Segno Maksegno

Segno Maksegno or “Monday Tuesday” is a traditional Ethiopian game. One plays the game by first drawing lines on the ground, usually with chalk or just lines in the dirt. They are separated by approximately40cm.Each box drawn represents a “home”, which can be appropriated as property with ownership. The game begins by one person in a group throwing the first stone into the collection of “homes”. The person will have to successfully jump through the collection of “homes” without touching the “home” with the stone.

If done properly, the same player will continue to go through all the “homes”, if still successful throughout they will be able to choose one of the “homes” to “own”. Owning a “home” means that only that person can touch/jump on it, and no one else.If one of the parts is divided in the middle, the person can jump with both feet, but if not, then they 1would have to use only one foot.

If a person cannot jump through the area, then they will have lost their turn and will start the next game. If a person cannot throw the stone in the correct place, i.e. within the real estate, they too will have lost their turn.The jumps made are two ways, they have to go forth and return, and owning a “house” means they can jump with one or two feet on it. Owning a “house” also entitles the person to write their name or any other such sign they wish.The game ends only when one of the players owns all the houses or when the positioning of the house ownership makes it impossible to jump successfully anymore.1
