It was no accident that Dickson was so popular. From an early age, he invited the whole class to his birthday party, and from time to time he would give presents to everybody. He was such a busy boy, with so many friends, but he hardly got a chance to spend time with individual friends.

But everything changed on National Friendship Day. On that day, at school, everyone was having a great time. That day in class everyone had to make three beautiful presents to give to their three best friends. Dickson enjoyed the task of choosing three from amongst all the dozens of his friends.

However, when all the presents had been made and shared out among classmates, Dickson was the only one who had not received a present! He felt terrible, and spent hours crying. How could it be possible? So much effort to make so many friends, and in the end no one saw him as their best friend?

He realized that he was a good companion and acquaintance, but he had not been a true friend to anyone.

When Dickson got home that night, he created quite a puddle with his tears. Dickson asked his father where he could find true friends.

"Dickson, my dear son, you're a lovely boy," said his father, "but you can't be a close friend to everybody. If you really want true friends, you will have to give them real time and affection. For a true friend you must always be available, in good times and bad. So it's only possible to have a few true friends. The others will be acquaintances, but they won't be close friends."

Hearing this, Dickson decided to change his ways so that he could finally have some true friends. That night, in bed, he thought about what he could do to get them.

He thought about his father. His father was always willing to help him, he put up with all of Dickson's dislikes and problems, he always forgave him, and he loved him a great deal.
That was what makes friends!

And Dickson smiled from ear to ear, realizing that he already had the best friend anyone could ever want.
