931 Oudh 392, 32 Cr LJ 991 ; Sadananda Jash v Shibakali Hazra AIR 1954 Cal 28 ; Moro Balwant Marathe v Emperor AIR 1914 Bom 126, 15 Cr LJ 14 ; Crown v Atma Singh AIR 1926 Lah 412 ; Phillip Rangle v Emperor AIR 1932 Bom 193 ; Mahommad Ibrahim Maracayar v Ismail Maracayar AIR 1949 Mad 760, (1949) 1 Mad LJ 445 ; Kundanlal v Emperor AIR 1943 Sind 196, 45 Cr LJ 105 ; Mahommad Sabed Ali v Thalesver Bovan AIR 1955 Assam 211, (1955) Cr LJ 1318 ; Abdul Rashul v Harish Chandra AIR 1929 All 940, 30 Cr LJ 1153 .

24 Emperor v Bhopal Singh AIR 1936 All 392, p 393, 37 Cr LJ 727 .

25 Abdul Rashid v Harish Chandra AIR 1929 All 940 .

26 R v Kasya 5 Bom HCC 35 ; Parma Singh v R 12 Cr LJ 103 ; Kirpa Singh v R 13 Cr LJ 601 .

27 Bengal Govt v Sheo Gholan 24 WR (Cr) 67 .

28 Athai v State of MP 2010 Cr LJ 995, p 999 (MP) .

29 Sunder Singh v Emperor 2 Cr LJ 126, (1905) 6 Punj LR 62 (DB) .

30 Kirpa Singh v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 601 .

31 Ram Shankar Pandey v Uttar Pradesh Police Station Officer, PS Kotwali, Ghazipur (1995) 1 East Cr C 23 (All) .

32 H Obedulla v State of Karnataka (1975) 1 Kant LJ 335, p 336 .

33 Ramesh Chandra Sharma v State (1965) All LJ 449, (1965) All WR (HC) 49 ; P Sriramulu Subudhi v State (1967) Cut LT 1071 ; Re *Ethitrajan*AIR 1955 Mad 264, (1955) Cr LJ 816 .

34 Pundalik v Wasudeo (1974) Mah LJ 54 (Notes of cases).

35 Heramba Sarma v Ajoy Shankar Das (1990) Gau HCC 402 .

36 Asharam Babu v Aman Singh Dangi 2015 Cr LJ 1765 (MP) .

37 Nisar Khan v State of Madhya Pradesh (1985) C Cr J (MP) 43 .

38 NK Illiyas v State of Kerala AIR 2012 SC 3790, 2012 AIR SCW 2496, 2012 Cr LJ 2418 (SC) .

39 Sharif Ahmad v Qabul Singh 43 ILR All 497, 22 Cr LJ 715 ; Jas Raj Jagga v Emperor AIR 1929 Lah 234 ; Empress v

Vansiltart 1883 AWN 46 ; Empress v Amir Hasan 1883 AWN 167 ; Bhagirathi v Saiyad Ali Hamid Sahib AIR 1931 Oudh 392 ; Sadananda Jash v Shibakali Hazra AIR 1954 Cal 288 ; Moro Balwant Marathe v Emperor 15 Cr LJ 14 ; Crown v Atma Singh AIR 1926 Lah 412 ; Phillip Rangel v Emperor AIR 1932 Bom 193 ; Mahommad Ibrahim Maracayar v Ismail Maracayar AIR 1949 Mad 760 ; Kundanmal v Emperor AIR 1943 Sind 196 ; Mahommad Sabed Ali v Thulesver Borah AIR 1955 Assam 211 .

40 Mohan Lal v Ram Charan AIR 1928, 29 Cr LJ 451, All 213, p 214; Ramanuja Chariar v Prathivathi Bayankaram 12 Cr LJ 497(1)(Mad).

41 Public Prosecutor v K Satyanarayana (1975) Cr LJ 1127, p 1129 (AP) .

42 1970 Raj LW 135.

43 Bheema Rao v Venkat Rao AIR 1964 My 285, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 692 ; H Obedulla v State of Karnataka (1975) 1 Kant LJ 335 .

44 Rupan Deol Bajaj & Anor v KPS Gill & Anor (1996) Cr LJ 381 (SC) .

45 Mahendra Singh v State of Bihar (1987) Pat LJR 43, (1987) 2 Crimes 173 .

46 Anoop Krishna Sharma v State of Maharashtra (1992) Cr LJ 1861 (Bom), (1992) 1 Cr LC 299 .

47 Kishori Mohan v State of Bihar (1976) Cr LJ 654, (1976) Pat LJR 270 .

48 K Ranganayakamma v Subamma AIR 1967 AP 208, (1966) Mad LJ 675 (Cri) .

49 District Food Inspector v Kedarnath Chirnaia (1981) Cr LJ 904 (Gau), (1981) FAJ 543 (Gau) .

50 Razak Rice & Oil Mills v Bharat Narayan Patnaik, Food Inspector (1989) Cr LJ 648 (Ori) .

51 Union of India v Yesudoss (1973) 1 Mys LJ 350, (1973) Mad LJ 330 (Cri) .

52 State of Madhya Pradesh v Mahadeo (1972) MPLJ 447, (1972) Jab LJ 320, (1972) MPWR 262, (1972) Cr LJ 1097 .

53 Biswabation Das v Gopal Chandra Hazarika & Ors AIR 1967 SC 895 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 96.

Things done in private defence.--

Nothing is an offence which is done in the exercise of the right of private defence.571

Comments

1. Scope

The right of self-defence is a very valuable right, serving a social purpose and should not be construed narrowly.[81] This section does not define the right of private defence; it merely declares that nothing is an offence which is done in the exercise of the right of private defence.[82] Whether in a particular set of circumstances, a person legitimately acted in the exercise of the right of private defence is a question of fact to be determined on the facts and circumstances of each case. No test in the abstract for determining such a question can be laid down. In determining this question of fact, the Court must consider all the surrounding circumstances. It is not necessary for the accused to plead self-defence. If the circumstances show that the right of private defence was legitimately exercised, it is open to the Court to consider such a plea.[83]

The right of private defence arises only against an act which would otherwise constitute an offence,[84] and not against an act which is not an offence.[85] Thus, the infliction of the injuries by the deceased on the accused in exercise of his right of private defence is not an offence so as to entitle that latter to the right of private defence under this section.[86] But an actual commission of the offence is not572 necessary in order to give rise to the right of private defence. It is enough if the accused apprehends that such an offence is contemplated and it is likely to be committed if the right of private defence is not exercised.[87] The law does not confer a right of self-defence on a man who goes and seeks an attack on himself by his own threatened attack which is likely to end in the death of the other. The right of self-defence, conferred by the law, or preserved by the law, for an individual is a very narrow and circumscribed right and can be taken advantage of only when the circumstances fully justify the exercise of such a right.[88]

The right exists against the perpetrators of offence under this Code.[89] There is a distinction between 'enforcing a right' and 'maintaining a right'. A party in possession is entitled to resist and repel an aggression and his action, in so doing, would be in the maintenance of his right.[90] Unless a right to the exercise of private defence is established, the claim of right or title will not avail the accused.[91] Where a party of men are determined to vindicate their right or supposed right by unlawful force and they engage in a fight with another party of men, equally determined to vindicate their right or supposed right by unlawful force, no question of the right of private defence can arise.[92] So, if both parties go armed to have a trial of strength, then neither party can be held to have acted in exercise of the right of private defence, irrespective of whether one or the other party was the aggressor or the first to attack.[93] Even in a case of sudden fight it is immaterial as to which party had opened the attack first according to the explanation to Exception 4 to s 300, IPC .[94] The High Court ought to consider the plea of private defence which goes to the root of the matter.[95]

The right of private defence is designed to serve a social purpose and deserves to be fostered within the prescribed limits.[96]573

2. Effect of Section

The plea of self-defence means that the harm which the accused had inflicted on the alleged aggressors is not an offence because the circumstances entitled them to exercise the right of self-defence. If, therefore, the plea of self-defence fails, the harm so caused would undoubtedly be a punishable offence. If, in addition, the accused acted in concert in the purported exercise of the right of self-defence to which they were not entitled, there is no escape form the conclusion that they together constituted an unlawful assembly with the common object of committing the offence constituted by the harm inflicted by them.[1] The right of private defence will in certain circumstances, completely absolve the accused from all guilt, even where the accused has voluntarily caused the death of another person.

3. When even Death can be Caused in Private Defence

The following are the circumstances in which the right of private defence will completely absolve the accused from all guilt, even when he has voluntarily caused the death of another person:

(i) Where whenever the right is exercised in the private defence of the body of the accused, it affords a complete defence--(a) if the deceased was the actual assailant of the accused, and (b) if the offence committed by the deceased which occasioned the exercise of the right was of any of the six descriptions enumerated in s 100, IPC .

(ii) Where the right is exercised in private defence of the property of the accused, it equally affords a complete defence if the offence, the committing of which, or the attempting to commit which, by the deceased, occasioned the exercise of the right which was of any of the four descriptions enumerated in s 103, IPC .

A person accused of murder may be unable to establish such a right of private defence and so fail to obtain an acquittal on that charge, yet, it is possible for him to be convicted only of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, if: (i) he exercised his right of private defence, whether of person or of property, in good faith, although he exceeded the power given to him by law; and (ii) he caused the death of the deceased against whom he was exercising such right of defence both--(a) without premeditation, and (b) without any intention of doing more harm than was necessary for the purpose of defence.[2]

Appellant accused had disappeared with the daughter of the deceased, which had created bad blood between the appellant and the deceased. The deceased had brought back his daughter and had got her married elsewhere, which antagonized the appellant and on the day of the incident the appellant accused lethally assaulted the deceased with a stick having a metallic sharp edged piece attached on one side of the stick. The deceased was taking a siesta underneath the tees outside his house. The appellant claimed right of private defence, and alleged that he had plied lathi to save himself. The lathi blows could not have resulted in the wounds which are cut wounds on the face of the deceased. The injuries were caused on the deceased when he was lying on the cot. The body was horizontally placed and this explains the horizontal574 wounds on the person of the deceased. Besides, if five people had assaulted the appellant as claimed by him, and the appellant had yielded a lathi in retaliation to save himself, the assailants if not all, at least two or three would have received random lathi blows. That all injuries on the deceased had been directed towards the face are indicative of a targeted assault on to the face and the skull of the deceased, which is just not possible if the appellant had swung at random the lathi of his mother. The plea of private defence was rejected. Appellant accused was convicted under s 302, IPC .[3]

4. Right not available to an Aggressor, etc

The right of private defence is essentially a defensive right circumscribed by the governing statute i.e., the IPC, available only when the circumstances clearly justify it. It should not be allowed to be pleaded or availed as a pretext for a vindictive, aggressive or retributive purpose of offence. It is a right of defence, not of retribution, expected to repel unlawful aggression and not as retaliatory measure. While providing for exercise of the right, care has been taken in IPC not to provide a loophole whereby an attack may be a pretence for killing. A right to defend does not include a right to launch an offensive, particularly when the need to defend no longer survived.[4] When the accused party is the aggressor, they are not entitled to right of private defence of property.[5] Right of private defence is not available to a person who himself first inflicted knife blows on the deceased.[6]No right of private defence can be exercised against the act of a person who is himself exercising the right of private defence of his person.[7] The complainant party had not attacked before the accused inflicted injuries by kulhari; and evidence showed that the accused were aggressors, thus, the plea of the accused that they inflicted injuries on the complainant party in the exercise of the right of private defence was rejected.[8] The number of injuries is not always a safe criterion for determining who the aggressor was.[9]

Right of private defence should not be allowed to be pleaded or availed as a pretext for a vindictive, aggressive or retributive purpose of offence. It is a right of defence, not of retribution, it is expected to repel unlawful aggression and not as retaliatory measure. While providing for exercise of the right, care has been taken in the IPC not to provide and has not devised a mechanism whereby an attack may be a pretence for killing. A right to defend does not include a right to launch an offensive, particularly when the need to defend no longer survived. Accused appellants armed with jailies had gone to plough the field belonging to the deceased. The deceased tried to prevent them from sowing jawar in the field, and the accused appellants assaulted him causing the death of the deceased. The accused appellants were aggressors, and were not entitled to exercise the right of private defence.[10]575

Right of private defence is a defensive right. It is neither a right of aggression nor of a reprisal. There is no right of private defence where there is no apprehension of danger.[11]

It is an established principle of law that the right of private defence cannot be claimed by an aggressor; in fact, it is the person aggressed upon who is on the defensive. The assailant cannot say that although he had, begun the attack he should be protected if the opposite party uses force in repelling it.[12] When the marpit in which a person was killed, had started upon an aggressive act of the accused, he cannot plead the right of self-defence against the opposite party.[13] Where the accused and his companions were aggressors and started assaulting the injured, causing injury with an axe on his head, the blow given with great force caused a fracture. The accused were held not entitled to right of private defence being the aggressors.[14] There is a distinction between 'enforcing a right' and 'maintaining a right'. A party in possession is entitled to resist and repel an aggression and his action in so doing would be in the maintenance of his right.[15] Right of private defence can be exercised only to defend an unlawful action and not to retaliate.[16] Unless a right to the exercise of private defence is established, the claim of right or title will not avail the accused.[17] Where a party of men are determined to vindicate their right or supposed right by unlawful force and they engage in a fight with another party of men equally determined to vindicate their right or supposed right by unlawful force, no question of the right of private defence can arise.[18] In Queen Empress v Prag Dutt ,[19] it was observed:

> When a body of men are determined to vindicate their rights, or supposed rights, by unlawful force, and when they engage in a fight with men, who, on the other hand, are equally determined to vindicate by unlawful force their rights or supposed rights, no question of self-defence arises. Neither side is trying to protect itself, but each side is trying to get the better of the other.

Where the accused are aggressors being armed with lethal weapons, attack to wreak vengeance, they would not be said to have acted in exercise of right of private defence.[20]

The appellants/accused had gone to the house of the deceased, there they caused injuries to the deceased and his two sons. Held, the appellants/accused were aggressors, and as such, they were not entitled to the right of private defence.[21]

Where the accused had not taken the plea of private defence in statement under s 313, CrPC, in view of the number/nature of the injuries sustained by the deceased576 and the PWS, the complainant party could not be called aggressor, thus, the plea of right of private defence was rejected.[22]

The accused were aggressors, and after forming unlawful assembly, without any reason they threw bricks towards the houses of the injured persons. Held, the accused appellants were not entitled to the benefit of private defence.[23]

5. No Right of Private Defence when no Party is in Possession

In such a case the claim of right becomes reduced to a mere pretext for fighting. The assembly is unlawful, not because the claim of right is immaterial, but because it was not the real object of the fight. And if the object of an assembly was from the very outset unlawful and every one of the accused was clearly a member of an unlawful assembly, no question of self-defence arises in the case.[24] The principle which is thus well settled by precedents is that, if neither party can be held to be in actual possession of the property in dispute, and if both parties go armed to have a trial of strength, then neither party can be held to have acted in exercise of the right of private defence, irrespective of whether one or the other party was the aggressor or the first to attack. If, however, a party is held to be in actual possession, it cannot be deprived of its right of private defence of property simply because it goes armed to defend its property after seeing the other party committing, or on feeling a reasonable apprehension that the other party would commit, any of the offences referred to in the second clause of s 97 of the IPC .[25]

6. Land vacant--No Right of Private Defence

In the present case dispute regarding the land was pending before the Court. The complainant along with others started ploughing the land, the accused persons armed with weapons arrived on the spot, and one appellant accused fired gunshot which hit at the forehead of the deceased. The land in question was lying vacant and the matter regarding possession was pending adjudication before the revenue authorities. After the order of remand passed by the Commissioner, there was no material to show who was in possession of the land in question. The plea of the accused persons that they acted in exercise of right of private defence was not accepted. Further held, even if the accused had right of private defence, they exceeded the right. The accused appellant was convicted under s 304, Pt I, read with s 149, IPC .[26]

7. Nature of Plea of Private Defence and when it can be taken

It is not necessary for the accused to plead in so many words that he acted in self-defence. If the circumstances show that the right of private defence was legitimately exercised, it is open to the court to consider such a plea, if the prosecution evidence would support it.[27] For invoking this section it is essential that the prior evidence577 duly recorded must be formally proved and marked.[28] The plea of right of private defence may be taken during trial and not at the investigation stage.[29] A plea of self-defence can also be raised for the first time in appeal if facts on record justify such a plea, but not otherwise.[30] The analogy of estoppel or of technical rules of civil proceedings is in cases where right of private defence is not specifically pleaded but emerges from the records of the case is inappropriate, and the courts are expected to administer the law of private defence in a practical way with reasonable liberality so as to effectuate its underlying object, bearing in mind that the essential basic character of this right is preventive and not retributive.[31] Right of private defence is one of self defence or self protection and not the right of reprisal or punishment. It is subject to restrictions indicated in s 88 .[32]

8. Plea of Private Defence and Alibi

Fact that the accused pleaded alibi, in itself, will not preclude the Court from giving him also the right of private defence if on proper appraisal of the evidence and other material on record, the Court finds it to be available to him.[33]

9. Consideration of Plea of Private Defence

It is true that an accused in a criminal case is not required to take up the plea of self-defence and the criminal court would be justified in inferring the same from the circumstances of a given case if it is proved on record that the accused caused injuries to a person in his own defence. However, when the prosecution witness had only admitted that the deceased hit the accused with a wooden shaft on his head, but it was not stated by them that it was the deceased who first hit the accused with a lathi and the accused had nowhere in his statement under s 313, CrPC, taken up the plea of self-defence, but raised this plea at the time of arguments, conviction of the accused was held proper.[34] A plea of right of private defence cannot be based on surmises and speculations.[35] There must be some evidence to establish the circumstances which necessitated the exercise of such a right.[36] While considering, whether the right of private defence is available to an accused, it is not relevant whether 'he may have a chance to inflict severe and mortal injury on the aggressor'. In order to find whether the right of private defence is available to an accused, the entire incident must be examined with care and viewed in its proper setting. The injuries received by the accused, the imminence of threat to his safety and the injuries caused by the accused are all relevant factors to be considered on a plea of private578 defence.[37] The injuries received by the prosecution party must also be taken into consideration. Where the plea of private defence is not consistent with the facts and circumstances of the case, the court must reject the plea.[38] When evidence is partisan on both sides and quite a large number of persons are injured on either side, the duty of the court is to try to find out the aggressive party and, for such finding, the place of incidence becomes important.[39]

The failure of the prosecution to explain the injuries of the accused does not make the accused's case of self-defence probable.[40] Where the injuries, found on the person of the accused, are of superficial nature, they do not necessarily lead to the inference that the accused acted in the exercise of the right of private defence.[41] Where the injuries, found on the person of the accused, have not been received during the occurrence, the accused has no right of private defence.[42]

10. Right of Private Defence--Entire Incident to be Seen

A plea of right of private defence cannot be based on surmises and speculation. While considering whether the right of private defence is available to an accused, it is not relevant whether he may have a chance to inflict severe and mortal injury on the aggressor. In order to find whether the right exists, the entire incident must be examined with care and viewed in its proper setting.[43]

11. Plea of Private Defence need not be Specifically taken

If the circumstances show that the right of private defence was legitimately exercised, it is open to the Court to consider such a plea. In a given case, the court can consider it even if the accused has not taken it, if the same is available to be considered from the material on record.[44] Even if the accused does not plead the right of private defence, but in case there is sufficient evidence to show the existence of the said right, the trial Court should consider the said aspect. In the present case, since there was evidence to show that the complainants were trying to snatch away accused's only son, obviously, the accused persons could exercise the right of defence.[45]

In the absence of any injury on the person of the accused(s), the plea of self defence would be rejected. Where the plea of self defence was taken during the course of appeal before the High Court for the first time, and the accused in their further statement under s 313, CrPC also took no such plea and even in the cross-examination of any witnesses, no plea of self defence was taken, the plea of self defence was rejected.[46]579

The right of self-defence need not be specifically pleaded by the accused.[47] It is not necessary for the accused to plead in so many words that he acted in self-defence. If the circumstances show that the right of private defence was legitimately exercised, it is open to the Court to consider such a plea. In a given case, the Court can consider it even if the accused has not taken it, if the same is available to be considered from the material on record.[48] Its benefit can be given to the accused if circumstances show that he may have acted in exercise of it.[49] Plea of self-defence can be entertained by the court even in the absence of evidence of proof and also not withstanding that such stand is highly belated. But this does not mean that whenever there is any injury on the defence side, the defence is to go scot-free and the prosecution case is to fail. All the facts and circumstances have got to be considered before coming to any conclusion.[50]It is not open to the court to call out a plea for defence by applying its imagination to facts and circumstances of the case. The onus is on the accused to establish this right and he might for this purpose take a specific plea or adduce defence evidence. He may, on the basis of material on record, show that apparently criminal act which he committed was justified in exercise of his right of private defence of person or property or both. An accused person can, however, avail of the plea of self-defence without specifically pleading it and without examining any witness by reference to circumstances appearing in prosecution evidence itself.[51] Where the complainant party was the aggressor, no case of right of private defence of person had been pleaded by the accused persons nor put forth in the cross-examination to the eyewitness, it was held that it is well settled that if there is a reasonable probability of the accused having acted in exercise of the right of private defence, the benefit of such a probability can be given to the accused person.[52] The law does not accord to the statement of the accused under s 313, CrPC, full evidentiary value and if the accused desires the court to believe that he acted in the exercise of his right of private defence the burden of proof shall lie on him.[53] It is thus not necessary for the accused to plead, in so many words, that he acted in self-defence. If the circumstances show that the right of private defence was legitimately exercised, it is open to the court to consider such a plea.[54] So, if the same arises from580 the material on record, the court can consider it even if the accused might not have taken it up.[55] But where the plea of self-defence is not taken by the accused and there is no evidence on record to support the plea, the court commits error in acquitting the accused on the basis of their stand of the right of self-defence.[56]

Where the plea of the accused, when read with the evidence of the eye-witnesses, brings out a set of facts and circumstances showing that the accused acted in exercise of the right of private defence, the fact that the accused in his statement under s 313, CrPC referred only to the acts of the deceased and his son hitting him, and he did not admit that he hit back the deceased, is not a ground to reject the plea of private defence.[57]

Introduction and Proof of Plea of Private Defence During Cross-Examination of Prosecution Witness, Etc.

An accused may introduce the plea of self-defence by suggestion in the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses.[58] Of course, it is settled law that the accused need not plead self-defence by examining some witnesses on his behalf or by making any statement. If there are materials, culled out from the cross-examination, that indicate the occurrence had taken place while exercising the self-defence, then, the court can conclude that it is a case of private defence, in order to decide about the nature of the offence committed by the accused.[59] Evidence, establishing a plea of private defence, may be introduced by the prosecution itself, or it may be introduced by the defence by the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, or by the statement of the accused under s 313 of the CrPC, or by defence evidence.[60]

Where right of private defence emerges from the material on record, the Court shall consider the same, and it cannot refuse to consider it merely because the accused persons have not taken the plea in their statement recorded under s 313, CrPC .[61]581

Plea may be Taken in the Alternative

Even in a Case of Total Denial, Such Plea can be Taken

When there is evidence proving that a person accused of killing or injuring another acted in the exercise of the right of private defence, the court may not ignore that evidence and convict the accused merely because the latter set up a different defence and denied having committed the assault.[62]

It is open to a prisoner to adopt a defence in the alternative, and if he cannot satisfy the jury that he did not strike the complainant but can satisfy them, either by the cross-examination of the complainant's witnesses or by adducing evidence on his own behalf, that in striking the complainant, he acted in self-defence, then he is entitled to an acquittal.[63] Even if the accused has, in his statement, taken up a plea to total denial of the offence, it is open to him to raise an alternative plea of the right of private defence if he is able to prove the same on the strength of the prosecution evidence itself.[64] Even where a plea of self-defence on behalf of the accused is inconsistent with the express plea (i.e., plea of alibi) raised by them, but if, on the material placed on record, the plea of private defence could be made out consistent with the provisions of s 105 of the Evidence Act, there will be no justification to deny the benefit of it to the accused.[65] The right of private defence may be pleaded even alternatively with the plea of alibi. It should not be denied to an accused person merely because he does not specifically plead it, provided that circumstances found by the court are such as clearly entitle him to the exercise of that right.[66] A contrary view has, however, been taken by the Calcutta High Court in Dhirendra Nath v State ,[67] where it has been observed:

A plea of the right of private defence can be taken by a person, who admits the act charged against him but pleads an excuse, if a person, however, states that he had not done the act at all, it is difficult to see how at the same time the question of right of private defence would arise.

Plea of Private Defence, Even if not taken in the Trial Court, can be taken in Appeal

If an accused has a right of private defence, he can raise such a plea in appeal, for the first time, even if he omitted to set it out in the trial court.[68] Where the accused has abandoned the plea of self-defence in a trial court but, if the circumstances, established in the case, go to show that the plea of self-defence is well founded, the582 appellate court cannot refuse to consider the plea merely on the ground that the plea has been abandoned in the trial court.[69]

Belated plea of self defence

A belated plea of self defence taken by the accused would not be accepted.[70]

12. Pure Question of Law

The existence of the right of private defence, in a particular case, is a pure question of law.[71]

13. Exercise of the Right of Private Defence--A Question of Fact

Whether in a particular set of circumstances, a person acted in the exercise of the right of private defence is a question of fact to be determined on the facts and circumstances of each case and no test in the abstract for determining such a question can be laid down.[72] In determining this question of fact, the court must consider all the surrounding circumstances.[73]

Right of Private Defence Against Lawful Acts not Available

The right of private defence is not available against lawful acts.[74]There is no right of private defence against an act which is itself an act of self-defence.[75] It is axiomatic that there is no right of private defence against private defence.[76]

Right of Private Defence--Against whom Available

The right of private defence is available against the person or persons from whom imminent danger to life or property is apprehended.[77]The right of private defence of an accused does not extend to the act of causing of death of an unarmed intervener583 who, in no way, assaults him nor in any way, incites him to any trouble against him (deceased).[78] Right of private defence is also not available when the accused inflicts blows on vital parts of the body of unarmed trespasser in sitting position.[79] But this right arises to the accused not only against the person, who actually inflicted a blow, but also against all members of that party which had deliberately formed an unlawful assembly with a common object.[80]

The right of private defence is available only to such person who is suddenly confronted with the necessity of averting danger, which is not self created. Such necessity must be real and apparent.[81]

14. Making of Assault Explained

Showing a knife or chopper by itself may not amount to an assault in all situations. But, if the person who shows the knife or chopper utters words conveying the threat that hurt would be caused with it, such gesture would amount to assault. The distance between the aggressor and the target may have bearing on the question whether the gesture amounted to assault. No precise yardstick can be provided to fix such distance, since it depends upon the situation, the weapon used, the background and the degree of the thrust to attack, etc. When appellant stood near the deceased's shop and displayed the chopper saying that he would not leave the place without killing the deceased and hurled the challenge to the deceased to come out, the appellant committed assault as defined in s 351 of the IPC . The distance of 11 metres is not appreciably so as long to dispel the possibility of instilling the apprehension, when the entire conspectus including the background is viewed. There is no doubt that deceased had the right to repel the assault by resorting to such steps as he considered necessary in the situation. It was held that the appellant was the aggressor and the deceased was acting in exercise of his right of private defence when he went out of his shop and dealt a blow on the appellant with a stick.[82]

15. Burden of Proof

It is well-settled that even in a case where the right of private defence is pleaded, the prosecution is not absolved of its obligation of proving its case beyond reasonable doubt and only when it has discharged that obligation, of primary burden; with the terms of s 101 of the Evidence Act, is the burden shifted on the accused within the terms of s 105 of the Evidence Act .[83] Under s 105 of the Evidence Act 1872, the burden of proof is on the accused, who sets up the plea of self-defence (i.e., private defence), and, in the absence of proof, it is not possible for the court to presume the truth of the plea of self-defence.[84] The burden of bringing a case under any of the584 exceptions enumerated in s 100, IPC, is on the accused, however, that burden is not that onerous as that lies on the prosecution.[1] Such burden can be discharged by probabilizing the defence.[2] The court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. It is for the accused to place the necessary material on record either by themselves adducing positive evidence by eliciting necessary facts from the witnesses examined for the prosecution.[3] An accused person, taking the plea of the right of private defence, is not required to call evidence; he can establish his plea by reference to circumstances transpiring from the prosecution evidence itself.[4] But the question in such a case would be a question of assessing the true effect of the prosecution evidence, and not a question of the accused discharging any burden.[5]

When an accused person sets up a plea of self-defence, the onus to establish that plea lies on him. It is well established that the accused is not required to prove that plea beyond reasonable doubt but has merely to show it as probable. The onus to probablise the defence version, from the salient facts and circumstances appearing in the prosecution case, or otherwise set up by the accused in form of defence evidence, is always on him.[6] A person taking the plea of right of private defence is not required to call evidence on his side, but he can establish that plea by reference to the circumstances transpiring from the prosecution evidence itself.[7] of the prosecution evidence itself.[8] Even if the accused fails to establish, to the satisfaction of the court, the plea of private defence, he is entitled to be acquitted if, upon a consideration of the evidence, as a whole, reasonable doubt has crept into the mind of the court whether the accused person is or is not entitled to the benefit of the said plea.[9]585

Accused Can Rely Upon Prosecution Evidence to Prove Self-Defence

An accused can take advantage of the prosecution evidence as it stands; his failure to set up an express plea of private defence cannot preclude him from making out such a defence on the basis.

In a criminal case, if the prosecution adduces reliable evidence for proving all the ingredients of the charges against the accused persons, the prosecution is entitled to succeed, unless the accused relies on any general or special exception, in which case the burden is on him to prove the exception. In a case where the accused was said to have attacked the complainant or members of the complainant's party, it was sufficient for the prosecution to prove that the accused did so with the requisite intention. In the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses, it is not necessary for the prosecution to put questions as regards matters which are not included in the ingredients of the offence charged against the accused. Of course the prosecution must be fair and if there are any circumstances tending to show that the accused may have acted in the exercise of private defence, the prosecution must place such circumstances before the court. If the accused had sustained injuries, the prosecution must place the fact that the accused had injuries before the court, but it is not necessary for the prosecution to cogently explain how the accused sustained injuries. The prosecution must prove the alleged criminal acts of the accused and the alleged criminal intention. But it is not necessary for it to cogently explain a fact, which is not one of the ingredients of the offence charged. It is open to the defence to put questions to the prosecution witnesses in order to show that their evidence is not entitled to credit, or that they have given false or unsatisfactory answers to the questions put to them in the cross-examination. The defence can use such answer given in the cross-examination in order to discredit the testimony of the prosecution witnesses.[10]

16. Plea of Private Defence Need not be Proved beyond Reasonable Doubt

When the accused has taken a specific plea of self-defence he need not prove the same beyond all reasonable doubt. The court has to examine the probabilities in appreciating such a plea.[11] The burden of establishing the plea of self-defence is on the accused and the burden stands discharged by showing preponderance of probabilities in favour of that plea on the basis of the material on record.[12] But if586 there is any reasonable doubt, even from prosecution evidence, that the aggressor in the occurrence was not the accused but would have been the deceased party, then the benefit of that reasonable doubt has to be extended to the accused. It does not matter that he did not adduce any evidence in that direction.[13] In Salim Zia v State of Uttar Pradesh ,[14] their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed:

> It is true that the burden on an accused person to establish the plea of self-defence is not as onerous as the one which lies on the prosecution and that, while the prosecution is required to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt, the accused need not establish the plea to the hilt and may discharge his onus by establishing a mere preponderance of probabilities either by laying basis for that plea in the cross-examination of the prosecution-witnesses or by adducing defence evidence.

It is trite law that an accused can rely on the prosecution evidence itself to substantiate his plea of self-defence. When no such evidence is available as where there are no indicative circumstances which would enable the accused to plead right of private defence, court cannot act on mere conjectures or bold suggestions.[15] It is not necessary that the accused should affirmatively prove the exercise of the right of private defence; if, upon evidence, it appears that he is entitled to the right of private defence, neither the ignorance of the accused, nor his fear, nor the falsity, nor weakness in his defence will deprive him of the benefit of right of private defence if the evidence, adduced either by him or by the prosecution, shows that he might have acted in the lawful exercise of the right of private defence.[16] The accused need not prove the existence of the right of private defence beyond reasonable doubt,[17] it is enough for him to show, as in a civil case, that the preponderance of probabilities is in favour of his plea.[18] It would be sufficient in the case if the accused person, from the evidence on the record, merely makes out a prima facie case and if, from the evidence it appears probable that the defence version is true and he is entitled to a decision in his favour though he has not proved the truth of his version beyond reasonable doubt.[19] Where the prosecution has given a truncated, false and suppressed version of the prosecution story, the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt in his plea of self-defence,[20] even if the accused has not conclusively and completely established the right of self-defence. If the court, after review of the entire evidence on the record, finds that the plea is a plausible theory and if the court entertains a reasonable doubt in its mind as to the guilt of the accused, the accused is587 entitled to the benefit even though the accused person has not been able to establish his plea of self-defence.[21]

It is well settled that the burden of establishing the plea of self-defence is on the accused but it is not as onerous as the one that lies on the prosecution. While the prosecution is required to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt, the accused need not establish the plea of self-defence to the hilt and may discharge the onus by showing preponderance of probabilities in favour of that plea on the basis of the material on record.[22]

17. Injuries on either Party, how Far Determine the Right of Private Defence

The absence of any injury whatever on the side of the accused is eloquent to discount the plea of private defence.[23] The presence of injuries on the side of the accused shows that the accused acted in the exercise of the right of private defence.[24] Where both the sides had received injuries, and the injuries of the accused were not explained by the prosecution, the accused persons were held entitled to the benefit of doubt, and acquitted of the charges under ss 149, 307, IPC .[25] Where the death of the deceased was due to injury on the head and evidence showed that the accused himself sustained injuries inflicted on him by the deceased first and there was no explanation as to injuries on the person of the accused, it was held that the accused was entitled to the right of private defence and his conviction was set aside.[26] Where the prosecution was not able to prove that the accused persons were aggressors, the accused persons suffered injuries on vital parts of their bodies but no explanation was given by the prosecution of the said injuries, the accused were held entitled to right of private defence of person and property.[27] The accused had sustained grievous and simple injuries, which were not explained by the prosecution. The defence plea that the accused acted in exercise of right of private defence was accepted, and accused was held entitled to the benefit of doubt and was acquitted of the charge of murder.[28] Where the injuries sustained by the accused persons alleged to be received during the course of the incident are not on vital parts of the body and as such insignificant, the non-explanation of those injuries cannot be advantageous to the defence nor can it be588 said that the prosecution, in not explaining those injuries, had suppressed the genesis of the incident.[29] There cannot be any nexus between injuries being wet and their being manufactured. Even in case of a genuine injury if water was to fall, it would become a wet injury. Thus possibility of water falling on the injuries of the accused prior to his arrest cannot be eliminated.[30]

Where there was a scuffle between the accused and complainant party, the deceased and his son caused head injuries to the accused person, the first accused had six injuries including head injury while the second accused had one head injury, the said injuries were not explained by the prosecution and a version of self-defence became probable in view of the injuries caused to the accused by the deceased and his son, accused cannot be said to have exceeded the right of self-defence.[31] Where the admission was made by the prosecution witness about registration of a cross-case by the accused persons against the complainant party but it was not clear as to what happened to that case, there was no explanation of injuries received by the accused persons, from the side of the prosecution, the plea of self-defence was found acceptable and the accused were held entitled to be acquitted.[32] Where the injuries alleged to be received by the appellant accused were self suffered, or the appellant had received the same in some other manner, the non-explanation of the injuries of the accused appellant was held not fatal to the prosecution case.[33]

Mere non-explanation of the injuries by the prosecution may not affect the prosecution case in all cases and the said principle applies to cases where the injuries sustained by the accused are minor and superficial or where the evidence is so clear and cogent, so independent and disinterested and so probable, consistent and creditworthy that it far outweighs the effect of the omission on the part of the prosecution to explain the injuries.[34]

Where the injuries suffered by the accused are minor and superficial, the prosecution is not required to explain those injuries.[35]

Where the evidence on record showed that the injured first gave two lathi blows to one of the accused on the date of the incident causing three injuries including a grievous one, the brother of the accused gave a single blow to the injured at that moment, cannot be said to have exceeded the right of private defence, conviction of the accused persons was set aside.[36] The number of injuries is not always a safe criterion for determining who the aggressor was.[37] Where injuries were suffered by both sides and were not explained and both sides came out with only the partial truth,589 the prosecution is not the gainer in these circumstances. The lacerated wound on the head of the accused which was bleeding when medically examined, was not explained by the eyewitness of prosecution, it was sufficient to acquit the accused.[38]

Where the injuries on the side of the accused are numerous and extensive, they support the defence version that the accused acted in the exercise of the right of private defence.[39] Number of injuries on the accused side, by itself, may not be sufficient to establish the right of private defence. The defence was able to probabilise that the complainant party attacked first. A5 received six injuries and few of these injuries were grievous. A8 sustained eight injuries while A7 received nine injuries, some of which were grievous. A6 also received injuries. Held, the accused persons acted in exercise of right of private defence, and the case was covered by Exception 2 to s 300, IPC . Conviction of accused under ss 302 / 34 was altered to conviction under s 304, Pt I.[40] If there is a great disproportion between the number of injuries inflicted on the two sides, it certainly indicates that those, who had inflicted the larger number of injuries, were likely to be aggressors.[41] But the number of injuries is not always a safe criterion for determining who the aggressor was.[42] Non-explanation of injuries sustained by the accused cannot be a ground to disbelieve the prosecution case in view of cogent evidence regarding assault by accused on deceased.[43] The omission on the part of the prosecution to explain the injuries on the person of the accused assumes much greater importance where the evidence consists of interested or inimical witnesses or where the defence gives a version which competes in probability with that of the prosecution one.[44] It cannot be stated as a universal rule that whenever the injuries are on the body of the accused persons, a presumption must necessarily be raised that the accused persons had caused injuries in exercise of the right of private defence. The defence has to further establish that the injuries, so caused on the accused, probablise the version of the right of private defence.[45] Where accused persons arrived at the scene of occurrence and started indiscriminate firing and killed one person and injured two persons, the failure of the prosecution to explain some minor injuries on the person of the accused was held not590 fatal and plea of private defence of property or person was held not available to accused persons.[46] Where accused persons proved that injuries were caused to them by the complainant party in the alleged incident, the prosecution did not explain injuries caused to the accused persons. It was held that the accused were entitled to the right of self-defence.[47] Where the injuries, received by the party of the deceased, are serious and extensive, they do not, by themselves, countenance the accused's plea of self-defence,[48] or that they exceeded their right of self-defence.[49] Where all the accused had received injuries and one of them had also received an incised wound while the deceased and his companions were caused injuries by the accused with lathis and dandas, it cannot be said that the accused had at all exceeded their right of self-defence.

The accused pleaded a theory of self defence contending that the injured persons and the deceased persons had come to his hotel armed with deadly weapons challenging him when he was alone in the hotel and that they attempted to assault him. He contended that when he ducked to avoid a blow, it fell on the head of the person who was holding him, such that this person sustained injuries and that, in the meantime, he managed to snatch one of the weapons held by the assailants and in self defence, a wide hit was given by him to the assailants and thereafter, he escaped from the blows. As such he was not responsible for any injuries found on the body of the deceased and the injured. The plea was found devoid of substance. Plea of self defence was rejected. Accused appellant convicted under s 302, IPC .[50]

The accused fired a gun on the deceased causing death. The deceased was not armed, nor did he make any attempt on the life of the appellant. Held, the plea of the right of private defence was found not sustainable. Accused appellant was convicted under s 302, IPC .[51]

Plea that the accused acted in exercise of right of self defence was not suggested to the prosecution witnesses in their cross-examination. There was no evidence that the complainant party was approaching the accused party with an intention of causing a bodily harm, for they were wholly unarmed. It was the accused party which appeared to be armed with weapons like lathi, farsi, tanchia and katta. Further, the evidence on record did not suggest that any member of the complainant party had done any act which could have created a reasonable apprehension in the minds of accused of danger to their person or to their property. Thus, the plea of self defence was found devoid of substance, and was rejected.[52]

18. Right of Self-Defence Accepted--Illustrative Cases

The deceased R and two PWS had gone to the field of the accused appellants and there was a fight between the two groups. The appellants fought to repel the attack591 and in the course of the incident, both sides sustained injuries, as a result of which R died. In such circumstances, it was possible for the Court to accept the claim of the appellants that since they were defending themselves, they had a right of private defence.[53]

The evidence showed that P (since deceased) was not present at the place where R was assaulted, and after inflicting injuries on the person of R, the accused appellants ran towards P (second deceased) who was standing ten steps away from the place of incident. After seeing the incident relating to the death of R, P started running and he was chased by the accused persons and they inflicted lathi blows on his person. Held, in such a situation, the accused appellant had no right to invoke right of self defence by chasing P and causing fatal injuries to him. Reasonable apprehension disappeared when P was running away from the scene to escape from the scene. The conviction of the accused appellants under ss 302 / 34 was held proper.[54]

Quarrel between the parties arose in Panchayat meeting in the village. Accused appellants were not armed, and evidence did not establish that the accused persons were aggressors. The injuries sustained by the appellants on the vital parts of their body were not explained by the prosecution. Part of incident was also suppressed by the prosecution. Held, the possibility of the appellants accused having acted in the exercise of the right of private defence could not be ruled out. Thus, appellants accused were held entitled to acquittal, and were acquitted of the charges under ss 147, 326, 302 read with s 34, IPC .[55]

Appellant accused had caused simple injury to the victim, and in the same incident, he had also received injuries. Held, appellant was justified in causing injuries in the exercise of private defence, and his conviction under s 324, IPC was set aside.[56]

19. Right of Self-Defence Rejected--Illustrative Cases

The accused only claimed the right of private defence but failed to place necessary material on record, either by himself adducing positive evidence or by eliciting any necessary facts from the witness examined by the prosecution. There was no reasonable apprehension of death or grievous hurt to the appellant. There was property dispute between rival parties and in the assault, the appellant caused the death of the deceased and injuries to the injured witness. The claim of private defence was rejected.[57]

The prosecution case was that the accused persons armed with weapons went to the house of the complainant, assaulted the family members of the complainant and caused the death of one person. The accused persons took plea that they caused injuries in exercise of right of self defence. The presence of the dead body in the house of the complainant falsified its version. The injuries suffered by the accused were superficial, as such, no explanation of the injuries by the prosecution was592 inconsequential. Conviction of the accused for offences under ss 302 and 149, IPC was held proper.[58]

The defence was able to probabilise that the complainant party attacked first. A5 received six injuries and few of these injuries were grievous. A8 sustained eight injuries while A7 received nine injuries some of which were grievous. A6 also received injuries. Number of injuries on the accused side by itself may not be sufficient to establish the right of private defence.[59]

The accused in examination under s 313, CrPC stated that the deceased armed with axe etc. entered the house with his sons and attacked one of the accused, such that the accused acted in exercise of their right of self defence. The deceased was an old man, his sons, female members of his family were carrying only axe and sticks, it could not be imagined that they would have gone to another village for a fight. They were not aggressors. The plea of self defence taken by the accused persons was rejected.[60]

The defence plea that the deceased was a hardcore criminal, and had old enmity with the accused and therefore the accused acted in the exercise of right of private defence was rejected as the accused shot him with a 12 bore gun causing the death.[61]

81 Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) ; Vidya Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1971 SC 1857 .

82 Sekar v State (2003) Cr LJ 53 (SC) ; Rizan v State of Chhatisgarh, through the Chief Secretary, Govt of Chhatisgarh, Raipur (2003) Cr LJ 1226 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; V Subramani v State of Tamil Nadu (2005) Cr LJ 1727 (SC) ; Shahjahan v State of Kerala (2007) Cr LJ 2291 (Ker) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) ; Dharam v State of Haryana (2007) Cr LJ 791 (SC) ; Ranveer Singh v State of MP 2009 Cr LJ 1534, AIR 2009 SC 1658, 2009 (1) Scale 740 .

83 Ranveer Singh v State of MP 2009 Cr LJ 1534, p 1536, AIR 2009 SC 1658, 2009 (1) Scale 740 .

84 State of Mysore v Raju Shetty AIR 1961 Mys 74, p 81 ; Chandra Bhan v State AIR 1954 All 39, p 41, (1954) Cr LJ 26 ; State of Orissa v Igni Dalal (1963) Cut LT 200 ; Munney Khan v State AIR 1971 SC 1491, p 1494, (1970) MPLJ 893 .

85 Nga Chit Tin v King AIR 1939 Rang 225, p 229 .

86 Kelu Sahu v State (1963) Cut LT 245 ; Durgapal v State AIR 1963 All WR 746 (HC); Gorie Sankar v Sultan AIR 1971 LB 12 (1) ; State v Narayanan AIR 1956 Tr & Coch 89, p 90; Mustaquim Jagga v Emperor AIR 1939 Lah 416 ; Munney Khan v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1971 SC 1491, p 1494, 1970 SCC 491 (Cr) ; Benudhar Naik v State of Orissa (1985) 59 Cut LT 155, (1985) 1 Crimes 436 .

87 Pagla Baba v State AIR 1957 Ori 130, p 150 ; Ram Saiya v Emperor AIR 1948 All 205, 49 Cr LJ 422 ; State of Orissa v Rama Muduli (1973) Cut LT 44, (1973) Cr LJ 1326 ; Raising Mohima v State of Gujarat (1962) 1 Cr LJ 717, AIR 1962 Guj 203 ; Deo Narain v State (1973) Cr LJ 677, p 679, AIR 1973 SC 473 ; Puran Singh v State (1975) Cr LJ 1479, AIR 1975 SC 1674 ; Mukhtiar Singh v State of Punjab (1975) Cr LJ 132, p 135, (1974) Punj LJ 338(Cr); Madan Chandra Dutta v State of Assam (1977) Cr LJ 506, p 508 (Gau) ; Raja Ram v State (1977) All Cr C 25 .

88 Dhanno Khan v State AIR 1957 All 317, p 318 ; Navratan Chand v State of Rajasthan (1977) Cr LR 513, p 516 ; Majin Thomas George v State of Madhya Pradesh (1977) Cr LR 89 (MP) ; State v Adwaita Behera (1961) Cut LT 367 ; Rama Kant Tiwary v State of Bihar (1968) Pat LJR 544 ; Durgapal v State (1963) All WR 746 (HC) ; Munney Khan v State AIR 1971 SC 1491, p 1494, (1970) MPLJ 893 ; Bhajan Suna v State (1974) 40 Cut LT 325, (1975) Cr LJ 1555, p 1557 .

89 Ganouri Lal Das v Queen-Empress 16 ILR Cal 206, p 208 .

90 Ram Nandanprosad Singh v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 463, p 464, 17 CWN 1132 ; State v Kartar Singh AIR 1958 All 90 ; Gyasuddin Ahmad v Emperor AIR 1932 Pat 215 .

91 Ram Nandanprosad Singh v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 463, p 464, 17 CWN 1132 ; Basan Bhowmick v State AIR 1963 Cal 3, p 5 .

92 Kabiruddin v Emperor 35 ILR Cal 368 ; Muniruddine v Emperor 35 ILR Cal 384 ; State v Banwari Singh AIR 1951 Pat 473 ; Bindaban Swain v State AIR 1957 Ori 117, (1957) Cr LJ 644 ; Mahommad Ibrahim v Emperor AIR 1929 Nag 43, p 47 ; Bhairon Singh v Emperor AIR 1935 Nag 141 ; Queen-Empress v Prag Dutt (1898) 20 ILR All 459 .

93 Barlsa Mudi v State AIR 1959 Pat 22, p 26, (1959) Cr LJ 71 .

94 Rohtash v State of Haryana 1993 Cr LJ 3303, p 3309 (P&H) (DB).

95 Krishnan v State of Tamil Nadu (2006) Cr LJ 3907 (SC) .

96 Darshan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 2010 SC 1212, (2010) 2 SCC 333, 2010 Cr LJ 1393 .

1 Re *Ningappa Balappa Hadli*AIR 1960 Mys 294, p 295 .

2 Nga Chit Tin v King AIR 1939 Rang 225, p 229-30 ; Sujya v State of Rajasthan (2003) Cr LJ 1612 (Raj) .

3 Hamil Singh v State 2009 Cr LJ 3671 (Del) (DB) .

4 Shahjahan v State of Kerala (2007) Cr LJ 2291 (SC) ; Dharam v State of Haryana 2007 Cr LJ 791, AIR 2007 SC 397 ; Haren Das v State of Assam 2012 Cr LJ 1467 (Gauh) (DB) .

5 Pahar Singh & Ors v State of Rajasthan (1999) Cr LJ 1150 (Raj)(DB); Bhagwan Singh v State 2009 Cr LJ 1987 (Utr) .

6 Mohammad Iqbal v State of Madhya Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ 337, p 342 (Chh) (DB) .

7 Benudhar Naik v State of Orissa (1985) 59 Cut LT 155, (1985) 1 Crimes 436 .

8 Himalu Ram v State of Himachal Pradesh 2012 Cr LJ (NOC) 325 (HP) .

9 Bihari Rai v State of Bihar 2009 Cr LJ 340 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 18 .

10 Narain Singh v State of Haryana 2008 Cr LJ 2613, AIR 2008 SC 2006, 2008 AIR SCW 2641, 2008 (6) Scale 45 .

11 Haren Das v State of Assam 2012 Cr LJ 1467, p 1471 (Gauh) (DB) .

12 ZD Samuel v Emperor AIR 1937 Pesh 23, p 27 ; Dhananjai v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1994 SC 551, (1994) SCC 184 (Cr), (1994) Cr LJ 614 ; Pandarinath Punjaram v State Maharashtra 2008 Cr LJ (NOC) 79 (Bom) .

13 Guptar v Rex AIR 1949 All 109 .

14 AC Gangadhar v State of Karnataka (1998) Cr LJ 3602 (SC) .

15 Ram Nandanprosad Singh v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 463, p 464, 17 CWN 1132 ; State v Kartar Singh AIR 1958 All 90 ; but seeGhyasuddin Ahmed v Emperor* AIR 1932 Pat 215 .

16 Manjeet Singh v State of HP 2014 AIR SCW 4195, (2014) 5 SCC 697, 2014 (140) AIC 266 (SC) .

17 Ibid;Basan Bhowmick v State AIR 1963 Cal 3, p 5 .

18 Kabiruddin v Emperor 35 ILR Cal 368 ; Manisuddin v Emperor 35 ILR Cal 384 ; State v Banwari Singh AIR 1951 Pat 473 ; Bindaban Swami v State AIR 1957 Ori 117 .

19 Queen Empress v Prag Dutt, (1898) 20 ILR All 459 .

20 Jangli Ram v State of Chhattisgarh 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 366 (Chh) (DB).

21 Bhagwan Singh v State 2009 Cr LJ 1987, p 1996 (Utr) .

22 Mahesh v State of Madhya Pradesh 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 953 (MP) (DB).

23 Munaf v State of UP 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 1202 (All) (DB).

24 Mahommad Ibrahim v Emperor AIR 1929 Nag 43, p 47 ; Bhairon Singh v Emperor AIR 1935 Nag 161 .

25 Barisa Mudi v State AIR 1959 Pat 22, p 26, (1959) Cr LJ 71 .

26 Salim v State of Haryana 2008 Cr LJ 4327, p 4331 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 5553, (2008) 12 SCC 705, 2008 (8) JT 677, 2008 (11) Scale 255 . See alsoAshok Kumar v State of Tamil Nadu* 2006 Cr LJ 2931, AIR 2006 SC 2419, (2006) 10 SCC 157 .

27 Nga Ba Sein v Emperor AIR 1936 Rang 1, p 2 ; Re *Pachai Gounden*AIR 1915 Mad 532 ; Re *Jogali Bhaigo Naik*AIR 1927 Mad 97, 27 Cr LJ 1198 ; Bahadur Khan v Emperor AIR 1933 Oudh 63, p 65 ; Govindam Neelambaran v State of Kerala AIR 1960 Ker 258, p 259 .

28 Thommen v State of Kerala AIR 1958 Ker 74, p 76 ; Thommen Thomas v State of Kerala AIR 1957 Ker 53 .

29 Bhadur Singh v State of Punjab (1992) 4 SCC 503 .

30 Nur Dad v Emperor AIR 1932 Lah 606 ; Ajudhia Prasad v Emperor AIR 1925 All 664 ; Yusuf Hussain v Emperor 40 ILR All 284, 19 Cr LJ 371 ; Ambika Singh v State AIR 1961 All 38 ; Veerama Nadar v Emperor 13 Cr LJ 470, (1912) Mad WN 404 ; Rehman Shah v Emperor AIR 1926 Nag 202 ; Kartar Singh Kishan Singh v Raj AIR 1951 Raj 129 .

31 GVS Subrayanam v State of Andhra Pradesh AIR 1970 SC 1079 .

32 Bathusingh v State of MP (2004) Cr LJ 4850 (SC) .

33 State of Rajasthan v Shiv Singh 2011 Cr LJ 580, p 589 (Raj) (DB) .

34 Madan v State of Madhya Pradesh 2008 Cr LJ 3950, AIR 2008 SC 3083, [2008] 10 SCR 855, (2008) 11 SCC 657 ; Salim v State of Haryana 2008 Cr LJ 4327 (SC), (2008) 12 SCC 705, 2008 (8) JT 677, 2008 (11) Scale 255 ; Mahinder Kumar v State (1996) Cr LJ 2945 (Del) (DB) ; Jagan Ram v State of MP 2014 (137) AIC 749 (Chh) .

35 Kuduvakuzinyil Sudhkarar v State (1995) Cr LJ 721, p 723 (P&H).

36 Dwaru Patra v State (1968) Cut LT 110, p 111-17, (1968) JD 1471 ; Kailov v State of Madhya Pradesh (1966) MPLJ 877, (1966) Cr LJ 841 .

37 Biran Singh v State of Bihar (1974) Cr AR (SC) 321, AIR 1975 SC 87, p 90 ; Sekar v State (2003) Cr LJ 53 (SC) .

38 Re Thangavelu(1972) Cr LJ 390, pp 392-93, (1971) Mad LJ 663 (Cr) (DB).

39 (1970) Raj LW 604.

40 Risala v State (1970) All Cr R 443 .

41 1974 WLN (UC) 414.

42 1974 WLN (UC) 73.

43 Madan v State of Madhya Pradesh 2008 Cr LJ 3950, p 3952, AIR 2008 SC 3083, 2008 (10) Scale 33, (2008) 3 SCC (Cr) 942 ; Salim v State of Haryana 2008 Cr LJ 4327 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 5553, (2008) 12 SCC 705, 2008 (8) JT 677, 2008 (11) Scale 255 .

44 V Subramani v State of Tamil Nadu (2005) Cr LJ 1727 (SC), (2005) 10 SCC 1983 ; Budh Singh v State of UP 2005 Cr LJ 2005 (All) (DB) .

45 Kanhaiya Lal v State of Rajasthan 2012 Cr LJ 252, p 255 (Raj) .

46 Natvarsingh Bhalsingh Bhabhor v State of Gujarat 2008 Cr LJ 4074, p 4079 (Gauh) (DB) .

47 Ram Dhani & Ors v State of Uttar Pradesh (1977) Cr LJ 2287 (All) (DB) ; GVS Subrayanam v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1970 SC 1079 .

48 V Subramani v State of Tamil Nadu 2005 Cr LJ 1727, p 1729, 1730, (2005) 10 SCC 358, AIR 2005 SC 1983, 2005 (2) Scale 546 (SC) ; Budh Singh v State of UP 2005 Cr LJ 2005, p 2009 (All) (DB) .

49 Ghanshyam v State (1982) Cr LJ 138 (All), (1982) All Cr C 43, (1932) Cr LR 1 (UP), (1981) All Cr R 394 .

50 Shivaji Ganu Naik v State of Maharashtra & Anor (1999) Cr LJ 471 (Bom) (DB) .

51 Ram Manohar v State of Madhya Pradesh (1989) 1 Cr LC 717 (MP) ; Malleshi Sharnappa Bargude v State of Maharashtra (1994) 1 Andh LT 2 (NOR) (AP) ; Adhimoolam v State (1995) Cr LJ 1051, p 1056 (Mad) .

52 State of Maharashtra v Tanji Dagadu Ohavan & Ors (1998) Cr LJ 4515 (Bom) (DB) .

53 Ali Shaikh v State (1992) 96 Cal WN 560 .

54 Govindam Neelambaran v State of Kerala AIR 1960 Ker 258, p 259 ; Satar Khan v State (1969) All WR 356(HC); State of Uttar Pradesh v Jagdish AIR 1966 All 244, (1966) Cr LJ 503 ; Taranath v State of Rajasthan (1973) RLW 704, (1973) WLN 736, p 739 ; Sandhya Rani Bardhan v State (1977) Assam LR 36 ; Mathai Mathews v State of Maharashtra (1969) 2 SCWR 255, (1969) UJ (SC) 466 ; M Kondian v Venkataratnam (1962) 1 Cr LJ 634, (1961) Mad LJ 585 (Cr) ; Raghunandan Yadav v State of Bihar (1971) Pat LJR 124 ; Allappa Ningappa Mugalkhod v State of Mysore (1972) 1 Mys LJ 406, (1972) MLJ 292 (Cr) ; State of Orissa v Gollari Damo (1973) Cr LJ 117, p 119 (Ori) ; State of Orissa v Rama Mudali (1973) Cr LJ 1326, p 1328 (Ori) ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Ram Swaroop AIR 1974 SC 1570, (1974) Cr LJ 1035 ; Saitua v State of Madhya Pradesh (1973) MPLJ 122 ; Dhanno v State of Madhya Pradesh (1974) MPLJ 34 (NOC) ; State of Karnataka v Shivashankar (1978) Mad LJ 224 (Cr), (1978) 1 Kant LJ 197 .

55 Munshi Ram v Delhi Admn (1968) 2 SCJ 521, AIR 1968 SC 702, [1968] 2 SCR 455 ; Rajnikant v State of Maharashtra (1971) Cr LJ (N) 5 ; Raghunandan Yadav v State of Bihar (1972) BLJR 35 (Summary of Cases), (1969) Cr LJ 1577, p 1580, (1969) Ker LR 471; State of Gujarat v Bai Fatima AIR 1975 SC 1478, (1975) Cr LJ 1079 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Mohd Munsheer Khan AIR 1977 SC 2226, (1977) Cr LJ 1897 ; Saiduddin v State (1973) Cr LJ 1643, p 1645 (All) ; State of Orissa v Ghenu (1978) Cr LJ 262, p 264 (Ori) ; Saitua v State of Madhya Pradesh (1973) MPLJ 122 ; BV Survada v State of Gujarat (1972) Cr LJ 1574, p 1577 (Guj) (DB) (plea of self-defence can be established form the prosecution's evidence); Re Narsingh Naik(1972) Cr LJ 1150, p 1157, (1972) Mad LJ 38 (Cr), (1971) 2 Mys LJ 552; Taranath v State of Rajasthan (1973) Raj LW 704, (1973) WLN 736 (DB) ; Gulijara Singh v State (1971) Cr LJ 498, p 505, AIR 1971 Raj 68, AIR 1968 SC 702, AIR 1973 Mad 97 relied on), (1975) Punj LR 93 (Cr) (DB); State of Karnataka v Shivshankar (1978) Ker LJ 197, p 199, (1978) Mad LJ 224 (Cr) ; Malleshi Sharnappa Burgude v State of Maharashtra (1994) 1 Andh LT 2 (NOR) (AP) .

56 State of Uttar Pradesh v Mohd Munsheer Khan AIR 1977 SC 2226, (1977) Cr LJ 1897, (1977) 3 SCC 562 ; State of Gujarat v Bai Fatima AIR 1975 SC 1478, (1975) Cr LJ 1079 ; Salim Zia v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1979 SC 391, p 395 .

57 Krishnan v State of Tamil Nadu 2006 Cr LJ 3907, p 3913 (SC), AIR 2006 SC 3037, (2006) 11 SCC 304 .

58 Kamta v State (1978) All WC 281, (1979) Cr LJ 56 (NOC) (All) ; Ram Kishan v State of Rajasthan 2007 Cr LJ 2865 (Raj) .

59 Nagaraj v State (2006) Cr LJ 3724 (Mad) (DB) .

60 Dhansukh v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1961 MP 241, p 243 ; Kamta v State (1978) All WC 281, (1979) Cr LJ (NOC) 56 (All) ; but see also Govt of Bombay v Sakur AIR 1947 Bom 38 ; Ghanshyam v State (1982) Cr LJ 138 (All), (1982) All Cr C 43, (1982) UP Cr LR 1, (1981) All Cr R 394 .

61 State of Rajasthan v Manoj Kumar 2014 Cr LJ 2420, p 2422, 2423 (SC), (2014) 2 SCC (Cri) 702, (2014) 138 AIC 261 (SC), (Munshi Ram v Delhi Administration AIR 1968 SC 702, 1968 Cr LJ 806 referred to); Sumer Singh v Surabhajan Singh 2014 Cr LJ 3246, p 3252 (SC), AIR 2014 SC 2840, (2014) 3 SCC (Cri) 184 .

62 Ghulam Rasul v Emperor AIR 1922 Lah 314, p 315, 22 Cr LJ 507 .

63 Afiruddi Chakdar v Emperor AIR 1919 Cal 439, p 441 ; Sagar Chandia v State AIR 1962 Cal 85, p 86, (1962) 1 Cr LJ 137 ; Ambika Singh v State AIR 1961 All 38 .

64 Ramachandra v State AIR 1969 Bom 20, p 21, (1969) Cr LJ 112, 70 Bom LR 399 ; Sagar Chandia v State AIR 1962 Cal 85, p 86 (1962) 1 Cr LJ 137.

65 State of Mysore v Raju Shetty AIR 1961 Mys 76, p 80, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 403, p 409 ; GVS Subbrayanam v State of Andhra Pradesh AIR 1970 SC 1079, p 1088, (1970) Cr LJ 1004 ; Raghunandan Yadav v State of Bihar (1972) BLJR 35 (Summary of Cases).

66 Janki Mahto v Emperor AIR 1933 Pat 568, p 570 .

67 Dhirendra Nath v State, AIR 1952 Cal 621, p 624 .

68 Gangada v State of Rajasthan (1975) Cr LJ 1445, p 1447 (Raj) ; Nur Dad v Emperor AIR 1932 Lah 606 ; Ajudhia Prasad v Emperor AIR 1925 All 664 ; Yusuf Hussain v Emperor 40 ILR All 284, 19 Cr LJ 371 ; Ambika Singh v State AIR 1961 All 38 ; Kartar Singh Kishan Singh v Raj AIR 1951 Raj 129 ; Abdul Latif v State of Madhya Pradesh (1988) 17 Rep (MP) 568 .

69 Ahir Raj Ladha v State of Gujarat (1969) 2 SCWR 828, p 831 .

70 Ajit Singh v State of Haryana 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 201 (P&H) (DB).

71 Baburam Raut v Emperor 14 Cr LJ 295, p 296, 17 Cal LJ 394 .

72 V Subramani v State of Tamil Nadu (2005) Cr LJ 1727 (SC) ; Shahjahan v State of Kerala (2007) Cr LJ 2291 (Ker) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) ; Sekar v State (2003) Cr LJ 53 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; Dhanna v State of Rajasthan (1964) Raj LW 126, p 130 ; Bharwad Vibha Ghoga v State (1955) Cr LJ 23, p 24, AIR 1955 Sau 1 (decided cases are not of much help except as indicating generally the principles which should be borne in mind in deciding the question); Gundicha Bhoi v State (1963) 1 Cr LJ 700, p 702, 29 Cut LT 15 .

73 V Subramani v State of Tamil Nadu (2005) Cr LJ 1727 (SC) ; Sekar v State (2003) Cr LJ 53 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; Shahjahan v State of Kerala (2007) Cr LJ 2291 (Ker) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) ; Delhi Admn v Mahadev (1966) Cr LJ 358, p 361 (Punj) .

74 Raising Mohima v State of Gujarat (1962) 1 Cr LJ 717, p 720, AIR 1962 Guj 203 ; Faiyaz Khan v Rex AIR 1949 All 180, p 183, 50 Cr LJ 232 ; Nazir v Rex AIR 1951 All 3, p 4, (1950) All LJ 770 (FB) ; Chandra Bhan v State AIR 1954 All 39, (1954) Cr LJ 26 (FB) ; Guru Charan Singh v State (1965) Cr LJ 582, AIR 1965 All 543 ; State v Ram Bai (1953) Cr LJ 1081, (1954) Nag LJ 429, AIR 1953 Nag 211 ; Ranbaran v State of Bihar (1965) 2 Cr LJ 18, AIR 1963 Ori 52 ; Basan Bhowmick v State (1963) 1 Cr LJ 46, AIR 1963 Cal 3 .

75 Raising Mohima v State of Gujarat (1962) 1 Cr LJ 717, p 720, AIR 1962 Guj 203 ; Ram Saiyor v Emperor 49 Cr LJ 422, p 425-26, AIR 1948 All 205 (FB) ; Falyaz Khan v Rex AIR 1949 All 180, 183, 50 Cr LJ 232 ; Nazir v Rex AIR 1951 All 3, p 4, (1950) All LJ 770 (FB) ; Gauri Shankar v Emperor AIR 1917 LB 11 .

76 Mathews alias Mathai v State of Kerala (1993) Cr LJ 213 (Ker)(DB); State of Madhya Pradesh v Mohandas (1992) MPLJ 30 .

77 Bhima v Parmananda (1972) Cr LJ 820, p 822, 37 Cut LT 1040 .

78 Mukhtiar Singh v State (1971) Cr LJ 1049, p 1054-55 (Punj) ; Gurbachan Singh v State of Haryana 1974 Cr LJ 463, p 464, AIR 1974 SC 496 ; Kuduvakuzinyil Sudhakarar v State (1995) Cr LJ 721 (Ker) .

79 Maguni Charan Pradhan v State of Orissa (1991) 72 Cut LT 413 (SC) .

80 Mod Singh v State (1954) ILR 4 Raj 7, (1954) Raj LW 392 ; Guljara Singh v State (1971) Cr LJ 498, 505, AIR 1971 Raj 68 .

81 Haren Das v State of Assam 2012 Cr LJ 1467, p 1471 (Gauh) (DB) .

82 Mathew alias Mathai v State of Kerala (1993) Cr LJ 213, p 215-16 (Ker) .

83 SS Gayakwad & Anor v State of Maharashtra (1997) Cr LJ 3839 (Bom)(DB).

84 MC Dutta v State of Assam (1977) Cr LJ 506, p 508 (Gau) ; Chacko Mathai v State of Kerala (1964) 2 Cr LJ 297, p 299, AIR 1964 Ker 222 ; State of Karnataka v Shivshankar (1978) 1 Kant LJ 197, p 200 ; Padia Patra v State AIR 1966 Ori 199, p 202-03, (1966) Cr LJ 1176 ; Narain Singh v State of Punjab (1964) 1 Cr LJ 730, (1963) SCD 297 ; Ram Dahin v State of Bihar (1970) SC Cr R 557, (1970) SCD 672 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Ram Swaroop AIR 1974 SC 1570, 1974 Cr LJ 1035, 1041 ; Salim Zia v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1979 SC 391, (1979) Cr LJ 323 ; Mohindra Pal v State of Punjab AIR 1979 SC 577, (1979) Cr LJ 584 ; V Subramani v State of Tamil Nadu (2005) Cr LJ 1727 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) .

1 State of Rajasthan v Chatra Ram & Ors (1998) Cr LJ 248 (Raj)(DB); V Subramani v State of Tamil Nadu (2005) Cr LJ 1727 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) .

2 Ranbir Singh v State of Haryana 2009 Cr LJ 3051 (SC), (2009) 16 SCC 193 .

3 Re *Ningappa Balappa Hadli*AIR 1960 Mys 294, p 296 ; Mithu Pandey v State of Bihar AIR 1966 Pat 464 ; GVS Subbrayan v State of Andhra Pradesh (1970) Cr LJ 1004, AIR 1970 SC 1079 ; Kaloo v State (1966) Jab LJ 587 ; Dholia Rayji v State 1 Cr LJ 813 (Guj) ; Public Prosecutor v Konjiti Nagabhusanam (1962) 2 Andh LT 291 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Ram Sarup AIR 1974 SC 1570, (1974) Cr LJ 1035 ; V Subramani v State of Tamil Nadu (2005) Cr LJ 1727 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) .

4 Gopal v State of Rajasthan 2013 Cr LJ 1297, (2013) 2 SCC 188 ; Rai Singh v State AIR 1965 HP 49, p 52 ; George v State of Kerala AIR 1960 Ker 142, p 143 ; Mithu Pandey v State of Bihar AIR 1966 Pat 464 ; Dhirendera Nath v State AIR 1952 Cal 621, p 624 ; Govindan Neelambaran v State of Kerala AIR 1960 Ker 258, p 259 .

5 Dhirendera Nath v State AIR 1952 Cal 621, p 624 ; Govindan Neelambaran v State of Kerala AIR 1960 Ker 258, p 259 .

6 Bhaiya Bahadur Singh v State of Madhya Pradesh (1996) Cr LJ 3231 (SC) .

7 Ram Dhani & Ors v State of Uttar Pradesh (1997) Cr LJ 2286 (All)(DB).

8 Thommen v State of Kerala AIR 1958 Ker 74, p 76 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Mohd Musheer Khan AIR 1977 SC 2226, (1977) Cr LJ 1897 ; Gurdas v State of Punjab (1978) Cr LJ 264, p 267 (Punj) ; Ambika Singh v State AIR 1961 All 38, (1961) 1 Cr LJ 15 .

9 Parbhoo v Emperor AIR 1941 All 402 (FB) ; Narayan Raut v Emperor AIR 1948 Pat 294, 49 Cr LJ 406 ; T Mahto v State of Bihar (1972) Cr LJ 835, p 843, (1972) BLJR 265 ; Bala Prasad Dhansukh v State of Madhya Pradesh AIR 1961 MP 241 ; Rishikesh Singh v State (1970) Cr LJ 132, AIR 1970 All 51 (FB), wherein the majority of a court of nine judges affirmed; Parbho v Emperor AIR 1941All 402 (FB); Parmannade Mahakkud v State (1970) Cr LJ 931, p 935 (Ori) ; Bising Saura v State (1962) ILR Cut 360 ; Munshi Ram v Delhi Admn AIR 1968 SC 702 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Ram Swaroop AIR 1974 SC 1570, (1974) Cr LJ 1035 ; State of Gujarat v Bai Fatima AIR 1975 SC 1478, p 1483, (1975) Cr LJ 1079 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Mohd Musheer Khan (1977) Cr LJ 1897, p 1899, AIR 1977 SC 2226 ; next heading under this section.

10 State v Kolis Hira Bhaga AIR 1961 Guj 8, p 10 .

11 Savita Kumari v Union of India (1993) Cr LJ 1590, p 1593 (SC) ; Ranveer Singh v State of MP 2009 Cr LJ 1534, AIR 209 SC 1658, (2009) 3 SCC 384 .

12 Munshi Ram v Delhi Admn (1968) Cr LJ 806, AIR 1968 SC 702 ; State of Gujarat v Bai Fatima AIR 1975 SC 1478, p 1483, (1975) Cr LJ 1079 ; State of Uttar Pradesh v Mohd Musheer Khan (1977) Cr LJ 1897, p 1899, AIR 1977 SC 2226 ; Mohindra Pal v State of Punjab AIR 1979 SC 577, (1979) Cr LJ 284 ; Ranchod v State (1974) MPLJ 42 (NOC) ; Gulzara Singh v State AIR 1971 Raj 68, p 75 ; Manik Malakan v State of Assam 1976 Assam LR 288 ; Nena Ram v State of Rajasthan (1977) RLW 395 ; Mohinder Singh v State of Rajasthan (1977) Raj LW 187, p 193 ; State of Orissa v G Harijan (1977) 44 Cut LT 267, p 273, (1978) Cr LJ 262 ; State of Karnataka v Shivshankar (1978) 1 Ker LJ 197, p 199 ; Brindaban Prasad v State AIR 1964 Pat 138, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 346 ; Mangal Khan v State (1960) All LJ 234 ; Kammu v State of Madhya Pradesh (1972) MPLJ 129 (NOC) ; Lakshmanan v Lakshmanan AIR 1964 Mad 418, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 525 .

13 Periaswam & Anor v State of Tamil Nadu (1997) Cr LJ 219 (SC) .

14 Salim Zia v State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 391, (1979) Cr LJ 323, p 328 .

15 Kuduvakuzinyil Sudhakarna v State (1995) Cr LJ 721, p 723 (Ker) .

16 Noothy Raghavalu v State (1975) 1 APLJ 307 ; Brindavan Prasad v State AIR 1964 Pat 138, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 346 .

17 State v Dharanidhar Mohanty AIR 1976 Ori 79, (1976) 42 Cut LT 29 ; MC Dutta v State of Assam 1977 Cr LJ 506, p 508 (Gau) .

18 State of Uttar Pradesh v Ram Swaroop AIR 1974 SC 1970, (1974) Cr LJ 1035 ; Mohan Singh v State of Punjab AIR 1975 SC 2161, (1975) Cr LJ 1865 ; Salim Zia v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1979 SC 391, (1979) Cr LJ 323 ; Mohinder Pal v State of Punjab AIR 1979 SC 577, (1979) Cr LJ 584 ; Ranveer Singh v State of MP 2009 Cr LJ 1534, p 1536, AIR 2009 SC 1658, 2009 (1) Scale 740, (2009) 3 SCC 384 ; Brindaban Prasad v State AIR 1964 Pat 138, (1964) 1 Cr LJ 346 ; Gulijara Singh v State (1971) Cr LJ 498, p 505, AIR 1971 Raj 68 ; Kasimuddin v State of Assam (1974) Cr LJ 105 (Gau) ; Re Narsing Naik(1972) Cr

LJ 1150, p 1154, (1971) 2 Mys LJ 254.

19 Thakur Mahton v State of Bihar (1972) Cr LJ 835, (1972) BLJR 265 .

20 Re Veerabehu Konar(1972) LW 137(Cr).

21 Gunidicha Bhoi v State (1963) 1 Cr LJ 700, p 702, 29 Cut LT 15 (Ori) ; State of Orissa v Chakradhar AIR 1964 Ori 262, (1964) 2 Cr LJ 696, (1969) ILR Cut 887 ; Nakul Barik v State 1967 Cr LJ 97, p 100, AIR 1967 Ori 1 ; Padia Patra v State AIR 1966 Ori 199, p 202-03, (1966) Cr LJ 1176 ; State of Orissa v Igni Dalai (1963) 29 Cut LT 200, 207 ; Rishikesh Singh v State AIR 1970 All 51, (1970) Cr LJ 132 (FB) ; Gulijara Singh v State AIR 1971 Raj 68, p 75 ; State v Dharanidhar Mohanty AIR 1976 Ori 79, (1976) 42 Cut LT 29 ; Lakshmanan v Lakshmanan (1964) 2 Cr LJ 425, p 429-30, AIR 1964 Mad 418 ; Narayana Pillai v State of Kerala (1968) Cr LJ 1362, (1969) Mad LJ 553 (Cr) ; Re Narsing Naik(1972) Cr LJ 1150, p 1156, (1972) Mad LJ 38 (Cr).

22 Sikandar Singh v State of Bihar 2010 Cr LJ 3854, p 3860, 3861 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 3580, 2010 AIR SW 4426, 2010 (6) Scale 632, (2010) 7 SCC 477 .

23 Ravulappali Kondaiah v State of Andhra Pradesh AIR 1975 SC 216, (1975) Cr LJ 262 ; Gangada v State of Rajasthan (1975) Cr LJ 1445, p 1448 (Raj), (1975) Raj LW 91 ; Kasimuddin Sarkar v State of Assam (1974) Cr LJ 105 (Gau) .

24 Antu v State of Haryana (1971) Cr LJ 1059, AIR 1971 SC 1213 ; Tarachand v State of Haryana AIR 1971 SC 1891, (1971) Cr LJ 1411 ; Ragjava Kurup v State of Kerala (1965) 1 Cr LJ 173, AIR 1965 Ker 44 .

25 Mohan Singh v State of Bihar 2008 Cr LJ 2742 (Pat) .

26 Pala Singh v State of Rajasthan (1997) Cr LJ 2797 (Raj) (DB) .

27 State of Rajasthan v Pura & Ors (2000) Cr LJ 2615 (Raj) .

28 Usha Vinayak Bhagwat v State of Maharashtra 2010 Cr LJ (NOC) 109 (Bom), 2009 Allmr (Cr) 2284 (Bom) (DB) .

29 Bheeru Lal v State of Rajasthan 2009 Cr LJ 4118, p 4121 (SC), AIR 2009 SC 3208, (2009) 9 SCC 119, 2009 (11) Scale 40 .

30 Shivaji Ganu Naik v State of Maharashtra & Anor (1999) Cr LJ 471 (Bom) .

31 Govindbhai M Raval & Anor v State of Gujarat (1997) Cr LJ 4270 (Guj) .

32 Hardeep Singh & Ors v State (1996) Cr LJ 3091 (Raj) .

33 Mohan Thagu Singh v State 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 780 (Utr) ; Gurbachan Singh v State of Punjab 2009 Cr LJ 3109 (P&H) .

34 Thoti Manohar v State of Andhra Pradesh 2012 Cr, LJ 3492, p 3500 (SC), 2012 AIR SCW 3752, 2012 (7) Scale 215 ; See alsoMohd Khalid Chisti v State of Rajasthan* 2013 Cr LJ 637 (SC), (2013) 2 SCC 541, 2012 (12) JT 405, 2012 (12) Scale 254 ; Ram Vishambhar v State of UP 2013 Cr LJ 1311 (SC) .

35 Ram Vishambhar v State of UP 2013 AIR SCW 628, 2013 (1) Scale 3098, (2013) 2 SCC 71, 2013 Cr LJ 1131 .

36 Jagdish & Ors v State of Madhya Pradesh (1999) Cr LJ 2326 (MP) .

37 Bihari Rai v State of Bihar 2009 Cr LJ 340, p 343 (SC), 2008 AIR SCW 6864, AIR 2009 SC 18, [2008] 13 SCR 1027, (2008) 15 SCC 778, 2008 (12) Scale 876 .

38 SS Gayakwad & Anor v State of Maharashtra (1997) Cr LJ 3839 (Bom) (DB) .

39 Gopal v State of Rajasthan AIR 1972 SC 1838, (1972) Cr LJ 1191, p 1192 ; Tarachand v State of Haryana AIR 1971 SC 1891, (1971) Cr LJ 1411 .

40 Ranbir Singh v State of Haryana 2009 Cr LJ 3051 (SC), 2009 AIR SCW 3683, 2009 (7) Scale 310 .

41 Mangat v State (1967) Cr LJ 598, p 902, AIR 1967 All 204 ; Sekar v State (2003) Cr LJ 53 (SC) ; Rizan v State of Chhatisgarh, through the Chief Secretary, Govt. of Chhatisgarh, Raipur (2003) Cr LJ 1226 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; Shahjahan v State of Kerala (2007) Cr LJ 2291 (Ker) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) ; Bihari Rai v State of Bihar 2009 Cr LJ 340, 2008 AIR SCW 6864, AIR 2009 SC 18, [2008] 13 SCR 1027, (2008) 15 SCC 778, 2008 (12) Scale 876 .

42 Hukum Singh v State AIR 1959 All 690, (1959) Cr LJ 1258, p 1260 ; Sekar v State (2003) Cr LJ 53 (SC) ; Rizan v State of Chhatisgarh, through the Chief Secretary, Govt of Chhatisgarh, Raipur (2003) Cr LJ 1226 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; Shahjahan v State of Kerala (2007) Cr LJ 2291 (Ker) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) .

43 Harabailu Kariappa & Ors v State of Karnataka (1996) Cr LJ 321 (Kant) (DB) ; Sekar v State (2003) Cr LJ 53 (SC) ; Rizan v State of Chhatisgarh, through the Chief Secretary, Govt of Chhatisgarh, Raipur (2003) Cr LJ 1226 (SC) ; Laxman Singh v Poonam Singh (2003) Cr LJ 4478 (SC) ; Shahjahan v State of Kerala (2007) Cr LJ 2291 (Ker) ; Naveen Chandra v State of Uttaranchal (2007) Cr LJ 874 (SC) ; Muhammad Khalil Chisti v State of Rajasthan 2013 Cr LJ 637, (2013) 2 SCC 541, 2012 (12) JT 405, 2012 (12) Scale 254 (Case-law referred).

44 Babu Ram v State of Punjab 2008 Cr LJ 1651, p 1654 (SC), AIR 2008 SC 260, (2008) 3 SCC 709, 2008 (2) Scale 499 ; Laxmi Singh v State of Bihar AIR 1976 SC 2263, 1976 Cr LJ 1736, referred to.

45 Ram Swaroop v State (1972) WLN 507, p 515, (1972) Raj LW 325 ; Onkarnath Singh v State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1974 SC 1550, (1974) Cr LJ 1015, p 1023 .

46 Ayodhya Ram alias Ayodhya Prasad Singh & Ors v State of Bihar (1999) Cr LJ 5005 (SC) .

47 Heera Mani Tiwari v State of Uttar Pradesh (2000) Cr LJ 4960 (All) (DB) .

48 Ram Narain v State of Uttar Pradesh (1973) Cr LJ 29, p 32, AIR 1972 SC 2544 .

49 Jabbar v State AIR 1955 J&K 9, p 11, (1955) Cr LJ 1179 ; Bhartu v State (1954) Cr LJ 54, AIR 1954 All 35 ; Re Rajesa Husena(1968) Cr LJ 194, p 197, AIR 1968 Mys 33 .

50 Hanumantappa Bhimappa Dalavai v State of Karnataka 2009 Cr LJ 3045, p 3049 (SC), 2009 AIR SCW 3675, 2009 (5) Scale 142 .

51 Narinder Kumar v State of Jammu & Kashmir 2010 Cr LJ 3905, p 3910 (SC), AIR 2010 SC 3015, (2010) 9 SCC 259 .

52 Mangu Khan v State of Rajasthan 2005 Cr LJ 1748, p 1752, 2005 SCC (Cr) 1535, AIR 2005 SC 1972 .

53 Gopal v State of Rajasthan 2013 Cr LJ 1297 (SC), 2013 AIR SCW 889, (2013) 2 SCC 188, 2013 (1) Scale 445 .

54 Gopal v State of Rajasthan 2013 Cr LJ 1297 (SC), 2013 AIR SCW 889, (2013) 2 SCC 188, 2013 (1) Scale 445 ; Krishna Kant Chaturvedi v State of UP 2013 Cr LJ 1491 (All) (DB) .

55 Nagarathinam v State 2006 Cr LJ 2120, p 2128, AIR 2006 SC 1736, 2006 (4) Scale 92 .

56 Kailas Barku Sonawane v State of Maharashtra 2009 Cr LJ (NOC) 456 (Bom) (DB).

57 Krishan Kant Chaturvedi v State of UP 2013 Cr LJ 1491, p 1500 (All) (DB) .

58 Ram Vishambhar v State of UP 2013 AIR SCW 628, 2013 (1) Scale 3098, (2013) 2 SCC 71, 2013 Cr LJ 1131 .

59 Ranbir Singh v State of Haryana 2009 Cr LJ 3051, p 3056 (SC), 2009 AIR SCW 3683, 2009 (7) Scale 310 .

60 Dattu Shamrao Valake v State of Maharashtra 2005 Cr LJ 2555 (SC), AIR 2005 SC 3331, 2006 SCC (Cri) 114 .

61 Arshad Hussain v State of Rajasthan 2013 Cr LJ 3955, p 3958 (SC), AIR 2013 SC 3001, 2013 (9) Scale 358 .

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)

Chapter IV

General Exceptions

S. 97.

Right of private defence of the body and of property.--

Every person has a right, subject to the restrictions contained in section 99, to defend--

First.	--	His own body, and the body of any other person, against any offence affecting the human body;
Secondly.	--	The property, whether movable or immovable, of himself or of any other person, against any act which is an offence falling under the definition of theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass, or which is an attempt to commit theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass.593

Comments

1. Scope and Applicability

This section deals with the subject-matter of the right of private defence. The subject-matter of the right comprises the body or property: (a) of the person exercising the right; or (b) of any other person; and the right may be exercised in the case of any offence against the body, and in the case of offences of theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass, and attempts at such offences in relation to property. A person has a right to defend the property, whether movable or immovable, of himself or of any other person against any act, which is an offence falling under the definition of theft,594 robbery, mischief or criminal trespass.[62] The right of private defence conferred by this section is subject to limitations contained in s 99 .[63] The question, whether the accused had a right of private defence or not, has got to be answered by reference to the provisions contained in this section and s 99 .[64] The right does not arise if there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, and it will not extend to the infliction of more harm than is necessary for the purpose of defence. Another limitation is that when death is caused, the person exercising the right must be under reasonable apprehension of death, or grievous hurt, to himself or to those whom he is protecting and in the case of property, the danger to it must be of the kinds specified in s 103, the scope of the right is further explained in ss 102 and 105 .[65]

The right of private defence, thus, rests on three ideas: first, there should be no more harm inflicted than it is necessary for the purpose of defence; secondly, there must be reasonable apprehension of danger to body; and thirdly, the right does not commence until there is apprehension.[66] The right of self-defence conferred or preserved by the law for an individual is a very narrow and circumscribed right and can be taken advantage of only when the circumstances fully justify its exercise.[67] Where there is clinching evidence to show that the accused inflicted injuries by taking out a knife belonging to him from his shoes, there could be no occasion for him to exercise right of private defence.[68] The law does not confer a right of self-defence on a man who goes and seeks an attack on himself by his own threatened attack on another, an attack which was likely to end in the death of that other.[69] The law does permit the use of a degree of force as is necessary to contain an attack of or in other words to defend oneself, but the right of self-defence does not stop there because it extends to the limited extent of repulsing the attack. This is a necessary part of the exercise of the right because where a party is faced with an attack, it is insufficient to contain it unless it can be beaten back as the danger does not cease unless the latter has been accomplished. A fair and necessary degree of force can be595 used and it can even be extended to instances of taking of life if the danger is so imminent that the victim reasonably apprehends danger to his own life if he does not strike back in time. All those ingredients must be pleaded and established. In a given instance, the courts could apply the doctrine or the principles to a particular record and test as to whether the accused would be entitled the benefit of that right.[70]

The plea of self defence was not taken by the accused during the trial of the case. Even in statement under s 313, CrPC, the accused did not state that he acted in exercise of right of self defence. Thus, the plea of self defence was rejected.[71]

A plea of right of private defence cannot be based on surmises and speculation. While considering whether the right of private defence is available to an accused, it is not relevant whether he may have a chance to inflict severe and mortal injury on the aggressor. In order to find whether the right of private defence is available to an accused, the entire evidence must be examined with care and viewed in its proper setting.[72]

2. Right once available may also be Lost

An act done in the exercise of this right, is not an offence and does not, therefore, give rise to any right of private defence in return,[73] even if the person exercising the right of private defence, has the better of his aggressor provided he does not exceed his right because the moment he exceeds it, he commits an offence.[74] In Ajodhya v Emperor ,[75] it was held that the right of private defence, even originally available, is lost when the party, which was attacked, far outnumbered and the violence used by that party was far in excess of the occasion.

If deceased's act was a step in exercise of his right of private defence, then the appellant's attack cannot have the protection of law because it is axiomatic that there is not right of private defence against private defence for right of private defence conferred by law was designated to serve a social purpose.[76]

3. Actual Commission of Offence not Necessary for Exercise of Right

It is not necessary that there should be an actual commission of the offence in order to give rise to the right of private defence. It is enough if the accused apprehends that such an offence is contemplated and that it is likely to be committed if the right of private defence is not exercised.[77] The right of private defence of property arises as soon as there is a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property. The person entitled to exercise that right can act before actual harm is done. It is not a right of retaliation, and hence he need not wait until the aggressor has started committing the596 offence which occasions the exercise of his right of private defence.[78] It is not necessary, nor does the law require, that the accused should wait till he receives a grievous injury for the purpose of exercising his right of private defence. When the occurrence took place in front of the appellant's door it proved that the deceased and not the appellant was the aggressor. The deceased came to the accused's house brandishing an iron rod and shouting that he would kill the deceased. An iron rod is undoubtedly a heavy material which could easily smash the head of a person and cause serious and grievous injuries on any part of body. The appellant was confronted with such a situation. He came out with katari. In order to save himself he had no other alternative than to use the katari while defending his person and at such a moment it was not possible on his part to weigh the blows in golden scales. The instinct of self-preservation being predominant and uppermost in his mind it was not unlikely that he gave repeated blows to the deceased by means of the katari on different parts of the body. In such circumstances, the appellant is entitled to the benefit of right of private defence under s 97, IPC .[79] In considering whether one is entitled to exercise the right of private defence, one has to place himself in the position of the accused in the midst of circumstances in which the accused stood and then form an opinion whether under the peculiar circumstances, he had not the apprehension of such injuries to his body as would entitle him to exercise his right. These things cannot be weighed in too fine a set of scales or as it is said in 'golden scales'.[80]An act done in the exercise of this right is not an offence and does not, therefore, give rise to any right of private defence in return.[81]

4. Right of Private Defence only against Particular Kind of Offences

The right of private defence of property under this section is available only against an act which is an offence, or an attempt to commit an offence, falling under the definition of theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass.[82] In other words, the right private defence of property only comes into operation when certain specified offences against property are committed, or attempted to be committed.[83]In the first instance, the act against which the right is available must be not merely an unlawful act, but also an offence or attempt to commit an offence.[84] Secondly, it must fall within the definition of any of the aforesaid offences mentioned in the section. There is no right of private defence of property if none of these offences is committed or attempted to be committed.

In a Patna case, the complainant, with his men, went to plough the field to which he had a good title and of which his vendor had been recently put in possession. The597 field was unoccupied. The complainant's party was opposed by the party of the accused consisting of more than five persons because one of the accused claimed that the field belonged to him. On objection by the complainant, the accused's party made a violent attack on his party with deadly weapons which resulted in the death of three persons of the complainant's party. There was no crop on the field which was in danger of being damaged or removed, and the object with which the accused took the law into their own hands was clearly not to prevent either theft or mischief but to enforce their own right or supposed right to the land. It was, therefore, held that the accused had no right of private defence.[85]

A right of private defence does not arise merely because an unlawful or wrongful act has been done. It arises only when that unlawful or wrongful act is an offence. Further, it must be an offence of a particular kind. In the case of defence of person, it must be an offence 'affecting the human body,' and in the case of defence of property, it must be theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass or an attempt to commit any of these offences. The commission of an offence under s 20, Cattle Trespass Act, would not give rise to the right of private defence of property. The owner of the cattle, therefore, cannot plead this right in defence of charge of offences like rioting, hurt, etc., alleged to be committed by him while rescuing by force cattle being illegally taken away to the pound although such illegal act is an offence under s 20 as aforesaid.[86]

Where a decree-holder, who has obtained possession of a field through court, goes to cultivate it, he cannot be said to commit criminal trespass and the judgment-debtor has no right of private defence.[87]

Entry under even an ex parte order for possession under s 145, CrPC, is not an offence, and the opposite party has no right of private defence against it.[88]

The section protects only acts done in defence of body or property. It has no application where the object of the assault is not to defend any alleged right to property, but to liquidate a person who had dared to assert his rights.[89]

In Queen v Gokool Bowree ,[90] an old woman caught stealing a crop was beaten to death. The plea of defence of property was rejected and the accused were convicted of murder.

In Ajodhya v Emperor ,[91] it was held that the right of private defence, even if originally available, is lost when the party which was attacked far out numbered and the violence used by the former was far in excess of the occasion.

5. Robbery Covers Dacoity--No Right of Private Defence to Stolen Property

Theft becomes robbery in certain circumstances, but there may be robbery by extortion without theft. Hence, not only theft but robbery is also mentioned in the section. But dacoity is not separately mentioned, because it is only an aggravated598 orm of robbery and comes within the definition of robbery. House breaking falls within the definition of criminal trespass and s 103 expressly mentions it as one against which the right of private defence of property exists. The Code does not give any right of private defence of property in regard to which an offence under s 403 or 411, IPC, has been committed.[1] There is also no right of private defence to a thief or robber in respect of stolen property.[2]

6. Right of Easement not under the Protected Section

An 'easement' does not come within the purview of 'property', an obstruction to an easement of light and air cannot give rise to a right of private defence of property.[3] Likewise, a mere protest does not amount to an invasion of property and does not give a right of private defence.[4]

7. Right not available to an Aggressor

Refer to synopsis of s 96 and of s 100 . The plea of private defence is not available to an aggressor. This is a settled position. Hence the plea of private defence cannot be raised merely on the premise that the deceased reached the scene armed with a chopper, particularly when it is proved that the deceased reached there where he found his brother being surrounded by armed assailants.[5]Where the accused admitted himself that accused party went to the house of one of the prosecution witnesses equipped with firearms to settle scores, such entry particularly at night is an act of aggression and was enough to instil reasonable apprehension in the mind of occupants of the house, therefore, plea of private defence of accused cannot be accepted.[6] The firing of a gun at persons at a distance of 25 yards, without a reasonable apprehension of danger and without any necessity for so doing, is not justifiable by the right of private defence.[7] But an arrest by a private person on a mere suspicion is illegal and the person going to be arrested, has a right of private defence against such illegal arrest.[8] Where evidence showed that the accused continued to assault the deceased even after he fell on the ground, it was held that the possibility of the accused causing injuries in exercise of private defence is ruled out and his conviction for murder was held proper.[9] Where the accused party and not the complainant party was aggressors, the accused persons were armed with dangerous weapons and none from the complainant party were armed with dangerous weapons showing the intention of the accused and not the complainant to attack, blows were given on vital parts of the deceased's body by the accused persons, the accused599 persons were held not entitled to the right of private defence.[10] Appellant accused first wielded the rod on the head of the deceased, causing as many as eight injuries. He being the aggressor was not entitled to the right of self defence.[11] Appellants accused, armed with kirpan, came to the field of the complainant, thus, they were aggressors).

Aggressor--Determination of

The number of injuries is not always a safe criterion for determining who the aggressor was. It cannot be stated as a universal rule that whenever the injuries are on the body of the accused persons, a presumption must necessarily be raised that the accused persons had caused injuries in exercise of the right of private defence. The defence has to further establish that the injuries so caused on the accused probabilises the version of the right to private defence. Non-explanation of the injuries sustained by the accused at the time of occurrence or in the course of altercation is a very important circumstance. But mere non-explanation of the injuries by the prosecution may not affect the prosecution case in all cases. This principle applies to cases where the injuries sustained by the accused are minor and superficial or where the evidence is so clear and cogent, so independent and disinterested, so probable, consistent and creditworthy, that it far outweighs the effect of the omission on the part of the prosecution to explain the injuries.[12]

The accused had taken a loan from the deceased. Deceased went to the accused and demanded repayment, which the accused refused, and this led to an altercation. The deceased was going to police station to lodge FIR when the appellant accused and others attacked the deceased, his brother and eye-witness with barchi and lathi causing injuries. Held, the appellants accused were aggressors, and having attacked the deceased first, were not entitled to any right of private defence.[13]

8. Accused Aggressor--Omission to explain injuries--Not fatal

Where the accused persons are aggressors, omission to explain the injuries of the accused is insignificant.[14]

9. Circumstances in which Absolute Right of Self-defence is Available

The following are the circumstances in which the right of private defence will completely absolve the accused from all guilt even when he has voluntarily caused the death of another person:

(i) Where the right is exercised in the private defence of the body of the accused, it affords a complete defence--(a) if the deceased was the actual assailant of the accused and (b) if the offence, committed by the deceased, which occasioned the exercise of the right, was of any of the five descriptions, enumerated in s 100, IPC .600

(ii) Where the right is exercised in the private defence of the property of the accused, it equally affords a complete defence if the offence, the committing of which, or the attempting to commit which, by the deceased, occasioned the exercise of the right, was of any of the six descriptions, enumerated in s 103, IPC .

Even if a person accused of murder, may be unable to establish such a right of private defence and so fail to obtain an acquittal on that charge yet, it is possible for him to be convicted only of culpable homicide not amounting to murder if: (a) he exercised his right of private defence, whether of person or of property, in good faith, although he exceeded the power given to him by law; and (b) he caused the death of the deceased, against whom he was exercising such a right of defence, both (i) without premediation and (ii) without any intention of doing more harm than was necessary for the purpose of defence.[15]

A right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who, expecting to be attacked, go out of their way to court an attack.[16]

The driver of a vehicle, who has caused an accident, cannot be said to have a right of private defence in running away from the scene of occurrence and cause the death of a multitude of people.[17] Where the accused persons alongwith their associates went to the field of the deceased to forcibly evict the latter, therefore, the facts showed that the accused party were the aggressors, one of the accused persons died at the hands of the deceased but the deceased can be said to have exercised the right of private defence of self and property, such act of the deceased would not amount to causing provocation to the accused to cause death of deceased in exchange.[18] Where the accused persons were aggressors, mere presence of injuries on the person of the accused would not by itself establish a plea of self-defence.[19]

Every person has a right of private defence including against the act of a person of unsound mind subject to restrictions contained in s 99, IPC . It is not every assault but only assaults enumerated in s 100 qualified by s 101 which would justify killing. An aggressor is not entitled to set up private defence,[20] even if he suffers minor injures.[21]

Looking to the number and nature of injuries received by them in comparison to the injuries received by the prosecution witness, the accused were held entitled to the benefit of right of private defence.[22]

Right Can be Exercised even when the Aggression is by the Police

The law does not confer a right of self-defence on a man who goes and seeks an attack on himself by his own threatened attack on another, an attack which was likely601 to end in the death of that other.[23] The right of private defence cannot be claimed by an aggressor even if he is a public servant. In fact it is the person aggressed upon who is on the defensive. The assailant cannot say that although he had begun the attack he should be protected if the opposite party uses force in repelling it.[24] In order to determine whether the accused acted in exercise of the right of private defence of property or person, it is absolutely necessary to find who started the assault first. Where the police party were the aggressors and the accused began the attack in desperation finding a large body of the police party advancing against them with loaded rifles, revolvers and lathis, their attack was taken to be in defence of their bodies and property and, therefore be protected.[25] Where a complainant himself was the aggressor, it was held that the accused must be held to have exercised the right of private defence.[26] An aggressor has no right of private defence even against persons who come to the rescue of the victim of his attack.[27] When a man is being attacked by a party, he is not in a position to distinguish which person in the party of aggressors is his real assailant and which merely an onlooker:

he is, therefore, not deprived of the right of private defence merely because a person in the party of the aggressors, has not attacked him.[28]

Where a public officer, viz. a policeman acts bona fide under the colour of his office, the right of private defence would not be available against him though the act of the public officer may not be strictly justified by law.[29]

Number of Injuries not always a Safe Criterion to Determine Aggression

If during the course of the attack, made by one party, one member of that party falls to the ground due to the defensive action of the members of the other party, it does not give rise to any right of private defence to any member of the party committing aggression.[30]

The number of injuries is not always a safe criterion for determining who the aggressor was.[31] Where the total number of injuries on the side of the complainant are somewhat more than those on the side of the accused person, the injuries by themselves do not necessarily prove that the accused were the aggressors or had602 exceeded their right of self-defence.[32] Even if a death has taken place in the complainant's party, it cannot be said that the accused were the aggressors and exceeded their right of self-defence.[33]

Where the accused suffered 10 injuries mostly incised wounds on various parts of his body and the injured suffered one injury by knife at the hands of the accused, it was held that the accused did not exceed the right of private defence.[34]

It is true that there is no inflexible rule of law that the party which sustained the smallest number of injuries is the aggressor and that which suffers a larger number of injuries is the victim of aggression. However, more than often, it is found, that the number of injuries is a very significant circumstance for determining as to who is the aggressor. The rationale on which this principle is founded is that a party which goes to launch the assault would go well prepared and well armed in defence and, therefore, naturally would inflict more injuries than which it receives from the other side in self-defence. If a larger number of injuries have been sustained on the side of the defence as compared to the prosecution side, it shows that it was the prosecution side which was the aggressor.[35] Where medical evidence showed that the accused party had received more injuries than the deceased party, the explanation as to how and when accused party received injuries was vague, the finding of the High Court that the prosecution story as to manner of incident was untrue and the deceased party were aggressors and injuries caused to them were in the exercise of right of private defence of the accused. The finding was confirmed by the Apex Court.[36]

Unpreparedness is Proof of Non-Aggressiveness

Unpreparedness for attack is the proof of non-aggressiveness.[37] From the mere fact that the accused were not in possession of the disputed land or the accused used one or two guns in the occurrence, it cannot be inferred that the accused were the aggressors.[38]

No Right of Private Defence in a Free Fight

There are many cases where it cannot be decided on the evidence which side or which individual began the attack. When this is so, the difficulty is usually avoided by holding that there was a 'free fight'. 'A free fight is one when both sides mean to fight from the start, go out to fight and there is a pitched battle. The question of who attacks and who defends in such a fight is wholly immaterial and depends on the tactics adopted by the rival commanders'.[39] In a free fight where both parties intend603 to attack each other, no right of private defence accrues to either party,[40] and each individual is responsible for his acts.[41]

When a body of men are determined to vindicate their rights, or supposed rights by unlawful force, and when they are engaged in a fight with men who, on the other hand, are equally determined to vindicate, by unlawful force, their rights, or supposed rights, no question of self-defence arises.[42]

Where two parties come armed, ready to fight with each other, the mere fact that one party strikes the other party first does not, by that reason and that reason alone, give a right of private defence to the other party.[43] If neither party is in actual possession of the property in dispute, and if both parties go armed to have a trial of strength, neither party can be held to have acted in exercise of the right of private defence, irrespective of whether one or the other party was the aggressor or the first to attack. If, however, a party is in actual possession, it cannot be deprived of its right of private defence of property simply because it goes armed to defend its property after seeing the other party committing, or on feeling a reasonable apprehension that the other party would commit any of the offences referred to in the second clause of s 97 .[44] Where there was a free fight between the parties, facts proved showed that prosecution witnesses were the aggressors and the accused persons had to take up lathis to defend themselves and both parties suffered injuries, nature of injuries suffered by the accused persons did not show that they exceeded the right of private defence, the acquittal of accused persons was found proper.[45]

There can, however, be no question of a free fight where there is a clear finding that one of the two parties were the aggressors.[46] Right of private defence is not available to an aggressor.[47]604

Chance-Medley--Sudden or Free Fight--Free Fight and Intentional Fight Distinguished

If two persons gather together at a place and some dispute suddenly arises, as a result of which the parties attack each other, or one person attacks another, that would be a case of a sudden fight. If some persons deliberately go to another with the intention of attacking him that can never be a case of free fight or sudden fight. That would be a case where the latter would be entitled to the right of private defence in order to ward off the attack on him by the former.[48]

In England, it was held at one time that when a man was assaulted in the course of such sudden brawl or quarrel, he might, under certain conditions, protect himself by killing his assailant and rely upon the excuse of self-defence, and thus reduce his offence from murder to homicide which only involved forfeiture. The conditions were that he must show, first, that before the mortal stroke given he had declined further combat; secondly, that he then killed his adversary through necessity, in order to avoid his own immediate death.[49]But the old special law of chance-medley has now been declared to be a thing of the past. The offences against the Persons Act 1928[50] provided: 'No punishment or forfeiture shall be incurred by any person who shall kill another by misfortune or in his own defence, or in any other manner without felony'.

The exclusion of forfeiture removed the difference in consequence which previously distinguished a homicide caused by way of defence in chance-medley from one caused in self-defence which could be fully justified as being without any blame at all on the killer. It has accordingly been laid down by the court of criminal appeal in R v Semini ,[51] that the old doctrine of chance-medley has no longer any place in the law of homicide. Each case, therefore, must now be decided upon the established principles of justifiable homicide, or provocation, as the case may be.[52]

In India, it has been held that where there is a spontaneous fight between two parties, each individual is responsible for the injuries he causes himself and for the probable consequences of the pursuit by his party of their common object. He cannot plead that because he might, at any moment, be struck by some member of the other party, his own blows were given in self-defence.[53] In an Allahabad case, there was a dispute between the deceased and the two accused, who were father and son, as to the ownership of a cattle trough. There was no evidence to show that there was a pre-arranged plan or preparation to fight, and it could not be said that the intention of the parties was to decide the question of ownership of the cattle trough by an armed fight. At first there was only exchange of abuses and no danger to the person of the deceased, but he struck the first blow with a lathi on the head of the first accused. It was then that the two accused gave lathi blows to the deceased as a result of which he died. It was held that, under the circumstances the accused were protected by the right of private defence.[54]605

10. Considerations for Determining Free Fight

An appropriate test to determine whether a fight is a free one, is that both the parties should voluntarily enter into a fight and there should be a mutual intent to harm each other. A desire to fight and mutual intent to harm each other can easily be entertained at the spur of the moment and the resulting fight will be a free-fight.[55] Where one party is found to be the aggressor and the other party has not made any pre-planned scheme of fighting with the other party, there is no question of a free-fight in the case.[56]

In a case of sudden fight it is immaterial as to which party had opened the attack first.[57]

11. Right Of Private Defence Of Body--General

In the case of causing injuries to another in self-defence, there must be two things: no more harm is to be inflicted than is necessary for the purpose of defence and there must be a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body from the attempt or threat to commit some offence; and the right does not commence until there is that reasonable apprehension. The firing of a gun at persons at a distance of 25 yards, without a reasonable apprehension of danger, and without any necessity for so doing, is not justifiable by the right of private defence.[58]

12. 'Against any Offence Affecting the Human Body'

Under this section, a person has a right to defend his own body or the body of another person against 'any offence affecting the human body'. The right of private defence does not arise merely because an unlawful or wrongful act is committed or attempted to be committed. The Code confers a right of private defence only when that unlawful or wrongful act is an offence,[59]i.e., it arises only against the commission of an offence,[60] and not against any mere physical act which may not be to one's liking, but is not punishable under the provisions of this Code.[61] Further, it must be an offence of a particular kind. In the case of defence of person, it must be an 'offence affecting the human body'. Offences affecting the body are dealt with in ch XVI of the IPC which opens with the words 'Of Offences Affecting the Human Body', and includes ss 299 - 377 . It has been held that the use of the words 'offences affecting the human body' both in this section, which gives the right of private defence, and in the beginning of ch XVI makes it clear that the right of private defence of persons arises in favour of a person in cases when any of the offences mentioned in ss 299 - 377 is contemplated to be committed against the person who606 seeks to exercise this right.[62] A wife, against whom her husband uses force enforcing his supposed right of marital intercourse, has a right of private defence of her person.[63]

It is not necessary that the person (making the private defence) himself must have been the target of assault.[64]

Where some police constables assaulted the accused by attempting to drag him forcibly to a dispensary, it was held that he had the right of private defence against the action of the constables.[65]

Where the accused's sister was being abducted, even though by her husband, and there was an assault on her and she was being compelled by force to go away from her father's place, it was held that the accused had the right of private defence of the body of his sister against an assault with the intention of abducting her by force, and that right extended to the causing of death.[66]

But where the accused assaulted the sales tax inspector, who was trying to catch the accused's son, committing an offence under s 46(h) of the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Act 1958, it was held that he could not plead the right of private defence.[67]

Where a vaccinator attempted to vaccinate a child against the wishes of his father and the father and some of his relations intervened and assaulted the vaccinator, it was held that they were perfectly justified in interfering with what the vaccinator was doing and preventing him from vaccinating the child against their wishes.[68]

Right Available Against Offence Affecting Human Body Under Local or Special Law

The expression 'any offence affecting the human body' is not limited to offences under ch XVI of the IPC . There may be an offence affecting the human body under a special or local law, and in view of the second clause of s 40 of the IPC, it would appear that such an offence also may give rise to the right of private defence of a person. A person is perfectly justified under this section in offering resistance to his being taken away against his will with the object of being impressed for service or employment.[69]607

There should be Apprehension of Danger

There can be no right of private defence unless there is at least an apprehension of danger.[70] Where the complainant raised his fist at the accused and took a step forward with the threat of striking him, it was held that the accused had the right of self-defence.[71] But a mere threat, not carried out, and later completely abandoned, followed by retracing of steps by the threatener, would not justify any assault from the person threatened, as he must have been convinced that the person threatening did not mean to carry out the empty threat.[72] The mere presence of persons who do not take steps to protect the accused from the assault of the deceased does not take away the right of private defence of the accused.[73]

Right to Defend Body of another Person

The right of private defence need not necessarily be exercised for the defence of one's own person; it can be exercised for the defence of the person of another.[74] A person has the right not only to defend his own body but even that of any other person.[75] If an incident, relating to the death of more than one person, is an integrated one and cannot be divided into parts, the accused will have the same right of private defence in respect of each individual death. It cannot be held that the accused had the right of private defence in respect of the first death, but not in respect of the other one which occurred under, more or less, the same circumstances.[76]

Accrual of Right does not Depend upon Causing any Injury

The question of the accrual of the right of private defence to a person does not depend upon an injury being caused to him. If the facts and circumstances of a particular case indicate that the accused could have had a reasonable apprehension, in his mind, of a grievous injury being caused to him, then the right of self-defence is available to him.[77] It is not necessary that he should wait until he himself is attacked.[78] This right, not being a right of retaliation, he need not wait until the aggressor has started committing the offence which occasions the exercise of his right of private defence. He can act before actual harm is done.[79] A person is entitled to exercise the right of private defence if he reaches the conclusion that the threat to his person or property is real or immediate.[80] If it is found that there was apprehension to life or property or of grievous hurt, the right of private defence is in operation. The person, exercising the right of private defence, is entitled to overcome608 the threat.[81] So the harm, inflicted in self-defence, must be no more than it is legitimately necessary for the purpose of the defence.[82]

Mere Exchange of Abuses does not give a Right of Private Defence

An exchange of abuses from both sides does not give any of them a right to strike the other by a lathi. No danger to person arises when one is merely abused, and, as such, no right accrues to the person abused to strike another with a lathi. If, however, abuse is accompanied by a threat to assault, a right of private defence arises.[83] There is no provision in the IPC where an accused person can be excused for an insulting outburst in the exercise of the alleged right of private defence.[84]

Consideration of the Question of Right of Private Defence to another Person

In considering whether one is entitled to exercise the right of private defence, one has to place himself in the position of the accused in the midst of circumstances, in which the accused stood and then form an opinion whether, under the peculiar circumstances, he had not the apprehension of such injuries to his body as would entitle him to exercise his right. These things cannot be weighed in too fine a set of scales or, as it is said, in 'golden scales'.[85] But the law does not give a person a right to defend another man's person or property when he finds some unknown persons engaged in a free-fight. Even if dacoities and robberies are common in the locality, a person has no right to shoot at a crowd of five or seven persons without knowing who are the robbers and who are the victims.[86]

Time when such Right is Available

Under s 102, IPC, this right can be exercised as soon as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body arises from an attempt or threat to commit any of the offences, mentioned in ss 100 and 101, IPC and continues as long as such apprehension of danger to the body continues. Under s 100, the right extends, under the restrictions, mentioned in s 99, IPC to the voluntarily causing of death or of any other harm to the assailant if the offence, which occasions the exercise of the right, be, inter alia, such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt will otherwise be the consequence of such assault.[87]Such apprehension must be reasonable and the violence inflicted must not be greater than is reasonably necessary for the purpose of self-defence. It must be proportionate and commensurate with the quality and character of the act, it is intended to meet and what is done in excess is not protected.[88]609

No Right when there is Time to have Recourse to the Authorities

There is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities. The right of private defence in no case extends to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence.[89]

No Right against the Right of Private Defence

The right of private defence is available against an offence. Where an act is done in exercise of the right of private defence, such act cannot give rise to any right of private defence in favour of the aggressor in return.[90] Where the deceased can be said to have exercised right of private defence of self and property, such act of the deceased would not amount to causing provocation to the accused to cause death of the deceased in exchange.[91]

Illustrative Cases--Defence of Person

Where evidence on record showed that the accused received blows in the midst of altercations when he came there and thereafter left for home and returned with a tangi with which he inflicted the fatal blow on an unarmed deceased, the conduct of the accused showed the right of private defence of the person ceased to exist as soon as he left the place of occurrence for his house.[92]

M, who had gone to a certain house with the intention of committing an offence, was discovered and was pursued by A and G. A was killed by M and when G tried to catch hold of M, he was also killed by M. It was held that when M had killed A the right of arrest at that moment would arise. G was exercising that right and the right of self-defence therefore would not then arise to justify the killing of G by M.[93]

When the accused armed with a gun sitting in his tractor was stopped by the victim party armed with lathi and ballam the accused got down from the tractor and fired shots from his gun killing the victim, the plea of self-defence of body and tractor set up by the accused was not accepted as the accused with the gun was in a dominating position.[94] Where the deceased was assaulted but accused was not present on the spot, so he could not have participated in assault, the question of accused exceeding right of private defence cannot arise.[95]

Deceased had gone to the house of the accused and inflicted injuries by kapa on the accused and his wife. Accused A3 in order to defend himself and his wife had inflicted single injury on the chest of the deceased with cobbler's instrument with whom he was working. The plea of the accused that they acted in exercise of right of private defence was accepted and the accused appellants were acquitted of the charge under s 302, IPC .[96]610

Where the deceased threatened the accused with a scythe and the accused, apprehending that he was about to be hit on the head with the scythe, aimed a blow with a lathi at the right hand of the deceased with the object of knocking the scythe out of his hand but by accident the blow fell on the deceased's head and resulted in the fracture of the skull. It was held that the accused dealt the blow in self-defence and did not exceed the right of private defence.[1]

An eye-witness deposed that the knife was taken out by the deceased and there was a scuffle between the accused and deceased. The deceased was held by his collar by the accused. The knife had fallen from the hands of the deceased in the scuffle and the same was taken by the accused and the deceased was stabbed with it. First blow was inflicted on the thigh, second was on the hand and the third one was on the chest. Held, the accused exceeded the right of private defence, thus, his conviction under s 302, IPC was altered to one under s 304, Pt I.[2]

Where there was a grapple and during that struggle the accused received injuries at the hands of the deceased with a blunt weapon and apprehending danger to his life, inflicted one injury on the neck of the deceased. The accused had not intended to cause that particular injury, which unfortunately was on the neck cut the carotid artery. The Supreme Court held that the accused was rightly found entitled to the right of self-defence by the High Court.[3]

The appellant did not use his gun even at the time when he and his brothers were attacked and inflicted with numerous and extensive injuries but resorted to firing only as a last resort when the prosecution party persisted in entering into the house by scaling over the wall of the house and threatened that they would not allow the appellant and P to remain alive and declared that they had already put an end to the life of V. These circumstances, lend ample support to the case set up in defence which is not an afterthought, that being the appellant fired shots, only in the exercise of his right of private defence of his person and his brother. Presumably, the appellant might have thought that V who was lying with severe injuries outside the house and who could not get up and enter into the house was dead and might have entertained, in such circumstances a reasonable apprehension of imminent danger to his and to his brother's life. In view of the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case the appellant is entitled for a complete acquittal on the plea of the right of private defence.[4]

13. Burden of Proof

Whenever the plea of right of private defence is taken it is not necessary for the defence to lead specific evidence. The defence is entitled to substantiate their case from the evidence of the prosecution. It is not incumbent upon the defence to substantiate right to private defence if it can be substantiated from the prosecution611 evidence. Therefore, the burden of establishing the defence is not that rigorous on the part of the defence as that of the prosecution.[5]

Section 105 of the Evidence Act provides that burden of proof that case of the accused comes within an exception, lies upon him. General exceptions are contained in ch IV of the IPC, comprising the right of private defence too. It is not necessary for the accused to lead evidence to prove that he acted in exercise of right of private defence and it may be inferred on the scrutiny of the prosecution evidence itself together with attending circumstances brought on record. But the entire scenario has to be viewed for coming to the right conclusion.[6] The correct position in law is that in a criminal case there are many methods of establishing a defence which can even be done by building up a case in cross-examination or in the alternative, it is equally permissible to argue that the facts on the basis of the record spell out a defence on a point of law. Also, one needs to bear in mind the fact that where such a defence is pleaded that it has got to be established only to the extent of preponderance of probability and not beyond reasonable doubt. That burden has been discharged by the accused in the case.[7]

The burden of proving self defence is always on the accused but it is not as onerous as the one which lies with the prosecution. Such burden can be discharged by probabilizing the defence. The accused may discharge his onus by establishing a mere preponderance of probabilities either by laying basis for that plea in the cross examination of prosecution witness or by adducing defence evidence.[8]

If the evidence shows clearly that the injuries on the complainant, were caused by the accused it is for him to show that he was justified in inflicting the injuries, or rather that he acted in self-defence.[9] When an accused person commits an act of violence upon another person in circumstances which prove that he was apprehending further violence from that person, nothing further need be proved to establish that he was acting in the exercise of his right of self-defence. But in the case of a charge of murder, it is for the accused to make out that circumstances existed which would justify his causing the death of the deceased.[10]

14. Right of Defence of Property--General

The right of private defence need not be specifically pleaded. It may be apparent or may be gleaned from the evidence of the prosecution and the circumstances emerging therefrom. All that is required to give rise to the right of private defence of property is that a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property should commence. The persons who exercise the right of private defence of property do a perfectly legitimate act. In case any one of them exceeds that right and gives a blow which causes death, then that is his individual act and he alone would be liable for the consequences thereof.[11] Under s 97 of the IPC every person has a right to defend his own body, and the body of any other person, against any offence affecting the612 human body, but that right is subject to the restrictions contained in s 99 .[12] The right of private defence under this section also embraces the protection of property, whether movable or immovable or of one's own or of another person,[13] against certain specified offences, namely theft, robbery, mischief and criminal trespass.[14] Law does not require a person, whose property is forcibly tried to be occupied by trespassers, to run away and seek the protection of the authorities.[15] Law entitles him to defend himself and his property from the attack of the trespasser by using necessary force against the latter.[16] This right is, however, a restricted right. Section 99 expressly lays down that there is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, and that it, in no case extends to doing more harm than is necessary for the purpose of defence. Sections 100 - 105 make the right depend on the circumstances of each case.[17]Where the accused claims the right of private defence, it has to be investigated and decided whether the other party committed any act which is an offence against body or property of the type described in this section against which the section confers upon the accused a right of private defence.[18] Private defence of property necessarily involves possession of the property by the person acting in defence. Whether the possession is on his own account or on that of another is immaterial. Consequently, the doctrine of private defence of property has no application where, a property being in dispute, rival claimants seek to obtain possession thereof by force. A man may defend his possession by force; he cannot obtain possession by force. The accused must have acted on the defensive, and not on the offensive side.[19] Where concurrent findings of the trial court and High Court were that the accused had no right, title, interest or possession of the land in issue, the Apex Court held that the right of private defence of property does not vest in the accused.[20] Where there was no proof that the accused were owners of a heap of wood, the accused assaulted the complainants, the right of private defence was held not available to the accused persons. But where documentary evidence proves beyond doubt that accused were in peaceful possession of the land in dispute, one person was killed and others injured when the complainant went to the disputed land for ploughing, admittedly the complainant party had come to the disputed land for the first time on the date of occurrence after they allegedly purchased it from the tenure holder, it was held that the right of private defence of property accrued to the accused when the complainant tried to dispossess them and the accused persons613 cannot be held guilty of forming an unlawful assembly and causing blunt injuries and so were entitled to be acquitted.[21]

The right of private defence is essentially a defensive right circumscribed by the statute and available only when the circumstances clearly justify it. It cannot be allowed to be pleaded or availed of as a pretext for a vindictive, aggressive or retributive purpose. This right is available against an offence and, therefore, where an act is done in exercise of the right of private defence, such an act cannot give rise to any right of private defence in favour of the aggressor in return.[22] There is no right of private defence against a person going to cultivate a plot of land in pursuance of an order passed in a proceeding under s 145, CrPC even if that order is an ex parte order.[23] The right of private defence of property pre-supposes that the person exercising the right, or the person, on whose behalf the right is exercised, is in possession of the property which has to be defended.[24]

Where the deceased was found to be in possession of the property, one of the accused was a trespasser on the said land and tried to forcibly dispossess the deceased from the disputed land, assaulted the deceased and caused his death, the said accused thus cannot be said to have any right of private defence and was guilty of murder.[25] There was land dispute between the parties. The accused was in possession of the land, and the deceased came with oxen and started cultivating the land of the accused. The accused lifted stone boulders and gave three blows to the deceased causing his death. Held, the incident occurred all of a sudden. Thus, the accused exercised the right of private defence to save the agricultural land in his possession, but he exceeded his right by giving repeated blows of stone boulders and, therefore, he committed the offence under s 304, Pt I, IPC . A sentence of ten years RI was imposed.[26]

Appellants A1, A2 and A3 had cultivated the banana crop on more land than what was leased out to them by the deceased. The deceased raised dispute in this regard and wanted to get his remaining field from the bund. The three appellants beat the deceased indiscriminately causing his death. There was no allegation that the deceased attempted to commit theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass. Held, the appellants accused were not entitled to right of private defence of property. They were convicted under ss 302 / 34, IPC .[27]

Fight Between Two Factions

Whenever there is a fight between two factions, one has to discover: (a) whether there was an apprehension to the accused's person or property by an attempt or threat to commit an offence against them such as is mentioned in this section; and (b) whether the danger was so trivial or unsubstantial that if recourse were had to the public authorities for protection, no more serious injury than had already been inflicted would have resulted by waiting for the help of the public authorities.[28]614

Where the fight between the two parties took place and the accused himself received nine injuries out of which two were on vital parts, accused firing one shot from his gun cannot be said to have acceded the right of private defence despite the fact that the gunshot by the accused did not hit the assailants but an innocent person present on the scene of occurrence, the right of private defence extending to cause death was held still available to the accused and his conviction under s 304, Pt I, IPC, read with s 27 of the Arms Act was set aside.[29]

15. Right of Private Defence of Property Extends to Persons who help others in Protecting their Right

The right of private defence is not limited only to persons, who are in actual possession of the property, but extends to such other persons who act in helping the former to protect their right in the property.[30]

Right of Private Defence of Property can be Exercised from a Distance also

It is not essential that the right of private defence of property can be exercised on the property itself. Even if the person, who is claiming that right, happens to be placed at some distance from the property, he can exercise that right provided he finds that damage to property will accrue if the right is not exercised immediately.[31]

Right of Private Defence of Property does not Extend to Chasing and Killing any Person

