At that moment there was a knock at the door. It was the lawyer, Mr. Powell Liversage. He had to school with the brother and was an old friend. He too was unmarried.

'How are you?' asked Robert.

"Very well," he replied. "I have come to tell you about your sister's will." Did you know that she had left a will?"

"No," answered John and Robert together. "How much did she leave?"

"$ 12.000. But let me read you the will."

Mr. Liversage took the will out of his pocket and began to read it.

*To my dear brothers John and Robert
You have both behaved very stupidly. I have never stood why
You quarreled about Annie Emery.
You have been unkind and unjust to poor Annie. She has waited
For ten years for one of you. So, John, if you will marry Annie, I Will give all my money to you. And Robert, if you will marry her,
I'll give it to you. And, if neither of you marries her, all my money will go to Annie, herself*

Your ever loving sister

The two brothers sat and thought for a long time. Ten years ago when Annie was a young woman of 27, both John and Robert had been in love with her. They had a violent quarrel and terrible things were said.

Afterwards they had both wanted to make up and be friends again, but by this time they had stopped speaking to each other, so neither of them learned that the other had decided not to marry Annie.

At two o'clock in the morning John spoke: 'Why don't we toss a coin for Annie? Heads or tails?'

'Tails.' said Robert. But it was heads. The next evening John went round to Annie's house.

Powell Liversage was just leaving when he arrived.

So, in the end neither brother married Annie.
