Introduction

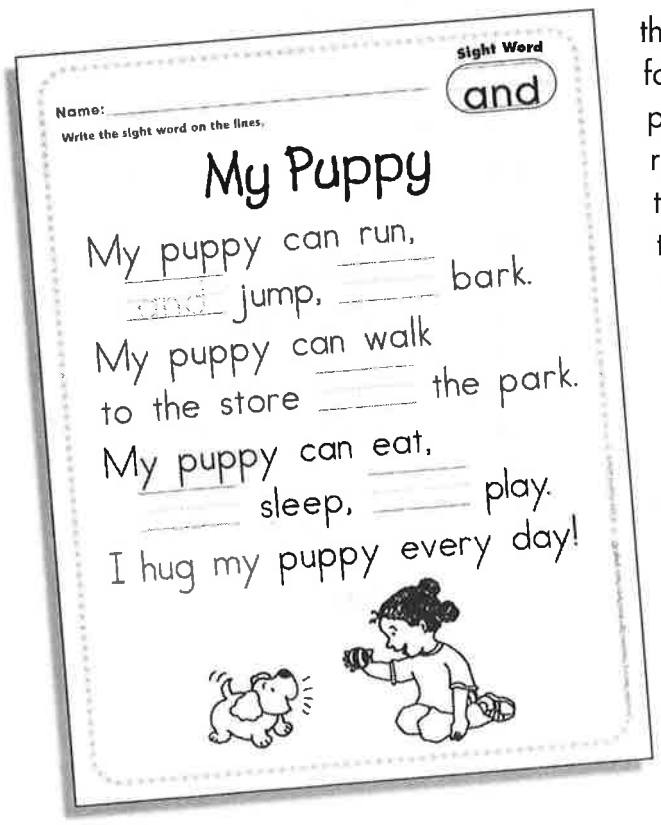

Dear Teacher,

Welcome to Sight Word Poetry Pages! This valuable resource is a fun and lively collection of 100 reproducible, fill-in-the-blank poems, which teach and reinforce beginning readers' mastery of basic sight word vocabulary. The poems provide an opportunity for children to practice reading, writing, and spelling the words that appear most often in print.

On each page, you'll find a poem for one of 100 sight words. In addition to my original poems, I have included several of my favorite traditional or anonymous poems, selected carefully to complement the collection and tie in with popular primary themes. Use this book as a flexible resource to fit into your balanced literacy program!

In addition to the poems, this book includes:

- A handy table of contents listing titles, focus sight words, and review sight words for each poem
- Ways to extend learning
- Directions for creating poetry notebooks with children

Name: _____ Sight Word: and

Write the sight word on the lines.

My Puppy

My puppy can run, _____ _____ _____ jump, _____ bark.
My puppy can walk _____
to the store _____ the park.
My puppy can eat, _____ _____
_____ sleep, _____ play.
I hug my puppy every day!

During my years as a classroom teacher, and through my experience working with, and writing for, beginning readers, I have witnessed the power of poetry in all its forms (chants, shared reading, songs, pocket chart activities, and so on) to inspire and motivate beginning readers. I hope these poems provide one more resource for you to build children's confidence—and fluency!

Best wishes!
Rozanne Lanczak Williams

About Sight Words

What Are Sight Words?

Sight words are high-frequency words—words that most commonly appear in the text of early readers. These words make up a core set of vocabulary that children need to learn in order to read quickly and automatically. Most school districts require that children learn to read and spell between 12 and 30 sight words in kindergarten and at least 100 in first grade. See pages 10 to12 for the Dolch Word List, a widely used list of sight words.

How Do Children Learn Sight Words?

Practice, practice, practice! A balanced literacy program includes many opportunities for children to encounter and practice sight word vocabulary. These words appear in the stories, books, and poems that children read, as well as in specific lessons, word-wall, and "word work" activities. These are words most commonly found in children's writing as well. As children encounter these frequently used words again and again, they will learn to recognize them anywhere without having to decode letter by letter.

How Will Using These Poems Help My Early Readers?

Learning to read, write, and spell sight words ensures the development of reading and writing fluency in beginning readers. The reproducible poems in this book invite children to learn, practice, write, and spell 100 basic sight words in the meaningful context of fun-to-read poems.

On each page, kids will encounter a new sight word in the upper right corner. Then the child has the opportunity to practice writing the new sight word several times by filling in three or more blanks to complete the poem. This unique, interactive feature provides valuable practice and leads to mastery of basic sight word vocabulary.

Name: Lauren
Sight Word: go
Write the sight word on the lines.

I Go

I go in a bus.
I go in a car.
I go someplace near.
I go someplace far.
I go on a bike.
I go for a cone.
I go, go, go.
Then I go home.

All the poems feature predictable, rhyming text and tie in with popular themes including weather, seasons, all about me, and more. Integrate reading across the curriculum with poems that have social studies or science themes. Use the poems in centers, add to poetry notebooks (see below), or create a supply of reading material for home. You can also encourage children to color the pictures with a variety of materials (watercolors, colored pencils, crayons, markers, and so on).

Using This Book

Introducing the Poems

Copy the page for each child. Before distributing, plan a way to introduce the poem, such as a shared reading activity. Write the poem on the overhead, chart paper, or pocket chart sentence strips. Write the focus sight word above the poem. Invite children to add the focus sight word to their individual word books, the class word wall, or their sight word card collection. (You might provide small file boxes in which to store cards with sight words or new vocabulary.)

After you've introduced the poem, children can complete their own poetry pages by writing the focus sight words in the blanks, then reading the poems on their own or with a buddy.

What Can You Find?

Can you find the eggs?
Can you find all ten?
Can you find the mother hen?
Can you find the bees?
Can you find all five?
Can you find the bees

Making & Using Poetry Notebooks

You might invite children to create poetry notebooks that they can use all year. Each child will need a three-ring binder. Flexible binders are inexpensive and easy to find. Encourage children to decorate the covers of their poetry notebooks with their names, stickers, and designs.

These notebooks can build confidence and develop fluency in beginning readers. Completing the sight word poems, coloring and enhancing illustrations, and rereading the poems either alone or with a buddy make great center or free-time activities.

Use the sight word poems for other word work activities, also. For example, reread a poem together, and ask children to use a highlighting marker to mark the rhyming words, action words, or words with "magic e." One night a week, children can take their poetry notebooks home to read and share with family members.

Extending the Poetry Notebooks

Encourage children to write and illustrate their own poems to add to their notebooks. The basic sentence structure and repeated lines of many of the sight word poems make excellent writing frames. For example, children may enjoy writing their own "I See" (page 13) or "So Many" (page 74) poems. To keep the ideas and language flowing freely, keep reminding children that not every poem must rhyme. Share some non-rhyming poems with children and include them in your class poetry collections.

From the Editors at Scholastic Teaching Resources

Dear Reader,

We're always delighted when teachers say, "Your books are the ones we use . . . the ones that go to school with us for a day's work . . . the ones that go home with us to help in planning. . . ."

Your comments tell us that our books work for you—supporting you in your daily planning and long-range goals, helping you bring fresh ideas into your classroom, and keeping you up to date with the latest trends in education. In fact, many Scholastic Teaching Resources are written by teachers, like you, who work in schools every day.

If you have an idea for a book you believe could help other teachers in any grade from K–8, please let us know! Send us a letter that includes your name, address, phone number, and the grade you teach; a table of contents; and a sample chapter or activities (along with color photos, if you have them), to:

Manuscript Editor
Scholastic Teaching Resources

Sight Word Poetry Pages

Children will develop word recognition skills, build automaticity, and improve reading fluency with these ready-to-go pages. Each page gives kids repeated opportunities to spell, write, and read a sight word—while completing a fun poem! Poems feature predictable, rhyming text and tie in with popular themes such as weather, seasons, all about me, and more.
