

SECTION ONE: READING COMPREHENSION (1-12)

DIRECTION: Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow according to the text by choosing the best answer and write the chosen letter on the separate answer sheet provided.

1. The current school restructuring movement has school-based, shared, decision-making at its core. With the newly acquired autonomy, come new responsibilities. Teachers, local schools, and school districts are accountable to all stakeholders for the policy, programs, and practices they implement. It is not enough for teachers merely to make decisions; they will be called up on to make informed decisions, decisions which are data driven. Therefore, it is necessary for teachers to be much more deliberate in documentation and evaluation of their efforts. Action research is one means to that end. It is very likely that it is the emergence school-based decision making that has precipitated the resurgence of action research; the two seem to be complementary. Action research assists practitioners and other stakeholders in identifying the needs, assessing the development processes, and evaluation the outcomes of the changes, design, and implement. The self evaluation aspect of action research is congruent with the philosophies contained in the outcomes of education based movements currently being advanced.

2. The prevailing focus of teacher research is to expand the teachers' role as inquiries about teaching and learning through systematic classroom research. The approach is naturalistic, using participant observation techniques of ethnographic research, is generally collaborative, and includes characteristics of case study methodology.

3. Collaborative action research provides support and a forum for sharing questions, concerns, and results. Teachers advise each other and comment on the progress of individual efforts. Engaging in collaborative action research helps to eliminate the isolation that has long characterized teaching, as it promotes professional dialogue and thus, creates a more professional culture in schools. Action research comprises two terms: action and research that high light the essential features of this method that is, trying out ideas in practice as a means of increasing knowledge about improving curriculum, teaching and learning.

4. Action research has been employed for various purposes: for school-based curriculum development, as a professional development strategy, in pre-service and graduate courses in education, and in systems planning and policy development. Some writers Elliot (2001) advocate an action research approach for school restructuring. Action research can be used as evaluative too, which can assist in self-evaluation whether the self be an individual or an institution.

5. The school- based curriculum is a curriculum developed by the school where by the curriculum is going to be implemented. Action research is therefore used to assess the previous experience to identify the strengths and weaknesses by collecting data from teachers, students, parents, local community and other stakeholders to find ways of improving instruction in the particular context. As a professional development strategy, action research makes teachers not only to implement the objectives, contents, and methods of teaching given from the top or centrally, rather it keep teachers up-to-date. Because action research makes teachers revisit their previous experiences, problems that need a practical solution and continuously identifying areas that require improvements.
