SECTION THREE: READING COMPREHENSION (29-38)

DIRECTIONS: Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

Passage I

The terms "intelligence augmentation" and "intelligence amplification" evoke images of human beings with computer chips embedded in their skulls or bizarre accouterments attached to their heads. However, according to an article entitled Get Smart by Jamais Cascio, human beings' ability to augment their intelligence is precisely the prowess which has empowered us to survive "a series of convulsive glacial events" evinced by the last ice age.

Neurophysiologist William Calvin asserts that the human species continues to evolve cognitively and to create its own cognitive evolution in two basic ways: external and internal.

Cascio states that humans have been externally augmenting their intelligence for millennia. By developing written language, we boosted our capacity to share information over space and time. Other advancements, such as agricultural and industrial technologies, reduced the exigencies of manual labor. Current external digital systems augment human intelligence by allowing us to perform tasks that would be unfeasible with recourse only to the rational skills of a singular human brain. Cascio cites as examples the "powerful simulations and massive data sets (which) allow physicists to visualize, understand, and debate models of an 11-dimension universe, real-time data from satellites, global environmental databases, and high resolution models (which) allow geophysicists to recognize the subtle signs of long-term changes to the planet," and similar man-made interactions which have the functional effect of augmenting human intelligence. Conceivable potential software could incorporate individual "attention filters" which would discern and highlight your individual preferences in a computer display, permitting you to focus and direct your computer searches more efficiently than you do now.

Somewhat more problematic in social terms might be pharmacological intelligence augmentation, evoking Brand New World nightmares-pharmaceutically placates people tranquilized to zombie-like subservience. However as with external cognitive augmentation, the future has arrived-in the form of, for example, ADD drugs, pharmaceutical agents which mitigate sleep disorders, and antidepressants, all of which enhance human problem- solving ability and cognitive efficiency. According to Cascio, "people who don't know about (such drugs) or don't want to use them will face stiffer competition from people who do. From the perspective of a culture immersed in athletic doping wars, the use of such drugs may seem like cheating. From the perspective of those who find they're much more productive using this form of enhancement, it's no more cheating than getting a faster computer or a better education."

Cognitive amplification, whether by external or internal means, may constitute evolution, if calvin's assertion is correct. Some societies may readily embrace it, while others shy away. As science fiction writer William Gibson observes. "The future is already here: it's just unevenly distributed."

Passage II

A diary is a daily personal record. In it the writer is free to record anything at all. This may include events, comments, ideas, reading notes, or any subject on one's mind. Diaries may be kept for various purposes- to record the experiences of one's life so as not to forget them, to record ideas that might prove useful, or simply to express oneself through the medium of the printed word.

In past centuries, people in public life often kept diaries. These have become valuable sources of fact and interpretation for later historians The private candid observations set down in these personal journals often provide a truer picture of an age than do records or other books, which may have been censored during that time. For the most part, these diaries were never intended to be read by others. The entries were made simply as aids to memory or as a form of relaxation.

In modern times, however, politicians and other people realize that their diaries will likely be read by historians or in published form, by the public. Thus they may make entries with these readers in mind. As a result their diaries may lose the confidential, intimate nature of the older ones. On the other hand, their entries may tend to be move complete and self-explanatory.

The most famous diary ever written in English was that kept by Samuel Pepys. A civilian official of the British army, Pepys made regular entries between 1660 and 1669. His diary starts at the beginning of the Restoration Period in English history and describes many of the court intrigues and scandals of his day. The diary reveals that Pepys was man with many human weaknesses but one who was honest with himself. He wrote his entries in a combined code and shorthand that was not solved until more than 100 years after his death.

The most famous diary of the 20th century was published under the simple title ″ Diary of a Young Girl″ It is more commonly known as the diary of Anne frank Anne was a young Jewish girl whose diary records the two years her family spent in hiding mostly in the Netherlands, trying to escape the Nazi persecutors of the Jewish. She and her family were finally caught in August 1944. She was imprisoned and died at a concentration camp in Germany in March 1945.
